quando uma grande multidão de judeus foi ver, não apenas Jesus, mas também o ressuscitado Lázaro. Por causa de Lázaro, muitos judeus passaram a ter fé em Jesus, e, assim, os principais sacerdotes deliberaram matar também a Lázaro. (Jo 11:45-53; 12:1-11) Contudo, não há evidência bíblica de que tais inimigos religiosos perpetrassem seus malévolos intentos contra Lázaro.

O relato de João sobre a ressurreição de Lázaro tem sido atacado por alguns críticos da Bíblia. Eles apontam para o silêncio dos outros Evangelhos sobre este evento. Um exame dos vários Evangelhos, porém, mostra que mesmo os escritores dos Evangelhos sinópticos não narraram, cada um, todos os atos praticados por Jesus. Por exemplo, apenas Lucas relatou a ressurreição do filho da viúva de Naim. (Lu 7:11-15) João, costumeiramente, não repetia o que os outros haviam registrado. A ressurreição de Lázaro é um exemplo notável disto.

Este milagre da ressurreição de Lázaro foi de grande valia como parte do ministério de Jesus, tanto para ilustrar o poder do Filho de Deus como para aumentar a fé nele e na ressurreição. (Jo 11:4, 41, 42) Evidentemente ocorreu perto do começo do ano 33 EC. As Escrituras não dão informações sobre as circunstâncias, o lugar ou a data da morte de Lázaro depois de ter sido ressuscitado. — Veja RESSURREIÇÃO (Ressurreições antes de se pagar o resgate).

Não existe uma declaração bíblica, nem motivo algum, para se associar o Lázaro histórico com o mendigo da ilustração de Jesus sobre o rico e Lázaro.

2. Nome dado ao mendigo na ilustração de Jesus comumente conhecida como a parábola do rico e Lázaro. (Lu 16:19-31) Na Vulgata, a palavra "rico" foi traduzida pelo adjetivo latino dives, que não raro é usado erroneamente como nome próprio do homem rico. No entanto, o nome judaico, Lázaro, era comum nos tempos antigos, fato comprovado por inscrições em ossuários.

Na parábola, o ulceroso mendigo, Lázaro, foi colocado à porta do homem rico, desejando alimentar-se do que caía da suntuosa mesa do rico. Depois, Lázaro morreu e foi levado pelos anjos para a posição junto ao seio de Abraão (um lugar comparável ao ocupado por uma pessoa, nos tempos antigos, quando se reclinava em frente de outrem, no mesmo divã, durante uma refeição). Abraão teve uma palestra com o homem rico, que também tinha morrido, fora sepultado e se achava no Hades, estando ali em tormentos. Um "grande precipício" intransponível separava o homem rico de Abraão e Lázaro. A solicitação do rico, para que Abraão mandasse Lázaro aos cinco irmãos dele, para 'que lhes desse um testemunho cabal', na esperança de poupá-los dessa mesma experiência, foi rejeitada à base de que eles tinham "Moisés e os Profetas", e, se não estavam dispostos a ouvir estes, 'tampouco seriam persuadidos se alguém se levantasse dentre os mortos'. — Veja ILUSTRAÇÕES.

Na sua ilustração do rico e Lázaro, será que Jesus se baseou nas crenças rabínicas a respeito dos mortos?

Instrutores e estudantes de religião comparada, em alguns casos, têm sugerido que, ao fazer essa ilustração, Jesus Cristo baseou-se nos antigos conceitos e ensinos rabínicos a respeito do mundo dos mortos. Josefo dá a seguinte informação sobre o então prevalecente conceito dos fariseus neste respeito: "Eles creem que as almas têm o poder de sobreviver à morte e que há recompensas e punições no interior da terra para os que levaram uma vida quer de virtudes, quer de vícios: o aprisionamento eterno é a sorte das almas más, ao passo que as almas boas recebem uma fácil passagem para uma nova vida." (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XVIII, 14 [i, 3]) Contudo, Jesus rejeitou categoricamente os ensinos falsos, incluindo os dos fariseus. (Mt 23) Assim, teria sido incoerente de sua parte elaborar sua ilustração do rico e Lázaro segundo os contornos do falso conceito rabínico a respeito do mundo dos mortos. Consequentemente, somos obrigados a concluir que Jesus tinha em mente o cumprimento da ilustração e elaborou os detalhes e o desenvolvimento dela em harmonia com os fatos do cumprimento, em vez de segundo algum ensino não bíblico.

O contexto e a fraseologia dessa história mostram claramente que se trata de uma parábola, e não de um caso real. Não se exalta a pobreza nem se condena as riquezas. Em vez disso, a conduta, as recompensas finais, e uma inversão da situação, ou condição, espiritual dos representados por Lázaro e pelo homem rico, são evidentemente indicadas. Terem os irmãos do rico rejeitado a Moisés e os profetas também mostra que a ilustração tinha um significado e um objetivo mais profundo do que o de contrastar a pobreza com a posse de riquezas.

LEABIM. Nome que aparece em Gênesis 10:13 e em 1 Crônicas 1:11 entre os descendentes de Cã, por meio de Mizraim. Visto que o nome em hebraico é pluralizado, muitos peritos dizem que se refere a uma tribo que derivou seu nome de um dos filhos de Mizraim. (Veja, porém, MIZRAIM.) Os de Leabim são, em geral, identificados com os líbios e, pelo menos parece, constituíam uma das tribos que habitavam a Líbia nos tempos antigos. Ao passo que a identificação é difícil, eles eram provavelmente os lu·vím mencionados em outras partes do texto hebraico, como em 2 Crônicas 12:3, onde a American Standard Version diz "lubim" e outras traduções dizem "líbios". — CBC; NM; PIB.

LEALDADE. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, o adjetivo hha·sídh é usado para "alguém leal" ou "alguém de benevolência". (Sal 18:25 n) O substantivo hhé·sedh tem referência à benignidade, mas contém mais do que a ideia de terna consideração ou benignidade proveniente do amor, embora inclua tais traços. Trata-se de uma benignidade que amorosamente se apega a um objeto até que o seu propósito com relação a esse objeto se realize. Este é o tipo de benignidade que Deus expressa para com seus servos e que eles expressam para com ele. Portanto, isto entra no campo da lealdade, uma lealdade justa, devota e santa, e é diversificadamente traduzido por "benevolência" e "amor leal". — Gên 20:13; 21:23; veja BENIGNIDADE.

Nas Escrituras Gregas, o substantivo ho·si·ó·tes e o adjetivo hó·si·os transmitem a ideia de santidade, justiça, reverência; ser devotado, pio; a cuidadosa observância de todos os deveres para com Deus. Envolve uma relação correta com Deus.

Parece não haver palavras, em português, que expressem com exatidão o pleno significado dos termos hebraicos e gregos, mas "lealdade", que inclui a ideia de devoção e de fidelidade, quando usada em relação com Deus e seu serviço, serve para dar um sentido aproximado. O melhor modo de se determinar o pleno significado dos termos bíblicos em pauta é examinar o seu emprego na Bíblia.

A Lealdade de Jeová. Jeová Deus, o Santíssimo, que é devotado à justiça e que exerce inquebrantável benevolência para com os que o servem, lida com justiça e veracidade até mesmo com seus inimigos, e é eminentemente fidedigno. Diz-se a seu respeito: "Grandes e maravilhosas são as tuas obras, Jeová Deus, o Todo-poderoso. Justos e verdadeiros são os teus caminhos, Rei da eternidade. Quem realmente não te temerá, Jeová, e glorificará o teu nome, porque só tu és leal?" (Re 15:3, 4) Visto que a lealdade de Jeová à retidão e à justiça, bem como seu amor pelo seu povo, leva-o a tomar a necessária ação judicial, um anjo foi induzido a dizer: "Tu, Aquele que é e que era, Aquele que é leal, és justo, porque fizeste estas decisões." — Re 16:5; compare isso com Sal 145:17.

Jeová é leal a seus pactos. (De 7:9) Por causa de seu pacto com seu amigo, Abraão, ele exerceu longanimidade e misericórdia por séculos para com a nação de Israel. (2Rs 13:23) Por meio de seu profeta Jeremias, ele apelou a Israel: "'Volta deveras, ó renegada Israel', é a pronunciação de Jeová. 'Não deixarei a minha face decair em ira para convosco, porque sou leal.'" (Je 3:12) Os que são leais a Ele podem confiar plenamente nele. Davi, em oração, pediu a ajuda de Deus, e disse: "Com alguém leal agirás com lealdade; com o que está sem defeito, o poderoso, procederás sem defeito." (2Sa 22:26) Num apelo ao povo, Davi pediu-lhes que se desviassem do que é mau e fizessem o que é bom, "porque", disse ele, "Jeová ama a justiça e ele não abandonará aqueles que lhe são leais. Hão de ser guardados por tempo indefinido". — Sal 37:27, 28.

Os que são leais a Jeová podem contar com Sua proximidade e Sua ajuda até o derradeiro fim de seu proceder fiel, e podem sentir-se plenamente seguros, sabendo que Ele se lembrará deles, independentemente de que situação surja. Ele guarda os caminhos deles. (Pr 2:8) Ele guarda as suas almas ou vidas. — Sal 97:10.

Jesus Cristo. Jesus Cristo, quando estava na terra, foi grandemente fortalecido por saber que Deus fizera com que fosse predito a seu respeito que, como principal servo "leal" de Deus, sua alma não seria abandonada no Seol. (Sal 16:10) No Pentecostes de 33 EC, o apóstolo Pedro aplicou aquela profecia a Jesus, afirmando: "[Davi] previu e falou a respeito da ressurreição do Cristo, que ele nem foi abandonado no Hades, nem viu a sua carne a corrupção. A este Jesus, Deus ressuscitou, fato de que todos nós somos testemunhas." (At 2:25-28, 31, 32; compare isso com At 13:32-37.) The Expositor's Greek Testament (Testamento Grego do Expositor), num comentário sobre Atos 2:27, diz que a palavra hebraica hha·sídh (usada no Salmo 16:10) "denota, não apenas alguém que é piedoso e devoto, mas também alguém que é objeto da benevolência de Jeová". — Editado por W. R. Nicoll, 1967, Vol. II.

Deus Exige Lealdade. Jeová exige lealdade de seus servos. Eles têm de imitá-lo. (Ef 5:1) O apóstolo Paulo diz aos cristãos que 'devem revestir-se da nova personalidade, que foi criada segundo a vontade de Deus, em verdadeira justiça e lealdade'. (Ef 4:24) Ao recomendar que se ore na congregação, ele diz: "Desejo, portanto, que em todo lugar os homens façam orações, erguendo mãos leais, sem furor e sem debates." (1Ti 2:8) A lealdade é uma das qualidades essenciais para que um homem se habilite para servir como superintendente na congregação de Deus. — Tit 1:8.

LEÃO [hebr.: 'ar·yéh; 'arí; la·ví'; lá·yish; shá·hhal (leão novo); kefír (leão novo jubado); levi·yá' (leoa); aramaico: 'ar·yéh; gr.: lé·on]. Mamífero grande, de coloração castanho-amarelada, da família dos Felídeos, de cauda longa e terminada em mecha. A característica juba desgrenhada do macho começa a crescer quando o animal tem cerca de três anos. Embora agora extintos na Palestina, nos tempos antigos os leões eram bem numerosos ali. Podiam ser encontrados na área da cordilheira do Antilíbano (Cân 4:8), nos matagais ao longo do Jordão (Je 49:19; 50:44; Za 11:3), e na "terra de aflição e de condições difíceis", isto é, o ermo ao S de Judá. — Is 30:6; compare isso com De 8:15.

Houve ocasiões em que os pastores tinham de proteger o rebanho dos leões. Davi, certa vez, abateu corajosamente um leão e salvou a ovelha que ele pegara. (1Sa 17:34, 35) Isto, contudo, foi algo excepcional. Não raro, até mesmo "o pleno número de pastores" não conseguia afugentar um leão novo jubado. (Is 31:4) Às vezes, o pastor só conseguia recuperar da boca do leão uma parte do animal doméstico (Am 3:12), podendo assim apresentar a necessária evidência para livrá-lo de ter de fazer uma compensação. — Êx 22:13.

Embora Davi, Sansão e Benaia sozinhos tenham matado leões (Jz 14:5, 6; 1Sa 17:36; 2Sa 23:20), outros não escaparam das garras do leão. (2Rs 17:25, 26) Jeová empregou leões para executar seu julgamento sobre um profeta que lhe tinha desobedecido (1Rs 13:24-28) e sobre um homem que se recusara a cooperar com um de Seus profetas. — 1Rs 20:36.

As Escrituras repetidas vezes aludem às características e aos hábitos do leão, incluindo seu rugido trovejante e seu bramido. (Pr 19:12; 20:2; Am 3:4, 8) Em geral, o leão não ruge quando caça animais selvagens. Contudo, quando tenta atacar animais domésticos confinados num cercado, o leão não raro ruge. O som aterrador visa provocar uma debandada que quebre a cerca protetora e isole alguns animais do rebanho. O leão tem passadas firmes. (Pr 30:29, 30) A sua força é proverbial. (Jz 14:18; Pr 30:30) Um único golpe da forte pata dum leão é suficiente para quebrar o pescoço de um pequeno antílope. O leão consegue matar e arrastar animais maiores do que ele próprio, e suas mandíbulas curtas e fortes estão equipadas de dentes com força suficiente para despedaçar grandes ossos. (Sal 58:6; Jl 1:6; Is 38:13) Pouco é de admirar que o preguiçoso seja representado como se desculpando por deixar de agir, usando as palavras: "Há um leão lá fora!" (Pr 22:13; 26:13) No entanto, sendo carnívoros, os leões podem perecer por falta de presas. (Jó 4:11; veja também Sal 34:10.) E "melhor está o cão vivo [embora desprezado] do que o leão [outrora majestoso, mas agora] morto". — Ec 9:4.

O leão geralmente passa parte do dia dormindo na sua toca, e faz a maior parte da caça à noite. Ao procurar seu alimento, ele recorre a uma emboscada, ou então se aproxima furtivamente da presa até que se encontre suficientemente próximo para uma curta investida. (Jó 38:39, 40; Sal 10:9; La 3:10) Ele pode então locomover-se a uma velocidade de cerca de 65 km/h. Para ganharem a necessária experiência em matar as presas, os filhotes de leões começam a acompanhar a mãe nas caçadas aos três meses de idade. Eles são desmamados depois de seis ou sete meses, chegam à maturidade sexual no quarto ano e atingem o pleno porte físico em seis anos. — Ez 19:2, 3.

Há muito que o homem caça leões. Usavam-se covas e redes para capturá-los. (Ez 19:3, 4, 9) Na antiga Assíria, a caça aos leões era um dos esportes favoritos do monarca. Quer a cavalo, quer em seu carro, o rei, armado de arco e flechas, perseguia os leões. — FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 955.

Nos tempos antigos, leões famintos eram empregados para infligir a pena capital. Protegido pelo anjo de Jeová, o profeta Daniel escapou deste destino. (Da 6:16, 17, 22, 24; compare isso com He 11:33.) No primeiro século EC, o apóstolo Paulo foi livrado da "boca do leão", quer em sentido literal, quer figurado. — 2Ti 4:17.

Emprego Ornamental e Figurado. Gravuras de leões ornamentavam os painéis laterais dos carrocins de cobre destinados à utilização no templo. (1Rs 7:27-36) E as figuras de 12 leões perfilavam as escadas que davam para o trono de Salomão, além dos dois leões em pé ao lado dos braços do trono. (1Rs 10:19, 20) Também o templo, que Ezequiel observou em visão, estava adornado de querubins que tinham duas faces, uma de homem e outra de um leão novo jubado. — Ez 41:18, 19.

A maioria das referências bíblicas ao leão são figuradas ou ilustrativas. A inteira nação de Israel (Núm 23:24; 24:9) e, individualmente, as tribos de Judá (Gên 49:9) e Gade (De 33:20), foram comparadas profeticamente a leões, símbolos da invencibilidade e da coragem na guerra justa. (Compare isso com 2Sa 17:10; 1Cr 12:8; Pr 28:1.) Jeová se compara a um leão ao executar o julgamento sobre seu povo infiel. (Os 5:14; 11:10; 13:7-9) E a mais destacada autoridade judicial de Deus, Jesus Cristo, é "o Leão que é da tribo de Judá". (Re 5:5) Apropriadamente, portanto, o leão, como símbolo de justiça corajosa, é associado com a presença e o trono de Jeová. — Ez 1:10; 10:14; Re 4:7.

Por causa das características ferozes, rapinantes e predatórias do leão, esse animal também foi usado para representar os iníquos (Sal 10:9), as pessoas que se opõem a Jeová e seu povo (Sal 22:13; 35:17; 57:4; Je 12:8), os falsos profetas (Ez 22:25), os governantes e os príncipes iníquos (Pr 28:15; Sof 3:3), a Potência Mundial Babilônica (Da 7:4) e Satanás, o Diabo (1Pe 5:8). E a fera de sete cabeças e dez chifres que procede do mar, que deriva sua autoridade de Satanás, foi representada como tendo boca de leão. (Re 13:2) No Salmo 91:13, o leão e a naja parecem indicar o poder do inimigo, o leão ali representando o ataque aberto, e a naja o ardil furtivo, ou ataques a partir de um local oculto. — Compare isso com Lu 10:19; 2Co 11:3.

Por volta da época em que os israelitas retornaram à sua terra natal, em 537 AEC, Jeová evidentemente protegeu-os contra leões e outros animais rapinantes ao longo do caminho. (Is 35:8-10) Naquela terra, os leões e outros predadores sem dúvida aumentaram durante os 70 anos de sua desolação. (Compare isso com Êx 23:29.) Mas, evidentemente por causa do cuidado vigilante de Jeová sobre seu povo, os israelitas e seus animais domésticos aparentemente não caíram presa de leões, como se dera com os povos estrangeiros a quem o rei da Assíria estabeleceu nas cidades de Samaria. (2Rs 17:25, 26) Por conseguinte, do ponto de vista dos israelitas, o leão, na verdade, comia palha como um touro, isto é, não causava dano a eles nem a seus animais domésticos. (Is 65:18, 19, 25) Sob o domínio do Messias, contudo, há um cumprimento maior das profecias de restauração. Pessoas que outrora talvez fossem de disposição bestial, animalesca e feroz, vêm a estar em paz com seus semelhantes mais dóceis e não tentam fazer-lhes mal ou dano. Tanto literal como figurativamente, a paz virá a existir entre os leões e os animais domésticos. — Is 11:1-6; veja ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS.

LEBANA [Branco; Lua Cheia]. Fundador de uma família cujos filhos, ou descendentes, estavam entre os netineus que retornaram do exílio babilônico junto com Zorobabel. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 45; Ne 7:46, 48.

LEBAOTE [Leoas]. Cidade no sul do território de Judá (Jos 15:21, 32), aparentemente também chamada de Bete-Lebaote e designada como tal à tribo de Simeão. — Jos 19:1, 2, 6; veja BETE-LEBAOTE.

LEBE-CAMAI [Coração dos Que se Levantam Contra Mim]. Parece ser um nome criptográfico para Caldeia, ou Kas·dím. Aparece apenas em Jeremias 51:1, numa declaração sobre o que Jeová faria com Babilônia e os habitantes da Caldeia. Este termo é empregado ali em harmonia com um sistema chamado de athbash, em que a última letra do alfabeto hebraico (taw) representa a primeira letra dele ('á·lef), a penúltima letra (shin) representa a segunda (behth), e assim por diante. Por isso, em Jeremias 51:1, o verdadeiro nome (Kas·dím) é disfarçado por se formar a palavra hebraica Lev qa·maí (Lebe-Camai). Em vez de "Lebe-Camai", a Septuaginta grega diz "os caldeus", e os targuns rezam "a terra dos caldeus".

LEBONA. Lugar mencionado como ponto de referência com relação à localização de Silo. (Jz 21:19) Supõe-se que se trate de el-Lubban (Lubban Sharqiya), a uns 5 km a ONO da sugerida localização de Silo. Contudo, a localização de Silo segundo a Bíblia, "para o sul de Lebona", talvez indique que originalmente a cidade se situava mais a E do que aquela sugerida localização.

LEBRE [hebr.: 'ar·né·veth]. Roedor da família dos leporídeos, intimamente aparentado com o coelho, porém maior do que ele. Difere deste no sentido de que seus filhotes em geral não nascem numa toca escavada no solo, já nascem ativos, com pelagem completa e de olhos já abertos. A lebre é conhecida por seu lábio fendido, longas orelhas, rabo ereto e suas compridas pernas traseiras, tão úteis para rapidamente fugir dos inimigos. Consta que as lebres mais rápidas atingem uma velocidade de 70 km/h. O comprimento médio desses animais, dos quais há numerosas espécies, é de cerca de 60 cm. São em geral de cor cinzenta ou acastanhada.

A Lei dada mediante Moisés proibia a lebre como alimento, e menciona-a como ruminante. (Le 11:4, 6; De 14:7) As lebres e os coelhos, naturalmente, não têm um estômago de muitas cavidades ou de muitas partes, e eles não regurgitam o alimento para voltar a mastigá-lo, características estas ligadas à classificação científica dos ruminantes. No entanto, embora o termo hebraico aqui usado para ruminar literalmente signifique "trazer para cima", a classificação científica moderna não era a base para o que os israelitas nos dias de Moisés entendiam por 'ruminante'. Assim sendo, não há base para se julgar a exatidão da declaração bíblica através da concepção restrita e relativamente recente do que é um animal ruminante, como o fazem muitos críticos.

No passado, comentaristas que tinham fé na inspiração do registro bíblico não viam nenhum erro nessa declaração da Lei. Observou The Imperial Bible-Dictionary (O Dicionário Bíblico Imperial): "É óbvio que a lebre, em repouso, mastiga vez após vez o alimento que ingeriu algum tempo antes; e este hábito sempre foi considerado popularmente como ruminar. Até mesmo nosso poeta Cowper, cuidadoso observador de fenômenos naturais, que registrou suas observações sobre três lebres que domesticou, afirma que elas 'ruminavam o dia todo até a noitinha'." — Editado por P. Fairbairn, Londres, 1874, Vol. I, p. 700.

A observação científica das lebres e dos coelhos em anos mais recentes, contudo, indica que está envolvido mais do que a aparente ruminação. Escreve François Bourlière (The Natural History of Mammals [História Natural dos Mamíferos], 1964, p. 41): "O hábito da 'coprofagia', ou de fazer o alimento passar duas vezes pelos intestinos, em vez de apenas uma, parece ser um fenômeno comum nos coelhos e nas lebres. Os coelhos domésticos em geral comem, e engolem sem mastigar, seu excremento noturno, que constitui pela manhã quase a metade do conteúdo geral do estômago. No coelho-selvagem, a coprofagia ocorre duas vezes por dia, e relata-se que a lebre europeia tem o mesmo hábito. . . . Crê-se que tal hábito provê esses animais de grandes doses de vitaminas B, produzidas por bactérias contidas no alimento que se acha no intestino grosso." Sobre o mesmo ponto, a obra Mammals of the World (Mamíferos do Mundo; de E. P. Walker, 1964, Vol. II, p. 647) comenta: "Isto pode ser similar à 'ruminação' dos mamíferos ruminantes." — Veja RUMINANTE.

LECA. Provavelmente um descendente de Judá através de Er. (1Cr 4:21) À base do contexto, tem-se sugerido que Leca era uma aldeia, mas a localização de tal lugar é desconhecida.

LEGIÃO. Nome pelo qual se identificou um dos dois homens endemoninhados, com quem Cristo Jesus se encontrou na região ao L do mar da Galileia. Evidentemente, porém, o seu nome real não era Legião, visto que isso se referia a estar ele possesso de muitos demônios. É possível que o principal destes demônios fizesse com que este homem dissesse que seu nome era Legião. O fato de que as legiões romanas no primeiro século EC em geral eram constituídas de 6.000 homens, pode ser um indício do grande número de demônios envolvidos. Tal homem possesso e seu companheiro eram tão ferozes que ninguém ousava passar pela área em que eles habitavam, no meio dos túmulos. Sob influência demoníaca, o homem que disse que seu nome era Legião andava nu, e dia e noite clamava em alta voz e se cortava com pedras. Todos os esforços de amarrá-lo, mesmo com cadeias e grilhões, falharam. Cristo Jesus, contudo, libertou este homem e seu companheiro do poder dos demônios. Depois disso, os demônios expulsos se apoderaram duma vara de porcos e fizeram com que estes se lançassem dum precipício, morrendo no mar da Galileia. — Mt 8:28-34; Mr 5:1-20; Lu 8:26-39; veja GADARENOS; PORCO.

Quanto a detalhes sobre as legiões romanas, veja EXÉRCITO (Romano).

LEGISLADOR. Um formulador de leis; alguém que legisla. A Bíblia centraliza a atenção em Jeová como o Legislador fundamental do universo.

Jeová Como o Legislador. Jeová é, em realidade, o único verdadeiro Legislador do universo. São-lhe atribuídas as leis físicas que governam a criação inanimada (Jó 38:4-38; Sal 104:5-19) e a vida animal. (Jó 39:1-30) O homem também, como criação de Jeová, está sujeito às leis físicas de Jeová e, sendo ele uma criatura dotada de senso moral, racional, capaz de arrazoar e de ter espiritualidade, está igualmente sujeito às leis morais de Deus. (Ro 12:1; 1Co 2:14-16) Ademais, a lei de Jeová governa as criaturas espirituais, os anjos. — Sal 103:20; 2Pe 2:4, 11.

As leis físicas de Jeová são invioláveis. (Je 33:20, 21) Por todo o universo visível conhecido, suas leis são tão estáveis e fidedignas que, em áreas em que os cientistas têm conhecimento destas leis, podem calcular os movimentos da lua, dos planetas e de outros corpos celestes com exatidão de fração de segundo. Quem quer que aja contrário às leis físicas sente a aplicação imediata de suas sanções. Similarmente, as leis morais de Deus são irrevogáveis e não podem ser burladas ou violadas com impunidade. A execução delas é tão certa como a de Suas leis naturais, embora a punição talvez não seja imposta tão de imediato. "De Deus não se mofa. Pois, o que o homem semear, isso também ceifará." — Gál 6:7; 1Ti 5:24.

Antes de Jeová ter dado a sua lei a Israel, como podiam os humanos determinar qual era a vontade de Deus para com eles?

Ainda que desde a rebelião de Adão até o Dilúvio a maldade aumentasse entre a maioria de seus descendentes, alguns homens fiéis 'prosseguiram andando com o verdadeiro Deus'. (Gên 5:22-24; 6:9; He 11:4-7) As únicas ordens específicas, registradas como tendo sido fornecidas a tais homens por Deus, são as instruções dadas a Noé com relação à arca. Noé as obedeceu implicitamente. (Gên 6:13-22) Não obstante, havia princípios e precedentes para guiar os humanos fiéis no seu 'andar com o verdadeiro Deus'.

Eles sabiam da abundante generosidade de Deus em prover as coisas para o homem no Éden; eles viram a evidência do altruísmo e do amoroso interesse divinos. Sabiam que o princípio de chefia vigorava desde o início: Deus como cabeça do homem, e o homem como cabeça da mulher. Sabiam da designação de trabalho que Deus dera ao homem, bem como de Seu interesse no cuidado correto das coisas concedidas ao homem para seu uso e usufruto. Sabiam que as uniões sexuais deviam existir apenas entre homem e mulher, e que as pessoas assim unidas deviam fazê-lo no âmbito da relação marital, que 'deixariam pai e mãe' para formar uma união duradoura, em vez de temporária (como na fornicação). À base da ordem de Deus a respeito do uso das árvores do jardim do Éden e, em especial, da árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau, podiam compreender o princípio dos direitos de posse e o devido respeito a tais. Estavam cientes dos maus resultados advindos da primeira mentira. Sabiam que Deus aprovara a forma de adoração de Abel, que Deus desaprovara a inveja e o ódio de Caim para com seu irmão, e que Deus punira Caim pelo assassinato de Abel. — Gên 1:26–4:16.

Assim, mesmo sem disporem de adicionais declarações específicas, decretos ou estatutos da parte de Deus, eles podiam basear-se nestes princípios e precedentes para guiá-los em situações diferentes, porém relacionadas, que porventura surgissem. Séculos mais tarde, Jesus e seus apóstolos consideravam deste modo os assuntos pré-diluvianos. (Mt 19:3-9; Jo 8:43-47; 1Ti 2:11-14; 1Jo 3:11, 12) Lei significa regra de ação. Através das palavras e ações de Deus, eles dispunham dos meios para saber algo sobre Seus modos de agir, seus padrões, e isto deveria ser a regra de ação, ou lei, que eles deveriam seguir. Por assim fazerem, poderiam 'prosseguir andando com o verdadeiro Deus'. Os que não o fizessem estariam pecando, 'errando o alvo', embora não houvesse um código jurídico que os condenasse.

Depois do Dilúvio, Deus deu a Noé a lei, válida para toda a humanidade, que permitia que se comesse carne, mas proibia comer sangue, e Ele declarava o princípio da pena capital para o assassinato. (Gên 9:1-6) No período pós-diluviano inicial, homens tais como Abraão, Isaque, Jacó e José mostraram genuíno interesse pelos modos de agir de Deus, por sua regra de ação. (Gên 18:17-19; 39:7-9; Êx 3:6) Embora Deus fornecesse certas ordens específicas a homens fiéis (Gên 26:5), como a lei da circuncisão, não há registro de que Ele lhes tenha dado um pormenorizado código jurídico para observar. (Veja De 5:1-3.) Não obstante, eles não só dispunham dos princípios e dos preceitos do período pré-diluviano para guiá-los, como também de outros princípios e preceitos derivados de expressões de Deus e de Seus modos de lidar com a humanidade no período pós-diluviano.

Assim, embora Deus não lhes tivesse dado um pormenorizado código jurídico, como fez mais tarde com os israelitas, os homens não deixavam de dispor de certos meios para determinar qual era a conduta certa e a errada. A idolatria, por exemplo, ainda não tinha sido especificamente condenada por meio duma lei expressa. Todavia, como mostra o apóstolo Paulo, tal prática era inescusável, uma vez que as "qualidades invisíveis [de Deus] são claramente vistas desde a criação do mundo em diante, porque são percebidas por meio das coisas feitas, mesmo seu sempiterno poder e Divindade". Venerar e prestar "serviço sagrado antes à criação do que Àquele que criou" era contrário a toda a razão. Aqueles que seguissem tal proceder desarrazoado se desviariam, depois disso, para outras práticas injustas, como o homossexualismo, deixando 'o uso natural de si mesmos por outro contrário à natureza'. Aqui também, embora não se tivesse dado nenhuma lei específica, tal prática era obviamente contrária ao modo de agir de Deus, o Criador, conforme manifesto na própria estrutura física do varão e da fêmea. O homem, tendo sido originalmente feito à imagem de Deus, tinha suficiente inteligência para observar tais coisas. Assim, ele era responsável perante Deus, caso agisse contrário ao modo de Deus; estaria pecando, 'errando o alvo', mesmo sem haver uma lei especificamente declarada que o acusasse. — Ro 1:18-27; compare isso com Ro 5:13.

O pacto da Lei. Mesmo antes do Êxodo do Egito, Jeová servira como Legislador de seu povo, Israel. (Êx 12:1, 14-20; 13:10) Mas, um exemplo notável de seu papel como Legislador de uma nação foi ter ele instituído o pacto da Lei. Então, pela primeira vez, havia um conjunto de leis em forma de código, que governava cada faceta da vida. Este pacto, que fazia de Israel um povo exclusivo, uma nação que pertencia peculiarmente a Ele, diferençava Israel de todas as demais nações. — Êx 31:16, 17; De 4:8; Sal 78:5; 147:19, 20.

Numa mensagem profética que predizia a salvação da parte de Jeová, disse o profeta Isaías: "Jeová é o nosso Juiz, Jeová é o nosso Legislador, Jeová é o nosso Rei; ele mesmo nos salvará." (Is 33:22) Jeová, portanto, constituía os poderes judiciário, legislativo e executivo em Israel; os três ramos de governo combinavam-se nele. A profecia de Isaías dava assim garantia de completa defesa e orientação para aquela nação, pois realçava o fato de que Jeová era, em pleno sentido, o Governante Soberano.

Ao referir-se a Jeová como Legislador de Israel, Isaías usou uma forma do termo hebraico hha·qáq, que literalmente significa "esculpir" ou "inscrever". Ao explicar essa palavra, o léxico hebraico de W. Gesenius diz: "Visto que a inscrição de decretos e estatutos em tabuinhas e monumentos públicos era tarefa do legislador, isto implica também o poder de decretar." (A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament (Léxico Hebraico e Inglês do Velho Testamento), traduzido para o inglês por E. Robinson, 1836, p. 366) Os tradutores da Bíblia têm vertido a palavra por "legislador", "comandante", "príncipe", "chefe". (Gên 49:10; De 33:21; Jz 5:14; Sal 60:7; 108:8; veja Al, BV, NM, PIB.) Assim, a tradução "Legislador" harmoniza-se com um dos sentidos da palavra hebraica, e propicia um adequado contraste e plenitude em Isaías 33:22, onde a palavra está incluída na mesma sentença junto com "Juiz" e "Rei".

Deus não havia fornecido uma lei tão pormenorizada a nenhuma outra nação ou povo. Todavia, originalmente Deus criara o homem em justiça, e lhe provera da faculdade da consciência. Apesar da imperfeição inerente do homem decaído, e de sua tendência para o pecado, restava também evidência de ter sido ele feito à imagem e à semelhança de seu Criador, bem como evidência da faculdade da consciência. Assim, até mesmo entre as nações não israelitas, formularam-se certas normas de conduta e certos decretos judiciais que, em certa medida, refletiam os princípios justos de Deus.

O apóstolo Paulo explica isso, dizendo: "Por exemplo, todos os que sem lei [isto é, a lei de Deus dada a seu povo] pecaram, perecerão também sem lei; mas todos os que pecaram debaixo de lei, serão julgados por lei. Porque não são os ouvintes da lei que são justos diante de Deus, mas os cumpridores da lei é que serão declarados justos. Pois, sempre que pessoas das nações, que não têm lei, fazem por natureza as coisas da lei, tais pessoas, embora não tenham lei, são uma lei para si mesmas. Elas é que são quem demonstra que a matéria da lei está escrita nos seus corações, ao passo que a sua consciência lhes dá testemunho e nos seus próprios pensamentos são acusadas ou até mesmo desculpadas." (Ro 2:12-15) Por conseguinte, aquelas nações, embora não tivessem sido levadas a uma relação legal com Deus, não estavam isentas de pecado, mas sim 'erraram o alvo' quanto às normas perfeitas de Jeová. — Veja Ro 3:9.

Por ter dado o pacto da Lei a Israel, Deus deixou claro que todas as pessoas, não meramente os pagãos idólatras, mas também os israelitas, eram culpadas de pecado. Servia para deixar os israelitas vividamente cônscios das muitas maneiras pelas quais eles deixavam de adequar-se a padrões perfeitos. Isto era assim "a fim de que se tape cada boca e todo o mundo fique sujeito a Deus para punição . . . pois pela lei vem o conhecimento exato do pecado". (Ro 3:19, 20) Mesmo que um israelita não praticasse idolatria, se abstivesse do sangue e não fosse culpado de assassinato, ainda assim, pelo pacto da Lei, ele era declarado culpado de pecado. Isto se dava porque o pacto da Lei agora especificamente identificava uma hoste de ações e até mesmo de atitudes como pecaminosas. Assim, Paulo, considerando a si mesmo como se já estivesse vivo nos lombos de seus antepassados de antes de a Lei ter sido dada, diz: "Realmente, eu não teria chegado a conhecer o pecado, se não fosse a Lei; e, por exemplo, eu não teria conhecido a cobiça, se a Lei não dissesse: 'Não deves cobiçar.' . . . De fato, eu estava uma vez vivo à parte da lei; mas, ao chegar o mandamento, o pecado passou a viver novamente, mas eu morri." — Ro 7:7-9.

Outros Legisladores. Quando o Filho de Deus veio à terra, ele reconheceu a Jeová como seu Legislador e Deus. Como judeu, o próprio Jesus nasceu sob o pacto da Lei, obrigado a obedecê-lo de modo perfeito. (Gál 4:4, 5) Ele, por sua vez, estabeleceu leis para seus seguidores, tanto ao lhes falar como por meio de espírito santo, que operava sobre seus seguidores ao escreverem as Escrituras Cristãs. Coletivamente, essas leis são chamadas de "a lei do Cristo". (Gál 6:2; Jo 15:10-15; 1Co 9:21) Esta lei governa "o Israel de Deus", sua "nação" espiritual. (Gál 6:16; 1Pe 2:9) Cristo, contudo, não foi o originador destas leis, mas obteve-as do grande Legislador, Jeová. — Jo 14:10.

Moisés. Embora a Bíblia repetidas vezes mencione "a lei de Moisés" (Jos 8:31, 32; 1Rs 2:3; 2Cr 23:18; 30:16), também reconhece a Jeová como o verdadeiro Legislador, e a Moisés como apenas Seu instrumento e representante em dar a Lei a Israel. (2Cr 34:14) Até mesmo os anjos tiveram parte em representar a Deus neste assunto, pois a Lei "foi transmitida por intermédio de anjos, pela mão dum mediador". Não obstante, Moisés, sendo designado por Jeová como mediador do pacto entre Deus e Israel, é mencionado como se ele fosse o legislador. — Gál 3:19; He 2:2.

Governantes humanos como legisladores. Deus não estabeleceu os governos humanos mundanos, nem lhes deu a autoridade que estes detêm, mas tem consentido na sua existência, e os tem removido e permitido que surgissem outros, conforme conviesse ao Seu propósito. (De 32:8; Da 4:35; 5:26-31; At 17:26; Ro 13:1) Alguns destes governantes se tornam legisladores de sua nação, estado ou comunidade. Mas, suas leis e estatutos só são acertados caso se enquadrem nos limites da lei do Grande Legislador, Jeová Deus, e se harmonizem com esta. O famoso jurista inglês, Sir William Blackstone, disse com referência à lei de Deus que governa as coisas naturais: "Ela é válida em todo o globo, em todos os países, em todas as épocas: não há leis humanas que sejam de qualquer validez se forem contrárias a esta; e as que forem válidas derivam toda a sua força e toda a sua autoridade, indireta ou diretamente, deste original." Também: "Destes dois alicerces, a lei da natureza e a lei da revelação [encontrada apenas nas Escrituras Sagradas], dependem todas as leis humanas, ou seja, não se deve tolerar que alguma lei humana contradiga estas." — Chadman's Cyclopedia of Law (Ciclopédia Jurídica de Chadman), 1912, Vol. I, pp. 89, 91; compare isso com Mt 22:21; At 5:29.

Na congregação cristã. Tiago, meio-irmão de Jesus, escreveu a alguns cristãos que se tornavam orgulhosos, jactanciosos e críticos de seus irmãos cristãos, dizendo: "Cessai de falar uns contra os outros, irmãos. Quem falar contra um irmão ou julgar seu irmão fala contra a lei e julga a lei. Ora, se julgas a lei, não és cumpridor da lei, mas juiz. Há um que é legislador [gr.: no·mo·thé·tes] e juiz, aquele que é capaz de salvar e de destruir. Mas tu, quem és tu para julgares o teu próximo?" Tiago prossegue falando dos que se jactavam do que iriam fazer no futuro, como se não dependessem das circunstâncias, em vez de dizerem: "Se Jeová quiser." (Tg 4:11-16) Tiago falara da "lei régia": "Tens de amar o teu próximo como a ti mesmo." (Tg 2:8) Tais cristãos, por deixarem de demonstrar amor ao próximo, em vez disso falando mal dele, estavam, na verdade, constituindo a si mesmos juízes da lei divina, quais legisladores ou promulgadores de lei.

O apóstolo Paulo dera conselhos similares em sua carta aos romanos, a respeito de alguns que julgavam outros à base de coisas tais como o que eles comiam e bebiam: "Quem és tu para julgares o servo doméstico de outro? Para o seu próprio amo está em pé ou cai. Deveras, far-se-á que ele fique em pé, pois Jeová pode fazê-lo ficar em pé." — Ro 14:4.

À luz do precedente, como podem ser encaradas as instruções de Paulo com respeito a um grave caso de fornicação na congregação em Corinto? Ele disse: "Eu, da minha parte, embora ausente em corpo, mas presente em espírito, certamente, como se estivesse presente, já tenho julgado o homem que agiu de tal modo. . . . Não julgais vós os de dentro, ao passo que Deus julga os de fora? 'Removei o homem iníquo de entre vós.'" Ele então mencionou o julgar os assuntos desta vida, e os que eles haviam 'colocado como juízes' para si mesmos. — 1Co 5:1-3, 12, 13; 6:3, 4; compare isso com Jo 7:24.

Paulo, investido da autoridade como apóstolo de Jesus Cristo, tinha o dever de cuidar da pureza e do bem-estar das congregações (2Co 1:1; 11:28); assim, ele escreveu aos que, por designação do corpo governante, tinham autoridade na congregação. (At 14:23; 16:4, 5; 1Ti 3:1-13; 5:22) Eles eram responsáveis por manter a congregação em boa condição, como pura aos olhos de Deus. Tais homens, ao se proporem a julgar o caso mencionado — que se tratava duma clara e flagrante violação da lei de Deus —, não estavam fazendo de si mesmos juízes da lei de Deus, tampouco formulariam leis segundo a sua própria vontade. Não estariam indo além dos limites das leis dadas por Deus. Estariam atuando segundo a lei dada pelo Grande Legislador, que denunciava a fornicação como impura. Os praticantes de tal impureza não entrariam no Reino de Deus, segundo a lei de Deus. (1Co 6:9, 10) Não se habilitavam a permanecer associados com a congregação de Cristo. Todavia, mesmo assim, os homens responsáveis pela pureza da congregação, por expulsar os impuros, não estavam executando a pena que Deus, o próprio Legislador, executaria sobre aqueles que, impenitentemente, continuassem a seguir tal proceder, a saber, a pena de morte. — Ro 1:24-27, 32.

Paulo também traz à atenção dos cristãos que "os santos julgarão o mundo", e que "havemos de julgar anjos". Aqui, ele fala, não da época presente, mas do futuro, quando aqueles que reinarem com Cristo, no Reino, servirão como juízes celestiais, administrando a lei de Deus e executando julgamento contra os iníquos. — 1Co 6:1-3; Re 20:6; compare isso com 1Co 4:8.

A bênção de Moisés sobre Gade. Quando Moisés abençoou as tribos de Israel, pouco antes de morrer, "quanto a Gade ele disse: 'Bendito é aquele que alarga as fronteiras de Gade. . . . E [Gade] selecionará para si a primeira parte, pois ali se reserva o lote dum legislador.'" (De 33:20, 21) Este uso do termo "legislador" talvez signifique o seguinte: A maioria das tribos recebeu a sua herança por meio de sortes, sob a direção de Josué e de Eleazar, o sumo sacerdote. Mas, pouco depois da derrota dos midianitas, a tribo de Gade, junto com a de Rubem, solicitaram as terras a L do rio Jordão. Visto que estas tribos tinham muito gado, aquela terra servia-lhes bem. Moisés atendeu ao pedido e concedeu-lhes esta parte da terra. (Núm 32:1-5, 20-22, 28) Assim, seu quinhão era um "lote dum legislador", de Moisés, o legislador de Israel.

LEI. "1. Os princípios e regulamentos que emanam de um governo e aplicáveis a um povo, quer em forma de legislação, quer de costumes e diretrizes reconhecidos e feitos cumprir por meio de decisão judicial. 2. Qualquer regra escrita ou explícita, ou coleção de regras, prescritas sob a autoridade do estado ou da nação." (The American College Dictionary [O Dicionário Universitário Americano], editado por C. L. Barnhart, 1966) "Um mandamento divino ou uma revelação da vontade de Deus . . . o inteiro corpo dos mandamentos ou revelações de Deus: a vontade de Deus . . . : uma regra de correto viver ou boa conduta esp[ecialmente] quando considerado como tendo a sanção da vontade de Deus, da consciência ou da natureza moral, ou da justiça natural." — Webster's Third New International Dictionary (Terceiro Novo Dicionário Internacional de Webster), 1981.

A palavra "lei", nas Escrituras Hebraicas, é principalmente uma tradução da palavra hebraica toh·ráh, aparentada com o verbo ya·ráh, que significa "dirigir, ensinar, instruir". Em alguns casos é traduzida do termo aramaico dath. (Da 6:5, 8, 15) Outras palavras traduzidas por "lei" na versão Almeida são mish·pát (decisão judicial, julgamento), e mits·wáh (mandamento). Nas Escrituras Gregas, a palavra nó·mos, do verbo né·mo (repartir, distribuir), é traduzida por "lei".

Jeová Deus é apresentado como a Fonte de lei, o Supremo Legislador (Is 33:22), o Soberano, que delega autoridade (Sal 73:28; Je 50:25; Lu 2:29; At 4:24; Re 6:10), sendo que nenhuma autoridade pode ser exercida sem a permissão ou autorização dele. (Ro 13:1; Da 4:35; At 17:24-31) Seu trono se firma sobre a justiça e o juízo. (Sal 97:1, 2) A vontade expressa de Deus torna-se lei para suas criaturas. — Veja CAUSA JURÍDICA.

A Lei Dada aos Anjos. Os anjos, mais elevados que o homem, estão sujeitos à lei e aos mandamentos de Deus. (He 1:7, 14; Sal 104:4) Jeová até mesmo deu ordens a seu adversário, Satanás, e o restringiu. (Jó 1:12; 2:6) Miguel, o arcanjo, reconheceu e respeitou a posição de Jeová como Juiz Supremo, quando disse, numa disputa com o Diabo: "Jeová te censure." (Ju 9; compare isso com Za 3:2.) O glorificado Jesus Cristo tem todos os anjos colocados sob sua autoridade, por Jeová Deus. (He 1:6; 1Pe 3:22; Mt 13:41; 25:31; Fil 2:9-11) Assim, por ordem de Jesus, foi enviado um mensageiro angélico a João. (Re 1:1) Todavia, em 1 Coríntios 6:3, o apóstolo Paulo fala dos irmãos espirituais de Cristo como designados a julgar anjos, evidentemente porque eles participarão de algum modo em executar julgamento contra os espíritos iníquos.

A Lei da Criação Divina. Uma das definições de lei no Webster's Third New International Dictionary é "a regularidade observada na natureza". Como Criador de todas as coisas no céu e na terra (At 4:24; Re 4:11), Jeová estabeleceu leis que governam todas as coisas criadas. Jó 38:10 menciona um "regulamento" para o mar; Jó 38:12, a 'ordem dada à manhã'; e Jó 38:31-33 traz à atenção as constelações de estrelas e "os estatutos dos céus". O mesmo capítulo indica que Deus governa a luz, a neve, a saraiva, as nuvens, a chuva, o orvalho e o relâmpago. Continuando nos capítulos 39 até o fim do 41 , mostra-se o cuidado de Deus para com o reino animal, e atribuem-se o nascimento, os ciclos de vida e os hábitos dos animais a regulamentos baixados por Deus, e não a qualquer "adaptação" evolucionária. De fato, na própria criação das formas de vida, Deus incorporou a lei de que cada uma devia reproduzir "segundo a sua espécie", tornando impossível a evolução. (Gên 1:11, 12, 21, 24, 25) O homem também gerou filhos "à sua semelhança, à sua imagem". (Gên 5:3) No Salmo 139:13-16, o desenvolvimento embrionário dum bebê no útero é mencionado, as suas partes estando escritas 'no livro de Jeová', antes que quaisquer delas realmente existissem. Jó 26:7 descreve a Jeová como 'suspendendo a terra sobre o nada'. Os cientistas hoje atribuem a posição da terra no espaço primariamente à interação entre a lei da gravidade e a lei da força centrífuga.

A Lei Dada a Adão. No jardim do Éden, Adão e Eva receberam ordens de Deus quanto a seus deveres (1) de encher a terra, (2) de subjugá-la e (3) de ter em sujeição todas as outras criaturas viventes da terra, do mar e do ar. (Gên 1:28) Deram-se-lhes leis sobre a dieta alimentar, sendo-lhes concedido como alimento a vegetação que produzia semente e os frutos. (Gên 1:29; 2:16) No entanto, Adão recebeu uma ordem que lhe proibia comer da árvore do conhecimento do bem e do mal (Gên 2:17); esta ordem foi transmitida a Eva. (Gên 3:2, 3) Apresenta-se Adão como transgressor e violador de propriedade alheia porque violou uma lei expressa. — Ro 5:14, 17; 4:15.

As Leis Dadas a Noé; Lei Patriarcal. A Noé foram dados mandamentos relativos à construção da arca e à salvação de sua família. (Gên 6:22) Depois do Dilúvio, deram-se-lhe leis que permitiam acrescentar carne à dieta alimentar do homem; que declaravam a santidade da vida e, portanto, do sangue, em que reside a vida; que proibiam comer sangue; que condenavam o assassinato e instituíam a pena capital para tal crime. — Gên 9:3-6.

O patriarca era o cabeça e o governante da família. Jeová é descrito como o grande Chefe de Família ou Patriarca, o "Pai, a quem toda família no céu e na terra deve o seu nome". (Ef 3:14, 15) Noé, Abraão, Isaque e Jacó são notáveis exemplos de patriarcas. Jeová lidava de modo especial com eles. Abraão recebeu a ordem de circuncidar a todos os varões de sua casa, como sinal do pacto de Deus com ele. (Gên 17:11, 12) Ele guardou as "ordens", os "estatutos" e as "leis" de Jeová. Ele conhecia os modos de agir de Jeová para a prática da justiça e do juízo, e fazia vigorar tais ordens em sua casa. — Gên 26:4, 5; 18:19.

As leis que governavam os patriarcas eram também, de modo geral, conhecidas pelas nações daquele tempo, e se refletiam parcialmente nas leis dessas nações, todas as quais se ramificaram dos três filhos de Noé, o patriarca. Por exemplo, o Faraó do Egito sabia ser errado tomar a esposa de outro homem (Gên 12:14-20), como também o sabiam os reis dos filisteus nos episódios de Sara e de Rebeca. — Gên 20:2-6; 26:7-11.

Nos dias de Moisés, os israelitas eram escravos no Egito. Haviam ido voluntariamente ao Egito nos dias de Jacó, mas foram escravizados depois da morte do filho de Jacó, o primeiro-ministro José. Assim, na realidade, eles foram vendidos como escravos em troca de nada. Jeová, em harmonia com a lei patriarcal da redenção e da prioridade do primogênito, disse a Faraó, pela boca de Moisés e Arão: "Israel é meu filho, meu primogênito. E eu te digo: Manda embora meu filho, para que me sirva. Mas, caso te negues a mandá-lo embora, eis que mato teu filho, teu primogênito." (Êx 4:22, 23) Não era necessário pagar um valor de resgate para essa libertação, e nenhum valor foi pago ao Egito. E, quando os escravos israelitas deixaram seus amos, os egípcios, "Jeová deu ao povo favor aos olhos dos egípcios, de modo que estes lhes concederam o que se pedia; e despojaram os egípcios". (Êx 3:21; 12:36) Eles haviam entrado no país com a aprovação do Faraó, não como cativos de guerra a serem escravizados, mas como povo livre. A escravidão fora injusta, assim, evidentemente Jeová providenciava agora que eles recebessem o salário pelos seus labores.

A família era tida como responsável pelas violações da lei por parte de qualquer um de seus membros. O cabeça patriarcal era o representante responsável; ele era culpado dos erros de sua família, e exigia-se dele que punisse os transgressores da família. — Gên 31:30-32.

O casamento e a primogenitura. Os pais providenciavam o casamento de seus filhos e de suas filhas. (Gên 24:1-4) O pagamento de um preço de noiva era comum. (Gên 34:11, 12) Entre os adoradores de Jeová, o casamento misto com idólatras era desobediência e contra os melhores interesses da família. — Gên 26:34, 35; 27:46; 28:1, 6-9.

A primogenitura era reservada para o primeiro filho varão, pertencendo-lhe por herança. Esta incluía receber uma porção dupla das propriedades. No entanto, podia ser transferida pelo chefe de família, o pai. (Gên 48:22; 1Cr 5:1) O filho mais velho normalmente se tornava o cabeça patriarcal com o falecimento do pai. Os filhos varões, depois de casados, podiam formar suas próprias famílias separadas da chefia do pai e podiam tornar-se eles mesmos chefes de família.

A moralidade. A fornicação era desonrosa e punível, especialmente em casos de noivos ou de pessoas casadas (adultério). (Gên 38:24-26; 34:7) O casamento levirato [com o cunhado] era praticado quando um homem morria sem deixar filho varão. O irmão dele tinha então o dever de tomar a viúva como esposa, e o primogênito dessa união herdaria os bens do falecido e daria continuidade a seu nome. — De 25:5, 6; Gên 38:6-26.

Propriedade. Em geral, parece que não havia propriedade individual, a não ser alguns bens pessoais; todos os rebanhos, itens domésticos e outros equipamentos eram propriedade comum da família. — Gên 31:14-16.

À base de evidência histórica relacionada, alguns estudiosos creem que, na transferência de terras, mostrava-se a terra ao comprador a partir de um bom ponto de observação, com a demarcação exata dos limites. Quando o comprador dizia "eu vejo", estava indicando aceitação legal. Quando Jeová fez a Abraão a promessa de dar-lhe a terra de Canaã, primeiro se disse a Abraão que olhasse nas quatro direções. Abraão não disse "eu vejo", talvez porque Deus dissera que daria a Terra Prometida à semente [descendente] de Abraão, mais tarde. (Gên 13:14, 15) A Moisés, como representante legal de Israel, foi dito que 'olhasse' a terra, o que, se o conceito há pouco mencionado for correto, indicaria a transferência legal a Israel, para a tomar sob a liderança de Josué. (De 3:27, 28; 34:4; considere também a oferta de Satanás a Jesus, em Mt 4:8.) Outro gesto que aparentemente tinha similar conotação legal era: andar a pé pela terra ou entrar nela com o objetivo de tomar posse. (Gên 13:17; 28:13) Em certos documentos antigos, o número de árvores num terreno constava em todas as vendas de bens imobiliários. — Compare isso com Gên 23:17, 18.

Custódia. A pessoa assumia a responsabilidade legal ao prometer manter ou 'guardar' uma pessoa, um animal ou um objeto. (Gên 30:31) Rubem, como primogênito de Jacó, era responsável no caso do desaparecimento de José. (Gên 37:21, 22, 29, 30) O depositário devia cuidar suficientemente bem daquilo que estava a seus cuidados. Devia compensar os animais roubados, mas não os que morressem por si sós, ou que fossem perdidos sob condições fora de seu controle, como num ataque de ladrões de ovelhas armados. Se um animal fosse morto por um animal selvagem, tinha-se de apresentar evidência de que o animal fora dilacerado, a fim de livrar da responsabilidade o depositário. — Gên 37:12-30, 32, 33; Êx 22:10-13.

Escravidão. Os escravos podiam ser comprados, ou tornavam-se tais por nascerem de pais escravos. (Gên 17:12, 27) Os escravos podiam gozar duma posição muito honrosa na casa patriarcal, como no caso de Eliézer, servo de Abraão. — Gên 15:2; 24:1-4.

A Lei de Deus a Israel — A Lei de Moisés. Jeová deu a Israel a Lei, mediante Moisés como mediador, no ermo do Sinai, em 1513 AEC. Quando a Lei foi instituída no monte Horebe, houve uma assombrosa demonstração do poder de Jeová. (Êx 19:16-19; 20:18-21; He 12:18-21, 25, 26) O pacto foi validado pelo sangue de novilhos e de bodes. O povo apresentou ofertas de comunhão e ouviu ser lido o livro do pacto, após o que concordou em obedecer a tudo que Jeová dissera. Muitas das anteriores leis patriarcais foram incorporadas na Lei dada por meio de Moisés. — Êx 24:3-8; He 9:15-21; veja PACTO.

Os primeiros cinco livros da Bíblia (Gênesis a Deuteronômio) são muitas vezes mencionados como a Lei. Às vezes, este termo é usado como referência ao conjunto das inspiradas Escrituras Hebraicas. Em geral, contudo, os judeus consideravam que as inteiras Escrituras Hebraicas se compunham de três seções: a "lei de Moisés", os "Profetas" e os "Salmos". (Lu 24:44) As ordens recebidas através dos profetas eram válidas para Israel.

Na Lei, Jeová era reconhecido como Soberano absoluto, e também como Rei num sentido especial. Visto que Jeová era ao mesmo tempo Deus e Rei de Israel, a desobediência à Lei era tanto um delito religioso como um crime de lesa-majestade, um delito contra o Chefe de Estado, que, neste caso, era contra o Rei Jeová. Dizia-se que Davi, Salomão e seus sucessores no trono de Judá sentavam-se no "trono de Jeová". (1Cr 29:23) Os reis e governantes humanos em Israel estavam obrigados a cumprir a Lei, e, quando se tornavam despóticos, passavam a ser violadores da lei, responsáveis perante Deus. (1Sa 15:22, 23) A realeza e o sacerdócio eram separados, separação esta que constituía um equilíbrio de poderes e uma salvaguarda contra a tirania. Mantinha os israelitas sempre cônscios de que Jeová era seu Deus e o verdadeiro Rei. O relacionamento de cada indivíduo com Deus e com o próximo era definido pela Lei, e toda pessoa podia aproximar-se de Deus por meio do arranjo sacerdotal.

A Lei deu aos israelitas a chance de se tornarem "um reino de sacerdotes e uma nação santa". (Êx 19:5, 6) As exigências de devoção exclusiva a Jeová, constantes na Lei, a sua proibição absoluta de qualquer forma de interconfessionalismo, e seus regulamentos sobre a pureza religiosa e a dieta constituíam um 'muro', para manter essa nação notavelmente separada das outras nações. (Ef 2:14) Um judeu dificilmente poderia entrar na tenda ou na casa dum gentio, ou comer com gentios, sem se tornar impuro em sentido religioso. De fato, quando Jesus estava na terra, julgava-se que até mesmo entrar na casa ou no prédio dum gentio tornaria impuro o judeu. (Jo 18:28; At 10:28) A santidade da vida e a dignidade e a honra da família, do casamento, da pessoa, eram protegidas. Como efeitos adicionais, que podiam ser considerados como decorrentes da separação religiosa que o pacto da Lei estabelecia, havia os benefícios para a saúde e a proteção contra as doenças comuns às nações em volta dos israelitas. As leis sobre pureza moral, condições sanitárias e dieta alimentar sem dúvida tinham um efeito salutar, quando obedecidas.

O verdadeiro objetivo da Lei, contudo, era, conforme declarado pelo apóstolo Paulo: "Tornar manifestas as transgressões, até que chegasse o descendente." A Lei era um "tutor, conduzindo a Cristo". Apontava para Cristo como o objetivo almejado ("Cristo é o fim da Lei"). A Lei revelava que todos os humanos, incluindo os judeus, estão debaixo do pecado e que a vida não pode ser obtida por "obras da lei". (Gál 3:19-24; Ro 3:20; 10:4) A Lei era "espiritual", originava-se de Deus e era "santa". (Ro 7:12, 14) Em Efésios 2:15, ela é chamada de "Lei de mandamentos, consistindo em decretos". Era um padrão de perfeição, assinalando aquele que a guardasse como sendo perfeito, digno da vida. (Le 18:5; Gál 3:12) Visto que os humanos imperfeitos não conseguiam guardar a Lei, ela mostrava que "todos pecaram e não atingem a glória de Deus". (Ro 3:23) Apenas Jesus Cristo a guardou imaculadamente. — Jo 8:46; He 7:26.

A Lei também servia como "sombra das boas coisas vindouras", e as coisas relacionadas com ela eram "representações típicas", induzindo Jesus e os apóstolos a recorrer frequentemente a ela para explicar coisas celestiais e assuntos relativos a doutrina e conduta cristãs. Por conseguinte, ela supre um campo de estudos essencial e necessário para o cristão. — He 10:1; 9:23.

ALGUNS ASPECTOS DO PACTO DA LEI

Um rei havia de sentar-se no "trono de Jeová", representando-O. (1Cr 29:23; De 17:14, 15)

Outras autoridades (maiorais de tribo; chefes de mil, de cem, de cinquenta e de dez) eram selecionadas à base de seu temor a Deus, bem como de sua confiabilidade e incorruptibilidade. (Êx 18:21, 25; Núm 1:44)

Mereciam respeito todos que exerciam autoridade conferida por Deus: oficiais, sacerdotes, juízes, pais. (Êx 20:12; 22:28; De 17:8-13)

OBRIGAÇÕES RELIGIOSAS

Adoração devia ser prestada somente a Jeová. (Êx 20:3; 22:20; De 5:7)

Ser membro da congregação de Israel não era limitado aos nascidos àquela nação.

- Pessoas de outras nações podiam tornar-se adoradores circuncidados.

Filhos nascidos a egípcios "como a terceira geração" podiam ser admitidos. (De 23:7, 8)

SISTEMA JUDICIAL

(As leis que regiam os casos jurídicos destacavam a justiça e a misericórdia de Jeová. Dava-se aos juízes margem para mostrar misericórdia, dependendo das circunstâncias. Estas leis também mantinham a nação incontaminada e protegiam o bem-estar de cada israelita individual.)

Juízes

Sacerdotes, reis e outros homens eram designados como juízes. (Êx 18:25, 26; De 16:18; 17:8, 9; 1Rs 3:6, 9-12; 2Cr 19:5)

Estar perante juízes era considerado como estar perante Jeová. (De 1:17; 19:16, 17)

Cidades de refúgio

O homicida acidental podia fugir para a mais próxima. (Núm 35:12-15; De 19:4, 5; Jos 20:2-4)

Daí realizava-se julgamento na jurisdição em que ocorrera o incidente.

Quem fosse considerado homicida não intencional tinha de morar na cidade de refúgio até a morte do sumo sacerdote. (Núm 35:22-25; Jos 20:5, 6)

O assassino deliberado era morto. (Núm 35:30, 31)

Casamento, o primeiro foi realizado por Jeová. (Gên 2:18, 21-24)

O marido era dono de sua esposa, mas responsável perante Deus sobre como a tratava. (De 22:22; Mal 2:13-16)

Poligamia era permitida, mas regulamentada para proteger esposa e sua prole. (De 21:15-17; Êx 21:10)

Casamento era compulsório após sedução (a menos que o pai da moça o proibisse). (Êx 22:16, 17; De 22:28, 29)

Casamento levirato era o arranjo em que um homem se casava com a viúva de seu irmão, caso seu falecido irmão morresse sem deixar filho varão; o homem que não fizesse isso seria vituperado. (De 25:5-10)

Alianças matrimoniais com forasteiros eram proibidas (Êx 34:12-16; De 7:1-4), mas casamento com mulheres cativas era permitido. (De 21:10-14)

Incesto

O homem israelita não se podia casar com as seguintes: mãe, madrasta, ou esposa secundária de seu pai (Le 18:7, 8; 20:11; De 22:30; 27:20); irmã ou meia-irmã (Le 18:9, 11; 20:17; De 27:22); neta (Le 18:10); tia (irmã de sua mãe, ou de seu pai) (Le 18:12, 13; 20:19); tia por afinidade (a esposa do irmão de seu pai, ou do irmão de sua mãe) (Le 18:14; 20:20); nora (Le 18:15; 20:12); filha, filha adotiva, filha de filha adotiva, filha de filho adotivo, sogra (Le 18:17; 20:14; De 27:23); esposa de seu irmão (Le 18:16; 20:21), exceto no casamento levirato (De 25:5, 6); irmã de sua esposa enquanto esta vivesse (Le 18:18).

Relações sexuais durante menstruação.

Se homem e mulher deliberadamente tivessem relações sexuais durante a menstruação, seriam mortos. (Le 18:19; 20:18)

Marido que inadvertidamente tivesse relações com sua esposa durante tal impureza (talvez num inesperado começo de menstruação) seria impuro por sete dias. (Le 15:19-24)

Relação entre pais e filhos.

Ordenava-se aos genitores (especialmente ao pai) que ensinassem a Lei de Deus aos filhos. (De 6:6-9, 20-25; 11:18-21; Is 38:19)

Filhos deviam honrar os pais. (Êx 20:12; 21:15, 17; Le 19:3; De 5:16; 21:18-21; 27:16)

Ataque indecente (mulher que numa briga de seu marido agarrasse as partes íntimas de outro homem) era punido com a amputação da mão dela, em vez da penalidade de igual por igual, por consideração de Jeová para com as faculdades procriativas dela e o direito do marido de ter filhos por meio dela. (De 25:11, 12)

PRÁTICAS COMERCIAIS

(A Lei incentivava a honestidade nos tratos comerciais e o respeito pelo lar e pela propriedade de outros.)

Posse de terras.

Terras eram consignadas a famílias. (Núm 33:54; 36:2)

A terra não era vendida em definitivo, mas revertia ao dono no jubileu; valor de venda baseava-se no número de colheitas até jubileu. (Le 25:15, 16, 23-28)

Se houvesse venda, parente mais próximo tinha direito de comprá-la. (Je 32:7-12)

Estado não tinha direito de apoderar-se de terras de herança de alguém para fins públicos simplesmente indenizando a pessoa. (1Rs 21:2-4)

Quinhão dos levitas consistia em cidades e seus pastios.

Das 48 cidades consignadas, 13 eram cidades dos sacerdotes. (Núm 35:2-5; Jos 21:3-42)

Campos de pastio duma cidade levita não podiam ser vendidos; pertenciam à cidade, e não a indivíduos. (Le 25:34)

Se homem santificasse (reservasse o uso ou a produção de) parte dum campo para Jeová (para uso do santuário, do sacerdócio), o padrão para calcular seu valor era que a área de solo que pudesse ser semeada com um ômer de cevada valia 50 siclos de prata; o valor diminuía segundo o número de anos que restassem até próximo jubileu. (Le 27:16-18)

Se o santificador desejasse recomprá-la, tinha de adicionar 20 por cento ao valor estimado. (Le 27:19)

Caso não a recomprasse mas a vendesse a outro homem, no jubileu tornava-se propriedade do sacerdote como algo santo para Jeová. (Le 27:20, 21)

Se um homem santificasse a Jeová parte dum campo que comprara de outrem, no jubileu este voltaria a seu dono original. (Le 27:22-24)

Se um homem "devotasse" algo de sua própria propriedade (coisas "devotadas" eram para uso permanente e exclusivo no santuário, ou para destruição; Jos 6:17; 7:1, 15; Ez 44:29), isso não podia ser vendido nem recomprado; permanecia sendo de Jeová. (Le 27:21, 28, 29)

Redenção de propriedade.

Todas as terras voltavam ao dono original no jubileu (salvo exceções já mencionadas). (Le 25:8-10, 15, 16, 24-28)

Levitas podiam redimir suas casas nas cidades levitas a qualquer tempo. (Le 25:32, 33)

Ano do jubileu: começava no Dia da Expiação, no 50.º ano; contagem iniciou-se no ano em que israelitas entraram na terra. (Le 25:2, 8-19)

Filho primogênito herdava porção dupla da propriedade. (De 21:15-17)

Na falta de filho varão, herança pertencia às filhas. (Núm 27:6-8) Se o homem não tivesse filhos nem filhas, a herança ia para seus irmãos, ou para irmãos de seu pai, ou para o parente consanguíneo mais próximo. (Núm 27:9-11)

Balança, pesos e medidas.

Jeová exigia honestidade e exatidão. (Le 19:35, 36; De 25:13-15)

A fraude era detestável. (Pr 11:1)

Ao fim de cada sete anos, irmãos hebreus eram exonerados das dívidas. (De 15:1, 2)

Estrangeiro podia ser pressionado a pagar dívidas. (De 15:3)

Fiança para empréstimo.

Se a pessoa tomasse a veste exterior de alguém como garantia dum empréstimo, não devia ficar com ela de um dia para o outro. (O pobre não raro dormia com as roupas, por falta de roupas de cama.) (Êx 22:26, 27; De 24:12, 13)

Um homem não podia entrar na casa de outro para obter uma fiança ou outra coisa em garantia dum empréstimo. A pessoa tinha de ficar do lado de fora da casa e deixar que tal homem trouxesse a fiança até ela. (Isto mantinha a inviolabilidade dos domínios dum homem.) (De 24:10, 11)

Não se podia tomar, como garantia, um moinho manual ou sua mó superior. (A pessoa ficaria impossibilitada de moer o cereal para alimentar a si mesma e a sua família.) (De 24:6)

LEIS MILITARES

(Estas leis regulamentavam as guerras que Deus ordenasse Israel travar na Terra Prometida. Guerras egoístas de agressão ou de conquista fora dos limites marcados por Deus eram estritamente proibidas.)

Seriam apenas guerras de Jeová. (Núm 21:14; 2Cr 20:15)

Soldados eram santificados antes de entrarem em combate. (1Sa 21:1-6; compare isso com Le 15:16, 18.)

Idade dos soldados.

De 20 anos ou mais. (Núm 1:2, 3; 26:1-4)

Segundo Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], III, 288 (xii, 4), de Josefo, eles serviam até os 50 anos.

Eram eximidos do serviço militar:

Levitas, como ministros de Jeová. (Núm 1:47-49; 2:33)

Homem que não inaugurara sua casa recém-construída ou não usufruíra seu vinhedo recém-plantado. (De 20:5, 6; compare isso com Ec 2:24; 3:12, 13.)

Homem que ficara noivo e ainda não tinha tomado sua esposa. Homem recém-casado continuava isento por um ano. (O homem tinha direito de ter herdeiro e de ver este herdeiro.) (De 20:7; 24:5)

Homem temeroso. (Tenderia a baixar o moral dos companheiros.) (De 20:8; Jz 7:3)

Exigia-se limpeza no acampamento, visto que os soldados eram santificados para a guerra. (De 23:9-14)

Não se permitia o acompanhamento de mulheres no acampamento para fins de relações sexuais; durante a campanha havia abstinência de relações com mulheres. Isto garantia a pureza religiosa e física. (Le 15:16; 1Sa 21:5; 2Sa 11:6-11)

Não se permitia a violação de mulheres dentre o inimigo, pois seria fornicação; e não se permitia casamento com tais mulheres antes do fim da campanha. Isto resultava na limpeza religiosa e servia também de incentivo para a rendição do inimigo, pois estariam seguros de que suas mulheres não seriam molestadas. (De 21:10-13)

Procedimentos militares contra cidades inimigas.

Se a cidade atacada pertencesse a uma das sete nações da terra de Canaã (mencionadas em De 7:1), todos os habitantes deviam ser devotados à destruição. (De 20:15-17; Jos 11:11-14; De 2:32-34; 3:1-7) Se deixados na terra, seriam um perigo para a manutenção da relação de Israel com Jeová Deus. Ele permitira que tais vivessem naquela terra até que a iniquidade deles se completasse. (Gên 15:13-21)

Às cidades que não pertencessem àquelas sete nações, primeiramente se proclamariam termos de paz. (De 20:10, 15) Se a cidade se rendesse, seus habitantes eram submetidos a trabalhos forçados. Se não se rendessem, todos os varões e todas as mulheres que não fossem virgens eram mortos. Outras eram poupadas como cativas. (De 20:11-14; compare isso com Núm 31:7, 17, 18.) Matar todos os homens removia o perigo duma revolta posterior da cidade, e também o casamento destes homens com mulheres israelitas. Estas medidas também ajudavam a evitar a adoração fálica e as doenças entre os israelitas.

Árvores que produziam alimento não podiam ser cortadas para serem usadas como instrumentos de sítio. (De 20:19, 20)

Os carros de guerra eram queimados; cavalos eram jarretados para incapacitá-los para a batalha e, mais tarde, mortos. (Jos 11:6)

LEIS DIETÉTICAS E SANITÁRIAS

(Estas serviam para manter os israelitas separados das nações pagãs, para promover limpeza e saúde, e lembrar-lhes de sua santidade para com Deus; Le 19:2.)

Uso do sangue.

Comer sangue era estritamente proibido. (Gên 9:4; Le 7:26; 17:12; De 12:23-25) Pena pela violação: morte. (Le 7:27; 17:10)

Vida (alma) está no sangue. (Le 17:11, 14)

Não se podia comer animal que morresse por si ou que fosse encontrado morto (porque era impuro e não tinha sido devidamente sangrado). (De 14:21)

Comer gordura da oferta incorria em pena de morte. (Le 7:25)

Animais mortos.

No ermo, todo animal doméstico a ser abatido devia ser trazido ao tabernáculo. Seriam comidos como sacrifícios de participação em comum. (Le 17:3-6)

Pena pela violação: morte. (Le 17:4, 8, 9)

Animais selvagens puros capturados na caça podiam ser mortos no local; sangue tinha de ser derramado no solo. (Le 17:13, 14)

Depois de entrarem na Terra Prometida, animais limpos (não impuros) podiam ser mortos para servir de alimento, no local em que a pessoa morava, se fosse longe do santuário, mas o sangue tinha de ser derramado no solo. (De 12:20-25)

Animais, peixes, aves, criaturas pululantes proibidos como alimento:

Animais: camelo, procávia, lebre, porco. (Le 11:4-8; De 14:7, 8)

Aves e criaturas voadoras: águia, brita-ossos, abutre-fusco, milhafre vermelho, milhafre-preto, mioto, corvo, avestruz, coruja, gaivota, falcão, mocho, mocho-orelhudo, cisne, pelicano, abutre, corvo-marinho, cegonha, garça, poupa, morcego, qualquer criatura alada pululante que anda de quatro (isto é, que se locomove do modo dos animais quadrúpedes). Os fatores que determinavam que criaturas voadoras eram consideradas cerimonialmente 'impuras' não são expressamente declarados na Bíblia. Ao passo que a maioria das aves 'impuras' eram aves de rapina ou necrófagas, nem todas o eram. (De 14:12-19; Le 11:13-20; veja AVES e artigos sobre aves específicas.)

Criaturas pululantes da terra: espálace, gerbo, lagarto, geco, lagarto grande, salamandra, lagarto de areia, camaleão, qualquer criatura que anda sobre o ventre, de quatro (estilo de locomoção), ou sobre qualquer grande número de pés. (Le 11:29, 30, 42)

Animal que morreu por si ou que foi encontrado já morto ou dilacerado por animal selvagem. (Le 17:15, 16; De 14:21; Êx 22:31)

Animais apresentados como oferta de voto, ou como ofertas voluntárias, sacrifício de participação em comum, podiam ser comidos no dia em que eram oferecidos ou no dia seguinte, mas não no terceiro dia; pena pela violação: morte. Sacrifício de agradecimento devia ser comido naquele mesmo dia; nada devia ser guardado até a manhã seguinte (segundo dia). Páscoa não podia deixar sobras; o que não era comido devia ser queimado. (Le 7:16-18; 19:5-8; 22:29, 30; Êx 12:10)

Coisas que causavam impureza:

Emissão de sêmen.

Pessoa tinha de banhar-se e ficava impura até a noitinha. (Le 15:16; De 23:10, 11)

Roupa tocada pelo sêmen tinha de ser lavada e ficava impura até a noitinha. (Le 15:17)

Parto

Mulher ficava impura por 7 dias depois de dar à luz um menino, mais 33 dias (os primeiros 7 dias, impura para tudo, como na menstruação; 33 dias impura apenas quanto a tocar em coisas sagradas, tais como as refeições sacrificiais ou a entrar no lugar santo). (Le 12:2-4)

Se a criança fosse menina, mulher ficava impura 14 dias, mais 66. (Le 12:5)

Menstruação da mulher. (Le 12:2)

Mulher ficava impura por sete dias na menstruação regular; durante todo o período da perda anormal ou contínua de sangue, mais sete dias. (Le 15:19, 25, 28)

Durante sua impureza, tudo em que ela se sentasse ou em que se deitasse ficava impuro. (Le 15:20)

Pessoa que tocasse nela ou em sua cama, ou naquilo em que ela se sentasse, tinha de lavar suas roupas e banhar-se, e ficava impura até a noitinha. (Le 15:21-23)

Caso sua impureza menstrual viesse sobre um homem, ele ficava impuro por sete dias, e qualquer cama em que se deitasse ficava impura. (Le 15:24)

Sempre que tivesse um fluxo, ela se tornava impura. (Le 15:25)

Proteção contra doenças.

Lepra e outras pragas.

Sacerdote determinava se era lepra ou não. (Le 13:2)

Pessoa ficava de quarentena por sete dias e, daí, era examinada; se a praga cessara, ficava mais sete dias de quarentena (Le 13:4, 5, 21, 26); se a praga não se espalhara, era declarada limpa (Le 13:6); se a praga se espalhara, era lepra. (Le 13:7, 8)

Se leprosa, as roupas da pessoa eram rasgadas, seus cabelos não eram arrumados, devia cobrir o bigode (ou o lábio superior), devia clamar: "Impuro, impuro!" Morava isolada fora do acampamento até que a praga fosse curada. (Le 13:45, 46; Núm 5:2-4)

Secreção genital (evidentemente devido a condição doentia). (Le 15:2, 3)

Cama ou objetos sobre os quais tal pessoa se sentasse ou deitasse eram considerados impuros. (Le 15:4)

Quem quer que tocasse na pessoa infectada, em sua cama, ou em qualquer coisa em que ela se sentara, ficaria impura, ou se a pessoa infectada cuspisse em outra, esta seria considerada impura. (Le 15:5-11)

Se tocados por alguém que tivesse uma secreção, os vasos de barro eram despedaçados, o de madeira era lavado com água. (Le 15:12)

Depois de a secreção cessar, a pessoa ficava impura por sete dias. (Le 15:13)

Pureza do acampamento militar era salvaguardada por se exigir que os excrementos fossem depositados fora do acampamento e cobertos. (De 23:12, 13)

Regulamentos sobre o corpo de pessoas falecidas.

Tocar no cadáver, nos ossos ou no sepulcro dum humano, tornava a pessoa impura por sete dias (mesmo quando em campo aberto). (Núm 19:11, 16) Morte era a pena pela recusa de purificar-se. (Núm 19:12, 13) (Veja processo de purificação em Núm 19:17-19.)

Quem quer que estivesse ou entrasse numa tenda em que houvesse uma pessoa morta tornava-se impuro, como também qualquer vaso aberto em que não houvesse tampa amarrada. (Núm 19:14, 15)

Regulamentos sobre cadáveres de animais.

O cadáver de um animal puro que morresse por si tornava impuro quem o carregasse, tocasse ou comesse; o cadáver de qualquer animal impuro tornava impuro quem tocasse nele. Exigia-se purificação. (Le 11:8, 11, 24-31, 36, 39, 40; 17:15, 16)

Cadáveres de animais impuros tornavam impuros por contato itens como vasos, suportes para pote, fornos, vestes, peles e serapilheira. (Le 11:32-35)

Tudo o que pudesse ser processado com fogo tinha de ser assim processado (metais), daí lavado com água para purificação; outras coisas tinham de ser lavadas. (Núm 31:20, 22, 23)

OUTRAS OBRIGAÇÕES ENVOLVENDO O PRÓXIMO

(A Lei especificava: "Tens de amar o teu próximo como a ti mesmo"; Le 19:18. Jesus indicou que este era o segundo maior mandamento da Lei; Mt 22:37-40.)

Para com outros israelitas.

Não se devia tomar vingança nem abrigar ressentimento contra o próximo. (Le 19:18)

Zelar pelos pobres. (Êx 23:6; Le 25:35, 39-43)

Zelar pelas viúvas e órfãos. (Êx 22:22-24; De 24:17-21; 27:19)

Era proibido roubar; exigia-se compensação. (Êx 20:15; 22:1-4, 7)

Desejar erroneamente a propriedade ou bens do próximo era proibido. (Êx 20:17)

Consideração para com deficientes físicos.

Não se podia ridicularizar um surdo ou invocar o mal sobre ele; ele não podia defender-se contra declarações que não pudesse ouvir. (Le 19:14)

Quem colocasse obstáculo no caminho dum cego, ou o desencaminhasse, era amaldiçoado. (Le 19:14; De 27:18)

Para com escravos.

O escravo hebreu (homem ou mulher) era libertado no sétimo ano de sua servidão, ou no ano do jubileu, dependendo do que ocorresse primeiro. Durante a escravidão, devia ser tratado como trabalhador contratado, com consideração. (Êx 21:2; De 15:12; Le 25:10)

Se o homem chegasse com esposa, ela saía ou era libertada junto com ele. (Êx 21:3)

Se o amo lhe desse uma esposa (evidentemente estrangeira) enquanto ele estivesse em escravidão, apenas ele ficaria livre; se a esposa lhe tivesse dado filhos, ela e os filhos continuariam sendo propriedade do amo. (Êx 21:4)

Ao libertar o escravo hebreu, o amo tinha de fazer-lhe dádivas segundo suas possibilidades neste respeito. (De 15:13-15)

O escravo podia ser açoitado pelo amo. (Êx 21:20, 21) Se ficasse mutilado, seria libertado. (Êx 21:26, 27) Se escravo morresse devido ao espancamento do amo, amo podia ser punido com a morte; juízes decidiriam qual seria a pena. (Êx 21:20; Le 24:17)

Para com animais.

Se alguém encontrasse um animal doméstico em apuros, era obrigado a ajudá-lo, mesmo que pertencesse a um inimigo seu. (Êx 23:4, 5; De 22:4)

Animais de carga não deviam ser sobrecarregados nem maltratados. (De 22:10; compare isso com Pr 12:10.)

Touro não devia ser açaimado enquanto debulhasse, para que pudesse se alimentar do grão que debulhava. (De 25:4; compare isso com 1Co 9:7-10.)

Não se devia apanhar uma ave fêmea junto com os ovos, para não exterminar uma família. (De 22:6, 7)

Não se devia abater um touro ou uma ovelha e suas crias no mesmo dia. (Le 22:28)

FINALIDADES CUMPRIDAS PELA LEI

Tornou manifestas as transgressões; mostrou que os israelitas tinham de ter suas transgressões perdoadas e que se exigia um sacrifício maior que pudesse realmente expiar seus pecados. (Gál 3:19)

Como tutor, salvaguardou e disciplinou os israelitas, preparando-os para o Messias qual seu instrutor. (Gál 3:24)

Vários aspectos da Lei eram sombras que representavam coisas maiores a vir; essas sombras ajudaram os israelitas sinceros a identificar o Messias, visto que podiam ver como ele cumpria esses padrões proféticos. (He 10:1; Col 2:17)

Jesus disse que toda a Lei girava em torno de dois mandamentos, o de amar a Deus e o de amar ao próximo. (Mt 22:35-40) É interessante que, no livro de Deuteronômio (onde a Lei foi de certa forma modificada para governar as novas circunstâncias de Israel ao se fixar na Terra Prometida), as palavras hebraicas para "amor", "amado", e outras variações, aparecem mais de 20 vezes.

As Dez Palavras (Êx 34:28), ou os Dez Mandamentos, eram a parte básica da Lei, mas se combinavam com cerca de outras 600 leis, todas as quais de igual peso e validez para os israelitas. (Tg 2:10) Os primeiros quatro dos Dez Mandamentos definiam o relacionamento do homem com Deus; o quinto, com Deus e os pais; e os últimos cinco, com o próximo. Estes últimos cinco foram citados na aparente ordem de gravidade do dano causado ao próximo: assassinato, adultério, roubo, falso testemunho e cobiça, ou desejo egoísta. O décimo mandamento torna ímpar a Lei, em comparação com as leis de todas as demais nações, no sentido de que proíbe o desejo egoísta, um mandamento que, na realidade, só Deus pode fazer cumprir. Realmente, atingia a causa da violação de todos os outros mandamentos. — Êx 20:2-17; De 5:6-21; compare isso com Ef 5:5; Col 3:5; Tg 1:14, 15; 1Jo 2:15-17.

A Lei continha muitos princípios e estatutos orientadores. Dava-se aos juízes a liberdade de investigar e de levar em conta a motivação e a atitude dos violadores, além das circunstâncias que cercavam a violação. Um violador deliberado, desrespeitoso ou impenitente recebia a pena máxima. (Núm 15:30, 31) Noutros casos, podia-se decidir por uma sentença mais branda. Por exemplo, ao passo que o assassino devia ser morto sem falta, o homicida acidental podia obter misericórdia. (Núm 35:15, 16) O dono de um touro que habitualmente desse chifradas e que matasse um homem, podia ser morto; ou os juízes talvez lhe impusessem um regate. (Êx 21:29-32) A diferença entre um ladrão deliberado e um transgressor que confessasse voluntariamente seu erro evidentemente explica a diferença entre a penalidade expressa em Êxodo 22:7 e a em Levítico 6:1-7.

Lei da Consciência. A Bíblia mostra que isto resulta de as pessoas terem 'a lei escrita em seu coração'. Os que não estão sob uma lei direta de Deus, como a Lei dada mediante Moisés, revelam ser 'uma lei para si mesmos', pois suas consciências os movem a ser 'acusados ou até mesmo desculpados' em seus próprios pensamentos. (Ro 2:14, 15) Muitas leis justas nas sociedades pagãs refletem essa consciência, que foi originalmente colocada no antepassado delas, Adão, e transmitida mediante Noé. — Veja CONSCIÊNCIA.

Em 1 Coríntios 8:7 o apóstolo Paulo diz que a falta de conhecimento cristão correto poderia resultar numa consciência fraca. A consciência pode ser um bom ou um mau guia, dependendo do conhecimento e do treinamento da pessoa. (1Ti 1:5; He 5:14) A consciência da pessoa talvez esteja aviltada e, deste modo, pode desencaminhar. (Tit 1:15) Alguns, por constantemente agirem contrário à sua consciência, tornam-na semelhante a um insensível tecido cicatrizado, e, consequentemente, um guia não seguro. — 1Ti 4:1, 2.

A "Lei do Cristo". Paulo escreveu: "Prossegui em levar os fardos uns dos outros e cumpri assim a lei do Cristo." (Gál 6:2) Ao passo que o pacto da Lei terminou em Pentecostes de 33 EC ("mudando-se o sacerdócio, necessariamente há também mudança da lei"; He 7:12), os cristãos se acham "debaixo de lei para com Cristo". (1Co 9:21) Esta lei é chamada de a "lei perfeita que pertence à liberdade", a "lei dum povo livre", 'a lei da fé'. (Tg 1:25; 2:12; Ro 3:27) Esta nova lei fora predita por Deus mediante o profeta Jeremias, quando Deus falou sobre um novo pacto e sobre escrever a lei Dele no coração de Seu povo. — Je 31:31-34; He 8:6-13.

Como Moisés, o Mediador do pacto da Lei, Jesus Cristo é o Mediador do novo pacto. Moisés escreveu a Lei em forma de código, mas Jesus não redigiu pessoalmente uma lei. Ele falou e colocou a sua lei na mente e no coração de seus discípulos. Tampouco seus discípulos formularam leis em forma dum código para os cristãos, classificando as leis em categorias e subtítulos. Não obstante, as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs estão repletas de leis, mandamentos e decretos que o cristão tem por obrigação observar. — Re 14:12; 1Jo 5:2, 3; 4:21; 3:22-24; 2Jo 4-6; Jo 13:34, 35; 14:15; 15:14.

Jesus instruiu seus discípulos a pregarem as 'boas novas do reino'. Sua ordem acha-se em Mateus 10:1-42; Lucas 9:1-6; 10:1-12. Em Mateus 28:18-20, deu-se uma nova ordem aos discípulos de Jesus, de irem, não apenas aos judeus, mas a todas as nações, a fim de fazerem discípulos e de batizá-los com um novo batismo, "em o nome do Pai, e do Filho, e do espírito santo, ensinando-as a observar todas as coisas que vos ordenei". Assim, com autorização divina, Jesus ensinou e expediu ordens enquanto estava na terra (At 1:1, 2), bem como após a sua ascensão. (At 9:5, 6; Re 1:1-3) O inteiro livro de Revelação (Apocalipse) consiste em profecias, mandamentos, admoestações e instruções para a congregação cristã.

A "lei do Cristo" abrange o inteiro proceder e âmbito da vida e do trabalho do cristão. Com a ajuda do espírito de Deus, o cristão pode seguir tais mandamentos, de modo a ser julgado de forma favorável por essa lei, pois é "a lei desse espírito que dá vida em união com Cristo Jesus". — Ro 8:2, 4.

A "Lei de Deus". O apóstolo Paulo fala da luta do cristão como sendo influenciada por dois fatores, a "lei de Deus," ou a "lei desse espírito que dá vida", de um lado, e a "lei do pecado", ou a "lei do pecado e da morte", do outro. Paulo descreve o conflito, afirmando que a carne decaída, infetada pelo pecado, está escravizada à "lei do pecado". "A mentalidade segundo a carne significa morte", mas "Deus, por enviar o seu próprio Filho na semelhança da carne pecaminosa e concernente ao pecado, condenou o pecado na carne". Com a ajuda do espírito de Deus o cristão pode vencer essa luta — exercendo fé em Cristo, entregando à morte as práticas do corpo e vivendo segundo a orientação do espírito — e pode obter a vida. — Ro 7:21–8:13.

Lei do Pecado e da Morte. O apóstolo Paulo argumenta que, por causa do pecado do pai da humanidade, Adão, "a morte reinou", desde Adão até a época de Moisés (quando foi dada a Lei), e que a Lei tornou manifestas as transgressões, tornando os homens culpados do pecado. (Ro 5:12-14; Gál 3:19) Esta regra, ou lei do pecado, que opera na carne imperfeita, exerce poder sobre ela, fazendo com que se incline para a violação da lei de Deus. (Ro 7:23; Gên 8:21) O pecado causa a morte. (Ro 6:23; 1Co 15:56) A lei de Moisés não pôde sobrepujar a regência dos reis pecado e morte, porém a liberdade e a vitória vêm por meio da benignidade imerecida de Deus mediante Jesus Cristo. — Ro 5:20, 21; 6:14; 7:8, 9, 24, 25.

A "Lei da Fé". A "lei da fé" se contrasta com "a das obras". O homem não consegue alcançar a justiça por meio de suas próprias obras, ou pelas obras da lei de Moisés, como se granjeasse a justiça em recompensa pelas obras; mas a justiça provém da fé em Jesus Cristo. (Ro 3:27, 28; 4:4, 5; 9:30-32) Tiago diz, contudo, que tal fé será acompanhada de obras que resultam da fé da pessoa e que estejam em harmonia com ela. — Tg 2:17-26.

A Lei do Marido. A mulher casada está sujeita à "lei de seu marido". (Ro 7:2; 1Co 7:39) O princípio da chefia marital se aplica na inteira organização de Deus, e tem operado entre os que adoram a Deus, bem como entre muitos outros povos. Deus ocupa a posição de marido de sua "mulher", "a Jerusalém de cima". (Gál 4:26, 31; Re 12:1, 4-6, 13-17) A organização nacional judaica mantinha um relacionamento de esposa, tendo a Jeová como marido. — Is 54:5, 6; Je 31:32.

Na lei patriarcal, o marido era o cabeça indisputado da família, a esposa estando-lhe submissa, embora pudesse fazer recomendações sujeitas à aprovação do marido. (Gên 21:8-14) Sara chamava a Abraão de "senhor". (Gên 18:12; 1Pe 3:5, 6) A mulher usava uma cobertura para a cabeça, como símbolo de sua sujeição a seu cabeça marital. — Gên 24:65; 1Co 11:5.

Sob a Lei dada a Israel, a esposa estava em sujeição. O marido podia permitir ou anular os votos que ela fazia. (Núm 30:6-16) Ela não recebia herança, mas acompanhava a herança fundiária, e, no caso em que essa herança fosse resgatada por um parente, ela era incluída na compra. (Ru 4:5, 9-11) Ela não podia divorciar-se do marido, mas o marido tinha o direito de se divorciar de sua esposa. — De 24:1-4.

No arranjo cristão, requer-se que a mulher reconheça a posição do homem e não a usurpe. O apóstolo Paulo cita a mulher casada como estando sob a lei do marido enquanto ele viver, mas indica que ela fica livre com a morte dele, de modo que não será adúltera se casar novamente. — Ro 7:2, 3; 1Co 7:39.

A "Lei Régia". Entre as demais leis que governam as relações humanas, a "lei régia" tem corretamente o mesmo destaque e relevo que um rei teria entre os homens. (Tg 2:8) A essência do pacto da Lei era o amor; e "tens de amar o teu próximo como a ti mesmo" (a lei régia) era o segundo dos mandamentos dos quais toda a Lei e os Profetas dependiam. (Mt 22:37-40) Os cristãos, embora não estejam sob o pacto da Lei, estão sujeitos à lei do Rei Jeová, e de seu Filho, o Rei Jesus Cristo, com relação ao novo pacto.

LEÍ [Queixada]. O cenário de uma ou, possivelmente, duas vitórias israelitas sobre os filisteus. A sua localização exata é desconhecida hoje. Alguns o identificam com Khirbet es-Suyag, que talvez derive seu nome da palavra grega si·a·gón (queixada), a menos de 3 km ao L de Bete-Semes.

Em Leí, Sansão abateu mil filisteus com a queixada fresca dum jumento. Assim, ele chamou o local de Ramate-Leí (que significa "O Lugar Elevado da Queixada"), provavelmente como recordativo da vitória que Jeová lhe dera ali. (Jz 15:9-19) Originalmente, porém, Leí talvez tivesse derivado seu nome do formato de seus rochedos.

Mais tarde, segundo a tradução de numerosos tradutores, Samá abateu muitos filisteus reunidos em Leí. (2Sa 23:11, 12; ALA, IBB, NM) Contudo, o termo hebraico la·hhai·yáh literalmente significa "para dentro da aldeia de tendas", e, por uma ligeira mudança na pontuação vocálica, é traduzida "em Leí".

LEI, CONTRA A. Veja HOMEM QUE É CONTRA A LEI.

LEIA [possivelmente aparentada com uma palavra acadiana que significa "vaca", ou com uma palavra árabe que significa "vaca selvagem"]. Filha mais velha de Labão, sobrinho-neto de Abraão. Labão era irmão de Rebeca, mãe de Jacó, de modo que Leia era prima de Jacó. (Gên 22:20-23; 24:24, 29; 29:16) Leia não era tão bonita como sua irmã mais nova, Raquel; em especial, foi registrado que seus olhos não brilhavam, ou eram embaciados (fracos). (Gên 29:17) No caso das mulheres orientais, olhos brilhantes ou lustrosos são especialmente considerados como evidência de beleza. — Compare isso com Cân 1:15; 4:9; 7:4.

Leia se tornou a primeira esposa de Jacó porque, de noite, Labão enganou Jacó dando-lhe Leia como esposa, em vez de Raquel, a quem Jacó amava. Jacó protestou por ter sido enganado, mas Labão argumentou que não era costume local dar a filha mais nova em casamento antes da primogênita. Leia provavelmente usava um véu, segundo o costume oriental de cobrir a noiva com um espesso véu, e isto, sem dúvida, contribuiu para o sucesso do estratagema. Jacó servira sete anos com Raquel em mente, mas, por tal trabalho, recebeu Leia. Raquel lhe foi concedida depois de ele celebrar uma semana de sete dias com Leia, mas Jacó teve de trabalhar outros sete anos como paga por Raquel. — Gên 29:18-28.

O relato nos diz que Leia era "odiada". (Gên 29:31, 33) Mas narra também que, depois de ter finalmente obtido Raquel, Jacó "expressou . . . mais amor por Raquel do que por Leia". (Gên 29:30) Sem dúvida, Jacó não sentia ódio maldoso por Leia, mas encarava Raquel de forma mais amorosa, como esposa preferida. Ele continuou a cuidar de Leia e a ter relações sexuais com ela. Ser Leia "odiada", portanto, significaria simplesmente que Jacó a amava menos do que a Raquel. — Veja ÓDIO.

Leia tornou-se mãe de sete dos filhos de Jacó, seus seis filhos homens, Rubem, Simeão, Levi, Judá, Issacar e Zebulão, e uma filha, Diná. (Gên 29:32-35; 30:16-21) Assim, em Rute 4:11 Leia é citada, junto com Raquel, como uma das pessoas que "construíram a casa de Israel". Leia teve a honra de dar à luz Levi, que se tornou fundador da tribo sacerdotal de Israel, e de Judá, que se tornou o pai da tribo real da nação.

Leia e seus filhos acompanharam Jacó quando ele deixou Padã-Arã e voltou a Canaã, sua terra natal. (Gên 31:11-18) Antes de encontrar-se com

Esaú, no caminho, Jacó dividiu os filhos de Leia e os de Raquel e os de suas servas, de maneira protetora, colocando as servas e seus filhos em primeiro lugar, seguidos por Leia e os filhos dela, e Raquel e José na retaguarda. (Gên 33:1-7) Os filhos de Leia acompanharam Jacó em sua ida para o Egito, mas o relato da Bíblia não diz que ela o tenha feito. (Gên 46:15) A época, o local e as circunstâncias de sua morte não são fornecidos, mas é possível que ela tenha falecido em Canaã. Seja como for, o patriarca fez com que seu corpo fosse levado para a sepultura da família, a caverna situada no campo de Macpela. As instruções de Jacó quanto a seus próprios restos mortais indicam que seu desejo era ser sepultado onde Abraão e Sara, Isaque e Rebeca, e Leia, haviam sido sepultados. — Gên 49:29-32.

LEITE. Produto das fêmeas dos mamíferos para nutrir seus filhotes. É também usado como alimento pela humanidade em geral. (Gên 18:8; Jz 4:19; 5:25) A palavra hebraica traduzida "leite" geralmente se refere a leite fresco e, via de regra, diferencia-se da coalhada, do queijo e da manteiga. (De 32:14; 2Sa 17:29; Jó 10:10; Pr 27:27) No entanto, nenhuma distinção se faz entre o leite de vaca, de ovelha e de cabra. (Ez 25:4; 1Co 9:7) O leite azedo ou coalhado não raro era misturado com mel e era considerado uma bebida refrescante. Davi levou "dez porções de leite" ("queijo", Vg) ao "chefe dos mil", quando levava comida para seus irmãos no acampamento do exército. Tais porções podem ter sido em forma de queijo fresco. A versão Rotherham (em inglês), diz: "Dez fatias de queijo de massa mole." — 1Sa 17:17, 18.

Por que a Lei proibia cozinhar um cabritinho no leite de sua mãe?

Cozinhar um cabritinho no leite de sua mãe era proibido na Lei mosaica. (De 14:21) Tal proibição é mencionada duas vezes com relação à oferta das primícias a Jeová. — Êx 23:19; 34:26.

Tem-se conjecturado que tal prática tinha ligações pagãs, idólatras ou mágicas. Contudo, a evidência em apoio deste conceito ainda não é sólida.

Outra sugestão é que tal estatuto frisa que existe nas coisas uma ordem correta e apropriada a ser seguida. Deus proveu o leite da mãe com o objetivo de nutrir seu filhote. Usá-lo para cozinhar seu filhote a fim de prepará-lo para ser comido seria em prejuízo do cabritinho e o oposto do que Deus tinha em mente quando fez a provisão para tal leite.

Uma terceira possibilidade é que este mandamento foi dado a fim de incentivar a compaixão. Isto estaria em harmonia com outros mandamentos que proibiam sacrificar um animal se este primeiro não tivesse estado com a sua mãe por pelo menos sete dias (Le 22:27); abater um animal e sua cria no mesmo dia (Le 22:28); ou apanhar de um ninho tanto a ave-mãe como seus ovos ou filhotes (De 22:6, 7).

Na Profecia. Foi predito a respeito de Emanuel: "Devido à abundância da produção de leite, ele comerá manteiga; pois manteiga e mel é o que comerá cada um que se deixou sobrar no meio do país." Esta circunstância resultaria da devastação de Judá pelos assírios. Por causa desta devastação, a terra anteriormente cultivada ficaria sufocada por ervas daninhas. Assim sendo, os que se deixasse ficar na terra teriam de subsistir, em grande parte, à base de laticínios e de mel silvestre. Havendo amplos pastos, os animais que tinham sido preservados produziriam uma abundância de leite para a população grandemente reduzida. — Is 7:20-25; compare isso com 37:30-33.

Uso Ilustrativo. O leite não raro é mencionado em sentido figurado ou ilustrativo. (Gên 49:12; Cân 5:12; La 4:7) Os recursos das nações e dos povos são chamados de leite. (Is 60:16) A Terra Prometida é reiteradas vezes descrita como 'manando leite e mel', indicando abundância, fertilidade e prosperidade, devido à bênção de Jeová. (Êx 3:8; De 6:3; Jos 5:6; Je 11:5; Ez 20:6; Jl 3:18) O pastor de O Cântico de Salomão falou de sua amada sulamita como tendo mel e leite sob a língua, querendo evidentemente dizer que a língua dela expressava palavras agradáveis. — Cân 4:11.

Visto que o leite promove o crescimento físico à maturidade, a doutrina elementar cristã é assemelhada a "leite" para bebês espirituais, que os fortalecerá para que cresçam a ponto de poderem assimilar "alimento sólido", as verdades espirituais mais profundas. (1Co 3:2; He 5:12-14) O apóstolo Pedro, falando a cristãos, diz: "Como crianças recém-nascidas, ansiai o leite não adulterado pertencente à palavra." Para que fim? Para que possam continuar crescendo, não apenas à maturidade, mas "para a salvação", isto é, para assegurar a sua chamada e a sua escolha. (1Pe 2:2; 2Pe 1:10) Em Isaías 55:1, Deus insta os espiritualmente sedentos a comprarem este "leite" espiritual que promove o crescimento, o qual, por meio de Sua benignidade imerecida, podem adquirir "sem dinheiro e sem preço".

LEITO. Veja CAMA.

LEITURA. Aprendizagem à base do que a pessoa vê por escrito; pronunciar em voz alta o que é escrito.

Desde tempos remotos os homens se interessam pela leitura. O Rei Assurbanipal, da Assíria, que formou uma biblioteca de 22.000 tabuinhas de argila e outros textos, declarou: "Tive alegria na leitura de inscrições em pedra da época anterior ao dilúvio." (Light From the Ancient Past [Luz do Passado Remoto], de J. Finegan, 1959, pp. 216, 217) Isto talvez se refira a certos relatos tradicionais a respeito do Dilúvio global, ou a registros assírios anteriores a alguma inundação local. Os únicos escritos sobre uma inundação encontrados nas ruínas do palácio de Assurbanipal são os do relato da inundação babilônica, que contém muita mitologia. Se os pagãos assírios realmente tinham algum relato ou escrito genuíno de antes do Dilúvio global não se pode determinar por enquanto.

A origem da leitura, naturalmente, estaria relacionada com a origem da escrita. Quanto a evidências disponíveis sobre isso, veja ESCRITA.

É digno de nota que, no registro bíblico de eventos do século 16 AEC, nos dias de Moisés, há referência específica à leitura e escrita. (Êx 17:14) A nação de Israel era incentivada a ler e a escrever. (De 6:6-9) Josué, sucessor de Moisés, como líder de Israel, achava-se sob a ordem de se empenhar na leitura das Escrituras "dia e noite", regularmente, a fim de ter êxito na designação que Deus lhe dera. Para inculcar em Josué a importância da Palavra de Deus, e, sem dúvida, como ajuda para a memória, ele devia ler "em voz baixa". — Jos 1:8.

Os reis de Israel receberam a ordem divina de escrever para si mesmos cópias da Lei de Deus e de a lerem diariamente. (De 17:18, 19; veja MEDITAÇÃO.) Deixarem de acatar esta ordem contribuiu para a negligência da adoração verdadeira no país, resultando na desmoralização do povo, o que levou à destruição de Jerusalém em 607 AEC.

Jesus tinha acesso a todos os rolos inspirados das Escrituras Hebraicas nas sinagogas, onde, num caso registrado, ele leu publicamente o texto e aplicou-o a si mesmo. (Lu 4:16-21) Também, quando provado três vezes por Satanás, a resposta de Jesus, nas três vezes foi: "Está escrito." (Mt 4:4, 7, 10) Obviamente, ele conhecia bem as Escrituras.

Os apóstolos, que constituíam as pedras secundárias de alicerce de um templo santo, a congregação cristã, comprovaram que a leitura das Escrituras era essencial para seu ministério. Citaram e fizeram referência às Escrituras Hebraicas centenas de vezes em seus escritos, advogando a outros a leitura delas. (At 17:11) Os governantes judeus perceberam que Pedro e João eram indoutos e comuns. (At 4:13) Mas isto não significava que eles não soubessem ler nem escrever, como as cartas escritas por tais apóstolos testificam que sabiam. Contudo, não tinham sido educados nos conhecimentos superiores das escolas hebraicas, aos pés dos escribas. Por motivos similares, os judeus ficaram perplexos com o conhecimento que Jesus tinha, pois, como disseram: 'Ele não estudou nas escolas.' (Jo 7:15) Que a leitura era bem difundida naquela época vê-se do relato sobre o eunuco etíope, um prosélito, que estava lendo a profecia de Isaías, e de quem, por esse motivo, Filipe se aproximou. O eunuco foi recompensado pelo seu interesse na Palavra de Deus, recebendo o privilégio de tornar-se seguidor de Cristo. — At 8:27-38.

As línguas da parte da Bíblia escrita antes do primeiro século eram hebraico e aramaico. No terceiro século AEC, as Escrituras Hebraicas foram traduzidas para o grego, que se tornara o idioma internacional. As Escrituras Cristãs foram originalmente escritas em grego, com exceção do Evangelho de Mateus. Isto tornou possível a leitura da Bíblia por parte da maioria das pessoas alfabetizadas no Império Romano, e particularmente disponível tanto para os judeus na Palestina como para os da Diáspora.

A demanda popular pela Bíblia tem sido um reflexo da simplicidade e fácil compreensão de sua escrita, e de seu valor, visto que ela tem suplantado em muito todos os outros livros na tiragem e na circulação e, por ocasião da escrita deste artigo, já estava traduzida, por inteiro ou em parte, em mais de 3.000 idiomas e dialetos, em bilhões de exemplares. Está alegadamente disponível para cerca de 90 por cento da população da Terra na sua própria língua.

A Bíblia enumera muitos dos benefícios derivados da leitura das Escrituras, entre os quais a humildade (De 17:19, 20), a felicidade (Re 1:3), e o discernir o cumprimento das profecias bíblicas. (Hab 2:2, 3) Ela avisa seus leitores para serem seletivos na leitura: nem todos os livros edificam e revigoram a mente. — Ec 12:12.

Para se obter verdadeiro discernimento e entendimento da Palavra de Deus é necessário a ajuda do espírito de Deus. (1Co 2:9-16) A fim de obter entendimento e outros benefícios, a pessoa tem de ler a Palavra de Deus com mente aberta, pondo de lado todo preconceito e opiniões preconcebidas; de outra forma, seu entendimento ficará ofuscado, como no caso dos judeus que rejeitaram as boas novas pregadas por Jesus. (2Co 3:14-16) Não basta a leitura superficial. O leitor tem de pôr seu coração na leitura, ficar absorto no estudo da matéria, meditar profundamente sobre ela e buscar beneficiar-se dela pessoalmente. — Pr 15:28; 1Ti 4:13-16; Mt 24:15; veja LEITURA PÚBLICA.

LEITURA PÚBLICA. Ler em voz alta para um grupo de pessoas ouvir. Nas sinagogas judaicas havia uma leitura pública de uma parte da Lei aos sábados. Similarmente, nas reuniões da congregação cristã, havia leitura pública das Escrituras inspiradas.

A palavra grega a·na·gi·nó·sko, que basicamente significa 'bem saber' (2Co 1:13), é traduzida por "ler" ou "ler em voz alta" e é usada com referência tanto à leitura particular como em público das Escrituras. (Mt 12:3; Lu 4:16; At 8:28; 13:27) O substantivo a·ná·gno·sis é traduzido por "leitura pública". — At 13:15; 1Ti 4:13.

A leitura pública era um dos importantes métodos que Jeová usava para instruir e educar seu povo pactuado a respeito de Seus propósitos e requisitos. A primeira menção de tal leitura pública ocorre em Êxodo 24:7, onde Moisés leu do "livro do pacto" aos ouvidos de todo o povo. Deste modo, com conhecimento de causa, os israelitas podiam fazer com Jeová um acordo de guardar a Lei. Relativamente poucas cópias das Escrituras estavam disponíveis nos dias do antigo Israel; assim, ordenou-se aos sacerdotes levitas: "Lerás esta lei na frente de todo o Israel, aos seus ouvidos." Moisés ordenou-lhes que lessem a Lei a todo o povo junto, jovens e idosos, homens e mulheres, israelitas e residentes forasteiros, a cada ano sabático, na Festividade das Barracas. — De 31:9-12.

Depois que Israel entrou na Terra Prometida, Josué leu em voz alta para o povo "todas as palavras da lei, a bênção e a invocação do mal". (Jos 8:33-35) O Rei Jeosafá enviou príncipes, levitas e sacerdotes para ensinar nas cidades de Judá (2Cr 17:7-9), ensino este que, sem dúvida, incluía a leitura pública. Séculos mais tarde, Josias leu, aos ouvidos de todo o povo, "o livro da lei de Jeová pela mão de Moisés", que Hilquias, o sacerdote, encontrara durante a obra de reparos do templo, sem dúvida o livro original da Lei, escrito por Moisés. (2Rs 23:2; 2Cr 34:14) O resultado disso foi um expurgo da adoração demoníaca em nível nacional. Após o retorno do exílio, Esdras, contando com o apoio do governador Neemias, leu a Lei para o povo desde o romper do dia até o meio-dia. Junto com a leitura, dava-se uma explicação, ou o sentido dela. — Ne 8:3, 8; veja HEBRAICO (Quando Começou a Desvanecer o Hebraico?).

Nas Sinagogas. Jesus costumava ler em público na sinagoga, aos sábados; daí, ajudava seus ouvintes explicando o que lera. (Lu 4:16) Isto já era feito por muitos anos. "Pois, desde os tempos antigos, Moisés tem tido em cidade após cidade os que o pregam, porque ele está sendo lido em voz alta nas sinagogas, cada sábado." (At 15:21) Tal leitura pública da Lei e dos Profetas era costumeiro nas sinagogas, e, segundo fontes rabínicas, seguia-se o seguinte programa: Primeiro, lia-se o Shema, ou o que equivalia à confissão judaica de fé, tirada de Deuteronômio 6:4-9; 11:13-21 e Números 15:37-41. Em seguida vinha a leitura do trecho da Tora ou Lei, o Pentateuco, que, na maioria dos casos, era abrangida em um ano. Por fim, liam-se trechos dos Profetas ou haftorás, junto com uma explanação apropriada. Na conclusão da leitura pública proferia-se um discurso ou exortação. Depois de tal leitura pública na sinagoga em Antioquia da Pisídia, Paulo foi convidado a falar e proferiu um discurso, ou exortação e encorajamento, aos ali reunidos. — At 13:15.

Na Congregação Cristã. No primeiro século, poucos possuíam cópias dos muitos rolos da Bíblia, tornando essencial a leitura pública. O apóstolo Paulo ordenou a leitura pública de suas cartas nas reuniões das congregações cristãs, e ordenou que fossem intercambiadas com suas cartas dirigidas a outras congregações, de modo que estas também fossem lidas. (Col 4:16; 1Te 5:27) Paulo aconselhou o jovem superintendente cristão, Timóteo, a aplicar-se à "leitura pública, à exortação, ao ensino". — 1Ti 4:13.

A leitura pública deve ser feita com fluência. (Hab 2:2) Visto que a leitura pública visa instruir outros, o leitor precisa discernir cabalmente o que está lendo e ter claro entendimento da intenção do escritor, tendo cuidado ao ler, de modo a evitar transmitir aos ouvintes uma ideia ou impressão errada. Segundo Revelação (Apocalipse) 1:3, os que lerem em voz alta essa profecia, bem como aqueles que escutarem as suas palavras e as observarem, serão felizes.

LEME. Peça-chave do mecanismo de direção de um navio. O estilo e a quantidade dos lemes dos antigos barcos a vela variavam. Alguns tinham apenas um único remo que servia de leme. Geralmente, contudo, os barcos gregos e romanos tinham dois remos de cabos curtos que serviam de leme, na popa, cada qual provavelmente podendo ser operado de forma independente, por meio de uma forqueta (algo parecido a uma portinhola aberta). Quando o barco estava ancorado, os remos que serviam de leme eram mantidos fora da água por meio de amarras ou de fêmeas de governo do leme.

"Remos do leme" ("remos que serviam para guiar", BLH) eram usados para guiar o navio em que Paulo velejava rumo a Roma, e que naufragou em Malta. Cortaram-se as âncoras e, antes de içar o traquete ao vento, soltaram-se as amarras, livrando os remos do leme para ajudar os marujos a guiar o barco em direção à praia. — At 27:40.

Tiago (3:4, 5) indica o tremendo poder da língua em controlar a direção do corpo inteiro da pessoa, ao compará-la ao relativamente pequeno leme (ou, "remo-leme", Int) dum grande navio.

LEMUEL [Pertencente a Deus]. Um rei não identificado dos tempos antigos, cujas palavras acham-se registradas em Provérbios, capítulo 31. A sua identidade tem sido um assunto de considerável debate, alguns comentaristas sugerindo que Lemuel era outro nome de Salomão. Outros identificam Lemuel com Ezequias. As palavras do Rei Lemuel constituem "a mensagem ponderosa que sua mãe lhe deu em correção". (Pr 31:1) No entanto, desconhecem-se a época e as circunstâncias em que tal rei recebeu essas informações de sua mãe. Esta "mensagem ponderosa" aconselha a se evitar o envolvimento com uma mulher ruim, alerta que a bebida inebriante pode perverter o julgamento, destaca a necessidade de se julgar com justiça, e daí, descreve a boa esposa.

LENTILHA [hebr.: ʽadha·sháh]. Planta anual, da família das leguminosas, que há muito é cultivada pelo homem, e ainda é plantada extensivamente no Egito e em Israel, bem como em outras terras. (2Sa 17:27, 28; 23:11) Esta pequena planta (Lens esculenta), que mede de 15 a 45 cm de altura, cresce bem em solo leve e seco. Suas folhas compostas, em geral com seis pares de folíolos oblongos, terminam em gavinhas. Raminhos delgados apresentam de duas a quatro flores miúdas, semelhantes às da ervilha. As vagens curtas que se desenvolvem das flores se parecem com as da ervilha e, em geral, contêm duas pequenas sementes discoides. A cor das sementes e das flores varia de acordo com a variedade da lentilha. As sementes podem ser marrom-avermelhadas, cinzentas ou pretas, e as flores brancas ou azul-pálidas. As sementes, ricas em proteína e carboidratos, são usadas hoje, como no passado, comumente para sopas. (Gên 25:34) Combinadas com a cevada, as lentilhas têm sido usadas para o fabrico de pão. (Veja Ez 4:9.) A própria planta serve bem como forragem para gado.

LENTISCO. Veja BACA.

LEÕES, COVA DOS. Lugar de execução em que foi lançado o profeta Daniel, mas do qual foi mais tarde retirado ileso, tendo recebido proteção angélica. (Da 6:7, 12, 13, 16-24) Esta cova tinha uma abertura que podia ser coberta com uma pedra. (Da 6:17) Era, evidentemente, um lugar fundo ou subterrâneo, pois Daniel foi "retirado (alçado) da cova". — Da 6:23.

LEOPARDO [hebr.: na·mér; aramaico: nemár; gr.: pár·da·lis]. Um dos grandes felídeos, de pele geralmente castanho-amarelada, com manchas pretas distribuídas em círculos interrompidos. (Je 13:23) Os leopardos medem comumente 1,20 m de comprimento, sem incluir a cauda. Ainda que mesmo em anos mais recentes vários leopardos tenham sido mortos nas cercanias de Jerusalém, por certo tais criaturas podiam ser encontradas em muito maior quantidade na antiga Palestina. (Cân 4:8) O chita ou leopardo-caçador (gato-pardo), tido como um dos mais velozes mamíferos, também era encontrado na Palestina, e o designativo hebraico na·mér talvez incluísse esse animal, bem como o leopardo. O chita difere do verdadeiro leopardo no sentido de que suas garras são apenas parcialmente retráteis, e suas manchas são uniformes, não aneladas.

Nas Escrituras, faz-se alusão à ligeireza do leopardo (Hab 1:8), e à maneira de ficar à espreita perto dos povoados, pronto para pular sobre animais domésticos que passem. (Je 5:6; Os 13:7) Em nítido contraste com isto, o leopardo e o cabritinho são representados como se deitando juntos, em paz, durante a regência do Messias. — Is 11:6.

Em Daniel 7:6, o leopardo de quatro asas, de quatro cabeças, representa a Potência Mundial Grega, que conquistou a Medo-Pérsia com a ligeireza dum leopardo. Também a fera que procede do mar, observada na visão do apóstolo João, era basicamente semelhante a um leopardo. — Re 13:1, 2; veja ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS.

A palavra hebraica lá·yish, também traduzida por "leão" (Jó 4:11; Pr 30:30), é traduzida por "leopardo" em Isaías 30:6 (NM), o "leão" (la·ví') já tendo sido mencionado no mesmo texto.

LEPRA. Doença designada na Bíblia pelo termo hebraico tsa·rá·ʽath e pela palavra grega lé·pra. A pessoa afligida por ela é chamada de leprosa.

Nas Escrituras, "lepra" não se restringe à doença conhecida hoje por esse nome, pois ela podia atingir não só os humanos, mas também roupas e casas. (Le 14:55) A lepra da atualidade é também conhecida como mal de Hansen (hanseníase), assim chamada porque o Dr. Gerhard A. Hansen descobriu o bacilo que, em geral, é considerado o causador dessa moléstia. Contudo, embora tsa·rá·ʽath se aplique a mais do que à lepra atual, não há dúvida de que a lepra humana, agora chamada de mal de Hansen, estava em evidência no Oriente Médio nos tempos bíblicos.

As Variedades, com Seus Efeitos. Atualmente, a lepra ou mal de Hansen, que é apenas moderadamente contagiosa, manifesta-se em três variedades básicas. Uma delas, o tipo nodular, resulta num espessamento da pele, e na formação de nódulos, primeiro na pele da face, e daí em outras partes do corpo. Também produz efeitos degenerativos nas membranas mucosas do nariz e da garganta da vítima. Esta é conhecida como lepra negra. Outro tipo é a lepra anestésica, às vezes chamada de lepra branca. Não é tão grave quanto a lepra negra, e, basicamente, atinge os nervos periféricos. Pode manifestar-se na pele, que se torna dolorida ao toque, embora possa também resultar em insensibilidade. O terceiro tipo de lepra, uma espécie mista, combina os sintomas de ambas as formas que acabamos de descrever.

À medida que a lepra progride para seu estágio avançado, as lesões que inicialmente se desenvolveram soltam pus, talvez caiam os cabelos da cabeça e das sobrancelhas, as unhas podem soltar-se, decompor-se e cair. Daí, os dedos, os membros, o nariz ou os olhos da vítima podem ir lentamente se consumindo. Por fim, nos casos mais graves, segue-se a morte. Que a "lepra" bíblica certamente incluía tal doença grave é evidente na referência feita por Arão a ela como sendo um mal em que a carne é "metade consumida". — Núm 12:12.

Esta descrição ajuda a pessoa a avaliar melhor as referências bíblicas a este temível mal, e as funestas consequências do ato presunçoso de Uzias em tentar oferecer incenso indevidamente, no templo de Jeová. — 2Rs 15:5; 2Cr 26:16-23.

Diagnóstico. Por meio da Lei mosaica, Jeová supriu a Israel informações que habilitavam o sacerdote a diagnosticar a lepra e a distingui-la de outras doenças da pele menos graves. À base do registro em Levítico 13:1-46, vê-se que a lepra talvez começasse com uma erupção, uma escara, uma mancha, um furúnculo, ou uma cicatriz na carne, resultante duma queimadura. Às vezes, os sintomas eram claríssimos. Os pelos na área afetada haviam-se esbranquecido, e podia-se notar que a moléstia era mais do que algo superficial. Por exemplo, uma erupção branca da pele podia tornar brancos os pelos, e a carne viva aparecer na erupção. Isto indicava que a pessoa tinha lepra e devia ser declarada impura. No entanto, noutros casos, o mal não era senão superficial, e impunha-se um período de quarentena, com a subsequente inspeção pelo sacerdote, que dava o veredicto final quanto ao que se tratava.

Reconhecia-se que a lepra podia atingir um estágio em que não mais era contagiosa. Quando se tinha espalhado pelo corpo inteiro, todo ele tendo ficado esbranquiçado, e não havia carne viva à mostra, isso era sinal de que a fase crítica da doença já passara e que apenas restavam as suas marcas. O sacerdote então declarava limpa a vítima, o mal não representando mais perigo algum para quem quer que fosse. — Le 13:12-17.

Se a moléstia do leproso já o houvesse deixado e ele estivesse curado, faziam-se arranjos pelos quais ele poderia purificar-se cerimonialmente, o que incluía a oferta dum sacrifício em favor dele, feita pelo sacerdote. (Le 14:1-32) Mas se o sacerdote declarava impuro o leproso não curado, as roupas dele eram rasgadas, seus cabelos devendo ficar desgrenhados, e ele devia cobrir o bigode ou lábio superior, e devia bradar: "Impuro, impuro!" Tinha de morar num local isolado, fora do acampamento (Le 13:43-46), medida que se adotava para que o leproso não contaminasse aqueles no meio dos quais Jeová residia. (Núm 5:1-4) Parece que, nos tempos bíblicos, os leprosos se associavam uns com os outros ou viviam em grupos, tornando possível se ajudarem mutuamente. — 2Rs 7:3-5; Lu 17:12.

Nas roupas e nas casas. A lepra também podia atingir roupas de lã ou de linho, ou um artigo de pele. A praga talvez desaparecesse com a lavagem, e havia arranjos para se isolar tal artigo. Mas, nos casos em que persistisse esta praga verde-amarelada ou avermelhada, a lepra maligna se fazia presente, e o artigo devia ser queimado. (Le 13:47-59) Se, na parede duma casa, surgissem depressões verde-amareladas ou avermelhadas, o sacerdote impunha uma quarentena à casa. Talvez fosse preciso remover as pedras atingidas e mandar que se raspasse o interior da casa, as pedras e a argamassa raspada sendo então lançadas num lugar impuro, fora da cidade. Se a praga retornasse, a casa era declarada impura e era derrubada, e seus materiais eram lançados num local impuro. Mas, para a casa que fosse declarada pura (limpa) havia um arranjo de purificação. (Le 14:33-57) Tem-se sugerido que a lepra que atingia roupas ou casas era um tipo de bolor ou fungo; no entanto, existe incerteza quanto a isto.

Como Sinal. Um dos sinais que Jeová capacitou Moisés a realizar, a fim de provar aos israelitas que Deus o havia enviado, envolvia a lepra. Conforme instruído, Moisés enfiou a mão na dobra superior de sua roupa e, ao retirá-la, "sua mão estava atacada de lepra semelhante à neve". Ela foi restaurada, "igual ao resto da sua carne", por ele colocá-la novamente na dobra superior de sua roupa e retirá-la outra vez. (Êx 4:6, 7) Miriã foi atacada de "lepra branca como a neve", como ato divino, por ela ter falado contra Moisés. Este suplicou a Deus que a curasse, o que foi feito, mas ela ficou de quarentena, fora do acampamento, por sete dias. — Núm 12:1, 2, 9-15.

Nos dias de Eliseu. Naamã, o sírio, era "valente, poderoso, embora fosse leproso [ou: atacado duma doença da pele]". (2Rs 5:1 n) Seu orgulho quase o fez perder a oportunidade de ser curado, mas, por fim, ele fez conforme Eliseu o instruíra, mergulhando no Jordão sete vezes, e "lhe voltou a carne como a carne dum pequeno rapaz e ele ficou limpo". (2Rs 5:14) Em resultado disso, tornou-se adorador de Jeová. Não obstante, Geazi, ajudante de Eliseu, obteve ganaciosamente um presente de Naamã em nome do profeta, representando assim mal a seu amo, e, na verdade, transformando a benignidade imerecida de Deus em meio de ganho material. Por este erro, Geazi foi afligido de lepra por Deus, e tornou-se "leproso tão branco como a neve". — 2Rs 5:20-27.

Que havia vários leprosos em Israel nos dias de Eliseu é indicado pela presença de quatro leprosos israelitas do lado de fora dos portões de Samaria, enquanto Eliseu estava na cidade. (2Rs 7:3) Mas, havia da parte dos israelitas uma generalizada falta de fé nesse homem do verdadeiro Deus, assim como os judeus no território de Jesus não o queriam aceitar. Por isso, Cristo disse: "Havia também muitos leprosos em Israel, no tempo de Eliseu, o profeta, contudo, nenhum deles foi purificado, a não ser Naamã, o homem da Síria." — Lu 4:27.

Curados por Jesus e Seus Discípulos. Jesus, durante seu ministério galileu, curou um leproso, descrito por Lucas como "homem cheio de lepra". Jesus ordenou-lhe que não o contasse a ninguém, e disse: "Mas vai e mostra-te ao sacerdote, e faze uma oferta em conexão com a tua purificação, assim como Moisés determinou, em testemunho para eles." — Lu 5:12-16; Mt 8:2-4; Mr 1:40-45.

Quando Cristo enviou os 12 apóstolos, ele lhes disse, entre outras coisas: "Tornai limpos os leprosos." (Mt 10:8) Mais tarde, quando percorria a Samaria e a Galileia, Jesus curou dez leprosos num certo povoado. Apenas um deles, um samaritano, "voltou, glorificando a Deus com voz alta", e se lançou ao solo diante dos pés de Jesus, agradecendo o que ele tinha feito em seu favor. (Lu 17:11-19) Deve-se também notar que Cristo estava em Betânia, na casa de Simão, o leproso (a quem Jesus talvez tivesse curado), quando Maria ungiu Jesus com o custoso óleo perfumado, poucos dias antes de Sua morte. — Mt 26:6-13; Mr 14:3-9; Jo 12:1-8.

LESEM. Nome alternativo da cidade de Laís, mais tarde chamada de Dã. — Jos 19:47; Jz 18:7, 27, 29; veja DÃ N.º 3.

LESEM, PEDRA DE. Pedra preciosa não identificada que era colocada em primeiro lugar na terceira fileira de pedras preciosas no "peitoral do julgamento" do sumo sacerdote. — Êx 28:15, 19; 39:12.

Várias pedras, tais como âmbar, jacinto, opala e turmalina, têm sido sugeridas como idênticas à "pedra de lesem", mas nenhuma dessas identificações pode ser comprovada. A Tradução do Novo Mundo, portanto, deixa sem tradução essa palavra hebraica, como pedra de lesem.

LESMA [hebr.: shab·belúl]. Qualquer um de uma variedade de moluscos lentos que, em geral, se distinguem por sua concha espiralada ou cônica à qual se podem recolher para proteção. Na Palestina têm-se encontrado numerosas variedades de caracóis, mas, por causa do clima seco, existem poucas lesmas, isto é, caracóis que não possuem concha visível. Tanto as lesmas como os caracóis segregam uma substância viscosa que os protege dos danos da fricção, ao irem se arrastando. Muitos creem que é a este rasto viscoso do caracol que se faz alusão na frase "como a lesma que se dilui". (Sal 58:8) Outra sugestão é que a referência é ao ressecamento do caracol em sua concha, quando fica exposto ao sol por algum tempo.

LESTE. Esta palavra é traduzida do hebraico miz·ráhh, que literalmente significa "nascer do sol" (De 3:27; 1Cr 4:39), e de outras palavras derivadas do verbo qa·dhám, que significa "ficar diante (em frente)". (Ez 48:2) Era costume dos hebreus voltar-se para o nascente quando determinavam a direção, o que significava que o L estava em frente deles, o O atrás, o N do lado esquerdo e o S do lado direito.

Às vezes, qé·dhem era usado para denotar a direção L em sentido geral, como em Gênesis 11:2. Outras vezes, significava o "leste" em relação a outra coisa, como em Números 34:11, onde se utiliza a expressão "ao leste de Aim". Ainda outras vezes, referia-se à área que ficava ao L e ao NE de Israel. Esta incluía as terras de Moabe e de Amom, o deserto da Arábia, Babilônia, Pérsia, Assíria e Armênia.

Os vários povos que viviam nas terras a que se refere a palavra "leste" são mencionados como "filhos do Oriente". Jó foi chamado de o maior de todos os "orientais", ou "filhos do Oriente". (Jó 1:3) Ele vivia nesta área oriental. Quando Jacó foi para a Mesopotâmia a fim de obter uma esposa, ele foi, segundo se nos diz, para a terra dos "orientais", ou dos "filhos do Oriente". (Gên 29:1) O povo que morava ao L de Israel também era chamado de "filhos do Oriente", ou "orientais", como em Juízes 6:3; 8:10.

Na Palestina, o vento L era um vento quente que soprava das terras desérticas ao L, sendo destrutivo para a vegetação. (Ez 19:12) Esta é a base da expressão 'encher o ventre com o vento oriental'. — Jó 15:2.

O tabernáculo, os templos de Salomão e de Zorobabel, bem como o segundo templo, reconstruído por Herodes, estavam todos voltados para o L. (Núm 3:38) O templo visionário de Ezequiel estava voltado para o leste. (Ez 47:1) Por conseguinte, seria de esperar que a vinda de Jeová e de Cristo ao templo procedesse do L.

Em Isaías 46:11, Ciro, o rei persa, é mencionado como vindo do "oriente" (Al), ou do "nascente" (NM). As notícias preditas como vindas do "Oriente" (Al), são, literalmente, "do nascente", ou miz·ráhh. (Da 11:44) No livro de Revelação (Apocalipse), faz-se referência a Dario e a Ciro como sendo proféticos dos "reis do nascente do sol", com relação ao secamento do simbólico Eufrates, por ocasião do julgamento sobre Babilônia, a Grande. — Re 16:12, 19.

Os astrólogos que vieram ver Jesus depois do seu nascimento vieram da direção de Babilônia, das "regiões orientais". (Mt 2:1) Quando disseram que viram a estrela dele "no Oriente" [gr.: a·na·to·lei, literalmente, "nascente"], como dizem algumas traduções da Bíblia, eles não queriam dizer que era ao L de onde a terra deles se localizava mas que viram a estrela desde o Oriente, ou, quando estavam no Oriente. — Mt 2:2 n.

LETUSINS [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "afiar; martelar; forjar"]. Nome que aparece entre os descendentes de Abraão e Quetura por meio de Dedã. (Gên 25:3) Este nome tem a terminação pluralizada hebraica ins, como no caso dos nomes assurins e leumins, que aparecem no mesmo texto. Por isso, muitos peritos creem que se refere a uma tribo ou a um povo. Em vista de seu parentesco com Dedã, essa tribo provavelmente se localizava na península da Arábia, mas a identificação exata é impossível. — Veja MIZRAIM.

LEUMINS [Grupos de Nações; Populações]. Nome que aparece em Gênesis 25:1-3 junto com assurins e letusins, todos sendo descendentes de Abraão e Quetura por meio de Dedã. O uso da terminação pluralizada hebraica ins, no nome Leumins, talvez indique que representa uma tribo ou um povo. A identificação específica dessa tribo dedanita não é possível. Tem sido sugerido, contudo, que eles habitavam certa região da Arábia, provavelmente na área geralmente considerada como sendo a de Dedã. — Veja MIZRAIM.

LEVEDO. Veja FERMENTO.

LEVI [Adesão; Ligado].

1. Terceiro filho de Jacó com sua esposa Leia, nascido em Padã-Arã. (Gên 35:23, 26) Quando ele nasceu, Leia disse: "Agora, esta vez se juntará a mim o meu esposo, porque lhe dei à luz três filhos." O menino foi assim chamado de Levi, nome cujo significado evidentemente estava ligado à esperança de Leia de conseguir um novo vínculo afetivo com Jacó. (Gên 29:34) Levi tornou-se pai de Gérson (Gersom), Coate e Merari, fundadores das três divisões principais dos levitas. — Gên 46:11; 1Cr 6:1, 16.

Levi, junto com seu irmão Simeão, tomou medidas drásticas contra os que aviltaram Diná, irmã deles. (Gên 34:25, 26, 31) Esta expressão de ira violenta foi amaldiçoada por Jacó, que predisse a dispersão dos descendentes de Levi em Israel, profecia que se cumpriu quando os levitas foram deveras dispersos em 48 cidades levitas, nos territórios das várias tribos de Israel, na terra de Canaã. (Gên 49:7; Jos 21:41) Levi acompanhou Jacó na sua ida para o Egito e morreu ali, aos 137 anos de idade. — Êx 1:1, 2; 6:16; veja LEVITAS.

2. Antepassado de Jesus Cristo mencionado como "filho de Simeão" na genealogia de Jesus registrada por Lucas. É alistado na sequência que vai de Davi a Zorobabel. — Lu 3:27-31.

3. "Filho de Melqui", que é a segunda pessoa antes de Eli (pai de Maria) na genealogia de Jesus em Lucas. — Lu 3:23, 24.

4. Coletor de impostos (Mr 2:14; Lu 5:27, 29) que se tornou apóstolo de Jesus Cristo, e que era também conhecido como Mateus. — Mt 9:9; 10:2-4; veja MATEUS.

LEVIATÃ [hebr.: liw·ya·thán]. Esta palavra hebraica ocorre seis vezes na Bíblia. Crê-se que deriva de uma raiz que significa "espiral"; assim, o nome indica algo "espiralado", ou "encaracolado". A palavra é transliterada na maioria das traduções da Bíblia.

Visto que, com exceção de Jó 3:8, as referências mencionam água com relação a ele, leviatã parece indicar algum tipo de criatura aquática de grande porte e força, embora não necessariamente de um único tipo específico. O Salmo 104:25, 26, descreve-o como cabriolando no mar onde passam navios, e por essa razão muitos sugerem que o termo aqui se refere a algum tipo de baleia. Embora baleias sejam raras no Mediterrâneo, elas não são desconhecidas ali, e partes de dois esqueletos de baleia podem ser encontradas num museu em Beirute, no Líbano. A An American Translation diz "crocodilo", em vez de leviatã. Adicionalmente, a palavra "mar" (yam) em si mesma não é determinante, visto que no hebraico pode referir-se a um grande corpo de água interiorano, como o mar da Galileia (mar de Quinerete) (Núm 34:11; Jos 12:3), ou mesmo ao rio Nilo (Is 19:5) ou o Eufrates. — Je 51:36.

A descrição do "leviatã" em Jó 41:1-34 ajusta-se bem ao crocodilo, e o "mar" do versículo 31 talvez se refira a um rio como o Nilo ou outro corpo de água doce. Deve-se observar, contudo, que alguns crocodilos, como os crocodilos do Nilo (Crocodylus niloticus), encontram-se ao longo da costa marinha, e, às vezes, vão uma boa distância mar adentro.

O Salmo 74 descreve os atos de salvação de Deus em favor de seu povo, e os versículos 13 e 14 se referem simbolicamente à libertação que Ele concedeu a Israel, do Egito. Aqui o termo hebraico traduzido "monstros marinhos [hebr.: than·ni·ním, plural de tan·nín]" é usado numa expressão paralela com "leviatã", e o esmagamento das cabeças do leviatã pode bem referir-se à esmagadora derrota imposta a Faraó e seu exército por ocasião do Êxodo. Os Targuns aramaicos dão aqui a expressão "os fortes de Faraó", em vez de "as cabeças do leviatã". (Veja Ez 29:3-5, onde Faraó é assemelhado a um "grande monstro marinho" no meio dos canais do Nilo; também Ez 32:2.) Aparentemente, Isaías 27:1 usa leviatã (LXX: "o dragão") como símbolo dum império, uma organização de âmbito internacional e dominada por alguém com o designativo de "serpente" e "dragão". (Re 12:9) A profecia é de restauração para Israel, e, por conseguinte, 'voltar [Jeová] a sua atenção' para o leviatã tem de incluir Babilônia. Contudo, os versículos 12 e 13 levam em consideração também a Assíria e o Egito. Portanto, o leviatã ali evidentemente se refere a uma organização ou império internacional que se opõe a Jeová e a seus adoradores.

LEVIRATO, CASAMENTO. Veja CASAMENTO DE CUNHADO.

LEVITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Levi]. Descendentes de Levi, terceiro filho de Jacó com Leia. (Gên 29:32-34) Às vezes, o termo se aplica a toda a tribo, mas, geralmente, exclui a família sacerdotal de Arão (Jos 14:3, 4; 21:1-3); assim, a expressão "sacerdotes e levitas" é comum. (1Rs 8:4; 1Cr 23:2; Esd 1:5; Jo 1:19) Os deveres sacerdotais se restringiam aos membros varões da família de Arão, sendo que os levitas, o restante da tribo, atuavam como ajudantes. (Núm 3:3, 6-10) Este arranjo começou quando se ergueu o tabernáculo, uma vez que, antes disso, nenhuma família ou tribo específica fora designada para oferecer os sacrifícios. — Êx 24:5.

Tomados Como Resgate para os Primogênitos. Os levitas foram escolhidos por Jeová em lugar de todos os primogênitos das outras tribos. (Êx 13:1, 2, 11-16; Núm 3:41) Contados a partir de um mês de idade, totalizavam 22.000 varões levitas que podiam ser trocados pelo mesmo número de primogênitos varões das outras tribos. O recenseamento feito no ermo do Sinai revelou que havia 22.273 primogênitos nas outras tribos. Por conseguinte, Deus exigiu que se pagasse um preço de resgate de cinco siclos (US$ 11) a Arão e seus filhos para cada um dos 273 primogênitos a mais que o número de levitas. — Núm 3:39, 43, 46-51.

Deveres. Os levitas eram formados por três famílias, provenientes dos filhos de Levi: Gérson (Gersom), Coate e Merari. (Gên 46:11; 1Cr 6:1, 16) Cada uma destas famílias recebeu um lugar designado, próximo do tabernáculo, no ermo. A família coatita de Arão acampava em frente ao tabernáculo, para o L. Os demais coatitas acampavam no lado S, os gersonitas ao O, e os meraritas ao N. (Núm 3:23, 29, 35, 38) Armar, desmontar e transportar o tabernáculo era função dos levitas. Quando chegava a hora de levantar acampamento, Arão e seus filhos retiravam a cortina que dividia o Santo do Santíssimo, e cobriam a arca do testemunho, os altares e outros móveis e utensílios sagrados. Os coatitas então transportavam estas coisas. Os gersonitas transportavam os panos da tenda, as coberturas, os cortinados do pátio, os reposteiros e os cordões da tenda (evidentemente as cordas do próprio tabernáculo), e os meraritas cuidavam das armações dos painéis, das colunas, dos pedestais de encaixe, e das estacas e cordões da tenda (as cordas do pátio que cercava o tabernáculo). — Núm 1:50, 51; 3:25, 26, 30, 31, 36, 37; 4:4-33; 7:5-9.

O trabalho dos levitas foi altamente organizado sob Davi, que designou supervisores, oficiais, juízes, porteiros e tesoureiros, bem como amplo número de pessoas para ajudar os sacerdotes no templo, nos pátios e nos refeitórios, em relação com as ofertas, os sacrifícios, o trabalho de purificação, de pesar, de medir, e os vários deveres de vigilância. Os músicos levitas foram organizados em 24 grupos, similar às divisões sacerdotais, e serviam em rodízio. Os deveres eram determinados por sortes. No caso dos grupos de porteiros, escolhia-se do mesmo modo a designação para determinada porta. — 1Cr 23, 25, 26; 2Cr 35:3-5, 10.

Nos dias de Moisés, era aos 30 anos de idade que o levita assumia seus plenos deveres, tais como carregar o tabernáculo e seus utensílios quando este mudava. (Núm 4:46-49) Alguns deveres podiam ser realizados a partir dos 25 anos, mas, aparentemente, não o serviço pesado, como transportar o tabernáculo. (Núm 8:24) Nos dias do Rei Davi a idade foi reduzida para 20 anos. A razão apresentada por Davi foi que o tabernáculo (que então seria substituído pelo templo) não mais teria de ser transportado. Designações de serviço obrigatório terminavam à idade de 50 anos. (Núm 8:25, 26; 1Cr 23:24-26; veja IDADE, ERA.) Os levitas tinham de ser bem versados na Lei, não raro sendo convocados para lê-la em público e para ensiná-la ao povo. — 1Cr 15:27; 2Cr 5:12; 17:7-9; Ne 8:7-9.

Sustento. O sustento dos levitas provinha principalmente dos dízimos das outras tribos, sendo-lhes dado um décimo de tudo que era produzido do solo e do gado. Os levitas, por sua vez, repassavam um décimo disso para os sacerdotes. (Núm 18:25-29; 2Cr 31:4-8; Ne 10:38, 39) Também, embora os levitas fossem eximidos do serviço militar, eles, junto com os sacerdotes, compartilhavam de alguns dos despojos da batalha. (Núm 1:45-49; 31:25-31; veja DÍZIMO.) Os levitas não tiveram nenhuma consignação de território em Canaã, Jeová sendo seu quinhão. (Núm 18:20) No entanto, outras tribos de Israel deram-lhes um total de 48 cidades espalhadas por toda a Terra Prometida. — Núm 35:1-8.

Forneceram Defensores da Verdadeira Adoração. Os levitas supriram alguns exemplos notáveis de entusiasmo em favor da adoração verdadeira. Isto se evidenciou no incidente do bezerro de ouro e, novamente, quando os levitas deixaram o território de Jeroboão, depois da divisão do reino. (Êx 32:26; 2Cr 11:13, 14) Também se mostraram zelosos em apoiar os reis Jeosafá, Ezequias e Josias, bem como os governadores Zorobabel e Neemias, e o sacerdote-escriba Esdras, nos empenhos destes de restaurar a adoração verdadeira em Israel. — 2Cr 17:7-9; 29:12-17; 30:21, 22; 34:12, 13; Esd 10:15; Ne 9:4, 5, 38.

A tribo como um todo, contudo, não apoiou o Filho de Deus em seu trabalho de restauração, ainda que alguns levitas individualmente se tornassem cristãos. (At 4:36, 37) Muitos dos sacerdotes levitas tornaram-se obedientes à fé. (At 6:7) Com a destruição de Jerusalém e de seu templo, em 70 EC, os registros familiares dos levitas foram perdidos ou destruídos, pondo fim ao sistema levítico. Mas uma "tribo de Levi" constitui parte do Israel espiritual. — Re 7:4, 7.

O nome da tribo é também a base para o nome do livro bíblico de Levítico. Este livro trata extensamente dos levitas e seus deveres.

LEVITAS, CIDADES DOS. Não se deu aos levitas nenhuma consignação de território, sendo Jeová sua herança. (Núm 18:20; De 18:1, 2) Mas Deus orientou no sentido de que as outras tribos de Israel lhes dessem um total de 48 cidades e as pastagens em volta delas. (Núm 35:1-8) Tais cidades foram, por fim, designadas aos levitas (Jos 21:1-8), 13 delas sendo cidades sacerdotais. (Jos 21:19; veja CIDADES DOS SACERDOTES.) Dentre as 48 cidades, 6 foram designadas como cidades de refúgio, para os homicidas não intencionais. — Jos 20:7-9; veja CIDADES DE REFÚGIO.

A dispersão dos levitas entre as outras tribos de Israel ocorreu em cumprimento da profecia que Jacó fez no leito de morte. — Gên 49:5-7.

Os levitas gozavam do direito de recomprar a qualquer tempo as casas que tivessem vendido nos limites de suas cidades, ou estas lhes eram devolvidas no ano do jubileu. Mas as pastagens adjacentes às suas cidades jamais deviam ser vendidas. — Le 25:32-34; veja LEVITAS.

LEVÍTICO. Terceiro livro do Pentateuco, contendo as leis de Deus sobre sacrifícios, pureza e outros assuntos relacionados com a adoração de Jeová. O sacerdócio levítico, cumprindo as instruções recebidas, prestava serviço sagrado numa "representação típica e como sombra das coisas celestiais". — He 8:3-5; 10:1.

Período Abrangido. Não mais de um mês é abrangido pelos eventos apresentados no livro. A maior parte de Levítico é dedicada a alistar as ordens de Jeová, em vez de narrar vários acontecimentos durante um período prolongado de tempo. Assim, a montagem do tabernáculo, no primeiro dia do primeiro mês do segundo ano da partida de Israel do Egito, é mencionada no capítulo final de Êxodo, o livro que precede Levítico. (Êx 40:17) Daí, o livro de Números (que vem logo depois do relato de Levítico), em seus primeiros versículos (1:1-3), começa com a ordem de Deus para realizar um recenseamento, dada a Moisés "no primeiro dia do segundo mês, no segundo ano da saída deles da terra do Egito".

Quando e Onde Foi Escrito. A época lógica para a escrita do livro seria 1512 AEC, junto ao Si-

DESTAQUES DE LEVÍTICO

As leis de Deus, em especial as relativas ao serviço dos sacerdotes em Israel, com destaque, para o bem da nação como um todo, na seriedade do pecado e na importância de ser santo porque Jeová é santo.

Escrito por Moisés em 1512 AEC, enquanto Israel estava acampado junto ao monte Sinai.

Sacerdócio arônico é investido e começa a funcionar.

- Moisés executa os procedimentos de investidura de sete dias. (8:1-36)
- No oitavo dia, o sacerdócio começa a funcionar; Jeová manifesta sua aprovação por demonstrar sua glória e consumir a oferta sobre o altar. (9:1-24)
- Jeová golpeia Nadabe e Abiú por terem oferecido fogo ilegítimo; subsequentemente, é proibido o uso de bebidas alcoólicas quando a pessoa serve no santuário. (10:1-11)
- Delineiam-se os requisitos para os que servirão como sacerdotes; baixam-se regulamentos sobre comer o que é santo. (21:1–22:16)

O uso de sacrifícios para manter uma relação aprovada com Deus.

- Dão-se leis a respeito de animais aceitáveis como ofertas queimadas e como devem ser preparados para a apresentação. (1:1-17; 6:8-13; 7:8)
- Estipulam-se tipos de ofertas de cereais, e como devem ser apresentadas a Jeová. (2:1-16; 6:14-18; 7:9, 10)
- Estabelecem-se os procedimentos relativos a sacrifícios de participação em comum; comer sangue e gordura é proibido. (3:1-17; 7:11-36)
- Especificam-se animais para oferta pelo pecado no caso de um sacerdote, da assembleia de Israel, de um maioral, ou de um dos do povo; delineiam-se os procedimentos para cuidar desta oferta. (4:1-35; 6:24-30)
- Dão-se leis sobre situações que exigem ofertas pela culpa. (5:1–6:7; 7:1-7)
- Dão-se instruções sobre a oferta a ser feita no dia em que o sacerdote é ungido. (6:19-23)
- Todas as ofertas têm de ser sadias; alistam-se os defeitos que tornam um animal impróprio para sacrifício. (22:17-33)
- Delineiam-se os procedimentos do Dia da Expiação, envolvendo o sacrifício de um novilho e dois bodes — um bode para Jeová e o outro para Azazel. (16:2-34)

Regulamentos detalhados para salvaguardar contra a impureza e manter a santidade.

- Certos animais são aceitáveis como puros para alimento e outros são proibidos como impuros; contato com cadáveres resulta em impureza. (11:1-47)
- A mulher deve ser purificada de sua impureza após ter dado à luz. (12:1-8)
- Detalham-se procedimentos para lidar com casos de lepra. (13:1–14:57)
- Emissões dos órgãos sexuais resultam em impureza, e exige-se purificação. (15:1-33)
- Deve-se manter a santidade por respeitar a santidade do sangue e evitar o incesto, a sodomia, a bestialidade, a calúnia, o espiritismo e outras práticas detestáveis. (17:1–20:27)

Sábados e festividades sazonais para Jeová.

Bênçãos pela obediência, maldições pela desobediência.

- Bênçãos pela obediência incluirão colheitas fartas, paz e segurança. (26:3-13)
- Maldições devido à desobediência incluirão doenças, derrota por inimigos, fome, destruição de cidades, desolação da terra, e exílio. (26:14-45)

nai, no ermo. Atestando que Levítico foi deveras escrito no ermo, há nele referências que refletem a vida num acampamento. — Le 4:21; 10:4, 5; 14:8; 17:1-5.

Escritor. Toda a evidência precedente ajuda igualmente a identificar Moisés como o escritor. Ele obteve as informações de Jeová (Le 26:46), e as palavras finais do livro são: "Estes são os mandamentos que Jeová deu a Moisés como ordens para os filhos de Israel, no monte Sinai." (27:34) Ademais, Levítico é parte do Pentateuco, sendo geralmente admitido que o escritor deste é Moisés. Não só o início de Levítico: "E . . . " indica sua relação com Êxodo, e, portanto, com o restante do Pentateuco, mas também o modo como Jesus Cristo e os escritores das Escrituras Cristãs se referem a ele mostra que sabiam ser um escrito de Moisés, e parte inquestionável do Pentateuco. Por exemplo, veja a referência de Cristo a Levítico 14:1-32 (Mt 8:2-4), a referência de Lucas a Levítico 12:2-4, 8 (Lu 2:22-24), e a paráfrase de Paulo de Levítico 18:5 (Ro 10:5).

Rolos do Mar Morto de Levítico. Entre os manuscritos encontrados junto ao Mar Morto, nove deles contêm fragmentos do livro de Levítico. Quatro deles, que se crê serem de 125 a 75 AEC, foram escritos em antigos caracteres hebraicos que estavam em uso antes do exílio babilônico.

Valor do Livro. Deus prometeu a Israel que, se obedecessem à sua voz, tornar-se-iam para ele "um reino de sacerdotes e uma nação santa". (Êx 19:6) O livro de Levítico contém um registro de como Deus instituiu um sacerdócio para sua nação e lhes deu estatutos que os habilitariam a manter a santidade aos Seus olhos. Embora Israel fosse apenas a "nação santa" típica de Deus, cujos sacerdotes 'prestavam serviço sagrado numa representação típica e como sombra das coisas celestiais' (He 8:4, 5), a Lei de Deus, caso obedecida, os teria mantido limpos e como candidatos para completarem o número do seu espiritual "sacerdócio real, nação santa". (1Pe 2:9) Mas a desobediência da maioria privou Israel de preencher com exclusividade os lugares dos membros do Reino de Deus, conforme Jesus disse aos judeus. (Mt 21:43) Todavia, as leis delineadas no livro de Levítico eram de inestimável valor para os que as acatavam.

Mediante as leis sanitárias e dietéticas, bem como os regulamentos sobre a moral sexual, proveram-se-lhes salvaguardas contra a doença e a depravação. (Le, caps. 11-15, 18) Tais leis, porém, os beneficiavam principalmente em sentido espiritual, porque os habilitavam a familiarizar-se com os santos e justos modos de agir de Jeová, e ajudavam-nos a ajustar-se a tais. (11:44) Ademais, os regulamentos delineados nesta parte da Bíblia, como parte da Lei, serviam como tutor para conduzir os crentes a Jesus Cristo, o grande Sumo Sacerdote de Deus, e aquele prefigurado pelos incontáveis sacrifícios oferecidos em harmonia com a Lei. — Gál 3:19, 24; He 7:26-28; 9:11-14; 10:1-10.

O livro de Levítico continua a ser hoje de grande valor para todos os que desejam servir a Jeová de forma aceitável. Um estudo do cumprimento de suas várias modalidades em relação com Jesus Cristo, o sacrifício de resgate e a congregação cristã, deveras fortalece a fé. Ao passo que é verdade que os cristãos não estão sob o pacto da Lei (He 7:11, 12, 19; 8:13; 10:1), os regulamentos delineados no livro de Levítico lhes dão uma percepção profunda do ponto de vista de Deus sobre os assuntos. Portanto, o livro não é mera narração de pormenores secos, inaplicáveis, mas uma fonte viva de informações. Por obter conhecimento de como Deus encara vários assuntos, alguns dos quais não especificamente abrangidos nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, o cristão pode ser ajudado a evitar o que desagrada a Deus, e fazer o que O agrada.

LÍBANO [Branca [Montanha]]. Em geral, a mais ocidental das duas cordilheiras que formam o sistema montanhoso do Líbano. Seu nome talvez se derive da cor clara de seus penhascos e picos de calcário, ou do fato de que as encostas superiores da cordilheira estão cobertas de neve a maior parte do ano. (Je 18:14) Estendendo-se do NNE para SSO por cerca de 160 km, ao longo do mar Mediterrâneo, a cordilheira do Líbano corre paralela à do Antilíbano por cerca de 100 km. As duas cordilheiras são separadas por um longo e fértil vale, o Beqaʻ (Coele-Síria), que mede de 10 a 16 km de largura. (Jos 11:17; 12:7) Através deste vale corre para o N o rio Orontes, ao passo que o Litani (seu curso inferior sendo chamado de Nahr el-Kasimiye) flui para o S, e contorna a ponta sul da cordilheira do Líbano. O Nahr el-Kebir (Elêutero) flui ao longo da extremidade norte da cordilheira do Líbano.

Salvo raras exceções, os sopés da cordilheira do Líbano sobem quase que direto do mar Mediterrâneo, deixando apenas uma estreita planície costeira. Os picos desta cordilheira atingem, em média, de 1.800 a 2.100 m de altitude, dois picos ultrapassando essa média em mais de 900 m. Tanto as encostas orientais como as ocidentais do Líbano são íngremes.

Suas encostas orientais são um tanto desprovidas de vegetação e não têm praticamente nenhum curso de água importante. Mas as bem regadas encostas ocidentais são entrecortadas por riachos e gargantas. (Compare isso com Cân 4:15.) As encostas mais baixas, em terraços, do lado O, servem para a produção de cereais, vinhedos, pomares, amoreiras, nogueiras e oliveiras. (Compare isso com Os 14:5-7.) Pinheiros vicejam no rico solo da camada de arenito, e, nas elevações maiores, podem-se encontrar pequenos bosques de majestosos cedros. Estas árvores antigamente cobriam a cordilheira e a sua madeira era usada para vários fins. (1Rs 6:9; Cân 3:9; Ez 27:5; veja CEDRO.) Freixos, ciprestes e juníperos são também naturais da cordilheira do Líbano. (1Rs 5:6-8; 2Rs 19:23; Is 60:13) Entre os animais que habitam esta região acham-se chacais, gazelas, hienas e lobos. Nos tempos antigos, tanto as florestas como a vida selvagem eram bem mais abundantes; a região era uma guarida para leões e leopardos. (Cân 4:8; Is 40:16) Possivelmente, era a fragrância de suas grandes florestas que era conhecida como "fragrância do Líbano". — Cân 4:11.

A região do Líbano não foi conquistada pelos israelitas sob a liderança de Josué, mas veio a se tornar a fronteira NO daquela terra. (De 1:7; 3:25; 11:24; Jos 1:4; 9:1) Os habitantes pagãos desta área, contudo, serviram para testar a fidelidade de Israel a Jeová. (Jz 3:3, 4) Séculos mais tarde, o Rei Salomão exerceu jurisdição sobre uma parte do Líbano, e realizou ali algumas construções. (1Rs 9:17-19; 2Cr 8:5, 6) É possível que um dos seus projetos de construção incluísse "a torre do Líbano, que olha para Damasco". (Cân 7:4; alguns, contudo, entendem que isto se refere a um dos picos do Líbano.) Nessa época, Hirão, o rei de Tiro, controlava outra parte do Líbano, de onde supriu a Salomão madeira de cedro e de junípero. — 1Rs 5:7-14.

Uso Ilustrativo. Muitas das referências bíblicas ao Líbano estão associadas à sua fertilidade (Sal 72:16; Is 35:2) e às suas luxuriantes florestas, em especial seus majestosos cedros. (Sal 29:5) Não raro, usa-se Líbano em sentido figurado. É representado como se estivesse em situação desconcertada, condoendo-se da terra de Judá, que fora despojada pelas forças assírias. (Is 33:1, 9) O próprio exército assírio, contudo, deveria sofrer calamidade, sendo abatido como as árvores do Líbano. (Is 10:24-26, 33, 34) Efeitos desastrosos, resultantes do julgamento de Jeová, são comparados ao ressecamento da floração do Líbano. (Na 1:4) No entanto, faz-se alusão à transformação da floresta do Líbano num pomar frutífero, em uma profecia de restauração, e isso ilustra uma completa inversão dos assuntos. — Is 29:17, 18.

Jeová, mediante Jeremias, "disse . . . referente à casa do rei de Judá: 'Tu és para mim como Gileade, cabeça do Líbano'". (Je 22:6) A "casa" parece designar o complexo palaciano. (Je 22:1, 5) Situado em lugar eminente, o local do palácio era exaltado e magnífico, como o Líbano. Também, na construção dos vários edifícios reais ali existentes usara-se extensivamente o cedro. (1Rs 7:2-12) O Rei Jeoiaquim, que ouviu as palavras registradas em Jeremias 22:6, tinha ele mesmo utilizado painéis de cedro para seu luxuoso palácio. (Je 22:13-15) Por conseguinte, a área do palácio era como magnífica floresta de prédios de cedro, e podia ser, apropriadamente, comparada ao Líbano, e à bem arborizada Gileade. Jeová avisara Judá de que, se o Rei Jeoiaquim, os servos dele e o povo não fizessem justiça, a 'casa se tornaria mera devastação' (Je 22:1-5) e os que moravam no Líbano figurativo (Jerusalém), 'aninhados nos cedros', sofreriam calamidade. — Je 22:23; veja também Ez 17:2, 3.

Similarmente, o desejo do rei assírio Senaqueribe de "subir ao alto das regiões montanhosas, às partes mais remotas do Líbano" e 'decepar os seus altos cedros', parece uma alusão às suas intenções quanto a Jerusalém. (Is 37:21-24) As palavras proféticas sobre a violência praticada contra o Líbano (Hab 2:17) talvez se refiram à calamidade em reserva para Jerusalém. Ou, talvez devam ser entendidas literalmente como indicando o esgotamento das florestas do Líbano, causado pelas devastações da guerra. — Compare isso com Is 14:5-8.

A profecia de Zacarias (10:10) apontava um tempo em que Jeová traria seu povo de volta para a terra de Gileade e do Líbano. Neste caso, o Líbano pode referir-se ao território ao O do Jordão, visto que Gileade designa a terra ao E do Jordão.

LIBERDADE. Visto que Jeová Deus é o Todo-Poderoso, o Governante Soberano do universo e o Criador de todas as coisas, somente ele possui liberdade absoluta, ilimitada. (Gên 17:1; Je 10:7, 10; Da 4:34, 35; Re 4:11) Todos os outros precisam atuar e agir dentro dos limites da capacidade que lhes foi concedida, e sujeitar-se às leis universais dele. (Is 45:9; Ro 9:20, 21) Por exemplo, considere a gravidade, e as leis que governam as reações químicas, a influência do Sol, e o crescimento; as leis morais; os direitos e as ações de outros que influenciam a liberdade da pessoa. Portanto, a liberdade de todas as criaturas de Deus é uma liberdade relativa.

Há uma diferença entre liberdade limitada e servidão. A liberdade dentro dos limites concedidos por Deus traz felicidade; a servidão a criaturas, à imperfeição, a fraquezas ou a ideologias erradas traz opressão e infelicidade. É também preciso diferenciar a liberdade da autodeterminação, isto é, não fazer caso das leis de Deus e decidir por si mesmo o que é direito e o que é errado. Isto resulta na usurpação dos direitos de outros e causa dificuldades, como se pode ver dos efeitos do espírito independente, egocêntrico, apresentado a Adão e Eva pela Serpente no Éden. (Gên 3:4, 6, 11-19) A verdadeira liberdade é limitada por lei, a lei de Deus, a qual permite à pessoa plena expressão, de forma correta, edificante e benéfica, e que reconhece os direitos dos outros, contribuindo para a felicidade de todos. — Sal 144:15; Lu 11:28; Tg 1:25.

O Deus da Liberdade. Jeová é o Deus da liberdade. Ele livrou os da nação de Israel da servidão no Egito. Disse-lhes que, enquanto obedecessem aos Seus mandamentos, estariam livres de penúria. (De 15:4, 5) Davi falou de se estar 'livre de cuidados' nas torres de habitação de Jerusalém. (Sal 122:6, 7) No entanto, a Lei facultava que o homem, se ficasse pobre, podia vender-se em escravidão com o fim de conseguir para si e para a sua família as necessidades da vida. Mas, a Lei concedia liberdade a este hebreu no sétimo ano da sua servidão. (Êx 21:2) No jubileu (que ocorria a cada 50.º ano), proclamava-se no país a liberdade de todos os seus habitantes. Todo escravo hebreu era liberto, e todo homem recebia de volta sua herdade de terra. — Le 25:10-19; veja JUBILEU.

A Liberdade Que Vem por meio de Cristo. O apóstolo Paulo falou da necessidade de a humanidade ser liberta da "escravização à corrupção". (Ro 8:21) Jesus Cristo disse aos judeus que haviam crido nele: "Se permanecerdes na minha palavra, sois realmente meus discípulos, e conhecereis a verdade, e a verdade vos libertará." Aos que pensavam que eles tinham liberdade só por serem descendentes carnais de Abraão, ele salientou que eles eram escravos do pecado, e disse: "Portanto, se o Filho vos libertar, sereis realmente livres." — Jo 8:31-36; compare isso com Ro 6:18, 22.

As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs mencionam os seguidores de Cristo como livres. Paulo mostrou que eram "filhos, não duma serva, mas da [mulher] livre" (Gál 4:31), a quem ele chama de "a Jerusalém de cima". (Gál 4:26) Daí, ele exorta: "Para tal liberdade [ou: "Com a liberdade dela", n] é que Cristo nos libertou. Portanto, ficai firmes e não vos deixeis restringir novamente num jugo de escravidão." (Gál 5:1) Naquele tempo, certos homens que afirmavam falsamente ser cristãos tinham-se associado com as congregações gálatas. Faziam empenho para induzir os cristãos gálatas a desistir da sua liberdade em Cristo por tentar obter a justiça por meio de obras da Lei, em vez de pela fé em Cristo. Paulo advertiu que assim se afastariam da benignidade imerecida de Cristo. — Gál 5:2-6; 6:12, 13.

A liberdade usufruída pelos primitivos cristãos por estarem livres da servidão ao pecado e à morte, e do temor ("Porque Deus não nos deu um espírito de covardia, mas de poder, e de amor, e de bom juízo") foi exemplificada na liberdade e franqueza no falar dos apóstolos, na proclamação das boas novas. (2Ti 1:7; At 4:13; Fil 1:18-20) Reconheciam que essa franqueza no falar a respeito de Cristo era um valioso bem, que tinha de ser desenvolvido, protegido e mantido, a fim de receberem a aprovação de Deus. Era também um assunto apropriado para oração. — 1Ti 3:13; He 3:6; Ef 6:18-20.

Uso Correto da Liberdade Cristã. Os inspirados escritores cristãos, reconhecendo o propósito de Deus em conceder benignidade imerecida através de Cristo ("fostes, naturalmente, chamados à liberdade, irmãos"), repetidas vezes aconselharam os cristãos a preservarem sua liberdade e a não tirarem proveito ou vantagem errônea desta liberdade, como oportunidade para se entregar a obras da carne (Gál 5:13) ou como disfarce para a maldade. (1Pe 2:16) Tiago falou de se 'olhar de perto para a lei perfeita que pertence à liberdade' e salientou que aquele que não fosse ouvinte esquecediço, mas que persistisse em ser fazedor da obra, seria feliz. — Tg 1:25.

O apóstolo Paulo apreciava a liberdade que obtivera por meio de Cristo, mas refreava-se de usar sua liberdade para agradar a si mesmo ou de usá-la a ponto de prejudicar outros. Na sua carta à congregação em Corinto, ele mostrou que não feriria a consciência de outrem por fazer algo que ele biblicamente tinha a liberdade de fazer, mas que talvez fosse questionado por outro com menos conhecimento, cuja consciência talvez se ofendesse com os atos de Paulo. Ele citou como exemplo o consumo de carne oferecida a um ídolo antes de ser posta à venda no mercado. Comer esta carne talvez induzisse alguém de consciência fraca a criticar a correta liberdade de ação de Paulo e assim agir como juiz de Paulo, o que seria errado. Portanto, Paulo disse: "Por que haveria de ser julgada a minha liberdade pela consciência de outra pessoa? Se estou participando com agradecimentos, por que se há de falar de mim de modo ultrajante por causa daquilo pelo qual dou graças?" Não obstante, o apóstolo estava decidido a exercer sua liberdade de modo edificante, não prejudicial. — 1Co 10:23-33.

A Luta do Cristão e a Esperança da Humanidade. Paulo mostra que há perigo para a liberdade do cristão, pois, ao passo que "a lei desse espírito que dá vida em união com Cristo Jesus libertou-te da lei do pecado e da morte" (Ro 8:1, 2), a lei do pecado e da morte, que opera no corpo do cristão, luta para levá-lo novamente à servidão.

Portanto, o cristão tem de fixar a mente nas coisas do espírito, a fim de sair vencedor. — Ro 7:21-25; 8:5-8.

Depois de esboçar o conflito cristão, Paulo passa a chamar os co-herdeiros de Cristo de "filhos de Deus". Daí, ele menciona outros da humanidade como "criação" e apresenta o maravilhoso propósito de Deus "de que a própria criação também será liberta da escravização à corrupção e terá a liberdade gloriosa dos filhos de Deus". — Ro 8:12-21.

Uso Figurado. Quando Jó, no seu sofrimento, queria achar livramento na morte, ele comparou a morte a uma liberdade para os aflitos. Evidentemente, aludia à vida dura dos escravos, dizendo: "[Na morte,] o escravo está livre do seu amo." — Jó 3:19; veja os versículos 21 e 22.

LIBERTO, HOMEM LIVRE. Durante o domínio romano, quem fosse emancipado da escravidão era chamado de "liberto" (gr.: a·pe·leú·the·ros), ao passo que o "homem livre" (gr.: e·leú·the·ros) era livre de nascença, possuindo plenos direitos de cidadania, assim como o apóstolo Paulo. — At 22:28.

A emancipação formal concedia ao liberto a cidadania romana, mas esse ex-escravo não era elegível para cargos políticos, embora o fossem seus descendentes, da segunda ou pelo menos da terceira geração. A emancipação informal, porém, dava à pessoa apenas liberdade prática, não direitos cívicos. — Veja CIDADÃO, CIDADANIA.

Visto que o liberto era encarado como pertencente à família de seu ex-amo, ambas as partes tinham uma obrigação mútua. O liberto, ou permanecia na casa e no serviço do seu ex-amo, ou recebia um sítio e capital para começar a ganhar o sustento por conta própria. O patrão sepultava seu liberto falecido na sepultura da família, tomava conta de filhos menores deixados por ele e herdava sua propriedade, se não houvesse herdeiros. Por outro lado, caso o patrão sofresse um revés financeiro, seu liberto era obrigado por lei a cuidar dele. Mas os direitos dum ex-amo não podiam ser transferidos para os herdeiros dele.

Tem-se sugerido que os pertencentes à "Sinagoga dos Libertos [literalmente: Libertinos, Al]" eram judeus que haviam sido levados cativos pelos romanos e que mais tarde foram emancipados. Outra ideia é que essas pessoas eram escravos libertos que se tornaram prosélitos do judaísmo. O texto da Versão Armênia apresenta essas pessoas como "líbios", isto é, pessoas da Líbia. — At 6:9.

Conforme indicado pelas Escrituras, mesmo que um cristão seja escravo dum amo terrestre, na realidade ele é o liberto de Cristo, livrado da servidão ao pecado e à morte. Mas, por ter sido comprado por um preço, o sangue precioso de Jesus, o cristão que é homem livre em sentido físico é escravo de Deus e de Jesus Cristo, obrigado a obedecer aos mandamentos deles. Isto indica que, para os humanos, a liberdade é sempre relativa, nunca absoluta. Portanto, do ponto de vista de Deus, na congregação cristã não há diferença entre escravo e homem livre. Além disso, a liberdade do cristão não lhe dá o direito de usá-la como disfarce para a maldade. — 1Co 7:22, 23; Gál 3:28; He 2:14, 15; 1Pe 1:18, 19; 2:16.

LÍBIA, LÍBIOS. A antiga Líbia ocupava uma área no N da África, ao O do Egito. Em geral, acha-se que seus habitantes foram chamados pelo termo hebraico Lu·vím. (2Cr 12:3; "líbios", Al, CBC, LXX, NM) Se Lu·vím for variante de Leha·vím (Leabim), isto talvez indique que pelo menos alguns dos líbios descenderam de Cã através de Mizraim. (Gên 10:13) O tradicional conceito judaico encontrado nos escritos de Josefo (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], I, 130-132 [vi, 2]) torna os líbios descendentes de Cã através de Pute. (Gên 10:6) Também a Septuaginta grega e a Vulgata latina rezam "líbios" em Jeremias 46:9, Ezequiel 27:10 e 38:5, onde o texto hebraico diz "Pute". Naturalmente, é possível que descendentes tanto de Pute como de Mizraim se estabelecessem na região geográfica, no norte da África, que passou a ser chamada de Líbia. Isto significaria que a designação "líbios" é mais abrangente do que o termo hebraico Lu·vím.

O Rei Sisaque, do Egito, considerado o fundador da "dinastia líbia", capturou numerosas cidades quando invadiu Judá, no quinto ano do Rei Roboão (993 AEC). Sua poderosa força de carros e de cavaleiros incluía líbios. Embora a própria Jerusalém fosse poupada, Sisaque despojou a cidade dos seus tesouros. (1Rs 14:25, 26; 2Cr 12:2-9) Cerca de 26 anos mais tarde (967 AEC), os líbios estavam representados nas tropas de Zerá, o etíope, que penetrou em Judá, mas sofreu uma derrota humilhante. (2Cr 14:9-13; 16:8) No sétimo século AEC, parece que de nada adiantou a ajuda dos líbios e de outros para salvar a cidade egípcia de Nô-Amom da calamidade às mãos dos assírios. (Na 3:7-10) Predisse-se que os líbios e os etíopes acompanhariam os "passos" do "rei do norte", dando a entender que estes anteriores apoiadores do Egito passariam a estar sob o seu controle. — Da 11:43.

No ano 33 EC, entre os judeus e os prosélitos que estavam em Jerusalém para a festividade de Pentecostes, havia pessoas das "partes da Líbia, do lado de Cirene", isto é, da parte ocidental da Líbia.

É provável que algumas delas fossem batizadas em resposta ao discurso de Pedro e mais tarde levassem a mensagem do cristianismo ao voltarem para a terra de sua residência. — At 2:10.

LIBNA [duma raiz que significa "branco"; ou, possivelmente: "estoraque"].

1. Acampamento dos israelitas no ermo. Desconhece-se sua localização. — Núm 33:20, 21.

2. Cidade real cananeia tomada por Josué antes da conquista de Laquis. (Jos 10:29-32, 39; 12:15) Libna foi uma das cidades no território de Judá dada "aos filhos de Arão". (Jos 15:21, 42; 1Cr 6:57) Séculos mais tarde, o sogro do Rei Josias morava ali. — 2Rs 23:31; 24:18; Je 52:1.

Por ocasião da revolta edomita no décimo século AEC, Libna também se rebelou contra o Rei Jeorão, de Judá. (2Rs 8:22; 2Cr 21:10) Em 732 AEC, o exército do rei assírio Senaqueribe avançou de Laquis para Libna. Ele enviara de Laquis um destacamento militar para ameaçar Jerusalém. Enquanto em Libna, os assírios receberam notícias de que Tiraca, rei da Etiópia, pretendia combatê-los. Por isso, Senaqueribe, com o fim de incitar Jerusalém a se render, enviou pela segunda vez mensageiros com cartas intimidadoras a Ezequias, rei de Judá. Subsequentemente, o anjo de Jeová matou 185.000 da hoste assíria, evidentemente ainda acampada perto de Libna. — 2Rs 19:8-35; Is 37:8-36.

Tell es-Safi tem sido sugerido como possível identificação da antiga Libna. No entanto, visto que o peso da evidência aponta para identificar Tell es-Safi com Gate, peritos contemporâneos tendem a identificar Libna com Tell Bornat (Tel Burena), a uns 8 km ao NNE de Laquis.

LIBNI [duma raiz que significa "branco"].

1. Neto de Levi e filho de Gérson (Gersom). (Êx 6:17; 1Cr 6:17) Foi o fundador duma família levítica (Núm 3:18, 21; 1Cr 6:19, 20) e evidentemente também foi chamado Ladã. — 1Cr 23:6, 7; 26:21.

2. Levita que descendeu de Merari através de Mali. — 1Cr 6:29.

LIBNITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Libni]. Família de levitas que descendia de Gérson através do seu filho Libni. — Núm 3:21; 26:58.

LIBRA [gr.: li·tra]. Peso mencionado em certas versões (ALA, BJ, CBC, IBB) apenas em João 12:3 ("meio quilo", NM n) e 19:39 ("trinta e três quilos", NM n). O termo grego costuma ser equiparado à libra romana (lat.: libra). Tinha assim cerca de 327 g. Algumas versões vertem a palavra grega mna como "libra" (Lu 19:18, KJ, Dy, JB, We), mas ela é mais apropriadamente traduzida "mina". (Al, BJ, CBC, IBB, NM) Ao passo que "libra" é usada em versões da Bíblia apenas como peso ou medida, "mina" é um peso monetário indicando um valor específico em ouro ou em prata.

LICAÔNIA. Região da Ásia Menor em que se falava licaônico. (At 14:6-11) As fronteiras da Licaônia variaram consideravelmente no decorrer da sua história e não há certeza delas. Basicamente, no período em que a Licaônia figura no registro bíblico, ela ficava na parte meridional da província romana da Galácia, e era limitada pela Pisídia e pela Frígia ao O, pela Capadócia ao L, e pela Cilícia ao S. Esta região consiste numa planície sem árvores, com pouca água. Antigamente, porém, era razoavelmente produtiva e oferecia suficientes pastos para um grande número de ovelhas.

O apóstolo Paulo visitou Derbe e Listra, duas cidades da Licaônia, durante a sua primeira e a sua segunda viagem missionária. Talvez parasse ali também na terceira jornada missionária ao viajar "de lugar em lugar através do país da Galácia". — At 14:6, 20, 21; 16:1; 18:23.

LÍCIA. Região montanhosa na costa SO da Ásia Menor. Ao NO de Lícia ficava a Cária; ao N, a Frígia e a Pisídia; e ao NE, a Panfília. As montanhas no território da antiga Lícia são contrafortes da cordilheira do Tauro. Especialmente na metade oriental desta região, elas elevam-se quase diretamente da costa. Os vales de rios, dos quais o principal é o do Xanto (o atual Koca), são férteis. Há abundante vegetação nos morros, e as encostas dos montes oferecem pastos para ovelhas.

Duas cidades da Lícia, Pátara e Mirra, são especificamente mencionadas com relação às viagens do apóstolo Paulo. Mas não há registro de ele ter pregado ali. — At 21:1; 27:5.

LIDA. Lida é identificada com el-Ludd (a atual Lod) na planície de Sarom, a uns 18 km ao SE de Jope. Em Lida, Pedro curou o paralítico Eneias. Este milagre induziu muitos daquela região a aceitar o cristianismo. (At 9:32-35, 38) Considera-se Lida ser Lode. — 1Cr 8:12; veja LODE.

LÍDER, NOBRE, PRÍNCIPE. Várias palavras hebraicas podem ser traduzidas diversamente por "líder", "nobre", e "príncipe". As que ocorrem com maior frequência são:

Na·ghídh, que significa "líder", é termo aplicado a Saul e a Davi relacionado com a designação deles como reis de Israel, e a Ezequias como rei de Judá, com a responsabilidade de pastorearem o povo de Jeová. (1Sa 9:16; 25:30; 2Sa 5:2; 2Rs 20:5) A tribo de Judá foi escolhida por Jeová como líder das 12 tribos de Israel, e foi de Judá que descendeu a dinastia régia de Davi. — 1Cr 28:4; Gên 49:10; Jz 1:2.

Jesus é chamado de "Messias, o Líder", e de "líder e comandante para os grupos nacionais", em Daniel 9:25 e em Isaías 55:4. Ele aconselhou seus discípulos: "Tampouco sejais chamados 'líderes', pois o vosso Líder [ka·the·ge·tés] é um só, o Cristo." (Mt 23:10) Com respeito à congregação cristã, Jesus Cristo é o único que legitimamente leva o título de "Líder", porque nenhum humano imperfeito é o líder dos verdadeiros cristãos; estes seguem a Cristo. Embora haja os que "tomam a dianteira" no serviço de Deus, não levam o título de "líder", nem são chamados assim, e o exemplo deles deve ser seguido apenas a ponto em que imitam a Cristo. — 1Co 11:1; He 13:7.

Na·dhív, que significa "nobre", "disposto", "generoso", é termo usado em Números 21:18 paralelo ao de "príncipes" referente àqueles dispostos de Israel que escavaram um poço no ermo. Descreve também os que contribuíram voluntariamente para a construção do tabernáculo. (Êx 35:5) Conforme usado em Jó 12:21, indica posições de destaque e de poder. — Veja também Sal 83:9-11.

A palavra hebraica hho·rím, que significa "nobres", é aplicada a certos homens de influência duma cidade do reino de dez tribos de Israel (1Rs 21:8, 11) e aos judeus que exerciam autoridade sob o Império Persa. (Ne 5:7; 13:17) Muitos dos nobres de Judá e de Jerusalém, incluindo Daniel e seus companheiros, foram levados pelo Rei Nabucodonosor como exilados para Babilônia, em 617 AEC, e outros foram mortos por ele em 607 AEC. — Je 27:20; 39:6; Da 1:3, 6.

Sar, que significa "príncipe", "chefe", deriva dum verbo que significa "exercer domínio". (Jz 9:22 n) Embora este termo seja muitas vezes traduzido "príncipe", não necessariamente se aplica em cada caso ao filho dum rei ou a uma pessoa da realeza. Os cabeças tribais de Israel eram chamados de "príncipes". (1Cr 27:22) Aqueles que ocupavam altos cargos sob o Faraó do Egito e o Rei Nabucodonosor de Babilônia levavam este título. (Gên 12:15; Je 38:17, 18, 22; Est 3:12) Um chefe de exército podia ser chamado de sar. (Ne 2:9) Jeová é chamado de "o Príncipe do exército" e de "o Príncipe dos príncipes", em Daniel 8:11, 25. Miguel, o arcanjo, é 'o grande príncipe que está de pé a favor dos filhos do povo de Daniel'. (Da 12:1) Em Daniel 10:13, 20, mencionam-se invisíveis príncipes demoníacos governando as potências mundiais da Pérsia e da Grécia. — Veja Ef 6:12.

O Salmo 45, do qual os versículos 6 e 7 são aplicados pelo apóstolo Paulo a Cristo Jesus (He 1:8, 9), contém a declaração: "Em lugar de teus antepassados virá a haver teus filhos, os quais designarás para príncipes em toda a terra." (Sal 45:16) Escreveu-se a respeito de Abraão, Isaque e Jacó, homens da linhagem ancestral de Cristo: "Todos estes morreram em fé, embora não recebessem o cumprimento das promessas, mas viram-nas de longe e acolheram-nas." (He 11:8-10, 13) O domínio de Cristo não só envolve ter ele reis e sacerdotes subordinados no céu (Re 20:6), mas também representantes 'principescos' na Terra, que cumprem as ordens do rei. (Veja He 2:5, 8.) Isaías 32:1, 2, claramente faz parte duma profecia messiânica e descreve os benefícios resultantes de haver tais "príncipes" sob o domínio do Reino. — Veja CABEÇA (Posição Governante); GOVERNANTE; MAIORAL.

LÍDIA. Esta mulher e os da sua casa estavam entre os primeiros na Europa a aceitar o cristianismo em resultado da atividade do apóstolo Paulo em Filipos, por volta de 50 EC. Ela morava originalmente em Tiatira, cidade da Ásia Menor, conhecida pela sua indústria de tingimento. Mais tarde, em Filipos, na Macedônia, Lídia vendia púrpura, quer o corante, quer vestimentas e tecidos tingidos com ele. Parece que era ela quem dirigia sua casa (o que pode ter incluído escravos e servos), e, portanto, possivelmente era viúva ou solteira. — At 16:14, 15.

Lídia, "adoradora de Deus", era provavelmente convertida ao judaísmo. Talvez houvesse poucos judeus e nenhuma sinagoga em Filipos, de modo que, no sábado, ela e outras mulheres devotas se reuniam junto a um rio fora da cidade. Quando o apóstolo Paulo pregou a estas mulheres, Lídia escutou com atenção. Depois de ser batizada, junto com os da sua casa, suplicou a Paulo e seus companheiros que ficassem no seu lar, dizendo: "Se vós me julgastes fiel a Jeová, entrai na minha casa." Tal oferta genuína de hospitalidade simplesmente não podia ser recusada. O escritor de Atos, companheiro de viagem de Paulo, acrescenta: "Ela simplesmente nos fez ir." — At 16:11-15.

Mais tarde, depois de Paulo e Silas terem sido soltos da prisão, eles foram novamente ao lar de Lídia. Encorajaram ali os irmãos e então partiram de Filipos. — At 16:36-40.

Talvez fosse pelo menos em parte por causa da hospitalidade de Lídia que Paulo escreveu aos filipenses: "Agradeço sempre a meu Deus, cada vez que me lembro de vós em toda súplica minha a favor de todos vós, ao oferecer a minha súplica com alegria, por causa da contribuição que fizestes para as boas novas, desde o primeiro dia até este momento." — Fil 1:3-5.

LIGADURAS. Veja CADEIAS (LAÇOS, VÍNCULO).

LIGAMENTOS. Faixas fortes de tecido que ligam ossos ou suportam órgãos. Diversas traduções modernas da Bíblia vertem a palavra grega syn·dé·smon (forma de sýn·de·smos), em Colossenses 2:19, por "ligamentos" (ALA; BJ; BLH; NM; PIB), ao passo que outras a vertem por "tendões" (Fn; Mo), "junturas" (LEB) ou "ligaduras" (Al; IBB). Sýn·de·smos significa "vínculo, laço de união, atadura", e é usado com referência a tendões e ligamentos. (A Greek-English Lexicon [Léxico Grego-Inglês], de H. G. Liddell e R. Scott, revisado por H. Jones, Oxford, 1968, p. 1701) Este mesmo termo grego é usado nas expressões "laço de injustiça" (At 8:23), "vínculo unificador da paz" (Ef 4:3) e "perfeito vínculo de união" (Col 3:14).

Ao avisar contra a "humildade fingida" de alguém que apenas professa ser cristão, Paulo disse: "[Ele] não se apega à cabeça, àquele de quem todo o corpo, suprido e harmoniosamente conjuntado por meio de suas juntas e ligamentos [syn·dé·smon], vai crescendo com o desenvolvimento que Deus dá." (Col 2:18, 19) A congregação cristã é aqui comparada a um corpo com sua cabeça. A interdependência dos membros dela é demonstrada pelo comentário de que ela está 'harmoniosamente conjuntada por meio de suas juntas e ligamentos', usando Paulo assim os "ligamentos" em sentido metafórico com relação ao corpo espiritual de Cristo, que tem a Jesus por cabeça. Jesus, como cabeça, fornece aos membros do corpo o que eles necessitam, por meio de "juntas e ligamentos", os meios e arranjos para suprir nutrição espiritual, bem como comunicação e coordenação. (Veja 1Co 12:12-30; Jo 15:4-10.) No literal corpo humano, cada membro tem um papel a desempenhar para o suave desenvolvimento e crescimento do corpo, tanto por receber nutrição e orientação, como por transmiti-las aos outros membros do corpo. A situação é similar no caso do corpo congregacional de Cristo.

LIMPO, LIMPEZA. Diversas palavras hebraicas e gregas descrevem aquilo que é limpo e puro, bem como o ato de purificação, quer dizer, restabelecer a condição imaculada, sem mancha, livre daquilo que suja, adultera ou corrompe. Essas palavras não descrevem apenas a limpeza física, mas, na maioria, a pureza moral ou espiritual. Frequentemente, a limpeza (pureza) física e cerimonial coincidem. O verbo hebraico ta·hér (ser limpo; limpar) usualmente refere-se à pureza cerimonial ou moral. Um sinônimo hebraico de ta·hér é ba·rár, o qual, nas suas diversas formas, significa "eliminar; selecionar; manter limpo; mostrar-se limpo; fazer limpeza". (Ez 20:38; Ec 3:18; Sal 18:26; Je 4:11) A palavra grega ka·tha·rós, que significa "limpo; puro", é usada em sentido físico, moral e religioso. (Mt 23:26; Mt 5:8; Tit 1:15) A palavra "impureza" deriva da palavra hebraica ta·mé' e traduz a palavra grega a·ka·thar·sí·a. — Le 5:3; Mt 23:27; Gál 5:19.

Limpeza (Pureza) Física. Os hábitos pessoais dos da nação de Israel fizeram dela um povo comparativamente sadio, apesar de suas andanças nômades no ermo, por 40 anos. As leis de Deus, que governavam a vida no acampamento, inclusive a diagnose e o tratamento de doenças, inquestionavelmente eram responsáveis por isso. Neste arranjo se enfatizava a necessidade de água limpa. Nem todos os animais eram classificados como limpos para consumo. (Veja ANIMAIS.) Regulamentos precautórios governavam o manejo e a eliminação de cadáveres. Quarentenas atuavam como barreiras contra a disseminação de doenças contagiosas. A eliminação de dejetos por se enterrarem os excrementos era um requisito sanitário bem à frente dos tempos. (De 23:12-14) A exigência de frequentes banhos e da lavagem da roupa também era uma provisão que constava no código de leis daquela nação.

As Escrituras muitas vezes usam a limpeza física como símbolo ou representação da pureza espiritual. Por exemplo, faz-se menção de "linho fino, resplandecente e puro", e diz-se que ele representa "os atos justos dos santos". (Re 19:8) Jesus recorreu também ao princípio da limpeza física quando salientou a impureza espiritual e a hipocrisia dos fariseus. A conduta enganosa deles foi comparada a se limpar por fora o copo e o prato, sem fazê-lo por dentro. (Mt 23:25, 26) Jesus usou uma ilustração similar durante a última refeição pascoal, quando falou aos seus discípulos enquanto Judas Iscariotes estava presente. Embora eles se tivessem banhado e seu Amo lhes tivesse lavado os pés, e eles, portanto, estivessem 'inteiramente limpos' em sentido físico, todavia, em sentido espiritual: "Nem todos vós estais limpos", disse Jesus. — Jo 13:1-11.

A Bíblia alista umas 70 causas de impureza física e de aviltamento cerimonial. Entre estas estão: contato com cadáveres (Le 11:32-40; Núm 19:11-19); contato com pessoas ou coisas impuras (Le 15:4-12, 20-24; Núm 19:22); lepra (Le 13:1-59); fluxos dos órgãos genitais, inclusive a emissão de sêmen durante as relações sexuais (Le 15:1-3, 16-19, 32, 33); parto (Le 12:1-5); consumir carne de aves, peixes ou animais impuros (Le 11:41-47). Especialmente os sacerdotes tinham a obrigação de estar tanto física como cerimonialmente limpos quando serviam perante Jeová. (Êx 30:17-21; Le 21:1-7; 22:2-8) Em sentido especial, a terra poderia ser poluída por assassinatos e idolatria. — Núm 35:33, 34; Ez 22:2-4; 36:25.

Limpeza (Pureza) Cerimonial. Esta era observada entre os israelitas sob pena de morte. "Tendes de manter os filhos de Israel apartados da sua impureza, para que não morram na sua impureza por aviltarem o meu tabernáculo que está no seu meio." (Le 15:31) A purificação usualmente era realizada pelo uso de água e de cinzas duma vaca vermelha, e a cerimônia era realizada a favor de pessoas, de lugares e de coisas. (Núm 19:2-9) Três das causas mais comuns de impureza envolvendo pessoas são especificadas em Números 5:2: "[1] todo leproso e [2] todo aquele que tiver um fluxo, e [3] todo aquele que se tornou impuro por meio duma alma falecida."

Lepra. Esta era a mais repugnante de todas as doenças e exigia medidas severas de controle, inclusive um prolongado isolamento, com cuidadoso e repetido exame para determinar quando se realizou a cura. (Le 13:1-46; De 24:8) Portanto, exigia muita fé da parte do leproso impuro dizer a Jesus: "Senhor, se apenas quiseres, podes tornar-me limpo." Jesus não somente quis, mas também mostrou sua capacidade de curar esta doença repugnante por ordenar: "Torna-te limpo." Jesus disse então ao homem restabelecido: "Vai, mostra-te ao sacerdote e oferece a dádiva designada por Moisés." — Mt 8:2-4; Mr 1:40-44; veja LEPRA.

Originalmente, sob os regulamentos prescritos da Lei, antes de a vítima curada da lepra poder retornar à vida normal, era necessário realizar uma elaborada cerimônia de duas partes, a primeira envolvendo o uso de água, lenha de cedro, fibras carmíneas, hissopo e duas aves. Estas coisas eram providas pelo leproso restabelecido quando se apresentava ao sacerdote fora do acampamento de Israel. Uma das aves era então abatida por cima de água corrente, e seu sangue era aparado num vaso de barro. A lenha de cedro, as fibras carmíneas, o hissopo e a ave viva eram mergulhados no sangue; o leproso curado era espargido com sangue sete vezes pelo sacerdote, e a ave viva era solta. O homem, ao ser declarado limpo, rapava-se, banhava-se e lavava suas vestes, e entrava no acampamento, mas tinha de viver sete dias fora da sua tenda. No sétimo dia, ele rapava novamente todo o seu cabelo, inclusive as sobrancelhas. No dia seguinte, levava dois carneirinhos e uma cordeira, de menos de um ano, junto com um pouco de farinha e de azeite, como oferta pela culpa, oferta pelo pecado, oferta queimada e oferta de cereais. A oferta pela culpa consistia em um carneirinho, e o azeite era primeiro apresentado como oferta movida perante Jeová, pelo sacerdote, o qual abatia então o carneirinho; ele punha um pouco do sangue dele no lóbulo da orelha direita, no polegar direito e no dedo grande do pé direito daquele que era purificado. De modo similar, um pouco do azeite era deitado sobre o sangue nos três lugares já mencionados; um pouco do azeite era também espargido sete vezes perante Jeová, e o restante era derramado sobre a cabeça daquele que estava sendo purificado. O sacerdote oferecia então o sacrifício pelo pecado, o queimado e o de cereais, fazendo expiação e declarando limpo o leproso curado. Se o candidato era muito pobre, por causa das circunstâncias, ele podia trazer duas rolas ou dois pombos novos em lugar da cordeira e de um dos carneirinhos usado como oferta pelo pecado e as ofertas queimadas. — Le 14:1-32.

Fluxos. Havia leis que governavam tanto os fluxos naturais como os doentios do corpo de ambos os sexos, quer dizer, fluxos dos órgãos genitais. Se o homem havia tido uma emissão involuntária de sêmen durante a noite, ele tinha de se banhar e lavar as suas vestes, e tinha de permanecer impuro até à noitinha seguinte. A mulher devia contar sete dias como período de impureza da sua menstruação regular.

Todavia, se a mulher havia tido um fluxo irregular, anormal ou prolongado, então tinha de contar também sete dias depois de este cessar. Assim também o varão devia contar sete dias depois do fluxo ter cessado. (Essa condição doentia do seu sistema urinário não deve ser confundida com a sua emissão normal de sêmen.) Tudo o que o homem, ou a mulher, tocasse ou em que se sentasse (camas, cadeiras, selas, vestes, e assim por diante) durante a sua condição impura também ficava impuro, e, por sua vez, quem tocasse em tais objetos ou na própria pessoa impura tinha de se banhar, lavar as vestes e permanecer impuro até a noitinha. Além de se banharem e de lavarem as suas vestes, tanto o homem como a mulher, no oitavo dia, deviam levar duas rolas ou dois pombos novos à tenda de reunião, e o sacerdote devia oferecê-los, um como oferta pelo pecado e o outro como sacrifício queimado, para fazer expiação a favor da pessoa purificada. — Le 15:1-17, 19-33.

Quando um homem e sua esposa haviam tido relações sexuais com emissão de sêmen, eles tinham de se banhar e eram impuros até à noitinha. (Le 15:16-18) Se o fluxo menstrual da esposa inadvertidamente havia começado durante as relações sexuais, então o marido ficava impuro por sete dias, assim como a esposa. (Le 15:24) Se eles deliberadamente mostravam desprezo para com a lei de Deus e tinham relações sexuais enquanto ela menstruava, impunha-se a pena de morte ao homem e à mulher. (Le 20:18) Pelos motivos acima mencionados, quando se exigia pureza cerimonial, como, por exemplo, quando homens eram santificados para uma expedição militar, eles eram obrigados a abster-se de relações sexuais com a esposa. — 1Sa 21:4, 5; 2Sa 11:8-11.

O parto também significava um período de impureza para a mãe. Se o bebê era menino, ela ficava impura por sete dias, assim como durante o período de menstruação. No oitavo dia, o menino era circuncidado, mas a mãe, durante outros 33 dias, era impura no que se referia a tocar em alguma coisa santa ou a entrar no santuário, embora não tornasse impuro tudo o que ela tocasse. Se o bebê era menina, este período de 40 dias era duplicado: 14 dias mais 66 dias. Assim, desde o nascimento, a Lei distinguia entre macho e fêmea, designando a esta uma posição subordinada. Em ambos os casos, no fim do período de purificação, ela devia trazer um carneirinho de menos de um ano de idade para uma oferta queimada, e um pombo novo ou uma rola para uma oferta pelo pecado. Se os pais eram pobres demais para trazer um carneirinho, como no caso de Maria e José, então duas rolas ou dois pombos serviam para os sacrifícios de purificação. — Le 12:1-8; Lu 2:22-24.

Por que dizia a Lei mosaica que as relações sexuais e o parto tornavam a pessoa "impura"?

Surge a pergunta: Por que coisas normais e corretas, tais como a menstruação, as relações sexuais entre os casados e o parto eram encarados na Lei como tornando a pessoa "impura"? Em primeiro lugar, elevava as relações mais íntimas do casamento ao nível de santidade, ensinando a ambos os cônjuges o autodomínio, um elevado respeito pelos órgãos reprodutivos, e respeito pela santidade da vida e do sangue. Os benefícios higiênicos derivados da escrupulosa observância destes regulamentos também já foram comentados. Mas, o assunto ainda tem outro aspecto.

No princípio, Deus criou os impulsos sexuais e a faculdade de procriação no primeiro homem e na primeira mulher, e ordenou-lhes que coabitassem e tivessem filhos. Portanto, não era pecado para o casal perfeito ter relações sexuais. Todavia, quando Adão e Eva desobedeceram a Deus, não na questão de relações sexuais, mas por comerem do fruto proibido, ocorreram mudanças drásticas. De repente, sua consciência afligida pela culpa fez com que se apercebessem da sua nudez, e imediatamente cobriram seus órgãos genitais, ocultando-os da vista de Deus. (Gên 3:7, 10, 11) Daí em diante, o homem não podia cumprir em perfeição o mandado da procriação, mas, em vez disso, se transmitiria a mácula hereditária do pecado e a pena de morte de pais para filhos. Até mesmo os pais mais retos e tementes a Deus produzem filhos infetados pelo pecado. — Sal 51:5.

Os requisitos da Lei referentes às funções dos órgãos reprodutivos ensinavam aos homens e às mulheres autodisciplina, refrearem as paixões e respeitarem os meios de reprodução providos por Deus. Os regulamentos da Lei forçosamente lembravam às criaturas sua condição pecaminosa; não se tratava de meras medidas sanitárias para assegurar a limpeza, ou de prevenções profiláticas contra a disseminação de doenças. Como lembrete da pecaminosidade herdada do homem, era apropriado que tanto o homem como a mulher com fluxos genitais devidos ao funcionamento normal do seu corpo observassem um período de impureza. Se sofressem anormais fluxos prolongados por causa de condições deficientes, exigia-se um período mais extenso de impureza; e, no fim, como também quando a mãe dava à luz, além do banho, era necessário apresentar uma oferta pelo pecado, a fim de que o sacerdote de Deus pudesse fazer expiação a favor da pessoa. Maria, a mãe de Jesus, confessou assim sua pecaminosidade hereditária, reconhecendo que ela não era sem pecados, imaculada, por oferecer um sacrifício expiatório de pecados depois de ter dado à luz seu primogênito. — Lu 2:22-24.

Cadáveres. Sob a Lei mosaica referente a cadáveres havia graus diferentes de impureza: tocar num animal morto tornava a pessoa impura apenas por um dia; tocar num homem morto resultava em impureza durante uma semana. No primeiro caso, exigia-se da pessoa apenas lavar as vestes, ou caso inadvertidamente tivesse comido um animal que morrera por si só ou que fora dilacerado por um animal selvagem, então tinha de banhar-se, além de lavar as vestes. (Le 5:2; 11:8, 24, 27, 31, 39, 40; 17:15) A mesma injunção era imposta aos sacerdotes, com a ordem adicional de que, se comessem algo santo enquanto num estado impuro, eles deviam ser mortos. — Le 22:3-8.

Para quem tocasse num cadáver humano, era necessário realizar uma cerimônia de purificação mais complexa. Para este fim, preparavam-se fora do acampamento cinzas por abater uma vaca vermelha. O sacerdote espargia um pouco do sangue da vaca sete vezes em direção à tenda de reunião. A vaca inteira (couro, carne, sangue e excrementos) era então queimada, e a lenha de cedro, o hissopo e as fibras carmíneas eram lançados no fogo. As cinzas eram guardadas e usadas "para a água da purificação", a qual, no terceiro e no sétimo dia, era espargida para a purificação daquele que tocou no cadáver humano. Ao fim dos sete dias, ele devia lavar suas vestes e banhar-se, e então era declarado limpo. — Núm 19:1-13.

Sob este estatuto, todos os que estavam na casa ou na tenda em que ocorreu a morte, bem como a própria moradia e todos os vasos abertos, tornavam-se impuros. Tocar mesmo só num osso dum morto no campo de batalha ou tocar numa sepultura, ou sepulcro, igualmente tornava a pessoa impura. Este é o motivo pelo qual, nos dias de Jesus, se costumava caiar as sepulturas um mês antes da Páscoa, para proteger as pessoas contra inadvertidamente tropeçarem numa sepultura e assim se tornarem desqualificadas para participar na festividade. (Núm 19:14-19; Mt 23:27; Lu 11:44) A ocorrência de uma morte humana na presença ou ao lado de alguém sob o voto de nazireu cancelava o tempo que ele já passara sob o voto, e exigia a oferta dum sacrifício. — Núm 6:8-12; veja NAZIREU; SANSÃO.

Sob o pacto da Lei, lugares e coisas contaminadas tinham de ser purificadas. Quando um assaltante desconhecido havia cometido um assassinato, primeiro se media a distância para saber qual era a cidade mais próxima ao crime. Os anciãos daquela cidade, então, tinham de tomar uma novilha, com que ainda não se trabalhara (em substituição pelo assassino), e quebrar-lhe a nuca num vale de torrente em que corria água, e por cima dela deviam limpar-se simbolicamente de qualquer responsabilidade por lavarem as mãos em inocência, suplicando para que não lhes fosse atribuída a culpa. — De 21:1-9.

Vestes e vasos que haviam entrado em contato com cadáveres ou que de outro modo haviam ficado poluídos tinham de ser purificados segundo fórmulas prescritas. (Le 11:32-35; 15:11, 12) O desenvolvimento de lepra numa veste ou nas paredes duma casa era um caso muito mais sério, porque, se não podia ser contida e parecia espalhar-se, era necessário destruir a veste ou derrubar a casa totalmente. — Le 13:47-59; 14:33-53.

Despojos de guerra tinham de ser purificados antes de poderem ser trazidos. Artigos combustíveis eram lavados com água, mas objetos de metal tinham de passar pelo fogo. — Núm 31:21-24.

Limpeza (Pureza) Cristã. Os cristãos não estão sob a Lei e seus requisitos de purificação, embora essa Lei e seus costumes ainda vigorassem nos dias em que Jesus estava na Terra. (Jo 11:55) A Lei tinha "uma sombra das boas coisas vindouras"; "a realidade pertence ao Cristo". (He 10:1; Col 2:17) Por isso, Paulo escreveu a respeito destes assuntos de purificação: "Sim, quase todas as coisas são purificadas com sangue, segundo a Lei [Moisés espargiu com sangue o livro, o povo, a tenda e os vasos], e a menos que se derrame sangue, não há perdão. Por isso era necessário que as representações típicas das coisas nos céus fossem purificadas por estes meios." "Pois, se o sangue de bodes e de touros, e as cinzas duma novilha, aspergidos sobre os aviltados, santifica até à purificação da carne, quanto mais o sangue do Cristo, o qual, por intermédio dum espírito eterno, se ofereceu a Deus sem mácula, purificará as nossas consciências de obras mortas, para que prestemos serviço sagrado ao Deus vivente?" — He 9:19-23, 13, 14.

De modo que é o sangue do Senhor Jesus Cristo que purifica os cristãos de todos os pecados e de toda a injustiça. (1Jo 1:7, 9) Cristo "amou a congregação e se entregou por ela, para que a santificasse, purificando-a com o banho de água por meio da palavra", para que fosse sem mancha, santa e imaculada, "um povo peculiarmente seu, zeloso de obras excelentes". (Ef 5:25-27; Tit 2:14) Portanto, nenhum membro desta congregação cristã deve "esquecer a sua purificação de seus pecados de há muito", mas deve continuar a manifestar os frutos do espírito de Deus (2Pe 1:5-9), lembrando-se de que "todo o que dá fruto, ele [Deus] limpa, para que dê mais fruto". — Jo 15:2, 3.

Portanto, os cristãos têm de manter uma elevada norma de limpeza, ou pureza, física, moral e espiritual, guardando-se "de toda imundície da carne e do espírito". (2Co 7:1) Em vista do que Jesus disse, que 'não é o que entra no homem, mas o que sai dele que avilta', esses beneficiados pelo sangue purificador de Cristo dão mais ênfase à pureza espiritual. Mantêm um "coração puro" e uma "consciência limpa" perante Deus. (Mr 7:15; 1Ti 1:5; 3:9; 2Ti 1:3) Para os que têm tal consciência limpa, "todas as coisas são puras", em contraste com os que não têm fé, que têm consciência aviltada, para os quais "nada é puro". (Tit 1:15) Aqueles que querem permanecer limpos e puros de coração acatam o conselho de Isaías 52:11, que diz: "Não toqueis em nada impuro; . . . mantende-vos puros, vós os que carregais os utensílios de Jeová." (Sal 24:4; Mt 5:8) Por fazerem isso, suas "mãos", em sentido figurado, são tornadas limpas (Tg 4:8), e Deus lida com eles como pessoas limpas. — 2Sa 22:27; Salmo 18:26; veja também Da 11:35; 12:10.

Em certa ocasião, o apóstolo Paulo, embora não mais estivesse debaixo da Lei, observou os requisitos da Lei por purificar-se cerimonialmente no templo. Era isso incoerência da sua parte? Paulo não lutava contra a Lei e seus procedimentos; ele apenas mostrava que a obediência a ela não era divinamente exigida dos cristãos. Quando os procedimentos dela não violavam as novas verdades cristãs, não havia nenhuma objeção real a fazer o que Deus prescrevera sob a Lei. Paulo agiu assim para que não impedisse desnecessariamente que os judeus escutassem as boas novas a respeito de Jesus Cristo. (At 21:24, 26; 1Co 9:20) Em sentido similar, o apóstolo argumentou também que o alimento, em si mesmo, talvez fosse limpo, mas que, se ele, por comê-lo, fizesse seu irmão tropeçar, então se refrearia de comer. (Ro 14:14, 15, 20, 21; 1Co 8:13) Em tudo isso, Paulo mostrava grande preocupação com a salvação de outros e fazia tudo o que podia para realizá-la. Por isso podia dizer: "Estou limpo do sangue de todos os homens." — At 20:26; 18:6.

LÍNGUA. Órgão do corpo que desempenha um papel destacado no paladar e na fala. O que costumeiramente se chama de paladar resulta das reações das papilas gustativas em adição ao aroma percebido pelo olfato. O que é mais importante, a língua é também essencial para a fala, porque a articulação das palavras requer manobras ativas da sua parte, o que ela faz com destreza e notável velocidade. — Veja BOCA (O Palato).

No uso bíblico, "língua" frequentemente refere-se à "língua" falada, o idioma. (Gên 10:5; De 28:49; Is 28:11; At 2:4; 19:6; 1Co 12:10; veja IDIOMA, LÍNGUA.) Ou, às vezes, refere-se a um povo de determinada língua. — Is 66:18; Re 5:9; 7:9; 13:7.

Tiago, meio-irmão de Jesus, descreve vividamente o poder da língua e a necessidade de o cristão ter muito cuidado em usá-la corretamente. Ele salienta que deixar de refrear a língua pode ser um fator que torna a adoração da pessoa fútil. (Tg 1:26) Compara a língua a um fogo capaz de destruir um bosque. A língua não refreada pode ser influenciada por forças destrutivas e pode causar injustiças em tal quantidade ou extensão, que pode contaminar toda a vida da pessoa. Pode ser espiritualmente venenosa, para a própria pessoa e para outros. Não pode ser domada pelos esforços do próprio homem; nem pode o humano imperfeito ficar completamente isento de "tropeçar em palavra". (Tg 3:2-8) Mas, não é impossível para o cristão domar este órgão indócil da imperfeita carne humana, pois, pela benignidade imerecida de Jeová, por meio de Cristo, ele pode frear a língua e transformar sua personalidade. — Tg 3:10-18; 1Pe 3:10; Col 3:9, 10; compare isso com Sal 34:13; 39:1.

Em harmonia com a descrição da língua por Tiago, o escritor de Provérbios diz que a calma da língua pode ser "árvore de vida". Por outro lado, uma deturpação nela pode significar "quebrantamento do espírito"; a morte e a vida estão no poder dela. (Pr 15:4; 18:21) "A própria língua suave pode quebrar um osso", no sentido de que alguém duro como osso pode ser abrandado por uma resposta branda e afrouxar na sua dureza e oposição. (Pr 25:15) Deveras, a língua pode curar em sentido espiritual quando fala as palavras de Deus. (Pr 12:18) "De Jeová é a resposta da língua", porque somente ele pode fornecer palavras espiritualmente corretas que resultam em cura. (Pr 16:1) As Escrituras predisseram a cura espiritual resultante do ministério de Jesus, ao passo que ele falava as palavras de Deus, 'pensando os quebrantados de coração'. — Is 61:1.

Jeová destaca como ele encara a maldade da língua falsa, alistando-a como uma das sete coisas que ele odeia, colocando-a ao lado das "mãos que derramam sangue inocente". (Pr 6:16-19) Davi descreve os iníquos como tentando destruir o servo de Deus com uma 'língua afiada como uma espada', mas ele salienta que, na realidade, Deus cuidará de que eles mesmos sejam feridos, pois "a sua língua é contra eles mesmos". (Sal 64:3, 7, 8) Jeová promete ao seu povo: "Condenarás toda e qualquer língua que se levantar contra ti em julgamento." (Is 54:17) Isto é consolador para os servos de Deus, que se apegam à Lei dele, embora os considerados sábios pelo mundo talvez falem grandes coisas e digam: "Prevaleceremos com a nossa língua." (Sal 12:3-5) Talvez 'estendam a língua para fora' e golpeiem com a língua (Is 57:4; Je 18:18), mas o seu fracasso é certo. — Pr 10:31.

Jeová promete fazer com que línguas antes gagas 'se apressem a falar coisas claras', e fazer línguas mudas 'gritar de júbilo'. (Is 32:4; 35:6) Quando Jesus estava na terra, ele curou pessoas literalmente mudas, ou os que tinham algum impedimento de fala. (Mr 7:33-37) Virá o tempo em que toda língua falará coisas certas, porque Jeová declara que toda língua jurará a ele. O apóstolo Paulo revela que isto será feito por meio de Jesus Cristo, ao dizer que toda língua 'reconhecerá abertamente que Jesus Cristo é Senhor, para a glória de Deus, o Pai'. — Fil 2:11; Is 45:23; Ro 14:11.

Jeová descreve a si mesmo simbolicamente como tendo uma língua que ele usará na sua ira "como um fogo devorador". (Is 30:27) Em Pentecostes, quando Jesus Cristo derramou espírito santo sobre uns 120 discípulos reunidos numa sala em Jerusalém, este espírito foi audivelmente manifestado por eles falarem em línguas diferentes, e, visivelmente, por uma língua como que de fogo pairar sobre cada um deles. — At 2:3, 4.

LINGUAGEM ULTRAJANTE. A palavra original grega, bla·sfe·mía, e o verbo bla·sfe·mé·o indicam, basicamente, linguagem difamatória, caluniosa e ultrajante. Conforme mencionado sob o verbete BLASFÊMIA, a palavra grega bla·sfe·mi·a tem um sentido mais amplo do que a atual palavra "blasfêmia" em algumas línguas, como, por exemplo, em inglês. Em inglês, apenas quando tal linguagem é dirigida contra Deus, não contra suas criaturas, é corretamente chamada de "blasphemy" ("blasfêmia"). (Mt 12:31) A respeito disso, diz The Popular and Critical Bible Encyclopædia and Scriptural Dictionary (A Enciclopédia Bíblica Popular e Crítica e Dicionário das Escrituras): "Nossos tradutores em inglês [isto é, primariamente os da KJ] não aderiram ao uso correto do termo. Empregaram-no com a mesma latitude do grego; mas é geralmente fácil de perceber, à base da conexão e do assunto da passagem, se se quer dizer blasfêmia, corretamente chamada assim, ou apenas difamação." — Editado por S. Fallows, 1912, Vol. I, p. 291.

Assim, ao passo que a versão Almeida (Al; ALA; também BJ, em diversos dos textos indicados) usa "blasfemar" e 'blasfemado' em Atos 18:6; 1 Timóteo 6:1 e Tito 2:5, outras traduções dizem "caluniar", "linguagem ultrajante [ou: "obscena"]", "injuriar", "difamar", "xingar", "falar de modo ultrajante", e expressões similares, nestes e em outros textos. (Veja ALA, AT, CBC, BJ, BLH, NM, RS.) Todavia, a versão Almeida, nas diversas edições, reconhece tal distinção em outros textos das Escrituras Gregas.

Conforme mostrado pelos textos que seguem e pelos versículos circundantes, quando Jesus estava pregado na estaca, os que passavam por ali dirigiam a Cristo linguagem ultrajante, dizendo: "Ora! Tu, pretenso derrubador do templo e construtor dele no tempo de três dias, salva-te por descer da estaca de tortura." Palavras similares também lhe foram dirigidas por um dos malfeitores ao lado dele. (Mr 15:29, 30; Mt 27:39, 40; Lu 23:39) Paulo e seus concristãos eram alvos de tal linguagem por parte dos que interpretavam falsamente o objetivo, a mensagem e a consciência cristã deles (At 18:6; Ro 3:8; 14:16; 1Co 10:30; 1Pe 4:4), todavia, eles mesmos não deviam 'ultrajar a ninguém', e, pela sua conduta, realmente não davam motivo para que se falasse de modo ultrajante da sua obra ou da sua mensagem. (Ef 4:31; Col 3:8; 1Ti 6:1; Tit 2:5; 3:2; compare isso com 2Pe 2:2.) Nem mesmo os anjos "levantam . . . nenhuma acusação em termos ultrajantes, não o fazendo de respeito por Jeová". (2Pe 2:11) Mas, pode-se esperar tal tipo de conversa daqueles que se entregam a conduta desenfreada, dos orgulhosos e dos que têm a mania de questionar e debater, e dos que desprezam ou desrespeitam os designados por Deus. — 1Ti 6:4; 2Pe 2:10-12; Ju 8-10.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas usa-se a palavra gadháf de modo correspondente. Pelo visto, por ela se referir originalmente a causar violento dano físico, é usada em sentido figurado para significar "falar de modo ultrajante", ou "ultrajar", isto é, prejudicar com palavras vituperadoras. (Núm 15:30; 2Rs 19:6; Ez 20:27) A palavra hebraica naqáv, que basicamente significa "abrir buraco; furar" (2Rs 12:9; 18:21), tem o sentido de blasfemar, no relato que fala de o filho duma mulher israelita "maldizer" o nome de Jeová. (Le 24:11, 16) Nestes casos, indica linguagem dura ou rude, dirigida quer contra o próprio Jeová Deus, quer contra o Seu povo. O estudo do contexto esclarece a natureza de tal "linguagem ultrajante". — Veja INJÚRIA; INVOCAÇÃO DO MAL; MALDIZER.

LINHO [hebr.: pé·sheth, pish·táh; gr.: lí·non].

1. Planta que se cultiva desde tempos antigos, cujas fibras eram então, como agora, comumente transformadas em tecido de linho. O linho (Linum usitatissimum) pode atingir a altura de 30 cm a 1,2 m. O caule fino da planta, com suas folhas lineares verde-claras, é ramificado apenas na parte superior. Cada ramo ou raminho termina numa flor de cinco pétalas, de azul-escuro ou azul-claro (raras vezes brancas). — FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 544.

Quando o linho "estava em flor", estava pronto para ser colhido (Êx 9:31), o que se fazia por arrancá-lo ou extraí-lo com pá. O linho era então secado. É provável que as hastes de linho no terraço da casa de Raabe, em Jericó, tivessem sido colocadas ali para este fim. — Jos 2:6.

O método empregado pelos hebreus no processamento do linho provavelmente correspondia à descrição dada por Plínio, o Velho, do primeiro século EC, na sua Natural History (História Natural; XIX, III, 17, 18) e à antiga representação pictórica preservada em Beni Hasan, no Egito. Depois de se removerem as cápsulas de sementes, as hastes de linho eram totalmente submersas em água e seguras ali com pedras, para impedir que flutuassem. Ao passo que o linho absorvia água, as partes lenhosas apodreciam, livrando as fibras. Depois de se soltar a parte externa, ou casca, das hastes, estas eram tiradas da água e repetidas vezes viradas ao sol, até ficarem completamente secas. O linho era então batido com espadelas em lajes de pedra, e as fibras eram separadas e limpas por penteação. As fibras de qualidade inferior, perto da casca, eram usadas como mechas (veja Is 42:3; 43:17; Mt 12:20), ao passo que as fibras interiores, mais brancas e de qualidade mais fina, eram transformadas em fios, que eram polidos por serem batidos vez após vez contra uma pedra dura.

Terrenos baixos e solo aluvial, tão característicos do Egito, são considerados especialmente apropriados para o cultivo do linho. No mundo antigo, este país era famoso pelo seu linho excelente. Assim, a divinamente enviada praga da saraiva, que arruinou o linho e a cevada, foi um severo golpe para a economia do Egito. (Êx 9:23, 31) Mais tarde, a pronúncia contra o Egito, registrada por Isaías (19:9), incluía 'os que trabalhavam em linho cardado' entre os que ficariam envergonhados.

2. Fio ou tecido feito de linho. (Êx 25:4; Jz 15:14) Entre os hebreus, a maioria das vestes era de lã ou de linho. (Le 13:47; Pr 31:13, 22; Os 2:5, 9) A mistura das duas fibras era proibida pela Lei para vestes não sacerdotais dos israelitas. (De 22:11) Outros produtos feitos de linho incluíam cintos (Je 13:1) e velas de navio. (Ez 27:7) Os israelitas, embora evidentemente produzissem seu próprio linho, importavam algum linho do Egito. — Pr 7:16.

O linho variava em qualidade, conforme indicado pelas referências bíblicas a "linho fino" e "tecido fino". (Ez 16:10; 27:16) Os ricos, os reis e os homens em altos cargos governamentais usavam linho de qualidade superior. (Gên 41:42; 1Cr 15:27; Est 8:15; Lu 16:19) O corpo de Jesus foi envolto em puro linho fino por José, homem rico de Arimateia. — Mt 27:57-59.

Fios de linho fino fiados por mulheres israelitas foram usados na fabricação dos dez panos de tenda do tabernáculo, para a cortina que separava o Santo do Santíssimo, para o reposteiro da entrada do tabernáculo, e para os cortinados do pátio, bem como para o reposteiro do seu portão. (Êx 35:25; 36:8, 35, 37; 38:16, 18) Linho fino retorcido também foi usado para o cinto, o éfode e o peitoral do sumo sacerdote. (Êx 39:2, 3, 5, 8) Vestes compridas de linho fino foram também feitas para os outros sacerdotes. (Êx 39:27-29) No caso das cortinas e das vestes para uso no santuário, parece que o linho foi o tecido básico usado, e que a lã tingida e o ouro foram bordados nelas como enfeite. — Êx 35:35; 38:23.

Uso Figurado. Babilônia, a Grande, é retratada como vestida de linho fino, de púrpura e de escarlate, representando luxo. (Re 18:16) Mas, no caso da noiva de Cristo, o linho fino da vestimenta dela é claramente identificado como representando "os atos justos dos santos". Do mesmo modo, mostra-se os exércitos celestiais vestidos de linho fino, branco e puro, indicando que eles travam guerra em justiça. — Re 19:8, 11, 14; veja também Da 10:5; Re 15:6.

LINO. Cristão em Roma, mencionado pelo apóstolo Paulo como enviando saudações a Timóteo. (2Ti 4:21) Irineu (nascido por volta de 120/140 EC) e outros depois dele identificaram este Lino com um dos primeiros superintendentes de Roma, que levava o mesmo nome, mas esta identificação baseia-se meramente em tradição.

LIQUI [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "tomar; levar"]. Homem da tribo de Manassés, mencionado em terceiro lugar na lista dos filhos de Semida. — 1Cr 7:19.

LIRA. Veja ALAÚDE.

LÍRIO. O termo hebraico shu·shán e seu equivalente grego krí·non, ambos vertidos por "lírio", provavelmente abrangem uma grande variedade de flores, tais como as tulipas, as anêmonas, os jacintos, os íris e as gladíolas. Segundo Koehler e Baumgartner, a designação hebraica deriva duma palavra egípcia que significa "flor grande". (Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], Leiden 1958, p. 958) Heródoto, historiador grego (II, 92), chama o loto egípcio de "lírio", e muitos acreditam que nas menções bíblicas do "lírio" ou da "feitura de lírio", na ornamentação, a referência seja ao loto egípcio, ou lírio-aquático. (1Rs 7:19, 22, 26; 2Cr 4:5) Todavia, visto que o loto figurava proeminentemente no simbolismo da religião falsa do Egito, a identificação do lírio com o loto é questionável.

Os lírios, no registro bíblico, podiam ser encontrados nas baixadas, entre plantas espinhosas e nos pastos, onde pastavam rebanhos e gazelas. (Cân 2:1, 2, 16; 4:5) Talvez fossem também cultivados em jardins (Cân 6:2, 3), e faz-se alusão à sua fragrância agradável. (Cân 5:13) Oseias, com possível referência à beleza do lírio, ao predizer o restabelecimento de Israel, falou sobre um tempo em que o povo de Deus floresceria como o lírio. — Os 14:5.

Diminuindo a importância que geralmente se dá às coisas materiais, Jesus Cristo salientou que nem mesmo Salomão, em toda a sua glória, se vestia tão belamente como os lírios do campo. Tem sido sugerido que Jesus provavelmente pensava na anêmona. Todavia, ele talvez simplesmente quisesse referir-se a flores liliformes em geral, como pode ser inferido de os "lírios do campo" serem usados em paralelo com a "vegetação do campo". — Mt 6:28-30; Lu 12:27, 28.

Desconhece-se o significado das expressões "o Lírio", "Os Lírios", que ocorrem nos cabeçalhos dos Salmos 45, 60, 69 e 80.

LISÂNIAS [palavra composta que vem de raízes que significam "solto; soltar" e "tristeza; aflição"]. O governante distrital, ou tetrarca, de Abilene, quando João, o Batizador, iniciou seu ministério (29 EC), durante o 15.º ano do governo de Tibério César. (Lu 3:1) A tetrarquia romana de Abilene tinha por capital Abila, perto de Damasco da Síria. Uma inscrição do tempo de Tibério César, encontrada ali, comemora a dedicação dum templo por um homem liberto de "Lisânias, o tetrarca". (Corpus Inscriptionum Graecarum, Vol. 3, N.º 4521) Visto que Josefo se refere a um Lisânias executado por volta de 34 AEC por Marco Antônio, às instâncias de Cleópatra, alguns acusaram Lucas de inexatidão. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XV, 92 [iv, 1]) No entanto, Lucas não errou, porque o Lisânias que ele menciona não é o mesmo que o anterior Lisânias (filho de Ptolomeu), o qual, antes de ser executado, não governava em Abilene, mas em Cálcis, não sendo chamado de tetrarca.

LISONJA. Ato de agradar por meio de elogios artificiosos; adulação; louvor falso, insincero ou excessivo. Usualmente é feita para satisfazer o egocentrismo ou a vaidade do lisonjeado, e, por isso, é prejudicial para ele. A motivação é granjear favor ou benefícios materiais da outra pessoa, criar um sentimento de obrigação para com o lisonjeador ou trazer-lhe glória. Muitas vezes destina-se a levar a outra pessoa a uma armadilha. (Pr 29:5) O uso da lisonja não é evidência da sabedoria de cima; ela é deste mundo, caracterizando-se pelo egoísmo, pela parcialidade e pela hipocrisia. (Tg 3:17) A falta de sinceridade, mentir, adular ou glorificar homens, e aproveitar-se da vaidade de outros, tudo isso desagrada a Deus. — 2Co 1:12; Gál 1:10; Ef 4:25; Col 3:9; Re 21:8.

O contraste do proceder cristão com o da lisonja é encontrado nas palavras do apóstolo em 1 Tessalonicenses 2:3-6: "Pois a exortação que damos não surge de erro, nem de impureza, nem com fraude, mas, assim como por Deus fomos provados aptos para sermos incumbidos das boas novas, assim falamos, agradando, não a homens, mas a Deus, que prova os nossos corações. De fato, nunca nos apresentamos quer com palavras lisonjeiras, (conforme sabeis,) quer com fingimento para cobiça; Deus é testemunha! Nem estivemos buscando glória dos homens, não, nem de vós, nem de outros, embora, como apóstolos de Cristo, pudéssemos ser um fardo dispendioso."

Embora o uso da lisonja possa parecer o proceder que traz vantagens, a Bíblia salienta que "quem repreende a um homem achará depois mais favor do que aquele que lisonjeia com a sua língua". (Pr 28:23) Usar alguém de lisonja para obter vantagem sobre outra pessoa é contrário ao amor. O odiador talvez recorra à lisonja, mas, no fim, sua trapaça recairá sobre ele como pedra. — Pr 26:24-28.

A lisonja recorre à conversa macia para enganar a vítima. As expressões "língua (lábio ou palavras) macia" (Sal 5:9; 12:2, 3; Da 11:32), "maciez" (Pr 7:21), "insídia" (Da 11:34 n), e 'duplicidade' (Ez 12:24 n), são traduções do radical hebraico hha·láq, ou de palavras aparentadas. Em cada um dos casos bíblicos citados, a motivação de quem tem conversa macia é má.

Um exemplo do resultado desastroso de se aceitar lisonja e o louvor de homens é Herodes Agripa I, que foi lisonjeado pela multidão por falar com "a voz de um deus". Por ter aceitado esta lisonja e não ter dado glória a Deus, foi golpeado pelo anjo de Deus e morreu. (At 12:21-23) Por outro lado, Barnabé e Paulo impediram prontamente a multidão de deificá-los. (At 14:11-15) Também, quando um governante judeu tentou dar a Jesus Cristo o título lisonjeiro de "Bom Instrutor", Jesus imediatamente o corrigiu, dizendo: "Por que me chamas de bom? Ninguém é bom, a não ser um só, Deus." — Lu 18:18, 19; compare isso com Jó 32:21, 22.

LISTRA. Cidade da Licaônia, região da parte centro-sul da Ásia Menor. Listra tem sido identificada com uma elevação ao N de Hatunsaray, situada numa área fértil e bem regada a uns 32 km ao SSO de Konya (Icônio).

Foi a Listra, na província romana da Galácia, que o apóstolo Paulo e Barnabé foram depois de serem obrigados a sair de Icônio, por causa duma tentativa de apedrejá-los. A cidade era então uma colônia romana, tendo sido anteriormente constituída em tal por Augusto. Os naturais da cidade, porém, continuaram a falar a língua licaônica. Depois de Paulo ter curado um homem paralítico de nascença, a multidão chegou à conclusão de que ele e Barnabé eram deuses encarnados, Hermes e Zeus. Mal conseguiram frear o povo de lhes oferecerem sacrifícios. Mais tarde, porém, judeus de Icônio e de Antioquia da Pisídia incitaram tanto os habitantes de Listra contra Paulo, que estes o apedrejaram e arrastaram seu corpo para fora da cidade, imaginando que estivesse morto. Depois, quando cercado por concristãos, Paulo se levantou, entrou em Listra, e, então, acompanhado por Barnabé, partiu no dia seguinte para Derbe. — At 14:1, 5-20.

Depois da sua atividade em Derbe, Paulo e Barnabé retornaram a Listra, Icônio e Antioquia. For-taleceram e encorajaram os discípulos associados com as recém-estabelecidas congregações cristãs naquelas cidades, e designaram anciãos. — At 14:21-23.

Posteriormente, depois de a questão da circuncisão ter sido resolvida pelos apóstolos e anciãos da congregação de Jerusalém (c. 49 EC), Paulo visitou de novo Derbe e Listra. A referência a isso, em Atos 16:1, poderia ser entendida como significando que o jovem Timóteo morava ou em Listra, ou na vizinha Derbe. Mas a evidência parece favorecer Listra. Pois, embora não se mencione Derbe de novo com relação a Timóteo, Atos 16:2 declara especificamente a respeito de Timóteo que "em Listra e Icônio davam dele bom relato". (Veja também 2Ti 3:10, 11.) Timóteo fizera um progresso tão bom, que Paulo o escolheu como companheiro de viagem. — At 16:3.

Na visita do apóstolo Paulo a diversos lugares no "país da Galácia", na sua terceira viagem missionária, ele talvez parasse também em Listra. — At 18:23.

LITEIRA. Leito portátil, ou cadeirinha, usualmente coberto com um baldaquino, com cortinas nos lados, destinada para que alguém de importância, quer sentado, quer reclinado, possa ser carregado por homens ou animais de carga; palanquim tal como se usa no Oriente. A liteira régia do Rei Salomão era de cedro-do-líbano, tendo colunas de prata e suportes de ouro, e com o assento, ou almofada, de cara e linda lã tingida de roxo. O interior era ricamente ornamentado, talvez com ébano. — Cân 3:7-10 n.

Um esquife, ou leito fúnebre portátil, para transportar defuntos, era conhecido como so·rós. — Lu 7:14.

LITRO. Após a abertura do "terceiro selo", mencionado em Revelação (Apocalipse) 6:5, 6, diz-se que tanto um khoí·nix de trigo como três khoí·nikes de cevada eram vendidos por um denário. Em geral, os peritos acreditam que o khoí·nix era de um pouco mais de um litro. Visto que um denário era o salário de um dia na época de João (Mt 20:1-12), a venda de cereais por tal preço indica condições de fome.

LIVRE, MULHER. Mulher que não é escrava. Este termo é usado com referência à esposa de Abraão, Sara, e à "Jerusalém de cima". Desde que Jeová Deus libertou os israelitas da servidão egípcia e lhes deu a Lei, no monte Sinai, até o término do pacto da Lei, em 33 EC, Ele tratou a nação de Israel como esposa secundária. (Je 3:14; 31:31, 32) No entanto, a Lei não deu à nação de Israel a condição de mulher livre, porque revelava que os israelitas estavam sujeitos ao pecado, portanto, eram escravos. Assim, bem apropriadamente, Paulo comparou a Jerusalém escravizada dos seus dias à serva Agar, concubina de Abraão, e os "filhos", ou cidadãos, de Jerusalém, a Ismael, filho de Agar. Em contraste, a esposa original de Deus, a Jerusalém de cima, igual a Sara, sempre foi uma mulher livre, e também seus filhos são livres. Para alguém se tornar filho livre da Jerusalém de cima, com "a liberdade dela", é necessário ser liberto da servidão ao pecado pelo Filho de Deus. — Gál 4:22–5:1 e 5:1 n; Jo 8:34-36.

LIVRO. A palavra hebraica sé·fer (livro; carta; escrito) é aparentada com o verbo sa·fár (contar) e o substantivo so·fér (escriba; copista). (Gên 5:1; 2Sa 11:15; Is 29:12; 22:10; Jz 5:14; Ne 13:13) Quando usada com respeito a escritos oficiais, sé·fer é vertida diversamente por "documento escrito", "certificado" e "escritura [de compra]". (Est 9:25; Je 3:8; 32:11) Bí·blos é o termo grego para "livro"; sua forma diminutiva, bi·blí·on (literalmente: livrinho) é vertida "livro", "certificado" e "rolo". (Mr 12:26; He 9:19, Int; Mt 19:7; Lu 4:17) A palavra "Bíblia" deriva destas palavras gregas. — Veja BÍBLIA.

O primitivo "livro" talvez fosse uma tabuinha ou uma coleção de tabuinhas de argila, pedra, cera, madeira coberta de cera, metal, marfim ou talvez até mesmo um grupo de cacos de cerâmica (óstracos). Rolos manuscritos eram feitos de folhas presas uma na outra, de papiro, de pergaminho (pele de animais, tais como de ovelhas e cabritos), ou de velino, material de melhor qualidade, feito da pele de bezerros bem novos, e, mais tarde ainda, de linho e de papel de linho. Por fim, o livro tornou-se uma coleção de consecutivas folhas manuscritas ou impressas, dobradas, fiadas, costuradas, coladas, pespontadas ou de outro modo presas umas nas outras para formar um volume encadernado.

Os rolos costumavam ter a escrita apenas num dos lados (no caso do couro, o lado originalmente peludo). O material escrito às vezes era enrolado num pau. O leitor começava a ler numa extremidade, segurando o rolo na esquerda, e enrolando-o no pau com a direita (se a leitura era em hebraico; o inverso, se ele lia grego). Se o registro era comprido, o rolo talvez fosse enrolado em dois paus, deixando visível a parte central do texto quando era apanhado para ser lido. Daí a palavra "volume", derivada da palavra latina volumen, que significa "rolo".

Um tamanho comum das folhas usadas para fazer rolos era de 23 a 28 cm de comprimento por 15 a 23 cm de largura. Diversas destas folhas eram coladas uma na outra, lado a lado. No entanto, as folhas do Rolo do Mar Morto de Isaías, do segundo século AEC, foram costuradas com fio de linho. O rolo foi feito de 17 tiras de pergaminho, com a média de 26,2 cm de altura, e variando em largura de cerca de 25,2 cm a 62,8 cm, no total de 7,3 m de comprimento no seu atual estado de preservação. O comprimento usual dum rolo, no tempo de Plínio (provavelmente os vendidos comercialmente), era de 20 folhas. Um rolo de papiro egípcio, que narra o reinado de Ramsés III, chamado de Papiro Harris, tem 40,5 m de comprimento. O Evangelho de Marcos teria exigido um rolo de 5,8 m de comprimento; Lucas, cerca de 9,5 m.

As beiradas do rolo eram aparadas, alisadas com pedra-pomes, e coloridas em geral de preto. Mergulhar o rolo em óleo de cedro protegia-o contra insetos. A escrita usualmente era feita em um lado do rolo, a menos que houvesse mais informações do que coubesse no lado de dentro. Neste caso, parte da escrita talvez fosse feita no lado de fora, ou no verso. Os rolos com julgamentos, observados em visão pelos profetas Ezequiel e Zacarias, e pelo apóstolo João, tinham escrita em ambos os lados. Isto indica que os julgamentos eram grandes, extensos e pesados. — Ez 2:10; Za 5:1-3; Re 5:1.

Documentos importantes eram selados com uma massinha de argila ou cera, com a impressão do selo do escritor ou de quem o fez, a qual ficava presa ao documento por meio de cordinhas. O apóstolo João observou em visão um rolo com sete selos, entregue ao Cordeiro por aquele que estava sentado no trono. — Re 5:1-7.

Os primitivos rolos parecem ter tido até quatro colunas por folha, ao passo que os posteriores geralmente tinham uma coluna. O rolo de Jeremias consistia em "páginas-colunas". Após a leitura de três ou quatro colunas, o Rei Jeoiaquim cortava fora aquela parte do rolo e a lançava no fogo. (Je 36:23) As 17 tiras do Rolo do Mar Morto de Isaías contêm 54 colunas de texto, tendo em média umas 30 linhas por coluna.

O livro em forma de rolo serviu aos israelitas até o período da congregação cristã. Os registros nos antigos arquivos nacionais de Israel e de Judá, bem como os escritos inspirados dos profetas de Jeová, embora às vezes chamados de livros, existiam realmente nesta forma de rolo. — 1Rs 11:41; 14:19; Je 36:4, 6, 23.

Todas as sinagogas, que surgiram após o exílio babilônico, guardavam e utilizavam rolos das Escrituras Sagradas, e fazia-se a leitura pública delas todo sábado. (At 15:21) O próprio Jesus lia neste tipo de rolo, provavelmente um semelhante ao Rolo do Mar Morto de Isaías. — Lu 4:15-20.

Códice. Parece que os cristãos usavam principalmente o livro em forma de rolo pelo menos até cerca do fim do primeiro século EC. O apóstolo João escreveu Revelação (Apocalipse) por volta de 96 EC, e o próprio livro dá a si mesmo o nome de rolo, no capítulo 22, versículos 18 e 19. Mas o livro em forma de rolo era muito desajeitado para usar. Depois da transição do códice da forma de caderno para a de livro, tornou-se evidente a superioridade do códice sobre o rolo tradicional. Por exemplo, talvez fosse preciso um rolo de 31,7 m de comprimento para conter os quatro Evangelhos, ao passo que um só códice compacto podia conter todos eles. Além disso, o códice era mais econômico, visto que era possível escrever em ambos os lados das páginas. Outrossim, as capas davam uma excelente proteção ao conteúdo, e as diversas referências podiam ser localizadas prontamente sem a tediosa manipulação de rolos.

Seria muito trabalhoso ou quase impossível fazer uma referência rápida a certas declarações num rolo grande. Há indícios de que os cristãos adotaram prontamente o uso do códice, ou livro de folhas, porque estavam interessados em pregar as boas novas, e consultavam e indicavam muitas referências nas Escrituras no seu estudo bíblico e na pregação.

Sobre o fato de que os cristãos, se não foram eles mesmos os inventores do livro de folhas, tomaram a dianteira no seu uso, o Professor E. J. Goodspeed, no seu livro Christianity Goes to Press (O Cristianismo Utiliza a Imprensa; 1940, pp. 75, 76), diz: "Havia homens, na primitiva igreja, vivamente alertas quanto à parte desempenhada pela editoração no mundo greco-romano, os quais, no seu zelo de espalharem através daquele mundo a mensagem cristã, aproveitaram-se de todas as técnicas de editoração, não só as antigas e tradicionais, bem batidas, mas as mais recentes e mais progressivas, e fizeram uso delas ao máximo, na sua propaganda cristã. Ao fazerem isso, começaram a usar, em ampla escala, o códice, agora em uso universal. Seu evangelho não era um mistério esotérico e secreto, mas algo que devia ser proclamado de cima das casas, e ocupavam-se em levar a efeito o antigo lema dos profetas: 'Publicai as boas novas.' A escrita dos evangelhos já por si só foi, naturalmente, uma grande coisa, mas, sua compilação, junto com sua publicação como uma coleção, foi uma medida totalmente diferente, e uma de quase tanta importância quanto a escrita de alguns deles." — Veja também a Encyclopædia Britannica (Enciclopédia Britânica), 1971, Vol. 3, p. 922.

Baseado num discurso do Professor Sanders (publicado na University of Michigan Quarterly Review

	CLÁSSICOS		CRISTÃOS
Século	Rolo	Códice	Rolo	Códice
II			1?	4
III	291	20	9?	38
IV	26	49	6?	64

O Professor Goodspeed prossegue dizendo a respeito dos primitivos cristãos como publicadores de livros (p. 78): "Eles não somente acompanhavam os seus tempos em tais assuntos, mas estavam à frente deles, e os publicadores dos séculos subsequentes os seguiram." Declara adicionalmente (p. 99): "Foi a publicação da Bíblia que no segundo século estimulou o desenvolvimento do livro de folhas para fins literários, e foi a publicação da Bíblia que estimulou a invenção da imprensa."

O Professor Goodspeed especula (p. 81): "A curiosa observação em II Tim. 4:13: 'Traze . . . os livros, especialmente os pergaminhos', (as palavras gregas são biblia, membranas) suscita a pergunta se biblia não se refere aos rolos das escrituras judaicas, e as membranas aos mais recentes livros de folhas, de origem cristã — os evangelhos e Paulo. O argumento do Professor Sanders sugere fortemente que, ao norte do Mediterrâneo, é bem provável que os livros de folhas, no começo, eram feitos de pergaminho."

Palimpsestos. Por causa do custo ou da escassez de material de escrita, este era ocasionalmente reusado. Às vezes, apagavam-se parcialmente os manuscritos por raspar, esponjar ou usar outros produtos, com o fim de remover ao máximo possível a escrita original. No caso do papiro, este era esponjado quando a tinta estava ainda relativamente fresca; senão, riscava-se a escrita antiga, ou usava-se o verso do material como superfície para escrever. Em alguns palimpsestos, por causa da ação atmosférica e de outras condições, a escrita original talvez aparecesse suficientemente clara para ser decifrada. Entre estes encontram-se diversos manuscritos bíblicos, sendo o mais famoso deles o Códice Ephraemi, que contém, debaixo duma escrita que provavelmente é do século 12, uma parte das Escrituras Hebraicas e Gregas em escrita considerada do 5.º século EC.

Outros Livros Mencionados na Bíblia. Na Bíblia mencionam-se vários livros não inspirados. Alguns deles serviram de fonte de matéria para os escritores inspirados. Outros parecem ser extratos de registros estatais. Entre eles encontram-se os seguintes:

Livro das Guerras de Jeová. Citado por Moisés em Números 21:14, 15, este livro, sem dúvida, era um registro, ou história, fidedigno das guerras do povo de Deus. Talvez tenha começado com a guerra bem-sucedida de Abraão contra os quatro reis aliados que capturaram Ló e sua família. — Gên 14:1-16.

Livro de Jasar. Este livro é mencionado em Josué 10:12, 13, passagem que trata do apelo de Josué, para que o sol e a lua ficassem imóveis durante a sua luta contra os amorreus, e em 2 Samuel 1:18-27, onde apresenta um poema, chamado "O Arco", uma endecha a respeito de Saul e Jonatã. Acha-se, portanto, que o livro era uma coleção de poemas, cânticos e outros escritos. Estes, sem dúvida, eram de considerável interesse histórico e tinham ampla circulação entre os hebreus.

Outros escritos históricos. Diversos outros escritos históricos, não inspirados, são mencionados nos livros de Reis e de Crônicas, um deles sendo o "livro dos assuntos dos dias dos reis de Israel". (1Rs 14:19; 2Rs 15:31) O "livro dos assuntos dos dias dos reis de Judá" é seu equivalente para os reis do reino meridional, começando com Roboão, filho de Salomão. É mencionado 15 vezes. (1Rs 14:29; 2Rs 24:5) Outro registro do governo de Salomão é mencionado em 1 Reis 11:41 como o "livro dos assuntos de Salomão".

Ao compilar e escrever Crônicas, após o exílio, Esdras menciona pelo menos 14 vezes outras fontes, inclusive o "Livro dos Reis de Israel", a "narração dos assuntos dos dias do Rei Davi" e o "Livro dos Reis de Judá e de Israel". (1Cr 9:1; 27:24; 2Cr 16:11; 20:34; 24:27; 27:7; 33:18) Esdras também faz referência a livros de anteriores escritores inspirados. (1Cr 29:29; 2Cr 26:22; 32:32) Esdras menciona que outros profetas de Jeová fizeram registros escritos que não foram preservados nas inspiradas Escrituras Sagradas. (2Cr 9:29; 12:15; 13:22) Neemias menciona um "livro dos assuntos dos tempos". (Ne 12:23) Registros governamentais persas são mencionados na Bíblia. Estes continham relatórios de serviços prestados ao rei, tais como a exposição por Mordecai duma trama assassina. — Esd 4:15; Est 2:23; 6:1, 2; 10:2.

O sábio escritor de Eclesiastes adverte da infindável série de livros que são o produto de raciocínios mundanos e estão em conflito com a sabedoria piedosa, livros que não incutem o temor do verdadeiro Deus e a guarda dos mandamentos dele. (Ec 12:12, 13) Um exemplo deles foi encontrado em Éfeso, onde prevaleciam o espiritismo e o demonismo. Depois da pregação das boas novas a respeito do Cristo, os crentes trouxeram seus livros de magia e os queimaram em público, calculando-se o preço deles em 50.000 moedas de prata (se foram denários, US$ 37.200). — At 19:19.

Em Êxodo 17:14 encontra-se a ordem de Jeová, de escrever seu julgamento contra Amaleque "no livro", indicando que os escritos de Moisés, os primeiros conhecidos como inspirados, já estavam sendo feitos em 1513 AEC.

Algumas outras referências à Bíblia ou a partes dela são: "o livro do pacto", evidentemente contendo a legislação apresentada em Êxodo 20:22 a 23:33 (Êx 24:7); e o "rolo do livro", as Escrituras Hebraicas. — He 10:7.

Uso Figurado. Diversas vezes usa-se "livro" em sentido figurado, como nas expressões "teu livro [i.e., o de Deus]" (Êx 32:32), "livro de recordação" (Mal 3:16) e "livro da vida" (Fil 4:3; Re 3:5; 20:15). Parece que, a bem dizer, todos estes são basicamente iguais, isto é, todos são o "livro" de recordação de Deus, visando recompensar com a vida eterna (no céu ou na terra) aqueles cujos nomes estão escritos nele. O "livro" de Deus, pelo visto, registra os nomes condicionalmente, visto que as Escrituras indicam que o nome da pessoa pode ser 'apagado' dele. (Êx 32:32, 33; Re 3:5) Só quando alguém continua fiel é seu nome retido no livro. — Veja VIDA.

LÓ. Neto de Tera e filho de Harã, irmão de Abraão (Abrão); portanto, sobrinho de Abraão. — Gên 11:27.

Harã, pai de Ló, morreu em Ur dos Caldeus, e, portanto, Ló foi com Tera, Abrão e Sarai de Ur para a cidade de Harã, onde morreu seu avô, Tera. (Gên 11:28, 31, 32) Ló acompanhou então Abrão e Sarai a Canaã, e, mais tarde, foi com eles ao Egito e também retornou de lá. (Gên 12:4, 5; 13:1) Por causa do acúmulo de bens de Ló e de Abrão, quando retornaram a Canaã, a terra não podia sustentá-los juntos. Surgiram também altercações entre os seus pastores de gado. (Gên 13:5-7) Abrão, não querendo que isso continuasse, sugeriu que se separassem, oferecendo ao seu sobrinho a escolha de terra. Ló escolheu uma região bem regada, todo o distrito do Baixo Jordão. Ele mudou seu acampamento para o L e por fim armou tenda perto de Sodoma. (Gên 13:8-12) Mas, Ló não se tornou igual aos sodomitas. Mostrou ser homem "justo", que, "pelo que via e ouvia de dia a dia, enquanto morava entre eles, atormentava a sua alma justa em razão das ações deles contra a lei". — 2Pe 2:8.

Na ocasião em que quatro reis confederados, invasores, derrotaram cinco reis locais, inclusive o rei de Sodoma, os vitoriosos saquearam a cidade e levaram Ló cativo. Sabendo dos apuros de Ló, Abrão reuniu 318 escravos, derrotou os captores, recuperou todos os bens e libertou Ló. — Gên 14:1-16.

Visitado por Anjos. Mais tarde, quando Ló foi visitado por dois anjos, no tempo da iminente destruição de Sodoma, ele lhes ofereceu hospitalidade. Mas os homens da cidade cercaram a casa e exigiram que os visitantes lhes fossem entregues para fins imorais. Ló procurou proteger seus hóspedes por até mesmo oferecer suas duas filhas virgens à turba. Irada, a turba arremessou-se fortemente contra Ló, em vista do que os visitantes angélicos o puxaram para dentro e feriram os iníquos sodomitas com cegueira. — Gên 19:1-11.

Liberto de Sodoma. Os anjos informaram então a Ló que o clamor contra os habitantes de Sodoma tornara-se alto perante Jeová e que eles haviam sido enviados para destruir a cidade. Conforme mandado, Ló avisou seus prospectivos genros, os quais evidentemente pretendiam tomar por esposas as filhas dele, mas ainda não o haviam feito. (Veja Gên 19:8, 14.) Todavia, seus genros não acataram as palavras dele. (Gên 19:12-14) De madrugada, os dois anjos instaram em que partissem logo, apressando isso por pegarem nas mãos de Ló, da sua esposa e das suas duas filhas. Atendendo o pedido de Ló, os anjos permitiram-lhe fugir para a cidade vizinha de Zoar. Depois de Ló chegar ali, Jeová causou a destruição ardente de Sodoma e Gomorra. No entanto, a esposa de Ló (cujo nome não é dado nas Escrituras), desobedientemente, "começou a olhar em volta, por detrás dele", talvez ansiando as coisas deixadas atrás. Por fazer isso, "ela se tornou uma coluna de sal". — Gên 19:15-26.

Mais tarde, Ló partiu de Zoar e começou a morar numa caverna na região montanhosa. Os prospectivos genros de Ló evidentemente morreram em Sodoma, de modo que as duas filhas de Ló não tinham cônjuge. Fizeram com que seu pai, sem ele se dar conta disso, tivesse relações sexuais com elas enquanto estava sob a influência de vinho. Fizeram isso para preservar descendência de seu pai. Em resultado, cada filha teve um filho varão, dos quais descenderam os moabitas e os amonitas. — Gên 19:30-38; De 2:9, 19.

Aviso. A autenticidade do relato bíblico sobre Ló é comprovada por Jesus Cristo. Ele mostrou que, "nos dias do Filho do homem", ou durante a sua presença, haveria circunstâncias semelhantes às dos dias de Ló, quando as pessoas despreocupadamente comiam, bebiam, compravam, vendiam, plantavam e construíam até que choveu do céu fogo e enxofre, destruindo a todas elas. Cristo mostrou que, nesse tempo futuro, as pessoas não deviam retornar às coisas deixadas atrás, e ele deu um notável exemplo para mostrar as funestas consequências de se fazer isso, por dizer: "Lembrai-vos da mulher de Ló." — Lu 17:26-32.

LO-AMI [Não Meu Povo]. Nome do segundo filho de Gômer, esposa de Oseias. Jeová ordenou que o filho recebesse esse nome significativo para mostrar que Ele havia repudiado o Israel sem fé. (Os 1:8, 9) Sugeriu-se que este menino não era filho de Oseias, mas um nascido do adultério de Gômer (Os 1:2), porque, quando Jezreel nasceu, diz-se que Gômer "lhe [a Oseias] deu à luz um filho", ao passo que referente a Lo-Ami só se diz que ela "passou a ficar grávida e a dar à luz um filho". — Os 1:3, 8.

LOBO [hebr.: ze'év; gr.: lý·kos]. Animal carnívoro parecido a um cão, um grande cão pastor alemão, mas com pernas mais compridas, pés maiores, cabeça mais larga e mandíbulas mais fortes. Relata-se que, na Palestina e na Síria, os lobos costumam caçar sozinhos, ou em dois ou três, mas não em alcateias. Procuram sua presa sob o manto da escuridão, permanecendo escondidos durante o dia. (Hab 1:8; Sof 3:3) Os lobos são ferozes, vorazes, arrojados e insaciáveis, frequentemente matando mais ovelhas do que conseguem comer ou arrastar. O pastor da antiguidade, portanto, tinha de ser corajoso e engenhoso para proteger o rebanho contra os lobos. — Jo 10:12, 13.

A maioria das referências bíblicas ao lobo são ilustrativas. Jacó, na sua profecia no leito de morte, comparou seu filho Benjamim a um lobo, sem dúvida referindo-se às habilidades guerreiras desta tribo. (Gên 49:27; veja BENJAMIM N.º 2.) Inescrupulosos príncipes de Judá (Ez 22:27), falsos profetas (Mt 7:15), ferrenhos opositores do ministério cristão (Mt 10:16; Lu 10:3), bem como falsos instrutores, que internamente colocariam em perigo a congregação cristã (At 20:29, 30), são comparados a lobos. Em contraste com a bem conhecida rapacidade dos lobos (Je 5:6), o lobo e o cordeiro são retratados como estando em paz durante o governo do Messias, alimentando-se juntos; este quadro profético, além da sua aplicação às mudanças na vida das pessoas, sem dúvida indica que essa paz prevalecerá entre os animais. — Is 11:6; 65:25.

LÓDÃO [hebr.: tse·'elím (plural)]. O lódão espinhoso (Zizyphus lotus) é um ramoso arbusto, ou árvore pequena, que frequentemente atinge a altura de apenas 1,5 m. Tem folhas pequenas, ovais e coriáceas, e na base de cada folha há um par de espinhos. A única referência ao lódão acha-se em Jó 40:21, 22, que fala do beemote (o hipopótamo) como deitado à sombra desta árvore. Embora esta árvore seja encontrada em lugares secos na Palestina, A Dictionary of Life in Bible Times (Dicionário da Vida nos Tempos Bíblicos) fala dela como "vicejando no pantanal quente e úmido" no N da África. — De W. Corswant, Suffolk, 1960, p. 177.

LODE. Cidade com aldeias dependentes, aparentemente construída pelo benjamita Semede, 'filho' de Elpaal. (1Cr 8:1, 12) Após o retorno dos judeus do exílio babilônico, Lode era uma das suas localidades mais ocidentais. (Esd 2:33; Ne 7:37; 11:35) Pensa-se ser ela a Lida onde Pedro curou Eneias. (At 9:32-38) Situada num vale fértil à beira meridional da planície de Sarom, el-Ludd (Lod) encontra-se a uns 18 km ao SE de Jope. Sua localização antigamente colocava a cidade na interseção do que se acha ter sido a principal rota entre o Egito e Babilônia, e a principal estrada de Jope a Jerusalém. Na Era Comum, esta posição estratégica expôs a cidade a devastações pelos exércitos dos romanos, dos sarracenos, dos cruzados e dos mongóis.

LO-DEBAR. Domicílio de Maquir, contemporâneo do Rei Davi. (2Sa 9:4, 5; 17:27) Costuma-se achar que Lo-Debar seja Debir, em Gade. — Jos 13:24, 26; veja DEBIR N.º 4.

LOGUE. A menor medida para líquidos mencionada na Bíblia. A evidência talmúdica indica que o logue era a décima segunda parte de um him, ou 0,014 bato. À base de achados arqueológicos, o bato é calculado em 22 l. Se isso for correto, daria ao logue a capacidade de cerca de 0,31 l. Um logue de azeite fazia parte da oferta prescrita para o leproso que ficou limpo. — Le 14:2, 10, 12, 15, 21, 24.

LOIDE. Avó de Timóteo e pelo visto mãe da mãe dele, Eunice. Que ela não era avó paterna de Timóteo é indicado pela tradução siríaca que diz "a mãe da tua mãe". Loide é elogiada por Paulo, o qual indica que ela era uma mulher cristã que tinha 'fé sem hipocrisia'. (2Ti 1:5) A família parece ter morado em Listra. (At 16:1, 2) A comparação entre 2 Timóteo 1:5 e 2 Timóteo 3:15 sugere que tanto Loide como Eunice ensinaram a Timóteo as Escrituras.

LOMBOS. Região abdominal e área em volta dos quadris. A Bíblia usa as duas palavras hebraicas hhala·tsá·yim (lombos) e moth·ná·yim (quadris) para se referir a esta parte do corpo. (Is 5:27; 2Rs 4:29) A palavra grega o·sfýs também é aplicada no sentido comum para descrever que João, o Batizador, usava um cinto de couro em volta dos lombos. — Mt 3:4.

A parte do corpo designada pela palavra "lombos" contém os órgãos reprodutivos; de modo que se diz que a prole 'sai dos lombos'. (Gên 35:11; 1Rs 8:19; At 2:30) Paulo usa isso ao mostrar que o sacerdócio de Jesus, à maneira de Melquisedeque, é superior ao de Arão, visto que Levi, antepassado de Arão, ainda estava nos lombos de Abraão, e que neste sentido pagou dízimos a Melquisedeque. (He 7:5-10; Gên 14:18-20) Paulo argumentou de modo similar em Romanos 7:9, dizendo: "Eu [Paulo, o judeu, ainda nos lombos dos seus antepassados antes de se dar a Lei] estava uma vez vivo à parte da lei; mas, ao chegar o mandamento, o pecado passou a viver novamente, mas eu morri."

"Cingir os lombos" significava enfiar as extremidades da veste comprida debaixo da faixa, para facilitar a atividade física, e passou a ser usado como expressão para indicar preparação para vigorosa atividade mental ou espiritual, e, às vezes, transmitia a ideia de fortalecimento. — Lu 12:35; veja 1Pe 1:13: "Avigorai as vossas mentes [literalmente: "Cingi os lombos de vossa mente"] para atividade."

Em Efésios 6:14, diz-se aos cristãos que tenham seus "lombos cingidos com a verdade", isto é, fortalecidos pela verdade da Palavra de Deus como apoio essencial, assim como o firme cingimento dos lombos físicos os protege contra danos causados por esforço extremo.

Jeová predisse a dor e aflição de Jerusalém usando a expressão figurada de "todo varão vigoroso [estar] com as mãos nos lombos, igual à fêmea que dá à luz". — Je 30:6.

A palavra hebraica ké·sel (lombos) ocorre diversas vezes em Levítico 3:4-15, com referência aos sacrifícios de participação em comum. É também usada em Jó 15:27 e Salmo 38:7. Ela é traduzida por "ilhargas" e "lombos" na versão Almeida, edição atualizada.

LONGANIMIDADE. Significa suportar pacientemente o mal ou a provocação, junto com a recusa de perder a esperança de haver melhora no relacionamento perturbado. Portanto, a longanimidade tem um objetivo, visando especialmente o bem-estar daquele que causa a situação desagradável. No entanto, isto não significa fechar os olhos ao mal. Quando se alcança o objetivo da longanimidade, ou quando de nada adianta aguentar mais tal situação, a longanimidade cessa. Ela cessa quer quando resulta em bem para os que causam a provocação, quer com uma ação contra os malfeitores. De qualquer modo, aquele que usa de longanimidade não é espiritualmente prejudicado.

O significado literal da expressão hebraica traduzida "vagaroso em irar-se" ("longânime", em algumas traduções) é "comprimento das narinas [onde a ira se manifesta]". (Êx 34:6; Núm 14:18; veja IRA, I.) A palavra grega ma·kro·thy·mí·a (longanimidade) significa literalmente "longura de espírito". (Ro 2:4, Int) Tanto a expressão hebraica como a grega denotam paciência, indulgência, vagarosidade em irar-se.

As Escrituras revelam como Deus avalia a longanimidade, e salientam a tolice e os maus resultados de não se manter "longura de espírito". Quem é longânime talvez pareça fraco, mas, na realidade, ele usa de discernimento. "Quem é vagaroso em irar-se é abundante em discernimento, mas aquele que é impaciente exalta a tolice." (Pr 14:29) A longanimidade é melhor do que a força física, e realiza mais. "Melhor é o vagaroso em irar-se do que o homem poderoso, e aquele que controla seu espírito, do que aquele que captura uma cidade." — Pr 16:32.

O homem que não tem "longura de espírito", mas que estoura sem freio, expõe-se à invasão de todo tipo de pensamentos e atos impróprios, pois: "Como uma cidade arrombada, sem muralha, é o homem que não domina seu espírito." (Pr 25:28) "Todo o seu espírito é o que o estúpido deixa sair, mas aquele que é sábio o mantém calmo até o último." (Pr 29:11) Por estas razões, o sábio aconselha não ter 'espírito curto': "Não te precipites no teu espírito em ficar ofendido, pois ficar ofendido é o que descansa no seio dos estúpidos." — Ec 7:9.

A Longanimidade de Jeová. Quando Jeová levou Moisés ao monte Horebe e lhe mostrou um pouco da Sua glória, ele declarou perante Moisés: "Jeová, Jeová, Deus misericordioso e clemente, vagaroso em irar-se e abundante em benevolência e em verdade, preservando a benevolência para com milhares, perdoando o erro, e a transgressão, e o pecado, mas de modo algum isentará da punição." (Êx 34:5-7) Esta verdade, de Jeová ser vagaroso em irar-se, foi repetida por Moisés, Davi, Naum e outros. — Núm 14:18; Ne 9:17; Sal 86:15; 103:8; Jl 2:13; Jon 4:2; Na 1:3.

Embora a longanimidade seja um atributo de Jeová, ela sempre é expressa em harmonia com os seus atributos primários de amor, justiça, sabedoria e poder. (1Jo 4:8; De 32:4; Pr 2:6; Sal 62:11; Is 40:26, 29) A justiça é devida, em primeiro lugar, ao nome do próprio Deus. Este nome tem de ser enaltecido acima de todos os outros no Universo; e isto é essencial para o bem-estar de todas as suas criaturas. A magnificação do seu nome é um dos principais motivos da longanimidade, conforme explica o apóstolo Paulo: "Se Deus, pois, embora tendo vontade de demonstrar o seu furor e de dar a conhecer o seu poder, tolerou com muita longanimidade os vasos do furor, feitos próprios para a destruição, a fim de dar a conhecer as riquezas de sua glória nos vasos de misericórdia, que ele preparou de antemão para glória, a saber, nós, a quem ele chamou não somente dentre os judeus, mas também dentre as nações, o que tem isso?" (Ro 9:22-24) Deus, por exercer longanimidade, está separando um povo para o seu nome. E por meio deste ele se magnifica em toda a Terra. — At 15:14; 1Co 3:9, 16, 17; 2Co 6:16.

Deus demonstrou sua longanimidade logo cedo na história do homem. A rebelião do primeiro casal humano havia causado a violação da sua lei. Mas, em vez de Deus os executar imediatamente, como poderia ter feito com toda a justiça, demonstrou em amor a sua longanimidade. Isto visava os descendentes deles ainda por nascer, para quem tal longanimidade significava tudo (porque Sua paciência significa a salvação de muitos [2Pe 3:15]). O que era mais importante, Deus visava também magnificar a sua glória por meio da Semente da promessa. (Gên 3:15; Jo 3:16; Gál 3:16) E Deus foi longânime não só naquele tempo, mas sabia que teria de suportar a humanidade imperfeita por vários milhares de anos da história, adiando a punição do mundo em inimizade com ele. (Tg 4:4) Alguns entenderam isso mal e abusaram da longanimidade de Deus para com eles, desacertando o propósito dela por a considerarem como vagarosidade, em vez de como paciência amorosa. — Ro 2:4; 2Pe 3:9.

Em parte alguma se evidencia a longanimidade de Deus mais do que nos seus tratos com a antiga nação de Israel. (Ro 10:21) Vez após vez os acolheu de novo, depois de se terem afastado dele, de terem sido punidos e de se terem arrependido. Mataram os profetas dele, e, finalmente, Seu próprio Filho. Combateram a pregação das boas novas por Jesus e seus apóstolos. Mas a longanimidade de Deus não foi desperdiçada. Houve um restante que se mostrou fiel. (Is 6:8-13; Ro 9:27-29; 11:5) Ele usou alguns destes fiéis para escrever a Sua Palavra sob inspiração. (Ro 3:1, 2) A Lei dada por ele mostrou que toda a humanidade era pecadora e precisava dum redentor, e indicou Aquele que daria a sua vida como preço de resgate e que seria enaltecido para a elevada posição de Rei. (Gál 3:19, 24) Proveram-se modelos deste Reino e do sacerdócio de Cristo (Col 2:16, 17; He 10:1), e apresentaram-se a nós exemplos para seguir ou para evitar. (1Co 10:11; He 6:12; Tg 5:10) Todas estas coisas são essenciais para a humanidade, para ela ganhar a vida eterna. — Ro 15:4; 2Ti 3:16, 17.

Jeová não será indefinidamente longânime. Por outro lado, Deus só é longânime enquanto isso estiver em harmonia com o juízo, a justiça e a sabedoria. Exercer ele longanimidade enquanto persiste uma situação ruim ou provocativa mostra que ela se destina a oferecer aos envolvidos na má situação uma oportunidade de mudar, de se endireitar. Quando a situação chega ao ponto em que se vê que não há nenhuma esperança de ocorrer tal mudança, seria uma violação do juízo e da justiça deixar a longanimidade continuar. Deus age então em sabedoria para eliminar a má situação. Sua paciência acaba.

Um exemplo desta indulgência por parte de Deus e de ela acabar se encontra nos tratos de Deus com os homens antes do Dilúvio. Existia então uma situação deplorável, e Deus disse: "Meu espírito não há de agir por tempo indefinido para com o homem, porquanto ele é carne. Concordemente, seus dias hão de somar cento e vinte anos." (Gên 6:3) Mais tarde, a respeito de como Israel abusava da longanimidade de Jeová, Isaías disse: "Mas eles mesmos se rebelaram e fizeram seu espírito santo sentir-se magoado. Transformou-se então em inimigo deles; ele mesmo guerreou contra eles." — Is 63:10; compare isso com At 7:51.

Por estes motivos, insta-se com os cristãos a 'não aceitar a benignidade imerecida de Deus e desacertar o propósito dela'. (2Co 6:1) São aconselhados: "Não contristeis [entristeçais] o espírito santo de Deus." (Ef 4:30, Int) Também: "Não extingais o fogo do espírito." (1Te 5:19) Senão, talvez continuem a ponto de pecar e blasfemar contra o espírito de Deus, na realidade, ultrajando-o, caso em que não há arrependimento ou perdão, mas apenas destruição. — Mt 12:31, 32; He 6:4-6; 10:26-31.

Jesus Cristo. Jesus Cristo exemplificou a longanimidade entre os humanos. O profeta Isaías escreveu a respeito dele: "Viu-se apertado e deixou-se atribular; contudo, não abria a sua boca. Foi trazido qual ovídeo ao abate; e como a ovelha fica muda diante dos seus tosquiadores, tampouco ele abria a sua boca." (Is 53:7) Suportou as fraquezas dos seus apóstolos, e os insultos e as descortesias dos seus ferrenhos e amargurados inimigos. Todavia, não retaliou na mesma moeda, quer por palavra, quer por ação. (Ro 15:3) Quando o apóstolo Pedro não agiu judiciosamente ao cortar a orelha de Malco, Jesus o repreendeu com as seguintes palavras: "Devolve a espada ao seu lugar, . . . pensas que não posso apelar para meu Pai, para fornecer-me neste momento mais de doze legiões de anjos? Neste caso, como se cumpririam as Escrituras, de que tem de realizar-se deste modo?" — Mt 26:51-54; Jo 18:10, 11.

Por que é importante que os cristãos cultivem a longanimidade?

O precedente evidencia que a longanimidade se origina de Jeová Deus. Ela é fruto do Seu espírito. (Gál 5:22) O homem, feito à imagem e semelhança de Deus, possui esta qualidade em certa medida e pode desenvolvê-la por seguir a Palavra de Deus e a orientação do Seu espírito santo. (Gên 1:26, 27) Por isso, ordena-se aos cristãos que cultivem e demonstrem esta qualidade. (Col 3:12) Ela é marco identificador do ministro de Deus. (2Co 6:4-6) O apóstolo Paulo diz: "Sede longânimes para com todos." (1Te 5:14) Ele indica que é essencial exercer esta qualidade para agradar a Deus. Mas a longanimidade não é genuína quando vem acompanhada por resmungos e queixas. Paulo mostra que é elogiável ser 'longânime com alegria'. — Col 1:9-12.

Além da alegria que se deriva de praticar a longanimidade, as recompensas são grandes. Jeová é recompensado por se glorificar o Seu nome. O desafio à justiça e à legitimidade da soberania de Deus é refutado, e Ele é vindicado. (Gên 3:1-5; Jó 1:7-11; 2:3-5) O que teria acontecido se tivesse matado Adão, Eva e Satanás por ocasião da rebelião? Alguns talvez chegassem à conclusão de que Satanás tinha um argumento válido no seu desafio. Mas Jeová, pela longanimidade, deu aos homens a oportunidade de mostrar sob prova que preferem que Ele seja seu soberano e que querem servi-lo por causa das Suas excelentes qualidades, sim, para demonstrar que preferem a soberania de Jeová à completa independência, sabendo que isso é muito melhor. — Sal 84:10.

Jesus Cristo, por ser longânime em obediência a Deus, recebeu uma recompensa extremamente maravilhosa, a de ser enaltecido, por seu Pai, à posição superior de realeza e receber "o nome que está acima de todo outro nome". (Fil 2:5-11) Além disso, recebe uma "noiva" composta de seus irmãos espirituais, a Nova Jerusalém, representada como cidade, cujas pedras de alicerce trazem os nomes dos 12 apóstolos do Cordeiro. — 2Co 11:2; Re 21:2, 9, 10, 14.

Do mesmo modo, uma rica recompensa aguarda a todos os que cultivam a longanimidade e a mantêm em harmonia com o propósito de Deus. (He 6:11-15) Eles têm a satisfação de copiar a qualidade de Deus, de fazer a vontade de Deus e de ter a aprovação de Deus. Além disso, sua longanimidade fará com que outros sejam ajudados a conhecer a Deus e a obter a vida eterna. — 1Ti 4:16.

LO-RUAMA [[Com Ela] Não se Teve Misericórdia]. Menina dada à luz por Gômer, esposa de Oseias. Jeová disse ao profeta que desse este nome à menina porque Ele 'não mais teria misericórdia para com a casa de Israel'. Deus indicou assim a rejeição de Israel como um todo. (Os 1:6-8) Anteriormente, ao nascer Jezreel, disse-se que Gômer "lhe deu à luz um filho", isto é, a Oseias, mas, a respeito de Lo-Ruama só se declara que Gômer "passou outra vez a ficar grávida e a dar à luz uma filha", sem referência direta a Oseias. Embora o relato não o diga especificamente, tem-se sugerido que esta filha era fruto do adultério de Gômer e não era prole do próprio profeta. (Os 1:2, 3) Em Oseias 2:1, 23 há uma alusão ao nome simbólico dela.

LOTÃ. Filho de Seir, o horeu, e um dos xeques de Edom. (Gên 36:20, 29) Seus filhos eram Hori e Hemão (Homão), e sua irmã chamava-se Timna. — Gên 36:22; 1Cr 1:38, 39.

LÓTUS. Veja LÓDÃO.

LOUCURA. Distúrbio mental, quer insanidade, quer uma condição de extrema fúria ou grande tolice. Nas Escrituras usam-se diversas palavras hebraicas e gregas para indicar tais distúrbios mentais, quer duradouros, quer temporários. Algumas destas palavras parecem ser associadas com, ou derivar de, gritos esquisitos e às vezes violentos ou lamentosos de pessoas afligidas pela loucura.

O jactancioso rei babilônio Nabucodonosor ficou louco. Este monarca, em cumprimento dum sonho profético explicado por Daniel, foi atacado de loucura por ocasião duma jactância. Ficou insano por sete anos, "e começou a comer vegetação como os touros". (Da 4:33) Tendo perdido a razão, Nabucodonosor possivelmente imaginou ser um animal, talvez um touro. A respeito deste seu distúrbio mental, um dicionário médico, francês, declara: "LICANTROPIA . . . de [lý·kos], lupus, lobo; [án·thro·pos], homo, homem. Este nome foi dado à doença de pessoas que acreditam ter-se transformado em animal, e que imitam a voz ou os gritos, as formas ou maneiras daquele animal. Tais indivíduos costumam imaginar-se transformados em lobo, cão ou gato; às vezes também em touro, como no caso de Nabucodonosor." (Dictionnaire des sciences médicales, par une société de médecins et de chirurgiens [Dicionário de Ciências Médicas, por Uma So-ciedade de Médicos e de Cirurgiões], Paris, 1818, Vol. 29, p. 246) Ao fim dos sete anos, Jeová restaurou a sanidade de Nabucodonosor. — Da 4:34-37.

Loucura e Possessão Demoníaca. Embora nem todos os afligidos pela loucura ou insanidade estejam possuídos por demônios, é lógico esperar que pessoas possessas por demônios manifestem uma condição mental desequilibrada. No país dos gerasenos, Jesus encontrou um louco que era possesso por demônios. Seu antro era entre os túmulos, e embora muitas vezes tivesse sido amarrado com grilhões e cadeias, "as cadeias foram quebradas por ele e os grilhões foram até despedaçados; e ninguém tinha força para subjugá-lo". Além disso, "ele clamava continuamente, noite e dia, nos túmulos e nos montes, e se cortava com pedras". Depois que Jesus expulsou os demônios, o homem tinha "são juízo". (Mr 5:1-17; Lu 8:26-39) Os cristãos, porém, são mantidos a salvo da invasão por demônios que produz loucura, por vestirem e não tirarem a "armadura completa de Deus". — Ef 6:10-17.

Loucura Fingida. Em certa ocasião, enquanto estava proscrito pelo Rei Saul, Davi refugiou-se junto a Aquis, rei de Gate. Ao descobrirem quem ele era, os filisteus sugeriram a Aquis que Davi era um risco de segurança, e Davi ficou com medo. Por conseguinte, disfarçou sua sanidade, agindo como louco. Ele "fazia cruzinhas nas portas do portão e deixava correr a saliva sobre a sua barba". Pensando que Davi era louco, Aquis deixou-o ir embora com vida, como idiota inofensivo. Mais tarde, Davi foi inspirado a escrever o Salmo 34, no qual agradeceu a Jeová ter abençoado a sua estratégia e o ter livrado. — 1Sa 21:10–22:1.

A Loucura da Oposição a Jeová. O profeta Balaão desejava tolamente profetizar contra Israel, a fim de receber dinheiro do Rei Balaque, dos moabitas, mas Jeová anulou e impediu seus esforços. O apóstolo Pedro escreveu a respeito de Balaão, que "um animal de carga, sem voz, fazendo pronunciação com voz de homem, impediu o proceder louco do profeta". Referente à loucura de Balaão, o apóstolo usou a palavra grega pa·ra·fro·ní·a, que contém a ideia de "estar fora de si". — 2Pe 2:15, 16; Núm 22:26-31.

O profeta Oseias escreveu a respeito dos falsos profetas de Israel: "O profeta será tolo, o homem da expressão inspirada ficará enlouquecido por causa da abundância do teu erro, sendo abundante até mesmo a hostilidade." (Os 9:7) Jeová causa a loucura dos seus opositores e dos que rejeitam a sabedoria dele, identificando-se como "Aquele que faz os próprios adivinhos agir como doidos", quer dizer, por mostrar que as previsões deles são falsas. (Is 44:24, 25) Jó disse a respeito dos juízes do mundo, que Jeová "faz os próprios juízes endoidecer". — Jó 12:17.

Paulo comparou os homens que resistiam à verdade e que tentavam corromper a congregação cristã a Janes e Jambres, que resistiram a Moisés. Ele assegurou: "Não farão mais progresso, pois a insensatez ["loucura", So] deles ficará bem clara a todos, assim como ficou a daqueles dois homens." — 2Ti 3:8, 9.

Loucura Resultante de Opressão e Confusão. Entre as funestas consequências que os israelitas sofreriam pela desobediência a Jeová estava serem atacados de loucura. Em resultado das medidas opressivas dos seus conquistadores, eles ficariam enlouquecidos, reagindo de modo irracional por causa da frustração. (De 28:28-34) Deveras, o Rei Salomão declarou que "a mera opressão pode fazer o sábio agir como doido". — Ec 7:7.

Na profecia, o rei babilônio Nabucodonosor foi comparado ao 'copo do vinho do furor de Jeová'. As nações o teriam de beber, e isso os faria "balouçar, e agir como homens endoidecidos, por causa da espada que [eu, Jeová,] envio entre eles". (Je 25:15, 16) Mais tarde, causar-se-ia loucura na própria Babilônia, tendo seus idólatras visões horripilantes, 'e por causa das suas visões aterradoras continuariam a agir como doidos'. (Je 50:35-38) Ela também teria de beber o copo do furor de Jeová. — Je 51:6-8.

Fúria Extrema. A loucura, conforme usada na Bíblia, pode também denotar fúria extrema. Jesus, num sábado, curou um homem que tinha a mão direita ressequida. Então, os escribas e os fariseus que observaram isso, "se encheram de insensatez [ou: loucura] e começaram a falar entre si sobre o que poderiam fazer a Jesus". (Lu 6:6-11) Para descrever seu estado mental, Lucas usou a palavra grega á·noi·a, que literalmente significa "insensatez" (a palavra portuguesa "paranoia" é aparentada com este termo). Paulo, evidentemente, pensava na extrema fúria ou furor quando admitiu que, ao perseguir os cristãos, ele estivera "extremamente enfurecido contra eles". — At 26:11.

Contrastada com a Sabedoria. No livro de Eclesiastes, o congregante revela que empenhou seu coração "a conhecer a sabedoria e a conhecer a doidice". (Ec 1:17) Sua investigação não se restringiu a considerar a sabedoria, mas também levou em conta seu oposto, conforme manifestado pelo homem. (Ec 7:25) Em Eclesiastes 2:12, Salomão revela novamente que ele pesou a sabedoria, a doidice e a estultícia. Deste modo, ele pôde determinar o contraste em seu valor. Reconheceu a desregrada frivolidade como loucura, dizendo: "Eu disse ao riso: 'Insânia!' " pois, em comparação com a sabedoria, era insensato, não produzindo nenhuma felicidade verdadeira. — Ec 2:2.

Comentando a condição mental do estúpido, Salomão disse: "O início das palavras da sua boca é estultícia, e o fim posterior da sua boca é doidice calamitosa." (Ec 10:13) A estultícia talvez assuma a forma dum truque, que às vezes pode prejudicar tanto a vítima, que aquele que o usa é comparado a um louco armado de armas mortíferas. — Pr 26:18, 19.

Alguns não têm nenhuma esperança de ressurreição, pensando que a morte acaba com tudo para todos. Quando se lhe apresenta a evidência de seu conceito desequilibrado, eles apenas procuram satisfazer suas inclinações carnais e não mostram nenhuma preocupação em fazer a vontade de Deus. Salomão também os mencionou, dizendo: "Por haver um só evento consequente para todos, o coração dos filhos dos homens está também cheio do mal; e há doidice no seu coração durante a sua vida, e depois dela — rumo aos mortos!" — Ec 9:3.

Uso Ilustrativo. A autoridade e o apostolado do apóstolo Paulo foram questionados por alguns em Corinto, aos quais ele sarcasticamente classificou de "superfinos apóstolos". (2Co 11:5) A fim de fazer a congregação coríntia cair em si, Paulo 'jactou-se' das suas credenciais, das suas bênçãos e das coisas que havia sofrido no serviço de Jeová, em prova da sua afirmação. Esta jactância contrariava a costumeira maneira de falar do cristão, mas Paulo teve de fazer isso neste caso. Por isso falou de si mesmo como se estivesse 'desarrazoado' e disse a respeito dos chamados superfinos apóstolos: "São ministros de Cristo? Respondo como louco: eu o sou ainda mais destacadamente." — 2Co 11:21-27.

LOUREIRO [hebr.: 'ó·ren]. Árvore sempre-verde, que frequentemente cresce apenas como arbusto, mas é capaz de atingir a altura de até cerca de 15 m. A árvore inteira (folhas, casca, raízes e frutos) contém um óleo há muito empregado na medicina. As folhas são oblongas e coriáceas, tendo o lado superior lustroso.

Esta árvore é a última das diversas árvores mencionadas em Isaías 44:14; esta é a única referência à árvore nas Escrituras Hebraicas. O Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros (Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento; de L. Koehler e W. Baumgartner, Leiden, 1958, p. 88) identifica o nome como loureiro (Laurus nobilis), também chamado louro ou louro-comum. (Veja também The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible [O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete], editado por G. A. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 2, p. 293.) O Laurus nobilis é encontrado desde a costa até as regiões montanhosas centrais da Palestina, e cresce também em outros países do Mediterrâneo.

Os antigos gregos usavam folhas de loureiro para fazer coroas, que eram colocadas na cabeça dos vencedores dos Jogos Pítios e também concedidas aos que ocupavam certos cargos, como símbolo de distinção.

LOUVOR. Expressão de elogio, de admiração, até mesmo de adoração quando o louvor é dirigido a Deus. O verbo hebraico ha·lál e o grego ai·né·o são traduzidos "louvar". (Sal 113:1; Is 38:18; Ro 15:11; veja ALELUIA; HALEL.) O substantivo grego hý·mnos, do qual deriva a palavra portuguesa "hino", transmite a ideia de louvor ou de cântico de louvor dirigido a Deus. — Mr 14:26 n.

Louvar o nome de Deus significa louvar o próprio Altíssimo. (Sal 69:30) Ele merece o maior louvor, porque é "bom", ou o máximo em excelência moral, o Criador, o Ajudador dos aflitos, Sustentador e Libertador do seu povo. (Sal 135:3; 150:2; 1Cr 16:25, 26) Ele nunca compartilhará este louvor com as imagens inanimadas, que não podem dar ajuda aos que as adoram. — Is 42:8.

O louvor ocupava um lugar importante na adoração de Jeová por Israel. Por estar o Todo-Poderoso totalmente cercado de louvor, ele é mencionado como "habitando nos louvores de Israel". (Sal 22:3) Foi o Rei Davi quem organizou os sacerdotes e os levitas para louvarem a Jeová com cânticos e com música instrumental. O arranjo organizado por Davi continuou vigorando no templo construído por Salomão, e por muitos anos seguidos, os sacerdotes e os levitas lideravam em dar louvores, usando composições inspiradas que têm sido preservadas até o dia de hoje no livro dos Salmos. — 1Cr 16:4-6; 23:2-5; 2Cr 8:14; veja MÚSICA.

Os servos fiéis de Jeová não permitiam nenhuma interferência em lhe darem o louvor ao qual Ele tem direito exclusivo. O profeta Daniel não parou de louvar a Jeová quando isso foi decretado ilegal e aquele que o fizesse podia ser punido por ser lançado na cova dos leões. (Da 6:7-10) Jesus Cristo, por não fazer nada da sua própria iniciativa, deu o exemplo superlativo em louvar seu Pai. Toda a vida e ministério do Filho de Deus, inclusive os milagres que realizou, deram louvor ao seu Pai. — Lu 18:43; Jo 7:17, 18.

Entre os cristãos do primeiro século, continuavam a ser usados os salmos inspirados para louvar a Jeová. Além disso, parece ter havido composições cristãs — "louvores a Deus", ou hinos, e "cânticos espirituais", ou cânticos que tratavam de assuntos espirituais. (Ef 5:19; Col 3:16) O louvor cristão, porém, não se restringe a cânticos. Expressa-se na vida da pessoa e na sua preocupação ativa com o bem-estar espiritual e material dos outros. — He 13:15, 16.

Louvor Dado a Humanos. Louvar alguém a si mesmo é evidência de orgulho e não edifica os ouvintes. É desamoroso, porque enaltece a pessoa acima dos outros. (1Co 13:4) Se há de se dar louvor, deve ser dado espontaneamente por observadores imparciais, que não têm nada a ganhar com os elogios que dão. — Pr 27:2.

Mesmo dado por outros, o louvor ainda pode constituir uma prova para o louvado. Pode fomentar sentimentos de superioridade ou orgulho, e assim resultar na queda da pessoa. Mas, quando aceito no espírito correto, o louvor pode influir na pessoa de modo positivo. Ela pode reconhecer humildemente sua dívida para com Jeová Deus e ser animada a se comportar de modo a não falhar na sua louvável posição moral. O provérbio inspirado indica o efeito que o louvor pode ter em revelar o que a pessoa realmente é: "O cadinho de refinação é para a prata e o forno de fundição é para o ouro; e a pessoa é segundo o seu louvor." — Pr 27:21; compare isso com ALA; IBB; NE.

Nenhum humano poderia receber maior louvor ou elogio do que ser reconhecido como aprovado por Deus. Esse louvor será dado na revelação do Senhor Jesus Cristo em glória. (1Co 4:5; 1Pe 1:7) Este louvor não depende de diferenças carnais, mas de a pessoa viver dum modo próprio dum servo de Jeová. (Ro 2:28, 29; veja JUDEU, JUDIA.) No ínterim, homens em altos cargos governamentais, bem como outros, talvez louvem os verdadeiros cristãos por estes acatarem a lei e serem retos. (Ro 13:3) Quando se torna claro para os observadores que o motivo da conduta excelente dos cristãos é que eles são servos devotos de Jeová, o louvor é dado a Jeová e ao seu Filho, de quem eles são discípulos leais.

LUA. "O luzeiro menor para dominar a noite", providenciado por Deus como meio de marcar "tempos designados". (Gên 1:16; Sal 104:19; Je 31:35; 1Co 15:41) A palavra hebraica para "lua" (ya·ré·ahh) é intimamente aparentada com a palavra hebraica yé·rahh, que significa "mês lunar". Visto que o mês lunar sempre começava com o aparecimento da lua nova (hebr.: hhó·dhesh), o termo "lua nova" passou a significar também "mês". (Gên 7:11; Êx 12:2; Is 66:23) A palavra grega se·lé·ne é traduzida "lua", ao passo que a palavra grega men contém a ideia de período lunar. — Lu 1:24; Gál 4:10; também Col 2:16, onde ocorre ne·o·me·ní·a (lua nova).

A palavra leva·náh, que significa "branco", ocorre três vezes no texto hebraico, descrevendo poeticamente o brilho branco da lua cheia, especialmente evidente em terras bíblicas. (Cân 6:10; Is 24:23; 30:26) A palavra ké·se' (ou ké·seh), que significa "lua cheia", também ocorre duas vezes. — Sal 81:3; Pr 7:20, ALA.

Visto que a lunação média, de lua nova a lua nova, é de cerca de 29 dias, 12 horas, 44 minutos, os antigos meses lunares tinham ou 29 ou 30 dias. Originalmente, isto talvez tivesse sido determinado pela simples observância do aparecimento do crescente da lua nova; mas, no tempo de Davi, encontramos evidência de cálculo antecipado. (1Sa 20:5, 18, 24-29) Não obstante, em tempos pós-exílicos, a Míxena (Rosh Ha-Shanah 1:3–2:7) declara que o Sinédrio judaico se reunia de manhã cedo no dia 30 de cada um de sete meses no ano para determinar a lua nova. Postavam-se vigias em pontos elevados em torno de Jerusalém, e depois de observar a lua nova, eles levavam imediatamente a notícia à corte judaica. Após ter recebido testemunho suficiente, a corte anunciava: 'É consagrado', marcando oficialmente o início dum novo mês. Quando o céu nublado ou neblina causavam pouca visibilidade, então o mês precedente era declarado ter tido 30 dias, e o novo mês começava no dia depois da reunião da corte. Diz-se também que se fazia um anúncio adicional pelo sinal de um fogo no monte das Oliveiras, fogo que então era repetido em outros pontos elevados, em todo o país. Este método, evidentemente, foi mais tarde substituído pelo envio de mensageiros portadores da notícia.

No quarto século de nossa Era Comum, estabeleceu-se um calendário padronizado ou contínuo, de modo que os meses judaicos passaram a ter um número fixo de dias, com exceção de chesvã e de quisleu, bem como o mês de adar, os quais ainda variam entre 29 e 30 dias, segundo certos cálculos.

Observância da Lua Nova. Entre os judeus, cada lua nova marcava a ocasião para o toque de trombetas e a oferta de sacrifícios segundo o pacto da Lei. (Núm 10:10; 2Cr 2:4; Sal 81:3; compare isso com Is 1:13, 14.) As ofertas prescritas, na realidade, eram ainda maiores do que as normalmente oferecidas nos sábados regulares. (Núm 28:9-15) Embora não se declare especificamente que a lua nova assinalasse um dia de descanso, o texto em Amós 8:5 indica a cessação de trabalho. Pelo visto, era uma ocasião de banquete (1Sa 20:5), bem como uma oportunidade de se obter instrução na lei de Deus. — Ez 46:1-3; 2Rs 4:22, 23; Is 66:23.

A sétima lua nova de cada ano (correspondendo ao primeiro dia do mês de etanim, ou tisri) era sabática, e o pacto da Lei decretava que fosse um tempo de completo repouso. (Le 23:24, 25; Núm 29:1-6) Era o dia de "toque de trombeta", mas em sentido maior do que nas outras luas novas. Anunciava a aproximação do Dia da Expiação, realizado no dia 10 do mesmo mês. — Le 23:27, 28; Núm 29:1, 7-11.

Adoração da Lua. Os israelitas, embora orientados pela Lua como indicador do tempo para determinar seus meses e suas épocas festivas, deviam permanecer afastados da prática da adoração da Lua prevalecente nas nações ao redor deles. O deus-lua Sin era o deus da cidade de Ur, capital da Suméria, lugar de onde Abraão e sua família partiram para a Terra da Promessa. Embora os habitantes de Ur fossem politeístas, o deus-lua Sin, deidade masculina, era o deus supremo, a quem devotavam primariamente seu templo e seus altares. Abraão e seu grupo viajaram de Ur para Harã, que era outro grande centro da adoração da Lua. O pai de Abraão, Tera, que faleceu em Harã, parece ter praticado tal adoração idólatra. (Gên 11:31, 32) De qualquer modo, estas circunstâncias dão mais peso ao significado do aviso de Josué a Israel depois de entrarem na Terra da Promessa, conforme registrado em Josué 24:2, 14: "Assim disse Jeová, o Deus de Israel: 'Foi no outro lado do Rio [Eufrates] que os vossos antepassados moravam há muito tempo, Tera, pai de Abraão e pai de Naor, e eles costumavam servir a outros deuses.' E agora, temei a Jeová e servi-o sem defeito e em verdade, e removei os deuses a que vossos antepassados serviram do outro lado do Rio e no Egito, e servi a Jeová."

Jó também viveu no meio de adoradores da Lua, e ele fielmente rejeitou a prática deles, de beijar a mão visando a Lua. (Jó 31:26-28) Os midianitas vizinhos usavam ornamentos em forma de lua, pondo-os até mesmo em seus camelos. (Jz 8:21, 26) No Egito, onde tanto Abraão como o povo de Israel moravam mais tarde, praticava-se com destaque a adoração da Lua em honra do deus-lua Tot, o deus egípcio das medidas. Em toda lua cheia, os egípcios lhe sacrificavam um porco. Ele passou a ser adorado na Grécia sob o título de Hermes Trismegisto (Hermes Três Vezes Grande). Na realidade, a adoração da Lua se estendeu até o Hemisfério Ocidental, onde se encontraram, no México e na América Central, antigos templos zigurates dedicados à Lua. Em inglês, a segunda-feira ainda deriva seu nome a adoração anglo-saxônica da Lua, pois o nome deste dia, "Monday", originalmente significava "moon-day", ou dia da Lua.

Os adoradores da Lua atribuíam poderes de fertilidade à Lua e esperavam que ela fizesse suas plantações e até seus animais crescer. Em Canaã, onde os israelitas finalmente se estabeleceram, a adoração da Lua era realizada pelas tribos cananeias com o acompanhamento de ritos e cerimônias imorais. Às vezes adorava-se ali a Lua sob o símbolo da deusa Astorete (Astarte, Astarteia). Astorete era supostamente a consorte do deus Baal, e a adoração destes dois frequentemente enlaçava os israelitas durante o período dos juízes. (Jz 2:13; 10:6) As esposas estrangeiras do Rei Salomão introduziram em Judá a contaminação da adoração da Lua. Sacerdotes de deuses estrangeiros mandavam o povo de Judá e de Jerusalém fazer fumaça sacrificial ao Sol, à Lua e às estrelas, prática que continuou até o tempo do Rei Josias. (1Rs 11:3-5, 33; 2Rs 23:5, 13, 14) Quando Jezabel, filha do rei pagão Etbaal, que governava os sidônios, se casou com o Rei Acabe, de Israel, ela também trouxe consigo a adoração de Baal, e, aparentemente, da deusa-lua Astorete. (1Rs 16:31) Os israelitas encontraram novamente a adoração da Lua durante seu exílio em Babilônia, onde as ocasiões da lua nova eram consideradas propícias pelos astrólogos babilônios para prognosticar o futuro. — Is 47:12, 13.

A Palavra de Deus deveria ter servido aos israelitas como proteção contra tal adoração da Lua. Ela mostrava que a Lua é simplesmente um luzeiro e um indicador conveniente do tempo, desprovido de personalidade. (Gên 1:14-18) Quando a nação de Israel se aproximava de Canaã, Jeová a advertiu especificamente de que não adorasse as criações celestes como se fossem representações Dele. Quem praticasse tal adoração devia ser apedrejado até morrer. (De 4:15-19; 17:2-5) Deus, por meio do seu profeta Jeremias, declarou mais tarde que os ossos dos falecidos habitantes idólatras de Jerusalém, inclusive de reis, sacerdotes e profetas, seriam retirados das suas sepulturas e se tornariam "como estrume sobre a superfície do solo". — Je 8:1, 2.

Alguns têm tentado interpretar o texto em Deuteronômio 33:14 como evidência de influência pagã ou de atitude supersticiosa para com a Lua. Na versão Almeida, edição revista e corrigida, este texto fala das "mais excelentes produções da lua". No entanto, conforme mostrado por traduções mais modernas, o sentido da palavra hebraica vertida aqui por "lua" (yera·hhím) realmente é "meses" ou "meses lunares", e refere-se basicamente aos períodos mensais em que amadurecem os frutos.

De modo similar, o Salmo 121:6 tem sido entendido por alguns como indicando uma crença na ideia de que doenças eram causadas pela exposição à luz da Lua. Quando se lê o salmo inteiro, porém, torna-se evidente que tal pressuposição é infundada, visto que o salmo, em vez disso, expressa de forma poética a garantia da proteção de Deus contra calamidades sob todas as circunstâncias e em todas as ocasiões, quer à luz do Sol de dia, quer à luz da Lua à noite.

Ainda outros têm objetado ao termo "lunático(s)" encontrado nesta versão Almeida em Mateus 4:24 e Mateus 17:15. Esta expressão vem da palavra grega se·le·ni·á·zo·mai e significa literalmente "aluado". Traduções modernas traduzem esta palavra como "epiléptico". Usar Mateus este termo grego, comum, nestas duas ocasiões não significa que ele atribuía essa enfermidade à Lua, nem que a Bíblia ensine isso, mas ele usou simplesmente a palavra que, pelo visto, entre os que naquele tempo falavam grego, era o nome que se costumava dar a um epiléptico. Neste respeito, podemos notar que o termo "lunático", em alguns países, é hoje primariamente um termo jurídico para indicar certo grau de insanidade, embora não se atribua tal insanidade aos efeitos da Lua. Os cristãos de língua inglesa, de modo similar, continuam a usar o nome "Monday" para a segunda-feira, embora não o encarem como dia consagrado à Lua.

Na Era Comum. Nos dias de Cristo Jesus e dos apóstolos, a adoração da Lua não era praticada pelo povo judeu. Este, naturalmente, observava as luas novas de acordo com o pacto da Lei. O dia da lua nova de cada mês ainda é observado pelo judeus ortodoxos como dia de expiação menor de pecados cometidos durante o mês findo.

O dia 14 de nisã, quando a Lua chegava à fase cheia, assinalava o tempo da celebração da Páscoa e também o tempo da instituição, por Jesus, da ceia comemorativa, ou Refeição Noturna do Senhor, comemorando a sua morte. — Mt 26:2, 20, 26-30; 1Co 11:20-26.

Apesar do fim do pacto da Lei, alguns dos cristãos judeus, bem como outros, tendiam a apegar-se à prática da celebração de luas novas, bem como de sábados, e por isso precisavam do conselho corretivo de Paulo conforme encontrado em Colossenses 2:16, 17, e Gálatas 4:9-11.

LUCAS. Médico e companheiro fiel do apóstolo Paulo. Foi o escritor do Evangelho de Lucas e de Atos dos Apóstolos. Que Lucas era pessoa bem instruída é evidente dos seus escritos. Também, sua formação como médico é notada no seu uso de termos médicos. — Lu 4:38; At 28:8.

Lucas não classifica a si mesmo de testemunha ocular dos eventos na vida de Cristo, registrados no seu Evangelho. (Lu 1:2) Portanto, parece que ele se tornou crente algum tempo depois de Pentecostes de 33 EC.

No livro de Atos, Lucas é mencionado de modo indireto pelo uso dos pronomes "nós" e "nos", e por verbos na primeira pessoa do plural. (At 16:10-17; 20:5–21:18; 27:1–28:16) Ele estava com Paulo em Trôade, na segunda viagem missionária do apóstolo, e acompanhou-o dali a Filipos, onde talvez tenha permanecido até o retorno de Paulo na sua terceira viagem missionária. Lucas acompanhou Paulo à Judeia, no fim desta viagem missionária (At 21:7, 8, 15), e, enquanto o apóstolo estava por uns dois anos encarcerado em Cesareia, Lucas provavelmente escreveu seu Evangelho ali (c. 56-58 EC). Acompanhou Paulo na sua viagem a Roma, para este ser julgado ali. (At 27:1; 28:16) Visto que o livro de Atos abrange eventos a partir de 33 EC até o fim dos dois anos de encarceramento de Paulo em Roma, mas não registra o resultado do apelo de Paulo a César, é provável que Lucas tenha completado ali o livro de Atos por volta de 61 EC.

Lucas juntou-se a Paulo em enviar cumprimentos aos cristãos em Colossos, quando Paulo lhes escreveu de Roma (c. 60-61 EC), e o apóstolo o identificou como "o médico amado". (Col 4:14) Escrevendo de Roma a Filêmon (c. 60-61 EC), Paulo incluiu cumprimentos de Lucas, chamando-o de um dos seus "colaboradores". (Flm 24) Que Lucas continuou com Paulo e estava com ele pouco antes do martírio do apóstolo é evidente da observação de Paulo: "Apenas Lucas está comigo." — 2Ti 4:11.

Alguns sustentam que Lucas era gentio, baseando-se principalmente em Colossenses 4:11, 14. Visto que Paulo mencionou primeiro os "circuncisos" (Col 4:11) e depois mencionou Lucas (Col 4:14), inferem que Lucas não era da circuncisão e assim não era judeu. Mas, isto de modo algum é conclusivo. Romanos 3:1, 2, declara que Deus incumbiu os judeus das suas proclamações sagradas. Lucas é um dos incumbidos dessas proclamações inspiradas.

As Escrituras tampouco fornecem base para se identificar Lucas com o Lúcio mencionado em Atos 13:1, nem com o 'parente' de Paulo, do mesmo nome, mencionado em Romanos 16:21.

LUCAS, BOAS NOVAS SEGUNDO. Relato que narra primariamente os eventos do ministério terrestre de Jesus. Seu objetivo era apresentar um registro exato em ordem lógica, comprovando a certeza do que Teófilo tinha sido ensinado oralmente. (Lu 1:3, 4) Conforme sugerido por constar no cânon bíblico, este registro devia também beneficiar muitos outros, tanto judeus como não judeus. Embora às vezes pareça predominar o arranjo tópico, este Evangelho, no seu esboço geral, segue uma ordem cronológica.

Escritor e Tempo da Escrita. Embora não seja mencionado nele, em geral tem-se atribuído ao médico Lucas (Col 4:14) a escrita deste relato. Existe evidência escrita neste sentido já desde o segundo século EC, sendo o Evangelho atribuído a Lucas no Fragmento Muratoriano (c. 170 EC). Certos aspectos deste Evangelho também podem ser encarados como indicando um médico bem instruído como seu escritor. O vocabulário encontrado nele é mais extenso do que o dos três outros Evangelhos em conjunto. Às vezes, as descrições dos padecimentos curados por Jesus são mais específicos do que nos outros relatos. — Veja Mt 8:14; Mr 1:30; Lu 4:38; Mt 8:2; Mr 1:40; Lu 5:12.

Evidentemente, foi antes de escrever o livro de Atos que Lucas completou o seu Evangelho. (At

- Os apóstolos são enviados a pregar o Reino de Deus.
- Pedro identifica Jesus como o Cristo; pouco depois, ele e mais dois apóstolos presenciam a transfiguração.

Ministério posterior de Jesus, na maior parte na Judeia e na Pereia. (10:1–19:27)

- Jesus envia os 70 a pregar.
- Conta a parábola do samaritano prestativo.
- Ensina aos seus discípulos a orar, depois refuta a acusação de que expulsa demônios por meio de Belzebu.
- Jesus adverte contra o materialismo e insta com os discípulos a buscarem o Reino de Deus; fala a respeito do pequeno rebanho e do mordomo fiel.
- Sara uma mulher encurvada e responde a objeções de ele fazer isso no sábado.
- Ele mostra que os que querem ser discípulos têm de encarar o que isso envolve.
- Conta parábolas, inclusive aquelas sobre o filho pródigo, e o rico e Lázaro.
- Jesus adverte seus discípulos sobre fazer outros tropeçar; ilustra a necessidade de humildade.
- Cura dez leprosos, mas apenas um deles, um samaritano, retorna para agradecer-lhe.
- Jesus compara os "dias do Filho do homem" aos dias de Noé e de Ló.
- Enfatiza novamente a necessidade de humildade — especialmente dos ricos — daí viaja para Jericó, onde Zaqueu se converte.
- Usando a parábola das minas, ele mostra que o Reino não viria naquela época.

Ministério público final de Jesus, em Jerusalém e arredores. (19:28–24:53)

- Jesus entra montado em Jerusalém e é aclamado pelo povo, mas ele chora sobre a cidade e prediz a desolação dela.
- Expulsa os vendedores do templo; daí é confrontado com perguntas capciosas sobre impostos e a ressurreição.
- Predizendo a destruição do templo e a queda de Jerusalém, Jesus fala também sobre o fim dos tempos designados das nações.
- Ele institui a Comemoração da sua morte, e depois é traído; quando Pedro decepa a orelha do escravo do sumo sacerdote, Jesus cura o homem.
- Preso, Jesus é levado à casa do sumo sacerdote, ao Sinédrio e a Pilatos; depois é mandado a Herodes e finalmente mandado de volta a Pilatos.
- Jesus é pregado na estaca; na estaca, ele fala sobre o Paraíso a um malfeitor pregado ao lado dele; ao morrer, cai uma escuridão sobre a terra e a cortina do santuário é rasgada pelo meio.
- Seu corpo é sepultado, mas, em três dias, o ressuscitado Jesus aparece aos seus seguidores.
- Por fim, Jesus começa a sua ascensão ao céu diante dos olhos deles.

1:1, 2) Visto que havia acompanhado Paulo a Jerusalém no fim da terceira viagem missionária do apóstolo (At 21:15-17), ele teria boas condições para rebuscar com exatidão as coisas referentes a Jesus Cristo, na própria terra em que o Filho de Deus havia realizado sua atividade. Depois da prisão de Paulo em Jerusalém e durante o posterior encarceramento de Paulo em Cesareia, Lucas deve ter tido muitas oportunidades para entrevistar testemunhas oculares e consultar registros escritos. De modo que é razoável concluir que este Evangelho talvez fosse escrito em Cesareia, algum tempo durante a detenção de Paulo ali por cerca de dois anos (c. 56-58 EC). — At 21:30-33; 23:26-35; 24:27.

Exclusividades. Como no caso dos outros três Evangelhos, o relato de Lucas fornece evidência abundante de que Jesus deveras é o Cristo, o Filho de Deus. Revela Jesus como homem de oração, que se estribava plenamente no seu Pai celestial. (Lu 3:21; 6:12-16; 11:1; 23:46) Contém numerosos pormenores suplementares, os quais, conjugados com o que se encontra nos outros três Evangelhos, oferecem um quadro mais completo dos acontecimentos associados com Cristo Jesus. Quase os inteiros capítulos 1 e 2 não têm paralelo nos outros Evangelhos. Pelo menos seis milagres específicos e mais de duas vezes este número, em ilustrações, são exclusivos deste livro. Os milagres são: Jesus fez com que seus discípulos tivessem uma pesca milagrosa (5:1-6), ressuscitou o filho duma viúva de Naim (7:11-15), e também curou uma mulher encurvada (13:11-13), um homem que padecia de hidropisia (14:1-4), dez leprosos (17:12-14) e a orelha do escravo do sumo sacerdote (22:50, 51). Entre as ilustrações há as seguintes: os dois devedores (7:41-47), o prestativo samaritano (10:30-35), a figueira estéril (13:6-9), a lauta refeição noturna (14:16-24), a moeda de dracma perdida (15:8, 9), o filho pródigo (15:11-32), o mordomo injusto (16:1-8), o rico e Lázaro (16:19-31), e a viúva e o juiz injusto (18:1-8).

A matéria cronológica que aparece neste Evangelho ajuda a determinar quando João, o Batizador, e Jesus nasceram e quando começaram seus respectivos ministérios. — Lu 1:24-27; 2:1-7; 3:1, 2, 23; veja REGISTRO.

Autenticidade. Um indício da autenticidade do Evangelho de Lucas e da harmonia entre este e os outros livros bíblicos são as numerosas referências às Escrituras Hebraicas contidas nele e as citações feitas delas. (Veja Lu 2:22-24; Êx 13:2; Le 12:8; Lu 3:3-6; Is 40:3-5; Lu 7:27; Mal 3:1; Lu 4:4, 8, 12; De 8:3; 6:13, 16; Lu 4:18, 19; Is 61:1, 2.) O que confirma ainda mais a autenticidade deste livro é o cumprimento da profecia de Jesus a respeito da destruição de Jerusalém e do templo dela. — Lu 19:41-44; 21:5, 6.

LÚCIO [duma raiz lat. que significa "luz; iluminação"].

1. Homem de Cirene que se associava com a congregação de Antioquia, na Síria, quando Paulo partiu dali na sua primeira viagem missionária. — At 13:1-3.

2. 'Parente' cristão de Paulo, que estava com ele em Corinto durante a sua terceira viagem missionária, quando o apóstolo escreveu sua carta aos romanos. Lúcio participou em enviar cumprimentos aos cristãos em Roma. — Ro 16:21.

LUDE, LUDIM, LUDINS.

1. Filho de Sem (Gên 10:22; 1Cr 1:17), cujos descendentes foram identificados por Josefo (e outros) com os lídios, do SO da Ásia Menor. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], I, 143, 144 [vi, 4]) Inscrições assírias do sétimo século AEC referem-se aos lídios como luddu.

2. Descendente de Cã através de Mizraim. (Gên 10:6, 13; 1Cr 1:8, 11) O povo descendente deste Ludim camítico evidentemente são "os ludins" mencionados por sua eficiência com o arco, os quais, junto com os camíticos Pute e Cus, estavam incorporados nas forças militares egípcias. (Je 46:8, 9; compare isso com Ez 30:4, 5.) Uma alusão similar aos arqueiros de Lude, em Isaías 66:19, parece referir-se ao Ludim camítico, em vez de ao Lude semítico, como os incluídos entre nações muito afastadas de Israel. Os ludins que prestavam serviço militar a Tiro são mais difíceis de identificar. (Ez 27:3, 10) Serem relacionados no texto com Pute, porém, talvez aponte de novo para ludins camíticos.

Os textos mencionados colocariam logicamente os ludins camíticos no norte da África, mas não é possível situá-los mais definitivamente. Alguns peritos os situam na vizinhança geral da Líbia, mas fazem isso à base duma alteração arbitrária da grafia do nome para Lube em vez de Lude.

LUGAR DA CAVEIRA. Veja GÓLGOTA.

LUGAR SANTO. Termo aplicado de vários modos nas Escrituras. (1) Em geral, podia ser aplicado ao acampamento de Israel, a Jerusalém e aos lugares santos dentro dela; também, era especificamente usado com respeito à (2) inteira tenda de reunião, e, mais tarde, ao templo; (3) ao Santíssimo, o compartimento mais recôndito do tabernáculo, e, mais tarde, do templo; e (4) ao primeiro recinto interno do tabernáculo, distinto do compartimento do Santíssimo. Em cada ocorrência da expressão “lugar santo”, a aplicação pretendida pode ser determinada à base do contexto.

1. O acampamento de Israel (De 23:14); mais tarde, a terra de Israel e especificamente a cidade de Jerusalém. (Veja Mt 24:15 e Lu 21:20; note a expressão “cidade santa” em Mt 27:53.) Nela ficava o santuário de Deus, colocara-se o Seu nome ali, e Seu povo era considerado santo. (Ez 21:2) O acampamento inteiro, e, mais tarde, a terra inteira que Deus deu ao Seu povo deviam ser mantidos santos. Portanto, quem oferecesse um sacrifício a um deus falso ou realizasse qualquer prática impura profanava o santuário de Deus, situado no meio deles. — Le 20:3; compare isso com Le 18:21, 30; 19:30; Núm 5:2, 3; Je 32:34; Ez 5:11; 23:38.

2. A tenda de reunião, e, mais tarde, o templo. Todo o conjunto, incluindo o pátio do tabernáculo e os pátios do templo, era um lugar santo. (Êx 38:24; 2Cr 29:5; At 21:28) Os objetos principais situados no pátio eram o altar de sacrifícios e a bacia de cobre. Estes eram objetos sagrados. Apenas os cerimonialmente limpos podiam entrar em qualquer ocasião no pátio do tabernáculo; do mesmo modo, ninguém podia entrar no pátio do templo numa condição impura. Por exemplo, uma mulher na condição impura não podia tocar em nada santo, nem entrar no lugar santo. (Le 12:2-4) Evidentemente, mesmo uma condição de contínua impureza por parte dos israelitas era considerada como maculando o tabernáculo. (Le 15:31) Os que apresentavam ofertas para a purificação da lepra traziam seus sacrifícios apenas até o portão do pátio. (Le 14:11) Ninguém impuro podia ter parte num sacrifício de participação em comum no tabernáculo ou no templo, sob pena de morte. — Le 7:20, 21.

3. O Santíssimo, o compartimento mais recôndito. Em Levítico 16:2 é chamado de “[o] lugar santo [hebr.: haq·qó·dhesh, “santo”] dentro da cortina”. Pelo visto, Paulo pensava neste compartimento quando falou de Jesus entrar no céu, dizendo que ele não entrou num “lugar santo [gr.: há·gi·a, “santos”] feito por mãos”. (He 9:24) Em Hebreus 10:19, Paulo fala do “lugar santo” (NM); “santíssimo lugar” (IBB) (literalmente, os santos, ou os lugares santos, o plural indicando excelência).

O Santíssimo do tabernáculo só continha a dourada Arca do Pacto, encimada por dois querubins de ouro, com asas estendidas. (Êx 25:10-22; 26:33) O templo construído por Salomão também continha dois grandes querubins, feitos da madeira duma árvore oleaginosa, revestidos de ouro. (1Rs 6:23-28) Após o exílio babilônico, porém, a Arca sagrada não mais estava no Santíssimo.

No Santíssimo, o sumo sacerdote ficava cercado por querubins bordados na cobertura interna e na cortina do tabernáculo. (Êx 26:1, 31, 33) No templo de Salomão, as paredes e o teto eram de cedro recoberto de ouro; as paredes eram entalhadas com querubins, figuras de palmeira, ornamentos em forma de bagas e de flores. — 1Rs 6:16-18, 29; 2Cr 3:7, 8.

4. O primeiro compartimento, maior, o Lugar Santo ou o Santo, distinto do compartimento mais recôndito, o Santíssimo. (Êx 26:33) Este compartimento tinha dois terços do comprimento total da estrutura. (1Rs 6:16, 17; 2Cr 3:3, 8) Dentro do Lugar Santo ficava o candelabro de ouro no lado S do recinto (Êx 25:31-40; 40:24, 25), o altar de incenso, dourado, na extremidade O diante da cortina do Santíssimo (Êx 30:1-6; 40:26, 27), e a mesa dos pães da proposição no lado N (Êx 25:23-30; 40:22, 23; He 9:2, 3). Estes eram acompanhados por utensílios de ouro, inclusive bacias, espevitadeiras, e assim por diante. No Lugar Santo do templo havia o altar de ouro, as dez mesas dos pães da proposição e dez candelabros. Os candelabros e as mesas ficavam cinco à direita e cinco à esquerda. — 1Rs 7:48-50; 2Cr 4:7, 8, 19, 20.

O sacerdote, ao estar dentro do Lugar Santo do tabernáculo, podia ver entre as partes das armações de painel das paredes, bem como no teto, os coloridos querubins bordados na cobertura interna do tabernáculo. (Êx 26:1, 15) A cortina do Santíssimo ficava suspensa em quatro colunas douradas, sendo igualmente bordada com querubins. (Êx 26:31-33) O reposteiro da entrada do tabernáculo também era de tecido colorido. (Êx 26:36) No templo, as paredes deste recinto tinham esculturas entalhadas de querubins, de figuras de palmeiras, de ornamentos em forma de bagas, e de grinaldas de flores, todas recobertas de ouro. — 1Rs 6:17, 18, 22, 29.

Significado Simbólico. O arranjo estabelecido por Deus para a expiação do homem por meio do sacrifício de Jesus Cristo é chamado de “tenda maior e mais perfeita, não feita por mãos”. Cristo entrou ‘de uma vez para sempre no lugar santo’ deste grandioso templo espiritual “e obteve para nós um livramento eterno”, escreve o apóstolo Paulo. (He 9:11, 12) Ao ir para o céu e comparecer perante Jeová, Cristo entrou naquilo que foi retratado pelo compartimento mais recôndito do tabernáculo, a saber, o Santíssimo. (He 9:24, 25) De modo que o tabernáculo e seus serviços eram como “representação típica e como sombra das coisas celestiais”. — He 8:5.

Subsacerdotes cristãos. Visto que o lugar em que Deus mora é um santuário, um lugar santo, a congregação cristã também é comparada a um lugar santo, o templo de Deus. (1Co 3:17; Ef 2:21, 22) Diz-se que os seguidores ungidos de Jesus Cristo, enquanto na terra, são "edificados como casa espiritual, tendo por objetivo um sacerdócio santo" e constituindo um "sacerdócio real". (1Pe 2:5, 9) Assim como os subsacerdotes serviam no pátio e também no Lugar Santo, assim estes sacerdotes cristãos de Deus servem perante o Seu altar simbólico e também no Lugar Santo, simbólico. Os sacerdotes de Israel tinham de ser limpos, de modo que, quando se preparavam para servir no Lugar Santo, eles se lavavam com água da bacia de cobre, no pátio. (Êx 40:30-32) Do mesmo modo, também, diz-se que os cristãos que têm sido declarados justos 'foram lavados'. (1Co 6:11) Os sacerdotes israelitas estavam cercados de figuras de querubins nas cortinas do tabernáculo, ao cumprirem ali seus deveres. Isto faz lembrar a declaração do apóstolo feita a alguns declarados justos que, enquanto na terra, "[Deus] nos assentou junto nos lugares celestiais, em união com Cristo Jesus". (Ef 2:4-6) Ao passo que estes cristãos do "sacerdócio real" servem, eles oferecem sacrifícios de louvor (He 13:15) e orações a Deus (relacionadas com o incenso; Re 8:4), comem o alimento espiritual provido por Deus (assim como ele provia do pão da proposição os sacerdotes; Mr 2:26), e usufruem a luz da verdade da Palavra de Deus (como que do candelabro; Sal 119:105). O apóstolo Paulo salienta que eles têm a esperança, pelo sacrifício de Jesus Cristo, de entrar no verdadeiro "Santíssimo", o próprio céu. — He 6:19, 20; 9:24; 1Pe 1:3, 4; veja CONTRIBUIÇÃO SAGRADA; SANTÍSSIMO.

LUÍTE [duma raiz que significa "tabuinha; prancha"]. Lugar mencionado nas profecias de ruína contra Moabe. (Is 15:1, 5; Je 48:5) Alguns peritos acreditam que Luíte era uma cidade moabita situada no alto duma subida. Identificada por Eusébio e por Jerônimo com um lugar chamado Loueitha, Luíte tem sido relacionada quer com Rujm Madinat er Ras, a uns 20 km ao SO de Karak, quer com a vizinha Khirbet Fas. Outro conceito é que Luíte não era uma cidade, mas apenas o nome duma subida ou encosta, que seria usada pelos refugiados moabitas em fuga e em choro. — Veja Núm 34:4.

LUZ, I. O termo hebraico 'ohr e o termo grego fos se referem àquilo que emana dum corpo luminoso, tal como uma lâmpada (Je 25:10) ou do sol, bem como ao oposto da escuridão, em sentido literal e figurativo. (Is 5:20; Jo 11:10, 11) Acredita-se em geral que a luz consista em partículas de energia que se propagam em ondas. Até hoje, porém, o homem ainda não pode fornecer uma resposta completa à pergunta feita há mais de três milênios pelo Criador da luz: "Onde, então, está o caminho pelo qual se distribui a luz?" — Jó 38:24.

A luz solar é uma combinação de cores, cada qual com um comprimento de onda diferente. A cor dum objeto é determinada pela fração específica de luz refletida por sua superfície. Esta luz fornece assim as muitas tonalidades que deleitam os olhos do homem. Ela é também essencial para a perpetuação da vida terrestre — vegetal, animal e humana.

A Fonte da Luz. Jeová Deus é o Formador da luz e o Criador da escuridão. (Is 45:7) Foi no primeiro dia criativo que ele disse: "Venha a haver luz." (Gên 1:3) Antes disso, ele já havia criado os céus (inclusive "as grandes luzes" — o Sol, a Lua e as estrelas; veja Sal 136:7-9) e a terra. (Gên 1:1) Portanto, trazer à existência a luz com referência à terra parece ter envolvido a remoção gradual do que antes impedia que os raios solares atingissem este planeta. E a "separação" entre a luz e a escuridão deve ter ocorrido por meio da rotação da terra ao girar em torno do sol. (Gên 1:4, 5) Muito mais tarde, Jeová afligiu os egípcios adoradores do sol com uma escuridão que não atingiu os israelitas. (Êx 10:21-23) Ao conduzir seu povo para fora do Egito, ele forneceu luz por meio duma coluna de fogo. — Êx 13:21; 14:19, 20; Sal 78:14.

As Escrituras associam repetidas vezes a luz com o seu Criador. O salmista declarou: "Ó Jeová, meu Deus, mostraste ser muito grande. Tu te vestiste de dignidade e de esplendor, envolvendo-te em luz como que num manto." (Sal 104:1, 2) Esta declaração se harmoniza bem com a descrição feita por Ezequiel do que observou em visão: "Eu estava vendo algo semelhante ao brilho de electro, semelhante ao aspecto do fogo, em todo o redor, por dentro, da aparência dos seus quadris para cima; e da aparência dos seus quadris para baixo vi algo semelhante ao aspecto do fogo, e ele tinha uma claridade em todo o redor. Havia algo semelhante ao aspecto do arco que vem a haver numa massa de nuvens no dia duma chuvada. Assim era a aparência da claridade ao redor. Tinha o aspecto da semelhança da glória de Jeová." (Ez 1:27, 28) Séculos antes disso, apenas uma manifestação parcial desta glória fez com que a face de Moisés emitisse raios. — Êx 33:22, 23; 34:29, 30.

"Deus é luz e não há nenhuma escuridão em união com ele." (1Jo 1:5) Ele é justo, reto e santo (De 32:4; Re 4:8), não tendo nada em comum com as práticas degradantes e impuras costumeiramente associadas com a escuridão. (Veja Jó 24:14-16; 2Co 6:14; 1Te 5:7, 8.) Portanto, aqueles que andam na escuridão por mostrar ódio aos seus irmãos e que não praticam a verdade nunca podem estar em união com ele. — 1Jo 1:6; 2:9-11.

Jeová é o "Pai das luzes celestiais". (Tg 1:17) Não somente é ele o "Dador do sol para luz de dia, dos estatutos da lua e das estrelas para luz de noite" (Je 31:35), mas é também a fonte de toda a iluminação espiritual. (2Co 4:6) Sua lei, suas decisões judiciais e sua palavra são uma luz para aqueles que se deixam guiar por elas. (Sal 43:3; 119:105; Pr 6:23; Is 51:4) O salmista declarou: "Pela luz vinda de ti podemos ver a luz." (Sal 36:9; compare isso com Sal 27:1; 43:3.) Assim como a luz do sol continua a brilhar cada vez mais desde a alva até "o dia estar firmemente estabelecido", assim a vereda dos justos, iluminada pela sabedoria piedosa, fica cada vez mais clara. (Pr 4:18) Seguir o rumo delineado por Jeová significa andar na Sua luz. (Is 2:3-5) Por outro lado, quando alguém encara as coisas de modo impuro ou com intenções más, ele está em grande escuridão espiritual. Conforme Jesus o expressou: "Se o teu olho for iníquo, todo o teu corpo será escuro. Se, na realidade, a luz que está em ti é escuridão, quão grande é essa escuridão!" — Mt 6:23; compare isso com De 15:9; 28:54-57; Pr 28:22; 2Pe 2:14.

A Luz e o Filho de Deus. Desde a sua ressurreição e ascensão ao céu, Cristo Jesus, "o Rei dos que reinam e Senhor dos que dominam", "mora em luz inacessível". Esta luz é tão gloriosa, que torna impossível ser vista pelos fracos olhos humanos. (1Ti 6:15, 16) Deveras, um homem, Saulo (Paulo) de Tarso, ficou cego com a luz do céu vista por ele, na ocasião em que o glorificado Filho de Deus se revelou a este perseguidor dos seguidores de Jesus. — At 9:3-8; 22:6-11.

Jesus Cristo, durante o seu ministério terrestre, era uma luz, fornecendo iluminação espiritual a respeito dos propósitos de Deus e da Sua vontade para com aqueles que querem obter o favor divino. (Jo 9:5; compare isso com Is 42:6, 7; 61:1, 2; Lu 4:18-21.) Inicialmente, apenas as "ovelhas perdidas da casa de Israel" obtiveram benefícios daquela "grande luz". (Is 9:1, 2; Mt 4:13-16; 15:24) Mas a iluminação espiritual não deveria ficar limitada apenas a judeus naturais e prosélitos. (Jo 1:4-9; compare isso com At 13:46, 47.) Quando o menino Jesus foi apresentado no templo, o idoso Simeão referiu-se a ele como "uma luz para remover das nações o véu". (Lu 2:32) Conforme Paulo explicou aos efésios, os não judeus incircuncisos haviam estado em escuridão com respeito a Deus e Seus propósitos: "Anteriormente éreis pessoas das nações quanto à carne; fostes chamados 'incircuncisão' por aquilo que é chamado 'circuncisão', feita na carne, por mãos — que naquele tempo específico estáveis sem Cristo, apartados do estado de Israel e estranhos aos pactos da promessa, e não tínheis esperança e estáveis sem Deus no mundo." (Ef 2:11, 12) Todavia, quando as boas novas sobre o Cristo foram levadas aos não judeus, os que eram receptivos foram 'chamados da escuridão para a maravilhosa luz de Deus'. (1Pe 2:9) Outros, porém, continuaram a permitir que aquele que se transforma em "anjo de luz", ou iluminação (2Co 11:14), "o deus deste sistema de coisas", os cegasse para 'que não penetrasse a iluminação das gloriosas boas novas a respeito do Cristo'. (2Co 4:4) Preferiram a escuridão, porque queriam continuar no seu proceder egoísta. — Veja Jo 3:19, 20.

Seguidores de Cristo Tornam-se Luzes. Aqueles que exerceram fé em Cristo Jesus como "a luz do mundo" e se tornaram seus seguidores passaram a ser "filhos da luz". (Jo 3:21; 8:12; 12:35, 36, 46) Tornaram conhecidos a outros os requisitos para se obter o favor de Deus e a vida, fazendo isso "na luz", isto é, abertamente. (Mt 10:27) De modo similar, João, o Batizador, servira como luz quando estava "pregando o batismo em símbolo de arrependimento" e apontava para a vinda do Messias. (Lu 3:3, 15-17; Jo 5:35) Também, pelas suas obras excelentes, por palavras e exemplos, os seguidores de Cristo deixavam brilhar a sua luz. (Mt 5:14, 16; compare isso com Ro 2:17-24.) "Os frutos da luz consistem em toda sorte de bondade, e justiça, e verdade." Portanto, ela expõe a baixeza das obras vergonhosas pertencentes à escuridão (fornicação, impureza de toda espécie, ganância, e coisas semelhantes) praticadas pelos "filhos da desobediência". Em resultado, essas obras vergonhosas são vistas na sua verdadeira luz, e, no sentido de serem manifestadas como coisas condenadas por Deus, tornam-se elas mesmas luz. (Ef 5:3-18; compare isso com 1Te 5:4-9.) Equipados com "armas da luz", a armadura espiritual da parte de Deus, os cristãos travam guerra "contra os governos, contra as autoridades, contra os governantes mundiais desta escuridão, contra as forças espirituais iníquas nos lugares celestiais", e são assim habilitados para se manterem firmes como servos aprovados de Deus. — Ro 13:12-14; Ef 6:11-18.

Outros Usos Figurados. As Escrituras contêm muitas referências figurativas à luz. As palavras "a luz dos meus próprios olhos" refere-se à capacidade de enxergar. (Sal 38:10) Deus 'dar luz' a alguém significa que lhe dá vida ou lhe permite continuar a viver. (Jó 3:20, 23; compare isso com Sal 56:13.) "Crianças que não viram a luz" são aquelas que nasceram mortas. (Jó 3:16; compare isso com Sal 49:19.) "É bom para os olhos verem o sol" talvez possa ser entendido como significando 'é bom estar vivo'. — Ec 11:7.

A luz matutina é descrita de forma pitoresca como 'segurando as extremidades da terra e sacudindo dela os iníquos', porque a alva dispersa os malfeitores. A "luz" deles é a escuridão, porque estão acostumados a realizar seus atos maus sob a cobertura dela, e esta "luz" figurativa lhes é tirada pela luz literal da manhã. — Jó 38:12-15; compare isso com Jó 24:15-17.

Assim como a luz do sol é claramente observável, assim são óbvios os julgamentos adversos de Jeová. Em Oseias 6:5 faz-se alusão a isso: "Os julgamentos sobre ti serão como a luz que sai."

A 'luz da face de Deus' significa favor divino. (Sal 44:3; 89:15) "Levanta sobre nós a luz da tua face" é uma expressão que significa 'mostra-nos favor'. (Sal 4:6) De modo similar, o favor dum governante é chamado de "luz da face do rei". — Pr 16:15.

A luz pode denotar vivacidade e animação, o oposto do desalento. (Jó 30:26) Isto talvez explique as palavras de Jó (29:24): "Não lançavam de si a luz da minha face." Embora outros estivessem desalentados e deprimidos, isto não fez Jó ficar assim.

Uma perspectiva brilhante, tal como a salvação ou a libertação, às vezes é chamada de luz. (Est 8:16; Sal 97:11; Is 30:26; Miq 7:8, 9) Fazer Jeová brilhar a sua glória sobre Sião indicava a libertação dela do estado cativo. Em resultado disso, Sião se tornaria fonte de iluminação para as nações. (Is 60:1-3, 19, 20; compare isso com Re 21:24; 22:5) Por outro lado, o sol, a lua e as estrelas não darem a sua luz significaria calamidade. — Is 13:10, 11; Je 4:23; Ez 32:7, 8; Mt 24:29.

LUZ, II [Amendoeira].

1. Primitivo nome da cidade de Betel, evidentemente dado a ela pelos habitantes cananeus. Jacó aplicou o nome Betel (que significa "Casa de Deus") ao lugar onde recebeu em sonho uma revelação divina; um lugar em que Abraão acampara anteriormente. (Gên 28:16-19; 35:6) Luz é identificada com as ruínas junto à aldeia de Beitin, a uns 17 km ao N de Jerusalém. Parece que o nome Betel, por fim, sobrepujou o de Luz, o mais tardar na época da conquista de Canaã pelos israelitas. (Jz 1:22) Por causa da tradução de Josué 16:2 em duas edições da versão Almeida (ALA; IBB) e em outras, que descrevem a fronteira de Efraim no sentido de que "de Betel sai [vai] para Luz", alguns presumiram que estes lugares eram distintos como cidades diferentes. Todavia, outras traduções modernas rezam aqui "Beth-el-luz" (JP), "Bethel-luz" (JB), "Betel, que é Luza" (LEB), ou "Betel, que pertence a Luz" (NM). Depois do capítulo 1 do livro de Juízes, não se usa mais o nome Luz. — Veja BETEL N.º 1.

A palavra hebraica (luz), que corresponde ao nome da cidade, também é usada em Gênesis 30:37 com respeito às varas de amendoeira usadas por Jacó.

2. Nome duma cidade construída na "terra dos hititas" por um homem de Betel (Luz), que cooperou com os combatentes israelitas da casa de José em causar a queda de Betel. Igual a Raabe e sua família, permitiu-se que ele e sua família saíssem ilesos. Mas, diferente de Raabe e talvez indicando que a base dos seus serviços não era um genuíno temor e apreço de Jeová, o Deus de Israel, este homem não procurou associar-se com Israel, preferindo ir para a terra dos hititas e ali construir a sua cidade, que chamou de Luz, sem dúvida, em memória da sua cidade natal. A Bíblia não o dignifica por lhe mencionar o nome, como no caso de Raabe. (Jz 1:23-26) Alguns acham provável que pelo menos o nome da cidade seja refletido nas ruínas de el-Louaize, a uns 20 km ao ESE de Sídon.

LUZ, DAR À. Veja DAR À LUZ FILHOS.

LUZEIRO. Fonte de luz; farol; corpo celeste do qual a terra recebe luz.

O relato de Gênesis conta que, durante o quarto "dia" criativo, Deus fez com que houvesse luzeiros "na expansão dos céus". (Gên 1:14, 19) Isto não indica que ali veio à existência a própria luz (hebr.: 'ohr), visto que se mostra que ela já existia antes. (Gên 1:3) Nem quer isso dizer que o sol, a lua e as estrelas foram criados neste ponto. O versículo inicial da Bíblia declara: "No princípio Deus criou os céus e a terra." (Gên 1:1) De modo que os céus, com seus corpos celestes, inclusive o sol, existiram por um período indeterminado antes dos processos e dos eventos declarados como ocorrendo durante os seis períodos criativos descritos nos versículos seguintes do primeiro capítulo de Gênesis.

Deve-se notar que, ao passo que Gênesis 1:1 declara que Deus, no princípio, "criou" (hebr.: ba·rá') os céus e a terra, os versículos 16 e 17 declaram que, durante o quarto "dia" criativo, "Deus passou a fazer [hebr., uma forma de 'a·sáh] os dois grandes luzeiros, o luzeiro maior para dominar o dia e o luzeiro menor para dominar a noite, e também as estrelas. Assim, Deus os pôs na expansão dos céus para iluminarem a terra". A palavra hebraica 'a·sáh, frequentemente traduzida "fazer", pode significar simplesmente estabelecer (2Sa 7:11), designar (De 15:1), formar (Je 18:4) ou preparar (Gên 21:8).

Assim, o registro declara aqui o que os já existentes sol, lua e estrelas se tornaram então com relação ao planeta Terra. No primeiro "dia", a luz (hebr.: 'ohr) evidentemente penetrou aos poucos nas camadas de nuvens que ainda envolviam a terra e se teria tornado visível ao observador terrestre, se tivesse havido um. (Gên 1:3) No quarto "dia", as coisas mudaram. A declaração de que Deus "os pôs na expansão dos céus" naquele dia expressa que Deus fez com que as fontes de luz (hebr.: ma·'óhr), a saber, o sol, a lua e as estrelas, se tornassem discerníveis na expansão. O objetivo deles era "fazerem separação entre o dia e a noite" e "servir de sinais, e para épocas, e para dias, e para anos". Além de serem sinais da existência e majestade de Deus, os movimentos desses luzeiros habilitam o homem a marcar com exatidão as estações, os dias e os anos. — Gên 1:14-18; Sal 74:16; 148:3.

A mesma palavra hebraica (ma·'óhr) é usada com referência ao equipamento iluminador no tabernáculo, que empregava óleo aceso como meio para produzir iluminação. (Êx 25:6; 27:20; 35:8, 14, 28; Le 24:2; Núm 4:9) Em Provérbios 15:30, é usada figurativamente na expressão "luminosidade dos olhos". O Egito é profeticamente advertido de que se retirará toda a luz por Jeová escurecer e encobrir todos "os luzeiros [uma forma de ma·'óhr] de luz ['ohr] nos céus". — Ez 32:2, 7, 8.

MAACÁ. Nome de diversas pessoas e de um reino. [1-9: possivelmente duma raiz que significa "comprimir"]

1. Bebê nascido a Naor, irmão de Abraão, com sua concubina Reumá. É evidente que era do sexo masculino, porque um reino e seus habitantes derivaram seu nome desta pessoa. — Gên 22:23, 24; 2Sa 10:6, 8.

2. Esposa de Maquir, o manassita. — 1Cr 7:14-16.

3. Uma das concubinas de Calebe (filho de Esrom), que lhe deu à luz vários filhos. — 1Cr 2:18, 48, 49.

4. A esposa de Jeiel, "o pai de Gibeão". — 1Cr 8:29; 9:35.

5. Uma das esposas de Davi e filha de Talmai, rei de Gesur. Era a mãe de Absalão. — 2Sa 3:2, 3; 1Cr 3:1, 2.

6. Pai ou antepassado de Hanã, poderoso das forças militares de Davi. — 1Cr 11:26, 43.

7. Pai ou antepassado de Sefatias, príncipe de Israel, designado líder dos simeonitas na organização do serviço do rei feita por Davi. — 1Cr 27:1, 16, 22.

8. Pai de Aquis, rei de Gate, para quem fugiram os escravos de Simei, logo cedo no reinado de Salomão. (1Rs 2:39) Este Maacá talvez seja o Maoque de 1 Samuel 27:2. — Veja MAOQUE.

9. Neta de Absalão, a esposa mais amada do Rei Roboão, de Judá, e mãe do rei Abias (Abijão). (2Cr 11:20-22; 1Rs 15:1, 2, 9, 10) Ela era considerada "senhora" no reino, sendo a rainha-mãe, até que seu neto, o Rei Asa, no restabelecimento da verdadeira adoração, a removeu, "porque ela tinha feito um ídolo horrível ao poste sagrado", ou Axerá. (1Rs 15:9-13; 2Cr 15:16) Em 2 Crônicas 13:2 ela é chamada Micaia.

10. Pequeno reino existente no N da Palestina na época da invasão israelita, também chamado Maacate, em algumas traduções. Evidentemente, o território da tribo de Manassés devia abranger esta região, mas o registro mostra que os israelitas não desapossaram os habitantes daquela terra, de modo que estes continuaram "morando no meio de Israel". (De 3:14; Jos 13:13) Maacá, geralmente associado com o vizinho reino de Gesur, parece que se encontrava ao N daquele reino e fazia divisa com a região de Basã. (Jos 12:5) Usualmente, acha-se que ocupava a região desde as encostas meridionais do monte Hermom até a bacia de Hulé, e desde o rio Jordão, em direção ao L, até à beira do deserto Sírio, ou, basicamente, a parte setentrional do atual distrito de Golã.

Maacá era um reino arameu (sírio), cujo povo talvez descendesse do filho de Naor do mesmo nome. (Gên 22:24; 1Cr 19:6) Quando os amonitas foram guerrear contra o Rei Davi, eles contrataram os serviços do rei de Maacá, e de mais outros. O pequeno número das tropas fornecidas por Maacá, em comparação com as dos outros aliados, talvez indique o tamanho reduzido do reino maacatita. (2Sa 10:6-8) A vitória de Joabe sobre os amonitas e seus aliados sírios foi seguida por uma vitória adicional do Rei Davi sobre os sírios. (2Sa 10:13-19) À base de relatos posteriores, parece provável que o reino de Maacá, por fim, ficou sob o domínio do reino de Damasco.

MAACATE. Veja MAACÁ N.º 10.

MAACATITA [De (Pertencente a) Maacá]. Habitante do reino arameu de Maacá (De 3:14; Jos 12:5; 13:13), um deles sendo Estemoa. (1Cr 4:19) Sugere-se que Abel-Bete-Maacá (que significa "Curso de Água da Casa de Maacá"), uma cidade no N da Palestina, talvez tenha sido chamada assim por causa da proximidade com a região ocupada pelos maacatitas. — 1Rs 15:20.

MAADAI [forma abreviada de Maadias]. Israelita dentre os "filhos de Bani", que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas as despediram nos dias de Esdras depois do retorno dos judeus do exílio babilônico. — Esd 10:25, 34, 44.

MAADIAS [Jah Se Adorna]. Sacerdote e cabeça duma casa paterna que acompanhou os que retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel. (Ne 12:1, 5) O Moadias mencionado em Neemias 12:17 talvez seja a mesma pessoa.

MAAI. Sacerdote e músico descendente de Asafe, que tocou um instrumento de canto na inauguração da muralha de Jerusalém, no tempo de Neemias. — Ne 12:36.

MAALA [duma raiz que significa "enfraquecer; adoecer"].

1. Uma das filhas de Zelofeade, da tribo de Manassés. Maala e suas irmãs pediram a herança do pai, visto que ele não teve filhos varões, mas apenas cinco filhas. Moisés indagou a Jeová, que determinou que as filhas de Zelofeade deviam recebê-la. (Núm 26:28-33; 27:1-11) Uma subsequente ordem de Jeová, por meio de Moisés, exigiu de Maala e das outras filhas de Zelofeade que se casassem dentro da tribo de Manassés, a fim de que a herança não passasse para outra tribo. Concordemente, Maala e suas irmãs "tornaram-se esposas de filhos dos irmãos de seu pai". (Núm 36:1-6, 10-12) Esta decisão judicial estabeleceu um precedente quanto a heranças. (Núm 36:7-9) Mais tarde, elas compareceram perante Eleazar, o sacerdote, e Josué, citando a ordem de Jeová, e receberam "uma herança no meio dos irmãos de seu pai". — Jos 17:3, 4.

2. Descendente de Manassés, cuja mãe era Hamolequete. Não se declara se era filho ou filha. — 1Cr 7:17, 18.

MAALALEL. Veja MALALEL.

MAALATE, I.

1. Filha de Ismael, irmã de Nebaiote e uma das mulheres que Esaú tomou por esposa. (Gên 28:9) Ela possivelmente é a Basemate de Gênesis 36:3.

2. Neta de Davi através do seu filho Jerimote. Ela tornou-se uma das esposas de Roboão. — 2Cr 11:18.

MAALATE, II. Provavelmente um termo musical, talvez de natureza técnica, encontrado nos cabeçalhos dos Salmos 53 e 88. Alguns acham que este termo talvez seja aparentado com o radical dum verbo hebraico que significa "enfraquecer; adoecer", sugerindo assim uma melodia triste e melancólica. Isto se harmonizaria com o conteúdo um tanto triste dos dois cânticos, especialmente o do Salmo 88.

MAANAIM [Dois Acampamentos]. Lugar ao L do Jordão, onde Jacó, depois de deixar Labão, encontrou-se com um grupo de anjos. Jacó chamou então o lugar de "Maanaim". (Gên 32:1, 2) O significado do nome ("Dois Acampamentos") talvez aluda ao "acampamento de Deus", conforme representado pelos Seus anjos, e ao acampamento de Jacó. Parece que algum tempo depois se construiu neste sítio uma cidade. No século 15 AEC, esta cidade foi primeiro designada aos gaditas e depois aos levitas meraritas. — Jos 13:24, 26; 21:34, 38.

Enquanto Davi governava em Hébron, Maanaim servia de capital do reino rival do filho e sucessor de Saul, Is-Bosete. Isto sugere que era fortificada e se encontrava numa posição estratégica. (2Sa 2:8-11, 29) Foi evidentemente nesta cidade que Is-Bosete foi assassinado. (2Sa 4:5-7) Mais tarde, Davi, fugindo diante do seu rebelde filho Absalão, chegou a Gileade, onde foi bondosamente recebido em Maanaim. Ele permaneceu ali a pedido dos seus apoiadores e não participou na batalha que frustrou totalmente a tentativa de Absalão, de se apoderar do trono. (2Sa 17:24–18:16; 19:32; 1Rs 2:8) Durante o reinado de Salomão, filho de Davi, Maanaim encontrava-se sob a jurisdição do preposto Ainadabe. — 1Rs 4:7, 14.

No Cântico de Salomão 6:13, "a dança de dois acampamentos" também pode ser vertida "a dança de Maanaim". (ALA; IBB) Talvez isso se refira a uma dança associada com certa festividade celebrada em Maanaim. — Veja Jz 21:19, 21.

A localização exata de Maanaim é incerta, mas, encontrava-se ao L do Jordão e evidentemente ao N do Jaboque. (2Sa 2:29; Gên 31:21; 32:2, 22) Alguns sugerem Khirbet Mahneh (ou: Mihna), a uns 19 km ao N do Jaboque e aproximadamente à mesma distância ao L do Jordão; no entanto, muitos acham que isto é demasiadamente ao N do Jaboque. Yohanan Aharoni identifica Maanaim com Tell edh-Dhahab el-Gharbi, na margem N do Jaboque, a uns 12 km ao L do Jordão. — The Land of the Bible (A Terra da Bíblia), traduzido para o inglês e editado por A. Rainey, 1979, pp. 314, 439.

MAANÉ-DÃ [Acampamento de Dã]. Lugar uma vez descrito como se encontrando "entre Zorá e Estaol" (Jz 13:25) e outra vez como ficando ao O de Quiriate-Jearim. (Jz 18:11, 12) Alguns acham que se trata de dois lugares diferentes, visto que as localidades sugeridas de Estaol e Zorá se encontram alguns quilômetros ao SO de Quiriate-Jearim. De qualquer modo, desconhece-se a localização de Maané-Dã. Seu nome significa "Acampamento de Dã", e, portanto, talvez simplesmente indique uma povoação temporária ou um acampamento, e é compreensível que se possa ter aplicado a mais de um lugar.

MAARAI [duma raiz que significa "apressar(-se); acelerar"]. Um poderoso das forças militares de Davi, que era netofatita. (2Sa 23:8, 28; 1Cr 11:26, 30) Era descendente de Zerá, e ele foi mais tarde encarregado da turma de 24.000 que ministravam ao rei durante o décimo mês. — 1Cr 27:1, 13.

MAARATE [Caverna; ou: Campo sem Vegetação]. Cidade designada à tribo de Judá. (Jos 15:21, 59) Um lugar perto da aldeia de Beit Ummar, na região montanhosa de Judá, 11 km ao norte de Hébron, é considerado como a localização provável. Alguns sugerem que Maarate talvez seja outro nome para Marote. — Miq 1:9, 12.

MAASAI [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Maaseias]. Sacerdote e descendente de Imer, e que retornou do exílio babilônico. — 1Cr 9:10, 12.

MAASEIAS [Obra de Jeová].

1. Músico levita da segunda turma, que tocava um instrumento de cordas quando a arca de Jeová foi trazida da casa de Obede-Edom para Jerusalém, nos dias de Davi. — 1Cr 15:17-20, 25.

2. Um dos "chefes de cem", que fizeram um pacto com o sumo sacerdote Jeoiada com relação a estabelecer Jeoás como rei legítimo de Judá em lugar da usurpadora Atalia. — 2Cr 23:1.

3. Oficial sob o controle de Hananias, príncipe do Rei Uzias, de Judá. Ele evidentemente tinha algo que ver com o registro das forças militares de Uzias. — 2Cr 26:11.

4. "Filho do rei" (descendente do Rei Acaz, de Judá, ou possivelmente um oficial de ascendência real) que foi morto pelo efraimita Zicri, quando Peca, de Israel, invadiu Judá. — 2Cr 28:1, 6, 7.

5. Chefe da cidade de Jerusalém e um dos homens que o Rei Josias mandou para consertar a casa de Jeová. — 2Cr 34:8.

6. Sacerdote, e pai de certo Sofonias, contemporâneo de Jeremias. — Je 21:1; 29:25; 37:3.

7. Pai de Zedequias, falso profeta nos dias de Jeremias. — Je 29:21.

8. Filho de Salum, o porteiro, e evidentemente levita. Um refeitório do templo estava relacionado com o nome dele. — Je 35:4.

9. Um dos filhos dos sacerdotes, da casa de Jesua, daqueles que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram no tempo de Esdras. — Esd 10:18, 19, 44.

10. Sacerdote "dos filhos de Harim", daqueles que se haviam casado com esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram no tempo de Esdras. — Esd 10:21, 44.

11. Sacerdote "dos filhos de Pasur", também daqueles que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:22, 44.

12. Israelita "dos filhos de Paate-Moabe", daqueles que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:25, 30, 44.

13. Pai ou antepassado de certo Azarias, um dos que consertaram a muralha de Jerusalém sob a supervisão de Neemias. — Ne 3:23.

14. Homem que ficou em pé à direita de Esdras, quando este leu a Lei para os israelitas reunidos em Jerusalém. — Ne 8:2, 4.

15. Levita que ajudou o sacerdote Esdras por explicar a Lei aos israelitas reunidos em Jerusalém. — Ne 8:7.

16. Um dos "cabeças do povo", cujo descendente, se não ele mesmo, atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" do tempo de Neemias. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 25.

17. Homem de Judá, que morava em Jerusalém após o retorno do exílio babilônico. (Ne 11:4, 5) Talvez seja o Asaías de 1 Crônicas 9:5. — Veja ASAÍAS N.º 4.

18. Homem de Benjamim, que era antepassado de Salu, morador de Jerusalém no tempo de Neemias. — Ne 11:7.

19. Sacerdote que participou na dedicação da muralha de Jerusalém no tempo de Neemias. — Ne 12:41.

20. Outro sacerdote que participou na dedicação da muralha de Jerusalém no tempo de Neemias. — Ne 12:42.

MAATE [1, 2: possivelmente duma raiz que significa "aterrorizar"].

1. Levita coatita e antepassado de Samuel e de Hemã, o cantor na casa de Jeová. — 1Cr 6:31-35.

2. Um dos levitas coatitas que ajudaram na limpeza do templo, nos dias do Rei Ezequias. (2Cr 29:12, 15, 16) Evidentemente, trata-se da mesma pessoa que foi constituída em comissário sob Conanias e Simei, encarregado 'da contribuição, e do décimo, e das coisas sagradas' no templo. — 2Cr 31:12, 13.

3. Um dos antepassados de Jesus, alistado na sua genealogia conforme apresentada por Lucas. — Lu 3:23, 26.

MAAVITA. Designação aplicada a Eliel, um dos poderosos das forças militares de Davi. (1Cr 11:26, 46) O termo talvez fosse usado para diferenciá-lo do Eliel de 1 Crônicas 11:47.

MAAZ [forma abreviada de Aimaás]. Um dos descendentes de Judá através de Jerameel e de Rão. — 1Cr 2:3, 25, 27.

MAAZIAS [Jeová é um Baluarte].

1. Descendente de Arão, constituído em cabeça da 24.ª turma de sacerdotes, nos dias de Davi. — 1Cr 24:1, 18.

2. Sacerdote ou antepassado de um, que atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" do tempo de Neemias. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 8.

MAAZIOTE. Levita coatita e último mencionado dos 14 filhos de Hemã. Maaziote tornou-se cabeça do 23.º grupo de serviço dos músicos do templo, conforme organizados por Davi. — 1Cr 25:4-6, 8, 9, 30.

MAÇÃ [hebr.: tap·pú·ahh]. Há muita conjectura sobre a identificação da árvore e do fruto indicados pela palavra hebraica tap·pú·ahh. A própria palavra indica algo que se distingue pela fragrância, ou cheiro. Deriva da raiz na·fáhh, que significa "soprar; ofegar; lutar por fôlego". (Gên 2:7; Jó 31:39; Je 15:9) M. C. Fisher escreveu sobre isso: "O parentesco [com na·fáhh], a princípio, parece semanticamente forçado, mas as ideias de 'soprar' e 'exalar um cheiro' estão relacionadas. A forma reduzida puah significa tanto 'soprar' (o vento) como 'exalar um cheiro agradável, ser fragrante'." — Theological Wordbook of the Old Testament (Manual Teológico de Termos do Antigo Testamento), editado por R. L. Harris, 1980, Vol. 2, p. 586.

Diversas frutas têm sido sugeridas em lugar da maçã, inclusive a laranja, a cidra, o marmelo e o damasco. A objeção principal levantada à maçã é que o clima quente e seco da maior parte da Palestina não é favorável ao cultivo da maçã. Todavia, a palavra árabe aparentada tuffah significa primariamente "maçã", e pode-se notar que os nomes hebraicos dos lugares Tapua e Bete-Tapua (provavelmente chamados assim por causa da prevalência desta fruta na região deles) têm sido preservados nos seus equivalentes árabes pelo uso desta palavra. (Jos 12:17; 15:34, 53; 16:8; 17:8) Estes lugares não se encontravam nas baixadas, mas nas regiões montanhosas, onde o clima em geral é mais moderado. Além disso, não se pode totalmente excluir a possibilidade de algumas variações climáticas no passado. Realmente, macieiras crescem hoje em Israel, e assim parecem enquadrar-se apropriadamente na descrição bíblica. William Thomson, que no século 19 ficou muitos anos na Síria e na Palestina, relatou ter encontrado pomares de macieiras até mesmo na região de Ascalom, nas planícies da Filístia. — The Land and the Book (A Terra e o Livro), revisado por J. Grande, 1910, pp. 545, 546.

A macieira (Pyrus malus) é mencionada principalmente em O Cântico de Salomão, onde as expressões de amor do pastor companheiro da sulamita são comparadas à agradável sombra da macieira e à doçura do seu fruto. (Cân 2:3, 5) O rei compara o hálito dela à fragrância das maçãs. (Cân 7:8; veja também 8:5.) Em Provérbios (25:11) compara-se a fala oportuna e apropriada a "maçãs de ouro em esculturas de prata". A única referência adicional à maçã ocorre em Joel 1:12. A tradição comum, de que a maçã era o fruto proibido do Éden, não tem nenhuma base bíblica.

MACACO [hebr.: qohf]. Os macacos importados pelo Rei Salomão talvez fossem do tipo de macacos de cauda longa, mencionados por antigos escritores como nativos da Etiópia. (1Rs 10:22; 2Cr 9:21) Ser a palavra hebraica qohf possivelmente aparentada com a palavra sânscrita kapi e serem os pavões considerados nativos do SE da Ásia têm dado margem à conclusão de que os macacos eram trazidos pela frota de Salomão da Índia ou do Sri Lanka. No entanto, os itens importados não necessariamente tinham de vir diretamente do país de origem, nem da mesma terra, em vista dos indícios de que havia intercâmbio comercial entre a Índia e a África, mesmo já antes do tempo de Salomão. — Veja PAVÃO; TÁRSIS N.º 4.

MACAZ [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "abominar"]. Lugar sob a jurisdição de um dos 12 prepostos de Salomão. (1Rs 4:7, 9) Macaz é provisoriamente identificado com Khirbet el-Mukheizin, a uns 5 km ao NO de Ecrom.

MACBANAI. Gadita poderoso, que se juntou ao grupo de Davi "no lugar de difícil acesso, no ermo", e tornou-se um dos cabeças do seu exército. — 1Cr 12:8-14.

MACBENA. O nome aparece na lista dos descendentes de Calebe com sua concubina Maacá, sendo o filho dela, Seva, chamado de "pai de Macbena e pai de Gibeia". (1Cr 2:48, 49) Alguns comentadores, notando que muitos dos nomes nesta parte também ocorrem como nome de cidades, sugerem que Macbena talvez seja o nome duma cidade fundada por Seva.

MACEDÔNIA, MACEDÔNIO. Região do SE da Europa, que ocupa a parte central do que agora se conhece como a península Balcânica. Estendia-se desde o mar Adriático, no O, até o mar Egeu, no L, e ficava ao N da Acaia. Embora tenha numerosas planícies férteis, é principalmente uma região montanhosa. Antigamente, a Macedônia servia de elo vital entre o leste e o oeste. A Via Egnatia, construída pelos romanos, ia desde Dirráquio e Apolônia, na costa O da península até Neápolis, na costa L, e mais além.

Os macedônios eram descendentes de Jafé, talvez através de Quitim, filho de Javã. (Gên 10: 2, 4, 5) O nome Quitim, embora primariamente associado com a ilha de Chipre, era antigamente também usado para se referir a outras regiões. O historiador Josefo escreve que os hebreus chamavam as ilhas e a maior parte das costas marítimas (aparentemente as da região mediterrânea) de "Hhetim". (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], I, 128 [vi, 1]) Isto talvez explique por que a Macedônia é chamada de "Cetim" no livro apócrifo de Primeiro Macabeus (1:1, BJ; CBC) e fornece uma possível base para os macedônios serem considerados descendentes de Quitim.

História. A Macedônia obteve destaque sob o governo de Filipe II. Ele conseguiu consolidar a Macedônia e as regiões vizinhas, e, em resultado da sua vitória na batalha de Queroneia (338 AEC), a Macedônia obteve a supremacia na relação com a maioria dos estados gregos. Depois do assassinato de Filipe, ascendeu ao trono seu filho, Alexandre (o Grande). Dois anos depois, Alexandre iniciou sua extensa campanha de conquista. Até a sua morte em Babilônia (323 AEC), Alexandre, com suas vitórias militares, havia edificado um império que se estendia para o L até a Índia, e incluía a Mesopotâmia, a Síria, a Palestina, o Egito, a Ásia Menor, a Trácia, a Macedônia e a Grécia. — Veja Da 2:31-33, 39; 7:6; 8:1-7, 20, 21; ALEXANDRE N.º 1; ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS; IMAGEM (ESTÁTUA).

Após a morte de Alexandre, quando o império foi dividido, Antípater, que fora regente da Macedônia enquanto Alexandre guerreava no leste, reteve sua posição. Antes da sua morte, Antípater confiou a regência a Polispercon, em vez de a seu filho Cassandro. Seguiram-se então lutas políticas, que finalmente culminaram com o reconhecimento de Cassandro como rei da Macedônia. Sucedeu-lhe seu filho Alexandre, mas pouco depois este foi morto por Demétrio Poliorcete (filho de Antígono Ciclops, um dos generais de Alexandre, o Grande). Novamente houve confusão. Por fim, Antígono Gônatas, filho de Demétrio Poliorcete, obteve posse do trono. Embora fosse duas vezes expulso do seu reino, Antígono o recuperou cada vez, e a Macedônia continuou a ser governada pelos antigônidas, até passar a estar sob a administração romana. Em meados do segundo século AEC, a Macedônia tornou-se província romana. Por algum tempo durante o primeiro século EC, ficou unida com a Acaia, ao S, e a Mésia, ao N, para formar uma província imperial sob o legado da Mésia. Todavia, em 44 EC, a Macedônia tornou-se novamente uma província senatorial sob a jurisdição de um governador romano. — Veja GRÉCIA, GREGOS.

O Ministério de Paulo. A Macedônia foi a primeira região da Europa a ser visitada pelo apóstolo Paulo na sua segunda viagem missionária. Enquanto Paulo estava em Trôade, no NO da Ásia Menor, ele teve uma visão. "Certo homem macedônio estava em pé, suplicando-lhe e dizendo: 'Passa à Macedônia e ajuda-nos.'" (At 16:8, 9) Paulo acatou a esta visão e, junto com Lucas, Timóteo e Silas (e, quem sabe, outros companheiros), partiu para a Macedônia. Depois de chegar a Neápolis (o porto de Filipos, no NE da Macedônia), Paulo dirigiu-se a Filipos e proclamou ali as boas novas. (At 16:11-40) Parece que Lucas permaneceu em Filipos quando Paulo, Silas e Timóteo percorreram as cidades macedônias de Anfípolis (uns 50 km ao OSO de Filipos) e Apolônia (uns 35 km ao SO de Anfípolis). A seguir, Paulo visitou respectivamente as cidades macedônias de Tessalônica (uns 45 km ao ONO de Apolônia) e Bereia (uns 65 km ao OSO de Tessalônica). (At 17:1-12) Por causa da ameaça de violência por parte duma turba em Bereia, Paulo se viu obrigado a partir da Macedônia. Mas, deixou Silas e Timóteo em Bereia, para que cuidassem do novo grupo de crentes ali. Silas e Timóteo deviam juntar-se a ele mais tarde. (At 17:13-15) Paulo, preocupado com o bem-estar da recém-formada congregação em Tessalônica, enviou Timóteo para encorajar os irmãos ali. (1Te 3:1, 2) Talvez Timóteo se tenha juntado a Paulo em Atenas, na Acaia, e depois tenha sido mandado de volta a Tessalônica. Mas, parece mais provável que Paulo o avisou em Bereia para fazer a viagem a Tessalônica. O bom relatório que Timóteo trouxe, ao retornar, induziu Paulo a escrever a sua primeira carta aos tessalonicenses. (1Te 3:6; At 18:5) Sua segunda carta aos tessalonicenses seguiu-se pouco depois.

No decurso da sua terceira viagem missionária, Paulo fez planos para retornar à Macedônia. (1Co 16:5-8; 2Co 1:15, 16) Embora Paulo permanecesse mais um tempo em Éfeso, mandou na sua frente Timóteo e Erasto à Macedônia. (At 19:21, 22) Foi depois disso que o prateiro efésio Demétrio instigou um distúrbio contra Paulo. A cidade foi lançada em confusão, e, ao passo que os efésios afluíram ao teatro, pegaram e levaram junto "Gaio e Aristarco, macedônios, companheiros de viagem de Paulo". (At 19:23-29) Acabado o distúrbio, Paulo foi para a Macedônia. (At 20:1) Ele parece ter parado em Trôade. Ali ficou desapontado por não encontrar Tito, que havia sido enviado a Corinto, na Acaia, para ajudar na coleta para os santos na Judeia. (2Co 2:12, 13) Paulo passou então para a Macedônia, onde Tito se juntou a ele, e onde ficou sabendo o modo como os coríntios tinham reagido à sua primeira carta. (2Co 7:5-7) Subsequentemente, Paulo escreveu a sua segunda carta aos coríntios, e mais tarde foi para o sul, para a Grécia. Pretendera viajar da Grécia para a Síria, mas uma trama contra ele por parte dos judeus o induziu a mudar de planos e retornar em vez disso à Macedônia. (At 20:2, 3) Seus companheiros de viagem incluíam três macedônios: Sópater, Aristarco e Segundo. — At 20:4.

Embora os próprios cristãos macedônios fossem pobres, eles eram muito generosos. Esforçavam-se além da sua capacidade real, para fazer contribuições para os irmãos necessitados na Judeia. (2Co 8:1-7; compare isso com Ro 15:26, 27; 2Co 9:1-7.) Os filipenses destacavam-se em especial no seu apoio dado ao ministério de Paulo. (2Co 11:8, 9; Fil 4:15-17) Mesmo durante o primeiro encarceramento de Paulo em Roma, a congregação de Filipos enviou Epafrodito para ministrar às necessidades de Paulo. (Fil 2:25-30; 4:18) E os tessalonicenses mostraram grande fé e perseverança, e, portanto, tornaram-se exemplo para "todos os crentes na Macedônia e na Acaia". — 1Te 1:1-8; 4:9, 10.

Parece que Paulo, depois de ser solto da prisão em Roma, revisitou a Macedônia e escreveu dali a carta conhecida como a Primeira a Timóteo. (1Ti 1:3) A carta a Tito talvez fosse também escrita da Macedônia.

MACHADO. Instrumento cortante e encabado, usado para talhar madeira ou pedra; usado também como arma.

Há diversas palavras hebraicas e gregas que se referem a este instrumento. A palavra hebraica gar·zén, encontrada na Bíblia e que se refere a um machado usado para rachar lenha, também é encontrada na inscrição de Siloé referente a um machado usado para escavar rocha. (De 19:5; Is 10:15) Segundo o Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros (Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento), de Koehler e Baumgartner (Leiden, 1958, p. 650), a palavra hebraica sa·ghár, que ocorre no Salmo 35:3, denota uma "acha bipene". E, em 2 Reis 6:5, 6, a palavra hebraica bar·zél, que literalmente significa "ferro", tem o sentido de "ferro do machado".

Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 20:4, faz-se referência a herdeiros do reino celestial "executados com o machado, pelo testemunho que deram de Jesus e por terem falado a respeito de Deus". Visto que o machado às vezes era usado pelo estado político em execuções, isto deve significar que governos humanos haviam julgado que esses servos leais de Deus não mereciam viver.

MACIÇA, ÁRVORE. Veja ÁRVORE GRANDE, ÁRVORE MACIÇA.

MACNADEBAI. Israelita pós-exílico dentre aqueles que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras, nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:25, 40, 44.

MACPELA [duma raiz que significa "duplicar", possivelmente indicando que a caverna tinha uma entrada dupla, ou duas cavidades ou nichos]. Nome usado com referência a um campo e a uma caverna, na vizinhança de Hébron, comprados por Abraão de Efrom, o hitita, por 400 siclos de prata (c. US$ 880). A caverna serviu de sepultura para Sara, esposa de Abraão, e pelo menos para mais cinco outros: Abraão, Isaque, Rebeca, Jacó e Leia. — Gên 23:14-19; 25:9; 49:30, 31; 50:13.

A caverna sepulcral geralmente é identificada com Meʽarat HaMakhpela, situada na atual Hébron debaixo duma mesquita muçulmana, dentro dum recinto chamado de Haram el-Khalil.

Em Gênesis 23:17, o termo da língua hebraica que indica a posição da caverna de Macpela com relação a Manre tem sido traduzido diversamente como "a leste de" (BLH), "em frente de" (Al; IBB), "diante de" (BMD; LEB), "perto de" (BV), "defronte de" (BJ; NM). Se a tradicional localização de Manre (er-Ramat el-Khalil) for correta, então não é apropriada a tradução "a leste de Manre", visto que este lugar fica a uns 3 km ao N da atual Hébron. A frase "Manre, quer dizer, Hébron" (Gên 23:19), talvez signifique que Manre se encontrava no distrito de Hébron.

MACTÉS [Almofariz]. Evidentemente, um setor de Jerusalém perto do Portão do Peixe e do segundo bairro. Predisse-se que os habitantes de Mactés, na época da calamidade de Judá, uivariam, visto que as atividades comerciais cessariam ali. — Sof 1:1, 2, 10, 11.

A palavra hebraica makh·tésh refere-se a um "almofariz" (Pr 27:22) ou a "uma cavidade em forma de almofariz" (Jz 15:19), e, por isso, algumas traduções usam "Morteiro" em vez de "Mactés" como nome próprio. (CBC; MC; PIB) O Targum identifica Mactés com o vale do Cédron, a ravina funda ao longo da muralha oriental de Jerusalém. Mas, este vale não se encontra na vizinhança do "Portão do Peixe" e do "segundo bairro", mais ocidentais. Por este motivo, pensa-se, em geral, que Mactés indica uma parte do vale Central (Tiropeom), talvez a parte superior.

MÁCULA. Defeito físico ou moral, imperfeição; insalubridade; "algo de mau". — De 17:1.

A palavra hebraica para um "defeito" físico ou moral é mum. (Le 21:17; Jó 31:7) A palavra grega mó·mos significa "mácula", ao passo que a palavra aparentada á·mo·mos significa "sem mácula". (2Pe 2:13; Ef 1:4) Ambas são aparentadas com mo·má·o·mai, que significa "achar falta em". — 2Co 6:3; 8:20.

Jeová Deus, que é 'perfeito na sua atuação ["sem mácula (imaculadas) são as suas obras", Sy]', em contraste disse a respeito de Israel: "Agiram ruinosamente da sua parte; não são seus filhos, o defeito é deles." — De 32:4, 5.

O sacerdote levita que ministrava perante o Deus da perfeição, portanto, tinha de estar livre de máculas físicas tais como cegueira, coxeadura, nariz fendido, anomalias assim como uma mão comprida demais, ser corcunda, ter mão fraturada, magreza tísica, moléstias nos olhos ou na pele, mão ou pé quebrado, e testículos quebrados ou esmagados. (Le 21:18-20) O sumo sacerdote de Israel, livre de tais defeitos, representava bem o Grande Sumo Sacerdote Jesus Cristo, que é "cândido, imaculado". — He 7:26.

Sob a Lei mosaica, exigia-se que os animais sacrificiais fossem sadios e livres de mácula. (Êx 12:5; Le 4:3, 28; De 15:21) O mesmo aplicava-se também aos sacrifícios relacionados com o templo pictórico observado em visão por Ezequiel. (Ez 43:22, 23) De maneira similar, Cristo, "um cordeiro sem mácula nem mancha", "se ofereceu a Deus sem mácula". — 1Pe 1:19; He 9:14.

Entre aqueles cuja aparência física é descrita como 'sem defeito' encontravam-se Absalão, a moça sulamita e certos filhos de Israel em Babilônia. (2Sa 14:25; Cân 4:7; Da 1:4) Todos os sob a Lei eram incentivados a se importarem uns com os outros e a se protegerem mutuamente, para não ficar de algum modo maculados. "Caso um homem cause defeito no seu colega, então, como ele fez, assim se lhe tem de fazer. Fratura por fratura, olho por olho, dente por dente; a mesma sorte de defeito que ele cause ao homem é que se lhe deve causar." (Le 24:19, 20) O apóstolo expressou preocupação quanto a manter a congregação cristã livre de máculas em sentido espiritual. — Ef 1:4; 5:27; Col 1:22; veja também Ju 24.

MADAI. Terceiro filho alistado de Jafé. (Gên 10:2; 1Cr 1:5) Crê-se tratar-se do progenitor dos medos. Por causa deste conceito, a palavra hebraica Ma·dhái, em outros lugares da Bíblia, é traduzida "medos", ou "Média", como em 2 Reis 17:6; 18:11; Ester 1:3; Isaías 13:17; 21:2; e em outros textos. Os medos eram também chamados de madaia no idioma assírio-babilônico (acadiano) e de mada no antigo persa. Em alguma época do passado, eles se fixaram na região do planalto iraniano, estabelecendo-se principalmente entre os montes Elburz (ao S do mar Cáspio) e os montes Zagros, ao L de Assíria. O nome atual do Irã deriva da palavra "ariano", termo usado para se referir aos de ascendência jafética.

MADALENA, MARIA. Veja MARIA N.º 3.

MADEIRA FRAGRANTE. Entre as mercadorias de luxo trazidas pelos comerciantes à simbólica "Babilônia, a Grande", havia objetos de "madeira fragrante", ou "tuia-da-argélia". (Re 17:5; 18:11, 12 n) Esta madeira, provavelmente procedente do N da África, era prezada pelos antigos romanos para a fabricação de suntuosa mobília. A madeira mais cara era a da parte inferior do tronco, por causa da variedade no grão e da largura das peças que se podiam obter. A madeira era fragrante, dura e de bom polimento; e por causa das linhas ondulantes ou em espiral do grão, algumas das mesas feitas com ela eram chamadas de "mesas de tigre" ou "mesas de pantera". Entre os gregos, usava-se na adoração no templo a madeira de bálsamo, e o nome dela deriva do termo grego para fazer ofertas queimadas.

Entende-se que esta madeira fragrante é da árvore chamada sandáraca (Tetraclinis articulata), uma conífera nativa do N da África e da família dos ciprestes, que atinge a altura de 4,5 a 7,5 m. A madeira tem uma rica tonalidade marrom-avermelhada e fino grão.

MADEIRO. Veja ESTACA DE TORTURA.

MADMANA [duma raiz que significa "estrume"].

1. Este nome aparece na lista de descendentes de Judá através de Calebe. Diz-se que Maacá, a concubina de Calebe, deu à luz "Saafe, pai de Madmana". (1Cr 2:49) No entanto, a maioria dos peritos considera que o termo "pai" usado aqui tem o sentido de "fundador" e acha que Madmana, neste texto, corresponde à cidade considerada a seguir, sendo Saafe tomado como o fundador ou talvez o reconstrutor dela após a sua captura. Pode-se notar que os nomes de Quiriate-Jearim e Belém ocorrem num contexto similar nos versículos seguintes. — 1Cr 2:50, 54.

2. Cidade da parte meridional do território de Judá. (Jos 15:21, 31) Embora Umm Deimneh talvez retenha o nome antigo, não existem restos substanciais neste lugar. Ultimamente, os peritos preferem Khirbet Tatrit, a uns 15 km ao NE de Berseba. A comparação de Josué 15:31 com as listas paralelas em Josué 19:5 e 1 Crônicas 4:31 indica tratar-se de Bete-Marcabote. Bete-Marcabote (que significa "Casa dos Carros") talvez tenha sido um nome secundário de Madmana. — Veja BETE-MARCABOTE.

MADMÉM [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "estrume"]. Aparentemente era um lugar em Moabe, a respeito do qual se predisse que sofreria calamidade pela espada. Jeremias 48:2: "Também tu, ó Madmém, deves ficar quieta", traduz a frase hebraica gam-madh·mén tid·dóm·mi. Muitos peritos acreditam que o m inicial em madh·mén ("Madmém") foi inadvertidamente repetido da palavra anterior (gam). Sem o m inicial, as consoantes de Madmém correspondem às de Dimom, e, portanto, frequentemente se acha que Madmém seja a própria Dimom (possivelmente Dimna, a uns 10 km ao N de Karak). Todavia, é possível que Madmém não designa um lugar propriamente dito, visto que a tradução da Septuaginta grega, da Pesito siríaca e da Vulgata latina sugerem que o antigo texto hebraico rezava: 'Sim, tu [Moabe] serás totalmente silenciado.'

MADMENA [duma raiz que significa "estrume"]. Lugar no caminho do avanço assírio contra Jerusalém. (Is 10:24, 31, 32) Desconhece-se hoje a localização exata de Madmena. Mas, alguns procuram identificá-lo com Shuʽfat, a uns 4 km ao NNO do monte do Templo em Jerusalém.

MADOM [dum verbo radical que significa "julgar"]. Cidade real cananeia que se aliou a Hazor contra os israelitas e que subsequentemente foi derrotada. (Jos 11:1-12; 12:19) Madom usualmente é identificada com Qarn Hattin (Horvat Qarne Hittim), a uns 8 km ao ONO de Tiberíades. Khirbet Madin, cerca de 1 km ao S, parece preservar o nome antigo. No entanto, alguns questionam esta identificação, porque ela se baseia exclusivamente na similaridade do nome da vizinha Madin com o nome bíblico.

MADRE. Termo usado para indicar o útero, o órgão feminino em que os nascituros são nutridos e crescem antes do nascimento. Jeová é o Criador da madre (Gên 2:22), e é Ele quem pode torná-la fecunda (Gên 29:31; 30:22; 49:25) ou estéril. (Gên 20:18) A madre de Sara estava 'morta', ou já além de poder conceber, quando Jeová lhe restabeleceu a faculdade de procriar. (Ro 4:19; Gên 18:11, 12; 21:1-3) A Bíblia salienta que Jeová é responsável pelo processo da formação do embrião na madre, mostrando que o desenvolvimento do humano na madre segue o padrão de Deus e não é produto do acaso ou da evolução. (Jó 31:15; compare isso com Jó 10:8; Sal 139:13-16; Is 45:9.) Visto que a madre foi especificamente criada para a propagação da raça, a "madre impedida" é alistada como uma das quatro coisas que não disseram: "Basta!" — Pr 30:15, 16.

Uma vez que a madre, ou útero, está situada na região do corpo conhecida como ventre, frequentemente se usa a palavra hebraica para "ventre" com referência primária à madre, como em Gênesis 25:23; Deuteronômio 7:13; Salmo 127:3. — Veja VENTRE.

Deus, como Projetista da madre, também pode ver com exatidão o que se forma nela. Pode ver as tendências hereditárias que se desenvolvem na criança ainda por nascer e pode determinar que uso Ele quer fazer da pessoa, se Ele assim quiser. — Je 1:5; Lu 1:15; compare isso com Ro 9:10-13.

Jeová ordenou a Israel: "Santifica para mim todo primogênito macho que abrir cada madre, entre os filhos de Israel, entre homens e animais. É meu." (Êx 13:2) Nos nascimentos humanos, isto se referia ao primeiro filho do sexo masculino do pai. — Veja PRIMOGÊNITO, PRIMEIRO NASCIDO.

Jesus indicou que sua mãe, Maria, não devia ser honrada acima de outros que servem a Deus. Em certa ocasião, enquanto ele estava ensinando, uma mulher clamou: "Feliz é a madre que te carregou e os peitos em que mamaste!" Jesus respondeu: "Não, antes: Felizes são os que ouvem a palavra de Deus e a guardam!" (Lu 11:27, 28) Mais tarde, quando Jesus era levado à estaca de tortura, ele fez uma profecia a respeito da vindoura destruição de Jerusalém, dizendo às mulheres que choravam por ele que viriam dias em que as pessoas diriam: "Felizes as mulheres estéreis e as madres que não deram à luz." (Lu 23:27-29) Isto se cumpriu em 70 EC, quando pereceu mais de um milhão de judeus, inclusive criancinhas, e milhares foram levados ao cativeiro para serem vendidos como escravos.

Nicodemos, governante judeu e fariseu, ao ouvir a declaração de Jesus: "A menos que alguém nasça de novo, não pode ver o reino de Deus", perguntou: "Como . . .? Será que pode entrar pela segunda vez na madre de sua mãe e nascer?" Jesus explicou então que este novo nascimento não se dá da madre humana, mas "de água e espírito". — Jo 3:1-8.

Uso Figurado. O termo "madre" é às vezes usado com referência à fonte de alguma coisa. Ao falar sobre obras criativas referentes à terra, Jeová menciona o mar como irrompendo "da madre". (Jó 38:8) Jeová diz ao Senhor de Davi que, no dia da força militar dele, este terá voluntários dispostos, saindo "como gotas de orvalho" "da madre da alva" (donde procede o orvalho da madrugada). — Sal 110:1-3.

MADUREZA. Estado de pleno desenvolvimento, maturação, plenitude, segundo um padrão. (Veja PERFEIÇÃO.) A Bíblia fornece o padrão para se verificar o que constitui madureza (plenitude) espiritual. Segundo este padrão, cristão maduro é aquele que não é bebê espiritual, muitas vezes inconstante e facilmente desviado ou influenciado por outros em questões de doutrina. (Ef 4:11-14) Visto que tem suas faculdades perceptivas treinadas, é capaz de distinguir tanto o certo como o errado. Não precisa que se lhe ensinem coisas elementares. (He 5:11–6:2) Não é guiado pela sabedoria mundana, mas pelo espírito de Deus. — 1Co 2:6, 10-13, n.

A Bíblia nunca fala de graus ou estágios de madureza ou condição adulta espirituais. Todavia, assim como a pessoa continua a se desenvolver em conhecimento, experiência e discernimento depois de se tornar adulta, assim também o cristão maduro continua a fazer progresso. As provações que sofre podem fortalecer-lhe a fé e a perseverança. O discípulo Tiago escreveu: "Considerai tudo com alegria, meus irmãos, ao enfrentardes diversas provações, sabendo que esta qualidade provada da vossa fé produz perseverança. Mas, a perseverança tenha a sua obra completa, para que sejais completos [literalmente: perfeitos] e sãos em todos os sentidos, não vos faltando nada." (Tg 1:2-4) De modo similar, assim como os adultos variam em aspecto físico e em aptidões mentais e talentos, assim os cristãos maduros podem variar em certas qualidades, alguns destacando-se mais num aspecto, tal como conhecimento, critério, coragem ou generosidade; outros, em outros aspectos. (Veja 1Co 7:7; 12:4-11, 27-31.) Portanto, ao se considerar a madureza, é preciso tomar em conta que aptidões ou talentos especiais não são os fatores determinantes para saber se alguém é cristão maduro ou não.

O inteiro arranjo congregacional, com seus apóstolos, profetas, evangelizadores, pastores e instrutores, serviu para produzir cristãos maduros, adultos espirituais. (Ef 4:11-14; compare isso com Col 1:28, 29; 4:12, 13.) Portanto, é óbvio que aqueles que serviam quais pastores e instrutores tinham de ser pessoas espiritualmente maduras, não bebês. Todavia, requeria-se mais do que a qualidade de espiritualmente adulto de alguém designado como superintendente ou servo ministerial. (1Ti 3:1-9, 12, 13; Tit 1:5-9) Por exemplo, um dos requisitos para alguém ser superintendente é que ele seja "homem que presida de maneira excelente à sua própria família, tendo os filhos em sujeição com toda a seriedade". (1Ti 3:4) Portanto, dum ponto de vista espiritual, em certos sentidos, o homem poderia ser maduro, mas, não obstante, se seus filhos fossem rebeldes e incontroláveis, ele não estaria qualificado para o cargo de superintendente.

MÃE. Igual à palavra hebraica 'av (pai), a palavra 'em (mãe) é provavelmente uma palavra imitativa, um dos primeiros sons labiais dum bebê. É usada para designar a mãe direta da pessoa, ou possivelmente a madrasta (Gên 37:10; compare isso com Gên 30:22-24; 35:16-19), e também uma antepassada, visto que Eva, esposa de Adão, era "a mãe de todos os viventes". (Gên 3:20; 1Rs 15:10) A palavra grega para "mãe" é mé·ter. Tanto no hebraico como no grego, a palavra para mãe é usada em diversos sentidos figurados.

O desejo de ter muitos filhos era especialmente forte no coração das mulheres hebreias, por causa da promessa de Deus, de tornar Israel uma nação populosa e o povo por meio do qual viria a semente [ou: o descendente] da promessa. (Gên 18:18; 22:18; Êx 19:5, 6) Não ter filho era considerado um dos maiores infortúnios. — Gên 30:1.

Sob o pacto da Lei, a mulher era 40 dias (7 mais 33) "impura", em sentido religioso, após o nascimento dum menino, e depois do nascimento duma menina, durante o dobro deste tempo, ou por 80 dias (14 mais 66). (Le 12:2-5) Durante os 7 e os 14 dias, respectivamente, ela era impura para todas as pessoas, inclusive seu marido, mas durante os 33 e os 66 dias, respectivamente, ela era impura apenas com respeito a coisas sagradas e a coisas relacionadas com os serviços religiosos no santuário.

As mães hebreias amamentavam ao peito os filhos até os três anos de idade e às vezes até os cinco anos ou mais, na crença de que, quanto mais uma criança mamasse, tanto mais forte ficaria. (Veja DESMAMA.) Nos casos em que a mãe já falecera ou ela não tinha bastante leite, recorria-se a uma ama de leite. Portanto, 'os pequeninos e as crianças de peito', da Bíblia, podiam incluir os de suficiente idade para serem desmamados, os de idade suficiente para ter algum conhecimento para poder louvar a Jeová e ser treinados no santuário. — Mt 21:15, 16; 1Sa 1:23, 24; 2:11.

Havia uma intimidade especial entre a mãe e os filhos, visto que a mãe cuidava diretamente dos filhos até depois de serem desmamados, quando então o pai começava a orientar a educação dos filhos de modo mais pessoal. A posição da mãe, na família, era de importância reconhecida. Ela devia ser respeitada mesmo na sua idade avançada. (Êx 20:12; 21:15, 17; Pr 23:22; De 5:16; 21:18-21; 27:16) Naturalmente, sua posição era sempre secundária à do marido, a quem ela devia respeitar e obedecer. Jesus, quando menino, estava em sujeição ao seu pai adotivo, José, e à sua mãe, Maria. — Lu 2:51, 52.

Quando o pai tinha mais de uma esposa, os filhos distinguiam sua própria mãe das outras esposas do pai por usar o termo "mãe". Irmãos germanos eram diferenciados dos meios-irmãos pela expressão "filhos da minha mãe". — Jz 8:19; Gên 43:29.

Requeria-se da mãe transmitir aos filhos as instruções e as ordens do pai, e cuidar de que fossem cumpridas. (Pr 1:8; 6:20; 31:1) A mãe era a administradora do seu lar, sob a chefia do marido. Dar à luz e criar filhos de modo correto mantinha-a ocupada e protegia-a em grande parte contra tornar-se tagarela ou intrometida nos assuntos dos outros. Desde que continuasse na fé, isso servia-lhe de grande proteção. (1Ti 5:9-14; 2:15) A boa mãe tinha de preparar alimentos e tecer panos, bem como fazer roupa para os filhos e para outros membros da família, e assim seu marido, bem como seus filhos, tinham motivos para elogiar e louvar tal mulher perante outros. — Pr 31:15, 19, 21, 28.

Uso Figurado. A palavra "mãe" é aplicada em Juízes 5:7 no sentido duma mulher que ajuda outros e cuida deles. Paulo referiu-se à sua meiguice para com aqueles a quem havia levado a verdade de Deus, seus filhos espirituais, como a duma "mãe lactante". — 1Te 2:7; veja MEIGUICE, SUAVIDADE.

Por causa do íntimo relacionamento espiritual, as mulheres cristãs são comparadas a mães e irmãs de seus concristãos, e devem ser tratadas com igual respeito e castidade. (Mr 3:35; 1Ti 5:1, 2) As esposas cristãs que seguem o bom exemplo de Sara, esposa de Abraão, são chamadas de "filhas" dela. — 1Pe 3:6.

Visto que o corpo do homem foi feito "do pó do solo", a terra pode figurativamente ser comparada à sua "mãe". (Gên 2:7; Jó 1:21) Uma cidade é retratada como mãe, sendo os habitantes dela considerados seus filhos. No caso de Jerusalém, a cidade como sede do governo representava a nação inteira, e o povo de Israel, como indivíduos, eram considerados seus filhos. (Gál 4:25, 26; Ez 23:4, 25; compare isso com Sal 137:8, 9.) Também, uma cidade grande era considerada a mãe de suas "aldeias dependentes", circunvizinhas, ou, traduzido literalmente, suas "filhas". (Ez 16:46, 48, 53, 55; veja nota sobre o v 46.) Babilônia, a Grande, "a grande cidade", é chamada de "mãe das meretrizes e das coisas repugnantes da terra". — Re 17:5, 18.

MAER-SALAL-HÁS-BAZ [Apressa-te, ó Despojo! Ele Veio Depressa à Pilhagem; ou: Apressando-se ao Despojo, Ele Veio Depressa à Pilhagem]. Nome dado ao segundo filho de Isaías, sob a direção de Jeová.

Jeová ordenou que Isaías escrevesse estas palavras proféticas numa grande tábua e mandasse atestar isso por testemunhas fidedignas. Depois, instruiu o profeta a dar esta mesma expressão como nome ao seu filho recém-nascido, declarando que, antes de o menino poder dizer: "Meu pai!" e: "Minha mãe!", o rei da Assíria subjugaria os inimigos de Judá — Damasco e Samaria. (Is 8:1-4) O significado profético deste nome dado ao segundo filho de Isaías cumpriu-se dentro do período indicado. Durante o reino do Rei Peca, de Israel, o monarca assírio Tiglate-Pileser III invadiu Israel, tomou muitas cidades, saqueou o país e levou numerosos habitantes ao cativeiro. Depois disso, Peca foi assassinado. (2Rs 15:29, 30) O rei da Assíria capturou também Damasco, capital da Síria, levou seu povo ao exílio e matou o rei sírio, Rezim. (2Rs 16:9) Desta maneira, ambos estes reis, que haviam conspirado contra Judá, tiveram fim. Mais tarde, em 740 AEC, os assírios derrubaram Samaria, retirando os israelitas apóstatas daquela cidade e do restante do domínio do reino setentrional de Israel. (2Rs 17:1-6) De modo que este filho que Isaías teve com sua esposa (que ele chama de "profetisa") mostrou ser em Israel um 'sinal e milagre' fidedigno da parte de Jeová. — Is 8:3, 18.

MAGADÃ. Uma área perto do mar da Galileia para a qual Jesus se retirou depois de alimentar milagrosamente cerca de 4.000 homens. (Mt 15:39; manuscritos de data mais recente dizem ali "Magdala".) Marcos (8:10), segundo os melhores manuscritos gregos, referiu-se ao mesmo território como "Dalmanuta". — Veja DALMANUTA.

Não se conhece hoje nenhum lugar chamado Magadã na região em torno do mar da Galileia. Todavia, alguns peritos acham que Magadã seja Magdala. Este conceito recebe apoio do fato de que, em aramaico, a letra l muitas vezes substitui o n nas palavras hebraicas. De modo que Magadã pode ter sido mudado para Magdala. Outros sugerem que "Magdala" talvez passasse a ocorrer nas cópias mais recentes do texto grego por causa duma tentativa de equiparar Magadã à atual Majdal.

Considera-se que Magdala (possivelmente Magadã) seja Majdal (Migdal), a uns 6 km ao NNO de Tiberíades, junto ao mar da Galileia. Situada perto da bifurcação formada pela estrada que se segue de Tiberíades ao longo do mar da Galileia e pela que desce dos morros ocidentais, este lugar ocupa uma posição estratégica. As ruínas duma torre relativamente recente, encontradas ali, indicam que Majdal guardava antigamente a entrada meridional da planície de Genesaré. Tanto Majdal como Magdala (uma forma do hebraico migh·dál) significam "Torre". Muitas vezes já se sugeriu que este era o lugar onde vivia Maria Madalena.

MAGBIS. Nome duma pessoa ou dum lugar. Entre os que retornaram do exílio babilônico havia 156 "filhos de Magbis". (Esd 2:1, 30) Alguns identificam Magbis provisoriamente com Khirbet el-Makhbiyeh, situada a uns 5 km ao SO de Adulão.

MAGDIEL [Coisas Seletas de Deus]. Descendente de Esaú, e um dos xeques de Edom. (Gên 36:40-43; 1Cr 1:51, 54) Magdiel talvez fosse também o nome de um lugar e de uma tribo. — Veja TIMNA N.º 3.

MAGIA E FEITIÇARIA. Artes secretas e poderes sobrenaturais presumivelmente usados para realizar coisas além do que é natural — associadas com poderes espíritas, ocultistas.

A magia "negra", segundo se diz, consiste em feitiços, em maldições especiais e no "mau-olhado", que causam dano aos inimigos da pessoa. A magia "branca", por outro lado, segundo dizem os que a praticam, produz bons resultados por quebrar os feitiços e cancelar as maldições. Entre alguns povos antigos, a magia "negra" era proibida sob pena de morte. A Bíblia, porém, vai um passo além e proíbe toda forma de magia espírita. (Le 19:26; De 18:9-14) O praticante dela, pelo uso de fórmulas mágicas, supostamente obtidas por conhecimento e sabedoria sobrenaturais, procura influenciar pessoas e alterar eventos futuros. Neste respeito, a magia difere da adivinhação, a qual apenas tenta descobrir eventos futuros, em vez de influir neles ou mudá-los. — Veja ADIVINHAÇÃO.

Grande parte do conceito sobre a feitiçaria mágica baseia-se na crença de que espíritos maus podem ser induzidos a abandonar a pessoa ou a entrar nela, de que podem ser enganados e logrados, e ser capturados ou presos num pedaço de madeira ou numa imagem de barro. Por exemplo, afirma-se que, por se criarem trilhas mágicas de mel ou de outras coisas deliciosas, os demônios podem ser conduzidos à vontade pelo mágico.

Todas essas noções, naturalmente, deram margem a uma astuciosa classe de sacerdotes-magos, que exerciam grande poder sobre a vida das pessoas, extorquindo enormes pagamentos daqueles sob a sua influência, com o pretexto de possuírem poderes sobrenaturais, superiores aos dos demônios. As pessoas criam que esses feiticeiros profissionais podiam invocar os demônios para lhes obedecerem, mas que os demônios não tinham nenhum poder sobre os feiticeiros.

Tais práticas espíritas, chamadas de ciências, foram desenvolvidas e usadas pelos antigos caldeus de Babilônia. Isaías, do oitavo século AEC, diz-nos que a Babilônia dos seus dias estava repleta de todo tipo de feitiçaria. (Is 47:12-15) Mais de um século depois, nos dias de Daniel, os sacerdotes-magos ainda faziam parte da corte babilônica. (Da 1:20; 2:2, 10, 27; 4:7; 5:11) A expressão "sacerdotes-magos" é uma tradução literal e explícita do termo hebraico.

Os babilônios tinham muito medo dos deficientes físicos, chamados de feiticeiros e de bruxos, na crença de que eram manipuladores da magia "negra". Os sacerdotes, por outro lado, supostamente eram mestres da magia "branca". As pessoas acreditavam que os mesmos feitiços que curavam o doente quando proferidos por um sacerdote os matariam se proferidos por um bruxo ou feiticeiro.

À medida que as pessoas se espalharam ao redor da Terra, devido à confusão das línguas em Babel, é possível que tenham levado consigo algumas noções sobre tais artes mágicas. (Gên 11:8, 9) Hoje em dia, milhões de pessoas praticam a magia de mantra, isto é, a mística fórmula, hino ou oração de feitiços do hinduísmo popular. Sacerdotes-magos, bruxos, curandeiros e feiticeiros de todo tipo podem ser encontrados no mundo todo, assim como acontecia entre os egípcios do século 18 AEC, nos dias de José. (Gên 41:8, 24) Mais de dois séculos depois de José ter sido vendido como escravo, os sacerdotes-magos do Egito aparentemente duplicaram até certo ponto os primeiros três milagres realizados por Moisés. (Êx 7:11, 22; 8:7) Mas foram impotentes quando se tratou de produzir borrachudos, tendo de admitir que era o "dedo de Deus". Foram igualmente incapazes de impedir ser afligidos pela praga dos furúnculos. — Êx 8:18, 19; 9:11.

Condenadas Pela Bíblia. A Bíblia é singularmente diferente dos escritos de outros povos antigos no sentido de que todas as suas referências a poderes sobrenaturais e artes mágicas são condenatórias. Em parte alguma recomenda a magia "branca" para quebrar feitiços da magia “negra”. Em vez disso, ela exorta à fé, à oração e à confiança em Jeová como proteção contra invisíveis “forças espirituais iníquas” e todas as atividades relacionadas com tais, inclusive influências mágicas. (Ef 6:11-18) Nos Salmos, os justos oram para ser libertos do mal; Jesus ensinou-nos a orar para sermos livrados “do iníquo”. (Mt 6:13) O Talmude e o Alcorão, por outro lado, dão margem à superstição e ao medo. O livro apócrifo de Tobias contém passagens absurdas de feitiçaria mágica. — Tobias 6:5, 8, 9, 19; 8:2, 3; 11:8-15; 12:3; veja APÓCRIFOS (Tobias [Tobit]).

Portanto, a nação de Israel, neste respeito, era dessemelhante das suas contemporâneas, e, para que continuasse assim, Jeová deu ao seu povo algumas leis bem explícitas a respeito daqueles que estavam familiarizados com poderes ocultos. “Não deves preservar viva a feiticeira.” (Êx 22:18) “Não deveis praticar a magia.” “Quanto ao homem ou à mulher em quem se mostre haver um espírito mediúnico ou um espírito de predição, sem falta devem ser mortos.” (Le 19:26; 20:27) “Não se deve achar em ti . . . algum praticante de magia ou quem procure presságios, ou um feiticeiro, ou alguém que prenda outros com encantamento, ou alguém que vá consultar um médium espírita.” — De 18:10-14.

O profeta de Jeová Deus declarou também que Ele deceparia todos os que se empenhassem em feitiçaria. (Miq 5:12) Certas pessoas, tais como Saul, Jezabel e Manassés, que abandonaram a Jeová e se voltaram para um ou outro tipo de feitiçaria, são exemplos do passado que não devem ser imitados. — 1Sa 28:7; 2Rs 9:22; 2Cr 33:1, 2, 6.

As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs também falam sobre a prevalência de feiticeiros em todo o Império Romano nos dias de Jesus e dos apóstolos. Na ilha de Chipre havia um chamado Barjesus, a quem Paulo denunciou como “cheio de toda sorte de fraude e de toda sorte de vilania, . . . filho do Diabo”. (At 13:6-11) Havia outros, porém, tais como Simão, de Samaria, que renunciaram às suas práticas de magia e adotaram o cristianismo. (At 8:5, 9-13) Em certa ocasião, em Éfeso, “um número considerável dos que haviam praticado artes mágicas trouxeram os seus livros e os queimaram diante de todos. E calcularam os preços deles e acharam que valiam cinquenta mil moedas de prata [se eram denários: US$ 37.200]”. (At 19:18, 19) O apóstolo Paulo, ao escrever aos da Galácia, incluiu o ocultismo espírita entre “as obras da carne”, avisando que “os que praticam tais coisas não herdarão o reino de Deus”. (Gál 5:19-21) Excluídos deste glorioso Reino estarão todos os que persistirem nessas práticas babilônicas. (Re 21:8; 22:15) Todos eles serão destruídos junto com Babilônia, a Grande, tão notória por desencaminhar as nações com as suas feitiçarias. — Re 18:23; veja PODER, OBRAS PODEROSAS (Emprego responsável do poder).

MAGISTRADO(S).

1. No governo de Babilônia, os magistrados policiais eram funcionários civis nos distritos jurisdicionais, entendidos em lei e exercendo uma limitada autoridade judicial. Estavam entre os oficiais reunidos para se curvar diante da imagem de ouro de Nabucodonosor. — Da 3:2, 3.

Nas colônias romanas, a administração do governo estava nas mãos de magistrados civis, chamados de stra·te·gói nas cidades gregas. Uma junta de magistrados podia ser composta de 3, 4, usualmente 5, ou mesmo 10 ou 12 homens. Estes tinham o dever de manter a ordem, de administrar as finanças, de julgar e sentenciar violadores da lei, e de ordenar a execução da punição. Seus nomes e títulos aparecem às vezes em moedas cunhadas pela respectiva cidade. Designavam-se-lhes esbirros, ou lictores, para executar suas ordens. — Veja ESBIRRO.

Os magistrados civis na colônia romana de Filipos (At 16:12), sem julgamento, mandaram pôr Paulo e Silas no tronco. No dia seguinte, os magistrados mandaram esbirros para soltá-los. Mas Paulo, a fim de dar uma vindicação pública e legal às boas novas que pregava, exigiu que os próprios magistrados os soltassem. Os magistrados, temendo dificuldades com Roma por terem açoitado cidadãos romanos, suplicaram a Paulo e Silas, e os soltaram. — At 16:19-39.

2. Pessoas responsáveis pela decisão de causas jurídicas. Em Jó 31:11, 28, usa-se a frase “para receber a atenção dos magistrados” em sentido adjetivo, para descrever erros que exigiam julgamento. De modo que estes versículos, na versão Almeida, edição revista e atualizada, rezam “crime hediondo” (v 11) e “delito” (v 28), em vez de “um erro, para [receber a atenção dos] magistrados”. O “erro” em consideração no versículo 11 é o adultério (vv 9, 10), crime que no tempo de Jó talvez fosse julgado pelos anciãos no portão da cidade. (Veja Jó 29:7.) Todavia, o “erro” no versículo 28 envolve materialismo e idolatria secreta (vv 24-27), delitos da mente e do coração que não podem ser confirmados pela boca de testemunhas. Por isso, nenhum magistrado humano podia estabelecer a culpa. No entanto, parece que Jó reconhecia que Deus podia julgar tais delitos e que eram bastante sérios para merecer ser julgados por Ele.

MAGOGUE.

1. Filho de Jafé e neto de Noé. Seu nome aparece entre os cabeças de família dos quais se dispersaram pela terra os primeiros grupos nacionais após o Dilúvio. — Gên 10:1, 2, 5; 1Cr 1:5.

2. Nome que ocorre na profecia de Ezequiel a respeito do ataque tempestuoso de "Gogue da terra de Magogue" contra o novamente reunido povo de Jeová. Parece ser usado pelo profeta para indicar uma terra ou região nas "partes mais remotas do norte", das quais saem as hostes de Gogue, suas forças saqueadoras descritas como 'montadas em cavalos, uma grande congregação, sim, uma numerosa força militar', usando espada e arco. — Ez 38:2-4, 8, 9, 13-16; 39:1-3, 6.

Desde a época do historiador judeu Josefo, tem-se sugerido que a "terra de Magogue" se relacionava com as tribos citas no NE da Europa e na Ásia Central. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], I, 123 [vi, 1]) Escritores clássicos dos tempos gregos e romanos descreveram os citas como bárbaros rapinantes e guerreiros do N, equipados com grandes forças de cavalaria, bem armados e hábeis com o arco. Embora o nome "cita" talvez derivasse originalmente de "Asquenaz", outro descendente de Jafé (Gên 10:2, 3), a edição de 1959 da Encyclopædia Britannica (Enciclopédia Britânica; Vol. 20, p. 235) declara que "em toda a literatura clássica, a Cítia geralmente referia-se a todas as regiões ao norte e ao nordeste do Mar Negro, e cita (skuthes), a qualquer bárbaro que procedesse daquelas partes". Outras obras de referência mostram igualmente que o termo "cita" era usado de modo bastante flexível para abranger, em geral, todas as tribos nômades ao N do Cáucaso (a região entre os mares Negro e Cáspio), de forma similar ao uso atual do termo "tártaro". De modo que The New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge (A Nova Enciclopédia de Conhecimento Religioso, de Schaff-Herzog) comenta: "O nome 'citas' era entre os antigos um apelido flexível, e o mesmo se dava com o hebraico 'Magog'." — Editada por S. Jackson, 1956, Vol. V, p. 14.

Uso Simbólico. Deixar-se a localização específica da "terra de Magogue" incerta e indeterminada na Bíblia (bem como na história secular), junto com a referência do profeta à "parte final dos anos" (Ez 38:8), e ser desconhecida alguma ocorrência literal da descrita invasão de Israel, constitui base para se encarar a profecia a respeito de Magogue como relacionada com um tempo futuro, o bíblico 'tempo do fim'. Por este motivo, muitos comentadores veem nisso uma previsão do ataque final das potências mundiais contra o Reino de Deus, e eles encaram a terra de Magogue como representando "o mundo como hostil ao povo e ao reino de Deus". — Funk and Wagnalls New Standard Bible Dictionary (Novo Dicionário Bíblico Padrão de Funk e Wagnalls), 1936, p. 307.

Assim, a terra de Magogue tem claramente significado simbólico. Ter-se passado a usar o termo "cita", com que usualmente se associa Magogue, como sinônimo do que é brutal, voraz e beligerante parece logicamente indicar uma posição de forte oposição ao povo de Deus. As nações do mundo vão estar nessa posição quando, instigadas pelo principal inimigo de Deus, Satanás, o Diabo, elas fizerem um ataque final aqui na Terra contra a adoração pura de Deus. — Veja GOGUE N.º 2.

3. Termo usado em Revelação 20:8 referente aos eventos a ocorrer no fim do Reinado Milenar de Cristo Jesus e subsequentes à soltura de Satanás do abismo. Em vez de mencionar uma terra ou localização específica, "Gogue e Magogue" são ali usados para descrever na terra aqueles que cedem à influência do Adversário, que foi solto, e se rebelam contra o domínio de Deus conforme expresso por meio 'dos santos e da cidade amada'. — Re 20:3, 7-10.

MAGPIAS. Um dos cabeças do povo, cujo descendente, se não ele mesmo, atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" dos dias de Neemias. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 20.

MAIORAL. Homem que ocupava uma posição governante, tal como o cabeça hereditário duma tribo ou duma casa paterna. A palavra hebraica na·sí' é vertida pelos tradutores da Bíblia de forma variada, como "príncipe", "líder", "governante", "maioral". (Veja LÍDER, NOBRE, PRÍNCIPE.) Os cabeças das 12 casas paternas ou tribos de Israel eram chamados "maiorais". (Núm 1:16; Jos 22:14) O termo é também aplicado aos cabeças dos 12 clãs originários de Ismael. (Gên 17:20; 25:16) O título foi usado referente aos reis Salomão e Zedequias como governantes. (1Rs 11:34; Ez 21:25) A estima dos hititas por Abraão pode estar indicado em ele ser chamado de "maioral de Deus", ou poderoso maioral. — Gên 23:6 n.

Nos dias de Moisés, os maiorais tomavam a dianteira na adoração e atuavam como representantes do povo perante Moisés, os sacerdotes e Jeová. Moisés escolheu um maioral de cada tribo (exceto da tribo de Levi) para espiar a Terra da Promessa. O mau relatório dos dez espias infiéis exerceu muita influência sobre o povo. (Núm 13:2-16, 25-33) Duzentos e cinquenta maiorais dos filhos de Israel participaram na rebelião che-fiada por Corá, para assumir o sacerdócio da casa de Arão. (Núm 16:2, 10, 17, 35) Os maiorais participaram em fazer para Israel um pacto com os gibeonitas. (Jos 9:15, 18) Depois de Josué ter levado Israel a Canaã e de ter derrotado as nações ali, os maiorais desempenharam um papel destacado na distribuição daquela terra. (Núm 34:18; Jos 14:1) Eleazar, filho de Arão, foi designado maioral sobre os cabeças das casas paternas da tribo de Levi, o que o tornou "maioral dos maiorais". (Núm 3:32) O Rei Salomão convocou todos os maiorais das tribos a Jerusalém, na ocasião em que fez com que a Arca do Pacto fosse levada ao recém-construído templo. — 1Rs 8:1.

Os israelitas deviam ter o devido respeito para com o maioral, nunca o sujeitando a ultrajes verbais. (Êx 22:28) Quando o apóstolo Paulo estava sendo julgado perante o Sinédrio, o sumo sacerdote Ananias ordenou aos perto de Paulo que dessem a este um tapa na boca. Daí, Paulo lhe disse: "Deus te baterá, parede caiada", não sabendo que estava falando ao sumo sacerdote. Quando isso foi trazido à sua atenção, ele disse: "Irmãos, eu não sabia que era o sumo sacerdote. Pois está escrito: 'Não deves falar injuriosamente dum governante do teu povo.' " — At 23:1-5.

Embora os maiorais devessem ser respeitados, não estavam isentos de obedecer à lei de Deus. Quando pecavam contra a Lei, tinham de satisfazer os regulamentos dela a respeito de tais pecados. Por causa da sua posição de responsabilidade e do efeito da conduta, do exemplo e da influência deles sobre outros, fazia-se uma distinção nas suas individuais ofertas pelo pecado, pela violação desintencional duma ordem de Deus. Exigia-se do sumo sacerdote oferecer um novilho, devendo o maioral oferecer um cabritinho, e qualquer pessoa dentre os demais do povo, quer uma cabritinha, quer uma cordeirinha. — Le 4:3, 22, 23, 27, 28, 32.

A Visão de Ezequiel. Ezequiel fala profeticamente a respeito dum maioral, nos capítulos 44 a 48 de Ezequiel. Nesta visão, ele descreve uma faixa administrativa de terra que se estendia desde a fronteira oriental junto ao rio Jordão e o Mar Morto, até o mar Ocidental ou Mediterrâneo. Ao norte e ao sul desta faixa, e paralelos a ela, havia setores de terra designados às tribos de Israel. Dentro da faixa de terra havia um setor quadrado de 25.000 côvados (13 km) de cada lado, chamado de contribuição, que por sua vez estava dividido em três setores: O setor setentrional era designado aos levitas não sacerdotais, o setor do meio continha o santuário de Jeová e o setor mais meridional continha a cidade. (Veja CONTRIBUIÇÃO SAGRADA; CÔVADO.) O governante da administração da cidade evidentemente era "o maioral".

É digno de nota que, na visão, a cidade estava separada do templo, ou santuário. Além disso, "o maioral" não era sacerdote, conforme é indicado por ser o sacerdote quem oferecia 'o holocausto e os sacrifícios de participação em comum' do maioral. (Ez 46:2) Portanto, no cumprimento da visão de Ezequiel, a cidade da visão evidentemente não retrata o governo celestial de Jesus Cristo, e dos seus reis e sacerdotes associados. Em vez disso, parece retratar uma sede de administração terrestre, visível, sob a direção do Reino celestial. De modo correspondente, "o maioral" retrataria os designados como representantes 'principescos', visíveis, do governo celestial. — Sal 45:16; Is 32:1, 2.

MAL. Aquilo que resulta em dor, pesar ou aflição. A fim de transmitir a ideia correta em português, a bem abrangente palavra hebraica ra' é traduzida de diversas formas, como "mau", "sombrio", "feio", "calamitoso", "maligno", "não generoso" e "invejoso", dependendo do contexto. (Gên 2:9; 40:7; 41:3; Êx 33:4; De 6:22; 28:35; Pr 23:6; 28:22) A palavra grega ka·kós pode ser definida como aquilo que é (1) moralmente mau e (2) destrutivo; entre as outras maneiras em que tem sido traduzida estão: "mal", "nocivo", "prejudicial", "errado". (Ro 7:19; 12:17; Col 3:5; Tit 1:12; He 5:14) O verbo hebraico qa·lál significa "invocar o mal sobre". — Veja INVOCAÇÃO DO MAL.

Conforme usada inicialmente nas Escrituras, a palavra ra' é a própria antítese do que é bom. Ordenou-se a Adão não comer da árvore do conhecimento do que era bom e do que era mau (ra'), e ele foi também advertido sobre as consequências da desobediência. Portanto, é evidente que é Deus quem fixa as normas do que é bom e do que é mau; o homem não tem a prerrogativa de fazer isso à parte de Deus. Embora Adão transgredisse a lei expressa de Jeová Deus, esta transgressão não pode ser atribuída a Jeová, "pois, por coisas más [uma forma de ka·kós], Deus não pode ser provado, nem prova ele a alguém. Mas cada um é provado por ser provocado e engodado pelo seu próprio desejo". — Tg 1:13, 14; Gên 2:16, 17; 3:17-19.

O Significado de Deus Trazer o Mal. Justificadamente, Jeová trouxe o mal ou a calamidade sobre Adão pela desobediência dele. Por isso, Jeová é mencionado nas Escrituras como o Criador do mal ou da calamidade. (Is 45:7; veja Al.) Impor ele a penalidade pelo pecado, a saber, a morte, mostrou ser um mal, ou uma calamidade, para a humanidade. Portanto, o mal nem sempre é sinônimo de ações erradas. Exemplos de males ou calamidades criadas por Jeová são o Dilúvio dos dias de Noé e as Dez Pragas infligidas ao Egito. Mas, estes males não eram ações erradas. Antes, em ambos os casos estava envolvida a administração legítima da justiça contra transgressores. No entanto, ocasionalmente, Jeová, na sua misericórdia, refreou-se de causar a intencionada calamidade ou mal na execução do Seu julgamento justo, por causa do arrependimento dos envolvidos. (Jon 3:10) Além disso, por ter mandado dar um aviso, Jeová tem imerecidamente oferecido aos praticantes do mal a oportunidade de mudarem de proceder e assim continuarem vivos. — Ez 33:11.

Evitar o Mal. Visto que é Jeová quem determina as normas do que é certo e do que é errado, cabe à pessoa familiarizar-se plenamente com essas normas, para poder discernir o proceder que tem de adotar. (He 5:14) O amor ao dinheiro é uma dessas coisas más, ou prejudiciais, que devem ser evitadas. (1Ti 6:10) Não é sábio ficar ansioso com respeito às coisas materiais, porque, conforme disse Jesus: "Basta a cada dia o seu próprio mal [ka·ki·a]", isto é, a dificuldade, ou aflição, associada com o dia. (Mt 6:34) Revestir-se da nova personalidade inclui eliminar o "desejo nocivo". (Col 3:5) Assim como o Diabo tentou Jesus com o mal, assim os cristãos verificam que pensamentos maus surgem ou são-lhes sugeridos. Mas, quando isto acontece, para evitar ser engodado pelo pecado, o cristão deve seguir o exemplo de Jesus e rejeitar imediatamente esse mal. (Tg 1:13-15; Mt 4:1-11; Fil 4:8) Embora o cristão, por causa da imperfeição humana, se encontre em constante conflito com a carne decaída, assim como se deu com Paulo, e talvez faça o mal que não quer praticar, ele não deve ceder à carne, mas tem de continuar a lutar contra ela. (Ro 7:21; 8:8) O perigo de se deixar de viver à altura dos justos requisitos de Deus é claramente visto no que Jesus declarou a respeito do escravo fiel. Este escravo deveria sofrer a punição mais severa caso deixasse de cuidar das responsabilidades confiadas a ele, ao ponto até mesmo de espancar seus coescravos. — Mt 24:48-51.

O Sofrimento do Mal Pelos Cristãos. As Escrituras não autorizam o cristão a causar o mal a outros, ou a retribuir na mesma moeda. O conselho da Bíblia é: "Não retribuais a ninguém mal por mal." "Não vos vingueis . . . 'A vingança é minha; eu pagarei de volta, diz Jeová.'" "Não te deixes vencer pelo mal, porém, persiste em vencer o mal com o bem." (Ro 12:17, 19, 21) Além disso, ao estarem em sujeição relativa aos governos que os regem, os servos de Deus nunca devem ser praticantes do que é mau, porque esses governos, por meio dos seus governantes, que têm menor ou maior medida de consciência dada por Deus, agem contra a maldade, segundo a lei do país, e exercem legitimamente sua autoridade de punir os transgressores. (Ro 13:3, 4) Serão responsáveis perante o Juiz Supremo por qualquer abuso da sua autoridade. O cristão, ao sofrer o mal por causa da justiça, tem o privilégio de participar na glorificação do santo nome de Deus. — 1Pe 4:16.

MALALEEL. Veja MALALEL N.º 1.

MALALEL [possivelmente: Louvor de Deus].

1. Descendente de Sete através de Enos e Quenã; portanto, bisneto de Sete. Malalel viveu 895 anos. (Gên 5:6-17; 1Cr 1:1, 2) Na genealogia de Jesus, por Lucas, ele é chamado de Malaleel. — Lu 3:37, 38.

2. Descendente de Judá através de Peres, e antepassado de Ataías, habitante de Jerusalém depois do retorno do exílio babilônico. — Ne 11:4.

MALAQUIAS. Profeta hebreu e escritor bíblico. (Mal 1:1) As Escrituras não fornecem nenhuma informação sobre a sua ascendência e sua vida pessoal. O que se sabe dele é revelado no livro que leva o seu nome. Neste se mostra que ele era homem de muito zelo pelo nome e pela adoração de Jeová.

MALAQUIAS, LIVRO DE. Último livro das Escrituras Hebraicas nas atuais Bíblias em português. No tradicional cânon judaico, ocupa o último lugar entre os escritos dos chamados profetas menores, mas antes dos Escritos (Hagiógrafos). Trata-se duma pronúncia de Jeová a respeito de Israel por meio de Malaquias. — Mal 1:1.

Circunstâncias da Época de Malaquias. Na época em que Malaquias profetizou, existia uma situação deplorável entre os sacerdotes. Contrário à Lei, eles aceitavam animais coxos, cegos e doentes como sacrifícios no altar de Jeová. (Mal 1:8; Le 22:19; De 15:21) Deixavam de dar orientação e instrução corretas ao povo, fazendo muitos tropeçar. (Mal 2:7, 8) Mostravam parcialidade no julgamento. (2:9) Tudo isso tinha um mau efeito sobre os israelitas em geral, induzindo-os a encarar o serviço de Jeová como de pouco valor. (3:14, 15) Isto se evidencia no fato de que os israelitas não apoiavam o templo com o pagamento dos seus dízimos. Eles se haviam afastado tanto da sua devoção a Jeová, que parece que até se divorciavam das suas esposas para se casar com mulheres que adoravam deuses falsos. Também, passou a haver entre os israelitas feitiçaria, adultério, mentira, fraude e opressão. (2:11, 14-16; 3:5, 8-10) Por este motivo, Jeová deu aviso antecipado da sua vinda

DESTAQUES DE MALAQUIAS

Pronúncia que salienta que se tem de prestar contas a Jeová Deus quando seus requisitos são desconsiderados.

Escrito pelo profeta Malaquias, evidentemente uns 95 anos depois de os primeiros exilados judeus terem retornado de Babilônia.

Jeová amava Israel, mas este desprezava o nome Dele. (1:1-14)

Jeová amava seu povo, assim como havia amado Jacó, embora tivesse odiado Esaú.

Não obstante, os sacerdotes de Israel desprezavam o nome de Deus, aceitando animais coxos e doentes para sacrifícios; não dariam animais assim a um governador humano.

Os sacerdotes e o povo são censurados por não continuarem a seguir os caminhos de Jeová. (2:1-17)

Os sacerdotes se haviam desviado do caminho de Deus, fazendo muitos "tropeçar na lei", e assim 'arruinaram o pacto de Levi'.

Tem havido casamentos com mulheres estrangeiras, e alguns agiram traiçoeiramente para com a esposa da sua mocidade por divorciar-se dela.

Os israelitas fatigaram a Deus por afirmar que ele aprovava os que faziam o mal.

O verdadeiro Senhor julgará e refinará seu povo. (3:1-18)

Jeová virá ao templo com o mensageiro do pacto; refinará e purificará os levitas, e a oferenda de Judá agradará a Jeová.

Feiticeiros, adúlteros, perjuros, defraudadores e opressores sofrerão um rápido julgamento.

Traga-se toda a décima parte à casa de depósito de Jeová e receba-se assim uma enxurrada de bênçãos.

Escrever-se-á um livro de recordação para os que temem a Jeová; Seu povo verá a diferença entre o justo e o iníquo.

A chegada do grande e atemorizante dia de Jeová. (4:1-6)

O dia de Jeová trará a destruição completa dos iníquos, ao passo que 'o sol da justiça brilhará' sobre os que temem o nome de Deus.

Aquele dia será precedido por uma obra de restauração, a ser realizada pelo profeta Elias.

ao seu templo para julgamento. (3:1-6) Ao mesmo tempo, exortou os transgressores a se arrependerem, dizendo: "Retornai a mim e eu vou retornar a vós." — 3:7.

Tempo da Composição. A evidência interna oferece a base para se datar o término do livro de Malaquias. Foi escrito depois do exílio babilônico, porque os israelitas estavam sob a administração dum governador. A adoração era realizada no templo, indicando que ele havia sido reconstruído. (Mal 1:7, 8; 2:3, 13; 3:8-10) Isto aponta para um período posterior ao de Ageu (520 AEC) e de Zacarias (520-518 AEC), visto que estes profetas exortavam ativamente os israelitas a completar o templo. (Esd 5:1, 2; 6:14, 15) O descaso de Israel para com a verdadeira adoração e seu fracasso em aderir à lei de Deus parecem enquadrar-se nas condições existentes quando Neemias chegou novamente a Jerusalém, algum tempo depois do 32.º ano do Rei Artaxerxes (c. 443 AEC). (Veja Mal 1:6-8; 2:7, 8, 11, 14-16; Ne 13:6-31.) Portanto, igual ao livro de Neemias, o livro de Malaquias possivelmente foi escrito depois de 443 AEC.

Harmonia com Outros Livros Bíblicos. Este livro está de pleno acordo com o restante das Escrituras. O apóstolo Paulo citou Malaquias 1:2, 3, ao ilustrar que a escolha feita por Deus depende, "não daquele que deseja, nem daquele que corre, mas de Deus, que tem misericórdia". (Ro 9:10-16) Jeová é identificado como o Criador (Mal 2:10; compare isso com Sal 100:3; Is 43:1; At 17:24-26) e como Deus justo, misericordioso e imutável, que não deixa sem punição a transgressão deliberada. (Mal 2:2, 3, 17; 3:5-7, 17, 18; 4:1; compare isso com Êx 34:6, 7; Le 26:14-17; Ne 9:17; Tg 1:17.) Enfatiza-se a importância do nome de Deus. (Mal 1:5, 11, 14; 4:2; compare isso com De 28:58, 59; Sal 35:27; Miq 5:4.) E dá-se encorajamento para que a Lei de Moisés seja lembrada. — Mal 4:4.

O livro chamou também a atenção de Israel para a vinda do Messias e o dia de Jeová. Embora se saliente que Jeová enviaria alguém chamado de "meu mensageiro", este seria apenas o predecessor do ainda maior "mensageiro do pacto", que acompanharia Jeová. (Mal 3:1) Os relatos inspirados de Mateus (11:10-14; 17:10-13), Marcos (9:11-13) e Lucas (1:16, 17, 76) combinam para identificar o precursor de Jesus, João, o Batizador, como o "mensageiro" e o "Elias" indicado inicialmente em Malaquias 3:1 e 4:5, 6.

MALCÃ. Veja MALCÃO.

MALCÃO [Seu Rei].

1. Benjamita e filho de Saraim com sua esposa Hodes. — 1Cr 8:1, 8, 9.

2. Deus-ídolo principal dos amonitas. (2Sa 12:30; 1Cr 20:1, 2; Je 49:1, 3) Possivelmente é o mesmo que Milcom e Moloque. (1Rs 11:5, 7; At 7:43) O nome Malcão, no texto massorético, difere de Milcom, "a coisa repugnante dos amonitas", apenas nos sinais vocálicos do hebraico. (1Rs 11:5) Contrário à instrução dada em Josué 23:7, os judeus começaram a fazer juramentos por Malcão. (Sof 1:5) É preciso determinar à base do contexto quando o hebraico deve ser vertido como o nome do deus e quando como "seu rei". — Am 1:15; veja MOLOQUE.

MALCO [duma raiz hebr. que significa "rei"]. Escravo do sumo sacerdote, que acompanhou Judas Iscariotes e a multidão a Getsêmani, onde Cristo foi preso. Pedro golpeou com a espada a orelha direita de Malco (Jo 18:10; Mt 26:51; Mr 14:47), mas Jesus a curou milagrosamente. (Lu 22:50, 51) Outro escravo do sumo sacerdote Caifás, parente de Malco, reconheceu mais tarde Pedro, e isto levou o apóstolo a negar Cristo pela terceira vez. — Jo 18:26, 27.

MALDADE. Veja INIQUIDADE.

MALDIÇÃO. O desejo, a ameaça ou o proferimento do mal sobre alguém ou alguma coisa é a ideia básica de diversas palavras hebraicas e gregas na Bíblia, traduzidas pela palavra "maldição" ou por expressões similares.

A primeira maldição, logicamente, se deu na época da rebelião do Éden e foi dirigida por Deus contra o instigador da rebelião, que usara para isso um agente, a serpente. (Gên 3:14, 15) Esta maldição havia de terminar na destruição dele. Ao mesmo tempo foi amaldiçoado o solo por causa de Adão, o que resultou em o solo produzir espinhos e abrolhos, mas não resultou na destruição dele. (Gên 3:17, 18; 5:29) A maldição de Jeová sobre Caim condenou este a uma vida de fugitivo. — Gên 4:11, 12.

Após o Dilúvio, a primeira maldição proferida por um humano foi a de Noé contra Canaã, filho de Cã, condenando-o a ser escravo de Sem e de Jafé, maldição que teve seu principal cumprimento uns oito séculos mais tarde, na conquista de Canaã pela nação semítica de Israel. (Gên 9:25-27) Neste sentido, os gibeonitas, descendentes de Canaã, foram informados por Josué de que eram "gente maldita", sendo eles por isso designados para a posição de escravos. — Jos 9:23.

Essa maldição, portanto, não deve ser confundida com imprecação, ou rogar praga, nem implica necessariamente em ira violenta, como é evidente no caso dos gibeonitas. Nos textos acima, usa-se a palavra hebraica 'a·rár. Esta palavra é encontrada 18 vezes na declaração formal de pronúncias em Deuteronômio 27:15-26; 28:16-19, e também em pronúncias solenes, tais como as em Êxodo 22:28; Jeremias 11:3; 17:5; e 48:10. O substantivo aparentado, me'e·ráh, ocorre cinco vezes. (De 28:20; Pr 3:33; 28:27; Mal 2:2; 3:9) O uso bíblico destas palavras indica uma pronúncia solene ou a predição dum mal, e, quando feita por Deus ou por uma pessoa autorizada, tem valor e força proféticos. A maldição de Josué contra qualquer homem que, no futuro, reconstruísse a devastada Jericó cumpriu-se muitos séculos depois. (Jos 6:26; 1Rs 16:34) O pedido do Rei Balaque, que Balaão amaldiçoasse Israel, porém, foi desaprovado por Jeová, e Ele fez com que se proferissem bênçãos em vez disso. — Núm 22:6–24:25; veja MALDIZER.

'A·láh, outra palavra hebraica, traduzida tanto por "juramento" como por "maldição", subentende um juramento com uma maldição como penalidade pela violação do que se jurou, ou porque o juramento mostrou ser falso. — Gên 24:41 n; Núm 5:21, 23, 27; De 29:19-21; 2Cr 34:24; 1Rs 8:31, 32; veja JURAMENTO.

Nas Escrituras Gregas, as duas palavras básicas traduzidas por "maldição", "amaldiçoado" são a·rá e a·ná·the·ma, junto com palavras aparentadas, tais como ka·tá·ra, e·pi·ka·tá·ra·tos, ka·ta·rá·o·mai, ka·tá·the·ma e ka·ta·the·ma·tí·zo.

A palavra a·rá tem o sentido de imprecação, ou de uma oração invocando o mal oriundo duma fonte divina. João usou a palavra aparentada e·pá·ra·tos ao escrever que os fariseus encaravam o povo comum, que escutava Jesus, como "pessoas amaldiçoadas", que não conheciam a Lei. (Jo 7:49) Em contraste, Paulo mostrou que todos os judeus precisavam ser remidos da maldição do pacto da Lei, por Cristo se tornar maldição por eles, mediante a sua morte na estaca de tortura. (Gál 3:10, 13) Em Gálatas 3:10, Paulo usou e·pi·ka·tá·ra·tos para traduzir a palavra hebraica 'a·rár (a primeira palavra considerada neste artigo), conforme ocorre em Deuteronômio 27:26. No versículo 13, ele usou a mesma palavra para traduzir a palavra hebraica qela·láh (algo amaldiçoado; invocação do mal), conforme ocorre em Deuteronômio 21:23. — Veja INVOCAÇÃO DO MAL.

Uma forma da palavra ka·ta·rá·o·mai é usada para descrever a ação de Jesus em amaldiçoar a classe dos "cabritos" (Mt 25:41), e também ao instruir seus seguidores a "abençoar os que vos amaldiçoam". (Lu 6:28) Paulo e Tiago usaram formas da mesma palavra ao dar conselho similar em Romanos 12:14 e em Tiago 3:9. Paulo usou a palavra ka·tá·ra ao comparar os cristãos que se afastam, depois de terem sido participantes do espírito santo, ao "solo" que não reage à chuva, produzindo apenas espinhos e abrolhos (He 6:7, 8), ao passo que Pedro usou a mesma palavra para descrever como "amaldiçoados" os cobiçosos, que "têm olhos cheios de adultério" e engodam as almas instáveis. — 2Pe 2:14.

A palavra a·ná·the·ma significa literalmente aquilo que é "guardado", e originalmente aplicava-se a oferendas votivas guardadas ou separadas como sagradas num templo. (Veja Lu 21:5, onde se usa uma palavra aparentada.) Nas Escrituras Gregas, os escritores bíblicos usam a palavra a·ná·the·ma aplicada ao que é amaldiçoado ou ao que está sujeito a ser amaldiçoado, e, portanto, separado como mau ou execrado. Assim, Paulo escreveu aos Gálatas (1:8) que eles deviam considerar como "amaldiçoado" todo aquele (mesmo anjos) que lhes declarasse como boas novas algo contrário ao que haviam recebido. Quem 'não tivesse afeição pelo Senhor' seria considerado de modo similar. (1Co 16:22) Angustiado por seus coisraelitas não terem aceito a Cristo, Paulo disse que desejaria até que ele mesmo "fosse separado do Cristo como amaldiçoado" a favor deles. (Ro 9:3) Em outros casos, a·ná·the·ma evidentemente é usado para se referir ao proferimento dum juramento que, se não cumprido ou se mostrado falso, deveria resultar numa maldição, como no caso dos 40 homens que se juntaram numa conspiração juramentada para matar Paulo. (At 23:12-15, 21) As palavras ka·ta·the·ma·ti·zo e a·na·the·ma·ti·zo são usadas com relação à negação de Cristo por Pedro. (Mt 26:74; Mr 14:71) Na realidade, Pedro dizia ali que ele desejava ser 'amaldiçoado ou posto à parte como mau se conhecia o homem'.

Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 22:3 faz-se a respeito da Nova Jerusalém a promessa de que "não haverá mais nenhuma maldição [ka·tá·the·ma]". Isto parece servir de contraste com a Jerusalém terrestre, que passou a estar sob a maldição de Deus. Está igualmente em nítido contraste com a condição maldita que resulta para a simbólica cidade de Babilônia, a Grande, em virtude do decreto judicial de Deus contra ela. O "anátema" proferido contra ela é evidente em vista da ordem dada em Revelação 18:4-8. — Veja também 2Co 6:17.

Na Septuaginta grega, os tradutores em geral usaram a·ná·the·ma para verter a palavra hebraica hhé·rem. — Veja DEVOTADA, COISA.

MALDIZER. Severa ou mesmo violenta denúncia daquilo que é considerado como detestável e como merecendo ser amaldiçoado. O verbo hebraico (qa·váv, maldizer) aparece no relato dos esforços fúteis do Rei Balaque de fazer com que o profeta Balaão maldissesse a nação de Israel e assim apresentasse esta nação perante Deus como merecendo a maldição dele. (Núm 22:11, 17; 23:11, 13, 25, 27; 24:10) Uma imprecação, isto é, uma invocação do mal oriunda duma fonte divina, nem sempre é expressa, mas pode estar implícita. — Veja INVOCAÇÃO DO MAL; MALDIÇÃO.

MALEDICÊNCIA. Esta é a tradução do termo grego ka·ta·la·li·á. O verbo aparentado, ka·ta·la·lé·o, significa literalmente "falar contra", sem justificativa e usualmente de modo malicioso e hostil. (1Pe 2:12; 3:16) O discípulo Tiago relacionou esta expressão com fazer mau juízo ou condenar, dando assim a ideia de censura injustificada. — Tg 4:11; compare isso com Sal 50:20.

Os maledicentes, ou aqueles que falam mal dos outros pelas costas, estão entre aqueles contra quem se dirige o furor de Jeová, e a Sua Palavra mostra que todos os que continuam como tais merecem a morte. (Ro 1:18, 28-30, 32) O apóstolo Paulo expressou a grande preocupação de que, além de outros erros sérios, encontrasse membros da congregação de Corinto empenhados em maledicências. (2Co 12:20) Para que a Palavra ou mensagem de Deus tenha pleno efeito nos novos discípulos de Jesus Cristo, estes têm de se livrar de maledicências e de todas as outras formas de maldade. Só assim poderá 'o leite pertencente à palavra', as verdades bíblicas apropriadas às necessidades deles, promover o crescimento para a salvação. — 1Pe 2:1, 2.

MALHO. Veja MARTELO.

MALI [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "enfraquecer; adoecer"].

1. Neto de Levi, filho de Merari e irmão de Musi. (Êx 6:16, 19; 1Cr 6:19, 29; 24:26) Mali era pai de Eleazar e de Quis, e cabeça da família dos malitas. (Núm 3:20, 33; 1Cr 23:21; 24:28, 29) Serebias, seu descendente, mencionado como "homem de discrição dos filhos de Mali", retornou a Jerusalém junto com Esdras. — Esd 8:18.

2. Levita, filho de Musi, e, portanto, sobrinho de Mali, filho de Merari. — 1Cr 6:47; 23:23; 24:26, 30.

MALITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Mali]. Levitas descendentes de Mali, filho de Merari. — Núm 3:17, 20, 33; 26:58.

MALOM [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "enfraquecer; adoecer"]. Filho de Elimeleque e Noemi. Durante uma fome nos dias dos juízes, ele se mudou com seus pais de Belém, em Judá, para Moabe. Ali, Malom casou-se com a moabita Rute, mas faleceu sem ter filhos. (Ru 1:1-5; 4:10) Rute acompanhou sua sogra no retorno para Judá, e, acatando a lei do casamento levirato, casou-se com Boaz. (Ru 4:9, 10; De 25:5, 6) A linhagem resultante produziu Davi e levou a Jesus Cristo. — Ru 4:22; Mt 1:5, 6, 16.

MALOTI [duma raiz que significa "fazer sinais; expressar"]. Levita coatita e um dos 14 filhos do cantor Hemã. (1Cr 25:4, 5) Esta família serviu como músicos sob a direção de seu pai, Hemã. Quando Davi organizou as turmas dos levitas para servirem em rodízio na casa de Jeová, a 19.ª sorte caiu em Maloti, que assumiu a chefia daquela turma de 12 músicos. — 1Cr 25:6, 26.

MALQUIAS. Veja MALQUIJÁ N.º 3.

MALQUIEL [Deus É Rei; ou: Meu Deus É Rei]. Neto de Aser e filho de Berias. (Gên 46:17) Ele é chamado de "o pai de Birzaíte" (1Cr 7:31) e era cabeça duma família em Israel. — Núm 26:45.

MALQUIELITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Malquiel]. Família de aseritas que descendia de Malquiel. — Núm 26:44, 45.

MALQUIJÁ [Meu Rei É Jeová].

1. Levita que descendeu de Gersom e era antepassado de Asafe, o músico levítico. — 1Cr 6:39-43.

2. Descendente de Arão e cabeça da 5.ª das 24 turmas de sacerdotes organizadas por Davi. — 1Cr 24:1, 9.

3. Sacerdote, e pai de Pasur. — 1Cr 9:12; Ne 11:12; Je 21:1; 38:1.

4. "Filho do rei", em cuja cisterna foi lançado Jeremias. (Je 38:6) Neste caso, a expressão "filho do rei" possivelmente não denota que ele era descendente do rei, mas que tinha uma relação íntima com a casa real ou era oficial de ascendência real. — Veja JERAMEEL N.º 3.

5. Israelita "dos filhos de Parós", que estava entre os que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:25, 44.

6. Outro israelita "dos filhos de Parós", que estava entre os que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras. (Esd 10:25, 44) A Septuaginta grega reza ali "Hasabias", em vez de "Malquijá".

7. Homem de Israel, "dos filhos de Harim", que estava entre os que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras e os filhos, no tempo de Esdras. — Esd 10:31, 44.

8. Israelita, "filho de Harim". Junto com Hassube, ele reparou um setor da muralha de Jerusalém e a Torre dos Fornos, após o retorno do exílio babilônico. (Ne 3:11) Talvez seja o mesmo que o N.º 7.

9. Filho de Recabe e príncipe do distrito de Bete-Haquerem, que reparou o Portão dos Montes de Cinzas, quando Neemias era governador. — Ne 3:14.

10. Membro do grêmio dos ourives, que reparou parte da muralha de Jerusalém nos dias de Neemias. — Ne 3:31.

11. Sacerdote que ficou à esquerda de Esdras, quando este copista leu a Lei perante os israelitas, na restabelecida Jerusalém. — Ne 8:4.

12. Um dos sacerdotes, ou antepassado de um, que atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" quando Neemias era governador. — Ne 9:38–10:3.

13. Sacerdote que participou nas cerimônias de inauguração da muralha de Jerusalém, reconstruída sob a supervisão de Neemias. (Ne 12:40-42) Ele talvez seja o N.º 11.

MALQUIRÃO [Meu Rei é Elevado (Exaltado)]. Um dos filhos do Rei Jeconias (Joaquim) enquanto prisioneiro em Babilônia. — 1Cr 3:17, 18.

MALQUISUA [Meu Rei [Ouve Meu] Clamor por Ajuda]. Um dos filhos do Rei Saul. (1Sa 14:49; 1Cr 8:33; 9:39) Ele foi golpeado pelos filisteus em batalha no monte Gilboa (1Sa 31:2; 1Cr 10:2), e seu cadáver (junto com os dos seus irmãos Jonatã e Abinadabe, e o de seu pai Saul), foi pelos filisteus afixado à muralha de Bete-Sã. Todavia, homens valentes de Israel recuperaram os cadáveres, queimaram-nos em Jabes, e enterraram seus ossos ali. — 1Sa 31:8-13.

MALTA. Ilha do Mediterrâneo, situada a uns 100 km ao S da Sicília, com uma área de cerca de 246 km². Foi em Malta que o apóstolo Paulo naufragou, e ele permaneceu ali por três meses. Durante este tempo, ele curou o pai de Públio e outros que padeciam de doenças. — At 28:1, 7-9, 11.

No passado, alguns associaram a palavra grega traduzida "Malta" (Me·li·te) com Mljet (ou: a italiana Meleda), ao largo da costa O da península Balcânica, porque antigamente esta ilha era chamada de Melita. Mas a tradição e a evidência das Escrituras apontam para Malta como o lugar onde Paulo sofreu naufrágio. O nome "mar de Ádria", onde se diz que o barco estava ao se aproximar de Malta, passou a incluir as águas do Mediterrâneo ao L da Sicília e ao O de Creta, e, portanto, podia-se dizer que Malta estava delimitada por este mar. — At 27:27.

O Naufrágio de Paulo. Algum tempo depois do Dia da Expiação (em setembro ou outubro), o navio em que Paulo viajava como prisioneiro partiu do porto cretense de Bons Portos e foi assolado por um vento tempestuoso (Euro-aquilão), que evidentemente soprava do ENE. Impeliu o navio para longe da costa de Creta para Cauda, e os marujos temiam encalhar em "Sirte", as areias movediças ao longo do litoral N da África. (At 27:8, 9, 13-17) Um vento ENE não podia ter impelido o navio para Mljet, a uns 1.000 km ao NNO de Cauda. Evidentemente, o navio, depois de ficar à deriva por cerca de duas semanas, aproximava-se de Malta, a cerca de 870 km ao ONO de Cauda. — At 27:33; veja EURO-AQUILÃO.

O que atualmente é conhecido como baía de S. Paulo, situada no lado NE de Malta, podia ser atingido num curso ONO sem que antes tocasse em outra parte da ilha de Malta. Possivelmente, quando os ouvidos treinados dos marujos ouviram as ondas se rebentarem no rochoso promontório de Koura, que penetra no Mediterrâneo do lado oriental da baía de S. Paulo, eles começaram a suspeitar que se aproximavam de terra. A profundidade de "vinte braças" e "quinze braças" (de 1,8 m cada uma) medidas por eles corresponde basicamente às sondagens feitas em meados do século 19 na área da baía de S. Paulo. — At 27:27, 28.

Possivelmente por estarem familiarizados com outros portos de Malta, os marujos não reconheceram a terra como Malta, nem mesmo à luz do dia. O maior e mais conhecido porto da ilha é Valeta, 13 km ao SE da baía de S. Paulo. — At 27:39.

Ao longo da margem ocidental da baía de S. Paulo, há duas pequenas enseadas. Era provavelmente numa destas que os marujos esperavam "arremessar o navio", mas não foram bem sucedidos, o motivo sendo (segundo o texto grego literal) que 'caíram ao redor dentro de um lugar de dois mares'. Isto talvez signifique que o navio encalhou "num lugar de dois mares" (Al) ou "num banco de areia banhado em ambos os lados pelo mar". (NM) Ou o navio foi apanhado por correntezas cruzadas e encalhou. (Veja ALA, BJ.) A proa do navio ficou irrecuperavelmente encravada, talvez na lama e na argila que em partes da baía de S. Paulo existe numa profundidade de três braças, ao passo que a popa era destroçada pelas ondas. — At 27:39-41.

A experiência de Paulo em Malta. Nesta altura, os soldados decidiram matar Paulo e os outros prisioneiros. Isto talvez se devesse à estrita disciplina militar romana, que responsabilizava os guardas pela fuga de prisioneiros aos seus cuidados. (Veja At 12:19; 16:27.) Visto que o oficial do exército (centurião) refreou os soldados por causa de Paulo, todos a bordo, totalizando 276 pessoas, sobreviveram ao naufrágio, quer por nadarem até a praia, quer por chegarem a salvo a terra segurando tábuas e outros objetos flutuantes do navio naufragado. — At 27:37, 42-44.

Os habitantes de Malta, que não falavam grego, mostraram extraordinário humanitarismo para com estes sobreviventes, acendendo para eles até mesmo um fogo para se aquecerem. Quando o apóstolo Paulo deitou um feixe de gravetos neste fogo, saiu uma víbora venenosa e se prendeu à mão dele. Espantados de ver que Paulo não inchou nem morreu, as pessoas de Malta começaram a encará-lo como deus. — At 28:1-6.

Atualmente, não existem víboras nativas em Malta. Desde o primeiro século EC têm ocorrido grandes mudanças. Ao passo que Malta é hoje um dos países mais densamente povoados do mundo, tendo cerca de 1.280 pessoas por quilômetro quadrado, no tempo de Paulo talvez existissem extensas florestas. O aumento da população exerceria um acentuado efeito sobre o habitat da vida selvagem. Isto poderia ter facilmente causado o desaparecimento de todas as víboras, assim como aconteceu em Arran, uma ilha ao largo da costa SO da Escócia. Mesmo em 1853, porém, relatou-se que se viu uma víbora perto da baía de S. Paulo.

MALUQUE [duma raiz que significa "reinar"; ou: "rei"].

1. Levita merarita e antepassado de Etã, cantor levítico. — 1Cr 6:44-47.

2. Um dos sacerdotes que acompanharam Zorobabel quando os judeus retornaram do exílio babilônico. — Ne 12:1, 2, 7.

3. Israelita "dos filhos de Bani" dentre aqueles que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:29, 44.

4. Israelita "dos filhos de Harim" dentre aqueles que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram no tempo de Esdras. — Esd 10:31, 32, 44.

5. Um dos sacerdotes, ou antepassado de um, que atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" feito nos dias de Neemias. — Ne 9:38–10:4.

6. Israelita, um dos cabeças do povo, cujo descendente, se não ele mesmo, atestou o "arranjo fidedigno" feito no tempo de Neemias. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 27.

MALUQUI. Família sacerdotal, cujo representante serviu nos dias do sumo sacerdote Joiaquim, e nos dias de Esdras e do governador Neemias. — Ne 12:12, 14, 26.

O nome Maluqui ocorre no texto massorético com o kere, ou nota marginal, de que deve rezar "Melicu", sendo esta última forma encontrada na versão Almeida, revista e corrigida. A Septuaginta grega reza "Maluque", que alguns peritos acham ter sido a forma original. Estes peritos sugerem (mas não há maneira de provar isso) que o acréscimo de i (yohdh [י], em hebraico) no fim do nome ocorreu quando a primeira letra da palavra seguinte desintencionalmente foi repetida ao se copiar o manuscrito.

MALVAS [hebr.: 'o·róth ou 'oh·róth]. A malva-pequena, ou malva de folha redonda, é uma planta rasteira, de folhas quase redondas, um tanto lobuladas, de bordo serrilhado e de haste comprida. Suas flores têm mais de 1 cm de diâmetro e variam de cor do azul pálido ao branco. Os frutos mucilaginosos, chatos e redondos, costumam ser chamados de queijos.

"Malvas" traduz a palavra hebraica 'o·róth (2Rs 4:39; Is 26:19), considerada ser o plural de 'oh·ráh, "luz". (Est 8:16; Sal 139:12) Segundo o Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros (Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento), de L. Koehler e W. Baumgartner (Leiden, 1958, p. 90), 'o·róth denota a malva-pequena (Malva rotundifolia). Esta identificação baseia-se em esta planta ser muito sensível à luz, de modo que a designação hebraica talvez signifique "[ervas de] luz". Também, seu fruto é comestível, harmonizando-se assim com 2 Reis 4:39. — FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 543. Veja também ALTEIA.

MAMOM. Veja RIQUEZAS.

MANÁ. Principal alimento dos israelitas durante a peregrinação de 40 anos no ermo. (Êx 16:35) O maná foi pela primeira vez provido por Jeová no ermo de Sim, durante a última metade do segundo mês após a saída dos israelitas do Egito, em 1513 AEC. (Êx 16:1-4) Serviu-lhes de alimento até entrarem em Canaã, em 1473 AEC, e comerem dos produtos da Terra da Promessa. — Jos 5:10-12.

O maná surgia no solo com a evaporação da camada de orvalho que se formava de madrugada, de modo que "havia na superfície do ermo uma coisa miúda, flocosa, miúda como a geada sobre a terra". Quando os israelitas o viram pela primeira vez, disseram: "Que é isto?" ou, literalmente: "man hu'?" (Êx 16:13-15; Núm 11:9) Esta é a provável origem do nome, os próprios israelitas começando a chamar este alimento de "maná". — Êx 16:31.

Descrição. O maná era "branco como a semente de coentro" e "seu aspecto" era de bdélio, uma substância cerácea e transparente, de formato parecido à pérola. Seu sabor era comparável ao "de bolachas de mel", ou ao "dum bolo doce com azeite". Depois de moído numa mó manual ou pilado num gral, o maná era cozido, ou transformado em bolos e assado. — Êx 16:23, 31; Núm 11:7, 8.

Nenhuma substância natural hoje conhecida enquadra-se na descrição bíblica do maná em todos os sentidos, e assim há pouca base para se identificá-lo com um produto conhecido. É assim especialmente por causa dos aspectos milagrosos envolvidos em Jeová prover os israelitas de maná. A disponibilidade do maná não dependia da época do ano, nem de determinado lugar no ermo. Embora o maná criasse bichos e começasse a cheirar mal em todos os outros dias quando guardado para o dia seguinte, o gômor adicional de maná recolhido no sexto dia, para ser usado como alimento no sábado, não se estragava. Não se encontrava maná no sábado, o que impunha aos israelitas a guarda do sábado. — Êx 16:19-30.

O cabeça da família ou ajuntava ou supervisionava o recolhimento do maná para a família inteira. Visto que o maná se derretia quando o sol ficava quente, sem dúvida, ele ajuntava depressa o suprimento aproximado necessitado pela família e depois o media. Quer ajuntasse pouco ou muito, segundo o tamanho da família, a quantidade recolhida sempre mostrava ser um gômor (2,2 l) por pessoa. (Êx 16:16-18) O apóstolo Paulo aludiu a isso ao incentivar os cristãos em Corinto a usar seus excedentes materiais para compensar a deficiência material de seus irmãos. — 2Co 8:13-15.

Objetivo. Jeová deixou os israelitas ficar com fome no ermo e depois lhes forneceu maná para ensinar-lhes "que o homem não vive somente de pão, mas que o homem vive de toda expressão da boca de Jeová". Jeová fez isso para 'os humilhar e para os pôr à prova, a fim de fazer-lhes o bem nos seus dias posteriores'. (De 8:3, 16) Quando os israelitas se cansaram do maná e começaram a chamá-lo de "pão desprezível", Jeová puniu a rebeldia deles por enviar serpentes venenosas entre eles, causando a morte de muitos. — Núm 21:5, 6.

O salmista chamou o maná de "cereal do céu" (Sal 78:24), de "pão desde o céu" (Sal 105:40) e de "o próprio pão dos possantes" (Sal 78:25). Os anjos são descritos como "poderosos em poder" (Sal 103:20), e, portanto, podiam ser chamados de "possantes". Isto, porém, não significa que os próprios anjos comessem o maná, mas que Deus talvez usasse meios angélicos para prover dele os israelitas. (Veja Gál 3:19.) Ou, visto que o céu é a moradia dos "possantes", a expressão "pão dos possantes" talvez simplesmente indique sua fonte celestial.

Para que gerações futuras pudessem ver o maná, Arão devia depositar perante Jeová um jarro com um gômor (2,2 l) de maná. Depois de se completar a dourada Arca do Pacto, um "jarro de ouro" com maná foi colocado dentro desta arca sagrada. (Êx 16:32-34; He 9:4) Cerca de cinco séculos mais tarde, porém, quando a Arca foi transferida da tenda erigida para ela por Davi para o templo construído por Salomão, desaparecera o jarro de ouro. (2Sa 6:17; 1Rs 8:9; 2Cr 5:10) Havia cumprido sua finalidade.

Uso Simbólico. Embora o maná fosse uma provisão divina (Ne 9:20), não sustentou para sempre a vida dos israelitas. Cristo Jesus salientou isso, e depois acrescentou: "Eu sou o pão vivo que desceu do céu; se alguém comer deste pão, viverá para sempre; e, de fato, o pão que eu hei de dar é a minha carne a favor da vida do mundo." (Jo 6:30-33, 48-51, 58) Os fiéis seguidores de Cristo aproveitam-se deste maná celestial, ou "pão da vida". Fazem isso em sentido figurativo por exercerem fé no poder resgatador da carne e do sangue de Jesus oferecidos em sacrifício. Fazerem isso abre-lhes a perspectiva de viver para sempre, quer nos céus com Cristo, quer no Paraíso terrestre.

Cristo usou também o jarro de maná de modo simbólico, ao assegurar aos seus seguidores, ungidos com espírito, que aqueles que se mostrassem vencedores receberiam o "maná escondido", um suprimento imperecível de alimentos, ou aquilo que resulta de tal suprimento, no caso deles, a imortalidade e incorruptibilidade no céu. — Re 2:17; 1Co 15:53.

MANAATE [duma raiz que significa "descanse; acomode-se"].

1. Descendente de Seir através de Sobal. — Gên 36:20, 23; 1Cr 1:38, 40.

2. Lugar para o qual certos "filhos de Eúde" que moravam em Geba foram exilados numa época não especificada. (1Cr 8:6) Alguns o identificam provisoriamente com el-Malha (Manahat), a uns 6 km ao OSO do monte do Templo em Jerusalém.

MANAATITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Manaate]. Certas pessoas de Judá, descendentes de Calebe e de Salma, que evidentemente constituíam parte da população de Manaate. (1Cr 2:50, 51, 54; 8:6) Os manaatitas talvez sejam os menuotitas mencionados em 1 Crônicas 2:52.

MANAÉM [forma gr. do termo hebr. para Menaém, significando "Consolador"]. Homem que estava entre os profetas e instrutores na congregação em Antioquia. Ele tinha sido educado junto com o governante distrital Herodes (Ântipas). — At 13:1.

MANASSÉS [Aquele Que Torna Esquecediço; Aquele Que Faz Esquecer].

1. Filho primogênito de José e neto de Jacó. Depois de José se tornar administrador de alimentos do Egito, Faraó deu-lhe Asenate, filha de Potífera, sacerdote de Om, por esposa, e ela deu a José dois filhos, Manassés e Efraim. José chamou o primogênito de Manassés, porque, conforme disse: "Deus me fez esquecer toda a minha desgraça e toda a casa de meu pai." — Gên 41:45, 50-52.

Quando Jacó abençoou Manassés e Efraim, ele persistiu em pôr a mão direita sobre Efraim e a esquerda sobre Manassés, colocando assim Efraim, o mais moço, na frente de Manassés. (Gên 48:13-20) Conforme isso indicava, Efraim tornar-se-ia maior do que Manassés.

Manassés teve filhos varões com uma concubina síria (1Cr 7:14), e José viveu o suficiente para ver os filhos do filho de Manassés, Maquir. — Gên 50:22, 23.

2. Tribo de Israel que descendeu de Manassés, filho de José, e que consistia em sete famílias tribais. Cerca de um ano depois de os israelitas partirem do Egito, os varões vigorosos de Manassés, de 20 anos de idade para cima, somavam 32.200. (Núm 1:34, 35) Este número, sem dúvida, incluía Gadi, um dos dez homens que trouxeram um relatório mau depois de espiar a Terra da Promessa. (Núm 13:1, 2, 11, 25-33) Por ocasião do segundo censo feito quase quatro décadas mais tarde, os varões registrados dessa tribo haviam aumentado para 52.700, excedendo Efraim em 20.200. (Núm 26:28-34, 37) Evidentemente, pois, foi com respeito ao futuro papel inferior de Manassés que Moisés falou dos "milhares de Manassés", mas das "dezenas de milhares de Efraim". — De 33:17.

No ermo, a tribo de Manassés, sob a liderança do seu maioral Gamaliel, filho de Pedazur, acampava ao O do tabernáculo, ao lado de Efraim e de Benjamim. Esta divisão de três tribos era a terceira na ordem de marcha. — Núm 1:10, 16; 2:18-24; 7:54; 10:23.

Conquistas em Ambos os Lados do Rio Jordão. Quando os israelitas derrotaram os reis amorreus Síon e Ogue, Moisés concedeu as terras que conquistaram deles aos rubenitas, aos gaditas e à metade da tribo de Manassés, sob a condição de que estas tribos participassem na conquista do território ao O do Jordão. (Núm 32:20-33; 34:14, 15; De 29:7, 8) O setor setentrional da região ao L do Jordão parece ter sido tomado principalmente pelos esforços dos manassitas, tendo sido partes dele conquistadas por Jair, Noba e "os filhos de Maquir". Por este motivo, Moisés designou-lhes esta região. — Núm 32:39-42; De 3:13-15; 1Cr 2:21, 22.

Mais tarde, homens da "meia tribo de Manassés", que já haviam recebido sua herança, deveras cruzaram o Jordão e participaram na conquista das terras ao oeste. (Jos 1:12-18; 4:12) Eles estavam também entre os reunidos diante do monte Gerizim, quando Josué "leu em voz alta todas as palavras da lei, a bênção e a invocação do mal". (De 27:12; Jos 8:33, 34) Sob a liderança de Josué, os israelitas quebrantaram o poderio dos cananeus, derrotando 31 reis no decurso de cerca de seis anos. (Jos 12:7-24) Depois, embora ainda restassem territórios para conquistar, Josué, ajudado pelo sumo sacerdote Eleazar e por divinamente designados representantes de dez tribos (inclusive o manassita Haniel, filho de Éfode), repartiram o país em parcelas de herança. — Núm 34:17, 23; Jos 13:1-7.

Herança de Terra. Metade da tribo de Manassés, naturalmente, já possuía sua herança ao L do Jordão. Esta incluía Basã e parte de Gileade. (Jos 13:29-31) Ao S ficava Gade, sendo Maanaim a cidade de fronteira. (Jos 13:24-26, 30) Esta região era predominantemente um planalto, com uma elevação média de uns 610 m. Ali se encontrava Golã, uma das seis cidades de refúgio, e Beesterá (Astarote), outra cidade levítica. — Jos 20:8, 9; 21:27; 1Cr 6:71.

A metade remanescente dos manassitas recebeu por herança território ao O do Jordão. (Jos 17:2, 5) Era limitado por Efraim ao S, por Aser ao NO, por Issacar ao NE e pelo mar Mediterrâneo ao O. Desde Micmetate, a fronteira entre Efraim e Manassés se estendia até Tapua, seguindo pelo vale da torrente de Cana, e terminava no Mediterrâneo. (Veja Jos 16:5-8; 17:7-10.) Ao passo que os efraimitas tinham certas cidades encravadas em Manassés, designaram-se aos manassitas cidades encravadas (Bete-Seã, Ibleão, Dor, En-Dor, Taanaque e Megido, bem como suas aldeias dependentes) tanto em Issacar como em Aser. (Jos 16:9; 17:11) Os manassitas deixaram de expulsar os cananeus dessas cidades encravadas, mas, com o tempo, sujeitaram-nos a trabalhos forçados. (Jos 17:11-13; Jz 1:27, 28; compare isso com 1Cr 7:29.) Duas destas cidades encravadas, Taanaque (Aner?) e Ibleão (Bileão ou Gate-Rimom?), foram designadas a levitas coatitas. — Jos 21:25, 26; 1Cr 6:70.

História. Depois de completada a distribuição das terras, Josué abençoou os homens de Rubem, de Gade e da oriental "meia tribo de Manassés", e encorajou-os a continuarem a servir a Jeová. (Jos 22:1-8) Eles partiram de Silo, foram até o Jordão, e então, perto deste rio, construíram um altar. Isto quase que provocou uma guerra civil, visto que as outras tribos consideravam isso como ato de infidelidade e de rebelião. Todavia, a questão foi resolvida pacificamente quando se explicou que se erigira este altar, não para sacrifícios, mas para servir de memorial de fidelidade a Jeová. — Jos 22:9-31.

Num período posterior, Gideão, juiz manassita, foi usado por Jeová para libertar os israelitas da opressão dos midianitas. (Jz 6:11-16, 33-35; 7:23; 8:22) Jefté foi evidentemente outro juiz da tribo de Manassés. Foi durante o seu juizado que Israel foi liberto da hostilização dos amonitas. — Jz 11:1, 32, 33.

Algum tempo durante o reinado do primeiro rei de Israel, Saul, os rubenitas, os gaditas e a oriental "meia tribo de Manassés" obtiveram uma vitória decisiva sobre os agarenos e seus aliados. (1Cr 5:10, 18-22) Também, neste período geral, manassitas, inclusive homens de notável valentia, estavam entre os que desertaram Saul para se juntar a Davi. (1Cr 12:19-21) Depois da morte de Saul e de seu sucessor, Is-Bosete, 18.000 manassitas da região ao O do Jordão, e outros milhares da área ao L do Jordão chegaram a Hébron para fazer Davi rei sobre todo o Israel (1070 AEC). — 1Cr 12:31, 37, 38.

Anos mais tarde, as extensas reformas religiosas empreendidas pelo Rei Asa, de Judá, induziram muitos manassitas a desertar o reino setentrional "ao verem que Jeová, seu Deus, estava com ele". (2Cr 15:8, 9) Por ocasião duma grande assembleia, no 15.º ano do reinado de Asa (963 AEC), eles se juntaram a outros em fazer um pacto para buscar a Jeová. (2Cr 15:10, 12) De modo similar, no reinado do Rei Ezequias, de Judá (745-717 AEC), ao passo que muitos caçoavam dos mensageiros enviados por ele para fazer um convite de vir a Jerusalém para a celebração da Páscoa, outros manassitas de bom grado se humilharam e reagiram favoravelmente. Depois disso, esses acatadores participaram em destruir os apetrechos de idolatria. — 2Cr 30:1, 10, 11, 18; 31:1.

Anteriormente (c. 760 AEC), Tiglate-Pileser (Tilgate-Pilneser) III havia levado ao exílio os manassitas que moravam ao L do Jordão. (1Cr 5:23-26) Mais ou menos na mesma época, parece que havia conflitos intertribais entre Efraim e Manassés. Mas, ambas as tribos estavam unidas na sua oposição a Judá. — Is 9:20, 21.

Quase um século depois do fim do reino das dez tribos, o Rei Josias, de Judá, estendeu sua destruição de altares, pedestais de incenso, postes sagrados e imagens, todos usados para a adoração falsa, aos lugares devastados de Manassés e a outras regiões fora de Judá (a partir de 648 AEC). Este rei de Judá mandou também fazer consertos no templo, sendo a própria obra financiada por contribuições de israelitas de diversas tribos, inclusive Manassés. — 2Cr 34:1-11.

Após o retorno do exílio babilônico (537 AEC), alguns manassitas moravam em Jerusalém. — 1Cr 9:1-3.

Na visão de Ezequiel, a terra designada a Manassés ficava entre Naftali e Efraim. (Ez 48:4, 5) A tribo de Manassés é também representada como uma das tribos do Israel espiritual. — Re 7:6.

3. Nome que aparece no texto massorético em Juízes 18:30, por causa duma modificação feita por escribas. O relato refere-se à apostasia dos danitas, e a Tradução do Novo Mundo diz que "Jonatã, filho de Gersom, filho de Moisés, ele e seus filhos se tornaram sacerdotes para a tribo dos danitas". (Veja também BJ; CBC; IBB; MC.) Os escribas judeus inseriram uma letra suspensa (nun = n) entre as primeiras duas letras do original nome hebraico, para que rezasse "de Manassés" em vez de "de Moisés", em respeito para com Moisés. Os escribas procuravam assim ocultar o vitupério ou a desonra que poderia sobrevir ao nome de Moisés por causa da ação de Jonatã. Além de ocorrer no alterado texto massorético, "de Manassés" ocorre no Manuscrito Vaticano N.º 1209 da Septuaginta grega e na Pesito siríaca. Todavia, "de Moisés" é encontrado no Manuscrito Alexandrino da Septuaginta grega e na Vulgata latina, em Juízes 18:30.

4. Rei de Judá, filho e sucessor do Rei Ezequias. (2Rs 20:21; 2Cr 32:33) A mãe de Manassés era Hefzibá. Ele tinha 12 anos de idade quando ascendeu ao trono como 14.º rei de Judá depois de Davi, e governou por 55 anos (716-662 AEC) em Jerusalém. (2Rs 21:1) Fez o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová, reconstruindo os altos que seu pai havia destruído, erigindo altares a Baal, adorando "todo o exército dos céus" e construindo altares da religião falsa em dois pátios do templo. Fez seus filhos passar pelo fogo, praticou a magia, empregou adivinhação e promoveu práticas espíritas. Manassés colocou também na casa de Jeová a imagem esculpida do poste sagrado que havia feito. Seduziu Judá e Jerusalém "para fazerem pior do que as nações que Jeová aniquilara de diante dos filhos de Israel". (2Rs 21:2-9; 2Cr 33:2-9) Embora Jeová enviasse profetas, não deram ouvidos a eles. Manassés também era culpado de derramar sangue inocente em grande quantidade (2Rs 21:10-16), o que, de acordo com a literatura dos rabinos judeus, incluía o de Isaías, o qual, segundo eles, foi serrado em pedaços à ordem de Manassés. — Veja He 11:37.

Manassés foi punido por não prestar atenção à mensagem de Jeová, sendo ele levado cativo, pelo rei da Assíria, a Babilônia, uma das cidades reais do monarca assírio. (2Cr 33:10, 11) 'Manassés de Judá' é mencionado na lista do rei assírio Esar-Hadom, de 22 "reis de Hati, do litoral e das ilhas", que pagavam tributo. O nome de Manassés aparece também numa lista de reis tributários de Assurbanipal. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 291, 294.

Enquanto em cativeiro, Manassés arrependeu-se, humilhou-se e orou a Jeová. Deus ouviu seu pedido de favor e restaurou-lhe o reinado em Jerusalém. (2Cr 33:12, 13) Depois disso, Manassés "construiu uma muralha externa para a Cidade de Davi", pôs chefes militares nas cidades fortificadas de Judá, e removeu da casa de Jeová os deuses estrangeiros e o ídolo, bem como os altares que havia construído "no monte da casa de Jeová e em Jerusalém". Manassés preparou o altar de Jeová e começou a oferecer sacrifícios sobre ele, incentivando outros a servir a Jeová. Todavia, o povo ainda oferecia sacrifícios nos altos, embora a Jeová. (2Cr 33:14-17) Quando Manassés morreu, ele foi sucedido no reinado pelo seu filho Amom. — 2Cr 33:20.

5. Israelita "dos filhos de Paate-Moabe", que estava entre aqueles que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras e que as despediram "junto com os filhos" nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:30, 44.

6. Outro israelita, "dos filhos de Hasum", entre aqueles que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras por causa da posição zelosa de Esdras a favor da adoração pura. — Esd 10:33, 44.

MANASSITAS. Veja MANASSÉS N.º 2.

MANDRÁGORA [hebr.: du·dha·'im, plural]. Erva perene que pertence à mesma família que a batata, de grandes folhas verde-escuras, ovais ou oblongas. As folhas da mandrágora (Mandragora officinarum) parecem crescer diretamente da raiz principal, espalham-se em círculo e ficam perto do solo. Do centro deste círculo crescem as hastes florais, cada uma produzindo uma única flor branca, azulada ou roxa. O fruto vermelho-amarelado do tamanho aproximado duma ameixa, amadurece por volta do tempo da colheita do trigo na Palestina. (Gên 30:14) Tem sido descrito como de cheiro agradável e fresco como a maçã. (Veja Cân 7:13.) A grossa raiz principal, frequentemente bifurcada, da mandrágora tem certa semelhança com os membros inferiores do homem. Isto tem dado margem a numerosas crenças supersticiosas e a atribuírem-se à planta poderes mágicos. — FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 544.

Nos tempos antigos, o fruto da mandrágora era usado na medicina como narcótico e como antiespasmódico. Também, a mandrágora era, e ainda é, em algumas partes do Oriente Médio, considerada como afrodisíaco e como capaz de aumentar a fertilidade humana ou a ajudar na concepção. O registro de Gênesis relata que Raquel concordou em trocar com sua irmã Leia uma oportunidade de usufruir os direitos conjugais de seu marido Jacó em troca de algumas mandrágoras. (Gên 30:14, 15) Embora a Bíblia não revele a intenção dela, é possível que Raquel achasse que estas a ajudariam a conceber, acabando assim com o vitupério da sua esterilidade. No entanto, ela ficou realmente grávida só alguns anos depois deste incidente. — Gên 30:22-24.

MANIFESTAÇÃO. Exposição, ou evidência discernível, demonstração de autoridade ou poder. O termo grego e·pi·fá·nei·a, traduzido "manifestação", é usado nas Escrituras com referência aos dias de Jesus Cristo na Terra e especialmente com respeito a diversos eventos durante a sua presença em poder régio.

O Filho de Deus Manifestado em Carne. Foi com respeito à "manifestação de nosso Salvador, Cristo Jesus", na carne que o apóstolo Paulo escreveu as palavras de 2 Timóteo 1:9-11. O envio do Filho de Deus desde o céu se destinava a produzir a vindicação da soberania de Jeová. Devia também resultar na 'abolição da morte' atribuível a Adão e em trazer à luz a perspectiva de vida e de incorrupção no céu para alguns humanos. Como um aspecto do desenvolvimento do "segredo sagrado desta devoção piedosa", Jesus foi "manifestado em carne". (1Ti 3:16) Paulo chamou também este ato de Deus, de enviar seu Filho, de 'manifestação' da benignidade imerecida de Deus, "que traz salvação a toda sorte de homens, instruindonos a repudiar a impiedade e os desejos mundanos, e a viver com bom juízo, e justiça, e devoção piedosa no meio deste atual sistema de coisas, ao passo que aguardamos a feliz esperança e a gloriosa manifestação do grande Deus e do Salvador de nós, Cristo Jesus". (Tit 2:11-13) A manifestação de Cristo em glória, ao ser realizada, manifestaria também a glória de Deus, que o enviou.

Cristo Manifestado em Glória Celestial. Durante a presença de Cristo, ele voltaria sua atenção aos seus irmãos espirituais que estivessem dormindo na morte. Estes seriam aqueles de quem Paulo fala, incluindo a si mesmo, os quais "amaram a sua manifestação" e receberiam 'como recompensa a coroa da justiça'. (2Ti 4:8) Quando o Senhor 'descesse do céu com uma chamada dominante, com voz de arcanjo e com a trombeta de Deus', os mortos em união com Cristo se levantariam primeiro, e Cristo os acolheria a si. Desta maneira, ele se manifestaria a eles de forma poderosa na sua glória. Passaria então a manifestar a sua presença aos seus irmãos ainda na terra, e os acolheria a si por ocasião da morte deles. — 1Te 4:15, 16; Jo 14:3; Re 14:13.

Como Rei e Juiz. Quando Cristo estava perante Pôncio Pilatos, ele disse que seu Reino não fazia parte deste mundo, embora não negasse ser rei. (Jo 18:36, 37) Não se manifestou então como potentado, porque ainda não chegara o tempo para assumir a autoridade do seu Reino. Não obstante, viria o tempo em que "a manifestação de nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo" seria claramente reconhecida, tempo em que exerceria autoridade como "o feliz e único Potentado" e "o Rei dos que reinam e Senhor dos que dominam". — 1Ti 6:13-16; Da 2:44; 7:13, 14.

Em vista do vindouro Reino e da manifestação de Cristo, Paulo disse a Timóteo: "Eu te mando solenemente, perante Deus e Cristo Jesus, que está destinado a julgar os vivos e os mortos, e pela sua manifestação e pelo seu reino: prega a palavra." (2Ti 4:1, 2) O apóstolo indicou assim o tempo em que se manifestaria inconfundivelmente a posição gloriosa de Cristo no céu, ocasião em que faria com que os julgamentos de Deus fossem sentidos na terra.

Por destruir "o homem que é contra a lei". Paulo, ao escrever aos cristãos em Tessalônica "com respeito à presença de nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo", exortou-os a não se deixarem demover da sua razão, nem de ficar provocados por qualquer mensagem "no sentido de que o dia de Jeová está aqui". O simbólico "homem que é contra a lei", que teria operado por séculos em oposição a Deus e a Cristo, seria então reduzido a nada "pela manifestação de sua presença". Este homem "contra a lei" reconheceria a presença de Cristo, não por fé, como os cristãos que amam a sua manifestação, mas pelo poder de Jesus manifesto na aniquilação dos que são deste "homem" composto. — 2Te 2:1-8; veja HOMEM QUE É CONTRA A LEI.

Manifestação do Espírito e da Verdade. Depois de se derramar o espírito santo sobre os discípulos de Cristo, a operação invisível desse sobre estes discípulos foi 'manifestado' por evidências visíveis. Algumas delas eram: a capacidade de falar em línguas estrangeiras, dons de cura e discernimento de pronunciações inspiradas. (1Co 12:7-10) O apóstolo Paulo fala também de se "tornar manifesta a verdade" a outros pela boa conduta e pela pregação dos cristãos. — 2Co 4:2.

MANILHAS. Veja TORNOZELEIRA.

MANJEDOURA, BAIA. O menino Jesus foi colocado numa manjedoura e foi visto ali por pastores, aos quais se fizera o anúncio angélico sobre o nascimento dele. (Lu 2:7, 12, 16) A palavra grega para "manjedoura", neste caso, é fát·ne, que significa "lugar de alimentação". Fát·ne possivelmente também pode se aplicar à baia em que se recolhem animais. (Veja Lu 13:15.) O termo hebraico 'e·vús geralmente é entendido como significando "manjedoura" e foi traduzido fát·ne na Septuaginta grega, assim como foram também três outras palavras hebraicas, traduzidas "baias" (2Cr 32:28), "currais" (Hab 3:17) e "forragem" (Jó 6:5).

Na Palestina, os arqueólogos encontraram grandes cochos escavados em um único bloco de pedra calcária, tendo cerca de 90 cm de comprimento, 50 cm de largura e 60 cm de profundidade. Pensa-se que tenham servido de manjedouras. Pode ser também que, assim como em tempos mais recentes, se cortassem manjedouras nas paredes de cavernas usadas para abrigar animais.

MANOÁ. Homem danita da cidade de Zorá, na Sefelá (Jos 15:33), e pai do juiz Sansão. Manoá era adorador devoto de Jeová.

Certo dia apareceu um anjo à esposa estéril de Manoá, anunciando que ela daria à luz um filho que seria nazireu de Deus. Informado disso, Manoá suplicou a Jeová, pedindo que enviasse de novo o mensageiro, para instruí-los sobre como criar o filho. Jeová atendeu a oração e enviou o anjo pela segunda vez. Quando Manoá propôs oferecer uma refeição ao mensageiro, ele foi informado que, em vez disso, fizesse uma oferta queimada a Jeová, o que ele fez. Foi depois de este mensageiro ascender na chama que subia do altar que Manoá o reconheceu como anjo de Jeová. Manoá receava que ele e sua esposa fossem morrer por terem tido esta experiência. Mas ela mitigou os temores dele, dizendo: "Se Jeová tão somente se tivesse agradado de nos entregar à morte, não teria aceitado a oferta queimada e a oferta de cereais da nossa mão, e não nos teria mostrado todas estas coisas, e não nos teria deixado agora ouvir nada disso." — Jz 13:2-23.

Anos mais tarde, Manoá e sua esposa, 'não sabendo que isto era da parte de Jeová', objetaram a Sansão querer casar-se com uma filisteia de Timná. (Jz 14:1-4; compare isso com De 7:3, 4.) Subsequentemente, Manoá e sua esposa acompanharam Sansão a Timná, embora não fossem com ele até a casa da filisteia. Por isso não viram quando Sansão matou um leão novo só com as mãos. Em outra ocasião, pretendendo trazer a filisteia para casa, ele novamente foi com os pais a Timná. Desviou-se para inspecionar a carcaça do leão que antes havia matado e encontrou nele um enxame de abelhas e mel. Juntando-se novamente aos pais, ofereceu-lhes um pouco do mel que havia tirado da carcaça do leão, e eles o comeram. Depois, pelo visto, a família seguiu caminho, e, sem dúvida, os pais estiveram presentes no banquete providenciado por Sansão em Timná. — Jz 14:5-10.

Manoá faleceu antes de seu filho, porque Sansão foi enterrado na sepultura de Manoá, entre Zorá e Estaol. — Jz 16:31.

MANRE [possivelmente: Bem Alimentado].

1. Maioral amorreu que, junto com seus irmãos Aner e Escol, apoiou Abraão em derrotar o Rei Quedorlaomer e seus aliados. A base para seu apoio evidentemente era a confederação em que haviam entrado com Abraão. — Gên 14:13, 24.

2. Lugar geralmente identificado com er-Ramat el-Khalil, a uns 3 km ao N de Hébron, mas que alguns acham que ficava mais para o O, em harmonia com Gênesis 23:17. (Veja MACPELA.) Era o lugar principal de residência de Abraão, e, pelo menos por algum tempo, de Isaque. Na vizinha caverna de Macpela, eles e suas esposas, bem como Jacó e Leia, foram por fim sepultados. (Gên 13:18; 35:27; 49:29-33; 50:13) Aquela área é bem regada por numerosas fontes. Havia ali um bosque de árvores grandes no tempo de Abraão, e ele construiu ali um altar a Jeová. (Gên 13:18) Debaixo de uma destas árvores, ele recebeu hospitaleiramente os anjos antes da destruição de Sodoma e Gomorra. (Gên 18:1-8) Foi também ali que Jeová lhe prometeu um filho com Sara. (Gên 18:9-19) De um ponto perto de Manre, era possível que Abraão visse Sodoma e observasse ali a grossa fumaça subindo em resultado da destruição ardente daquela região. — Gên 19:27-29.

Na área atualmente identificada com Manre, árvores grandes (usualmente carvalhos) têm recebido atenção histórica desde o tempo de Josefo até o presente. No decorrer dos séculos, erigiram-se sacrários, usualmente relacionados com uma árvore antiga que se presume ser aquela debaixo da qual Abraão falou com os anjos. Herodes, o Grande, construiu um muro de pedra em torno de um lugar tradicional assim. O imperador Constantino, depois de sua sogra ter visitado a área no quarto século EC, mandou erigir uma basílica ali. Posteriormente, também os conquistadores muçulmanos veneravam esta área.

MANSIDÃO. Brandura de temperamento, sem altivez ou vaidade. Disposição mental que habilita a pessoa a suportar ultrajes com paciência e sem irritação, ressentimento ou retaliação vingativa. É companheira íntima de outras virtudes, tais como a humildade, a despretensão mental e a delicadeza, e raras vezes está separada delas. (Veja BRANDURA; HUMILDADE.) A palavra hebraica traduzida "manso" ('a·náw) deriva da raiz 'a·náh, que significa "afligir, humilhar, rebaixar".

Na Bíblia, a mansidão é enfatizada como a atitude mental da pessoa em primeiro lugar para com Deus, e então para com concriaturas. Por exemplo, está escrito: "Os mansos certamente incrementarão a sua alegria no próprio Jeová." (Is 29:19) Os mansos são dóceis — Jeová Deus "ensinará aos mansos o seu caminho" (Sal 25:9) — e eles estão dispostos a suportar a disciplina da mão Dele, embora esta às vezes no momento seja penosa. (He 12:4-11) A mansidão induz as pessoas a esperar que Jeová endireite os males e prejuízos sofridos injustamente, em vez de elas se acalorarem em ira. (Sal 37:8-11) Tais pessoas não ficam desapontadas, porque o designado por Jeová, o 'renovo do toco de Jessé', repreenderá em justiça "em benefício dos mansos da terra". — Is 11:1-4.

Moisés. Moisés era um homem assim, "em muito o mais manso de todos os homens na superfície do solo", alguém que podia suportar críticas sem ressentimento. (Núm 12:3) A ocasião deste comentário sobre a sua mansidão foi quando Miriã e Arão murmuraram contra Moisés. Na realidade, era uma queixa injustificada contra Jeová, que ele prontamente notou e repreendeu. — Núm 12:1-15.

Alguns comentadores acusam Moisés de injustificadamente louvar a si mesmo por registrar esta referência à sua própria mansidão. Outros críticos afirmam que a declaração foi posteriormente acrescentada por outra pessoa, ao passo que mais outros citam isso como evidência de que não foi Moisés quem escreveu o Pentateuco. Todavia, o Commentary (Comentário) de Cook diz a respeito destas palavras: "Quando consideramos que foram proferidas por Moisés não 'proprio motu [da sua própria iniciativa]', mas sob a direção do Espírito Santo que estava sobre ele (cf. xi. 17), elas exibem certa 'objetividade', que atesta tanto a sua genuinidade como também a sua inspiração. Estas palavras, bem como as passagens em que Moisés não menos inequivocamente registra suas próprias faltas (cf. xx. 12 seqq.; Êx. iv. 24 seqq.; Deut. i. 37), exibem a simplicidade de alguém que dá testemunho a seu respeito, mas não para seu próprio crédito (cf. S. Mat. xi. 28, 29). As palavras são inseridas para explicar por que Moisés não tomou medidas para vindicar a si mesmo, e por que o Senhor consequentemente interveio com tanta prontidão."

Jesus Cristo. Jesus demonstrou mansidão por suportar toda espécie de injúria pessoal, sem uma palavra de queixa, até mesmo deixando-se levar como cordeiro à matança, sem abrir a boca em protesto. (Fil 2:5-8; He 12:2; At 8:32-35; Is 53:7) Este Maior-do-Que-Moisés também se recomendou a outros como pessoa mansa e de temperamento brando. (Mt 11:28, 29, Al; ALA; BJ; CBC; NM; PIB) Conforme Isaías 61:1 predisse, ele foi ungido com o espírito de Jeová "para anunciar boas novas aos mansos". Depois de Jesus ler esta profecia na sinagoga da sua cidade, Nazaré, ele declarou: "Hoje se cumpriu esta escritura que acabais de ouvir." (Lu 4:16-21) Deus, ao enviar assim seu amado Filho para ensinar aos mansos a respeito da salvação, deveras mostrou-lhes um favor todo especial. — Sal 149:4; Pr 3:34.

Traz Benefícios. O convite expresso pelo profeta Sofonias ainda é feito aos mansos da terra: "Procurai a Jeová, todos os mansos da terra, que tendes praticado a Sua própria decisão judicial. Procurai a justiça, procurai a mansidão [ou: humildade]. Provavelmente sereis escondidos no dia da ira de Jeová." (Sof 2:3 n) Além destas maravilhosas promessas, fazem-se outras a tais. Por exemplo: "Os próprios mansos possuirão a terra e deveras se deleitarão na abundância de paz." (Sal 37:11) Tanto em sentido espiritual como em sentido literal, "os mansos comerão e se fartarão". — Sal 22:26.

Assim, em contraste com os iníquos, que desencaminham os mansos e procuram destruí-los (Am 2:7; 8:4), Jeová escuta os desejos sinceros destes por responder às suas orações; a sua esperança em Jeová não é desapontada. (Sal 10:17; 9:18) Veraz é o provérbio: "Melhor é ser humilde em espírito com os mansos, do que repartir despojo com os que se enaltecem." — Pr 16:19.

MANTEIGA. Emulsão, principalmente de gordura, produzida por se agitar ou bater leite, ou nata. Nos tempos bíblicos, este produto do leite era dessemelhante do conhecido no atual mundo ocidental, pois, em vez de ser sólido, tinha consistência semifluida. (Jó 20:17) Por isso, Koehler e Baumgartner definem a palavra hebraica hhem·'áh como manteiga fresca, ainda mole. (Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], Leiden, 1958, p. 308) Franciscus Zorell diz que esta palavra se refere ao "leite grosso, coalhado". (Lexicon Hebraicum et Aramaicum Veteris Testamenti [Léxico Hebraico e Aramaico do Velho Testamento], Roma, 1968, p. 248) A mesma palavra é traduzida "leite coalhado" em Juízes 5:25.

"Bater [literalmente: espremer] o leite é o que produz manteiga." (Pr 30:33) Fazia-se isso por colocar o leite num odre e sová-lo, sacudi-lo sobre os joelhos ou suspendê-lo entre varas, balançando-o bruscamente para lá e para cá até se conseguir a consistência desejada.

Embora a manteiga fosse considerada iguaria, ela tem sido consumida e usufruída desde os tempos patriarcais. Abraão incluiu-a no banquete que ofereceu aos visitantes angélicos (Gên 18:8); os amigos de Davi foram ao encontro dele levando manteiga e outros alimentos de presente. — 2Sa 17:29.

"Manteiga", no Salmo 55:21, é usada figurativamente para se referir às palavras agradáveis, macias e melosas dum traidor.

MANTO. Veja VESTIMENTA.

MANTO OFICIAL. A palavra hebraica 'ad·dé·reth descreve aquilo que é "majestoso" (Ez 17:8; Za 11:3), e, com referência a uma veste, evidentemente se refere a uma capa ampla ou veste comprida, talvez usada sobre os ombros, e feita de peles ou de tecido de pelos ou de lã.

Evidência de que o termo descreve uma veste de pelo se vê na descrição do primogênito de Isaque, Esaú. Ao nascer, ele "saiu . . . todo vermelho como um manto oficial de pelo, de modo que o chamaram pelo nome de Esaú". (Gên 25:25) Sua semelhança com um manto oficial provavelmente não era sua cor vermelha, mas ser ele peludo.

A Septuaginta, ao traduzir 'ad·dé·reth, referente ao manto oficial usado por Elias e Eliseu, usa a palavra grega me·lo·té (que significa pele de ovelha, ou qualquer áspera pele lanosa). (1Rs 19:13) Isto sugere que o manto era feito de peles ainda com o pelo nelas, similar à veste usada por certos beduínos. A descrição que Paulo fez dos perseguidos servos de Deus, que "andavam vestidos de peles de ovelhas e de peles de cabras", talvez se refira à veste de tais profetas de Jeová. (He 11:37) João, o Batizador, usava uma veste de pelos de camelo, embora não se declare se esta era seu manto oficial como profeta. — Mr 1:6.

Não importa de que feitio eram, estes mantos oficiais de pelos parecem ter sido a característica identificadora de certos profetas. Quando o Rei Acazias soube da descrição de "um homem que tinha uma vestimenta de pelos e um cinto de couro cingido em volta dos lombos", ele imediatamente reconheceu que se tratava do profeta Elias. (2Rs 1:8) Este manto oficial serviu de instrumento de unção lançado sobre Eliseu, quando este foi 'chamado' para deixar o arado e seguir Elias. (1Rs 19:19-21) Mais tarde, na ocasião em que Elias subiu num vendaval, este manto foi deixado para seu sucessor, que logo o usou para dividir o rio Jordão, assim como seu amo havia feito. (2Rs 2:3, 8, 13, 14) Parece que falsos profetas usavam às vezes mantos de pelos similares para enganar o povo a aceitá-los como profetas respeitáveis de Jeová, para dar assim mais crédito às suas mensagens. — Za 13:4.

O termo 'ad·dé·reth foi usado também com referência a mantos caros e régios, tais como aquele furtado por Acã, "um manto oficial de Sinear, de bom aspecto". (Jos 7:21, 24) A antiga Babilônia, ou Sinear, era famosa pelas suas belas vestes compridas. O rei de Nínive "despiu-se de seu manto oficial", sem dúvida uma esplêndida veste comprida, e revestiu-se de serapilheira, para mostrar seu arrependimento. — Jon 3:6.

MANUSCRITOS DA BÍBLIA. As Escrituras Sagradas têm origem sobre-humana no que se refere ao conteúdo, mas têm uma história humana no que se refere à sua escrita e preservação. Moisés começou a compilação delas sob inspiração divina em 1513 AEC, e o apóstolo João escreveu a parte final mais de 1.600 anos depois. A Bíblia, originalmente, não era um só livro, mas, com o passar do tempo, surgiu uma demanda de cópias dos seus diversos livros. Por exemplo, era assim depois do exílio babilônico, porque nem todos os judeus libertos retornaram à terra de Judá. Antes, muitos se estabeleceram em outros lugares, e no vasto território da resultante Diáspora (Dispersão) judaica surgiram sinagogas. Escribas prepararam cópias das Escrituras, necessitadas por essas sinagogas em que os judeus se reuniam para ouvir a leitura da Palavra de Deus. (At 15:21) Em tempos posteriores, entre os seguidores de Cristo, copistas conscienciosos labutaram para reproduzir os escritos inspirados em benefício das congregações cristãs que se multiplicavam, para que houvesse um intercâmbio e uma circulação geral deles. — Col 4:16.

Antes de se tornar comum a impressão com tipos móveis (a partir do século 15 EC), os escritos originais da Bíblia e também as cópias eram feitos a mão. Por isso são chamados de manuscritos (do latim: manu scriptus, "escritos a mão"). O manuscrito bíblico é uma cópia das Escrituras, inteiras ou em parte, feita à mão, distinta de uma cópia impressa. Os manuscritos bíblicos foram preparados principalmente na forma de rolos e de códices.

Materiais. Há manuscritos em couro, papiro e velino, das Escrituras. O famoso Rolo do Mar Morto de Isaías, por exemplo, é um rolo de couro. O papiro, um tipo de papel feito das fibras duma planta aquática, foi usado para manuscritos bíblicos nas línguas originais e traduções dos mesmos até por volta do quarto século EC. Naquele tempo, seu uso para manuscritos bíblicos passou a ser suplantado pelo uso do velino, um pergaminho fino, em geral feito de pele de bezerro, cordeirinho ou cabra, um aperfeiçoamento do uso anterior de peles de animais como material de escrita. Manuscritos tais como o famoso Codex Sinaiticus

Palimpsesto (lat.: palimpsestus; gr.: pa·lím·pse·stos, que significa "raspado novamente") é o manuscrito do qual se apagou ou raspou a escrita anterior para possibilitar uma nova escrita. Um famoso palimpsesto bíblico é o Codex Ephraemi Syri rescriptus do quinto século EC. Caso a escrita anterior (a escrita raspada) seja a importante no palimpsesto, frequentemente os peritos conseguem ler esta escrita apagada por recorrer a meios técnicos, que incluem o uso de reagentes químicos e fotografia. Alguns manuscritos das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs são lecionários, leituras bíblicas escolhidas para uso em serviços religiosos.

Estilos de Escrita. Os manuscritos bíblicos escritos em grego (quer traduções das Escrituras Hebraicas, quer cópias das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, ou ambas) podem ser divididos, ou classificados, segundo o estilo de escrita, o que ajuda também a datá-los. O estilo mais antigo (empregado especialmente até o nono século EC) é o manuscrito uncial, escrito em grandes letras maiúsculas, separadas. Nele não costuma haver separação de palavras, e raramente existem pontuação e acentos. O Códice Sinaítico é tal manuscrito uncial. Mudanças no estilo de escrita começaram a surgir no sexto século, o que eventualmente levou (no nono século EC) ao manuscrito cursivo, ou em minúsculas, escrito em letras menores, muitas delas emendadas num estilo de escrita corrente ou fluente. A maioria dos manuscritos existentes das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs têm escrita cursiva. Os manuscritos cursivos permaneceram em voga até a invenção da imprensa.

Copistas. Tanto quanto se sabe hoje, não existe mais nenhum manuscrito original, ou autógrafo. Todavia, a Bíblia tem sido preservada em forma exata, fidedigna, porque os copistas bíblicos, em geral, por aceitarem as Escrituras como divinamente inspiradas, procuravam a perfeição no seu trabalho árduo de produzir cópias manuscritas da Palavra de Deus.

Os homens que copiavam as Escrituras Hebraicas nos dias do ministério de Jesus Cristo na Terra, e durante séculos antes daquele tempo, eram chamados de escribas (hebr.: soh·ferím). Entre os primitivos escribas estava Esdras, mencionado nas Escrituras como "copista destro". (Esd 7:6) Escribas posteriores fizeram algumas alterações deliberadas no texto hebraico. Mas os escribas que os sucederam, os massoretas, as descobriram e registraram na Massorá, ou nas notas nas margens do texto hebraico, massorético, que produziram.

Os copistas das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs também fizeram sérios esforços para reproduzir com fidelidade o texto das Escrituras.

Que garantia há de que a Bíblia não foi alterada?

Apesar do cuidado dos copistas dos manuscritos da Bíblia, introduziram-se no texto alguns pequenos erros e alterações de escribas. Em geral, são insignificantes e não alteram a integridade geral da Bíblia. Foram descobertos e corrigidos por meio de cuidadosa colação erudita ou comparação crítica dos muitos manuscritos e versões antigos existentes. O estudo crítico do texto hebraico das Escrituras começou perto do fim do século 18. Benjamin Kennicott publicou em Oxford (em 1776-1780) o texto de mais de 600 manuscritos hebraicos, massoréticos, e o perito italiano Giambernardo de Rossi publicou em Parma as comparações de 731 manuscritos, entre 1784 e 1798. Textos padrões das Escrituras Hebraicas foram também produzidos pelo perito alemão Baer, e, mais recentemente, por C. D. Ginsburg. Rudolf Kittel, hebraísta, lançou em 1906 a primeira edição da sua Biblia Hebraica, fornecendo nela um estudo textual por meio de notas de rodapé, que comparam muitos manuscritos hebraicos do texto massorético. O texto básico usado por ele foi o texto de Ben Chayyim. Mas, quando os mais antigos e superiores textos massoréticos de Ben Asher se tornaram disponíveis, Kittel empreendeu a produção de uma terceira edição, inteiramente nova, que após a sua morte foi completada por seus colegas.

As 7.ª, 8.ª e 9.ª edições da Biblia Hebraica (1951-1955) forneceram o texto básico usado na tradução das Escrituras Hebraicas para o inglês da Tradução do Novo Mundo das Escrituras Sagradas, originalmente publicada em 1950-1960. Uma nova edição do texto hebraico, a saber, a Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia, data de 1977. Esta edição foi usada para atualizar as informações apresentadas nas notas de rodapé da Tradução do Novo Mundo publicada em inglês em 1984 (em português, em 1986).

A primeira edição impressa das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs foi a que apareceu na Poliglota Complutense (em grego e latim), de 1514-1517. Daí, em 1516, o perito holandês Desidério Erasmo publicou a primeira edição dum texto grego padrão das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Este continha muitos erros, mas um texto melhorado delas tornou-se disponível por meio de edições sucessivas, entre 1519 e 1535. Mais tarde, o impressor e editor parisiense Robert Estienne, ou Stephanus, publicou diversas edições do "Novo Testamento" grego, ba-seadas principalmente no texto de Erasmo, mas com correções segundo a Poliglota Complutense e 15 manuscritos posteriores. A terceira edição do texto grego de Stephanus (publicado em 1550) tornou-se, na realidade, o "Texto Recebido" (chamado em latim de textus receptus), usado para muitas das primeiras versões em inglês, inclusive a King James Version (Versão Rei Jaime) de 1611.

Bastante notável, em tempos mais recentes, é o texto grego padrão preparado por J. J. Griesbach, que se valeu da matéria coletada por outros, mas que também deu atenção às citações bíblicas feitas por escritores anteriores, tais como Orígenes. Além disso, Griesbach estudou os textos de diversas versões, tais como a armênia, a gótica e a filoxeniana. Ele considerava os manuscritos existentes como constituindo três famílias, ou recensões, a bizantina, a ocidental e a alexandrina, dando preferência aos textos desta última. Lançaram-se edições do seu texto grego padrão entre 1774 e 1806, publicando-se a edição principal do inteiro texto grego em 1796-1806. O texto de Griesbach foi usado para a tradução inglesa de Sharpe, de 1840, e é o texto grego constante em The Emphatic Diaglott (A Diaglott Enfática), de Benjamin Wilson, de 1864.

Um texto grego padrão das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs que obteve ampla aceitação é o produzido em 1881 pelos peritos B. F. Westcott e F. J. A. Hort, da Universidade de Cambridge. Era o produto de 28 anos de trabalho independente, embora se consultassem regularmente. Assim como Griesbach, eles dividiram os manuscritos em famílias e se estribaram fortemente no que classificaram de "texto neutro", que incluía o famoso Manuscrito Sinaítico e o Manuscrito Vaticano N.º 1209, ambos do quarto século EC. Embora Westcott e Hort considerassem as questões como bastante conclusivas quando esses manuscritos concordavam, e especialmente quando eram apoiados por outros antigos manuscritos unciais, eles não se limitaram a esta posição. Tomaram em consideração todos os fatores concebíveis no empenho de solucionar problemas apresentados por textos conflitantes; e quando duas versões tinham peso igual, eles indicaram isso também no seu texto padrão. O texto de Westcott e Hort foi o principal usado na tradução das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs para o inglês, na Tradução do Novo Mundo. Todavia, a Comissão da Tradução do Novo Mundo da Bíblia consultou também outros excelentes textos gregos, entre os quais o texto grego de Nestle (1948).

O Professor Kurt Aland, comentando a história do texto das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs e os resultados da moderna pesquisa textual, escreveu: "É possível determinar, à base de 40 anos de experiência e dos resultados que vieram à luz no exame de . . . manuscritos em pelo menos 1.200 pontos de teste: O texto do Novo Testamento foi transmitido de modo excelente, melhor do que quaisquer outros escritos dos tempos antigos; a possibilidade de ainda se encontrarem manuscritos que alterariam decisivamente seu texto é nula." — Das Neue Testament — zuverlässig überliefert (O Novo Testamento — Transmitido Fidedignamente), Stuttgart, 1986, pp. 27, 28.

Os manuscritos existentes das Escrituras Cristãs (em grego e em outras línguas) mostram variantes de texto. É de esperar que haja variantes em vista da imperfeição humana, e do copiar e recopiar manuscritos, especialmente por muitos copistas que não eram profissionais. Quando certos manuscritos tiveram um manuscrito comum por base, talvez procedendo duma determinada revisão de textos anteriores, ou foram produzidos em determinada região, eles provavelmente têm pelo menos algumas variações em comum, e, por isso, se diz que pertencem à mesma família, ou grupo. À base da similaridade de tais diferenças, os peritos têm procurado classificar os textos em grupos, ou famílias, cujo número tem aumentado com o passar do tempo, a ponto de se fazer agora referência aos textos alexandrino, ocidental, oriental (siríaco ou cesariano) e bizantino, representados em diversos manuscritos ou em diferentes leituras espalhadas em numerosos manuscritos. Mas, apesar das variações peculiares a diferentes famílias de manuscritos (e das variações dentro de cada grupo), as Escrituras nos foram transmitidas essencialmente na mesma forma dos originais escritos inspirados. As variações na leitura não influem nos ensinos bíblicos em geral. As colações eruditas têm corrigido os erros de importância, de modo que hoje temos um texto autêntico e fidedigno.

Desde que Westcott e Hort produziram seu texto grego refinado, já se produziram diversas edições críticas das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Notável entre elas é The Greek New Testament (O Novo Testamento Grego), publicado pelas United Bible Societies (Sociedades Bíblicas Unidas), agora já na terceira edição. De fraseologia idêntica é a 26.ª edição do chamado texto Nestle-Aland, publicado em 1979 em Stuttgart, na Alemanha. — Veja ESCRITURAS GREGAS CRISTÃS.

Manuscritos das Escrituras Hebraicas. Existem hoje, em diversas bibliotecas, possivelmente 6.000 manuscritos das inteiras Escrituras Hebraicas ou de partes delas. A vasta maioria deles contém o texto massorético e é do décimo século EC, ou de época posterior. Os massoretas

Os manuscritos danificados das Escrituras Hebraicas usadas nas sinagogas judaicas eram substituídos por cópias verificadas, e os manuscritos estragados ou danificados eram guardados na genizá (depósito ou repositório na sinagoga). Por fim, quando esta estava cheia, os manuscritos eram retirados e cerimonialmente queimados. Sem dúvida, muitos dos antigos manuscritos pereceram assim. Mas o conteúdo da genizá da sinagoga no Antigo Cairo foi poupado, provavelmente porque fora fechada por um muro e esquecida por séculos. Depois da reconstrução da sinagoga, em 1890 EC, os manuscritos da sua genizá foram reexaminados, e dali é que manuscritos razoavelmente completos ou fragmentos das Escrituras Hebraicas (alguns supostamente do sexto século EC) chegaram a diversas bibliotecas.

Um dos mais antigos manuscritos existentes de passagens bíblicas é o Papiro Nash, encontrado no Egito e preservado em Cambridge, na Inglaterra. Tendo sido evidentemente parte duma coleção de instrução, ele é do segundo ou primeiro século AEC e consiste em apenas quatro fragmentos de 24 linhas dum texto pré-massorético dos Dez Mandamentos e de alguns versículos de Deuteronômio, capítulos 5 e 6.

A partir de 1947, encontraram-se muitos rolos bíblicos e não bíblicos em diversas áreas ao O do Mar Morto, que geralmente são chamados de Rolos do Mar Morto. Os mais significativos entre eles são os manuscritos descobertos em diversas cavernas no uádi Qumran (Nahal Qumeran) e nos arredores. Estes são também conhecidos como textos de Qumran e evidentemente pertenciam a uma comunidade religiosa, judaica, sediada na vizinha Khirbet Qumran (Horvat Qumeran). A primeira descoberta foi feita por um beduíno numa caverna a uns 15 km ao S de Jericó, onde ele encontrou diversos jarros de cerâmica contendo manuscritos antigos. Um destes era o agora famoso Rolo do Mar Morto de Isaías (1QIs^{a}), um bem preservado rolo de couro de todo o livro de Isaías, exceto algumas lacunas. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 322) Contém um texto hebraico pré-massorético e foi datado como pertencente ao fim do segundo século AEC. Portanto, é cerca de mil anos mais velho do que os mais antigos manuscritos existentes do texto massorético. Todavia, embora apresente algumas diferenças na grafia e na construção gramatical, não varia doutrinalmente do texto massorético. Entre os documentos recuperados na área de Qumran há fragmentos de mais de 170 rolos, representando partes de todos os livros das Escrituras Hebraicas, exceto Ester, e no caso de alguns livros, existe mais de uma cópia. Acredita-se que estes rolos e fragmentos de manuscritos datem desde cerca de 250 AEC até aproximadamente meados do primeiro século EC, e revelam mais de um tipo de texto hebraico, tal como um texto protomassorético ou um usado para a Septuaginta grega. Os estudos de toda esta matéria ainda estão em progresso.

Entre os notáveis manuscritos hebraicos em velino, das Escrituras Hebraicas, encontra-se o Códice Caraíta do Cairo dos Profetas. Contém a Massorá e vocalização, e seu colofão indica que foi completado por volta de 895 EC pelo famoso massoreta Moses ben Asher de Tiberíades. Outro manuscrito significativo (de 916 EC) é o Códice dos Profetas Posteriores de Petersburgo. O Códice Sefárdico de Alepo, antigamente guardado em Alepo, Síria, e agora em Israel, até recentemente continha todas as Escrituras Hebraicas. Seu original texto consonantal foi corrigido, pontuado e suprido da Massorá por volta de 930 EC por Aaron ben Asher, filho de Moses ben Asher. O manuscrito de data mais antiga das inteiras Escrituras Hebraicas em hebraico é o Manuscrito de Leningrado N.º B 19A, preservado na Biblioteca Pública de São Petersburgo, Rússia. Foi copiado em 1008 EC "dos livros corrigidos, preparados e anotados por Aaron ben Moses ben Asher, o instrutor". Outro manuscrito hebraico digno de nota é um códice do Pentateuco, preservado na Biblioteca Britânica (Códice Oriental 4445), que consiste no texto de Gênesis 39:20 a Deuteronômio 1:33 (com exceção de Núm 7:46-73 e 9:12–10:18, que faltam ou foram supridos por uma mão posterior) e data provavelmente do século 10 EC.

Muitos manuscritos das Escrituras Hebraicas da Bíblia foram escritos em grego. Entre estes, destaca-se um na coleção dos Papiros Fouad (Número de Inventário 266, pertencente à Société Egyptienne de Papyrologie, Cairo), com partes de Gênesis e da segunda metade de Deuteronômio, segundo a Septuaginta. Ele é do primeiro século AEC e apresenta, em diversos lugares, o nome divino em caracteres hebraicos quadrados escrito dentro do texto grego. Fragmentos de Deuteronômio, capítulos 23 a 28, são encontrados no Papiro Rylands iii. 458, do segundo século AEC, preservado em Manchester, Inglaterra. Outro importante manuscrito da Septuaginta contém fragmentos de Jonas, Miqueias, Habacuque, Sofonias e Zacarias. Neste rolo de couro, datado do fim do primeiro século EC, o nome divino é apresentado na forma do Tetragrama, escrito em caracteres hebraicos antigos. — Veja o apêndice da NM, pp. 1502-1504.

Manuscritos das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. As Escrituras Cristãs foram escritas em coiné. Embora não se saiba hoje da existência de nenhum manuscrito autógrafo original, segundo certo cálculo, existem cerca de 5.000 cópias manuscritas destas Escrituras em grego, na íntegra ou em parte.

Manuscritos em papiro. Entre os códices em papiro encontrados no Egito por volta de 1930 encontravam-se papiros bíblicos de grande importância, anunciando-se a sua compra em 1931. Alguns destes códices em grego (datando do segundo ao quarto séculos EC) consistem em partes de oito livros das Escrituras Hebraicas (Gênesis, Números, Deuteronômio, Isaías, Jeremias, Ezequiel, Daniel e Ester), e três deles contêm partes de 15 livros das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. A maioria destes papiros bíblicos foi comprada por um colecionador americano de manuscritos, A. Chester Beatty, e eles são agora preservados em Dublin, na Irlanda. Os demais foram adquiridos pela Universidade de Michigan e por outros.

A designação internacional para os papiros bíblicos é um "P" maiúsculo, seguido por um pequeno número elevado. O Papiro Chester Beatty N.º 1 (P^{45}) consiste em partes de 30 folhas dum códice que provavelmente tinha antigamente cerca de 220 folhas. O P^{45} tem partes dos quatro Evangelhos e o livro de Atos. O Papiro Chester Beatty N.º 3 (P^{47}) é um códice fragmentário de Revelação (Apocalipse) de dez folhas um pouco danificadas. Acredita-se que estes dois papiros sejam do terceiro século EC. Bastante digno de nota é o Papiro Chester Beatty N.º 2 (P^{46}), que se acredita ser de aproximadamente 200 EC. Tem 86 folhas, um pouco danificadas, dum códice que provavelmente tinha de início 104 folhas, e ainda contém nove das cartas inspiradas de Paulo: Romanos, Hebreus, Primeira Coríntios, Segunda Coríntios, Efésios, Gálatas, Filipenses, Colossenses e Primeira Tessalonicenses. É notável que a carta aos hebreus esteja incluída neste primitivo códice. Visto que Hebreus não fornece o nome do escritor, sua composição por Paulo frequentemente tem sido questionada. Mas a inclusão desta carta no P^{46}, que evidentemente consiste só nas cartas de Paulo, indica que, por volta de 200 EC, Hebreus era aceito pelos primitivos cristãos como escrita inspirada do apóstolo Paulo. Neste códice consta a carta aos Efésios, também refutando argumentos de que Paulo não escreveu esta carta.

Na Biblioteca John Rylands, em Manchester, na Inglaterra, existe um pequeno fragmento de papiro do Evangelho de João (alguns versículos do capítulo 18), catalogado como Papiro Rylands 457. Tem a designação internacional de P^{52}. Trata-se do mais antigo fragmento de manuscrito das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs em existência, tendo sido escrito na primeira metade do segundo século, possivelmente por volta de 125 EC, e assim apenas cerca de um quarto de século depois da morte de João. Estar uma cópia do Evangelho de João já naquele tempo em circulação no Egito (lugar da descoberta do fragmento) mostra que as boas novas segundo João realmente foram registradas no primeiro século EC, e pelo próprio João, não por algum escritor desconhecido bem mais tarde, no segundo século EC, após a morte de João, conforme alguns críticos antigamente afirmavam.

O acréscimo mais importante à coleção de papiros bíblicos, desde a descoberta dos Papiros Chester Beatty, foi a aquisição dos Papiros Bodmer, publicados entre 1956 e 1961. Especialmente dignos de nota são o Papiro Bodmer 2 (P^{66}) e o Papiro Bodmer 14, 15 (P^{75}), ambos escritos por volta de 200 EC. O Papiro Bodmer 2 contém uma grande parte do Evangelho de João, ao passo que o Papiro Bodmer 14, 15 contém muito de Lucas e de João, e textualmente é bem parecido ao Manuscrito Vaticano N.º 1209.

Manuscritos em velino. Manuscritos bíblicos escritos em velino às vezes incluem tanto as Escrituras Hebraicas como as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs da Bíblia, embora alguns contenham apenas as Escrituras Cristãs.

O Códice Bezae, designado pela letra "D", é um valioso manuscrito do quinto século EC. Embora se desconheça seu verdadeiro lugar de origem, foi adquirido na França em 1562. Contém os Evangelhos, o livro de Atos, e apenas mais uns poucos versículos, e é um manuscrito uncial, escrito em grego nas páginas da esquerda, com um texto paralelo em latim nas páginas à direita. Este códice é preservado na Universidade de Cambridge, na Inglaterra, presenteado a esta instituição por Theodore Beza, em 1581.

O Códice Claromontano (D_2) também está escrito em grego e em latim em páginas opostas, o grego à esquerda e o latim à direita. Contém as cartas canônicas de Paulo, inclusive Hebreus, e é considerado ser do sexto século. Foi supostamente encontrado no mosteiro de Clermont, na França, e foi adquirido por Theodore Beza, mas é agora preservado na Bibliothèque Nationale em Paris.

Entre os mais recentemente encontrados manuscritos em velino das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs está o Códice Washington I, contendo os Evangelhos em grego (na costumeira ordem ocidental: Mateus, João, Lucas e Marcos). Foi obtido em 1906 no Egito e é preservado na Galeria de Arte Freer, em Washington, D.C., EUA. O símbolo internacional deste códice é "W", e acha-se que foi escrito no quinto século EC, exceto que, pelo visto, por causa de danos, parte de João foi substituída no sétimo século EC. O Códice Washington II, com o símbolo "I", também se encontra na Coleção Freer e contém partes das cartas canônicas de Paulo, inclusive Hebreus. Acredita-se que este códice tenha sido escrito no quinto século EC.

Escrituras Hebraicas e Gregas Cristãs. Os mais importantes e mais completos manuscritos bíblicos em grego existentes foram escritos em velino, com letras unciais.

Manuscrito Vaticano N.º 1209. O Manuscrito Vaticano N.º 1209 (Codex Vaticanus), internacionalmente designado pelo símbolo "B", é um códice uncial do quarto século EC, possivelmente produzido em Alexandria, que originalmente continha toda a Bíblia em grego. Um revisor em tempos posteriores retraçou as letras, talvez porque a escrita original tinha desbotado, mas pulou letras e palavras que considerava incorretas. É provável que este códice tinha originalmente cerca de 820 folhas, das quais restam 759. Desapareceu a maior parte de Gênesis, bem como parte dos Salmos, Hebreus 9:14 a 13:25, e toda a Primeira e Segunda Timóteo, Tito, Filêmon e Revelação. O Codex Vaticanus está sendo preservado na Biblioteca do Vaticano, em Roma, na Itália, e sabe-se que está ali já desde o século 15. Todavia, as autoridades da Biblioteca do Vaticano tornaram extremamente difícil aos peritos o acesso a este manuscrito e só publicaram um fac-símile fotográfico completo do códice inteiro em 1889-1890.

Manuscrito Sinaítico. O Manuscrito Sinaítico (Códice Sinaítico) também é do quarto século EC, mas o Códice Vaticano talvez seja um pouco mais antigo. O Manuscrito Sinaítico é designado pelo símbolo א ('á·lefe, a primeira letra do alfabeto hebraico), e embora seja evidente que outrora continha toda a Bíblia em grego, perdeu-se parte das Escrituras Hebraicas. Todavia, contém todas as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. É provável que este códice consistisse originalmente em pelo menos 730 folhas, embora se verifique hoje que existem por inteiro ou em partes apenas 393 folhas. Foi descoberto (uma parte em 1844 e outra em 1859) pelo perito bíblico Konstantin von Tischendorf no Mosteiro de Sta. Catarina, no monte Sinai. Quarenta e três folhas deste códice estão guardadas em Leipzig, partes de três folhas se encontram em São Petersburgo na Rússia, e 347 folhas estão preservadas na Biblioteca Britânica em Londres. Relatou-se que em 1975 se descobriram mais 8 a 14 folhas no mesmo mosteiro.

Manuscrito Alexandrino. O Manuscrito Alexandrino (Códice Alexandrino), designado pela letra "A", é um manuscrito grego uncial que contém a maior parte da Bíblia, inclusive o livro de Revelação. Das possivelmente 820 folhas originais foram preservadas 773. Considera-se em geral que este códice seja da primeira metade do quinto século EC, e ele também é preservado na Biblioteca Britânica. — FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 336.

Codex Ephraemi Syri rescriptus. O Codex Ephraemi Syri rescriptus (Códice de Ephraem), internacionalmente designado pela letra "C", em geral também é considerado como originário do quinto século EC. Está escrito em letras unciais gregas sobre velino e é um códice reescrito, um manuscrito palimpsesto. O texto original grego foi removido, e diversas folhas foram então reescritas com discursos de Ephraem Syrus (o Sírio), em grego. Isto provavelmente foi feito no século 12, quando havia escassez de velino. No entanto, o texto subjacente foi decifrado. Embora "C" evidentemente contivesse outrora todas as Escrituras em grego, restam apenas 209 folhas, sendo 145 das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Portanto, este códice contém agora apenas partes dos livros das Escrituras Hebraicas e partes de todos os livros das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, exceto Segunda Tessalonicenses e Segunda João. É preservado na Bibliothèque Nationale em Paris.

Fidedignidade do Texto Bíblico. O apreço pela fidedignidade da Bíblia aumenta grandemente quando se percebe, em comparação, que há apenas muito poucos manuscritos existentes das obras dos escritores clássicos seculares e que nenhum destes é manuscrito original, autógrafo. Embora sejam apenas cópias feitas séculos depois da morte dos autores, os peritos atuais aceitam essas cópias posteriores como evidência suficiente da autenticidade do texto.

Os existentes manuscritos hebraicos das Escrituras foram feitos com muito cuidado. A respeito do texto das Escrituras Hebraicas, o perito W. H. Green observou: "Pode-se dizer com segurança que nenhuma outra obra da antiguidade foi transmitida com tanta exatidão." (Archaeology and Bible History [A Arqueologia e a História Bíblica], de J. P. Free, 1964, p. 5) O falecido perito em textos bíblicos, Sir Frederic Kenyon, fez a seguinte declaração tranquilizadora na introdução dos seus sete volumes intitulados The Chester Beatty Biblical Papyri (Os Papiros Bíblicos Chester Beatty): "A primeira e a mais importante conclusão a que se chega à base do exame deles [os Papiros] é a satisfatória de que confirmam a exatidão essencial dos textos existentes. Não aparece nenhuma variação substancial ou fundamental, quer no Velho, quer no Novo Testamento. Não há nenhumas omissões ou adições importantes de trechos, nem variações que influam em fatos ou doutrinas vitais. As variações do texto influem em questões menores, tais como a ordem das palavras ou as palavras precisas usadas. . . . Mas a sua importância essencial é sua confirmação da integridade de nossos textos existentes, pela evidência duma data anterior à disponível até agora. Neste respeito, são uma aquisição de valor que marca época." — Londres, 1933, Fascículo I, p. 15.

Sir Frederic Kenyon declarou a respeito das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs: "O intervalo, então, entre as datas da composição original e a mais antiga evidência existente se torna tão pequeno que é, com efeito, insignificante, e a última base para qualquer dúvida de que as Escrituras chegaram até nós substancialmente como foram escritas foi agora removida. Tanto a autenticidade como a integridade geral dos livros do Novo Testamento podem ser consideradas como finalmente confirmadas." — The Bible and Archæology (A Bíblia e a Arqueologia), 1940, pp. 288, 289.

Há séculos, Jesus Cristo, "a testemunha fiel e verdadeira" (Re 3:14), confirmou repetida e enfaticamente a genuinidade das Escrituras Hebraicas, assim como fizeram seus apóstolos. (Lu 24:27, 44; Ro 15:4) Versões e traduções antigas existentes confirmam adicionalmente a exatidão das Escrituras Hebraicas preservadas. Manuscritos e versões das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs dão incontestável testemunho da maravilhosa preservação e transmissão exata desta parte da Palavra de Deus. Portanto, somos agora favorecidos com um texto bíblico autêntico, inteiramente confiável. O meticuloso exame dos manuscritos preservados das Escrituras Sagradas dá eloquente testemunho da sua fiel preservação e permanência, dando um significado adicional à declaração inspirada: "Secou-se a erva verde, murchou a flor; mas, quanto à palavra de nosso Deus, ela durará por tempo indefinido." — Is 40:8; 1Pe 1:24, 25.

MÃO. A extremidade do braço. A "mão", conforme usada nas Escrituras, às vezes inclui o pulso, como em Gênesis 24:22, 30, 47, e em Ezequiel 16:11, onde diz que se usavam pulseiras sobre as "mãos", e em Juízes 15:14, onde se faz menção de grilhões nas "mãos" de Sansão. A mão aplica a força do braço e a dirige, de modo que, em muitos casos em que ela aparece em linguagem figurada, a ideia de "força aplicada" pode ser associada com a palavra "mão". (Êx 7:4; 13:3; De 2:15; Lu 1:66) Visto que a mão humana é muito ágil e versátil, e é uma parte do corpo com que se trabalha, ela é usada simbolicamente em muitos textos bíblicos para indicar uma ampla variedade de ações.

O termo hebraico costumeiro para "mão" é yadh; às vezes, a palavra kaf é traduzida "mão", mas ela significa literalmente "palma". (Jó 22:30 n) O usual termo grego para "mão" é kheir.

Gestos Manuais e Seu Significado. As mãos eram usadas em gestos para expressar diversas coisas. Eram erguidas em oração, usualmente com as palmas viradas para o céu em apelo (2Cr 6:12; Ne 8:6); levantadas em juramento (Gên 14:22); tocavam a boca numa forma de saudação (Jó 31:27); batiam palmas de alegria, como em aplauso (2Rs 11:12), ou em ira ou desprezo (Núm 24:10; Jó 27:23; Na 3:19); eram sacudidas em ameaça (Is 10:32); colocadas na cabeça ou nos lombos em tristeza ou aflição (2Sa 13:19; Je 30:5, 6); lavadas com água na tentativa de indicar limpeza cerimonial, inocência ou de se isentar de responsabilidade. — Mt 15:1, 2; 27:24; contraste isso com Sal 26:5, 6; 51:1, 2; veja ATITUDES, POSTURAS E GESTOS.

Usos Figurados e Simbólicos. A mão era às vezes usada para representar a própria pessoa, como no apelo de Davi a Nabal por alimento: "Por favor, dá simplesmente . . . o que a tua mão achar." (1Sa 25:8) Referia-se também à disposição ou atividade geral da pessoa (Gên 16:12), ou denotava a responsabilidade dela de prestar contas pelas suas ações. — Gên 9:5; Ez 3:18, 20.

As mãos dos sacerdotes foram enchidas por Moisés com sacrifícios por ocasião da investidura deles, como parte da cerimônia que os equipava simbolicamente, 'enchendo-lhes as mãos' de autoridade e poder para o sacerdócio. — Le 8:25-27, 33; veja ENCHER A MÃO DE PODER.

Jeová assegurou a Jacó que seu filho José 'deitaria as mãos sobre os olhos dele', isto é, fecharia os olhos de Jacó depois de este morrer. (Gên 46:4) Este privilégio cabia costumeiramente ao primogênito. Portanto, estas palavras não só asseguravam a Jacó que seu amado filho José permaneceria perto dele durante os anos remanescentes do idoso patriarca, mas, pelo que parece, também predisseram que o direito de primogênito, perdido por Rubem, passaria para José.

Fala-se simbolicamente de Deus como usando a "mão", isto é, seu poder aplicado, na realização de obras; alguns destes casos são: criação (Sal 8:6; 102:25); destruição de seus inimigos (Is 25:10, 11); libertação de seu povo (Êx 7:4, 5); exercer favor e poder para com os que o buscam (Esd 8:22); fazer provisões (Sal 104:28; 145:16); e dar ajuda (Is 11:11). Eliú declarou que os possantes desaparecem "sem mão alguma", e a pedra do sonho profético de Nabucodonosor foi cortada dum monte "sem mãos"; em cada caso, o sentido era que havia ação, não por mãos humanas, mas pelo poder de Jeová. — Jó 34:1, 20; Da 2:34, 44, 45.

'Estar na mão, ou sob a mão de alguém', significa estar sob o poder ou domínio deste (Gên 9:2; 41:35; Jó 2:6; 1Pe 5:6; compare isso com Gên 37:21), ou pode significar "à tua disposição" ou 'aos cuidados' de alguém (Gên 16:6, veja Al; Gên 42:37, veja Al; MC; Lu 23:46; Jo 10:28, 29). "De mão erguida" denota ser vigoroso, vitorioso (Êx 14:8); 'fortalecer as mãos' significa dar poderes, ou suprir e equipar (Esd 1:6); 'enfraquecer as mãos', quebrantar o moral (Je 38:4); 'pôr a própria vida na palma da mão', arriscar a vida (1Sa 19:5; Jó 13:14). "Aperto de mão" se dava ao fazer uma promessa (Esd 10:19) ou para servir de fiador de outro (Pr 6:1-3; 17:18; 22:26); 'pôr a mão em' significa empreendimento (De 15:10, veja Al); 'deitar mão nos bens de outrem', furtá-los ou usá-los de modo impróprio (Êx 22:7, 8, 10, 11); 'mãos limpas' denotam inocência (2Sa 22:21; compare isso com Sal 24:3, 4); 'mãos cheias de sangue', assassinato (Is 1:15; 59:3, 7); 'pôr a mão sobre a boca', ficar calado (Jz 18:19); 'abaixar as mãos', ficar desanimado (2Cr 15:7; veja também Is 35:3; He 12:12, 13); e 'abrir a mão', ser generoso (De 15:11).

"Mais um pouco de cruzar as mãos ao estar deitado" traz pobreza ao preguiçoso. (Pr 6:9-11) Ele é descrito como fatigado demais para retirar a mão do tacho de banquete para trazê-la de volta à boca. (Pr 26:15) O negligente que "trabalha com mão indolente será de poucos meios", ao passo que a mão diligente trará riquezas. — Pr 10:4.

Outras expressões idiomáticas hebraicas que envolvem a mão são: 'pôr a mão com', que significa cooperar com, estar do lado de (Êx 23:1; 1Sa 22:17); 'pela mão de' denota sob a direção de (Êx 38:21) ou por meio de (Êx 4:13; Le 8:36; 10:11); "sua mão não alcança" ou 'sua mão não consegue', ele não tem meios (financeiros) suficientes (Le 14:21); 'o que sua mão alcançar', o que estiver dentro das suas possibilidades (Núm 6:21); 'mãos da espada', o poder duma espada (Jó 5:20); 'mão da língua', o poder da língua (Pr 18:21); 'vida da tua mão', reanimação do teu poder (Is 57:10); 'fechar a mão' para com o irmão, isto é, ser avarento, não querendo ajudá-lo. — De 15:7, Al.

Jeová disse aos israelitas que eles deviam atar Suas palavras "como sinal na [sua] mão" (De 6:6-8; 11:18) e que ele tinha Sião gravado nas palmas das Suas mãos (Is 49:14-16), denotando constante lembrança e atenção. Com sentido similar, Jeová diz aos eunucos que se agarram ao seu pacto que ele lhes dará na sua casa "um monumento" (ou: lugar; literalmente: uma "mão"). (Is 56:4, 5) A Bíblia diz a respeito dos adoradores de Deus que eles escrevem simbolicamente nas mãos as palavras: "Pertencente a Jeová", indicando assim que são seus escravos. (Is 44:5) Do mesmo modo, a "marca" da "fera" na mão direita simboliza dar atenção, devoção e apoio ativo à "fera" e sua "imagem", visto que se usam as mãos para trabalhar a favor daquele a quem se serve. — Re 13:16, 17; 14:9, 10; 20:4.

Imposição das Mãos. Além do simples uso das mãos, impunham-se as mãos numa pessoa ou num objeto para diversas finalidades. O sentido geral do ato, porém, era o de nomeação, de indicação da pessoa ou da coisa como reconhecida, ou admitida, em certo sentido. Durante a cerimônia da investidura do sacerdócio, Arão e seus filhos puseram as mãos sobre a cabeça do novilho e dos dois carneiros a serem sacrificados, reconhecendo assim que estes animais estavam sendo sacrificados a favor deles, para se tornarem sacerdotes de Jeová Deus. (Êx 29:10, 15, 19; Le 8:14, 18, 22) Quando Moisés designou Josué como seu sucessor às ordens de Deus, ele impôs as mãos sobre Josué, o qual consequentemente ficou "cheio do espírito de sabedoria" e assim foi capaz de conduzir Israel de modo apropriado. (De 34:9) Impunham-se as mãos sobre pessoas quando estas eram designadas como beneficiárias duma bênção. (Gên 48:14; Mr 10:16) Jesus Cristo tocou, ou pôs as mãos sobre, algumas pessoas que curou. (Mt 8:3; Mr 6:5; Lu 13:13) Em alguns casos, o dom do espírito santo foi concedido pela imposição das mãos dos apóstolos. — At 8:14-20; 19:6.

Designações de serviço. Na congregação cristã, designações de homens maduros para posições ou cargos de responsabilidade também eram feitas pela imposição das mãos dos autorizados a fazer isso. (At 6:6; 1Ti 4:14) Por causa da influência que tais homens designados exerceriam e do exemplo que dariam, o apóstolo Paulo admoestou Timóteo: "Nunca ponhas as mãos apressadamente sobre nenhum homem; tampouco sejas partícipe dos pecados de outros." Isto significava que não se devia designar um homem sem se dar a devida consideração às suas qualificações, para que, se o homem deixasse de cumprir devidamente com os deveres do seu cargo, Timóteo não compartilhasse da culpa pela dificuldade causada. — 1Ti 5:22.

A Mão Direita. A mão direita era considerada de grande importância, em sentido simbólico. José desagradou-se quando Jacó cruzou as mãos para pôr a mão direita sobre Efraim, filho mais novo de José. Mas Jacó fez isso de propósito, para dar a Efraim a bênção superior. (Gên 48:13-20) Estar à mão direita dum governante significava ter a posição mais importante, logo depois do próprio governante (Sal 110:1; At 7:55, 56; Ro 8:34; 1Pe 3:22), ou um lugar no seu favor. (Mt 25:33) Diz-se a respeito de Jesus, na visão de Revelação (Apocalipse), que ele tem na sua mão direita as sete estrelas das sete congregações. Quer dizer, todos estes corpos de anciãos têm o seu favor e estão sob o seu pleno controle, poder e direção. — Re 1:16, 20; 2:1.

Segurar Deus a mão direita de alguém fortaleceria a tal. (Sal 73:23) Usualmente, a mão direita dum guerreiro era a que segurava a espada, e não era protegida pelo escudo na mão esquerda. Portanto, o amigo que ficasse ou lutasse à mão direita dele o defendia e protegia. Esta situação foi usada de forma metafórica com respeito à ajuda e proteção que Deus dá aos que o servem. — Sal 16:8; 109:30, 31; 110:5; 121:5.

O escritor de Eclesiastes diz: "O coração do sábio está à sua direita, mas o coração do estúpido está à sua esquerda." Em outras palavras, o sábio está inclinado a tomar a vereda boa, favorável, mas o estúpido está inclinado a seguir o proceder mau. — Ec 10:2.

Pontos Cardeais. As expressões hebraicas para "[mão] direita" (hebr.: ya·mín) e "[mão] esquerda" (hebr.: semó'l) são também traduzidas respectivamente "sul" e "norte" (Gên 14:15; Sal 89:12), visto que as direções eram calculadas do ponto de vista da pessoa que encarava o L. Portanto, o S estaria à sua direita. — 1Sa 23:19, 24.

Outros Usos. A palavra "mão" (hebr.: yadh) é também usada para indicar "lado" (Ne 3:4, 5, 7; Ec 4:1), ou 'ao longo de' (Êx 2:5); para "costa" (Núm 24:24); e para as "espigas" das armações de painel do tabernáculo (Êx 26:17; veja margem da KJ). A palavra hebraica kaf (frequentemente traduzida "palma" e "mão") é usada para a "planta" do pé (Gên 8:9), para taças ("colheres", Al) do tabernáculo e do templo (Êx 25:29; Núm 7:84, 86; 2Rs 25:14), e para "concavidade da articulação" (da coxa duma pessoa) ou "concavidade" (duma funda). (Gên 32:25, 32; 1Sa 25:29) Tanto yadh (mão) como kaf (palma; mão) são traduzidas de forma variada por ainda outros termos em português.

"Mãos cheias", em sentido figurado, representam abundância (Gên 41:47), ou "punhado" pode significar apenas um pouco (1Rs 17:12) ou uma porção pequena (Ec 4:6), segundo o contexto. — BRAÇO; LAVAR AS MÃOS; POLEGAR.

MAOL [duma raiz que significa "dança; giro"; ou, possivelmente, duma raiz que significa "tocar flauta"]. Homem cujos filhos tinham grande sabedoria, mas não tão grande como a do Rei Salomão. (1Rs 4:31) Alguns acham que a designação "filhos de Maol" se refira a uma associação de músicos ou dançarinos. — Veja Sal 150:4, onde a mesma palavra hebraica é traduzida "dança de rodas".

MAOM.

1. Descendente de Calebe através de Samai. Maom talvez fosse o pai dos habitantes de Bete-Zur ou o homem principal ou fundador desta cidade. — 1Cr 2:42, 45.

2. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 48, 55) O Rei Saul, de Israel, perseguiu Davi e os homens deste até a região do ermo em torno de Maom. Mas, notícias a respeito duma incursão de filisteus obrigaram Saul a abandonar a perseguição. (1Sa 23:24-28) Mais tarde, os homens de Davi foram tratados de forma nada hospitaleira por Nabal, rico latifundiário que aparentemente morava em Maom. (1Sa 25:2-11) Esta cidade é identificada com Tell Ma'in (Horvat Ma'on [Bi-Yehuda]) no alto dum elevado morro a uns 13 km ao SSE de Hébron.

MAOQUE. Pai de Aquis, rei da cidade filisteia de Gate, junto a quem Davi e seus 600 homens encontraram refúgio contra Saul. (1Sa 27:1-3) Ele talvez seja o Maacá de 1 Reis 2:39, embora tal identificação não seja comprovada. O nome Maacá é bastante similar a Maoque, e é possível que Aquis, que governava na época em que Davi era proscrito, ainda fosse o rei filisteu de Gate no início do governo de Salomão.

MAQUEDÁ. Cidade real dos cananeus na Sefelá. Foi na caverna de Maquedá que os cinco reis que se haviam aliado contra os gibeonitas se esconderam e então ficaram ali temporariamente encurralados até a sua execução. Depois disso, esta caverna tornou-se a sepultura comum deles, e o exército israelita sob Josué capturou a cidade de Maquedá e devotou-a à destruição. Por ocasião da repartição da Terra da Promessa, Maquedá foi concedida à tribo de Judá. — Jos 10:5-29; 12:7, 8, 16; 15:20, 33, 41.

O lugar exato de Maquedá é incerto. Tem sido provisoriamente identificada com Khirbet el-Kheishum, a uns 4 km ao NNE de Azeca. O lugar é marcado por extensas ruínas e cavernas vizinhas.

MAQUELOTE [Multidões Congregadas]. Um dos acampamentos de Israel no ermo. (Núm 33:25, 26) Sua localização não tem sido identificada.

MAQUI [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Maquir]. Gadita e pai de Gueuel, um dos 12 israelitas enviados para espiar Canaã. — Núm 13:1, 2, 15, 16.

MAQUIR [duma raiz que significa "vender"].

1. Primeiro filho mencionado de Manassés com a sua concubina síria. Maquir fundou a família dos maquiritas e é chamado de "pai de Gileade". Sua esposa era Maacá, e ele teve filhos varões enquanto José ainda vivia. (Gên 50:23; Núm 26:29; Jos 17:1; 1Cr 2:21, 23; 7:14-17) "Os filhos de Maquir" capturaram a região de Gileade, expulsaram os amorreus e receberam aquele distrito como herança. (Núm 32:39, 40; De 3:15; Jos 13:31) Zelofeade e suas filhas eram da família manassita de Maquir. (Núm 27:1; 36:1, 2; Jos 17:3) No cântico de vitória de Débora e Baraque, "Maquir" parece ser usado poeticamente para toda a tribo de Manassés. — Jz 5:1, 14.

2. Filho de Amiel (e habitante de Lo-Debar), com quem Mefibosete, filho de Jonatã, ficou morando até que Davi mandou buscá-lo e fez provisões para o sustento dele. (2Sa 9:4-7, 13) Mais tarde, durante a rebelião de Absalão, Maquir estava entre aqueles que forneceram ao Rei Davi e seus associados alimentos e outras provisões. — 2Sa 17:27-29.

MAQUIRITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Maquir]. Família da tribo de Manassés fundada pelo seu filho Maquir. — Núm 26:29; veja MAQUIR N.º 1.

MAR. A massa de água da Terra em contraste com a terra firme; ou uma grande massa de água salgada ou doce, que usualmente se refere a uma massa de água menor do que um oceano e parcial ou inteiramente cercada por terra. A água cobre mais de 70 por cento da superfície da terra.

Jeová, Seu Criador e Controlador. A Bíblia repetidas vezes reconhece que Jeová é o Criador dos mares, formados em contraste com a terra seca no terceiro dia criativo. (Gên 1:9, 10, 13; Ne 9:6; At 4:24; 14:15; Re 14:7) Ela comenta também a Sua capacidade de estender Seu poder sobre o mar e controlá-lo. (Jó 26:12; Sal 65:7; 89:9; Je 31:35) Quando o Filho dele esteve na terra, seu Pai lhe deu autoridade para, com eficácia, dar ordens ao mar. (Mt 8:23-27; Mr 4:36-41; Jo 6:17-20) O controle dos mares por Deus é demonstrado na maneira em que os litorais e as marés mantêm o mar dentro dos seus limites fixos, como que bloqueado por portas. (Jó 38:8-11; Sal 33:7; Pr 8:29; Je 5:22; veja AREIA.) Esta realização com respeito ao mar, bem como o seu papel no ciclo de água, da terra (Ec 1:7; Am 5:8), fazem do mar um exemplo das maravilhosas obras de Jeová. (Sal 104:24, 25) Em sentido poético, até mesmo os mares participam no louvar ao seu Criador. — Sal 96:11; 98:7.

Mares na Região de Israel. Dentre os mares na região de Israel, o mais destacado era "o Grande Mar [Mediterrâneo]", também chamado de "o mar ocidental" ou simplesmente de "o Mar". (Jos 1:4; De 11:24; Núm 34:5) Outros eram o Mar Vermelho, ou o mar egípcio (Êx 10:19; Is 11:15); o Mar Salgado (Morto), o mar do Arabá ou "o mar oriental" (De 3:17; Ez 47:18); e o mar da Galileia, o mar de Quinerete ou o mar de Tiberíades. (Mt 4:18; Núm 34:11; Jo 6:1; veja GALILEIA, MAR DA; GRANDE MAR; MAR SALGADO; MAR VERMELHO.) Nas referências bíblicas, a específica massa de água indicada pela expressão "o mar" frequentemente tem de ser determinada à base do contexto. (Êx 14:2 [compare isso com 13:18]; Mr 2:13 [compare isso com o v 1].) O termo hebraico às vezes é aplicado a rios. — Je 51:36 (referindo-se ao Eufrates); Is 19:5 (o Nilo).

O Abismo. Segundo o Greek and English Lexicon to the New Testament (Léxico Grego e Inglês do Novo Testamento; Londres, 1845, p. 2), de Parkhurst, a palavra grega á·bys·sos, que significa "muito ou extremamente profundo", com frequência traduzida "abismo", é às vezes usada com referência ao mar ou em comparação com ele, por causa da grande e aparentemente insondável profundidade dele. (Ro 10:6, 7; compare isso com De 30:12, 13.) Nos símbolos de Revelação (Apocalipse), "a fera que ascende do abismo" (Re 11:7) é mencionada em Revelação 13:1 como ascendendo "do mar". — Veja ABISMO.

Origem da Vida no Mar. O relato de Gênesis conta que a vida marinha e as criaturas voadoras foram as primeiras formas de vida animal na terra. Reza: "E Deus prosseguiu dizendo: 'Produzam as águas um enxame de almas viventes e voem criaturas voadoras sobre a terra, na face da expansão dos céus.' E Deus passou a criar os grandes monstros marinhos e toda alma vivente que se move, que as águas produziram em enxames segundo as suas espécies, e toda criatura voadora alada segundo a sua espécie. E Deus pôde ver que era bom. Então, Deus os abençoou, dizendo: 'Sede fecundos e tornai-vos muitos, e enchei as águas das bacias marítimas, e tornem-se muitas as criaturas voadoras na terra.' E veio a ser noitinha e veio a ser manhã, quinto dia." — Gên 1:20-23.

Ao dizer: "Produzam as águas um enxame", Deus não deixou entregue aos próprios mares o aparecimento de vida, para produzir alguma forma primeva da qual todos os outros animais evoluíssem. Porque o relato diz também: "Deus passou a criar [criaturas marinhas] . . . segundo as suas espécies." Também, no registro do 'sexto dia' e da criação dos animais terrestres, apresenta-se Deus como dizendo: "Produza a terra almas viventes segundo as suas espécies." Deus não ordenou que o mar produzisse coisas viventes para a terra, nem deixou essas coisas evoluírem do mar, mas "Deus passou a fazer" cada espécie adaptada ao habitat que ia ocupar. — Gên 1:24, 25.

Uso Ilustrativo. Ao passo que a Terra da Promessa se estenderia "desde o Mar Vermelho até o mar dos filisteus [o mar Mediterrâneo], e desde o ermo até o Rio [Eufrates]", a descrição do domínio do vindouro Rei messiânico como "de mar a mar e desde o Rio até os confins da terra" evidentemente se refere ao globo inteiro. (Êx 23:31; Za 9:9, 10; compare isso com Da 2:34, 35, 44, 45.) Isto é indicado por Mateus e por João na sua aplicação da profecia de Zacarias, em que este cita o Salmo 72:8. — Mt 21:4-9; Jo 12:12-16.

Transbordantes exércitos. Jeremias descreveu o ruído dos atacantes de Babilônia "como o mar turbulento". (Je 50:42) Portanto, quando ele predisse que "o mar" subiria sobre Babilônia, ele evidentemente se referia à onda de tropas conquistadoras sob os medos e os persas. — Je 51:42; compare isso com Da 9:26.

Massas de gente apartadas de Deus. Isaías comparou os iníquos da terra, as massas de gente apartadas de Deus, ao "mar revolto, quando não pode sossegar, cujas águas lançam de si algas e lama". (Is 57:20) Em Revelação 17:1, 15, diz-se que as "águas" sobre as quais Babilônia, a Grande, está sentada significam "povos, e multidões, e nações, e línguas". Isaías profetizou adicionalmente à "mulher" de Deus, Sião: "Porque a ti se encaminhará a opulência do mar; os próprios recursos das nações chegarão a ti." (Is 59:20; 60:1, 5) Isto parece significar que muitos dentre as multidões da terra se voltariam para a simbólica "mulher" de Deus.

Daniel descreveu quatro "animais" que subiram "do mar" e revelou que estes eram simbólicos de reis ou reinos políticos. (Da 7:2, 3, 17, 23) De modo similar, João falou sobre 'uma fera que ascendeu do mar', isto é, daquela vasta parte da humanidade afastada de Deus; e mencionar ele, em linguagem simbólica, diademas e um trono relaciona novamente a ideia de uma organização política com esta fera saída "do mar". (Re 13:1, 2) Ele observou também em visão o tempo em que haveria "um novo céu e uma nova terra" e em que "o mar", isto é, as turbulentas massas de gente apartadas de Deus, não mais existiria. — Re 21:1.

Pessoas sem fé. Aquele que não tem fé, tendo dúvidas quando ora a Deus, é comparado pelo discípulo Tiago a "uma onda do mar, impelida pelo vento e agitada". Não reconhece nem sabe avaliar as excelentes qualidades de Deus, de generosidade e benevolência. "Não suponha tal homem que há de receber algo de Jeová; ele é homem indeciso, instável em todos os seus caminhos", declara Tiago. — Tg 1:5-8.

Homens imorais. Judas, irmão de Tiago, adverte os concristãos a respeito do grande perigo de homens iníquos que se introduzem sorrateiramente na congregação, com o objetivo de causar aviltamento moral. Ele os chama de "ondas bravias do mar, que espumam as suas próprias causas para vergonha". (Ju 4-13) Judas talvez pensasse numa expressão anterior de Isaías (57:20), e talvez descrevesse figurativamente a veemente e temerária desconsideração das leis de Deus por tais homens, e que eles, no seu proceder degradante e libidinoso, avançavam impetuosamente contra as barreiras de moral, divinamente constituídas. Conforme observa o Commentary (Comentário) de Cook sobre Judas 13: "Eles lançam, diante da vista pública, a lama e a sujeira de seus excessos . . . Assim, tais homens espumam seus próprios atos vergonhosos, e os lançam à vista de todos os homens, e, desse modo, fazem que se culpe a Igreja pelas más ações destes professos." Outro comentador diz: "O que eles transmitem é tão sem substância e tão sem valor como a espuma das ondas do oceano, e o resultado é, efetivamente, uma proclamação de sua própria vergonha." — Barnes' Notes on the New Testament (Notas sobre o Novo Testamento, de Barnes), 1974; compare isso com a descrição de tais homens por Pedro em 2Pe 2:10-22.

MAR, GRANDE. Veja GRANDE MAR.

MARA, I [Amarga]. O nome Mara foi sugerido pela viúva de Elimeleque para si mesma, para expressar a amargura que sentia por estar privada do marido e de seus filhos, Malom e Quiliom. Noemi partira de Belém com o esposo e dois filhos (Ru 1:1, 2), mas retornara de Moabe como viúva triste e sem filhos. Naquela ocasião, suas velhas amigas, as mulheres de Belém, perguntaram: "É esta Noemi?" Ainda cheia de pesar, ela respondeu: "Não me chameis Noemi [que significa "Minha Agradabilidade"]. Chamai-me Mara [que significa "Amarga"], pois o Todo-Poderoso o fez muito amargo para mim. Eu estava cheia quando fui, e é de mãos vazias que Jeová me fez voltar." — Ru 1:19-21.

MARA, II [Amargura]. Um dos primeiros acampamentos de Israel na península do Sinai. Foi chamado de "Mara" por causa da água não potável encontrada ali. (Êx 15:23; Núm 33:8) Embora apenas há pouco libertos dos egípcios no Mar Vermelho, os israelitas se entregaram a resmungos sem fé quando não conseguiram beber a água em Mara. Daí, sob a direção de Jeová, Moisés lançou uma árvore na água, e a água se tornou doce. A Bíblia não especifica o tipo de árvore usado, e por isso não há base para identificá-la. Naturalmente, Jeová pode ter dirigido Moisés a determinada variedade com propriedades naturais para tornar a água potável. Mas, não há necessidade de procurar uma explanação científica ou natural, visto que a cura da água, sem dúvida, foi milagrosa. — Êx 15:23-25; compare isso com 2Rs 2:19-22; 4:38-41.

Jeová usou a situação em Mara para testar a fé dos israelitas na Sua capacidade de cuidar deles. Visto que água ruim pode causar doenças (2Rs 2:19), tornar a água potável ilustrava a capacidade de Jeová, de proteger os israelitas contra as enfermidades sofridas pelos egípcios. O "regulamento" que Jeová ensinou então aos israelitas foi: A obediência a ele, como seu Deus, impediria sofrerem as enfermidades que ele pusera sobre os egípcios. — Êx 15:25, 26.

Mara costuma ser identificado com ʽEin Hawwara, a 80 km ao SSE da atual Suez, apenas poucos quilômetros distante do Mar Vermelho.

MARCA. Entre os não israelitas, animais e até mesmo escravos eram marcados como indicação de terem dono. No caso dos humanos, essas marcas de propriedade eram colocadas numa parte visível do corpo, tal como a testa. Adoradores de deuses falsos às vezes identificavam-se com a marca da sua deidade na testa. Todavia, a lei de Jeová proibia a Israel a desfiguração de humanos com tatuagens. Isto se contrapunha a práticas idólatras e ensinava o devido respeito pela criação de Deus. — Le 19:28; veja MARCA DE FOGO.

Uso Figurado. As Escrituras aludem a marcas feitas em humanos e se referem a estas em sentido figurado. Na visão de Ezequiel, um homem com um tinteiro de secretário foi comissionado a percorrer Jerusalém e a 'marcar com um sinal [hebr.: taw] as testas dos que suspiravam e gemiam por causa de todas as coisas detestáveis que se faziam no meio dela'. Esta ação da parte deles demonstrava que eram pessoas justas, servos de Jeová, e, portanto, merecedores de serem preservados na época da execução do julgamento por Jeová. A marca figurativa na testa deles atestava isso. — Ez 9; compare isso com Ez 9:4, n; 2Pe 2:6-8.

Por outro lado, na visão de João, os que receberam a marca (ou: gravura, talho) da fera na testa ou na mão estavam destinados à destruição. A marca na testa identificava-os publicamente como adoradores da fera, e, portanto, como escravos dela. Eram assim identificados como opositores de Deus, porque a fera recebera sua autoridade do dragão, Satanás, o Diabo. A marca na mão, logicamente, significaria apoio ativo dado à fera, visto que a mão é usada para trabalhar. — Re 13:1, 2, 16-18; 14:9, 10; 16:1, 2; 20:4.

Veja também MARCO DIVISÓRIO.

MARCA DE FOGO. Entre alguns pagãos, marcas de fogo de diversos desenhos eram queimadas ou gravadas na carne de escravos como sinal de terem dono. Jeová predisse que as altivas mulheres de Judá, como escravas de conquistadores estrangeiros, passariam a ter uma "marca de fogo [hebr.: ki] em vez de lindeza". — Is 3:24.

Os idólatras, ocasionalmente, mandavam o nome, o emblema ou a imagem de seu ídolo ser reproduzido neles, para exibirem que eram devotados a este deus. A desfiguração deliberada da carne era proibida sob a Lei mosaica. (Le 19:28) Sob a Lei, a única marca posta num escravo era furar a orelha de alguém que voluntariamente pedisse ser escravo do seu amo "por tempo indefinido". — De 15:16, 17.

Paulo escreveu aos gálatas: "Estou levando no meu corpo as marcas [gr.: stíg·ma·ta] dum escravo de Jesus." (Gál 6:17) Muitos foram os maus-tratos infligidos ao corpo físico de Paulo por causa do seu serviço cristão, alguns dos quais, sem dúvida, o deixaram com cicatrizes, atestando a autenticidade da sua afirmação de ser escravo fiel pertencente a Jesus Cristo. (2Co 11:23-27) Estas coisas talvez fossem as marcas a que se referiu. Ou talvez se referisse à vida que levava como cristão, demonstrando os frutos do espírito e executando a obra do seu ministério cristão. — Veja MARCA.

MARCO DIVISÓRIO. Quando os israelitas ocuparam Canaã, cada família recebeu um lote de terra, e essas propriedades eram demarcadas por divisas, ou marcos divisórios. Estes não são descritos na Bíblia, mas podem ter sido postes, pedras ou mesmo sulcos no solo. A palavra hebraica para "marco divisório" (gevúl) é a mesma que a para "termo" e "território". (Gên 10:19; 47:21) Pelo menos alguns marcos divisórios na Palestina tinham inscrições identificadoras. Inscrições aprimoradas deveras aparecem em algumas divisas, ou marcos divisórios, no Egito e na Mesopotâmia. Por exemplo, descobriu-se em Nipur um marco divisório inscrito de Nabucodonosor I.

A lei de Jeová proibia recuar marcos divisórios. (De 19:14; veja também Pr 22:28.) Na realidade, quem recuasse "o marco divisório de seu próximo" era maldito. (De 27:17) Visto que os donos de terras geralmente dependiam das safras produzidas pelos seus terrenos, recuar o marco divisório significaria privar o próximo de parte dos seus meios de subsistência. Isto equivalia a furto e era assim encarado nos tempos antigos. (Jó 24:2) Mas, havia pessoas inescrupulosas que eram culpadas de tais abusos, e príncipes de Judá, no tempo de Oseias, foram comparados aos que recuavam um marco divisório. — Os 5:10.

Marco divisório de Susa, com símbolos dos deuses babilônicos Istar (estrela de oito pontas), Sin (lua crescente) e Xamaxe (disco do sol).

Jeová tem consideração com as viúvas e os órfãos de pai. Neste respeito, diz-se que ele derrubará a casa dos que se enaltecem, "mas ele fixará o termo da viúva". (Pr 15:25) Também, Provérbios 23:10, 11, declara: "Não recues o termo existente há muito tempo e não entres no campo de meninos órfãos de pai. Porque o Redentor deles é forte; ele mesmo pleiteará contigo a causa deles."

MARCOS. Sobrenome romano do filho de Maria de Jerusalém. Seu nome hebraico era João, que significa "Jeová Mostrou Favor; Jeová Foi Clemente". (At 12:12, 25) Marcos era primo de Barnabé, foi companheiro de viagem dele e de outros primitivos missionários cristãos, e foi inspirado a escrever o evangelho que leva seu nome. (Col 4:10) Marcos é o João Marcos mencionado no livro de Atos e o João de Atos 13:5, 13.

Evidentemente, foi um dos primeiros crentes em Cristo. A casa da sua mãe era lugar de adoração da primitiva congregação cristã, que pode significar que tanto ela como Marcos tornaram-se seguidores de Jesus Cristo antes da morte deste. (At 12:12) Visto que apenas Marcos menciona o jovem escassamente vestido que fugiu na noite em que Jesus foi traído, há motivos para crer que o próprio Marcos era este jovem. (Mr 14:51, 52) De modo que parece provável que Marcos estava presente quando o espírito santo foi derramado sobre os cerca de 120 discípulos de Cristo em Pentecostes de 33 EC. — At 1:13-15; 2:1-4.

Depois de Barnabé e Saulo (Paulo) terem executado a subministração de socorros em Jerusalém, eles "voltaram e tomaram consigo João, cognominado Marcos". Parece que Marcos serviu como seu assistente, talvez cuidando das necessidades físicas deles em viagem. (At 12:25; 13:5) Por algum motivo não revelado, quando chegaram a Perge, na Panfília, "João [Marcos] retirou-se deles e voltou para Jerusalém". (At 13:13) Mais tarde, quando Paulo empreendeu a sua segunda viagem missionária, embora Barnabé estivesse decidido a levar junto Marcos, Paulo "não achava correto que levassem consigo a este, visto que se tinha afastado deles desde Panfília e não tinha ido com eles à obra". "Houve um forte acesso de ira", e eles se separaram; Barnabé levou consigo Marcos a Chipre, e Paulo levou consigo Silas através da Síria e Cilícia. — At 15:36-41.

Algum tempo depois, porém, qualquer que fosse o rompimento entre Paulo, Barnabé e Marcos, evidentemente foi sanado, porque Marcos estava com Paulo em Roma e participou com ele em enviar saudações aos cristãos colossenses (c. 60-61 EC). Paulo falou dele favoravelmente, dizendo: "Aristarco, meu companheiro de cativeiro, manda-vos os seus cumprimentos, e assim também Marcos, primo de Barnabé, (a respeito de quem recebestes mandado para o acolher, se for ter convosco)." (Col 4:10) Marcos está também entre os que Paulo mencionou como enviando saudações a Filêmon, quando o apóstolo lhe escreveu de Roma (também c. 60-61 EC). (Flm 23, 24) Mais tarde (c. 65 EC), quando Paulo estava novamente preso em Roma, ele pediu especificamente a Timóteo: "Toma a Marcos e traze-o contigo, porque ele me é útil para ministrar." — 2Ti 4:11.

João Marcos associou-se também com Pedro em Babilônia, porque ele é mencionado na primeira carta do apóstolo (escrita c. 62-64 EC) como enviando cumprimentos. Pedro o chama de "Marcos, meu filho", talvez indicando o forte vínculo de afeição cristã que havia entre eles. (1Pe 5:13; compare isso com 1Jo 2:1, 7.) Assim, Marcos, anteriormente causa de dificuldades, mereceu os elogios e a confiança de destacados servos de Deus e usufruiu o privilégio ainda maior de ser inspirado para escrever um relato sobre o ministério de Jesus. — Veja JOÃO N.º 4; MARCOS, BOAS NOVAS SEGUNDO.

MARCOS, BOAS NOVAS SEGUNDO. O registro, divinamente inspirado, do ministério de Jesus Cristo, escrito por João Marcos. Este relato "das boas novas a respeito de Jesus Cristo" começa com a obra do precursor de Cristo, João, o Batizador, e conclui com um relato sobre as circunstâncias que cercaram a ressurreição de Jesus. Portanto, abrange o período desde a primavera (setentrional) de 29 até a primavera de 33 EC. — Mr 1:1.

Este Evangelho, o mais curto dos quatro, é um registro dinâmico e descritivo do ministério de Jesus Cristo como o Filho de Deus que operava milagres. Faz uso frequente de "imediatamente" e "assim que". (Mr 1:10, 12, 18, 21, 29) O relato é dividido quase que por igual entre conversação e ação.

Fonte das Informações. A tradição antiga indica que Pedro fornecera as informações básicas para o Evangelho de Marcos, e isto concordaria com Marcos estar associado com Pedro em Babilônia. (1Pe 5:13) Segundo Orígenes, Marcos compôs seu Evangelho "de acordo com as instruções de Pedro". (The Ecclesiastical History [A História Eclesiástica], de Eusébio, VI, XXV, 3-7) Tertuliano diz na sua obra "Contra Marcion" (IV, V) que o Evangelho de Marcos, "pode-se afirmar, é de Pedro, cujo intérprete Marcos era". (The Ante-Nicene Fathers [Os Pais Antenicenos], Vol. III, p. 350) Eusébio apresenta a declaração de "João, o presbítero", conforme citada por Pápias (c. 140 EC): "E o Presbítero costumava dizer o seguinte: 'Marcos tornou-se intérprete de Pedro e escreveu com exatidão tudo de que se lembrava, na realidade, não na ordem das coisas ditas ou feitas pelo Senhor. . . . Marcos não fez nada de errado ao escrever deste modo pontos específicos conforme se lembrava deles. Pois, para uma coisa deu atenção, a não deixar fora nada do que ouvira e a não fazer neles nenhuma declaração falsa.' " — The Ecclesiastical History, III, XXXIX, 12-16.

João Marcos, evidentemente, teve também outras fontes de informação. Visto que os primitivos discípulos de Jesus se reuniam na casa da sua mãe (At 12:12), Marcos deve ter conhecido outras pessoas, além de Pedro, que conheceram bem a Jesus

DESTAQUES DE MARCOS

O relato conciso, dinâmico, de Marcos sobre a vida de Jesus apresenta Jesus como o Filho de Deus que faz milagres.

É o Evangelho mais curto, o terceiro a ser escrito (c. 60-65 EC), evidentemente visando os não judeus.

Jesus realiza uma vigorosa campanha de pregação do Reino.

Jesus é batizado e começa a pregar: "O reino de Deus se tem aproximado." (1:9-11, 14, 15)

Convida Simão, André, Tiago e João a deixar seu negócio de pesca e a ser seus seguidores. (1:16-21)

Depois de pregar na sinagoga de Cafarnaum, ele passa a pregar em toda a Galileia. (1:21, 22, 35-39)

Levi, cobrador de impostos, aceita o convite de ser seguidor de Jesus. (2:14-17)

Jesus forma um grupo de 12 apóstolos para pregarem. (3:13-19)

Usa muitas ilustrações ao ensinar sobre o Reino de Deus, para que apenas os merecedores entendam o pleno sentido do que ele diz. (4:1-34)

Jesus encontra falta de fé ao dar testemunho no seu próprio território. (6:1-6)

Ele acelera a pregação por enviar seus apóstolos. (6:7-13)

Sua atividade se estende à Fenícia e a Decápolis. (7:24, 31)

Jesus é transfigurado na glória do Reino. (9:1-8)

Fora de Jerusalém, ele profetiza a respeito da 'vinda do Filho do homem com grande poder e glória'. (13:1-37)

O Filho de Deus, que faz milagres.

Na sinagoga de Cafarnaum, ele liberta um homem da possessão por demônios; depois, cura a sogra de Simão e sara muitos outros de diversas aflições. (1:23-34, 40-42)

Por curar um paralítico, Jesus demonstra seu poder para perdoar pecados. (2:1-12)

Sofredores de todas as partes procuram alívio. (3:1-12)

Depois de acalmar uma tempestade no mar da Galileia, ele expulsa dum homem demônios e permite a estes entrarem numa manada de porcos. (4:35–5:17)

Cura uma mulher que padece dum fluxo de sangue, e ressuscita a filha de Jairo. (5:21-43)

Depois de alimentar 5.000 com dois peixes e cinco pães, Jesus anda sobre o mar da Galileia açoitado pelo vento. (6:35-52)

Expulsa um demônio da filha duma mulher siro-fenícia e cura um surdo que tem um impedimento de fala. (7:24-37)

Alimenta 4.000 com sete pães; em Betsaida, restaura a vista a um cego. (8:1-9, 22-26)

Dum menino mudo e surdo, Jesus expulsa um demônio que havia resistido aos discípulos; ele restabelece a vista dum mendigo cego em Jericó. (9:14-29; 10:46-52)

Amaldiçoa uma figueira que subsequentemente seca. (11:12-14, 20)

Opositores do Filho de Deus não são bem-sucedidos.

Depois dos esforços de tentação feitos por Satanás no ermo, anjos ministram a Jesus. (1:12, 13)

Quando escribas dos fariseus criticam Jesus por comer com cobradores de impostos e pecadores, ele os refuta. (2:15-17)

Mais tarde, os fariseus objetam que os discípulos dele arranquem espigas de cereal no sábado e que Jesus cure no sábado; juntam-se aos herodianos em querer destruí-lo. (2:23–3:6)

Jesus refuta convincentemente a acusação de expulsar demônios por meio de Satanás. (3:20-30)

O precursor de Jesus, João, o Batizador, é decapitado, mas Jesus continua a ensinar. (6:14-29, 34)

Fariseus e escribas protestam que os discípulos dele desconsideram a tradição referente a lavar as mãos; Jesus expõe a hipocrisia deles e explica a verdadeira fonte de impureza. (7:1-23)

Fariseus interrogam Jesus a respeito do divórcio, a fim de testá-lo, mas sem êxito. (10:1-12)

Principais sacerdotes, escribas e anciãos questionam a autoridade de Jesus depois de ele limpar o templo, mas ele os silencia. (11:15-18, 27-33)

Ele conta a parábola do vinhedo para expor a oposição dos líderes religiosos à vontade de Deus e sua intenção de matar Jesus; esses procuram apoderar-se dele, mas temem a multidão. (12:1-12)

Fariseus e herodianos perguntam a Jesus se é direito pagar impostos a César; saduceus levantam uma questão difícil a respeito da ressurreição. Todos fracassam em enlaçar Jesus. (12:13-27)

Judas trai Jesus; discípulos tropeçam; Jesus é preso e o Sinédrio o julga merecedor da morte; no entanto, ele prediz que se 'sentará à destra de poder e virá com as nuvens do céu'. (14:1, 2, 10, 11, 17-21, 32-65)

Pilatos é pressionado para condenar Jesus à morte; Jesus morre na estaca e é sepultado. (15:1-47)

Anjos anunciam a ressurreição de Jesus. (16:1-8)

Cristo, pessoas que o viram fazer sua obra, e que o ouviram pregar e ensinar. Sendo ele provavelmente o "certo jovem" que aqueles que prenderam Cristo tentaram pegar, mas que "escapou nu", o próprio Marcos, pelo visto, não ficou inteiramente sem contato pessoal com Jesus. — Mr 14:51, 52.

Evidentemente Escrito Visando Não Judeus. Embora as boas novas segundo Marcos interessassem e beneficiassem os leitores judeus, pelo visto não foram escritas especificamente para eles. Parecem ter sido compostas primariamente para leitores não judeus, especialmente os romanos. Sua concisão e seu caráter abrupto têm sido encarados especialmente apropriados para o intelecto de leitores romanos. Termos latinos são às vezes transliterados para o grego, como quando se usa a palavra grega prai·tó·ri·on para o termo latino praetorium. (Mr 15:16, Int) Também, usa-se a palavra grega ken·ty·rí·on para a palavra latina centurio, oficial no comando de cem soldados. — Mr 15:39, Int.

O relato contém explanações que não teriam sido necessárias para os leitores judeus. Indica que o Jordão era um rio e mostra que o templo podia ser visto do monte das Oliveiras. (Mr 1:5; 13:3) Menciona que os fariseus praticavam "o jejum" e que os saduceus 'diziam não haver ressurreição'. (2:18; 12:18) Este Evangelho explica também que a vítima pascoal era sacrificada "no primeiro dia dos pães não fermentados" e que a "Preparação" era "o dia antes do sábado". — 14:12; 15:42.

Ao passo que normalmente não teria sido necessário explicar termos semíticos aos leitores judeus em geral, o Evangelho de Marcos fornece muitas dessas explicações. Dá-se a interpretação de "Boanerges" ("Filhos do Trovão"), "Tál·i·tha cú·mi" ("Donzela, digo-te: Levanta-te!"), "corbã" ("uma dádiva dedicada a Deus") e "É·li, É·li, lá·ma sa·bahh·thá·ni?" ("Deus meu, Deus meu, por que me abandonaste?"). — Mr 3:17; 5:41; 7:11; 15:34.

Tempo e Lugar da Composição. Segundo a tradição antiga, o Evangelho de Marcos foi primeiro tornado público em Roma, sendo este o testemunho de antigos escritores tais como Clemente, Eusébio e Jerônimo. Marcos estava em Roma durante o primeiro encarceramento de Paulo ali. (Col 4:10; Flm 1, 23, 24) Depois, ele estava com Pedro em Babilônia. (1Pe 5:13) Daí, durante o segundo encarceramento de Paulo em Roma, Paulo pediu que Timóteo viesse em breve e trouxesse consigo a Marcos. (2Ti 4:11) É provável que Marcos tenha voltado então a Roma. Visto que não se faz menção da destruição de Jerusalém em cumprimento da profecia de Jesus, Marcos deve ter compilado seu relato antes daquele acontecimento em 70 EC. Sua presença em Roma, pelo menos uma vez, e possivelmente duas vezes, durante os anos 60-65 EC, sugere que Marcos talvez completasse seu Evangelho ali em algum tempo durante esses anos.

Particularidades Ímpares do Relato de Marcos. Embora na maior parte abranja matéria similar à de Mateus e Lucas, Marcos fornece também pormenores adicionais. Alguns destes ilustram os sentimentos de Jesus a respeito de certas coisas. Jesus ficou 'contristado com a insensibilidade dos corações' daqueles que objetavam a ele curar no sábado a mão ressequida de um homem. (Mr 3:5) Quando Jesus obteve pouco acolhimento por parte das pessoas no seu próprio território, "admirou-se de sua falta de fé". (6:6) E "sentiu amor" pelo jovem rico, que perguntou sobre os requisitos para obter a vida eterna. — 10:21.

Exclusivos do relato de Marcos são também certos pontos a respeito do fim da vida terrestre de Jesus. Ele relata que no julgamento de Jesus as testemunhas falsas não concordavam entre si. (Mr 14:59) O transeunte obrigado a carregar a estaca de tortura de Jesus foi Simão de Cirene, "pai de Alexandre e de Rufo". (15:21) E Marcos conta que Pilatos certificou-se de que Jesus estava morto antes de dar a José de Arimateia permissão para sepultar o cadáver dele. — 15:43-45.

Uma das quatro ilustrações de Jesus encontrada no Evangelho de Marcos é única. (Mr 4:26-29) O relato menciona pelo menos 19 milagres realizados por Jesus Cristo. Dois deles (a cura de um surdo que também tinha um impedimento na fala e a cura de certo cego) só constam no Evangelho de Marcos. — Mr 7:31-37; 8:22-26.

Referências às Escrituras Hebraicas. Embora Marcos pareça ter escrito primariamente para os romanos, este registro contém assim mesmo referências às Escrituras Hebraicas e citações delas. Mostra que a obra de João, o Batizador, era cumprimento de Isaías 40:3 e Malaquias 3:1. (Mr 1:2-4) Neste relato encontram-se também casos de Jesus aplicar e citar as Escrituras Hebraicas, ou aludir a elas. Estes incluem: Honrar a Deus apenas com os lábios (Mr 7:6, 7; Is 29:13); honrar os pais (Mr 7:10; Êx 20:12; 21:17); a criação do homem e da mulher, e a instituição do matrimônio (Mr 10:6-9; Gên 1:27; 2:24); diversos mandamentos (Mr 10:19; Êx 20:12-16; Le 19:13); os comentários de Jesus a respeito do templo (Mr 11:17; Is 56:7; Je 7:11); sua declaração a respeito de ser rejeitado (Mr 12:10, 11; Sal 118:22, 23); as palavras de Jeová a Moisés junto ao espinheiro ardente (Mr 12:26; Êx

3:2, 6); os dois grandes mandamentos sobre o amor (Mr 12:29-31; De 6:4, 5; Le 19:18); as palavras proféticas de Jeová ao Senhor de Davi, sobre a subjugação dos adversários (Mr 12:36; Sal 110:1); a dispersão dos discípulos de Jesus (Mr 14:27; Za 13:7); a declaração de Jesus de ser abandonado por Deus (Mr 15:34; Sal 22:1); suas instruções a um leproso curado (Mr 1:44; Le 14:10, 11); e sua declaração profética a respeito da coisa repugnante que causa desolação (Mr 13:14; Da 9:27).

As referências às Escrituras Hebraicas, no relato de Marcos, ilustram amplamente que Jesus Cristo tinha confiança nelas e usava estas Escrituras no seu ministério. Este Evangelho fornece também a base para se conhecer melhor o Filho do homem, que "veio, não para que se lhe ministrasse, mas para ministrar e dar a sua alma como resgate em troca de muitos". — Mr 10:45.

Conclusões Longa e Curta. Alguns têm achado que Marcos 16:8, que conclui com as palavras "e não disseram nada a ninguém, pois estavam tomadas de temor", é abrupto demais para ter sido a conclusão original deste Evangelho. Todavia, não se precisa chegar a tal conclusão, em vista do estilo geral de Marcos. Também, os eruditos Jerônimo e Eusébio, do quarto século, concordam que o registro autêntico conclui com as palavras "pois estavam tomadas de temor". — Jerônimo, carta 120, pergunta 3, conforme publicada em Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum (Substância das Escrituras Eclesiásticas Latinas), Viena e Leipzig, 1912, Vol. LV, p. 481; Eusébio, "Ad Marinum", I, conforme publicado em Patrologia Grœca (Patrologia Grega), Paris, 1857, Vol. XXII, col. 937.

Existem diversos manuscritos e versões que acrescentam uma conclusão longa ou uma curta após estas palavras. A conclusão longa (que consiste em 12 versículos) se encontra no Manuscrito Alexandrino, no Codex Ephraemi Syri rescriptus e no Codex Bezae Cantabrigiensis. Ocorre também na Vulgata latina, no Siríaco curetoniano e na Pesito siríaca. Mas é omitido no Manuscrito Sinaítico, no Manuscrito Vaticano N.º 1209, no códice Siríaco sinaítico e na Versão Armênia. Certos manuscritos e versões posteriores contêm a conclusão curta. O Códice Regius, do oitavo século EC, tem ambas as conclusões, apresentando primeiro a conclusão curta. Prefacia cada conclusão com uma nota, dizendo que estas passagens eram correntes em algumas partes, embora evidentemente não reconheça nenhuma delas como de autoridade.

Edgar J. Goodspeed, tradutor da Bíblia, comentando as conclusões longa e curta, observou: "A Conclusão Curta se liga muito melhor com Marcos 16:8 do que a Longa, mas nenhuma delas pode ser considerada como parte original do Evangelho de Marcos." — The Goodspeed Parallel New Testament (O Novo Testamento Paralelo, de Goodspeed), 1944, p. 127.

MAR DE FUNDIÇÃO (Mar de Cobre). Quando se construiu o templo durante o reinado de Salomão, um "mar de fundição" substituiu a bacia de cobre portátil usada no tabernáculo anterior. (Êx 30:17-21; 1Rs 7:23, 40, 44) Construído por Hirão, hebreu-fenício, evidentemente foi chamado de "mar" por causa da grande quantidade de água que podia conter. Este vaso, também de cobre, media "dez côvados [4,5 m] de uma borda à sua outra borda, circular em volta; e tinha a altura de cinco côvados [c. 2,2 m], e requeria um cordel de trinta côvados [13,4 m] para circundá-lo em toda a volta". — 1Rs 7:23.

Circunferência. A circunferência de 30 côvados é evidentemente um número redondo, porque, mais precisamente, seria de 31,4 côvados. Neste respeito, Christopher Wordsworth cita certo Rennie como fazendo esta interessante observação: "Até o tempo de Arquimedes [terceiro século AEC], a circunferência dum círculo era sempre medida em linhas retas pelo raio; e Hirão descreveria naturalmente o mar como tendo trinta côvados de circunferência, medindo-o, como era então invariavelmente costumeiro, pelo seu raio, ou semidiâmetro, de cinco côvados, que, sendo aplicado seis vezes em volta do perímetro, ou 'borda', daria os trinta côvados declarados. Não havia, evidentemente, nenhuma intenção no trecho senão a de dar as dimensões do Mar na linguagem costumeira para que todos entendessem, medindo a circunferência do modo como todos os trabalhadores peritos, como Hirão, costumavam medir os círculos naquele tempo. Ele, naturalmente, porém, devia saber perfeitamente bem que, visto o hexágono poligonal assim circunscrito pelo seu raio ter trinta côvados, a verdadeira circunferência curva era um pouco maior." (Notes [Notas] sobre a King James Version [Versão Rei Jaime], Londres, 1887) Assim, parece que a proporção de três por um (isto é, a circunferência tendo o triplo do diâmetro) era a maneira costumeira de expressar isso, visando-se que a medida fosse entendida como apenas aproximada.

De Cobre. O mar de cobre era decorado com "ornamentos em forma de bagas", e tinha como base 12 figuras de touros, em grupos de três enfrentando o norte, o sul, o leste e o oeste. A borda do mar assemelhava-se a uma flor de lírio. A grossura deste vaso grande era "da largura da mão [7,4 cm]". (1Rs 7:24-26) Esta enorme quantidade de cobre procedeu dos suprimentos que o Rei Davi havia obtido nas suas conquistas na Síria. (1Cr 18:6-8) A fundição foi feita em molde de argila, na região do Jordão, e foi deveras uma façanha notável. — 1Rs 7:44-46.

Capacidade. O relato de 1 Reis 7:26 menciona o mar como 'contendo a medida de dois mil batos', ao passo que o relato paralelo de 2 Crônicas 4:5 fala dele como 'contendo a medida de três mil batos'. Alguns afirmam que a diferença é o resultado dum erro de escriba no relato de Crônicas. Todavia, embora o verbo hebraico para "conter", em cada caso, seja o mesmo, há certa margem permissível na sua tradução. Portanto, algumas traduções vertem 1 Reis 7:26 no sentido de que o vaso "levava" ou "continha" 2.000 batos, e traduzem 2 Crônicas 4:5 para rezar que ele tinha a "capacidade" ou "podia conter" 3.000 batos. (Al, NM) Isto dá a entender que o relato em Reis especifica a quantidade de água costumeiramente armazenada no recipiente, ao passo que o relato em Crônicas fornece a capacidade real do vaso, quando enchido até a borda.

Existe evidência de que o bato antigamente era igual a 22 l, de modo que, se enchido até dois terços da sua capacidade, o mar conteria normalmente cerca de 44.000 l de água. Para ter a capacidade indicada, seus lados não devem ter sido retos, mas bojudos, dando ao vaso o formato dum bulbo. Um vaso de tal forma e com as dimensões já mencionadas podia conter até 66.000 l. Josefo, historiador judeu do primeiro século EC, descreve o mar como tendo "a forma dum hemisfério". Ele indica também que a localização do mar era entre o altar da oferta queimada e o edifício do templo, um pouco para o sul. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), VIII, 79 (iii, 5); VIII, 86 (iii, 6).

Além do mar de cobre, havia dez bacias de cobre menores colocadas sobre carrocins, e estas evidentemente eram enchidas com água do mar de cobre. (1Rs 7:38, 39) A tradição rabínica diz que o mar tinha torneiras. As dez bacias eram usadas para lavar certos sacrifícios e provavelmente para outros fins de lavagem, "o mar, porém, era para os sacerdotes se lavarem nele". (2Cr 4:6) Alguns rabinos têm sustentado que os sacerdotes se imergiam totalmente na água do mar de cobre, ao passo que Josefo diz que era "para os sacerdotes lavarem as mãos e os pés nele". (Jewish Antiquities, VIII, 87 [iii, 6]) Qualquer que tenha sido o procedimento, o mar de cobre é associado com a limpeza sacerdotal.

Na Profecia. Isto talvez forneça a chave para o entendimento da referência no livro de Revelação (Apocalipse) ao "mar vítreo", observado diante do trono de Deus, na visão de João. (Re 4:6; 15:2) Era "semelhante a cristal", talvez tendo lados transparentes (veja Re 21:18, 21), de modo que se podia ver o conteúdo. Os que estavam de pé perto dele, os que venceram "a fera" e sua "imagem", correspondem aos "chamados, e escolhidos, e fiéis" descritos em Revelação 17:14; 20:4-6. Estes servem quais "sacerdotes de Deus e do Cristo", e como reis junto a Cristo durante o Reinado Milenar dele. (Veja 1Pe 2:9.) A posição desta classe sacerdotal junto ao "mar vítreo" diante do trono de Deus faz lembrar a referência do apóstolo a congregação cristã ser 'purificada com o banho de água por meio da palavra'. (Ef 5:25-27) Também Jesus falou sobre o poder purificador da palavra de Deus que ele proclamava. (Jo 15:3) A 'mistura de fogo' (Re 15:2) com o conteúdo aquoso do mar sem dúvida relaciona-se com os julgamentos de Deus, porque o fogo frequentemente é usado neste sentido, e o próprio Deus é descrito como "fogo consumidor" para com aqueles que rejeitam a sua vontade divina. — He 12:25, 29.

O simbolismo do "mar vítreo" na visão de João ilustra assim a explicação inspirada de Paulo, de que o tabernáculo e o templo terrestres, com seu equipamento e as funções sacerdotais, eram modelos das coisas celestiais. (Veja He 8:4, 5; 9:9, 11, 23, 24; 10:1.) Sobre o significado das figuras de touros em que repousava o mar de cobre do templo de Salomão, veja TOURO.

MAR DE METAL FUNDIDO. Veja MAR DE FUNDIÇÃO (MAR DE COBRE).

MAREAL. Lugar na fronteira de Zebulão. (Jos 19:10, 11) Alguns o identificam provisoriamente com Tell Ghalta (Tel Reʽala), a uns 6 km ao ENE de Jocneão, no vale de Jezreel.

MARESSA, MARESA [Lugar à Cabeça (Cume)].

1. Descendente de Judá chamado "pai" de Hébron. (1Cr 2:3, 42) Embora se possa concluir que Maressa era antepassado dos habitantes da cidade de Hébron, isto é improvável, visto que o Hébron mencionado aqui teve filhos e assim, evidentemente, era uma pessoa. — 1Cr 2:43.

2. Descendente de Judá através de Selá. Laadá é identificado como "pai de Maressa". (1Cr 4:21) Embora seja possível que este Maressa (ou seu pai Laadá) tenha fundado a cidade de Maresa, ou que ele seja o mesmo que o homem de Judá mencionado acima, não há certeza disso.

3. Maresa, uma cidade de um grupo de nove na região da Sefelá de Judá (Jos 15:44), ocupava uma posição de importância estratégica ao longo de um dos vales que constituem uma rota natural subindo da planície costeira até os montes e Hébron. Ela é identificada com Tell Sandahannah (Tel Maresha), a cerca de 1,5 km ao S de Beit Jibrin (Bet Guvrin).

O Rei Roboão, sucessor de Salomão, transformou Maressa (Maresa) em cidade fortificada, reforçando assim as defesas de Judá contra ataques vindos deste acesso. (2Cr 11:5, 8) Zerá, o etíope, arremeteu desde o S com a sua enorme força de um milhão de homens e foi confrontado em Maressa pelo exército do Rei Asa, e a batalha, que resultou na vitória de Judá, com ajuda divina, foi travada nesta área. Asa perseguiu as derrotadas forças etíopes por uns 35 km até Gerar, ao SO de Maressa. (2Cr 14:9-13) Maressa era a cidade do profeta Eliézer, que predisse corretamente o fracasso do empreendimento marítimo do Rei Jeosafá em conjunto com Acazias, de Israel. (2Cr 20:35-37) A profecia de Miqueias, avisando os apóstatas Judá e Israel da iminente punição, faz referência específica a Maressa. — Miq 1:15.

No período pós-exílico, Maressa ficou conhecida como Marisa, e continuou a ser um lugar de considerável importância, embora se tornasse uma colônia sidônia e posteriormente um baluarte idumeu. Foi finalmente destruída pelos partos, em 40 AEC.

MARFIM. As defesas ou presas branco-leitosas do elefante, do hipopótamo, da morsa e de outros animais. Embora duro e de densidade cerca de três vezes e meia maior do que o cedro curado, é muito elástico e facilmente esculpido ou trabalhado. Seu fino grão o torna agradável ao toque e lhe dá um acabamento de notável durabilidade. As camadas entrecruzadas de dentina, alternando-se em matiz, acrescentam à sua utilidade uma beleza toda especial. O "marfim" é designado em hebraico pelas palavras shen (literalmente: dente) e shen·hab·bím (traduzido "dentes de elefantes" na Septuaginta grega). O termo grego e·le·fán·ti·nos significa "feito de marfim".

O marfim tem sido associado com as coisas luxuosas da vida — arte requintada, mobília elegante, riquezas muito apreciadas. Os navios de Salomão, cada três anos, traziam grandes quantidades de marfim de lugares longínquos. (1Rs 10:22; 2Cr 9:21) Condizente com a sua glória e grandeza, Salomão "fez um grande trono de marfim e o recobriu de ouro refinado". (1Rs 10:18; 2Cr 9:17) Os Salmos mencionam "o grandioso palácio de marfim" relacionado com os instrumentos musicais de corda. (Sal 45:8) No lindo Cântico de Salomão, o escritor usa o marfim como metáfora e símile para expressar beleza: "Seu abdome é uma placa de marfim, coberta de safiras." "Teu pescoço é como torre de marfim." (Cân 5:14; 7:4) O Rei Acabe também construiu para si um palácio em que usou marfim caro, tornando-o uma autêntica "casa de marfim". (1Rs 22:39) Nos dias de Amós, construíam-se casas e leitos de marfim. (Am 3:15; 6:4) Descobertas arqueológicas confirmam o uso bastante extenso do marfim pela nação de Israel e seus vizinhos.

O Egito também empregava este "plástico" natural para fazer coisas tais como pentes, cabos de leques, louça, caixinhas de unguento, pernas de cadeiras, tabuleiros de jogos, estatuetas e esculturas de arte. A cidade de Tiro, no seu grande comércio marítimo, incrustava de marfim as proas de seus navios. O marfim é também alistado entre as coisas dispendiosas dos antigos mercadores de Tiro, bem como existentes no estoque dos "comerciantes viajantes da terra", que choram por causa da destruição sofrida por Babilônia, a Grande. — Ez 27:6, 15; Re 18:11, 12.

MARIA [da palavra hebr. Miriã, que possivelmente significa "Rebelde"]. Na Bíblia mencionam-se seis Marias.

1. Maria, mãe de Jesus. Ela era filha de Eli, embora a genealogia fornecida por Lucas aliste o marido de Maria, José, como "filho de Eli". A Cyclopædia (Ciclopédia) de M'Clintock e Strong (1881, Vol. III, p. 774) diz: "É bem conhecido que os judeus, ao elaborarem suas tabelas genealógicas, levavam em conta apenas os varões, rejeitando o nome da filha quando o sangue do avô era transmitido ao neto por uma filha, e contando o marido desta filha em lugar do filho do avô materno (Núm. xxvi, 33; xxvii, 4-7)." Sem dúvida, é por este motivo que o historiador Lucas diz que José era "filho de Eli". — Lu 3:23.

Maria era da tribo de Judá e descendente de Davi. Por isso, podia-se dizer que o filho dela, Jesus, "procedeu do descendente [literalmente: semente] de Davi segundo a carne". (Ro 1:3) Através de seu pai adotivo, José, descendente de Davi, Jesus tinha o direito legal ao trono de Davi, e através de sua mãe, como "descendência", "descendente [semente]" e "raiz" de Davi, ele tinha o direito hereditário natural ao "trono de Davi, seu pai". — Mt 1:1-16; Lu 1:32; At 13:22, 23; 2Ti 2:8; Re 5:5; 22:16.

Se a tradição for correta, a esposa de Eli, mãe de Maria, era Ana, cuja irmã tinha uma filha chamada Elisabete, mãe de João, o Batizador. Esta tradição tornaria Elisabete a prima de Maria. Que Maria era parente de Elisabete, que era "das filhas de Arão", da tribo de Levi, é declarado pelas próprias Escrituras. (Lu 1:5, 36) Alguns acharam que a irmã de Maria tenha sido Salomé, esposa de Zebedeu, cujos dois filhos, Tiago e João, foram contados entre os apóstolos de Jesus. — Mt 27:55, 56; Mr 15:40; 16:1; Jo 19:25.

Visitada por um Anjo. Por volta do começo do ano 2 AEC, o anjo Gabriel foi enviado por Deus à virgem Maria, na cidade de Nazaré. "Bom dia, altamente favorecida, Jeová está contigo", foi a saudação bem incomum do anjo. Quando ele lhe disse que ela conceberia e daria à luz um filho chamado Jesus, Maria, que na época apenas era noiva de José, perguntou: "Como se há de dar isso, visto que não tenho relações com um homem?" "Espírito santo virá sobre ti e poder do Altíssimo te encobrirá. Por esta razão, também, o nascido será chamado santo, Filho de Deus", explicou o anjo. Emocionada com tal perspectiva, mas mesmo assim com a devida modéstia e humildade, ela respondeu: "Eis a escrava de Jeová! Ocorra comigo segundo a tua declaração." — Lu 1:26-38.

A fim de lhe fortalecer ainda mais a fé para esta experiência momentosa, foi dito a Maria que sua parenta, Elisabete, na velhice desta, já estava grávida de seis meses, visto que o poder milagroso de Jeová lhe removera a esterilidade. Maria fez-lhe uma visita, e, quando entrou na casa de Elisabete, o bebezinho na madre de Elisabete pulou de alegria, no que ela congratulou Maria, dizendo: "Abençoada és tu entre as mulheres e abençoado é o fruto de tua madre!" (Lu 1:36, 37, 39-45) Nisso, Maria irrompeu em palavras inspiradas que magnificavam a Jeová pela sua bondade. — Lu 1:46-55.

Depois da visita de cerca de três meses a Elisabete, nas colinas da Judeia, Maria retornou a Nazaré. (Lu 1:56) Quando José ficou sabendo (provavelmente por Maria lhe revelar isto) que ela estava grávida, pretendeu divorciar-se dela secretamente, em vez de expô-la à vergonha pública. (Noivos eram considerados como casados, e exigia um divórcio para dissolver o noivado.) Apareceu, porém, o anjo de Jeová, revelando a José que o gerado nela fora por espírito santo. José acatou então a instrução divina e tomou Maria por esposa, "mas não teve relações com ela até ela ter dado à luz um filho; e deu-lhe o nome de Jesus". — Mt 1:18-25.

Dá à Luz Jesus em Belém. À medida que este drama se desenrolava, o decreto de César Augusto, obrigando todos a se registrar na sua respectiva cidade de origem, mostrou-se providencial na cronometragem, porque a profecia a respeito do lugar de nascimento de Jesus tinha de se cumprir. (Miq 5:2) Por conseguinte, José tomou Maria, "já em estado avançado de gravidez", na estafante viagem de mais de 110 km do seu lar em Nazaré, no N, a Belém, no S. Visto que não havia lugar para eles na pousada, o nascimento do filho ocorreu sob as condições mais humildes, sendo o recém-nascido deitado numa manjedoura. Isto ocorreu provavelmente por volta de 1.º de outubro do ano 2 AEC. — Lu 2:1-7; veja FOTOS, Vol. 2, p. 537; JESUS CRISTO.

Depois de ouvirem o anjo dizer: "Hoje vos nasceu na cidade de Davi um Salvador, que é Cristo, o Senhor", pastores foram apressadamente a Belém e acharam ali o sinal: A criança de Maria "enfaixada e deitada numa manjedoura". Contaram à família feliz o que o grande coro angélico havia cantado: "Glória a Deus nas maiores alturas, e na terra paz entre homens de boa vontade." Portanto, Maria "começou a preservar todas essas declarações, tirando conclusões no seu coração". — Lu 2:8-20.

No oitavo dia, Maria mandou circuncidar seu filho em obediência à lei de Jeová. Depois do 40.º dia, ela e seu marido levaram o filho ao templo em Jerusalém para fazer a oferta prescrita. A Lei exigia o sacrifício de um carneirinho e de um pombo novo ou de uma rola. Se a família não tivesse recursos para oferecer um carneirinho, então devia oferecer duas rolas ou dois pombos novos. Que José era homem financeiramente pobre é indicado por Maria oferecer ou "um par de rolas ou dois pombos novos". (Lu 2:21-24; Le 12:1-4, 6, 8) Simeão, homem justo, ao ver o menino, louvou a Jeová por lhe ter permitido ver o Salvador antes de morrer na sua velhice. Voltando-se para Maria, ele disse: "Sim, uma longa espada traspassará a tua própria alma", não querendo dizer que ela seria traspassada por uma espada literal, mas, antes, indicando a dor e o sofrimento que ela teria relacionado com a predita morte do filho numa estaca de tortura. — Lu 2:25-35.

Retorna a Nazaré. Algum tempo depois, um anjo avisou José sobre a trama de Herodes, o Grande, de matar o menino, e mandou que José fugisse com Jesus para o Egito. (Mt 2:1-18) Após a morte de Herodes, a família retornou e se fixou em Nazaré, onde Maria, durante os anos seguintes, deu à luz outros filhos, pelo menos quatro filhos bem como filhas. — Mt 2:19-23; 13:55, 56; Mr 6:3.

Embora a Lei não exigisse que as mulheres comparecessem, era costume de Maria acompanhar José, ano após ano, na viagem de cerca de 150 km a Jerusalém, para a celebração anual da Páscoa. (Êx 23:17; 34:23) Numa destas viagens, por volta de 12 EC, a família voltava para casa quando, depois de percorrerem a distância de um dia de Jerusalém, descobriu a ausência do menino Jesus. Os pais dele retornaram imediatamente a Jerusalém para procurá-lo. Depois de três dias, encontraram-no no templo, escutando e interro-gando os instrutores. Maria exclamou: "Filho, por que nos tratas deste modo? Eis que teu pai e eu, em aflição mental, estivemos à tua procura." Jesus respondeu: "Por que tivestes de ir à minha procura? Não sabíeis que eu tenho de estar na casa de meu Pai?" Por certo, o lugar lógico onde encontrar o Filho de Deus era o templo, onde ele podia receber instrução bíblica. Maria "guardava cuidadosamente todas essas declarações no coração". — Lu 2:41-51.

Este menino de 12 anos, Jesus, demonstrava um brilhante conhecimento para a sua idade. "Todos os que o escutavam ficavam constantemente pasmados com o seu entendimento e suas respostas." (Lu 2:47) O conhecimento e entendimento das Escrituras que Jesus tinha refletiam o excelente treinamento recebido dos pais. Tanto Maria como José devem ter sido bem diligentes em ensinar e treinar o menino, criando-o "na disciplina e na regulação mental de Jeová" e cultivando nele apreço pelo costume de comparecer todo sábado à sinagoga. — Lu 4:16; Ef 6:4.

Respeitada e Amada por Jesus. Depois do seu batismo, Jesus não mostrou favoritismo especial para com Maria; não a chamava de "mãe", mas simplesmente de "mulher". (Jo 2:4; 19:26) Em nenhum sentido era isso uma expressão de desrespeito, como seria entendido no uso atual em português. Por exemplo, em alemão, a palavra usada deste modo significa senhora. Maria era mãe de Jesus segundo a carne; mas, desde que ele fora gerado pelo espírito santo por ocasião do seu batismo, ele era primariamente Filho de Deus, sua "mãe" sendo "a Jerusalém de cima". (Gál 4:26) Jesus enfatizou isso quando Maria e os outros filhos dela, em certa ocasião, interromperam Jesus numa sessão de ensino por pedir que viesse a eles lá fora. Jesus fez saber que, na realidade, sua mãe e parentes chegados eram os da sua família espiritual, que os assuntos espirituais tinham precedência sobre interesses carnais. — Mt 12:46-50; Mr 3:31-35; Lu 8:19-21.

Numa festa de casamento, em Caná da Galileia, quando o vinho acabou e Maria disse a Jesus: "Eles não têm vinho", ele respondeu: "Que tenho eu que ver contigo, mulher? Minha hora não chegou ainda." (Jo 2:1-4) Jesus usou ali uma forma antiga de pergunta, que ocorre várias vezes nas Escrituras Hebraicas (Jos 22:24; Jz 11:12; 2Sa 16:10; 19:22; 1Rs 17:18; 2Rs 3:13; 2Cr 35:21; Os 14:8) e seis vezes nas Escrituras Gregas. (Mt 8:29; Mr 1:24; 5:7; Lu 4:34; 8:28; Jo 2:4) Traduzida literalmente, a pergunta é: "O que para mim e para ti?" que significa: "O que há de comum entre mim e ti?" ou: "Que tenho eu contigo?" ou: "Que tenho eu que ver contigo?" Em cada caso em que ocorre, a pergunta indica objeção à coisa sugerida, proposta ou suspeitada. Portanto, Jesus, amorosamente, formulou sua bondosa repreensão desta forma, indicando à sua mãe que recebia orientação não dela, mas da Autoridade Suprema, que o havia enviado. (1Co 11:3) A natureza sensitiva e humilde de Maria logo captou o ponto em questão e aceitou a correção. Recuando e deixando Jesus tomar a dianteira, ela observou para os ajudantes: "O que ele vos disser, fazei." — Jo 2:5.

Maria estava parada junto à estaca de tortura quando Jesus foi pregado nela. Para ela, Jesus era mais do que apenas um filho amado, ele era o Messias, seu Senhor e Salvador, o Filho de Deus. Pelo visto, Maria já era viúva. Por conseguinte, Jesus, como primogênito na família de José, desincumbiu-se da sua responsabilidade por pedir que o apóstolo João, provavelmente seu primo, levasse Maria para sua casa e cuidasse dela como se fosse sua própria mãe. (Jo 19:26, 27) Por que não a confiou Jesus a um dos seus próprios meios-irmãos? Não se declara que algum deles estivesse presente. Além disso, ainda não eram crentes, e Jesus considerava a relação espiritual mais importante do que a carnal. — Jo 7:5; Mt 12:46-50.

Discípula Fiel. A última menção bíblica de Maria mostra que ela era mulher de fé e de devoção, ainda intimamente associada com outros fiéis após a ascensão de Jesus. Os 11 apóstolos, Maria e outros estavam reunidos num quarto de andar superior, e, "de comum acordo, todos eles persistiam em oração". — At 1:13, 14.

2. Maria, irmã de Marta e Lázaro. Em Betânia, a umas 2 milhas romanas (2,8 km) do monte do Templo em Jerusalém, e na encosta oriental do monte das Oliveiras, Jesus visitava a casa destes amigos, pelos quais tinha afeição especial. (Jo 11:18) Durante uma visita de Jesus, no terceiro ano do seu ministério, Marta, na sua determinação de ser boa anfitriã, preocupou-se demais com o conforto físico de Jesus. Maria, por outro lado, mostrou um tipo diferente de hospitalidade. Ela 'se assentou aos pés do Senhor e escutou as palavras dele'. Quando Marta se queixou de que sua irmã não a estava ajudando, Jesus elogiou Maria, dizendo: "Maria, por sua parte, escolheu a boa porção, e esta não lhe será tirada." — Lu 10:38-42.

Vê Lázaro Ser Ressuscitado. Alguns meses depois da mencionada visita à casa deles, Lázaro adoeceu, chegando à beira da morte. De modo que Maria e Marta mandaram avisar Jesus, que provavelmente se encontrava em algum lugar ao L do Jordão, na Pereia. Todavia, quando Jesus finalmente chegou, Lázaro já estava morto há quatro dias. Com a notícia da vinda de Jesus, Marta foi rapidamente ao seu encontro para cumprimentá-lo, ao passo que Maria "ficou sentada em casa". Foi só quando Marta retornou dos arredores da aldeia e sussurrou à sua irmã pesarosa: "O Instrutor está presente e te chama", que Maria foi apressadamente ao encontro dele. Soluçou aos pés dele: "Senhor, se tivesses estado aqui, meu irmão não teria morrido." Ela usou exatamente as mesmas palavras que sua irmã Marta usara antes quando foi ao encontro de Jesus. Vendo as lágrimas de Maria e dos judeus com ela, o Amo ficou comovido e chorou. Depois de Jesus ter realizado o estupendo milagre da ressurreição de Lázaro dentre os mortos, "muitos dos judeus, que tinham vindo a Maria [para consolá-la] . . . depositaram fé nele". — Jo 11:1-45.

Unge Jesus com Óleo. Cinco dias antes da última Páscoa celebrada por Jesus, ele e seus discípulos eram novamente hóspedes em Betânia, esta vez na casa de Simão, o leproso, estando presentes também Maria e sua família. Marta servia a refeição noturna; Maria dava novamente atenção ao Filho de Deus. Enquanto Jesus estava reclinado, Maria "tomou quase meio quilo de óleo perfumado, nardo genuíno, muito dispendioso" (valendo cerca de um ano de salário), e o derramou sobre a cabeça e os pés dele. Embora na época, em geral, não fosse bem avaliado este ato de amor e consideração para com Jesus, na realidade significava a preparação para a morte e o sepultamento de Jesus então já próximos. Como antes, a expressão de amor de Maria foi criticada por outros, e, como antes, o amor e a devoção dela foram defendidos e muito apreciados por Jesus. "Onde quer que se pregarem estas boas novas em todo o mundo", declarou ele, "o que esta mulher fez também será contado em lembrança dela". — Mt 26:6-13; Mr 14:3-9; Jo 12:1-8.

Este incidente, a unção de Jesus por Maria, conforme relatado por Mateus, Marcos e João, não deve ser confundido com a unção mencionada em Lucas 7:36-50. Estes dois eventos têm similaridades, mas há diferenças. O primeiro evento, registrado por Lucas, ocorreu no distrito setentrional da Galileia; o último, no sul, em Betânia, na Judeia. O anterior ocorreu no lar dum fariseu; o posterior, no de Simão, o leproso. A anterior unção fora feita por uma mulher cujo nome não se dá, publicamente conhecida como "pecadora", provavelmente prostituta; a posterior, foi feita por Maria, irmã de Marta. Houve também uma diferença de mais de um ano entre os dois eventos.

Alguns críticos queixam-se de que João contradiz Mateus e Marcos ao dizer que o perfume foi derramado sobre os pés de Jesus, em vez de sobre a cabeça dele. (Mt 26:7; Mr 14:3; Jo 12:3) Comentando Mateus 26:7, Albert Barnes diz: "Não existe, contudo, contradição alguma. Ela provavelmente o derramou tanto sobre a cabeça como sobre os pés dele. Tendo Mateus e Marcos registrado o derramamento sobre a cabeça, João, que escreveu seu evangelho em parte para registrar os eventos por eles omitidos, relata que o óleo também foi derramado sobre os pés do Salvador. Derramar óleo sobre a cabeça era comum. Derramá-lo sobre os pés era um ato de notável humildade e apego ao Salvador, e, por conseguinte, merecia ser especialmente registrado." — Barnes' Notes on the New Testament (Notas sobre o Novo Testamento, de Barnes), 1974.

3. Maria Madalena. Seu nome distintivo (que significa "De (Pertencente a) Magdala") provavelmente deriva da cidade de Magdala (veja MAGADÃ), na margem ocidental do mar da Galileia, a cerca de meio caminho entre Cafarnaum e Tiberíades. Não há registro de que Jesus alguma vez visitasse esta cidade, embora passasse muito tempo na região circunvizinha. Tampouco há certeza de se tratar da cidade natal ou de residência de Maria. Visto que Lucas se refere a ela como "Maria, a chamada Madalena", alguns acham que o apelido sugere algo especial ou peculiar. — Lu 8:2.

Jesus expulsou sete demônios de Maria Madalena, motivo suficiente para ela depositar fé nele como o Messias e para ela apoiar esta fé com obras notáveis de devoção e serviço. A primeira menção dela ocorre no relato sobre o segundo ano de pregação de Jesus, quando ele e seus apóstolos 'viajavam de cidade em cidade e de aldeia em aldeia, pregando e declarando as boas novas do reino de Deus'. Junto com Joana, esposa do encarregado de Herodes, Susana e outras mulheres, Maria Madalena continuou a ministrar as necessidades de Jesus e dos seus apóstolos com seus próprios recursos. — Lu 8:1-3.

O destaque mais proeminente de Maria Madalena ocorre com relação à morte e ressurreição de Jesus. Quando Jesus, como o Cordeiro de Deus, foi levado ao abate, ela estava entre as mulheres "que tinham acompanhado Jesus desde a Galileia, para ministrar-lhe", e estavam "observando de certa distância" Jesus pregado na estaca de tortura. Em companhia dela estavam Maria, mãe de Jesus, Salomé e também "a outra Maria" (N.º 4). — Mt 27:55, 56, 61; Mr 15:40; Jo 19:25.

Depois do sepultamento de Jesus, Maria Madalena e outras mulheres foram preparar aromas e óleo perfumado antes de começar o sábado, ao pôr do sol. Daí, após o sábado, ao clarear o dia, no pri-meiro dia da semana, Maria e as outras mulheres levaram o óleo perfumado ao túmulo. (Mt 28:1; Mr 15:47; 16:1, 2; Lu 23:55, 56; 24:1) Quando Maria viu o túmulo aberto e aparentemente vazio, ela foi depressa contar a espantosa novidade a Pedro e João, que foram correndo ao túmulo. (Jo 20:1-4) Quando Maria voltou ao túmulo, Pedro e João já haviam partido, e foi então que ela olhou para dentro e ficou surpresa de ver dois anjos trajados de branco. Ela se virou então e viu Jesus ali de pé. Pensando que fosse o jardineiro, perguntou onde estava o corpo, para que pudesse cuidar dele. Quando ele respondeu: "Maria!" revelou-se-lhe logo a identidade dele, e ela impulsivamente o abraçou, exclamando: "Rab·bó·ni!" Mas, não era então o momento para se expressar afeição terrena. Jesus estaria apenas pouco tempo com eles. Maria tinha de informar logo os outros discípulos sobre a ressurreição dele, e que Jesus ascenderia, como dissera, "para junto de meu Pai e vosso Pai, e para meu Deus e vosso Deus". — Jo 20:11-18.

4. "A outra Maria." Era a esposa de Clopas (Alfeu) (veja CLOPAS) e mãe de Tiago, o Menor, e de Josés. (Mt 27:56, 61; Jo 19:25) A tradição, embora sem nenhum apoio bíblico, diz que Clopas e José, pai adotivo de Jesus, eram irmãos. Se isto for verdade, então esta Maria era a tia de Jesus, e os filhos dela, primos dele.

Maria não somente estava entre as mulheres "que tinham acompanhado Jesus desde a Galileia, para ministrar-lhe", mas também presenciou ser ele pregado na estaca. (Mt 27:55; Mr 15:40, 41) Junto com Maria Madalena, ela permaneceu algum tempo perto do túmulo dele naquela dolorosa tarde, 14 de nisã. (Mt 27:61) No terceiro dia, as duas, e mais outras, foram ao túmulo com aromas e óleo perfumado para untar o corpo de Jesus, e, para o seu espanto, encontraram o túmulo aberto. Um anjo explicou que Cristo tinha sido levantado dentre os mortos, ordenando assim: "Ide, dizei aos discípulos dele." (Mt 28:1-7; Mr 16:1-7; Lu 24:1-10) Enquanto estavam a caminho, o ressuscitado Jesus apareceu a esta Maria e às outras mulheres. — Mt 28:8, 9.

5. Maria, mãe de João Marcos. Ela era também tia de Barnabé. (At 12:12; Col 4:10) A casa dela foi usada como lugar de reunião pela primitiva congregação cristã em Jerusalém. Seu filho Marcos estava intimamente associado com o apóstolo Pedro, que evidentemente tinha muito que ver com o desenvolvimento espiritual de Marcos, porque Pedro o chama de "Marcos, meu filho". (1Pe 5:13) Pedro, ao ser solto da prisão de Herodes, foi diretamente à casa dela, "onde muitos estavam ajuntados e orando". A casa deve ter sido bastante grande, e a presença de uma serva sugere que Maria era mulher de posses. (At 12:12-17) Visto que a casa é mencionada como sendo dela, e não do seu marido, ela provavelmente era viúva. — At 12:12.

6. Maria, de Roma. Paulo enviou-lhe saudações na sua carta aos romanos e a elogiou pelos seus "muitos labores" a favor da congregação romana. — Ro 16:6.

MARIDO. O homem casado é indicado pelo termo hebraico 'ish (homem) e pelo termo grego a·nér (pessoa do sexo masculino). (Os 2:16 n; Ro 7:2, Int) Outros termos hebraicos diversamente usados com referência a um marido, ou esposo, são 'a·dhóhn (senhor), bá·ʽal (dono; amo) e ré·aʽ (companheiro; amigo). (Gên 18:12; 20:3; Je 3:20) Em Israel, o homem que era noivo também era chamado de "marido", e a moça, de "esposa". — De 22:23, 24; Mt 1:18-20.

O homem ficava noivo duma mulher, ou contratava um futuro casamento, por pagar ao pai ou aos guardiães dela o preço de noiva ou o dinheiro da compra. (Êx 22:16, 17) Ela se tornava então propriedade dele. (Êx 20:17) A palavra bá·ʽal, que significa "dono, amo", era aplicada a ele, e a mulher era chamada de beʽu·láh, que significa "possuída como esposa". (Gên 20:3; De 22:22; Is 62:4) Jeová disse à antiga nação de Israel: "Eu mesmo me tornei dono marital [uma forma de bá·ʽal] de vós." — Je 3:14; Is 62:4, 5; veja HERANÇA (Período da Lei).

Nos tempos patriarcais, o marido servia de sacerdote e juiz na família, e em todas as Escrituras, o marido e pai quase que invariavelmente recebia profundo respeito. — Gên 31:31, 32; Jó 1:5; 1Pe 3:5, 6; compare isso com De 21:18-21; Est 1:10-21.

Chefia. O homem, ao se casar, coloca a mulher sob uma nova lei, a "lei de seu marido", segundo a qual o marido pode estabelecer regras e regulamentos para a sua família. (Ro 7:2, 3) Torna-se para ela cabeça, a quem ela deve estar sujeita. (Ef 5:21-24, 33) Trata-se duma chefia relativa, em vista da chefia superior de Deus e de Cristo. — 1Co 11:3.

O marido, embora seja o cabeça da casa, não obstante, tem a obrigação de render à esposa os direitos conjugais, as relações sexuais, porque "o marido não exerce autoridade sobre o seu próprio corpo, mas sim a sua esposa". (1Co 7:3-5) Ele é também responsável pelo bem-estar espiritual e material da família. — Ef 6:4; 1Ti 5:8.

A chefia do marido lhe impõe uma pesada responsabilidade. Embora seja o cabeça da esposa, tem de reconhecer que ela é preciosa aos olhos de Deus, especialmente quando é cristã. Deve amá-la como ama a si mesmo, porque ela é "uma só carne" com ele. — Gên 2:24; Mt 19:4-6; Ef 5:28, 33.

Os maridos devem ter o mesmo cuidado amoroso para com sua esposa como Cristo tem para com a congregação. (Ef 5:25, 28-30, 33) Devem reconhecer que a esposa é "um vaso mais fraco", atribuindo-lhe honra e tomando em consideração sua constituição física e emocional, e suas vicissitudes. Isto é especialmente importante quando o casal é cristão, co-herdeiros "do favor imerecido da vida", para que as orações do marido não sejam impedidas. (1Pe 3:7) Mesmo que a esposa não seja crente, isto não é desculpa para o marido divorciar-se ou separar-se dela. Antes, deve morar com ela, se ela estiver disposta a isso, e dar-se conta de que pode ajudá-la a tornar-se crente, e também empenhar-se pela salvação dos filhos. — 1Co 7:12, 14, 16; veja CASAMENTO; FAMÍLIA; PAI.

Divórcio. Sob a Lei mosaica, o homem podia divorciar-se da esposa, mas ela não podia divorciar-se dele. Requeria-se dele dar-lhe por escrito um certificado de divórcio. (De 24:1-4) Jesus Cristo mostrou que tal arranjo de divórcio em Israel fora feito como concessão, em vista da dureza do coração deles. (Mt 19:8) No entanto, se o homem tivesse seduzido uma virgem que não era noiva, ela teria de tornar-se esposa dele (a menos que o pai se negasse a dá-la a ele), e não se lhe permitiria divorciar-se dela. — De 22:28, 29.

Tanto as Escrituras Hebraicas como as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs enfatizam que o marido deve limitar as relações sexuais ao cônjuge (Pr 5:15-20) e que o casamento tem de ser mantido honroso, porque Deus julgará os fornicadores e os adúlteros. (He 13:4) Durante os tempos patriarcais e sob a Lei, praticava-se a poligamia e o concubinato por concessão de Jeová, mas, no arranjo cristão, o homem pode ter apenas uma só esposa viva. (Gên 25:5, 6; 29:18-28; De 21:15-17; Mt 19:5; Ro 7:2, 3; 1Ti 3:2) A única base cristã para um divórcio e para um novo casamento é a "fornicação". — Mt 19:9; veja FORNICAÇÃO.

Uso Ilustrativo. Visto que a antiga nação de Israel estava vinculada a Jeová por meio do pacto da Lei, Deus era o "dono marital" dela. (Je 3:14) O apóstolo Paulo fala de Jeová como o Pai dos cristãos ungidos, seus filhos espirituais, e da "Jerusalém de cima" como a mãe deles, indicando que Jeová se considera marido desta Jerusalém. — Gál 4:6, 7, 26; compare isso com Is 54:5.

Jesus Cristo é encarado como Marido da congregação cristã. (Ef 5:22, 23; Re 19:7; 21:2) Esta analogia salienta tanto a sua chefia como o seu cuidado amoroso para com a congregação. Ele depôs a sua própria vida a favor da sua noiva, e continua a alimentá-la e a prezá-la.

MÁRMORE. Calcário (carbonato de cálcio) cristalizado de fina granulação que varia de cor, textura e estrutura recristalizada, suscetível de alto polimento. Sua cor varia desde o branco puro até diversos matizes de cinza, marrom, amarelo, vermelho, verde e negro. As faixas ou veios se devem a impurezas de óxidos metálicos e a material carbonático.

Evidentemente, não havia mármore na Palestina. O Líbano produzia uma variedade de mármores; mas na ilha de Paros, no mar Egeu, e na Arábia, encontravam-se os espécimes mais finos. A donzela sulamita, ao descrever às damas de companhia na corte do Rei Salomão o seu amado companheiro, disse: "Suas pernas são colunas de mármore, fundadas em pedestais de encaixe de ouro refinado." (Cân 5:15) O palácio persa em Susã, nos dias da Rainha Ester, tinha colunas de mármore, e seu pavimento era em parte de mármore negro. (Est 1:6) O mármore também está alistado como uma das preciosas mercadorias dos "comerciantes viajantes da terra" que choram a queda de Babilônia, a Grande, na destruição. — Re 18:11, 12.

Não há certeza de Salomão ter usado mármore nas suas construções. Josefo diz que se usara "mármore branco", mas a palavra hebraica costumeiramente traduzida por "mármore", em 1 Crônicas 29:2, provavelmente indica "alabastro", e é assim vertida em algumas traduções. (BJ, NM; Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], VIII, 64 [iii, 2]) Isto concorda com A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament (Léxico Hebraico e Inglês do Velho Testamento), de Brown, Driver e Briggs (1980, p. 1010), e o Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros (Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento), de Koehler e Baumgartner (Leiden, 1958, p. 966).

MAR ORIENTAL. Veja MAR SALGADO.

MAROTE [duma raiz que significa "ser amargo"]. Cidade mencionada pelo profeta Miqueias na sua profecia que predizia a punição de Jerusalém e Judá por Jeová. (Miq 1:12) Não é possível determinar sua localização; alguns a identificariam com a Maarate de Josué 15:59.

MARROM. Veja CORES.

MAR SALGADO. Um dos nomes bíblicos do grande lago, ou mar, agora geralmente conhecido como Mar Morto. O Mar Salgado (Yam ha-Melah) constitui a extremidade meridional do rio Jordão.

Penhascos calcários na costa oeste do Mar Salgado.

Nome. O primeiro e mais frequente nome deste mar na Bíblia, "Mar Salgado", é bastante apropriado, visto que se trata de uma das mais salgadas massas de água na Terra. (Gên 14:3; Núm 34:3, 12; Jos 15:2, 5) É também chamado de mar do Arabá (De 4:49; 2Rs 14:25), ficando no enorme abatimento tectônico do qual o Arabá faz parte. Às vezes porém, o nome "Mar Salgado" é acrescentado após "mar do Arabá", como que para explicar exatamente a que massa de água este último nome se refere. (De 3:17; Jos 3:16; 12:3) O Mar Salgado encontrava-se na fronteira L da Terra da Promessa e era chamado de "mar oriental", diferenciando-o assim do "mar [Mediterrâneo] ocidental". (Ez 47:18; Jl 2:20; Za 14:8) Josefo, que sabia que ocasionalmente surgiam neste mar grandes fragmentos de betume, ou asfalto, chamava-o de lago Asfaltite. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], I, 657 [xxxiii, 5]; IV, 479 [viii, 4]) Pelo visto, foi só no segundo século EC que passou a ser chamado de Mar Morto. O nome árabe é Bahr Lut, "mar de Ló".

Descrição Física. O Mar Salgado é oblongo, tendo uns 15 km de largura e uns 75 km de comprimento, sendo que o comprimento varia um pouco segundo as estações. Seu contorno é interrompido por uma grande península chamada Lisan (a língua), que se estende do lado SE. Esta península divide agora o mar em duas partes, embora haja um canal entre as duas partes. A parte encerrada ao S de Lisan é bastante rasa, ao passo que a parte principal do mar, ao N, atinge uma profundidade de uns 400 m. A superfície da água fica a aproximadamente 400 m abaixo do nível do mar Mediterrâneo, o que torna este o ponto mais baixo na terra.

A margem L (ao N de Lisan) consiste na maior parte em penhascos de arenito que se elevam ingrememente até o planalto de Moabe. Diversos desfiladeiros, dos quais o mais destacado é o do Árnon, cortam esses montes calvos e despejam água no mar. Ao L e ao S da península há uma planície bem regada por correntes. A extremidade S do mar é um salgadio plano. No lado O do mar, os penhascos calcários não são tão íngremes como os do lado L. Esses montes da Judeia são mais em forma de terraços, e recedem, mas são bem desolados, visto que não são atravessados por correntes permanentes que fluem para o mar. A praia e as encostas perto do litoral permitem a viagem ao longo do lado O. Numa meseta elevada, defronte de Lisan, fica Massada, a fortaleza que Herodes reforçou e onde, em 73 EC, os romanos derrotaram os últimos judeus que resistiam ao exército romano. Mais ao norte encontra-se o oásis de En-Gedi. Na extremidade N, o Jordão desemboca no mar, misturando sua água doce com a água extremamente salgada do mar.

Água. A água deste mar é ímpar no sentido de que é cerca de nove vezes mais salgada do que a dos oceanos. O Mar Salgado não tem saída, de modo que a maior parte da água que entra nele evapora no calor intenso, deixando ficar mais sais minerais. A concentração de sal é tão grande, que nenhum tipo de peixe, nem mesmo variedades de água salgada, conseguem viver nele; os poucos peixes na água salobra onde a água doce se mistura com a água salgada morrem se forem arrastados para dentro do mar propriamente dito. Isto destaca o significado da descrição feita por Ezequiel duma torrente procedente do templo de Jeová, desaguando dentro do "mar oriental" e curando a parte superior dele, de modo que abunda de peixes como o mar Mediterrâneo e pode sustentar uma florescente indústria pesqueira. (Ez 47:8-10, 18) A grande densidade da água faz objetos flutuar facilmente, e isso contribui para uma superfície lisa, porque a água não é agitada por brisas leves.

Sodoma e Gomorra. Acredita-se, em geral, que Sodoma e Gomorra ficavam perto da extremidade meridional do Mar Salgado. Os reis daquelas cidades estavam entre os que batalharam na "Baixada de Sidim, isto é, o Mar Salgado", e a fraseologia disso sugere que a baixada de Sidim ficou coberta pelo Mar Salgado. (Gên 14:3) A região de Sodoma e Gomorra, onde Ló se estabelecera, era 'bem regada, semelhante ao jardim de Jeová'. (Gên 13:10-12) Mesmo hoje, na planície ao longo da margem SE, há abundância de vegetação, e ali podem ser cultivados trigo, cevada, tâmaras e uvas. As grandes quantidades de betume e de sal, especialmente nesta parte meridional, também se ajustam ao relato bíblico sobre Sodoma e Gomorra. — Gên 14:10; 19:24-26.

MARSENA. Um dos sete príncipes consultados por Assuero sobre a recusa de Vasti de obedecer. — Est 1:14.

MARTA. Judia, irmã de Lázaro e de Maria de Betânia. (Jo 11:1, 2) Evidentemente, Cristo visitava com frequência a casa deles, quando estava nas proximidades de Jerusalém. Existiam vínculos de afeição entre ele e estes três, porque se diz especificamente: "Ora, Jesus amava a Marta, e a sua irmã, e a Lázaro." — Jo 11:5.

Lucas relata que, quando Jesus entrou "em certa aldeia", "certa mulher, de nome Marta, recebeu-o como hóspede em sua casa". (Lu 10:38) À base de Mateus 26:6, Marcos 14:3 e João 12:1-3, apresentou-se a ideia de que Marta era a esposa, ou a viúva, ou mesmo a filha de Simão, o leproso. Todavia, as Escrituras não fazem declarações específicas em apoio de tais conceitos.

Em certa ocasião, quando Jesus visitou a casa de Lázaro, Maria e Marta, Maria 'se assentou aos pés do Senhor e escutava a palavra dele', ao passo que Marta "estava desatenta por cuidar de muitos deveres". Marta procurou obter a ajuda de Maria, dizendo: "Senhor, não te importa que minha irmã me deixou sozinha para cuidar das coisas? Dize-lhe, portanto, que venha ajudar-me." Marta, obviamente, preocupava-se em satisfazer as necessidades materiais de Jesus Cristo. Mas Cristo salientou então o valor superior das coisas espirituais e deu-lhe uma bondosa repreensão, dizendo: "Marta, Marta, estás ansiosa e perturbada com muitas coisas. Poucas coisas, porém, são necessárias, ou apenas uma. Maria, por sua parte, escolheu a boa porção, e esta não lhe será tirada." (Lu 10:38-42) Cristo se teria contentado com apenas um tipo de alimento, se isso contribuísse para que também Marta tirasse maior proveito do seu ensino.

Embora talvez pareça que Marta se preocupava demais com coisas materiais, não se deve concluir que lhe faltava interesse em assuntos espirituais. Após a morte de Lázaro, foi Marta quem foi ao encontro de Jesus quando ele veio a Betânia, ao passo que Maria, de começo, ficou sentada em casa (possivelmente de pesar ou por causa dos muitos amigos visitantes). Marta mostrou fé em Jesus Cristo ao dizer que Lázaro não teria morrido se Jesus tivesse estado presente. Ela reconheceu também: "Sei que ele se levantará na ressurreição, no último dia", mostrando que cria na ressurreição. Durante aquela palestra, Jesus explicou que ele é "a ressurreição e a vida", salientando que aquele que morresse com fé nele voltaria a viver. Quando Cristo perguntou a Marta: "Crês isso?" ela mostrou claramente sua fé por responder: "Sim, Senhor; tenho crido que tu és o Cristo, o Filho de Deus, Aquele que vem ao mundo." (Jo 11:19-27) Naturalmente, isto não exclui a possibilidade de ela ter tido algumas dúvidas quanto ao que Jesus podia fazer ou faria no caso do falecido irmão dela. (Veja a atitude dos apóstolos relatada em Lu 24:5-11.) Junto ao túmulo de Lázaro, quando Cristo ordenou que se retirasse a pedra, Marta disse: "Senhor, ele já deve estar cheirando, porque já faz quatro dias." Mas, Jesus perguntou em resposta: "Não te disse eu que, se cresses, verias a glória de Deus?" Esta ela presenciou quando seu irmão foi ressuscitado. — Jo 11:39-44.

Após a ressurreição de Lázaro, Cristo partiu. Mais tarde, ele retornou a Betânia e se reuniu com outros, inclusive Marta, Maria e Lázaro, no lar de Simão, o leproso. Preparara-se uma refeição noturna, e novamente "Marta ministrava". Lázaro estava à mesa, e foi nesta ocasião que Maria ungiu Jesus com um caro óleo perfumado. (Jo 12:1-8; Mt 26:6-13; Mr 14:3-9) As Escrituras nada dizem a respeito dos eventos subsequentes na vida de Marta, nem sobre o tempo e as circunstâncias da sua morte.

MARTELO. Instrumento usado para bater e cravar; malho. Martelos eram usados para cravar pregos (Je 10:4) e estacas de tenda (Jz 4:21), nas pedreiras, para partir pedras por repetidas vezes martelá-las, bem como para modelar e lavrar pedras (1Rs 6:7), e para moldar metais, como na fabricação de ídolos. — Is 41:7; 44:12.

Os diversos materiais usados para fabricar cabeças de martelo incluíam pedra, metal e madeira. É provável que o martelo, ou malho, usado por Jael para cravar a estaca de tenda nas têmporas de Sísera fosse de madeira. — Jz 4:21; 5:26.

Em sentido figurado, a palavra do julgamento de Jeová é comparada a um malho que despedaça o rochedo. (Je 23:29) Também, Babilônia, na mão de Jeová, era como um malho, destroçando nações e reinos. — Je 50:23; veja Je 25:8, 9, 17-26.

MARUJO. Alguém que navega ou ajuda no manejo dum navio; marinheiro ou marítimo. (1Rs 9:26, 27; Ez 27:8, 9; Re 18:17-19) A vida dos marujos da antiguidade era perigosa. No mar assolado por tempestades, eles eram praticamente indefesos. O salmista escreveu: "Por causa da calamidade, a própria alma deles se está dissolvendo. Rodopiam e cambaleiam como um bêbedo, e até mesmo toda a sua sabedoria se mostra confusa. E na sua aflição começam a clamar a Jeová." — Sal 107:26-28.

Atos 27:15-19 contém uma descrição vívida das medidas adotadas por marujos durante uma tormenta. O bote que era rebocado e evidentemente servia também de salva-vidas, quando necessário, era içado a bordo. Acessórios, possivelmente cordas e correias, foram usados para cingir a nau, isto é, foram passados em volta do casco do navio e apertados no convés. Arriaram os aparelhos. Isto talvez signifique que reduziram a vela grande. Objetos foram lançados ao mar para aliviar o navio, aumentando assim a flutuabilidade dele. — Compare isso com Jon 1:5; At 27:38; veja NAVIO.

MAR VERMELHO. A massa de água que separa o nordeste da África da península da Arábia; inclui os dois braços conhecidos como golfo de Suez e golfo de ʽAqaba (ou Acaba). O Mar Vermelho, conforme o termo é usado agora, tem uns 2.250 km de comprimento, tem a largura máxima de uns 354 km e uma profundidade média de cerca de 610 m. Faz parte da grande falha geológica conhecida como Vale de Abatimento Tectônico, ou Rift Valley. Por causa da rápida evaporação, a água deste mar é bastante salgada. Ventos fortes, mudanças rápidas na direção do vento e a presença de grandes recifes tornam perigoso pilotar navios no Mar Vermelho. Junto à costa oriental há cordilheiras altas, ao passo que planaltos rochosos e colinas baixas ocupam a costa ocidental.

Há bons motivos para se entender que as expressões nas línguas originais vertidas por "Mar Vermelho" se aplicam ao Mar Vermelho em geral ou a qualquer dos seus braços setentrionais. (Êx 10:19; 13:18; Núm 33:10, 11; Jz 11:16; At 7:36) Foram as águas do Mar Vermelho que Jeová partiu milagrosamente para que os israelitas o atravessassem em terra seca, mas ele afogou Faraó e suas forças militares que os perseguiam. (Êx 14:21–15:22; De 11:4; Jos 2:10; 4:23; 24:6; Ne 9:9; Sal 106:7, 9, 22; 136:13, 15) As passagens bíblicas que contam este incidente usam a expressão hebraica yam (mar) ou yam-súf (mar de juncos, ou canas). À base do sentido literal de yam-súf, certos peritos argumentaram que os israelitas atravessaram um mero lugar pantanoso, tal como a região dos lagos Amargos, não o Mar Vermelho (principalmente não o braço ocidental, o golfo de Suez, onde outros creem que provavelmente se fez a travessia). Todavia, deve-se notar que as águas eram suficientes para cobrir as forças militares de Faraó. (Êx 14:28, 29) Isto teria sido impossível num mero pântano. Também, Atos 7:36 e Hebreus 11:29 excluem um simples brejo, porque estes textos mencionam o mesmo incidente e usam a expressão grega e·ry·thrá thá·las·sa, que significa "Mar Vermelho". (Veja ÊXODO.) O historiador Heródoto (do quinto século AEC) usou a mesma expressão grega para se referir, não a um pântano ou a uma insignificante massa de água, mas ao "oceano Índico, no qual o Mar Vermelho" se encontra. — A Greek-English Lexicon (Léxico Grego-Inglês), de H. G. Liddell e R. Scott, revisado por H. Jones, Oxford, 1968, p. 693; veja PI-HAIROTE.

Na pronúncia de ruína para Edom, descreve-se o clamor resultante da calamidade sofrida por Edom como audível junto ao Mar Vermelho. (Je 49:21) Isto é compreensível, visto que o território edomita, na sua extremidade S, beirava o Mar Vermelho (1Rs 9:26), quer dizer, seu braço NE, o golfo de ʽAqaba. A fronteira de Israel também se estendia até este ponto. — Êx 23:31.

MÁS. Descendente de Sem através de Arã. (Gên 10:22, 23; 1Cr 1:17, Sy e seis manuscritos hebr.) Em 1 Crônicas 1:17, o texto massorético reza "Meseque" em vez de "Más". Todavia, este é provavelmente um erro de escriba, visto que Meseque é alistado como "filho" de Jafé. — Gên 10:2; 1Cr 1:5.

Alguns relacionam Más e seus descendentes com Mons Masius, uma região montanhosa na Mesopotâmia setentrional mencionada pelo geógrafo grego Estrabão. (Geography [Geografia], 16, I, 23) Outros associam Más com uma parte do deserto siro-arábico chamado de "(país de) Más" nos anais assírios, e descrito como "o deserto em que mora a sede sufocante, onde não há nem mesmo pássaros no céu e onde nem jumentos selvagens (nem) gazelas pastam". — Arqueologia do Velho Testamento, por Merrill F. Unger, 1985, p. 50, Imprensa Batista Regular; Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. B. Pritchard, 1974, p. 299.

MASAL. Cidade de Aser, designada aos gersonitas; parece ser nome alternativo para Misal. (Jos 21:27, 30; 1Cr 6:71, 74) Desconhece-se sua localização exata.

MASEIAS [Jah É Refúgio]. Antepassado de Baruque, associado de Jeremias, e de Seraías, oficial intendente. — Je 32:12; 51:59.

MASQUIL. Esta palavra ocorre no cabeçalho de 13 salmos (32, 42, 44, 45, 52, 53, 54, 55, 74, 78, 88, 89, 142) e possivelmente significa "poema contemplativo". Todavia, por ser incerto o significado desta palavra hebraica, muitas versões a deixam sem tradução. Uma chave para o seu sentido talvez seja indicada por uma palavra de forma similar em outros lugares traduzida por 'agir com circunspeção', 'agir com discrição', 'ter consideração', 'ter perspicácia', e assim por diante. — 1Sa 18:14, 15; 2Cr 30:22; Sal 41:1; 53:2.

MASRECA. Aparentemente lugar de residência de Samlá, rei edomita. (Gên 36:31, 36; 1Cr 1:43, 47) O nome Masreca talvez esteja preservado no monte que os árabes chamam de Jebel el-Mushraq, situado a uns 50 km ao SO de Maʽan. Eusébio situava Masreca mais ao N, mais perto do Mar Morto.

MASSA. Descendente de Abraão através de Ismael. (Gên 25:12-14; 1Cr 1:29, 30) Os descendentes de Massa provavelmente se estabeleceram em alguma parte do N da Arábia. Nos anais de Tiglate-Pileser III, Mas'a (a bíblica Massa?) é mencionada junto com Tema, e com outros lugares no N da Arábia. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 283) Massa tem sido relacionada com a Ma·sa·noi, situada pelo geógrafo grego Ptolomeu (do segundo século EC) ao NE de "Dumá" (a região de Dumat al-Ghandal no N da Arábia?).

A palavra hebraica mas·sá' encontra-se também em Provérbios 30:1 (com o artigo definido ha) e em Provérbios 31:1 (sem artigo). Isto tem dado margem às traduções 'Agur, filho de Jaque, de Massa', e 'Lamuel, rei de Massa'. (Veja ALA, BJ, MC, PIB nas variantes de tradução.) Todavia, Agur e Lemuel, evidentemente, eram israelitas, e, portanto, mas·sá' é apropriadamente traduzido "oráculo" (Al; VB), "declaração" (Yg) e "mensagem ponderosa" (NM; compare Pr 30:5, 9; 31:30 com Sal 12:6; Ro 3:1, 2).

MASSÁ [Teste; Prova]. Um dos nomes do lugar perto de Refidim, onde os israelitas receberam um milagroso suprimento de água. Moisés e alguns dos anciãos de Israel, conforme mandados por Jeová, foram à rocha em Horebe. Moisés golpeou ali a rocha. A água que começou a sair fluiu como rio ali pelo ermo. Subsequentemente, Moisés chamou o lugar de Massá (que significa "Teste; Prova"), porque os israelitas haviam posto Jeová à prova com resmungos sem fé, e por causa da altercação deles, ele o chamou de Meribá (que significa "Altercação"). — Êx 17:1-7; Sal 105:41.

Pouco antes de morrer, Moisés advertiu Israel a não pôr Jeová à prova, assim como fizeram em Massá. (De 6:16; veja também De 9:22.) Daí, abençoando Israel, mencionou novamente este acontecimento, indicando que resultara em testar Levi. (De 33:8) Neste caso, Levi talvez se refira aos cabeças da tribo, isto é, Moisés e Arão.

Mais tarde, o salmista admoestou os israelitas a não endurecer o coração assim como fizera a geração que peregrinara no ermo. Sua referência a Meribá e Massá evidentemente aludia aos resmungos de Israel por água, em Refidim, incidente que era representativo de seu proceder sem fé durante todo o período de 40 anos. (Sal 95:8-11) Esta parece ser a ideia transmitida pela citação das palavras do salmista (da Septuaginta grega), encontrada no capítulo 3 de Hebreus: "Não endureçais os vossos corações como na ocasião em que se causou ira amarga [Meribá], como no dia em que se fez a prova [Massá] no ermo, em que os vossos antepassados me submeteram a uma prova, com uma provação, e, no entanto, tinham visto as minhas obras por quarenta anos [literalmente: "e viram minhas obras quarenta anos"]." (He 3:8, 9) Tanto o Salmo 95:8 como Hebreus 3:8 talvez também incluam os resmungos posteriores por água, na Meribá da região de Cades. — Núm 20:1-13.

MASSA LÊVEDA. Um pouco de massa reservada por um dia, ou mais, para que azede ou fermente. O termo hebraico se'ór se refere a tal massa lêveda e significa "massa fermentada ou levedada". A massa lêveda prontamente fermenta as novas massas a que é acrescentada.

Os israelitas usavam a massa lêveda para fazer pão levedado. O punhado de massa guardado de anterior cozimento geralmente era dissolvido em água na amassadeira antes de se acrescentar farinha, ou talvez fosse posta na farinha e então amassada junto. Este último processo parece ser o mencionado por Jesus Cristo ao dizer: "O reino dos céus é semelhante ao fermento que certa mulher tomou e escondeu em três grandes medidas de farinha, até que a massa inteira ficou levedada." (Mt 13:33; Lu 13:20, 21) Embora não houvesse evidência direta, sugeriu-se que os judeus usavam também borra de vinho como fermento.

As ofertas de cereais, de Israel, apresentadas por fogo a Jeová, não deviam ser feitas com massa lêveda. (Le 2:11) Também, ordenou-se expressamente aos israelitas a não terem massa lêveda (neste caso um evidente símbolo de corrupção e pecado) na sua casa ou dentro dos limites do seu território, durante os sete dias da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados. (Êx 12:15; 13:7; De 16:4) Quem comesse algo levedado neste período devia 'ser decepado da assembleia de Israel'. — Êx 12:19.

Também no antigo Egito era costumeiro, ao cozer pão, reservar um pouco da massa, a ser usada para levedar a massa nova. Mesmo hoje, ao terminar de amassar a massa, algumas pessoas no Chipre, por exemplo, guardam um pouco da massa num lugar tépido. Depois de 36 a 48 horas, pode ser usada para fermentar toda uma massa nova.

Paulo talvez pensasse na massa lêveda ao instar com os coríntios: "Retirai o velho fermento [gr.: zýmen], para que sejais massa nova, conforme estiverdes livres do levedo." — 1Co 5:7; veja FERMENTO.

MATÃ [Dádiva].

1. Sacerdote de Baal, que foi morto diante dos altares na casa daquele deus falso. Isto aconteceu quando o povo, liderado por Jeoiada, sacerdote de Jeová, derrubou a casa de Baal e demoliu os altares e as imagens dele. Naquela ocasião, foi morta a usurpadora Atalia, e Jeoás foi empossado como rei de Judá. — 2Rs 11:16-21; 2Cr 23:17.

2. Pai de Sefatias, perseguidor de Jeremias. — Je 38:1, 4-6.

3. Antepassado de José, pai adotivo de Jesus Cristo. Matã talvez fosse o avô de José. — Mt 1:15, 16.

MATANÁ [Dádiva]. Um dos acampamentos de Israel entre o vale da torrente do Árnon e o território de Síon, o amorreu. (Núm 21:13-21) Khirbet el-Medeiyineh (ou: Mudaiyina), a uns 15 km ao NE de Díbon, é provisoriamente identificado com esse lugar antigo.

MATANIAS [Dádiva de Jeová].

1. Levita, filho de Hemã. Ele foi escolhido por sortes para encabeçar o nono grupo de serviço dos músicos levíticos conforme organizado por Davi. — 1Cr 25:1, 4, 8, 9, 16.

2. Levita dos filhos de Asafe e antepassado de Jaaziel. (2Cr 20:14) Talvez se trate do Matanias mencionado em 1 Crônicas 9:15 e Neemias 13:13. Pode ter sido outro Matanias, ou o representante daquela casa, mencionado em Neemias 12:8; compare isso com Neemias 11:17, 22; 12:25.

3. Levita descendente de Asafe, que ajudou na limpeza da casa de Jeová no tempo do Rei Ezequias. — 2Cr 29:12-16.

4. Filho do Rei Josias e tio do Rei Joaquim. Ele foi colocado no trono de Judá por Nabucodonosor, rei de Babilônia, que lhe mudou o nome para Zedequias. — 2Rs 24:15-17; veja ZEDEQUIAS N.º 4.

5. Israelita "dos filhos de Elão", que despediram as esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:25, 26, 44.

6. Israelita "dos filhos de Zatu", que despediram as esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:25, 27, 44.

7. Israelita "dos filhos de Paate-Moabe", que despediram as esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:25, 30, 44.

8. Israelita "dos filhos de Bani", que despediram as esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:25, 34, 37, 44.

MATATÁ [provavelmente uma forma abreviada do hebr. Matitias, que significa "Dádiva de Jeová"].

1. Homem da tribo de Judá, que era filho de Natã e neto de Davi. Ele era antepassado de Jesus, segundo a genealogia materna dele registrada por Lucas. — Lu 3:23, 31.

2. Israelita "dos filhos de Hasum", que se casaram com esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:25, 33, 44.

MATATE [provavelmente uma forma abreviada do hebr. Matitias, que significa "Dádiva de Jeová"].

1. Antepassado distante de Jesus Cristo através de Maria. Ele é chamado de "filho de Levi" e era um dos alistados no período entre Zorobabel e Davi. — Lu 3:29.

2. Antepassado mais próximo de Jesus através de Maria. Eli, o pai dela, é chamado de "filho" deste Matate, que provavelmente era o avô de Maria. — Lu 3:23, 24.

MATATIAS [do hebr. Matitias, que significa "Dádiva de Jeová"].

1. Nome grego aplicado na Septuaginta ao levita coraíta Matitias, primogênito de Salum. — 1Cr 9:31; veja MATITIAS N.º 2.

2. Israelita "dos filhos de Bani", que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:25, 34, 37, 44.

3. Sacerdote nos dias de Joiaquim, que era cabeça da casa paterna de Joiaribe. — Ne 12:12, 19.

MATEUS [provavelmente uma forma abreviada do hebr. Matitias, que significa "Dádiva de Jeová"]. Judeu, também conhecido como Levi, que se tornou apóstolo de Jesus Cristo e escritor do Evangelho que leva seu nome. Era filho de certo Alfeu e era cobrador de impostos antes de se tornar um dos discípulos de Jesus. (Mt 10:3; Mr 2:14; veja COBRADOR DE IMPOSTOS.) As Escrituras não revelam se Levi tinha também o nome de Mateus antes de se tornar discípulo de Jesus, se o recebeu naquela ocasião ou se recebeu este nome de Jesus quando foi designado apóstolo.

Parece que, logo cedo no ministério galileu de Jesus Cristo (30 ou começo de 31 EC), ele chamou Mateus da coletoria em Cafarnaum, ou perto dali. (Mt 9:1, 9; Mr 2:1, 13, 14) 'Deixando tudo, Mateus levantou-se e seguiu Jesus.' (Lu 5:27, 28) Mateus, possivelmente para celebrar a chamada para seguir a Cristo, 'ofereceu uma grande festa de recepção', na qual estiveram presentes Jesus e seus discípulos, bem como muitos cobradores de impostos e pecadores. Isto perturbou os fariseus e os escribas, fazendo-os murmurar a respeito de Cristo comer e beber com cobradores de impostos e pecadores. — Lu 5:29, 30; Mt 9:10, 11; Mr 2:15, 16.

Mais tarde, após a Páscoa de 31 EC, Jesus escolheu os 12 apóstolos, e Mateus era um deles. (Mr 3:13-19; Lu 6:12-16) Embora a Bíblia faça diversas referências aos apóstolos como grupo, só menciona Mateus novamente por nome depois da ascensão de Cristo ao céu. Mateus viu o ressuscitado Jesus Cristo (1Co 15:3-6), recebeu instruções de despedida dele e o viu ascender ao céu. Depois disso, ele e os outros apóstolos retornaram a Jerusalém. Os apóstolos ficaram ali num quarto de andar superior, e Mateus é mencionado especificamente como estando entre eles, de modo que deve ter sido um dos cerca de 120 discípulos que receberam o espírito santo no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC. — At 1:4-15; 2:1-4.

MATEUS, BOAS NOVAS SEGUNDO. O relato inspirado sobre a vida de Jesus Cristo, sem dúvida escrito na Palestina pelo ex-cobrador de impostos Mateus, ou Levi. É o primeiro livro das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs e desde tempos antigos tem sido considerado como o primeiro Evangelho a ser escrito. O relato de Mateus começa com os antepassados humanos de Jesus, seguido pelo nascimento dele, e conclui com a comissão de Cristo dada aos seus seguidores após a ressurreição dele, de irem e 'fazerem discípulos de pessoas de todas as nações'. (Mt 28:19, 20) Portanto, abrange o período entre o nascimento de Jesus em 2 AEC e a sua reunião com os discípulos pouco antes da sua ascensão em 33 EC.

Tempo da Escrita. Subscritos que em diversos manuscritos aparecem no fim do Evangelho de Mateus (todos posteriores ao décimo século EC), dizem que o relato foi escrito por volta do oitavo ano após a ascensão de Cristo (c. 41 EC). Isto não discorda da evidência interna. Não se fazer referência ao cumprimento da profecia de Jesus a respeito da destruição de Jerusalém aponta para um tempo de composição anterior a 70 EC. (Mt 5:35; 24:16) E a expressão "até o dia de hoje" (27:8; 28:15) indica um lapso de tempo entre os eventos considerados e o tempo da escrita.

Originalmente Escrito em Hebraico. A evidência externa no sentido de que Mateus escreveu este Evangelho originalmente em hebraico remonta a Pápias de Hierápolis, do segundo século EC. Eusébio cita Pápias como declarando: "Mateus coletou os oráculos na língua hebraica." (The Ecclesiastical History [A História Eclesiástica], III, XXXIX, 16) Logo no início do terceiro século, Orígenes fez referência ao relato de Mateus, e, considerando os quatro Evangelhos, ele é citado por Eusébio como dizendo que o "primeiro foi escrito . . . segundo Mateus, que havia sido cobrador de impostos, mas que depois foi um apóstolo de Jesus Cristo, . . . no idioma hebraico". (The Ecclesiastical History, VI, XXV, 3-6) O erudito Jerônimo (do quarto e quinto século EC) escreveu na sua obra De viris inlustribus (A Respeito de Homens Ilustres), capítulo III, que Mateus "compôs um Evangelho de Cristo, na Judeia, na língua e nos caracteres hebraicos, para o benefício dos da circuncisão que tinham crido. . . . Ademais, o próprio hebraico acha-se preservado até os dias de hoje na biblioteca de Cesareia, que o mártir Panfílio tão diligentemente coletou". — Tradução do texto latino, editada por E. C. Richardson e publicada na série "Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur" (Textos e Pesquisas da História da Literatura Cristã Antiga), Leipzig, 1896, Vol. 14, pp. 8, 9.

Sugeriu-se que Mateus, depois de compilar seu relato em hebraico, talvez o traduzisse ele mesmo para o coiné, o grego comum.

Informações Exclusivas do Evangelho de Mateus. Um exame do relato de Mateus revela que mais de 40 por cento da matéria contida nele não se encontra nos outros três Evangelhos. A genealogia de Jesus apresentada por Mateus é exclusiva (Mt 1:1-16), tendo um enfoque diferente da apresentada por Lucas (Lu 3:23-38). A comparação entre as duas indica que Mateus fornece a genealogia legal através de José, pai adotivo de

DESTAQUES DE MATEUS

O relato da vida de Jesus pelo apóstolo Mateus; escrito primariamente visando os judeus, este Evangelho demonstra que Jesus é o predito Rei messiânico.

O primeiro Evangelho a ser escrito, foi provavelmente composto primeiro em hebraico, cerca de oito anos após a morte e ressurreição de Cristo.

Pormenores da vida de Jesus cumprem profecias messiânicas.

Expõe a total desconsideração deles à justiça, à misericórdia e à fidelidade. (23:23, 24; 9:11-13)

Jesus dá excelente conselho aos seus seguidores.

No Sermão do Monte, Jesus mostra por que seus discípulos seriam realmente felizes; avisa contra a fúria e exorta-os a fazerem as pazes um com o outro, e a amarem mesmo seus inimigos; fala sobre o perigo de pensamentos adúlteros; aconselha contra a hipocrisia, ensina a orar, avisa contra o materialismo e recomenda buscar primeiro o Reino de Deus e a Sua justiça; acautela seus ouvintes a não serem críticos demais, diz-lhes que devem orar constantemente, e exorta-os a se darem conta de que a estrada para a vida é apertada, e que eles devem produzir frutos excelentes. (5:1–7:27)

Jesus é sepultado; ele é ressuscitado e aparece aos seus seguidores; comissiona-os a irem e fazerem discípulos de pessoas de todas as nações. (27:57–28:20)

Jesus, ao passo que Lucas, pelo visto, apresenta a genealogia natural de Jesus. Outros incidentes mencionados apenas no relato de Mateus são: a reação de José à gravidez de Maria, o aparecimento de um anjo a José, num sonho (Mt 1:18-25), a visita dos astrólogos, a fuga para o Egito, a matança dos meninos de Belém e dos seus distritos (cap. 2), e o sonho da esposa de Pilatos a respeito de Jesus (27:19).

Pelo menos dez parábolas, ou ilustrações, encontradas no relato de Mateus não são mencionadas nos outros Evangelhos. Estas incluem quatro no capítulo 13, aquelas sobre o joio no campo, sobre o tesouro escondido, sobre "uma pérola de grande valor" e sobre a rede de arrasto. Outras ilustrações são sobre o escravo impiedoso (Mt 18:23-35), os trabalhadores no vinhedo (20:1-16), o casamento do filho do rei (22:1-14), as dez virgens (25:1-13) e os talentos (25:14-30).

Ocasionalmente, Mateus fornece pormenores suplementares. Embora a matéria do Sermão do Monte também apareça no relato de Lucas (Lu 6:17-49), o Evangelho de Mateus, neste respeito, é muito mais extensivo. (Mt 5:1–7:29) Ao passo que Marcos, Lucas e João mencionam a alimentação milagrosa de cerca de 5.000 homens, Mateus acrescenta "além de mulheres e criancinhas". (Mt 14:21; Mr 6:44; Lu 9:14; Jo 6:10) Mateus menciona dois homens possessos por demônios, encontrados por Jesus no país dos gadarenos, ao passo que Marcos e Lucas mencionam apenas um. (Mt 8:28; Mr 5:2; Lu 8:27) Mateus conta também que dois cegos foram curados em determinada ocasião, ao passo que Marcos e Lucas mencionam apenas um. (Mt 20:29, 30; Mr 10:46, 47; Lu 18:35, 38) Naturalmente, todos os escritores estavam certos no sentido de que pelo menos uma pessoa estava envolvida em cada incidente. Mateus, porém, foi muitas vezes mais explícito quanto ao número. Isto talvez se possa atribuir à sua anterior ocupação de cobrador de impostos.

Uso das Escrituras Hebraicas por Mateus. Calculou-se que o Evangelho de Mateus contém cerca de cem referências às Escrituras Hebraicas. Aproximadamente 40 delas são citações diretas de passagens. Estas incluem as citações das Escrituras Hebraicas e as alusões a elas pelo próprio Cristo, entre as quais há as seguintes: os inimigos do homem seriam pessoas de sua própria família (Mt 10:35, 36; Miq 7:6); a identificação de João, o Batizador, como o "Elias" que havia de vir (Mt 11:13, 14; 17:11-13; Mal 4:5); a comparação entre o que se passou com Jesus e com Jonas (Mt 12:40; Jon 1:17); o mandamento de honrar os pais (Mt 15:4; Êx 20:12; 21:17); honra prestada a Deus só de lábios (Mt 15:8, 9; Is 29:13); a necessidade de duas ou mais testemunhas (Mt 18:16; De 19:15); declarações sobre o casamento (Mt 19:4-6; Gên 1:27; 2:24); diversos mandamentos (Mt 5:21, 27, 38; 19:18, 19; Êx 20:12-16; 21:24; Le 19:18; 24:20; De 19:21); o templo transformado em "covil de salteadores" (Mt 21:13; Is 56:7; Je 7:11); a rejeição de Jesus, "a pedra" que se tornou "a principal pedra angular" (Mt 21:42; Sal 118:22, 23); os adversários do Senhor de Davi postos debaixo dos seus pés (Mt 22:44; Sal 110:1); a coisa repugnante no lugar santo (Mt 24:15; Da 9:27); os discípulos de Jesus espalhados (Mt 26:31; Za 13:7); Cristo aparentemente abandonado por Deus (Mt 27:46; Sal 22:1). Há também as declarações de Jesus ao resistir às tentações de Satanás. — Mt 4:4, 7, 10; De 8:3; 6:16, 13.

É também de interesse que a aplicação inspirada das profecias das Escrituras Hebraicas a Jesus, feita por Mateus, prova que Esse é o prometido Messias. Este aspecto seria de interesse especial para os judeus, para os quais o relato parece ter sido originalmente intencionado. Essas profecias incluem: Jesus nascer duma virgem (Mt 1:23; Is 7:14); seu nascimento em Belém (Mt 2:6; Miq 5:2); ser ele chamado do Egito (Mt 2:15; Os 11:1); a lamentação por causa da morte dos meninos mortos (Mt 2:16-18; Je 31:15); João, o Batizador, preparar o caminho para Jesus (Mt 3:1-3; Is 40:3); o ministério de Jesus trazer luz (Mt 4:13-16; Is 9:1, 2); carregar ele com doenças (Mt 8:14-17; Is 53:4); usar ele ilustrações (Mt 13:34, 35; Sal 78:2); a entrada de Jesus em Jerusalém num jumentinho (Mt 21:4, 5; Za 9:9); ser o Cristo traído por 30 moedas de prata (Mt 26:14, 15; Za 11:12).

Registro Exato, Proveitoso. Por Mateus ser associado íntimo de Jesus Cristo durante os últimos anos de vida deste na terra, e por assim ser testemunha ocular do seu ministério, é compreensível que ele pudesse registrar um Evangelho comovente e significativo. Nós o possuímos na forma do registro da vida de Jesus Cristo, feito por este ex-cobrador de impostos. O espírito de Deus o habilitou a lembrar-se em pormenores do que Jesus disse e fez na terra. (Jo 14:26) Portanto, Mateus retratou Jesus de Nazaré de modo exato como o Filho amado de Deus, que tinha aprovação divina, como aquele que veio para "ministrar e dar a sua alma como resgate em troca de muitos", e como o predito Rei messiânico, que havia de chegar em glória. (Mt 20:28; 3:17; 25:31) Quando Jesus esteve na terra, ele indicou as suas obras e pôde verazmente dizer: "Aos pobres estão sendo declaradas as boas novas." (11:5) E atualmente, multidões, tanto de judeus naturais como de não judeus, tiram grande proveito dessas boas novas do Reino, conforme registradas no Evangelho de Mateus. — Mt 4:23, n.

MATIAS [provavelmente uma forma abreviada do hebr. Matitias, que significa "Dádiva de Jeová"]. Discípulo escolhido por sortes para substituir Judas Iscariotes como apóstolo. Após a ascensão de Jesus ao céu, Pedro, notando que não só o salmista predissera o desvio de Judas (Sal 41:9), mas que Davi também escrevera (Sal 109:8): "Tome outro seu cargo de superintendência", propôs aos aproximadamente 120 discípulos reunidos que se preenchesse a vaga. José Barsabás e Matias foram propostos para a escolha; depois de oração, lançaram-se sortes, e Matias foi escolhido. Esta ocorrência, apenas poucos dias antes do derramamento do espírito santo, foi a última ocasião mencionada na Bíblia em que se recorreu a sortes para se saber a escolha de Jeová num assunto. — At 1:15-26.

Segundo as palavras de Pedro (At 1:21, 22), Matias havia sido seguidor de Cristo durante os três anos e meio do ministério de Jesus, havia estado intimamente associado com os apóstolos e foi mui provavelmente um dos 70 discípulos ou evangelistas que Jesus enviou para pregar. (Lu 10:1) Após a sua escolha, ele foi "contado com os onze apóstolos" pela congregação (At 1:26), e quando o livro de Atos logo depois fala dos "apóstolos" ou dos "doze", isso incluía Matias. — At 2:37, 43; 4:33, 36; 5:12, 29; 6:2, 6; 8:1, 14; veja PAULO, I.

MATITIAS [Dádiva de Jeová].

1. Levita que tocava harpa quando a Arca do Pacto foi levada da casa de Obede-Edom para Jerusalém. (1Cr 15:17-21, 25) É provável que este Matitias fosse um dos músicos levíticos que Davi colocou diante da Arca "tanto para fazer lembrar como para agradecer e louvar a Jeová, o Deus de Israel" (1Cr 16:4, 5), e que foi ele quem mais tarde foi escolhido por sortes, dentre os filhos de Jedutum, para encabeçar a 14.ª turma de 12 músicos levíticos. — 1Cr 25:1, 3, 9, 21.

2. Levita coatita da família de Corá e o primogênito de Salum. Este Matitias estava entre os levitas que retornaram do exílio babilônico e que "tinha o cargo de confiança sobre as coisas cozidas em panelas". — 1Cr 9:31, 32.

3. Levita ou sacerdote que ficou à direita de Esdras quando este copista leu a Lei de Moisés para os judeus reunidos em Jerusalém. — Ne 8:1, 4.

4. Israelita "dos filhos de Nebo", que estava entre os que tomaram esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram "junto com os filhos" nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:25, 43, 44.

MATREDE [duma raiz que significa "expulsar [alguém]"]. Mãe de Meetabel, esposa do rei edomita Hadar (Hadade). (Gên 36:31, 39; 1Cr 1:50) Em Gênesis 36:39, a Pesito siríaca e a Septuaginta grega apresentam Matrede como filho de Mezaabe, mas, segundo o texto massorético, Matrede era filha de Mezaabe.

MATRIMÔNIO. Veja CASAMENTO.

MATRITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Matar (Chuva [assim, nascidos na estação chuvosa])]. Família benjamita da qual o Rei Saul, de Israel, era membro. (1Sa 10:21) A versão Almeida usa o nome "Matri". Todavia, a palavra hebraica mat·rí vem aqui acompanhada pelo artigo definido. Assim, a Tradução do Novo Mundo reza apropriadamente 'os matritas', assim como fazem outras traduções modernas. — AS; AT; RS; VB.

MAZAROTE, CONSTELAÇÃO DE. O targum aramaico equaciona Mazarote com maz·za·lóhth de 2 Reis 23:5, "constelações do zodíaco", "sinais do zodíaco", "doze signos" ou "constelações". (NM; BJ; CBC; So) Alguns acreditam que a palavra deriva duma raiz que significa "cingir", e que Mazarote se refere ao círculo zodiacal. Todavia, em Jó 38:32 usa-se em hebraico um pronome no singular na expressão "no seu tempo fixado", ao passo que a referência em 2 Reis 23:5 está no plural. Portanto, Mazarote parece referir-se a uma determinada constelação, em vez de a todo o círculo zodiacal, mas atualmente não é possível fazer uma identificação positiva.

Em Jó 38:32, Jeová pergunta a Jó: "Podes fazer sair a constelação de Mazarote no seu tempo fixado? E quanto à constelação de Ás ao lado dos seus filhos, acaso podes guiá-los?" Portanto, qualquer que seja a identificação dessas constelações específicas, Deus pergunta a Jó se este pode controlar os corpos celestes, visíveis, fazendo sair certo grupo na sua respectiva época, ou guiar outra constelação na sua prescrita órbita celeste.

MEÁ. Veja TORRE.

MEARA [Caverna]. Cidade ou distrito sidônio que ainda ficou para ser conquistado depois de terminada a campanha de Israel sob a liderança de Josué. (Jos 13:2, 4) Sugeriram-se provisoriamente duas localizações. Uma é a aldeia de Mghairiye, a uns 10 km ao NE de Sídon. A outra é Mughar Jezzin (árabe para "Cavernas de Jezzin"), um distrito de cavernas no alto da cordilheira do Líbano e ao L de Sídon.

MEBUNAI. Homem poderoso, husatita, no exército de Davi. (2Sa 23:27) Pelo visto, ele é o Sibecai mencionado em 2 Samuel 21:18 e em 1 Crônicas 11:29; 20:4; 27:11.

MECONÁ [duma raiz que significa "estabelece firmemente"]. Cidade na parte meridional de Judá, evidentemente perto de Ziclague e bastante grande para ter aldeias dependentes, ou "filhas". (Ne 11:25, 28) Não é possível fazer uma identificação precisa; a maioria das localizações sugeridas baseia-se em emendas do texto.

MEDÃ. Um dos seis filhos de Abraão com sua concubina Quetura. (Gên 25:1, 2; 1Cr 1:32) A tribo árabe que descendeu de Medã não tem sido identificada, e não se sabe onde ela se fixou. Todavia, "Medã" talvez esteja representado em "Badan", um lugar ao S de Tema, tomado pelo rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III no oitavo século AEC, visto que o "m" e o "b" em árabe são frequentemente intercambiados.

MEDADE. Um dos 70 anciãos de Israel escolhidos para ajudar Moisés durante a peregrinação no ermo. Embora Medade e Eldade não tivessem ido à tenda de reunião junto com os outros, eles "se achavam entre os anotados". Portanto, quando Jeová tirou um pouco do espírito que havia sobre Moisés, colocando-o sobre cada um dos 70 anciãos, estes dois também o receberam e começaram a proceder como profetas no acampamento. (Núm 11:16, 17, 24-26) Embora Josué sugerisse que Medade e Eldade fossem refreados, Moisés disse: "Tens ciúmes em meu lugar? Não; quisera eu que todo o povo de Jeová fosse profeta, porque Jeová poria seu espírito sobre eles!" — Núm 11:27-29.

MEDEBA. Este lugar é representado pela atual Madaba, cidade situada num morro baixo de encostas suaves, a uns 20 km ao L da extremidade setentrional do Mar Morto. A antiga "estrada real" ligava-a a outras cidades ao L do Jordão. (Veja Núm 20:17.) Madaba fica numa planície, ou planalto, despida de árvores, mas fértil. Na planície, "o planalto de Medeba", há pastos para rebanhos de ovelhas e de cabras. — Jos 13:9, 16.

Depois que os israelitas derrotaram o rei amorreu Síon, Medeba passou a fazer parte do território da tribo de Rubem. (Jos 13:8, 9, 15, 16) Parece que, anteriormente, os amorreus haviam tomado Medeba dos moabitas. (Núm 21:25-30) Alguns séculos mais tarde, numa luta contra os amonitas, o exército do Rei Davi, sob o comando de Joabe, derrotou forças mercenárias aramaicas (sírias) acampadas diante de Medeba. — 1Cr 19:6-16.

Segundo a Pedra Moabita (linha 8), O Rei Onri, de Israel (c. 951-941 AEC), apossou-se da "terra de Mehedeba (Medeba)". A linha 30 do mesmo monumento indica que o Rei Mesa, de Moabe, reconstruiu Medeba e outras cidades daquela região. No entanto, pode ser que os israelitas recuperaram o domínio sobre Medeba quando Jeroboão II (c. 844-804 AEC) "restaurou o termo de Israel desde a entrada de Hamate até o mar do Arabá". (2Rs 14:25) Mas, isto talvez não durasse muito, visto que a pronúncia de Isaías (c. 778–d. 732 AEC) contra Moabe mostra que Medeba já estava então sob o controle dos moabitas e se predisse que os moabitas 'uivariam' por causa da perda dessa cidade. — Is 15:1, 2.

MEDIADOR. Alguém que atua entre duas partes discordantes para reconciliá-las; intercessor; intermediário ou medianeiro. Nas Escrituras, o termo é aplicado a Moisés e a Jesus, que foram respectivamente os mediadores do pacto da Lei e do novo pacto. — Gál 3:19; 1Ti 2:5.

A Validação dum Pacto Requeria Sangue. O escritor inspirado do livro de Hebreus trata de dois pactos principais: o pacto da Lei e o novo pacto. Nesta consideração, ele menciona Cristo mediando o novo pacto. (He 9:15) Suas palavras em Hebreus 9:16 têm sido assunto de controvérsia entre peritos bíblicos. Portanto, o texto tem sido traduzido das seguintes maneiras: "Porque onde há testamento necessário é que intervenha a morte do testador." (Al) "Porque, onde há um testamento, é necessário provar que a pessoa que o fez já morreu." (BLH) "Porque onde um pacto há, é necessário introduzir a morte daquele que pactuou." (Ro) "Pois, onde há um pacto, precisa ser provida a morte do pactuante humano." (NM) "Porque onde um pacto há, a morte da vítima pactual a entrar é necessária." (Yg) "Pois, onde existe um Pacto, é necessário apresentar a Morte daquilo que o ratificou." (ED) "Porque onde há um pacto, é necessária a morte daquilo que estabeleceu o pacto." — The New Testament in an Improved Version (O Novo Testamento Numa Versão Aprimorada).

A versão literal apresentada em traduções interlineares do texto grego reza: "Onde para pacto, morte necessidade apresentar daquele fazendo por si pacto." (He 9:16, Int) "Pois onde há um pacto, a morte por necessidade tem de ser oferecida, daquele que faz o pacto." — The Interlinear Greek-English New Testament (O Novo Testamento Interlinear Grego-Inglês), traduzido por Alfred Marshall.

Traduzir di·a·thé·ke como "pacto" expressa corretamente o sentido do escritor. A tradução "testamento" encontrada em muitas versões é incoerente com o uso do termo na Septuaginta grega, bem como em muitos lugares das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. (Lu 1:72; At 3:25; 7:8; Ro 9:4; 11:27; He 8:6-10; 12:24) O termo "testamento" também está em desacordo com aquilo de que Paulo está falando, visto que se refere no contexto ao pacto da Lei e ao novo pacto. Nem o pacto da Lei, nem o novo pacto eram um "testamento".

Em Hebreus 9:16, o apóstolo Paulo evidentemente estava falando de pactos entre Deus e homens (não entre homens e homens), que exigiam sacrifícios. E pode-se notar, especialmente no caso dos hebreus, que a aproximação a Deus e os pactos com Deus baseavam-se regularmente em sacrifícios, as vítimas sacrificiais sendo às vezes cortadas em pedaços por ocasião da celebração do pacto. É bastante óbvio que o pacto da Lei e o novo pacto exigiam o derramamento de sangue, para poderem entrar em vigor ou valer perante Deus. De outro modo, Deus não os reconheceria como válidos, nem lidaria com os envolvidos à base duma relação pactuada. (He 9:17) Para a validação do pacto da Lei, os sacrifícios usados eram animais — novilhos e bodes — que tomavam o lugar de Moisés, o mediador. (He 9:19) Para a validação do novo pacto, o sacrifício era a vida humana de Jesus Cristo. — Lu 22:20; veja o apêndice da NM, p. 1524.

O Mediador do Pacto da Lei. Moisés foi o mediador do pacto da Lei entre Jeová Deus e a nação de Israel. Jeová falava com ele "boca a boca" (Núm 12:8), embora fosse realmente o anjo de Jeová quem falava como representante de Deus. (At 7:38; Gál 3:19; He 2:2) Moisés era o porta-voz intermediário de Jeová para Israel. (Êx 19:3, 7, 9; 24:9-18) Como mediador, foi 'incumbido de toda a casa de Jeová'. (Núm 12:7) Com a mediação do pacto da Lei, ele ajudou a nação de Israel a cumprir o pacto e a receber os benefícios dele.

Validação do pacto da Lei. O apóstolo Paulo diz: "Não há mediador onde apenas uma pessoa está envolvida, mas Deus é apenas um." (Gál 3:20) No pacto da Lei, Deus era uma das partes; a nação de Israel era a outra 'parte'. Os israelitas, por causa da sua condição pecaminosa, não podiam chegar-se a Deus num pacto. Precisavam dum mediador. A fraqueza deles foi demonstrada no seu pedido a Moisés: "Fala tu conosco, e escutemos; mas não fale Deus conosco, para que não morramos." (Êx 20:19; He 12:18-20) Por conseguinte, Jeová, em misericórdia, constituiu Moisés mediador do pacto da Lei e providenciou que se sacrificassem animais para validar o pacto. Moisés, naturalmente, também era imperfeito e pecaminoso; todavia, ele gozava duma posição favorável perante Deus, assim como se dera anteriormente com Abraão. (He 11:23-28; veja DECLARAR JUSTO [Como 'contados' justos].) Quando o pacto foi inaugurado, foi Moisés quem oficiou, supervisionando o sacrifício de animais. Daí, ele aspergiu o sangue deles sobre o rolo ou "o livro do pacto". Leu o livro para o povo, especificando os termos, e o povo respondeu, concordando em obedecer. Moisés aspergiu então o povo (sem dúvida, os anciãos representativos dele) com sangue, dizendo: "Eis o sangue do pacto que Jeová concluiu convosco com respeito a todas estas palavras." — Êx 24:3-8; He 9:18-22.

Inauguração do sacerdócio. Os sacerdotes designados da casa de Arão não podiam por conta própria começar a atuar como tais. Tinham de ser empossados no cargo sob a direção do mediador de Deus, Moisés. Nesta ocasião, em 1.º-7 de nisã de 1512 AEC, Moisés ungiu o tabernáculo e sua mobília e utensílios, e também ungiu Arão com o óleo de composição especial. Depois de encher as mãos de Arão e dos filhos dele com material sacrificial, Moisés moveu as mãos cheias deles para lá e para cá, perante Jeová, deste modo consagrando-os ou 'enchendo-lhes as mãos de poder' para o sacerdócio. Depois, espargiu sobre eles óleo de unção e o sangue procedente do altar. De modo que uma função da mediação de Moisés era investir e pôr em funcionamento o sacerdócio, que era uma particularidade do pacto da Lei. — Le 8; He 7:11; veja INVESTIDURA.

Moisés desempenhou também um papel significativo relacionado com os primeiros ofícios realizados pelo recém-investido sacerdócio, em 8 de nisã de 1512 AEC, ao passo que dirigiu o procedimento, e, junto com Arão, abençoou o povo. (Le 9) Durante a instituição de todas as coisas relacionadas com o pacto da Lei, ele agiu na qualidade oficial de mediador.

Outros trabalhos de mediação. Israel recebeu um conjunto de mais de 600 leis, inclusive os estatutos sacerdotais, por meio de Moisés. Pelo poder de Deus, Moisés realizou muitos milagres a favor do povo. Intercedeu a favor deles, rogando a Jeová para que os poupasse pela causa do nome de Jeová. (Êx 32:7-14; Núm 14:11-20; 16:20-22; 21:7; De 9:18-20, 25-29; 10:8-11) Moisés tomava a peito os interesses do nome de Jeová e também os do povo, mesmo acima da preocupação com o seu próprio bem-estar. — Êx 32:30-33; Núm 11:26-29; 12:9-13.

Paralelos nas Mediações. Com relação aos introduzidos no novo pacto, encontramos uma situação similar à do antigo Israel. Os cristãos também são pecadores. Visto que o sangue de animais realmente não pode remover pecados (He 10:4), precisa-se dum sacrifício melhor. Jesus Cristo é este sacrifício melhor. (He 10:5-10) O escritor de Hebreus expressa a questão desta forma. Depois de mencionar os sacrifícios oferecidos sob a Lei, ele diz: "Quanto mais o sangue do Cristo . . . purificará as nossas consciências de obras mortas, para que prestemos serviço sagrado ao Deus vivente? De modo que é por isso que ele é mediador dum novo pacto, a fim de que, por ter havido uma morte para o seu livramento, por meio de resgate, das transgressões sob o pacto anterior, os chamados recebessem a promessa da herança eterna. Pois, onde há um pacto, precisa ser provida a morte do pactuante humano. Porque um pacto é válido baseado em vítimas mortas, visto que nunca está em vigor enquanto o pactuante humano está vivo." — He 9:11-17.

Paulo passa a salientar que o pacto anterior não foi inaugurado sem sangue. Moisés, ao tratar dele, cuidou de que se oferecessem os sacrifícios e aspergiu o sangue sobre o "livro do pacto". (He 9:18-28) Assim também Jesus Cristo, o Mediador de Deus para o novo pacto, depois do seu sacrifício, apareceu perante Jeová Deus com o valor do seu sangue. Outra semelhança é a de que o pacto da Lei foi feito com uma nação, não com pessoas (Êx 24:7, 8), e do mesmo modo, também o novo pacto é feito com a "nação santa" de Deus, "o Israel de Deus". — 1Pe 2:9; Gál 6:15, 16.

Aqueles para Quem Cristo É Mediador. O apóstolo Paulo declara que existe "um só mediador entre Deus e homens, um homem, Cristo Jesus, o qual se entregou como resgate correspondente por todos" — tanto pelos judeus como pelos gentios. (1Ti 2:5, 6) Ele media o novo pacto entre Deus e os aceitos no novo pacto, a congregação do Israel espiritual. (He 8:10-13; 12:24; Ef 5:25-27) Cristo tornou-se Mediador para que os chamados "recebessem a promessa da herança eterna" (He 9:15); ele não auxilia a anjos, mas "o descendente [lit.: a semente] de Abraão". (He 2:16) Auxilia aqueles que hão de ser introduzidos no novo pacto a serem 'adotados' na família de filhos espirituais de Jeová; estes, por fim, estarão no céu como irmãos de Cristo, tornando-se com ele parte da semente de Abraão. (Ro 8:15-17, 23-25; Gál 3:29) Ele lhes transmitiu o prometido espírito santo, com o qual são selados e recebem um penhor daquilo que há de vir, sua herança celestial. (2Co 5:5; Ef 1:13, 14) O número total dos definitiva e permanentemente selados é revelado em Revelação (Apocalipse) 7:4-8 como 144.000.

Inauguração do Novo Pacto. Depois de Jesus morrer e ser ressuscitado, ele entrou no céu para aparecer perante a pessoa de Deus, a fim de apresentar sua oferta, cujos benefícios primeiro são aplicados aos aceitos no novo pacto. (He 9:24) Nisso ele atua tanto como Sumo Sacerdote como qual Mediador. Em harmonia com o padrão seguido na inauguração do pacto da Lei, Jesus Cristo apresentou o valor do seu sacrifício perante Deus no céu (assim como Moisés aspergiu o sangue sobre o livro da Lei [porque Deus não estava pessoalmente presente ali]). Daí, no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, Jesus derramou o espírito santo da parte de Deus sobre os primeiros introduzidos no novo pacto, cerca de 120 pessoas. Mais tarde, naquele dia, cerca de 3.000, judeus e prosélitos, foram acrescentados à congregação. (At 1:15; 2:1-47; He 9:19) E assim como Moisés leu a Lei para o povo, também Jesus Cristo claramente enuncia os termos do novo pacto e as leis deste aos que participam nele. — Êx 24:3-8; He 1:1, 2; Jo 13:34; 15:14; 1Jo 5:1-3.

Jesus Cristo, ao ocupar os cargos de Mediador e de Sumo Sacerdote, por ser imortal, está sempre vivo e é capaz de interceder por aqueles do Israel espiritual que se chegam a Deus por meio dele, de modo que pode mediar o novo pacto até que as pessoas que recebem sua ajuda mediadora sejam completamente salvas. (He 7:24, 25) Ele é capaz de levar a término a realização bem-sucedida do novo pacto. Os que estão no pacto são por fim investidos do sacerdócio celestial como subsacerdotes de Cristo, seu grande Sumo Sacerdote. — Re 5:9, 10; 20:6.

Bênçãos para a Humanidade em Geral. Ao passo que a mediação de Jesus funciona exclusivamente para com os que estão no novo pacto, ele é também o Sumo Sacerdote de Deus e a Semente de Abraão. No cumprimento dos seus deveres nestes dois cargos, ele trará bênçãos para outros da humanidade, porque todas as nações hão de ser abençoadas por meio da semente de Abraão. Os que estão no novo pacto são os primeiros abençoados por Cristo, a Semente (ou Descendente) primária (Gál 3:16, 29), sendo introduzidos nele como membros associados da semente. Constituídos em reis e sacerdotes em razão do novo pacto mediado por ele, participarão em administrar as bênçãos do sacrifício de Jesus e do seu Reinado para todas as nações da Terra. A mediação de Cristo, tendo alcançado o objetivo por levar "o Israel de Deus" a esta posição, resulta assim em benefícios e bênçãos para toda a humanidade. — Gál 6:16; Gên 22:17, 18.

De modo que há outros, que não fazem parte dos 144.000 "selados", que também oram a Jeová Deus em nome de Cristo, depositando fé no mérito do seu sacrifício resgatador. Este sacrifício não se destina apenas para aqueles para os quais Jesus media o novo pacto, mas também para toda a humanidade que expressa fé em Cristo. (1Jo 2:2) Os que não estão no novo pacto também reconhecem que "não há outro nome debaixo do céu, que tenha sido dado entre os homens, pelo qual tenhamos de ser salvos". (At 4:12) Eles também consideram Jesus Cristo seu grande Sumo Sacerdote celestial, por meio de quem podem chegar-se a Deus e por cuja ministração podem obter o perdão de pecados. (He 4:14-16) Revelação 21:22-24 salienta que 'as nações andarão na luz da Nova Jerusalém', onde Jeová Deus é a luz e o Cordeiro, Jesus Cristo, a lâmpada.

O Império Babilônico

BABILÔNIA era deveras uma cidade impressionante — com muralhas altas, sua Via das Procissões, os famosos Jardins Suspensos e mais de 50 templos.

Logo cedo na história do homem, Babel (mais tarde chamada Babilônia) tornou-se um proeminente centro duma adoração que desafiava o verdadeiro Deus, Jeová. (Gên 10:9, 10) Jeová frustrou o objetivo dos construtores dela por confundir a língua do povo e espalhá-lo dali pela Terra afora. (Gên 11:4-9) Desta maneira, a adoração falsa espalhou-se de Babilônia a outras terras.

O desafio de Babilônia a Jeová levou por fim à queda dela. Na profecia, Jeová representou Babilônia por um leão com asas de águia; ele predisse também a queda e a subsequente destruição dela. Em 5 de outubro de 539 AEC, em uma só noite, Babilônia foi tomada por Ciro, o Grande, a quem Jeová predissera por nome. Babilônia caiu exatamente como predito. Por fim, a cidade tornou-se "montões de pedras", para nunca mais ser reconstruída. — Je 51:37; veja Is 44:27–45:2.

Babilônia: Capital política e religiosa do império; muitos exilados judeus estiveram ali.

Tema: Aparentemente, a segunda capital, estabelecida pelo Rei Nabonido, que deixou Belsazar encarregado de Babilônia.

Nínive: Capital assíria, que caiu diante da coalizão de caldeus e medos, em 632 AEC.

Carquemis: Nabucodonosor II derrotou aqui as forças egípcias, estabelecendo a supremacia babilônica na Síria.

Jerusalém: Tornou-se tributária de Babilônia em 620 AEC. Sitiada por forças babilônicas em 618-617 e em 609-607 AEC.

Tiro: Capitulou diante das forças babilônicas após um sítio de 13 anos.

em Babel provavelmente era um zigurate religioso tal como este.

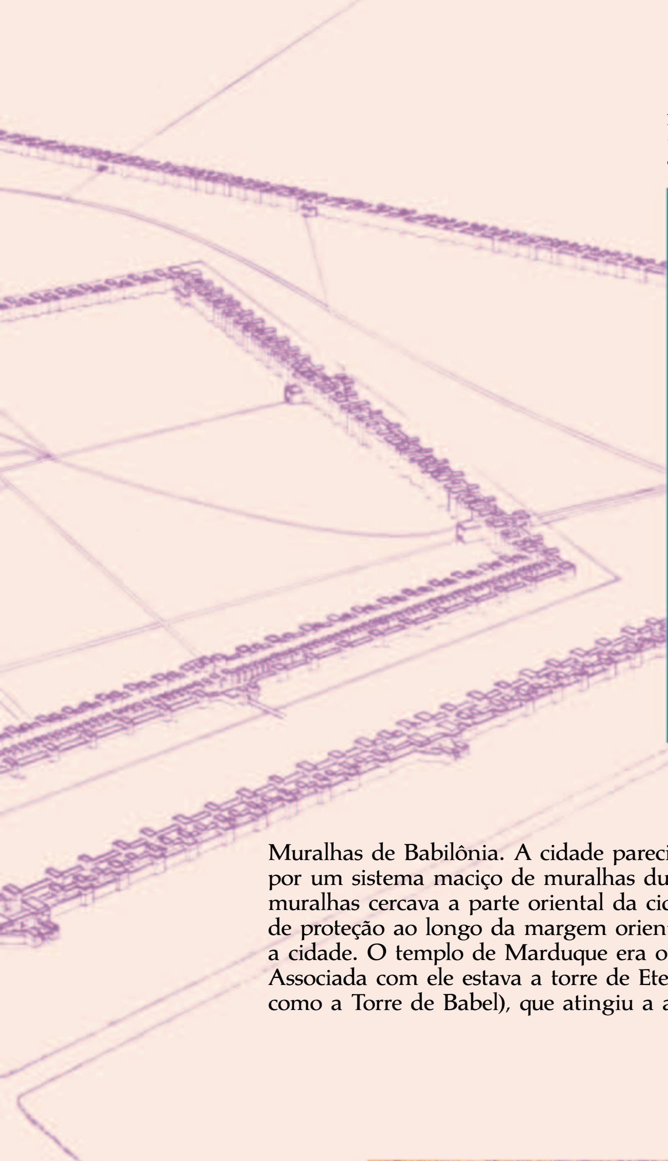
A inscrição apresenta as jactâncias de Nabucodonosor II por tudo o que ele fez para aumentar e ampliar Babilônia. (Veja Da 4:30.)



Muralhas de Babilônia. A cidade parecia ser inexpugnável. Era protegida por um sistema maciço de muralhas duplas. Uma segunda série de muralhas cercava a parte oriental da cidade; uma muralha servia também de proteção ao longo da margem oriental do Eufrates, que atravessava a cidade. O templo de Marduque era o destaque central de Babilônia. Associada com ele estava a torre de Etemenanki (encarada por alguns como a Torre de Babel), que atingiu a altura de 91 m.

Decoração do Caminho das Procissões de Babilônia. É de interesse que Babilônia, na Bíblia, é simbolizada por um leão. (Da 7:4)

Nabonido, último monarca supremo de Babilônia, com símbolos de seus deuses (crescente do deus-lua Sin, disco alado do deus-sol Xamaxe, estrela de Istar). Recorrer a corpos celestes e a deuses associados com eles não salvou Babilônia. (Is 47:12-15)

Afirma-se que este é o mais antigo exemplo remanescente dum horóscopo; de Babilônia; crê-se datar do quinto século AEC.

As ruínas da antiga Babilônia atestam a confiabilidade das profecias bíblicas. Babilônia antigamente era o "ornato dos reinos"; agora ela é "um baldio desértico". (Is 13:19-22; Je 50:13)

A Conquista de Jerusalém por Babilônia

A ANTIGA Jerusalém usufruía uma distinção ímpar: Foi a única cidade terrestre em que Jeová colocou seu nome. (1Rs 11:36) Também era o centro da adoração pura de Jeová. O templo dele fora construído ali, e por este motivo Jerusalém podia ser chamada de modo especial de "lugar de descanso" de Deus. (Sal 132:13, 14; 135:21) Além disso, Jerusalém era o lugar em que os reis da linhagem davídica se sentavam no "trono de Jeová", representando-o por administrarem as leis dele. — 1Cr 29:23.

Em contraste, a antiga Babilônia era o centro do qual se espalhou a falsa adoração a todas as partes da Terra. Portanto, teve significância especial quando Jeová permitiu que Babilônia destruísse a infiel Jerusalém. Em 620 AEC, Jerusalém foi submetida a Babilônia. (2Rs 24:1) Três anos mais tarde, em 617 AEC, os babilônios deportaram muitos dos habitantes de Jerusalém — sua nobreza, seus homens poderosos e seus artífices — e saquearam os tesouros da cidade. (2Cr 36:5-10) Por fim, a cidade, junto com seu templo, foi destruída e milhares de judeus foram levados ao exílio. — 2Cr 36:17-20.

A destruição de Jerusalém ocorreu em 607 AEC, ano bem significativo do ponto de vista das profecias bíblicas. Embora esta data divirja daquela usada por muitos comentadores bíblicos, ela é usada coerentemente nesta publicação. Por quê? Porque atribuímos maior peso ao testemunho da Bíblia do que às conclusões que eruditos tiraram do registro fragmentário da história, disponível em tabuinhas cuneiformes.

Segundo alguns arqueólogos, este "Aposento Incendiado", escavado em Jerusalém, data da destruição de Jerusalém no tempo do último rei de Judá.

O Império Medo-Persa

OS MEDOS e os persas são mencionados repetidas vezes nas Escrituras, porque adotaram uma política de tolerância religiosa, a qual serviu para cumprir profecias bíblicas.

Jeová permitira que os judeus fossem levados cativos por Babilônia, nação que não soltava povos cativos. Todavia, Deus predissera também o restabelecimento dos judeus na sua pátria. (Je 27:22; 30:3) A Medo-Pérsia, chamada na Bíblia simbolicamente de urso (Da 7:5), serviu ao propósito de Jeová neste respeito.

Pouco depois da queda de Babilônia, o rei persa, Ciro, decretou que os anteriormente cativos judeus poderiam voltar à sua pátria e reconstruir o templo de Jeová. (Esd 1:2-4) Dario I, mais tarde, honrou este decreto. (Esd 6:1-11) O Rei Assuero (evidentemente Xerxes I), ao ser devidamente informado, assinou um decreto que frustrou uma trama de exterminar os judeus. (Est 7:3–8:14) Em 455 AEC, o Rei Artaxerxes Longímano deu permissão a Neemias para reconstruir as muralhas de Jerusalém, dando assim início à profética contagem regressiva até o aparecimento do Messias. — Ne 2:3-8; Da 9:25.

Ecbátana: Capital de verão do império; havia sido a capital da Média.

Babilônia: Uma cidade real do império; por causa do tórrido verão, a cidade raras vezes era mais do que capital de inverno.

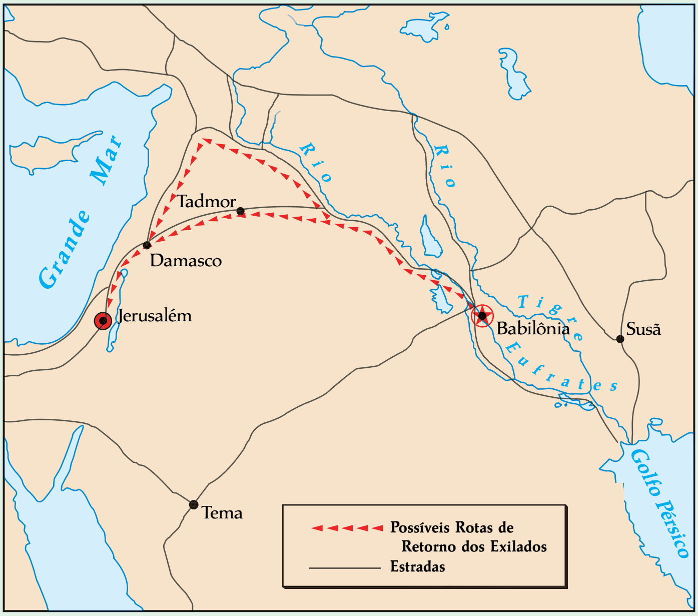
Exilados Retornam de Babilônia

EM 607 AEC, a antes próspera terra de Judá foi tornada "um baldio desolado, sem habitante", quando judeus cativos foram levados ao exílio em Babilônia e um restante deles fugiu para o Egito. (Je 9:11) O Deus de benignidade, porém, não iria deixar seu povo para sempre no exílio. Ele predisse que teriam "de servir ao rei de Babilônia por setenta anos", após os quais ele libertaria um restante fiel. (Je 25:11, 12; 29:10-14) E nem mesmo a aparentemente inexpugnável potência mundial de Babilônia poderia frustrar o propósito declarado de Deus. O retorno dos exilados judeus demonstra a inerrante exatidão com que as profecias de Jeová se cumprem.

Cilindro de Ciro, que declara a política de Ciro, de devolver os cativos à sua pátria e de ajudar na restauração de seus templos.

Babilônia caiu em 539 AEC, mesmo já antes do fim dos 70 anos de exílio, diante dos exércitos invasores do rei persa Ciro. Então, durante o primeiro ano dele como governante de Babilônia, Ciro emitiu um decreto, abrindo o caminho para que os exilados judeus retornassem a Jerusalém. (Esd 1:1-4) Um restante, que chegava a 42.360 (incluindo homens, mulheres e crianças), fez esta viagem, chegando a Judá em 537 AEC. (Esd 1:5–3:1; 4:1) De modo que os 70 anos de desolação terminaram exatamente em tempo!

No entanto, nem todos os exilados retornaram naquele tempo. Em 468 AEC, outro grupo de retornados acompanhou o sacerdote Esdras, que levou a Jerusalém presentes para o templo. (Esd 7:1–8:32) Daí, em 455 AEC, Neemias viajou de Susã para reconstruir as muralhas de Jerusalém. (Ne 2:5, 6, 11) As Escrituras não indicam a rota exata tomada pelos que retornavam. No mapa mostram-se algumas possibilidades admissíveis.



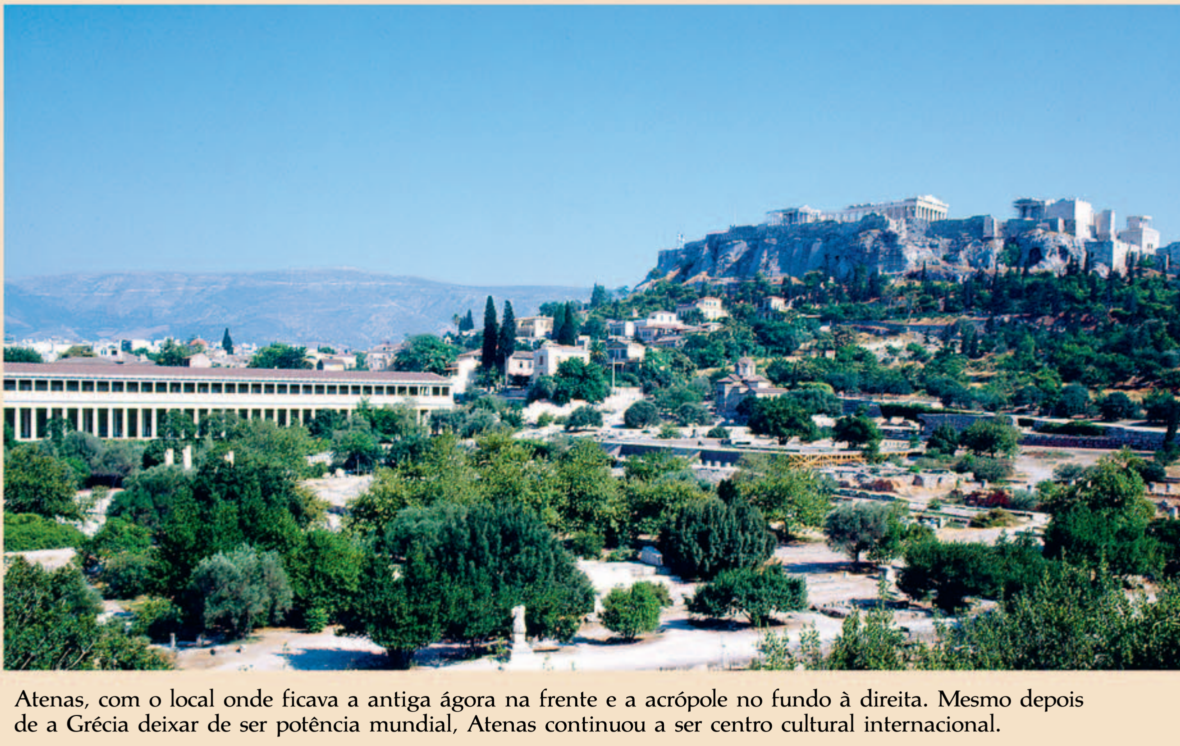
O Império Grego

ESPANTOSOS eventos na história grega cumpriram profecias bíblicas. A Grécia parecia candidata improvável a potência mundial, visto que seu povo se achava dividido em tribos e cidades-estados independentes.

Mas profecias bíblicas registradas no sexto século AEC apontavam para uma mudança dramática. Simbolizando a Grécia primeiro como leopardo com asas e depois como bode com um chifre proeminente, predisseram de modo inconfundível que a Grécia esmagaria a Potência Mundial Medo-Persa. Revelaram também que o poder dum "chifre proeminente" seria quebrantado e que em seu lugar surgiriam quatro. — Da 7:6; 8:5-8, 20-22; 11:3, 4.

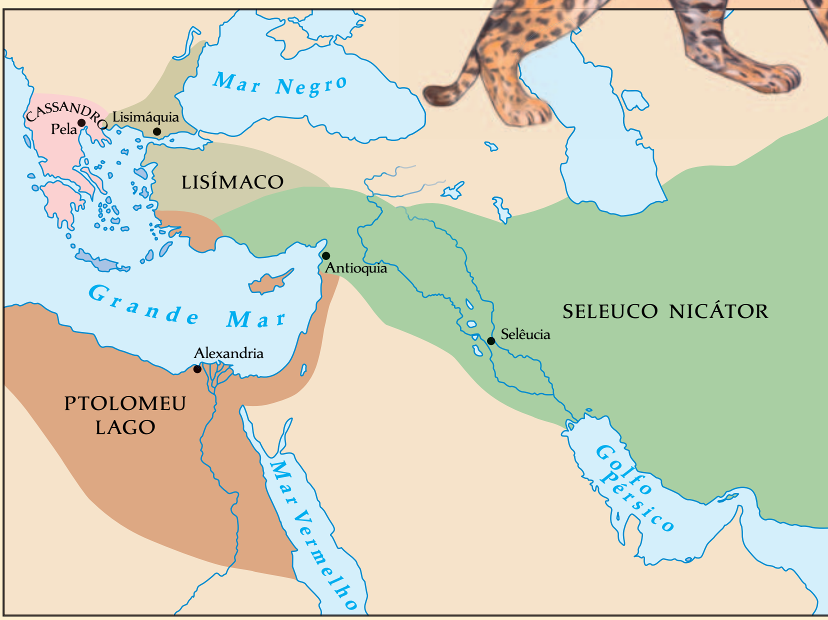
Alexandre, o Grande (Magno), mostrou ser esse "chifre proeminente". Começando em 334 AEC, ele levou um pequeno, mas bem disciplinado exército grego a uma vitória após outra. Com velocidade relâmpago conquistou a Ásia Menor, a Síria, a Palestina, o Egito, e todo o Império Medo-Persa até a fronteira da Índia. Mas, em poucos anos, Alexandre morreu, e num tempo relativamente curto seu império foi dividido em quatro partes, entre quatro de seus generais.

O Império Grego foi de curta duração, mas seus efeitos foram duradouros. Antes da sua morte, Alexandre havia introduzido a cultura grega e a língua grega em todas as partes do seu domínio. O grego comum tornou-se a língua franca de muitas nacionalidades, e isto contribuiu mais tarde para a rápida difusão do cristianismo em toda a região mediterrânea.



Atenas, com o local onde ficava a antiga ágora na frente e a acrópole no fundo à direita. Mesmo depois de a Grécia deixar de ser potência mundial, Atenas continuou a ser centro cultural internacional.

Em 323 AEC, à idade de 32 anos, Alexandre foi atacado de malária e faleceu. Em 301 AEC, quatro de seus generais já se haviam estabelecido no poder: Ptolomeu Lago sobre o Egito e a Palestina; Seleuco Nicátor sobre a Mesopotâmia e a Síria; Lisímaco sobre a Trácia e a Ásia Menor; e Cassandro sobre a Macedônia e a Grécia. (Da 7:6; 8:8; 11:4)



Os jogos gregos, tais como esses mostrados num relevo encontrado em Atenas, estavam associados com a religião grega e promoviam o helenismo; assim, um ginásio de esportes estabelecido em Jerusalém corrompia jovens judeus.

Um prato de cerâmica mostra o sacrifício de um porco. Num depravado esforço de corromper e eliminar a adoração de Jeová, Antíoco IV (Epifânio) ofertou tal sacrifício num altar construído sobre o grande altar no templo de Jeová em Jerusalém, e depois dedicou o templo a Zeus.

MEDITAÇÃO. Reflexão profunda e concentrada em que a pessoa pensa seriamente em experiências anteriores, pondera e cogita assuntos do momento, ou dá refletida consideração a possíveis eventos futuros.

Para meditar corretamente, precisa-se estar livre de distrações, concentrado apenas nos próprios pensamentos. Por exemplo, Isaque saiu passeando sozinho, de noitinha, para meditar, possivelmente sobre o seu iminente casamento com Rebeca. (Gên 24:63) Era durante a solidão das vigílias noturnas que o salmista meditava na grandeza do seu grandioso Criador. (Sal 63:6) As meditações do coração devem enfocar coisas benéficas, o esplendor e as atividades de Jeová, coisas que agradam a Ele (Sal 19:14; 49:3; 77:12; 143:5; Fil 4:8), não as maquinações dos iníquos. — Pr 24:1, 2.

Com meditação proveitosa, não se estará inclinado a dar respostas tolas. Refletir-se-á seriamente nesses assuntos de importância, e, em resultado, as respostas dadas procederão do coração e não serão mais tarde lamentadas. — Pr 15:28.

Quando Josué foi designado superintendente da nação de Israel, foi instruído a fazer uma cópia da lei de Jeová, e mandou-se-lhe (conforme traduzido por muitas versões da Bíblia) 'meditar' nela dia e noite. (Jos 1:8; Al, BJ, CBC, IBB, MC) Aqui, a palavra hebraica para "meditar" é ha·gháh. Ela significa basicamente "emitir sons inarticulados" e é traduzida 'uivar', 'rugir', 'arrulhar' e 'murmurar'. (Is 16:7; 31:4; 38:14; 59:3) Ha·gháh tem também o sentido de 'proferir em voz baixa' e 'meditar'. (Sal 35:28; Pr 15:28) A Tradução do Novo Mundo verte apropriadamente o termo hebraico ha·gháh, que ocorre em Josué 1:8, por "tens de ler em voz baixa". (Veja também Sal 1:2.) A leitura em voz baixa incute na mente, de forma mais indelével, a matéria em que se medita. Gesenius's Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon (Léxico Hebraico e Caldeu de Gesenius; traduzido para o inglês por S. Tregelles, 1901, p. 215) diz a respeito de ha·gháh: "Propria[mente] falar consigo mesmo, murmurando e em voz baixa, como é amiúde feito por aqueles que estão refletindo." — Veja Sal 35:28; 37:30; 71:24; Is 8:19; 33:18.

O apóstolo Paulo disse a Timóteo que ponderasse sua conduta, seu ministério e seu ensino, ou meditasse nisso. Timóteo, como superintendente, tinha de ser extraordinariamente cuidadoso de ensinar doutrina salutar e de que seu modo de vida fosse exemplar. — 1Ti 4:15.

Meditação Errada. Depois de os apóstolos Pedro e João terem sido detidos pelo capitão do templo, e os governantes judeus os terem ameaçado e lhes ordenado que não ensinassem mais à base do nome de Jesus, os apóstolos retornaram aos outros discípulos. Estes oraram a Deus, citando as palavras proféticas de Davi, dizendo: " 'Por que se tumultuaram as nações e meditaram os povos coisas vãs?' . . . Mesmo assim, tanto Herodes como Pôncio Pilatos, com homens das nações e com povos de Israel, ajuntaram-se realmente nesta cidade contra o teu santo servo Jesus, a quem ungiste, a fim de fazerem as coisas que a tua mão e conselho predeterminaram que ocorressem." — At 4:1-3, 18, 21, 23-28.

As "coisas vãs" mencionadas aqui são indicadas pelo contexto não como as coisas que as pessoas normalmente procuram na vida, mas as coisas despojadas de tudo o que é bom — na realidade, pensar, falar e tentar lutar contra Jeová e os servos dele — coisas totalmente fúteis. — At 4:25.

O Rei Davi disse a respeito daqueles que o odiavam e que procuravam matá-lo: "O dia inteiro murmuram [uma forma de ha·gháh] enganos." (Sal 38:12) Estas meditações não eram meras ideias passageiras. Estavam profundamente arraigadas no coração deles, estando eles inclinados para com este empenho iníquo. O escritor de Provérbios diz a respeito de tais homens: "Seu coração está meditando a assolação e seus próprios lábios estão falando desgraça." — Pr 24:2.

Jesus disse aos que o odiavam: "Por que estais raciocinando essas coisas em vossos corações?" (Mr 2:8) O apóstolo Paulo diz a respeito de todos os que querem 'suprimir a verdade de modo injusto': "Tornaram-se inanes nos seus raciocínios e o seu coração ininteligente ficou obscurecido." Tal meditação mostra ser fatal para os que se entregam a ela. — Ro 1:18, 21.

MEDO. Veja TEMOR.

MEDOS, MÉDIA. Os medos eram uma raça ariana, portanto, do tronco jafético e evidentemente descendentes de Madai, filho de Jafé. (Gên 10:2) Estavam relacionados com os persas em raça, língua e religião.

Como povo, os medos só começaram a aparecer na história bíblica no oitavo século AEC, ao passo que a primeira menção deles em registros seculares disponíveis remonta ao tempo do rei assírio Salmaneser III, contemporâneo do Rei Jeú (c. 904-877 AEC). Evidências arqueológicas e outras são encaradas como indicando sua presença no planalto iraniano a partir de aproximadamente meados do segundo milênio AEC.

Geografia. Embora suas fronteiras sem dúvida flutuassem, a antiga região da Média basicamente ficava ao O e ao S do mar Cáspio, separada da costa daquele mar pela cordilheira do Elburz. No NO, evidentemente se estendia além do lago Urmia até o vale do rio Araques, ao passo que no seu termo O os montes Zagros serviam de barreira entre a Média e a terra da Assíria, e as baixadas do Tigre; ao L ficava uma grande região desértica, e ao S o país de Elão.

A terra dos medos era assim principalmente um planalto montanhoso com a altitude média de 900 a 1.500 m acima do nível do mar. Uma parte considerável desta terra é uma estepe árida, onde há pouca precipitação pluvial, embora haja planícies férteis muito produtivas. A maioria dos rios flui para o grande deserto central, onde suas águas se dissipam em brejos e pântanos que secam no verão quente e deixam depósitos de sal. As barreiras naturais tornavam a defesa relativamente fácil. A cordilheira ocidental é a mais elevada, com numerosos picos de mais de 4.270 m de altitude, mas o cume mais elevado, o monte Demavend (5.771 m) se encontra na cordilheira do Elburz, perto do mar Cáspio.

Principais Ocupações. Evidentemente, naquele tempo como agora, a maioria das pessoas viviam em pequenas aldeias ou eram nômades, e a principal ocupação era a criação de gado. Textos cuneiformes que relatam incursões assírias na Média apresentam tal quadro e mostram que a excelente raça de cavalos criada pelos medos era um dos principais prêmios procurados pelos invasores. Rebanhos e manadas de ovelhas, de cabras, de jumentos, de mulos e de vacas também pastavam nos bons pastos dos altos vales. Em relevos assírios, os medos são às vezes representados usando o que parece serem capas de pele de ovelhas sobre as suas túnicas, e com botas altas com cordões, equipamento necessário para o trabalho pastoril nos planaltos, onde os invernos traziam neves e intenso frio. A evidência arqueológica mostra que os medos possuíam hábeis trabalhadores em bronze e ouro.

História. Os medos não deixaram praticamente nenhuns registros escritos; o que se sabe deles deriva do registro bíblico, de textos assírios e também dos historiadores gregos, clássicos. Os medos parecem ter-se constituído em numerosos pequenos reinos sob chefes tribais, e os jactanciosos relatos dos imperadores assírios Shamshi Adad V, Tiglate-Pileser III e Sargão II referem-se às suas vitórias sobre certos chefes de cidade da distante terra dos medos. Depois da vitória assíria sobre o reino de Israel, em 740 AEC, os israelitas foram enviados ao exílio em lugares na Assíria e "nas cidades dos medos", algumas delas sendo então vassalos da Assíria. — 2Rs 17:6; 18:11.

Os esforços dos assírios de subjugar "os insubmissos medos" continuaram sob o rei assírio Esar-Hadom, filho de Senaqueribe, e evidentemente contemporâneo do Rei Manassés, de Judá (716-662 AEC). Numa das suas inscrições, Esar-Hadom fala de "um distrito na borda do deserto de sal, que jaz na terra dos distantes medos, na beirada do monte Bikni, o monte de lápis-lazúli, . . . poderosos chefes que não se haviam submetido ao meu jugo, — eles mesmos, junto com seu povo, seus cavalos de montaria, seus bois, suas ovelhas, seus jumentos e seus camelos (bactrianos), — enorme despojo, eu levei para a Assíria. . . . Meu tributo e meu imposto reais eu lhes impus, anualmente." — Ancient Records of Assyria and Babylonia (Registros Antigos da Assíria e de Babilônia), de D. D. Luckenbill, 1927, Vol. II, pp. 215, 216.

Segundo o historiador grego Heródoto (I, 96), os medos tornaram-se um reino unido sob um governante chamado Dêioces. Alguns historiadores modernos acreditam que Dêioces seja o governante chamado Daiaukku nas inscrições. Ele foi capturado e deportado para Hamate, por Sargão II, em resultado duma incursão assíria na região da Média. Todavia, a maioria dos peritos acha que foi só no tempo de Ciaxares (ou Kyaxares, neto de Dêioces, segundo Heródoto [I, 102, 103]) que os reis da Média começaram a se unir sob determinado governante. Mesmo então talvez fossem apenas como os pequenos reis de Canaã, que às vezes lutavam sob a direção de determinado rei, embora ainda mantivessem um considerável grau de independência. — Veja Jos 11:1-5.

Os medos haviam aumentado em força apesar das incursões assírias, e começaram a ser então os rivais mais perigosos da Assíria. Quando Nabopolassar, de Babilônia, pai de Nabucodonosor, se rebelou contra a Assíria, Ciaxares, o medo, juntou suas forças às dos babilônios. Depois de os medos capturarem Assur, no 12.º ano de Nabopolassar (634 AEC), Ciaxares (chamado Ú-ma-kis-tar nos registros babilônicos) reuniu-se com Nabopolassar junto à cidade capturada, e eles "estabeleceram uma entente cordiale [entendimento cordial]". (Assyrian and Babylonian Chronicles [Crônicas Assírias e Babilônicas], de A. K. Grayson, 1975, p. 93) Beroso (conhecido através de Polistor e Abideno, ambos citados por Eusébio) diz que o filho de Nabopolassar, Nabucodonosor, casou-se com a filha do rei medo, o nome dela sendo Amitis (ou Amuhea, segundo Abideno). (Eusébio, Chronicorum liber prior, editado por A. Schoene, Berlim, 1875, col. 29, linhas 16-19, col. 37, linhas 5-7) Os historiadores discordam, porém, quanto a se Amitis era filha de Ciaxares, ou do filho deste, Astíages.

Junto com os babilônios, derrotam a Assíria. Depois de batalhas adicionais contra os assírios, finalmente, no 14.º ano de Nabopolassar (632 AEC), as forças conjuntas dos medos e dos babilônios conquistaram Nínive. (Sof 2:13) A resistência assíria foi transferida para Harã (uns 360 km) ao O, mas, embora a Assíria recebesse ajuda do Egito, os esforços de continuar com o domínio assírio foram baldados, e o Império Assírio foi dividido entre os medos e os babilônios. (Na 2:8-13; 3:18, 19) Os medos parecem ter tomado a parte setentrional do território, ao passo que os babilônios tomaram a parte sul e sudoeste, incluindo a Síria e a Palestina. Ciaxares avançou depois na Ásia Menor até o rio Hális, onde uma guerra com a Lídia resultou num impasse e o Hális se tornou o termo no extremo O do Império Medo. Este império estendia-se então sobre a maior parte do planalto iraniano, o norte da Mesopotâmia, a Armênia e a Capadócia.

Perdem a posição dominante para os persas. Nesta época, os medos, tendo por capital Ecbátana (Esd 6:2), ocupavam a posição dominante sobre os aparentados persas, que haviam ocupado a região ao S da Média. Tanto Heródoto (I, 107, 108), como Xenofonte (Cyropaedia [Ciropédia], I, ii, 1), historiadores gregos, relatam que o sucessor de Ciaxares, Astíages (chamado Ishtumegu nos textos cuneiformes) dera sua filha Mandane em casamento ao governante persa Cambises, o que resultou no nascimento de Ciro (II). Ciro, ao se tornar rei de Anxã, uma província persa, uniu as forças persas no esforço de se livrar do jugo médio. A Crônica de Nabonido indica que "o exército de Ishtumegu [Astíages] se revoltou" contra este e o entregou "em cadeias" a Ciro, que depois se apoderou da capital da Média. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 305) Daquele ponto em diante, a Média se uniu com a Pérsia para formar o Império Medo-Persa. Assim, a visão recebida pelo profeta Daniel assemelhou aptamente a potência dupla da Medo-Pérsia a um carneiro de dois chifres, sendo o mais alto dos chifres aquele "que subira depois", representando a ascendência dos persas e seu domínio no império pelo restante da sua existência. — Da 8:3, 20.

No entanto, a evidência indica que Ciro concedeu posições de poder e autoridade aos medos, de modo que estes continuaram a reter uma medida considerável de destaque dentro do seu governo. Assim, o profeta Daniel interpretou para o Rei Belsazar a escrita críptica na parede como predizendo a divisão do Império Babilônico e de este ser entregue "aos medos e aos persas", e, em outros lugares do livro de Daniel, os medos continuam a ser alistados primeiro na frase "a lei dos medos e dos persas". (Da 5:28; 6:8, 12, 15) No século seguinte, o livro de Ester (Est 1:3, 14, 18, 19) inverte a ordem, com uma exceção (Est 10:2), em que os medos são alistados como historicamente precedendo os persas.

Junto com os persas derrotam Babilônia. No oitavo século AEC, o profeta Isaías predissera que Jeová suscitaria contra Babilônia "os medos, que reputam a própria prata como nada e que, quanto ao ouro, não se agradam dele. E seus arcos despedaçarão até mesmo os moços". (Is 13:17-19; 21:2) O termo "medos", aqui, pode muito bem incluir os persas, assim como os historiadores clássicos gregos costumavam usar o termo para abranger tanto os medos como os persas. Desprezarem eles a prata e o ouro evidentemente indica que, no que se referia a Babilônia, o objetivo principal deles era a conquista, não o despojo, de modo que nenhum suborno ou oferta de pagar tributo podia demovê-los da sua determinação. Os medos, iguais aos persas, usavam o arco como arma principal. Os arcos de madeira, embora às vezes montados com bronze ou cobre (veja Sal 18:34), provavelmente 'despedaçaram os moços de Babilônia' com uma chuva de flechas, individualmente polidas para penetrar ainda mais fundo. — Je 51:11.

Pode-se notar que Jeremias (51:11, 28) menciona os "reis da Média" entre os que atacariam Babilônia, o plural talvez indicando que, mesmo sob Ciro, um ou vários reis medos subordinados talvez continuassem a existir, situação que não era incompatível com os costumes antigos. (Veja também Je 25:25.) Verificamos também que, quando Babilônia foi capturada pelas forças conjuntas de medos, persas, elamitas e outras tribos vizinhas, foi um medo chamado Dario quem foi "constituído rei sobre o reino dos caldeus", evidentemente designado pelo Rei Ciro, o persa. — Da 5:31; 9:1; veja DARIO N.º 1.

Conquistados por Alexandre, o Grande. No tempo do Rei Assuero (que se acredita ter sido Xerxes I), ainda se fazia referência à "força militar da Pérsia e da Média", sendo o conselho privado do rei formado por "sete príncipes da Pérsia e da Média", e as leis ainda eram conhecidas como "as leis da Pérsia e da Média". (Est 1:3, 14, 19) Em 334 AEC, Alexandre, o Grande (ou: Magno), obteve suas primeiras vitórias decisivas sobre as forças persas, e em 330 AEC ocupou a Média. Após a sua morte, a parte meridional da Média passou a fazer parte do Império Selêucida, ao passo que a parte setentrional tornou-se um reino independente. Embora a Média fosse dominada ora pelos partos, ora pelo Império Selêucida, Estrabão, geógrafo grego, indicou que uma dinastia dos medos continuou no primeiro século EC. (Geography [Geografia], 11, XIII, 1) Em Jerusalém, em Pentecostes do ano 33 EC, estavam presentes medos, junto com partos, elamitas e pessoas de outras nacionalidades. Visto que são chamados de "judeus, homens reverentes, de toda nação", talvez fossem descendentes dos judeus exilados em cidades dos medos, após a conquista assíria de Israel, ou talvez alguns fossem prosélitos da crença judaica. — At 2:1, 5, 9.

Por volta do terceiro século EC, os medos se haviam fundido com o restante da nação dos iranianos, deixando assim de existir como povo distinto.

MEETABEL [provavelmente: Deus É Benfeitor].

1. Filha da mulher Matrede e esposa do rei edomita Hadar (Hadade). — Gên 36:31, 39; 1Cr 1:50.

2. Antepassado (provavelmente avô) do Semaías contratado por Tobias e Sambalá para tentar induzir Neemias a pecar por medo. — Ne 6:10-14.

MEFAATE. Cidade originalmente designada aos rubenitas, mas depois concedida aos levitas meraritas. (Jos 13:15, 18; 21:34, 36, 37; 1Cr 6:77-79) Nos dias de Jeremias, uns oito séculos mais tarde, Mefaate estava sob controle moabita. (Je 48:21, 24) Possivelmente é identificada com Tell Jawa, uns 11 km ao S de ʽAmman (Rabá). A vizinha Khirbet Nefaʽa (ou: Qureiyat Nafiʽ) talvez preserve o nome antigo.

MEFIBOSETE.

1. Um dos dois filhos do Rei Saul com Rispa, filha de Aiá. (2Sa 21:8) Estava entre os sete descendentes de Saul que Davi entregou aos gibeonitas para expiar a tentativa de Saul, de aniquilá-los. (Veja GIBEÃO, GIBEONITAS.) Os gibeonitas expuseram Mefibosete e os outros seis membros da família de Saul "no monte perante Jeová", depois de matá-los "nos primeiros dias da sega, no início da sega da cevada". (Veja Núm 25:4.) No entanto, Rispa agiu para manter afastados as aves e os animais selvagens, e Davi, mais tarde, mandou juntar os ossos deles e sepultá-los com os de Saul e de Jonatã na sepultura de Quis. — 2Sa 21:1-14.

2. Filho de Jonatã; neto do Rei Saul. Quando a notícia da morte de Saul e de Jonatã chegou de Jezreel, a aia de Mefibosete tomou o menino de cinco anos e fugiu em pânico. Nesta ocasião, 'ele sofreu uma queda e ficou manco' de ambos os pés. (2Sa 4:4) Por vários anos, Mefibosete morou na casa de Maquir, filho de Amiel, em Lo-Debar. Davi soube disso por Ziba, ex-servo da casa de Saul. Sem dúvida, lembrando-se do seu pacto com Jonatã (1Sa 20:12-17, 42), Davi quis usar de benevolência para com quem tivesse 'sobrado da casa de Saul'. Mefibosete foi levado perante Davi, e quando o rei explicou que era seu desejo usar de benevolência para com Mefibosete por devolver-lhe "todo o campo de Saul", e por fazê-lo 'comer constantemente pão à sua mesa', Mefibosete respondeu humildemente: "Que é o teu servo para teres virado a tua face para o cão morto tal como eu sou?" Todavia, em harmonia com a determinação de Davi no assunto, Ziba e todos os que moravam na sua casa (inclusive 15 filhos e 20 servos) tornaram-se servos de Mefibosete, a quem se entregou a propriedade de Saul. Depois disso, ele morou em Jerusalém e constantemente comia à mesa do rei. — 2Sa 9.

Quando Davi fugiu de Jerusalém por causa da conspiração de Absalão, Ziba foi ao encontro dele, fornecendo-lhe suprimentos. Respondendo às indagações de Davi sobre o paradeiro de Mefibosete, Ziba disse: "Eis que está morando em Jerusalém; pois ele disse: 'É hoje que a casa de Israel me dará de volta o domínio real de meu pai.'" Em vista disso, o rei disse a Ziba: "Eis que é teu tudo o que pertence a Mefibosete." (2Sa 16:1-4) Mefibosete foi ao encontro de Davi, quando o rei voltou a Jerusalém, e o relato diz que "ele não tinha cuidado dos seus pés, nem tinha cuidado do seu bigode, nem tinha lavado as suas roupas desde o dia em que o rei foi embora até o dia em que veio em paz". Quando Davi perguntou por que Mefibosete não tinha ido com ele, Mefibosete explicou que o seu servo o enganara, e ele disse também: "De modo que ele caluniou o teu servo diante do meu senhor, o rei. Meu senhor, o rei, porém, é como um anjo do verdadeiro Deus" (isto é, veria o assunto na luz verdadeira). Davi, evidentemente reconhecendo a inocência de Mefibosete, alterou seu primeiro decreto por dizer: "Tu e Ziba deveis compartilhar o campo." Ao que Mefibosete respondeu: "Que ele fique até com o inteiro, agora que meu senhor, o rei, veio em paz para a sua casa." — 2Sa 19:24-30; compare isso com Pr 18:17; 25:8-10.

Quando os gibeonitas quiseram matar os descendentes de Saul, para expiar a tentativa iníqua daquele rei contra eles, Davi teve compaixão para com Mefibosete, por causa do juramento de Jeová entre Davi e Jonatã, e ele poupou Mefibosete. (2Sa 21:7, 8) As Escrituras não fornecem nenhuma informação adicional sobre Mefibosete, embora a família de Saul continuasse a existir até uma geração posterior, através do filho de Mefibosete, Mica (Micá). (2Sa 9:12; 1Cr 9:39-44) Evidentemente, Mefibosete também tinha o nome de Meribe-Baal, conforme 1 Crônicas 8:34 e 9:40 parecem indicar.

MEGIDO. Uma das mais importantes cidades da Terra da Promessa, situada a uns 90 km ao N de Jerusalém e 31 km ao SE da atual cidade de Haifa. Foi construída num terreno de um pouco mais de 4 ha, no alto duma elevação hoje conhecida como Tell el-Mutesellim (Tel Megiddo), que se eleva a quase 21 m acima do vale abaixo. — FOTOS e MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 953.

Estratégica. Situada neste lugar estratégico, que sobreleva e domina a fértil parte ocidental do vale de Jezreel (a planície de Esdrelom, também conhecida como "vale plano de Megido"; 2Cr 35:22; Za 12:11), controlava facilmente as principais rotas comerciais e militares que cruzavam ali. Tanto a história bíblica como os registros seculares contam que os exércitos de muitas nações travaram batalhas decisivas ao redor de Megido, por causa da sua posição dominante. Perto deste lugar, "junto às águas de Megido", o juiz Baraque derrotou as poderosas forças de Jabim, sob Sísera, as quais incluíam 900 carros equipados com foices de ferro. (Jz 4:7, 13-16; 5:19) Foi em Megido que o Rei Acazias, de Judá, morreu depois de ser mortalmente ferido perto de Ibleão, às ordens de Jeú. (2Rs 9:27) Em Megido, o Rei Josias, de Judá, foi mortalmente ferido quando interceptou o exército egípcio sob o Faraó Neco, que estava a caminho de ajudar os assírios junto ao rio Eufrates. — 2Rs 23:29, 30; 2Cr 35:22.

Em diversas ocasiões durante a sua longa história, conforme mostram as escavações arqueológicas, Megido era muito fortificada. Descobriram-se ruínas que mostram que ela tinha antigamente muralhas de 4 a 5 m de espessura, que mais tarde foram aumentadas para mais de 7,5 m de espessura, partes delas ainda tinham mais de 3,3 m de altura quando foram encontradas.

Portão salomônico em Megido, similar aos encontrados em Hazor e em Gezer.

História. A primeira menção de Megido alista seu rei entre os 31 que Josué derrotou na conquista inicial da Terra da Promessa. (Jos 12:7, 8, 21, 24) Quando a terra foi distribuída, Megido, junto com suas aldeias dependentes, tornou-se uma cidade encravada pertencente à tribo de Manassés, embora ficasse no território de Issacar. (Jos 17:11; 1Cr 7:29) No entanto, durante o período dos juízes, Manassés não conseguiu expulsar os cananeus deste baluarte. No máximo, quando Israel se tornou forte, os habitantes desta cidade foram arregimentados para trabalhos forçados. — Jz 1:27, 28.

Sob o reinado de Davi, quando as fronteiras do reino foram estendidas aos seus plenos limites, todos os elementos cananeus dentro da Terra da Promessa foram subjugados, inclusive Megido. Isto permitiu que Salomão incluísse Megido no quinto distrito mencionado para suprir a casa real de alimentos durante um mês do ano. — 1Rs 4:7, 8, 12.

Salomão também fortificou Megido, e ela talvez se tornasse uma das suas cidades de carros em que alguns dos seus 12.000 corcéis ficavam estabulados. (1Rs 9:15-19; 10:26) Em Megido, os arqueólogos encontraram restos bem extensos do que alguns peritos (mas não todos) acham ter sido estábulos capazes de acomodar mais de 450 cavalos. Primeiro, estas estruturas foram atribuídas ao tempo de Salomão, mas, muitos arqueólogos posteriores as relegam a um período mais adiante, talvez ao tempo de Acabe.

A profecia de Zacarias (12:11) fala dum 'grande lamento' que ocorreu "no vale plano de Megido", que pode ser uma referência ao lamento por causa do Rei Josias, que foi morto ali em batalha. (2Rs 23:29, 30) Há uma ligeira diferença na grafia hebraica de Megido no livro de Zacarias. Em vez da grafia convencional hebraica de Meghid·dóh, consta Meghid·dóhn, uma forma prolongada similar à encontrada em Revelação (Apocalipse) 16:16. — Veja HAR-MAGEDON.

MEÍDA. Antepassado duma família de netineus, cujos "filhos", ou descendentes, retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico a Judá, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 52; Ne 7:54.

MEIGUICE, SUAVIDADE. Disposição ou maneiras brandas, o contrário da rudeza ou dureza. A meiguice, ou suavidade, está intimamente relacionada com a humildade e a mansidão.

A meiguice, ou suavidade, é um requisito para o servo de Deus, especialmente para aquele que ocupa uma posição de responsabilidade como superintendente. O apóstolo Paulo declarou que "o escravo do Senhor não precisa lutar, porém, precisa ser meigo [gr.: é·pi·on] para com todos". (2Ti 2:24) A pessoa meiga não é espalhafatosa, barulhenta ou imoderada. Moisés, homem do verdadeiro Deus, embora não manifestasse a disposição correta em todos os casos, "era em muito o mais manso de todos os homens na superfície do solo". (Núm 12:3; Sal 90:cab.) Em certa ocasião, disse-se que sua fala era como "chuvas suaves sobre a relva". — De 32:2.

Em 1 Tessalonicenses 2:7, Paulo descreveu a si mesmo e seus companheiros como tornando-se "meigos entre vós [tessalonicenses], como a mãe lactante que acalenta os seus próprios filhos". Isto se dava porque tinham verdadeiro amor àqueles que ensinavam, bem como preocupação com o desenvolvimento espiritual deles. (1Te 2:8) A palavra é·pi·oi (traduzida "meigos") ocorre no Textus Receptus, em Tischendorf, em Merk e em alguns manuscritos. De acordo com W. E. Vine, a palavra é·pi·os "era usada frequentemente pelos escritores gregos como caracterizando uma babá com crianças provadoras, ou um professor com estudantes refratários, ou pais para com seus filhos. Em I Tes. 2:7, o Apóstolo usa-a para a conduta dele mesmo e dos seus comissionários para com os conversos em Tessalônica". — Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine), 1981, Vol. 2, p. 145.

Todavia, em 1 Tessalonicenses 2:7, o texto grego de Westcott e Hort, bem como certos manuscritos, rezam né·pi·oi, "criancinhas". Sobre isso observou The New International Dictionary of New Testament Theology (O Novo Dicionário Internacional da Teologia do Novo Testamento): "Há duas leituras de 1 Tes. 2:7: (a) ēpioi (fomos meigos na vossa companhia); (b) nēpioi (criancinhas). A palavra precedente termina com n, e parece provável que este n tenha sido repetido por engano no copiar. Além disso, a interpretação da segunda leitura leva a dificuldades. Porque no v. 7b, não é a si mesmo, mas os tessalonicenses que Paulo compara a 'filhos'; ele e seus colegas eram como ama (trophos)." — Editado por C. Brown, 1975, Vol. 1, p. 282.

Não Fraqueza. A meiguice não denota fraqueza. Requer força e disposição para ser meigo, ou suave, com outros, e apaziguá-los, ou não ferir os seus sentimentos, especialmente quando sob provocação. Em 2 Samuel 18:5, Davi, homem de guerra, por causa do seu amor paterno, ordenou a Joabe que lidasse com suavidade com seu filho rebelde, Absalão. A palavra hebraica ('at), neste caso, refere-se a uma ação branda ou a um movimento suave. O apóstolo Paulo, embora meigo, não era fracalhão, conforme atestado pela sua capacidade de falar de modo bem firme quando havia necessidade, por exemplo, quando escreveu a primeira e a segunda cartas à congregação cristã em Corinto.

Força Unificadora. É agradável e resulta em paz quando se fala e age com suavidade. Alguém assim é acessível, não intimidativo, e seus modos contribuem para a edificação espiritual dos outros. Dureza, rudeza, espalhafato e vulgaridade são fatores divisórios e repelem os outros. Mas a meiguice, ou suavidade, atrai e unifica. Fala-se de Jeová como reunindo os seus cordeiros e como carregando-os ao colo (o que se refere às amplas dobras da parte superior da vestimenta, em que os pastores às vezes carregavam cordeirinhos). (Is 40:11) Seu Filho Jesus Cristo disse a Jerusalém: "Quantas vezes quis eu ajuntar os teus filhos, assim como a galinha ajunta os seus pintinhos debaixo de suas asas!" "Mas", acrescentou ele, "vós não o quisestes". (Mt 23:37) Por isso, receberam um tratamento duro às mãos do exército romano, quando sua cidade foi desolada, em 70 EC.

Falsa Suavidade. Suavidade no tom e nas maneiras, tal como falar com voz macia, nem sempre é prova de verdadeira suavidade. Ela é uma qualidade que, para ser cabalmente genuína, tem de proceder do coração. Enquanto Jó, servo de Deus, sofria às mãos de Satanás, numa prova da sua integridade a Deus, ele foi verbalmente atacado por três companheiros. Eles acusaram Jó de pecado secreto, iniquidade e obstinação, dando também a entender que ele era apóstata, e que os filhos dele sofreram a morte às mãos de Deus por serem iníquos. Ainda assim, um dos três, Elifaz, disse a Jó: "Não te bastam as consolações de Deus ou a palavra falada suavemente contigo?" (Jó 15:11) De modo que pelo menos parte da conversa deles talvez fosse em tom brando, mas era dura no conteúdo, portanto, não genuinamente suave.

MEIR [possivelmente: Preço]. Homem da tribo de Judá, filho de Quelube (Calebe) e "pai de Estom". — 1Cr 4:1, 11.

ME-JARCOM [Águas de Jarcom]. Alguns peritos acreditam que Me-Jarcom, no território de Dã (Jos 19:40, 41, 46), seja o Nahr el-ʽAuja (Nahal Yarqon), que deságua no mar Mediterrâneo uns 6 km ao NNE de Jope. Suas cabeceiras, que estão entre as maiores fontes da Palestina, emergem a uns 20 km no interior, perto do lugar sugerido de Afeque (N.º 3).

Outra opinião é que o texto hebraico original, assim como a Septuaginta grega, talvez rezasse 'e no oeste [ou: junto ao mar] Jarcom'. Tell Qasileh (Tel Qasila), situado dentro dos limites de Tel Aviv-Yafo (Jope), tem sido apresentado como possível identificação de Jarcom.

MEL, FAVO DE MEL. O mel de abelha é uma substância líquida, doce, viscosa, produzida pelas abelhas. O mel é mencionado nas Escrituras Hebraicas pelas palavras nó·feth (mel fluido, ou mel de favo) e devásh. Esta última palavra talvez se refira não só ao mel de abelha, mas também ao xarope de frutas. (Le 2:11 n) Nas Escrituras Gregas usa-se mé·li, junto com o adjetivo á·gri·os, "silvestre", para denotar o mel de abelhas silvestres.

O Favo de Mel. O favo de mel é uma maravilha de engenharia; revela a incomparável sabedoria e capacidade do Criador, de colocar tal instinto de "engenharia" e de construção na abelha-de-mel. A forma hexagonal dos alvéolos é ideal para conter a máxima quantidade de mel com o mínimo de cera de abelha, material de que são feitas as paredes dos alvéolos. Na construção do favo, a cera de abelha é produzida em glândulas especiais no corpo dela. A cera exsuda de poros no corpo, formando pequenas escamas brancas. A abelha, com as pernas, leva essas escamas às mandíbulas. Então mastiga a cera e a coloca na parte do favo em construção. As paredes do favo têm a espessura de apenas um terço de um milímetro, mas podem sustentar um peso 30 vezes maior ao delas.

As abelhas-de-mel constroem seus ninhos em lugares diversos, inclusive árvores, rochas, e, num caso, mesmo a carcaça dum animal, o qual evidentemente não era mais carniça, mas secara ao sol. Esta foi a carcaça do leão da qual Sansão comeu mel. — Jz 14:8, 9.

Mel. O mel de abelha é produzido do néctar tirado de flores e frutas. No processo do recolhimento do néctar e ao ser depositado no favo, acrescentam-se certas substâncias químicas do corpo da abelha. Parte da água evapora do néctar, e as substâncias químicas transformam o néctar em mel. A cor e o sabor do mel variam segundo a fonte do néctar. O mel é facilmente assimilado pelo organismo e rapidamente convertido em energia.

A maioria das referências bíblicas ao mel de abelha é ao mel silvestre, tal como João, o Batizador, comia no ermo. (Mt 3:1, 4) A qualidade energizante do mel é ilustrada no caso do filho do Rei Saul, Jonatã, o qual, esgotado da batalha, provou um pouco de mel. Imediatamente, seus olhos "começaram a clarear". (1Sa 14:25-30) Este alimento energizante é alistado entre as provisões que Deus forneceu ao seu povo no ermo. Ali, onde existiam poucas árvores, o povo podia comer mel tirado "dum rochedo", isto é, dos favos de mel que as abelhas tinham construído em lugares rochosos. — De 32:13.

Uso Ilustrativo. As propriedades curativas do mel são comparadas a declarações afáveis e à sabedoria, não só por causa da sua doçura e excelente sabor, mas também por causa das suas qualidades salutares. Declarações afáveis são espiritualmente salutares, assim como o mel é bom para o organismo físico. O escritor de Provérbios diz: "Declarações afáveis são um favo de mel, doces para a alma e uma cura para os ossos." — Pr 16:24; 24:13, 14.

A doçura e o prazer de comer mel são aplicados de forma ilustrativa em todas as Escrituras. Exemplos disso se encontram em Ezequiel 3:2, 3; e Revelação (Apocalipse) 10:9. Muitas vezes se menciona o mel de favo, porque é considerado superior em sabor, doçura e fartura, em comparação com o mel que por algum tempo ficou exposto ao ar. Salientando a qualidade boa e agradável das palavras da donzela sulamita, o pastor que a amava falava delas como "mel de favo", gotejando de seus lábios. (Cân 4:11) As decisões judiciais de Jeová são tão excelentes, salutares e benéficas, que são até mesmo "mais doces do que o mel e o mel escorrendo dos favos". (Sal 19:9, 10) Suas declarações são 'mais suaves para o paladar do que o mel para a boca'. — Sal 119:103.

Embora o mel seja bom, comê-lo em excesso pode causar náuseas (Pr 25:16), e comer dele demais é comparado a pessoas que buscam a sua própria glória. — Pr 25:27.

O capítulo 5 de Provérbios usa a doçura do mel de favo para ilustrar a tentação para a imoralidade sexual a que a "mulher estranha" pode expor um homem com seus atrativos, usando encanto e palavras macias. Isto é um excelente aviso para os cristãos hoje em dia. "Os lábios duma mulher estranha estão gotejando como favo de mel e seu paladar é mais macio do que o azeite. Mas o efeito posterior dela é tão amargo como o absinto; é tão afiado como uma espada de dois gumes. Seus pés descem à morte", diz o sábio. As palavras e ações macias, melosas, induzem o homem ao ato imoral, de modo que "de repente vai ele atrás dela, igual ao touro que chega ao abate". — Pr 5:3-5; 7:21, 22.

Mel de Frutas. A palavra hebraica devásh pode referir-se também ao suco, ou xarope, de frutas — figos, tâmaras e assim por diante. Frequentemente, o contexto habilita o leitor a determinar se a referência é a mel de abelha, ou não. Evidentemente, em Levítico 2:11 proíbe-se oferecer no altar xarope de frutas, por causa da sua tendência de fermentar. Que não se fala aqui de mel de abelha é indicado pelo versículo seguinte, que inclui o proibido "mel" entre as primícias a serem oferecidas a Jeová. Visto que a maior parte do mel consumido pelos israelitas era mel silvestre, não o cultivado, o "mel" oferecido como primícias, na ocasião em que Ezequias incentivou o povo a apoiar o sacerdócio, sem dúvida, era o suco ou xarope de frutas. — 2Cr 31:5.

Terra de Leite e Mel. A descrição da Palestina como "terra que mana leite e mel", muitas vezes repetida nas Escrituras, é apropriada, porque esta terra não somente estava bem suprida do produto de abelhas, mas também de xarope de frutas. (Êx 3:8; Le 20:24; De 11:9; Jos 5:6) Pelo visto, faz-se referência a este último como produto trocado pelas mercadorias de Tiro. — Ez 27:2, 17; veja ABELHA.

MELANCIA [hebr.: 'avat·tí·ahh]. Grande fruto alongado ou esférico, de casca dura, com muitas sementes e polpa doce, aquosa. Era um dos alimentos que a multidão mista e os israelitas anelavam enquanto no ermo, depois de saírem do Egito. (Núm 11:4, 5) Melancias (Citrullus vulgaris) são cultivadas há tempos no Egito e em outras partes do Oriente Médio.

MELATIAS [Jah Proveu Escape]. Gibeonita que ajudou em reparar parte da muralha de Jerusalém sob a supervisão de Neemias, em 455 AEC. — Ne 3:7.

MELEÁ. Antepassado do lado materno de Jesus Cristo, que viveu pouco depois do Rei Davi. — Lu 3:31.

MELEQUE [Rei]. Um dos filhos de Micá e descendente do Rei Saul, de Israel, sendo na realidade o bisneto de Jonatã, filho de Saul. — 1Cr 8:33-35; 9:39-41.

MELQUI [do hebr., significando "Meu Rei"]. Nome de dois antepassados do lado materno de Jesus Cristo.

1. "Filho" (ou descendente) de Adi e pai (ou antepassado) de Néri. — Lu 3:27, 28.

2. "Filho" (ou descendente) de Janai e pai (ou antepassado) de Levi. — Lu 3:23, 24.

MELQUISEDEQUE [Rei da Justiça]. Rei da antiga Salém e "sacerdote do Deus Altíssimo", Jeová. (Gên 14:18, 22) Ele é o primeiro sacerdote mencionado nas Escrituras; ocupava esta posição algum tempo antes de 1933 AEC. Sendo o rei de Salém, que significa "Paz", Melquisedeque é identificado pelo apóstolo Paulo como "Rei da Paz", e, à base do seu nome, como "Rei da Justiça". (He 7:1, 2) Entende-se que a antiga Salém tenha sido o núcleo da posterior cidade de Jerusalém, e seu nome foi incorporado no de Jerusalém, que às vezes é chamada de "Salém". — Sal 76:2.

Depois de Abrão (Abraão) derrotar Quedorlaomer e seus reis confederados, o patriarca veio à Baixada de Savé, ou "à Baixada do rei". Ali, Melquisedeque "trouxe para fora pão e vinho", e abençoou Abraão, dizendo: "Bendito seja Abrão do Deus Altíssimo, Produtor do céu e da terra; e bendito seja o Deus Altíssimo, que entregou os teus opressores na tua mão!" Abraão entregou então ao rei-sacerdote "um décimo de tudo", isto é, "dos principais despojos" que conseguira na sua guerra bem-sucedida contra os reis aliados. — Gên 14:17-20; He 7:4.

Tipificado o Sacerdócio de Cristo. Numa notável profecia messiânica, o juramento afiançado de Jeová ao "Senhor" de Davi é: "Tu és sacerdote por tempo indefinido à maneira de Melquisedeque!" (Sal 110:1, 4) Este salmo inspirado deu aos hebreus motivos para considerar o prometido Messias como aquele em quem se conjugariam os cargos de sacerdote e de rei. O apóstolo Paulo, na carta aos hebreus, eliminou qualquer dúvida a respeito da identidade de quem fora predito, falando de "Jesus, que se tornou sumo sacerdote para sempre à maneira de Melquisedeque". — He 6:20; 5:10; veja PACTO.

Designação direta. Evidentemente, foi Jeová quem designou Melquisedeque para ser sacerdote. Ao considerar a condição de Jesus como o grande Sumo Sacerdote, Paulo mostrou que nenhum homem assume esta honra "por si mesmo, mas apenas quando é chamado por Deus, assim como também Arão foi". Ele explicou também que "o Cristo não se glorificou a si mesmo por se tornar sumo sacerdote, mas foi glorificado por aquele que falou com referência a ele: 'Tu és meu filho; hoje eu me tornei teu pai'", e o apóstolo, a seguir, aplica as palavras proféticas do Salmo 110:4 a Jesus Cristo. — He 5:1, 4-6.

'Recebeu dízimos de Levi.' A condição sacerdotal de Melquisedeque não estava vinculada com o sacerdócio de Israel, e, conforme as Escrituras salientam, era superior ao sacerdócio arônico. Um fator que indica isso é a deferência demonstrada a Melquisedeque por Abraão, antepassado de toda a nação de Israel, inclusive da tribo sacerdotal de Levi. Abraão, "amigo de Jeová", que se tornou "pai de todos os que têm fé" (Tg 2:23; Ro 4:11), deu um décimo, ou "dízimo", a este sacerdote do Deus Altíssimo. Paulo mostra que os levitas coletavam dízimos de seus irmãos, que também procediam dos lombos de Abraão. Todavia, ele salienta que Melquisedeque "que não derivou deles a sua genealogia tomou dízimos de Abraão", e, "por intermédio de Abraão, até mesmo Levi, que recebe dízimos, pagou dízimos, porque ele estava ainda nos lombos de seu antepassado quando Melquisedeque foi ao encontro dele". Assim, embora os sacerdotes levíticos recebessem dízimos do povo de Israel, eles, conforme representados pelo seu antepassado, Abraão, pagaram dízimos a Melquisedeque. Além disso, a superioridade do sacerdócio de Melquisedeque é mostrada por ele abençoar Abraão, Paulo indicando que "o menor é abençoado pelo maior". Esses fatores estão entre os que tornam Melquisedeque um tipo apropriado do grande Sumo Sacerdote Jesus Cristo. — He 7:4-10.

Sem predecessores nem sucessores. Paulo indica claramente que a perfeição era inalcançável por intermédio do sacerdócio levítico, tornando assim necessário o aparecimento dum sacerdote "à maneira de Melquisedeque". Ele indica que Cristo veio de Judá, tribo não sacerdotal, mas, citando a similaridade de Jesus com Melquisedeque, mostra que ele tornou-se sacerdote, "não segundo a lei dum mandamento dependente da carne, mas segundo o poder duma vida indestrutível". Arão e seus filhos tornaram-se sacerdotes sem juramento, mas o sacerdócio conferido a Cristo foi ordenado por um juramento de Jeová. Também, ao passo que os sacerdotes levíticos morriam e precisavam de sucessores, o ressuscitado Jesus Cristo, "por continuar vivo para sempre, tem o seu sacerdócio sem quaisquer sucessores", e, portanto, é capaz de "salvar completamente os que se aproximam de Deus por intermédio dele, porque está sempre vivo para interceder por eles". — He 7:11-25.

Em que sentido é que Melquisedeque não tinha "nem princípio de dias nem fim de vida"?

Paulo destacou um fato notável a respeito de Melquisedeque, ao dizer sobre ele: "Sem pai, sem mãe, sem genealogia, não tendo nem princípio de dias nem fim de vida, mas tendo sido feito semelhante ao Filho de Deus, permanece sacerdote perpetuamente." (He 7:3) Igual a outros humanos, Melquisedeque nasceu e morreu. Todavia, não se fornecem os nomes de seu pai e de sua mãe, nem se revelam seus ancestrais e sua posteridade, e as Escrituras não contêm informações sobre o início dos seus dias ou o fim da sua vida. De modo que Melquisedeque, apropriadamente, podia prefigurar Jesus Cristo, que tem um sacerdócio infindável. Assim como Melquisedeque não tem predecessor ou sucessor registrados no seu sacerdócio, assim tampouco Cristo foi precedido por um sumo sacerdote semelhante a ele, e a Bíblia mostra que nenhum jamais o sucederá. Além disso, embora Jesus nascesse na tribo de Judá e na linhagem real de Davi, sua linhagem carnal não tinha nenhuma influência sobre o seu sacerdócio, nem foi em virtude da genealogia humana que os cargos de sacerdote e de rei se conjugaram nele. Estas coisas foram resultado do juramento do próprio Jeová feito a ele.

Um conceito que aparece nos targuns de Jerusalém e que obteve ampla aceitação entre os judeus e outros, é que Melquisedeque era Sem, filho de Noé. Sem vivia naquele tempo e até mesmo sobreviveu a Sara, a esposa de Abraão. Também, Noé especificamente abençoou Sem. (Gên 9:26, 27) Mas esta identificação não foi confirmada. Resta o fato de que a nacionalidade, a genealogia e a descendência de Melquisedeque não são reveladas nas Escrituras, e isto por um bom motivo, porque assim ele podia tipificar a Jesus Cristo, o qual, pelo juramento afiançado de Jeová, "se tornou sumo sacerdote para sempre à maneira de Melquisedeque". — He 6:20.

MEME [מ; final, ם] (mem). A 13.ª letra do alfabeto hebraico. É uma das cinco letras hebraicas que têm uma forma diferente quando usada como última letra duma palavra. No hebraico, ela aparece como letra inicial em cada um dos oito versos do Salmo 119:97-104; veja HEBRAICO.

MEMUCÃ. Principal porta-voz dos sete príncipes medo-persas na ocasião em que Vasti se negou a obedecer ao Rei Assuero. (Est 1:13-15) Memucã era da opinião de que Vasti não havia cometido falta apenas contra o rei, mas também contra os príncipes e o povo do império, e que ela devia ser deposta como rainha, para que todas as esposas no império aprendessem a ser obedientes ao marido. O rei e os outros príncipes concordaram com Memucã, e escreveu-se neste sentido um decreto real entre as leis imutáveis dos medos e dos persas. — Est 1:16-22.

Estes "sete príncipes da Pérsia e da Média" eram "versados em lei e em causas jurídicas". Eram os conselheiros mais achegados do rei, "estando sentados em primeiro lugar no reino". (Est 1:13, 14) Que a corte persa tinha tal conselho de sete é confirmado por Esdras 7:14.

MENA. Antepassado distante do lado materno de Jesus Cristo, não muito depois de Davi. — Lu 3:31.

MENAÉM [Consolador]. Filho de Gadi e rei de Israel por dez anos, desde cerca de 790 AEC. Ao saber que Salum tinha assassinado o Rei Zacarias, Menaém foi de Tirza a Samaria e matou ali o assassino. Assumiu então o governo. Evidentemente, durante a primeira parte do seu reinado, Menaém golpeou Tifsa "e a tudo o que havia nela, e o território fora de Tirza, porque não se abriu". Aquela cidade, pelo visto, relutara em abrir o portão para ele. (LXX, Vg, Sy) A população sofreu um tratamento duro: "Estripou todas as suas mulheres grávidas." — 2Rs 15:10, 13-17.

Menaém fazia o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová. Promovia a adoração do bezerro, não se afastando dos pecados de Jeroboão, primeiro rei do reino de dez tribos. Durante o seu reinado, o Rei Pul (Tiglate-Pileser III) invadiu Israel, e Menaém foi obrigado a pagar àquele monarca assírio "mil talentos de prata". (US$ 6.606.000) Ele obteve esta soma por impor uma taxa de 50 siclos de prata a todos "os valentes, poderosos", de Israel. Visto que um talento de prata equivalia cerca de 3.000 siclos, a prata foi obtida de umas 60.000 pessoas. Menaém deu a prata ao rei assírio, "para que as suas mãos se mostrassem com ele para fortalecer o reino na sua própria mão". Ao receber esta quantia, Pul se retirou do país. — 2Rs 15:19, 20.

Menaém é mencionado numa inscrição de Tiglate-Pileser III como "Menaém de Samaria" (Me-ni-hi-im-me [al]Sa-me-ri-na-a-a), sendo alistado ali, junto com o rei sírio Rezon (Ra-hi-a-nu) e o Rei Hirão (Hi-ru-um-mu), de Tiro (diferente do Hirão dos dias de Davi), como governante de quem o monarca assírio afirma ter recebido tributo. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 282, 283) Menaém morreu por volta de 781 AEC, e foi sucedido no trono de Israel por seu filho Pecaías. — 2Rs 15:22.

MENASOM. Veja MNÁSON.

MENDIGO, MENDIGAR. A consideração deste assunto aqui trata do costume habitual de solicitar caridade em público.

O regime patriarcal, que, segundo a Bíblia indica, existia antes e depois do Dilúvio global dos dias de Noé, sem dúvida contribuiu muito para impedir as situações em que pessoas se encontrassem isoladas, em graves apuros e dependentes da caridade pública, e assim refreava o desenvolvimento duma classe pobre. Desde tempos antigos, a hospitalidade para com estranhos ou viajantes parece ter sido praticada bastante livremente; tal hospitalidade pelo menos é refletida nos relatos bíblicos, havendo raras exceções. (Gên 19:1-3; Êx 2:18-20; Jz 19:15-21) O desenvolvimento de cidades contribuiu para o enfraquecimento do regime patriarcal e possivelmente isto, junto com a tendência egoísta de se aproveitar indevidamente da hospitalidade ou caridade dos outros, levou ao surgimento da mendicância na humanidade.

A mendicância, pelo visto, é bem antiga nos países do Oriente. Isto torna tanto mais notável que, nas Escrituras Hebraicas, não há nenhum indício de algum grau de mendicância ou que esta constituísse algum problema na nação de Israel, desde o tempo da formação da nação até que ela foi para o exílio em Babilônia. Quando os israelitas saíram do Egito e da sua escravidão naquela terra, eles foram "pedir [uma forma do verbo hebr. sha·'ál] dos egípcios objetos de prata, e objetos de ouro, e capas. . . . e despojaram os egípcios". (Êx 12:35, 36) No entanto, isto foi feito em harmonia com a ordem e a profecia de Deus, e evidentemente foi encarado como compensação justa pelos seus longos anos de trabalho escravo e pelas injustiças sofridas por eles das mãos dos egípcios. (Êx 3:21, 22; compare isso com De 15:12-15.) Não estabeleceu precedente para a prática da mendicância.

A Lei mosaica continha uma vigorosa legislação a favor dos pobres, a qual, quando observada, eliminava todas as causas da mendicância. (Le 19:9, 10; De 15:7-10; 24:19-21; veja DÁDIVAS DE MISERICÓRDIA.) As Escrituras Hebraicas expressam forte confiança nas providências de Deus a favor daqueles que aderem à justiça, assim como Davi exclamou na sua idade avançada: "Não vi nenhum justo completamente abandonado, nem a sua descendência procurando ["a mendigar", Al; uma forma do termo hebr. biq·qésh] pão", embora esses próprios justos sejam mostrados como de mão aberta na sua generosidade. (Sal 37:25, 26; contraste isso com a experiência da Jerusalém apóstata, em La 1:11; 4:4.) Por outro lado, Provérbios 20:4 descreve o preguiçoso como "mendigando no tempo da colheita", e o Salmo 109:10 descreve a execução da punição nos iníquos como obrigando 'seus filhos a andarem errantes, e que eles terão de mendigar, e dos seus lugares desolados terão de buscar alimento'. Nestes últimos dois textos, a palavra "mendigar" traduz a hebraica sha·'ál, termo que basicamente significa "pedir" (Êx 3:22; 1Rs 3:11); todavia, nestes dois casos, dá-se a entender que o pedir é feito da maneira ativa, talvez pública, característica da mendicância.

Parece que durante o período desde o tempo da volta dos judeus do exílio (537 AEC) até o tempo do aparecimento de Jesus no cenário terrestre, desenvolveu-se entre os judeus o conceito de que o ato de dar esmolas, ou fazer dádivas de caridade, tinha em si mesmo mérito para a salvação. Isto é evidenciado pela declaração no livro apócrifo de Eclesiástico (3:30, BJ) (escrito no começo do segundo século AEC), de que "a esmola expia os pecados". Este conceito, sem dúvida, estimulava a mendicância. (Compare isso com as dádivas ostentosas denunciadas por Jesus em Mt 6:2.)

A dominação por potências estrangeiras trouxe ao povo judeu a opressão, e, sem dúvida, causou consideráveis transtornos na aplicação da Lei mosaica a respeito dos direitos sobre terras ancestrais e provisões similares. Isto, junto com filosofias das religiões falsas, que deixavam de inculcar um genuíno amor ao próximo, baseado em princípios (Mt 23:23; Lu 10:29-31), provavelmente também compartilhava a responsabilidade pelo aumento da mendicância na Palestina. Encontramos assim nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs diversas referências a mendigos naquela terra.

Os cegos, os coxos e os adoentados constam entre os mendigos descritos no tempo de Jesus e dos apóstolos. A oftalmia (doença dos olhos ainda comum no Oriente Médio) talvez causasse parte da cegueira entre esses homens. (Mr 10:46-49; Lu 16:20, 22; 18:35-43; Jo 9:1-8; At 3:2-10) Iguais aos mendigos atuais, eles não raro se colocavam ao longo das vias públicas ou perto dos lugares frequentados por multidões, como junto ao templo. Apesar de se destacar o dar esmolas, os mendigos eram desprezados, de modo que o mordomo da parábola de Jesus disse: "Tenho vergonha de mendigar." — Lu 16:3.

Os dois verbos gregos usados com referência à mendicância são aparentados com ai·té·o, que significa "pedir". — Mt 7:7.

A palavra grega pto·khós, usada por Lucas (16:20, 22), ao registrar a referência de Jesus a Lázaro como mendigo, descreve alguém que se agacha e se encolhe, e refere-se aos muito pobres, aos indigentes e aos mendigos. O mesmo termo é usado em Mateus 5:3 com referência aos "cônscios de sua necessidade espiritual ["os indigentes do espírito", n]" ("pobres de espírito", Al). A respeito do uso de pto·khós neste texto, a obra Word Studies in the New Testament (Estudos de Palavras do Novo Testamento; 1957, Vol. I, p. 36), de M. R. Vincent, diz que "é muito vívida e apropriada aqui, indicando assim a completa carência espiritual, a consciência da qual precede a entrada no reino de Deus, e que não pode ser aliviada pelos próprios esforços da pessoa, mas apenas pela livre misericórdia de Deus".

Este mesmo termo também é usado por Paulo em Gálatas 4:9, ao expressar sua preocupação com aqueles que 'retornavam novamente às coisas elementares, fracas e mesquinhas [pto·khá]' praticadas anteriormente. Essas coisas eram "mesquinhas" em comparação com as riquezas espirituais disponíveis por meio de Cristo Jesus.

Embora Jesus e seus apóstolos mostrassem bondade para com mendigos, eles não incentivavam a mendicância; embora aceitassem de bom grado a hospitalidade, não mendigavam. Jesus disse aos que o seguiam apenas para conseguir pão que a preocupação deles não devia ser "pelo alimento que perece, mas pelo alimento que permanece para a vida eterna". (Jo 6:26, 27) Pedro disse a um mendigo coxo, no templo: "Não possuo prata nem ouro, mas o que tenho é o que te dou", usando seus dons espirituais para curar o homem. (At 3:6) Os apóstolos, embora às vezes famintos, sem lar e carentes de roupa, labutavam, 'trabalhando com as próprias mãos, noite e dia, para não ser um fardo para os outros'. (1Co 4:11, 12; 1Te 2:9) A norma entre os cristãos era: "Se alguém não quiser trabalhar, tampouco coma." — 2Te 3:10-12.

MENE. Palavra inicial duma mensagem críptica, inscrita milagrosamente na parede de estuque do salão de banquetes do Rei Belsazar, em Babilônia, na noite de 5 de outubro de 539 AEC (calendário gregoriano), pouco antes da queda da cidade diante dos medos e dos persas. Segundo Daniel, que foi habilitado por Jeová para ler a inscrição e dar a interpretação dela, a escrita rezava: "MENE, MENE, TEQUEL e PARSIM." (Da 5:25) Evidentemente, a inscrição consistia apenas em consoantes, e exigia vocalização inteligente e correta, bem como uma interpretação correta. As palavras em si mesmas literalmente significam: "Uma mina, uma mina, um siclo e meio siclos."

Ao dar a interpretação exata, Daniel disse primeiro: "Esta é a interpretação da palavra: MENE: Deus contou os dias do teu reino e acabou com ele." (Da 5:26) Até mesmo só esta parte da mensagem já deveria ter esclarecido a situação para o Rei Belsazar. Jeová destronara o poderoso Nabucodonosor, que fora mais poderoso do que Belsazar. Portanto, Ele seria capaz de reduzir o número dos dias do reinado de Belsazar, e os do seu corregente e pai, Nabonido. Jeová podia dar fim a esta dinastia. A palavra "MENE" apareceu duas vezes na inscrição, talvez porque a mensagem se aplicava a ambos os governantes no reino de Babilônia naquela época, Nabonido e Belsazar. No entanto, ao dar a interpretação, Daniel usou "MENE" apenas uma vez, possivelmente porque somente Belsazar estava presente nesta ocasião.

A Bíblia não revela por que nenhum dos sábios de Babilônia soube ler a escrita. (Da 5:8) Talvez fosse por causa da natureza críptica da mensagem, ou porque a própria escrita talvez fosse numa letra ou língua desconhecida deles.

MÊNFIS. Uma das capitais do antigo Egito, identificada com as ruínas em Mit Rahiney, a uns 23 km ao S do Cairo, na margem O do rio Nilo. Mênfis, por muito tempo, era a cidade mais importante do "Baixo Egito" (quer dizer, da região do Delta e duma pequena seção ao S dele).

Em Oseias 9:6, a cidade é chamada de Mof, no texto hebraico (vertido "Mênfis" na maioria das traduções em português). Em outros lugares é chamada pela palavra hebraica Nof (Nofe). — Is 19:13; Je 2:16; 44:1; 46:14, 19; Ez 30:13, 16.

História. Segundo uma lenda, contada pelo historiador grego Heródoto (II, 99), Mênfis foi fundada por um governante chamado Menés; no entanto, não se encontrou nenhuma evidência histórica deste suposto fundador da "Primeira Dinastia" de governantes egípcios.

A localização geográfica de Mênfis era ideal para ela ser capital desta terra do Nilo. Situada apenas um pouco ao S do ápice do Delta (quer dizer, do ponto em que o rio Nilo se divide nos seus braços), podia exercer controle não só sobre a região do Delta ao norte, mas também sobre o tráfego no Nilo. O deserto e montanhas dificultavam o acesso à cidade do O, e o próprio Nilo e os morros além dele serviam como proteção no L. De modo que Mênfis, na fronteira entre o Alto (meridional) e o Baixo (setentrional) Egito, antigamente retinha a chave para todo o Egito, bem similar ao atual Cairo numa região próxima.

Comercial. A cidade era um grande centro comercial em toda a sua história, declinando só depois da conquista grega, quando Alexandria, na costa setentrional, tornou-se o porto mais movimentado do país. Segundo alguns historiadores, Mênfis ficou famosa pela sua manufatura de vidro, sendo Roma o principal importador das suas mercadorias. Cultivavam-se também acácias naquela região, para fornecer madeira para a fabricação de mobília, de navios para a marinha do Egito e de armas militares.

Política. Também em sentido político, Mênfis tinha grande destaque, em especial durante o período que os egiptólogos chamam de "Antigo Império" e até o "Médio Império". A maioria dos historiadores acredita que a sede do governo das primeiras dinastias era em Mênfis, embora talvez por algum tempo fosse mudada para Tebas (a bíblica Nô-Amom, a uns 480 km mais ao S). Parece provável que a capital ainda era Mênfis quando Abraão visitou o Egito e teve aquela experiência com o Faraó governante. — Gên 12:10-20.

A evidência bíblica parece indicar que, durante o tempo em que os israelitas passaram no Egito, a capital egípcia se encontrava no Baixo Egito (setentrional), com acesso razoavelmente fácil da terra de Gósen, onde os israelitas moravam. (Gên 47:1, 2; veja GÓSEN N.º 1.) Encontrar-se Moisés com Faraó "à beira do rio Nilo" parece favorecer a ideia de que a capital era Mênfis, em vez de ela se encontrar rio abaixo, na região do Delta (conforme alguns sugerem), porque o Nilo se divide em diversos braços ao chegar ao Delta. — Êx 7:15.

Mênfis, por causa do seu destaque, figura em diversas profecias que envolvem o Egito. Em Jeremias 2:16, o profeta falou que Nofe (Mênfis) e Tafnes (uma cidade na região do Delta) "se alimentavam de [Israel], no alto da cabeça", isto é, despojando Israel e como que tornando-o calvo. Isto significava uma humilhação do professo povo de Deus, acompanhado por lamentos. (Veja 2Rs 2:23; Is 22:12.) No caso tanto do reino setentrional de Israel como do reino meridional (Judá), o Egito, conforme aqui representado por Mênfis e Tafnes, mostrou-se fútil como fonte de esperada ajuda e apoio, enquanto, ao mesmo tempo, mostrava-se disposto a explorar o povo pactuado de Deus para proveitos egoístas. — Os 7:11; Is 30:1-3; 2Rs 23:31-35.

Religiosa. Mênfis era centro de religião e de erudição no Egito, mas, lá no oitavo século AEC, Isaías predisse que a propalada sabedoria dos príncipes (talvez de príncipes sacerdotais) de Nofe (Mênfis) falharia e que o Egito seria desencaminhado. (Is 19:13) Esses conselheiros evidentemente fomentavam um falso senso de segurança no Egito com respeito ao poder agressivo da Assíria.

Encontraram-se em Mênfis monumentos do reinado do rei etíope Tiraca sobre o Egito. Embora Tiraca conseguisse sobreviver ao seu encontro com o rei assírio Senaqueribe, em Canaã (732 AEC; 2Rs 19:9), o filho de Senaqueribe, Esar-Hadom, mais tarde destroçou o exército egípcio, obrigando-o a retirar-se para Mênfis. O registro do próprio Esar-Hadom a respeito do conflito subsequente reza: "Sitiei Mênfis, sua [de Tiraca] residência real, e conquistei-a em meio dia por meio de galerias subterrâneas, brechas e escadas de ataque; destruí[-a], derrubei (suas muralhas) e incendiei-a." (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 293) Pelo que parece, poucos anos depois, as forças egípcias retomaram Mênfis, massacrando a guarnição assíria. Mas, Assurbanipal, filho de Esar-Hadom, marchou para o Egito e expulsou os governantes de Mênfis e os impeliu de volta Nilo acima (para o sul).

Quando a Assíria passou a declinar, em fins do sétimo século AEC, Mênfis voltou a estar sob pleno controle egípcio. Depois que o rei babilônio Nabucodonosor desolou Judá em 607 AEC, refugiados judeus fugiram para o Egito, passando a morar em Mênfis e em outras cidades. (Je 44:1) Jeová, por meio dos seus profetas Jeremias e Ezequiel, condenou-os ao desastre e predisse que Nabucodonosor aplicaria ao Egito um golpe devastador, devendo Mênfis (Nofe) sofrer a plena força do ataque. (Je 44:11-14; 46:13, 14, 19; Ez 30:10-13) Os babilônios que atacariam Mênfis se lançariam confiantemente contra a cidade em plena luz do dia. — Ez 30:16.

Mênfis sofreu de novo uma grave derrota às mãos do rei persa Cambises, em 525 AEC, tornando-se depois a sede duma satrapia persa. A cidade nunca se restabeleceu plenamente dos efeitos desta conquista. Com a ascensão de Alexandria, sob os ptolomeus, Mênfis declinou constantemente, e, por volta do sétimo século da Era Comum, já se tornara vastas ruínas.

Mênfis estava entre as principais cidades sagradas do antigo Egito, ao lado da vizinha Om (Heliópolis). (Gên 41:50) Especialmente importantes eram os santuários dedicados ao deus Ptá e ao touro sagrado, Ápis. O deus Ptá, segundo a "teologia menfita", elaborada pelos sacerdotes de Mênfis, era o criador (compartilhando esta distinção com outros deuses, tais como Tot, Rá e Osíris), e suas atividades mitológicas aparentemente eram modeladas segundo o papel realmente desempenhado pelo Faraó nos assuntos humanos. Historiadores clássicos descrevem o templo de Ptá, em Mênfis, como periodicamente ampliado e embelezado. Era adornado por enormes estátuas.

O touro Ápis, um touro vivo, especialmente marcado, era mantido em Mênfis e adorado como encarnação do deus Osíris, embora em certas lendas também seja relacionado com o deus Ptá. Na sua morte, realizava-se luto público, e fazia-se um impressionante sepultamento do touro na vizinha Sacara. (No século 19, quando se abriu ali o túmulo, os investigadores encontraram os cadáveres embalsamados de mais de 60 touros e vacas.) A escolha dum novo touro Ápis e sua entronização em Mênfis eram uma cerimônia igualmente suntuosa. Esta adoração talvez tenha influenciado os israelitas rebeldes na sua ideia de adorar a Jeová por meio dum bezerro de ouro. (Êx 32:4, 5) A adoração da deusa estrangeira Astarte também tinha destaque em Mênfis, e havia templos dedicados a deuses e deusas egípcios, tais como Hator, Amom, Imotep, Ísis, Osíris-Socar, Anúbis e outros. Toda esta série de deidades antigas e seus ídolos haviam de ser destruídos por julgamento divino. — Ez 30:13.

Sítios de sepultamento da realeza. A evidência da importância de Mênfis no passado pode ser vista nas vastas áreas de sepultamento perto do lugar antigo, áreas que contêm umas 20 pirâmides ou túmulos monumentais de reis. A proeminência de Mênfis como sítio de sepultamento de reis, sem dúvida, é refletida na profecia de Oseias contra o Israel sem fé, no oitavo século AEC, no sentido de que "o próprio Egito os reunirá; Mênfis, da sua parte, os sepultará". (Os 9:6) Entre as pirâmides encontradas em Sacara, perto de Mênfis, está a Pirâmide dos Degraus, construída pelo Rei Zoser ("Terceira Dinastia"), considerada a mais antiga construção livre de pedras conhecida. Mais ao ONO de Mênfis existem as muito mais impressionantes pirâmides de Gizé e a Grande Esfinge. Atualmente, esses túmulos, e construções similares de pedra, são tudo o que resta para indicar a passada glória religiosa de Mênfis. Conforme predito, a cidade tornou-se "mero assombro". — Je 46:19.

MENINA DO OLHO. Orifício na colorida íris do olho. Parece escura, porque atrás da menina do olho (ou: pupila) está o interior escuro do olho. A menina do olho muda de tamanho conforme a íris se ajusta às condições de luz. A luz penetra pela córnea transparente, passa pela menina do olho e pela lente, ou cristalino.

A palavra hebraica 'i·shóhn (De 32:10; Pr 7:2), quando usada junto com 'á·yin (olho), significa literalmente "homenzinho do olho"; de modo similar, em Lamentações 2:18 usa-se bath (filha) com a ideia de "filha do olho", ambas as expressões referindo-se à menina do olho, ou pupila. As duas expressões são juntadas para ênfase no Salmo 17:8 ('i·shóhn bath-'á·yin), significando literalmente "homenzinho, filha do olho" ("menina do olho", NM). Evidentemente, isto faz referência à pequeníssima imagem de si mesma que a pessoa pode ver refletida naquela parte do olho de outrem.

O olho é extremamente delicado e sensível; até mesmo um cabelinho ou uma partícula de poeira entre a pálpebra e o globo ocular é prontamente notado. A parte transparente do olho (a córnea) que cobre a menina do olho tem de ser protegida e cuidada, porque, se esta parte for lesada ou se tornar enuviada devido a uma doença, poderá resultar numa visão distorcida, ou em cegueira. A Bíblia usa com força, e ainda assim com delicadeza, a expressão "a menina dos teus olhos" ao falar daquilo que mais precisa ser protegido. A lei de Deus deve ser tratada assim. (Pr 7:2) Deuteronômio 32:10, mencionando o cuidado paterno de Deus para com Israel, diz que Ele resguardava esta nação "como a menina do seu olho". Davi orou pedindo ser protegido e cuidado por Deus como "a menina do olho". (Sal 17:8) Ele queria que Jeová agisse prontamente a seu favor quando sofresse um ataque inimigo. (Veja Za 2:8, onde se usa a palavra hebraica ba·váth 'á·yin, "globo [do olho]".) — Veja OLHO.

MENINO ÓRFÃO DE PAI. Não havendo na casa homem para sustentá-los e proteger seus interesses, o menino órfão de pai e a viúva podiam mais facilmente ficar sujeitos a opressões e dificuldades. Portanto, seu bem-estar foi providenciado sob a Lei, a qual assegurava justiça para o menino órfão de pai, para a viúva e para o residente forasteiro, e incluía também provisões para o sustento deles. (Êx 22:22-24; De 24:17) As coisas deixadas para a respiga no campo, nas oliveiras e no vinhedo estavam à disposição desses pobres. (De 24:19-21) Oferecia-se-lhes um convite especial para participarem na abundante e anual Festividade do Recolhimento (Festividade das Barracas), durante a qual podiam banquetear-se nos festejos que acompanhavam a celebração. (De 16:9-14) Todo terceiro ano, o dízimo especial, que os israelitas normalmente consumiam em Jerusalém, era depositado dentro dos portões da sua cidade. O menino órfão de pai tinha o direito legal a uma parcela deste dízimo. — De 14:28, 29; 26:12, 13.

Quão importante é a preocupação amorosa com os órfãos entre os servos de Deus?

Visto que era fácil desperceber estes orfanados e indefesos, Jeová usou a expressão "menino órfão de pai" para descrever o grau de justiça de Israel ou de seu desvio dela. Quando a nação usufruía boa saúde espiritual, cuidava-se do menino órfão de pai. Quando se pervertia a justiça no país, certamente se negligenciaria o menino órfão de pai, e isto era sintomático de decadência nacional. (Sal 82:3; 94:6; Is 1:17, 23; Je 7:5-7; 22:3; Ez 22:7; Za 7:9-11; Mal 3:5) A maldição de Jeová recaía sobre os que oprimiam o menino órfão de pai. (De 27:19; Is 10:1, 2) Jeová descreve a si mesmo como Redentor (Pr 23:10, 11), Ajudador (Sal 10:14) e Pai (Sal 68:5) de tais. Ele é Quem executa o julgamento a favor deles (De 10:17, 18), tendo misericórdia para com eles (Os 14:3), aliviando-os (Sal 146:9) e preservando-os vivos. — Je 49:11.

Um dos sinais identificadores do verdadeiro cristianismo é sua consideração para com os que perderam marido ou pais. O discípulo Tiago escreve aos cristãos: "A forma de adoração que é pura e imaculada do ponto de vista de nosso Deus e Pai é esta: cuidar dos órfãos e das viúvas na sua tribulação, e manter-se sem mancha do mundo." — Tg 1:27.

A palavra grega para órfão (or·fa·nós) é usada em sentido figurado em João 14:18, e tem tradução diversa como "desolados" (AS), "abandonados" (BLH), "sem amigos" (AT) e "orfanados" ou "órfãos" (NM n; Al; BJ; CBC).

MENSAGEIRO. Portador de mensagem, quer oral, quer escrita, ou alguém enviado numa incumbência. (Gên 32:3-6; Jz 6:34, 35; 11:12-27; 2Sa 5:11; 1Rs 19:2; 2Rs 19:8-14; Lu 7:18-24; 9:52) Às vezes, correios serviam nesta qualidade. (2Cr 30:6-10; Je 51:31) Para comunicações mais rápidas, despachavam-se mensageiros a cavalo. (2Rs 9:17-19; Est 8:10-14; veja CORREIO.) Os mensageiros dos tempos antigos incluíam arautos, que proclamavam publicamente decretos régios ou estatais. (Da 3:4-6; 5:29) Mensageiros podiam ser enviados para pedir paz (Is 33:7), para solicitar ajuda militar (2Rs 16:7; 17:4), ou para exigir tributo ou a rendição duma cidade (1Rs 20:1-9; 2Rs 18:17-35). Tinham trânsito livre para realizar sua missão. Maus-tratos infligidos a mensageiros reais em visita de cortesia a outra nação eram considerados sérios o bastante para provocar guerra. — 2Sa 10:1-7; veja EMBAIXADOR.

Tanto a palavra hebraica como a grega para "mensageiro" podiam referir-se a mensageiros espirituais, ou anjos. (Sal 104:4; Jo 1:51) Se a referência é a mensageiros humanos ou a angélicos pode ser determinado pelo contexto. Por exemplo, em Isaías 63:9, o "mensageiro pessoal" de Jeová evidentemente é seu anjo, porque este mensageiro salvou os israelitas. — Veja Êx 14:19, 20.

Além de Jeová usar mensageiros angélicos para transmitir informações a homens e mulheres na terra, e para realizar outras tarefas (veja ANJO), Ele repetidas vezes empregou mensageiros humanos. Seus profetas e seus sacerdotes eram mensageiros dele para a nação de Israel. (2Cr 36:15, 16; Ag 1:13; Mal 2:7) As declarações de Seus profetas tinham cumprimento certo, porque Jeová é "Aquele que executa completamente o conselho dos seus próprios mensageiros". — Is 44:26.

"Mensageiro do Pacto." Em cumprimento de Malaquias 3:1, João, o Batizador, apareceu como o mensageiro que preparava o caminho perante Jeová Deus por aprontar os judeus para a vinda do principal representante Dele, Jesus Cristo. — Mt 11:10, 11; Mr 1:1-4; Lu 7:27, 28.

Jesus Cristo, como o predito "mensageiro do pacto", veio ao templo e o limpou. (Mt 21:12, 13; Mr 11:15-17; Lu 19:45, 46) Evidentemente, ele era o mensageiro do pacto abraâmico, porque foi à base deste pacto que os judeus foram os primeiros a obterem a oportunidade de se tornarem herdeiros do Reino. Este era o pacto para o qual Pedro apelou quando exortou os judeus a se arrependerem. É também digno de nota que Zacarias, pai de João, o Batizador, se referiu ao pacto abraâmico com relação a Jeová suscitar "um chifre de salvação na casa de Davi", chifre que era o Messias. — Veja Mt 10:5-7; 15:24; 21:31; Lu 1:69-75; At 3:12, 19-26.

MENSTRUAÇÃO. Eliminação periódica do mênstruo (sangue, fluido e alguns tecidos residuais) do útero da mulher. A menstruação das mulheres em geral é uma ocorrência mensal, dando-se aproximadamente a cada quatro semanas. As moças começam a menstruar na puberdade, e esta função normalmente continua até a menopausa, cada fluxo menstrual durando de três a cinco dias.

As Escrituras associam a menstruação com a impureza e imundície (Le 12:2; Ez 22:10; 36:17), sendo que às vezes se traduz uma forma da palavra hebraica relacionada com ela (nid·dáh) por "impureza menstrual". (Le 15:25, 26) Uma forma de outro termo hebraico, da·wéh, que pode indicar doença (La 5:17), é traduzida por "mulher menstruada". (Le 15:33; Is 30:22) A frase "a coisa costumeira das mulheres" também se refere à menstruação. — Gên 31:35.

"Impura" sob a Lei. Segundo a Lei mosaica, a mulher era considerada impura por sete dias durante a menstruação normal. A cama e todos os outros objetos em que a mulher menstruada se deitasse ou sentasse também ficavam impuros. Quem tocasse nela ou nos objetos que ela tornara impuros tinha de lavar suas vestes e banhar-se, e permanecia impuro até à noitinha. Se a impureza menstrual viesse a estar sobre um homem que se tivesse deitado com ela (como quando o homem, inadvertidamente, tinha relações sexuais com a esposa no começo da menstruação), ele ficava impuro por sete dias, e a cama em que se deitasse era considerada impura.

A mulher era também considerada impura durante um fluxo irregular de sangue, ou "um fluxo por mais tempo do que a sua impureza menstrual", porque neste caso tornava impuros os objetos em que se deitava ou sentava, bem como as pessoas que tocavam nestes objetos impuros. Depois de parar o fluxo anormal, ela devia contar sete dias, e então se tornava pura. No oitavo dia, a mulher levava duas rolas ou dois pombos novos ao sacerdote, que fazia expiação por ela, apresentando uma destas criaturas a Jeová como oferta pelo pecado e a outra como oferta queimada. — Le 15:19-30; veja LIMPO, LIMPEZA.

Quando um homem e uma mulher deliberadamente coabitavam durante a impureza menstrual dela, eles eram decepados na morte. (Le 18:19; 20:18) A proibição da união sexual durante a menstruação provavelmente contribuía para a saúde, talvez prevenindo, por exemplo, inflamações das partes genitais, a uretrite simples. Os regulamentos da Lei que envolviam a menstruação ou o fluxo de sangue talvez lembrassem aos israelitas também a santidade do sangue. Estas regras não discriminavam contra as mulheres, porque os homens ficavam sujeitos à impureza por fluxos ocasionais. (Le 15:1-17) Os regulamentos a respeito da menstruação mostravam de modo especial a consideração que Jeová tem para com as mulheres. O marido cristão, embora não esteja sob a Lei (Ro 6:14; Ef 2:11-16), fará igualmente bem em tomar em consideração os ciclos mensais e as vicissitudes da esposa, morando com ela "segundo o conhecimento" e atribuindo-lhe honra "como a um vaso mais fraco, o feminino". — 1Pe 3:7.

MENTE. Faculdade do cérebro com a qual colhemos informações, raciocinamos e tiramos conclusões. A palavra "mente" verte diversas palavras gregas aparentadas que expressam atributos da mente tais como a faculdade de raciocínio, a capacidade intelectual, a percepção mental, a inteligência, a razão, o pensamento, a intenção, a recordação, o estado ou conceito mental, a opinião e a inclinação, atitude ou poder mentais. Embora diversas traduções às vezes usem a palavra "mente", nos mesmos casos outras traduções empregam os acima mencionados termos descritivos e específicos. No texto hebraico, as palavras "lembrar-se" ou "considerar" em certos lugares podem ser traduzidas por expressões tais como "tencionar" e "intentar". Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a palavra "mente" ocorre em algumas versões como tradução de palavras hebraicas que, literal e corretamente, são "coração", "alma" e "espírito". — Compare isso com De 4:39, n; 2Rs 9:15, Ro; Ez 20:32, MC; veja CORAÇÃO.

"Novos na Força Que Ativa a Vossa Mente." A inclinação da mente do homem imperfeito propende para o pensamento errado. A Bíblia chama isso de 'carnalidade da mente'. (Col 2:18) Lembra-se aos cristãos que eles anteriormente eram inimigos de Deus, porque sua mente se fixava em obras iníquas. — Col 1:21.

A mente do homem "físico" (literalmente: "de alma"), em contraste com o homem "espiritual", inclina-se para coisas materialistas. A força que ativa a sua mente formou-se nele em parte por herança e em parte pelas coisas que se lhe ensinaram, e pelas quais passou. Quando se lhe apresenta um assunto, esta força impele ou inclina a sua mente numa direção materialista ou carnal. Por isso ordena-se aos cristãos a 'serem feitos novos na força [espírito] que ativa a sua mente'. (Ef 4:23) Esta força ativante, pelo estudo da Palavra de verdade de Deus e pela operação do espírito de Deus, pode ser mudada para que a atitude mental dominante da pessoa se incline na direção certa. Daí, quando se apresenta à pessoa um assunto, a mente estará inclinada por esta força em direção ao proceder espiritual correto. (1Co 2:13-15) Tal pessoa passa a ter "a mente de Cristo", que sempre foi ativado pela força correta, sempre tendo inclinação mental espiritual. — 1Co 2:16; Ro 15:5.

O mero conhecimento ou a capacidade intelectual não bastam para que se granjeie o favor de Deus. Estas coisas, por si sós, não transformam a mente na direção da vontade de Deus. (Ro 12:2) Jeová diz: "Farei perecer a sabedoria dos sábios e repelirei a inteligência dos intelectuais." (1Co 1:19) Obter verdadeira compreensão (Pr 4:5-7; 1Co 2:11), sabedoria e bom senso requer a ajuda do espírito de Deus. — Ef 1:8, 9.

A 'Lei da Mente'. O apóstolo Paulo chama de lei da mente aquilo que dirige o funcionamento desta mente renovada. Ela controla a nova mente segundo a "lei de Deus", e a nova mente se deleita nesta lei. Mas, a "lei do pecado", que opera na carne decaída, luta contra a 'lei da mente', de modo que há um conflito constante no íntimo do cristão. Pode ele sair-se vitorioso? Sim, "graças a Deus, por intermédio de Jesus Cristo, nosso Senhor"! A benignidade imerecida de Deus, à base do sacrifício resgatador de Cristo, fornece o perdão dos pecados da carne, e, adicionalmente, a ajuda do espírito santo. O cristão está numa situação diferente daquela do não cristão, conforme Paulo resume: "Assim, pois, com a mente, eu mesmo sou escravo da lei de Deus, mas com a minha carne, escravo da lei do pecado." — Ro 7:21-25; Gál 5:16, 17.

Como é que a mente vence esta batalha? O apóstolo esclarece o assunto adicionalmente, dizendo: "Os que estão de acordo com a carne fixam as suas mentes nas coisas da carne, mas os que estão de acordo com o espírito, nas coisas do espírito. Pois a mentalidade segundo a carne significa morte, mas a mentalidade segundo o espírito significa vida e paz; porque a mentalidade segundo a carne significa inimizade com Deus, visto que [a carne decaída, imperfeita] não está em sujeição à lei de Deus, de fato, nem pode estar. . . . Então, se morar em vós o espírito daquele que levantou a Jesus dentre os mortos, aquele que levantou a Cristo Jesus dentre os mortos também vivificará os vossos corpos mortais por intermédio do seu espírito que reside em vós." — Ro 8:5-11.

O "Sentido" do Espírito. Em Romanos 8:26, 27, Paulo mostra que, quando os servos de Deus oram, eles talvez nem sempre saibam exatamente em prol de que devem orar assim como necessitam. Mas Deus sabe que desejam que se faça a vontade Dele. Sabe também o que seus servos necessitam. No passado, Deus fez registrar na sua Palavra muitas orações inspiradas, que expressam a sua vontade ou intenção para com eles. Portanto, ele aceita essas orações inspiradas como aquilo que os do seu povo devem querer pedir e orar, e, concordemente, ele as atende. Deus conhece os de coração reto e sabe também o sentido das coisas que ele fez seu espírito falar por meio dos escritores da Bíblia. Conhece "o sentido [ideia, pensamento] do espírito" quando o espírito assim "implora", ou intercede, por eles.

Amar com a Mente. Jeová predisse que se faria um novo pacto, sob o qual o espírito santo operaria para escrever Suas leis na mente e no coração dos do seu povo. (He 8:10; 10:16) Deste modo, eles são capazes de cumprir aquilo de que toda a Lei e os Profetas dependiam, a saber, 'amar a Jeová, teu Deus, de todo o teu coração, de toda a tua alma e de toda a tua mente, e o teu próximo como a ti mesmo'. (Mt 22:37-40; Lu 10:27, 28) É preciso amar a Deus de todo o coração (desejos, sentimentos e emoções da personalidade íntima), de toda a alma (vida e todo o ser) e de toda a mente (as faculdades intelectuais). Esta última frase significa que os servos de Deus não somente devem amar com sentimento, emoção e força, mas que também têm de usar sua mente de forma vigorosa para absorver conhecimento de Deus e de Cristo (Jo 17:3), para entender, ou compreender (Mr 12:33; Ef 3:18), para servir a Deus e seus propósitos, e para participar na proclamação das boas novas. São aconselhados a 'manter a mente fixa nas coisas de cima' (Col 3:2), a 'avigorar a mente para atividade', e a 'manter inteiramente os sentidos'. (1Pe 1:13) O apóstolo Pedro compreendeu a importância de 'acordarem as claras faculdades de pensar' para guardar na mente as coisas aprendidas. (2Pe 3:1, 2) Eles têm de 'ter bem em mente a presença do dia de Jeová'. — 2Pe 3:11, 12.

Quando Paulo falou dos dons milagrosos do espírito exercidos na primitiva congregação cristã, ele enfatizou a necessidade de se usar a mente. Disse que, se orasse numa língua que não pudesse traduzir, sua mente seria infrutífera. Também, se cantasse louvores desta maneira, como poderia ajudar o ouvinte que não entendia essa língua? Por conseguinte, ele disse que antes falaria cinco palavras com a sua mente, a fim de instruir outros, do que dez mil palavras numa língua. Daí, ele exortou seus irmãos a ficarem plenamente desenvolvidos na capacidade de entendimento. — 1Co 14:13-20.

Ordena-se aos servos de Jeová a estarem "aptamente unidos na mesma mente e na mesma maneira de pensar". (1Co 1:10; Fil 2:2; 1Pe 3:8) Isto significa, naturalmente, estarem unidos no que se refere aos interesses da adoração pura — nas coisas importantes — não nos gostos individuais ou em questões menores que se resolvem quando se atinge a madureza. (Ro 14:2-6, 17) Devem ser "da mesma mentalidade no Senhor" (Fil 4:2), não altercar, mas "pensar em acordo". — 2Co 13:11.

Os cristãos devem esforçar-se a conhecer melhor a Deus, ao ponto em que ele revela sua maneira de pensar sobre os assuntos. (Ro 11:33, 34; 16:25, 26) E devem ter a atitude mental de obediência e humildade de Jesus Cristo; assim terão "a mente de Cristo". (1Co 2:15, 16) Pedro aconselha: "Visto que Cristo sofreu na carne, armai-vos também da mesma disposição mental." — 1Pe 4:1.

Mente Obtusa ou Corrupta. Os israelitas, junto ao monte Sinai, por não terem o coração plenamente voltado para Jeová, tinham percepção mental obtusa, assim como aqueles que continuavam sob a Lei, depois de Deus, mediante Jesus, a ter abolido. (2Co 3:13, 14) Não compreenderam que Jesus era o indicado pela Lei. (Col 2:17) Quanto a homens que não aprovam reter Deus com um conhecimento exato, mas que adoram coisas criadas, "Deus entregou-os a um estado mental reprovado"; tais estão mentalmente em escuridão, fazendo todo tipo de coisas improfícuas e impróprias. (Ro 1:28; Ef 4:17, 18) Homens de mentalidade corrupta resistiam à verdade mesmo no tempo de Moisés, e, mais tarde, homens assim combatiam o verdadeiro cristianismo, alguns até mesmo afirmando ser cristãos, mas tentando dividir e desfazer as congregações. (2Ti 3:8; Fil 3:18, 19; 1Ti 6:4, 5) Tendo mente e consciência aviltadas, para eles nada é limpo; por isso falam improficuamente, no empenho de enganar a mente dos verdadeiros cristãos por tentarem submetê-los à servidão a ideias de homens. (Tit 1:10-16) Por este motivo, é essencial que todos os cristãos, e especialmente os que ocupam posições de responsabilidade, sejam ajuizados. — Ro 12:3; 1Ti 3:2; Tit 2:6; 1Pe 4:7.

"O deus deste sistema de coisas", o Diabo, é responsável por cegar a mente dos incrédulos para com a iluminação das boas novas a respeito do Cristo. (2Co 4:4) Portanto, existe o perigo de que este arqui-inimigo de Deus seduza cristãos por sua astúcia, a fim de corromper a mente deles para se afastarem "da sinceridade e da castidade que se devem ao Cristo". (2Co 11:3) Concordemente, é necessário que os cristãos mostrem estar unidos na mesma mentalidade e razoabilidade, continuando em oração, a fim de que a paz de Deus, "que excede todo pensamento", guarde as suas faculdades mentais por meio de Cristo Jesus. — Fil 4:2, 5-7.

Cura e Abertura da Mente. Jesus restaurou a sanidade mental dum homem possesso por demônios, ilustrando seu poder de fazer isso mesmo aos tornados insanos pelos demônios. — Mr 5:15; Lu 8:35.

Ele pode também abrir a mente daqueles que têm fé para compreender o sentido das Escrituras. (Lu 24:45) Os tímidos ou os que se consideram intelectualmente inferiores podem consolar-se com as palavras do apóstolo João: "Sabemos que o Filho de Deus veio e nos deu capacidade intelectual para podermos obter conhecimento do verdadeiro [i.e., Jeová Deus]." — 1Jo 5:20.

Paulo mostrou à congregação coríntia que ele tinha bom juízo, embora parecesse aos olhos deles que 'não tivesse bom juízo' (ou: 'estivesse fora de si') quando se jactou das suas credenciais como apóstolo, algo que o cristão normalmente não faria. Ele explicou que se via obrigado a fazer isso para fazê-los voltar a Deus, para salvá-los de serem afastados. Era assim porque eles haviam recorrido a falsos apóstolos e estavam sendo desviados para a direção errada. — 2Co 5:13; 11:16-21; 12:11, 12, 19-21; 13:10.

MENTIRA. O oposto da verdade. Mentir geralmente envolve dizer uma falsidade a alguém que tem o direito de saber a verdade, e fazer isso com a intenção de enganar ou prejudicar a este ou a outro. A mentira nem sempre precisa ser verbal. Pode ser expressa também em ação, quer dizer, alguém pode viver em mentira. O verbo hebraico que transmite a ideia de falar aquilo que não é verdade é ka·záv. (Pr 14:5) Outro verbo hebraico, sha·qár, significa "tratar ou agir com falsidade", e o substantivo é traduzido "mentira; ilusão; falsidade". (Le 19:11; Sal 44:17; Le 19:12; Sal 33:17; Is 57:4) A palavra hebraica shaw', às vezes traduzida "inveracidade (inverdade); falsidade", refere-se basicamente a algo sem valor, vão, fútil. (Sal 12:2; De 5:20; Sal 60:11; 89:47; Za 10:2) O verbo hebraico ka·hhásh (enganar) evidentemente tem o sentido básico de "mostrar-se desapontador". (Le 19:11; Os 9:2) O termo grego pseú·dos e palavras aparentadas têm que ver com mentira e falsidade.

O pai, ou originador, da mentira é Satanás, o Diabo. (Jo 8:44) Sua mentira, transmitida por meio duma serpente à primeira mulher, Eva, por fim causou a morte desta e de seu marido, Adão. (Gên 3:1-5, 16-19) Essa primeira mentira estava arraigada no egoísmo e no desejo errado. Visava desviar o amor e a obediência do primeiro casal humano para aquele mentiroso, que se apresentara como anjo de luz, como benfeitor. (Veja 2Co 11:14.) Todas as outras mentiras maldosas proferidas desde então refletiram igualmente egoísmo e desejo errado. Proferem-se mentiras para escapar duma punição merecida, para lucrar à custa de outros, e para obter e manter certas vantagens, recompensas materiais ou o louvor de homens.

Especialmente graves têm sido as mentiras religiosas, visto que põem em perigo a vida futura dos enganados por elas. Jesus Cristo disse: "Ai de vós, escribas e fariseus, hipócritas! porque percorreis o mar e a terra seca para fazer um prosélito, e, quando se torna tal, fazeis dele objeto para a Geena duas vezes mais do que vós mesmos." (Mt 23:15) Trocar a verdade de Deus pela "mentira", pela falsidade da idolatria, pode induzir a pessoa a se tornar praticante do que é degradante e vil. — Ro 1:24-32.

O caso dos líderes religiosos do judaísmo, no tempo do ministério terrestre de Jesus, mostra o que pode acontecer quando alguém abandona a verdade. Eles tramaram a morte de Jesus. Daí, quando ele foi ressuscitado, subornaram os soldados que guardaram o túmulo, para que eles ocultassem a verdade e difundissem uma mentira sobre o desaparecimento do corpo de Jesus. — Mt 12:14; 27:1, 2, 62-65; 28:11-15; Mr 14:1; Lu 20:19.

Jeová Deus não pode mentir (Núm 23:19; He 6:13-18), e ele odeia a "língua falsa". (Pr 6:16-19) Sua lei dada aos israelitas exigia uma compensação pelos danos resultantes duma trapaça ou duma mentira maldosa. (Le 6:2-7; 19:11, 12) E quem desse falso testemunho devia receber a punição que queria infligir a outro por meio das suas mentiras. (De 19:15-21) O conceito de Deus sobre a mentira maldosa, conforme refletido na Lei, não mudou. Aqueles que desejam obter a Sua aprovação não podem empenhar-se na prática da mentira. (Sal 5:6; Pr 20:19; Col 3:9, 10; 1Ti 3:11; Re 21:8, 27; 22:15) Não podem viver em mentira, afirmando amar a Deus, ao passo que odeiam seu irmão. (1Jo 4:20, 21) Ananias e Safira, por trapacearem o espírito santo ao mentir, perderam a vida. — At 5:1-11.

Todavia, aqueles que de momento são levados a mentir não se tornam automaticamente culpados dum pecado imperdoável. O caso de Pedro, ao negar Jesus três vezes, ilustra que, quando a pessoa se arrepende sinceramente, Deus a perdoa. — Mt 26:69-75.

Ao passo que a mentira maldosa é definitivamente condenada na Bíblia, isto não significa que a pessoa seja obrigada a divulgar informações verídicas àqueles que não têm direito a elas. Jesus Cristo aconselhou: "Não deis aos cães o que é santo, nem lanceis as vossas pérolas diante dos porcos, para que nunca as pisem debaixo dos seus pés, e, voltando-se, vos dilacerem." (Mt 7:6) Foi por isso que Jesus, em certas ocasiões, refreou-se de dar plenas informações ou respostas diretas a certas perguntas, quando isso poderia ter causado dano desnecessário. (Mt 15:1-6; 21:23-27; Jo 7:3-10) Evidentemente, o proceder de Abraão, Isaque, Raabe e Eliseu, em desinformar ou em reter os plenos fatos dos que não eram adoradores de Jeová, deve ser encarado na mesma luz. — Gên 12:10-19; cap. 20; 26:1-10; Jos 2:1-6; Tg 2:25; 2Rs 6:11-23.

Jeová Deus permite a "operação do erro" para com aqueles que preferem a falsidade, "para que fiquem acreditando na mentira" em vez de nas boas novas sobre Jesus Cristo. (2Te 2:9-12) Este princípio é ilustrado pelo que aconteceu séculos antes no caso do Rei Acabe, de Israel. Profetas mentirosos asseguraram a Acabe êxito na guerra contra Ramote-Gileade, ao passo que o profeta de Jeová, Micaías, predisse o desastre. Conforme revelado numa visão a Micaías, Jeová permitiu que uma criatura espiritual se tornasse "um espírito enganoso" na boca dos profetas de Acabe. Quer dizer, esta criatura espiritual usou os seus poderes sobre eles de modo que não falaram a verdade, mas sim o que eles mesmos queriam dizer e o que Acabe queria ouvir deles. Embora avisado de antemão, Acabe preferiu ser enganado por essas mentiras e pagou com a vida. — 1Rs 22:1-38; 2Cr 18.

MENUOTES. Veja MENUOTITAS.

MENUOTITAS [Lugares de Descanso]. Segundo o texto massorético, parece tratar-se duma família de Judá, descendente através de Sobal. (1Cr

2:4, 52) Mas, alguns peritos preferem emendar o texto hebraico para rezar “manaatitas”, como no versículo 54. (BJ, Mo) E um comentário judaico sobre Crônicas apresenta a versão alternativa, de “que supervisionava metade dos lugares de descanso”, e observa: “Sobal estava encarregado da metade dos caravançarás na terra de Judá.” — Soncino Books of the Bible (Livros da Bíblia, de Soncino), editado por A. Cohen, Londres, 1952, p. 15.

MEOLATITA [De (Pertencente a) Abel-Meolá]. Designação de Adriel (um genro de Saul) e de seu pai Barzilai. (1Sa 18:19; 2Sa 21:8) Evidentemente indica que eles eram da cidade de Abel-Meolá. — Veja ABEL-MEOLÁ.

MEONENIM, ÁRVORE GRANDE DE [Os Que Praticam a Magia]. Uma árvore à vista de Siquém, pela qual passou uma companhia de homens do Rei Abimeleque antes da sua luta contra os proprietários de terras daquela cidade. (Jz 9:34-37) “Árvore grande de Meonenim” traduz as palavras hebraicas 'e·lóhn me'oh·nenim. 'E·lóhn refere-se a árvores grandes em geral, e me'oh·nenim é um particípio que significa “os que praticam a magia”. (Veja De 18:14.) A árvore talvez tenha sido chamada assim porque cananeus ou israelitas apóstatas empenhavam-se ali em práticas mágicas. Alguns peritos relacionam a “árvore grande de Meonenim” também com as “árvores grandes de Moré”, descritas de modo similar como estando na vizinhança de Siquém. — Veja Gên 12:6; 35:4; Jz 9:6.

MEONOTAI. Descendente de Judá, que ‘se tornou pai de Ofra’, sendo assim ou o antepassado paterno de alguém chamado Ofra, ou o fundador dum lugar que tinha este nome. — 1Cr 4:1, 14.

MEQUERATITA. Termo referente a uma pessoa ou a um lugar chamado Mequera, com que Hefer, um dos poderosos de Davi, estava vinculado por descender de tal pessoa ou por ter sido este lugar sua anterior residência. (1Cr 11:26, 36) Alguns peritos sugerem que “mequeratita” talvez seja variante de “maacatita” como em 2 Samuel 23:34.

MERABE [duma raiz que significa “tornar-se muitos (abundantes)”]. A mais velha das duas filhas do Rei Saul. (1Sa 14:49) Evidentemente, Saul prometera dar uma delas em casamento ao homem que derrotasse Golias (1Sa 17:25), e talvez fosse por este motivo que ele ofereceu Merabe a Davi. Depois do encontro com Golias, Davi mostrou ser combatente prudente e bem-sucedido contra os filisteus, tanto assim que Saul “se amedrontou com ele”, ao passo que o povo de Israel e de Judá o amava. (1Sa 18:15, 16) Ao oferecer Merabe a Davi como esposa, Saul instou com ele para que continuasse valente, pensando no íntimo: “Não venha a minha mão a estar sobre ele, mas venha a mão dos filisteus a estar sobre ele”, esperando que Davi morresse em batalha. Davi, humildemente, hesitou em aceitar a oferta de se tornar genro do rei. Acontece que Saul não cumpriu sua promessa, e Merabe nunca se tornou esposa de Davi. O relato declara que a filha mais moça, Mical, “amava a Davi”, o que talvez dê a entender que Merabe não o amava. De qualquer modo, “sucedeu que na ocasião de se dar Merabe, filha de Saul, a Davi, ela mesma já tinha sido dada como esposa a Adriel, o meolatita”. — 1Sa 18:17-20.

Merabe deu à luz cinco filhos para Adriel. Todavia, Davi, mais tarde, entregou esses filhos e mais dois membros da família de Saul aos gibeonitas, que mataram todos os sete. Isto se fez para expiar a tentativa de Saul, de aniquilar os gibeonitas. — 2Sa 21:1-10.

A Irmã de Merabe Cria os Filhos Dela. Segundo o texto massorético, 2 Samuel 21:8 fala de “cinco filhos de Mical, filha de Saul, que ela dera à luz a Adriel”. No entanto, 2 Samuel 6:23 diz que Mical morreu sem ter filhos. Parece que alguns escribas tentaram resolver esta dificuldade por usar o nome de Merabe em lugar do de Mical, em 2 Samuel 21:8. Isto se torna evidente de a Septuaginta grega (edição lagardiana) e dois manuscritos hebraicos rezarem “Merabe” neste versículo. Todavia, uma explanação tradicional de 2 Samuel 21:8, conforme aparece em quase todos os outros manuscritos hebraicos, é como segue:

A irmã de Mical, Merabe, era esposa de Adriel e lhe deu os cinco filhos em questão. Mas, Merabe faleceu cedo, e sua irmã, Mical, rejeitada por Davi e sem filhos, passou a criar, ou a educar, os cinco meninos. De modo que são mencionados como filhos de Mical, em vez de filhos de Merabe. Em harmonia com este conceito sobre 2 Samuel 21:8, a tradução bíblica de Isaac Leeser fala dos “cinco filhos de Mical, a filha de Saul, os quais ela criou para Adriel”, e uma nota de rodapé sobre isso diz: “Uma vez que Mical era esposa de Davi; mas os filhos eram de Merabe, a filha mais velha de Saul, os quais foram provavelmente educados pela irmã dela.” Os targuns rezam: “Os cinco filhos de Merabe (que Mical, filha de Saul, criou), que ela dera à luz.” Outros fatores, não revelados nas Escrituras, talvez influenciassem o modo em que o texto foi redigido.

MERAÍAS [possivelmente: Rebelde]. Sacerdote e cabeça da casa paterna de Seraías, nos dias de Joiaquim, após o retorno dos judeus do exílio babilônico. — Ne 12:12.

MERAIOTE [possivelmente: Rebeldes].

1. Descendente sacerdotal de Arão através de Eleazar; chamado de “filho de Zeraías”. — 1Cr 6:3-7, 52; Esd 7:3, 4.

2. Sacerdote identificado como "filho de Aitube, líder da casa do verdadeiro Deus", e, pelo que parece, o pai de Zadoque. — 1Cr 9:10, 11; Ne 11:11.

3. Fundador duma casa paterna, sacerdotal, cuja cabeça era Helcai, nos dias de Joiaquim. (Ne 12:12, 15) "Meraiote", que era o nome desta casa depois do retorno dos judeus do exílio babilônico, talvez seja uma variante de "Meremote", nome de um dos sacerdotes que acompanharam Zorobabel a Jerusalém, em 537 AEC. — Ne 12:1, 3.

MERARI [duma raiz que significa "ser amargoso"]. Filho de Levi, e irmão de Gérson (Gersom) e Coate. (Gên 46:11; 1Cr 6:1, 16) Visto Merari ser mencionado em terceiro lugar entre os filhos de Levi, ele talvez fosse o mais moço. Foi um dos 70 membros da casa de Jacó "que vieram ao Egito". (Gên 46:8, 11, 26, 27) Merari teve dois filhos, Mali e Musi (Êx 6:19; 1Cr 6:19), e foi o fundador dos meraritas, uma das três principais famílias levíticas. — Núm 26:57.

MERARITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Merari]. Uma das três principais famílias de levitas, descendentes de Merari, filho de Levi, através de Mali e de Musi. (Êx 6:16, 19; Núm 3:20; 26:57, 58) O primeiro recenseamento dos israelitas no ermo alistava 6.200 varões meraritas da idade de um mês para cima, 3.200 deles tendo de 30 a 50 anos e entrando no grupo de serviço "para o serviço na tenda de reunião". (Núm 3:33, 34; 4:42-45) Na época, o maioral deles era Zuriel, e seu acampamento ficava ao lado N do tabernáculo. (Núm 3:35) Durante a peregrinação no ermo, a divisão de três tribos de Judá era a primeira a partir dos acampamentos. Daí, os gersonitas e os meraritas 'partiam como portadores do tabernáculo', seguidos pela divisão de três tribos de Rubem e então pelos levitas coatitas. (Núm 10:14-21) Os meraritas estavam encarregados das armações de painel, das trancas, das colunas, e dos pedestais de encaixe do tabernáculo, bem como de "todos os seus utensílios, e todo o seu serviço", e também das colunas, dos pedestais de encaixe, das estacas de tenda e dos cordões de tenda do pátio. (Núm 3:36, 37) Para transportar esses objetos pesados, eles receberam quatro carroças e oito cabeças de gado. No ermo, eles e os gersonitas estavam "sob a mão" de Itamar, filho de Arão. — Núm 7:6-8.

Na divisão da Terra da Promessa, sob Josué, 12 cidades foram designadas aos meraritas, quatro de cada um dos territórios tribais de Rubem, Gade e Zebulão. Uma delas, Ramote em Gileade (no território de Gade), era "cidade de refúgio". — Jos 21:7, 34-40; 1Cr 6:63, 77-81.

Nos dias de Davi, 220 meraritas, tendo por chefe a Asaías, ajudaram outros levitas a levar a Arca do Pacto da casa de Obede-Edom para Jerusalém. (1Cr 15:1-6, 25) Depois de a Arca ter um lugar de descanso, "Davi deu posições para dirigir o canto na casa de Jeová" a certos meraritas. (1Cr 6:31, 44-47) Outros meraritas foram designados como porteiros. — 1Cr 26:1, 10, 19.

Durante o programa de reforma do Rei Ezequias, de Judá, alguns meraritas estavam entre os levitas que limparam o templo. (2Cr 29:12, 15) Mais tarde, no sétimo século AEC, os meraritas Jaate e Obadias foram encarregados dos consertadores do templo, pelo Rei Josias. — 2Cr 34:12, 13.

Havia meraritas entre os levitas que retornaram do exílio babilônico em 537 AEC. (1Cr 9:14) Mais tarde (em 468 AEC), havia meraritas entre os levitas que acompanharam Esdras de Babilônia a Jerusalém. — Esd 8:1, 18, 19, 31, 32.

MERATAIM [provavelmente: Dupla Rebelião]. Designação aplicada a Babilônia, ou, possivelmente, a determinado território de Babilônia. (Je 50:21, 23, 24) Talvez aluda ao nar marratu de inscrições babilônicas, considerado ser o golfo Pérsico, no ponto onde deságuam nele os rios Tigre e Eufrates. Evidentemente, trata-se de um jogo de palavras com o verbo hebraico ma·ráh (ser rebelde). Merataim, como forma dupla derivada de ma·ráh, talvez indique a intensidade da rebelião de Babilônia. Desde os dias do seu fundador, Ninrode, o proceder de Babilônia era de rebelião contra Jeová. — Gên 10:8-10.

MERCADO. Veja FEIRA, MERCADO.

MERCADOR, COMERCIANTE. Alguém que compra e vende, ou negocia, na expectativa de obter lucro; negociante. O termo hebraico traduzido "mercador", ou "comerciante", refere-se literalmente a alguém que 'viaja' para fins comerciais. — Gên 34:10 n.

Logo cedo na história do homem, pessoas ficaram hábeis em certos campos de atividade, especializando-se na sua ocupação. (Gên 4:20-22) O comércio e os negócios entre eles eram uma sequência natural, e, com o tempo, muitas pessoas trabalhavam exclusivamente como mercadores e negociantes duma grande variedade de mercadorias. Na época em que Abraão chegou a Canaã, no começo do segundo milênio AEC, já se usavam e se reconheciam certos pesos e medidas comerciais. (Gên 23:16) A Lei mosaica ordenava que as medidas do mercador fossem padronizadas e justas. — De 25:13-16; Pr 11:1; 20:10; Miq 6:11.

Alguns negociantes eram lojistas; outros faziam negócios nas cidades, em feiras e bazares. (Ne 13:20) Outros possuíam frotas de navios que singravam os altos-mares para trazer de volta cargas valiosas de mercadorias de terras distantes. (Sal 107:23; Pr 31:14) Outros negociantes eram viajantes que seguiam as extensas rotas comerciais terrestres do mundo antigo. (1Rs 10:14, 15; 2Cr 9:13, 14) José foi vendido pelos seus irmãos a tais mercadores viajantes que se dirigiam ao Egito. — Gên 37:25, 28.

Todas as nações, pequenas e grandes, tinham seus mercadores, e pela atividade destes, muitas ficaram ricas. Havia os mercadores da Etiópia (Is 45:14), da Assíria (Na 1:1; 3:16), do reino de Salomão (1Rs 10:28; 2Cr 1:16), e de Sídon e de Tiro (Is 23:2, 8).

A profecia de Ezequiel descreve a cidade de Tiro como grande centro comercial, ao qual vinham navios e caravanas de todas as partes do mundo para fazer negócios. Esta mesma profecia descreve também a grande variedade de mercadorias comercializadas por estes negociantes, as quais enriqueciam esta cidade portuária, coisas tais como prata, ferro, estanho, chumbo, artigos de cobre, cavalos, mulos, marfim, ébano, turquesa, lã, tecidos tingidos, corais, rubis, trigo, alimentos especiais, mel, azeite, bálsamo, vinho, cássia, cálamo, roupas tecidas, perfumes, pedras preciosas e ouro. — Ez 27:2, 12-25.

A palavra grega ém·po·ros (pó·ros significando "viagem") refere-se a um comerciante viajante, ou a alguém "em viagem". Um exemplo disso é o comerciante viajante, da ilustração de Jesus, que buscava pérolas excelentes de grande valor. (Mt 13:45) São os comerciantes viajantes que o livro simbólico de Revelação (Apocalipse) diz que são enriquecidos pela "grande meretriz . . . 'Babilônia, a Grande, a mãe das meretrizes' ", e que choram e pranteiam a queda e destruição dela. (Re 17:1, 5; 18:3, 11-15) Babilônia, a Grande, também tem seus próprios comerciantes viajantes, "os dignitários da terra". — Re 18:23.

MEREDE [Rebelião]. Filho de Ezra, mencionado na genealogia da tribo de Judá. Merede tinha esposa egípcia, Bitia, filha de Faraó, com a qual Merede teve filhos. (1Cr 4:1, 17, 18) A esposa "judaica" mencionada no versículo 18 talvez tenha sido outra esposa de Merede.

MEREMOTE.

1. Um dos principais sacerdotes que acompanharam Zorobabel de Babilônia a Jerusalém em 537 AEC. (Ne 12:1-7) Uma casa paterna, sacerdotal, da geração seguinte, é chamada de "Meraiote", e é possível que Meremote foi seu fundador. (Ne 12:15) Os nomes são bastante similares na escrita em caracteres hebraicos.

2. Filho de Urijá e destacado sacerdote nos dias de Esdras e Neemias. Quando Esdras e um restante de judeus vieram de Babilônia a Jerusalém, em 468 AEC, Meremote estava entre os sacerdotes em cujas mãos passaram "a pesar a prata, e o ouro, e os utensílios, na casa" de Jeová. (Esd 8:31-34) Meremote era descendente de Hacoz, sendo que alguns descendentes deste não puderam comprovar a sua genealogia. (Esd 2:61, 62) Mas é evidente que a turma da família a qual Meremote pertencia podia confirmar sua linhagem, visto que ele participava em funções sacerdotais. Ele participou também nos reparos feitos na muralha de Jerusalém sob a supervisão de Neemias. — Ne 3:3, 4, 21.

3. Sacerdote, ou antepassado de um dos que atestaram com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" nos dias de Neemias. — Ne 9:38–10:5.

4. Israelita dentre os "filhos de Bani", que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram "junto com os filhos" nos dias de Esdras. — Esd 10:25, 34, 36, 44.

MERES. Um dos sete príncipes que Assuero consultou quando Vasti lhe desobedeceu. — Est 1:14; veja MEMUCÃ.

MERETRIZ. Prostituta. Termo usualmente aplicado a uma mulher que mantém relações sexuais fora dos vínculos maritais, especialmente quando costuma fazer isso por alguma forma de paga. Realmente, o termo grego pór·ne (meretriz; fornicadora; prostituta) deriva duma raiz que significa "vender". (Re 17:1, n) O termo hebraico zoh·náh (meretriz; prostituta) deriva da raiz verbal za·náh, que significa "ser meretriz; ter relações imorais; cometer prostituição; fornicar". — Veja PROSTITUTA.

Desde o início, o meretrício foi condenado por Deus. A perfeita norma conjugal foi estabelecida no Éden pelo próprio Deus, por ocasião do casamento de Adão e Eva, quando Ele declarou: "O homem deixará seu pai e sua mãe, e tem de se apegar à sua esposa, e eles têm de tornar-se uma só carne." (Gên 2:24) Embora Deus condenasse o meretrício, ele deveras permitiu o concubinato e a poligamia, mesmo entre os seus servos, até que viesse o Seu tempo devido para restabelecer a perfeita norma conjugal por meio de Jesus Cristo. Jesus citou as palavras acima de seu Pai, e o apóstolo Paulo salientou que esta regra era obrigatória para a congregação cristã. Ele mostrou que o cristão que viola esta regra se junta a uma meretriz como "um só corpo". — Mt 19:4-9; 1Co 6:16.

O conceito original sobre o meretrício, entre os servos de Deus, é ilustrado no caso de Judá, bisneto de Abraão. Enquanto morava como residente forasteiro em Canaã, onde o meretrício era tolerado, Judá, cabeça de família, teve relações sexuais com Tamar, viúva de seu filho Er, a qual se disfarçara de meretriz. Quando se descobriu que Tamar estava grávida em resultado deste ato, relatou-se a Judá:

"Tamar, tua nora, fez-se de meretriz, e eis que está também grávida de seu meretrício." Judá ordenou então que ela fosse queimada (quer dizer, primeiro morta, e então queimada como detestável), porque era considerada casada com Selá, filho de Judá. Ao saber dos plenos fatos, Judá não se desculpou pelo seu ato com uma suposta meretriz, mas disse a respeito de Tamar: "Ela é mais justa do que eu, visto que não a dei a Selá, meu filho." Desculpou Tamar por ter agido assim para ter um descendente de Judá, depois de Judá ter deixado de dar-lhe seu filho Selá, a fim de que este realizasse com ela o casamento de cunhado. — Gên 38:6-26.

O meretrício era condenado pela Lei de Deus para Israel, mas havia meretrizes no país. (Pr 7) A Lei proibia estritamente a prostituição de qualquer moça israelita. (Le 19:29; 21:9) Qualquer moça israelita que cometesse fornicação, e que mais tarde se casasse sob a afirmação fraudulenta de ser virgem, devia ser morta a pedradas. (De 22:20, 21) O pagamento dado a uma meretriz era algo repugnante e inaceitável como contribuição para o santuário de Jeová. Isto se contrastava com as práticas pagãs, de prostitutas de templo muitas vezes serem fonte de renda. — De 23:18.

Raabe, meretriz da cidade pagã de Jericó, demonstrou a atitude correta de coração para com Jeová e agiu para ajudar os espias israelitas enviados por Josué. Por causa da sua fé e das suas obras em harmonia com esta, sua vida foi poupada. Mais tarde, ela se casou honrosamente com Salmom, da tribo de Judá, e tornou-se antepassada de Jesus Cristo. — Jos cap. 2; 6:22-25; Mt 1:1, 5; Tg 2:25.

Quando Jesus Cristo esteve na terra, ele denunciou causticantemente os descrentes sacerdotes principais e anciãos de influência, declarando que cobradores de impostos e meretrizes entrariam na frente deles no Reino de Deus. (Mt 21:23, 31, 32) Essas pessoas desprezadas eram as de coração reto, que receberam o perdão por meio da fé em Cristo. Não obstante, tinham de acabar primeiro com seu meretrício, porque os que continuam a praticar tal imoralidade não podem herdar o Reino. — Gál 5:19-21; Ef 5:5.

Uso Figurado. O termo "meretriz" é também usado em sentido figurado para se aplicar a um professo adorador de Jeová, ou a uma organização ou nação que afirma adorá-lo, mas que na realidade dá afeição e adoração a outros deuses. Jerusalém tornou-se "meretriz" neste sentido. De fato, ela foi ao ponto de fazer o que não é normal no caso das meretrizes, a saber, em vez de receber pagamento, ela pagava a nações pagãs para que praticassem o meretrício com ela. — Ez 16:33, 34; veja Ez 23, onde Samaria (representando Israel) e Jerusalém (Judá) são comparadas a prostitutas.

Revelação (Apocalipse) retrata simbolicamente uma meretriz que monta uma fera cor de escarlate e tem na testa o nome de "Babilônia, a Grande, a mãe das meretrizes e das coisas repugnantes da terra". Com ela, "os reis da terra cometeram fornicação". — Re 17:1-5; veja BABILÔNIA, A GRANDE; FORNICAÇÃO.

MERIBÁ [Altercação].

1. Lugar na vizinhança do acampamento israelita em Refidim, no ermo. Foi ali que Jeová providenciou milagrosamente um suprimento de água, quando Moisés, com o bastão, golpeou o rochedo em Horebe. Moisés chamou então o lugar de "Massá" (que significa "Teste; Prova") e "Meribá" (que significa "Altercação"). Estes nomes eram comemorativos da altercação de Israel com Moisés e de eles porem Jeová à prova por causa da falta de água. — Êx 17:1-7.

2. O nome "Meribá", mais tarde, também foi dado a um lugar perto de Cades, o motivo deste nome sendo igualmente a altercação de Israel com Moisés e Jeová por causa da falta de água. (Núm 20:1-13) Dessemelhante do lugar perto de Refidim, onde os israelitas acamparam menos de dois meses depois da saída do Egito (Êx 16:1; 17:1; 19:1), este Meribá não levava o nome de Massá. As Escrituras às vezes o diferenciam do outro lugar por se referirem "às águas de Meribá" (Sal 106:32) ou às "águas de Meribá, em Cades". (Núm 27:14; De 32:51) No entanto, no Salmo 81:7, a referência ao exame que Jeová fez de Israel junto "às águas de Meribá" talvez aluda ao incidente em Meribá perto de Refidim. — Veja De 33:8.

Moisés e Arão deixaram de santificar Jeová com relação à miraculosa provisão de água em Meribá, na região de Cades. Por isso, perderam o privilégio de entrar na Terra da Promessa. Este evento parece ter ocorrido no 40.º ano da peregrinação de Israel pelo ermo. — Núm 20:1, 9-13, 22-28; 33:38, 39.

MERIBATE-CADES [Altercação em Cades]. Um limite meridional do território de Israel conforme observado em visão por Ezequiel. (Ez 47:13, 19; 48:28) O nome Meribate-Cades alude à altercação de Israel com Jeová junto às "águas de Meribá", enquanto o povo morava em Cades. — Núm 20:1-13; veja CADES, CADES-BARNEIA; MERIBÁ N.º 2.

MERIBE-BAAL [possivelmente: Contendedor Contra Baal; ou: Baal Pleiteia em Defesa]. Neto do Rei Saul, filho de Jonatã, e pai de Micá. (1Cr 8:33, 34) Pelo visto, trata-se de outro nome de Mefibosete. Outros também tinham dois nomes, tais como Esbaal, também chamado Is-Bosete. — Compare 2Sa 2:8 com 1Cr 8:33.

O nome Meribe-Baal é encontrado em duas formas hebraicas um pouco diferentes (Meriv bá·ʽal e Meri-vá·‘al) em 1 Crônicas 9:40. A primeira forma é também usada em 1 Crônicas 8:34. O que indica uma identidade similar é que Mefibosete tinha um menino chamado Mica, e Meribe-Baal tinha um filho chamado Micá. (Compare 2Sa 9:12 com 1Cr 9:40.) As formas "Mica" e "Micá" se devem meramente a uma leve variação na grafia hebraica destes nomes.

MERODAQUE. Forma hebraica de Marduque, o mais importante deus babilônio, cuja queda, conforme se predisse, coincidiria com a derrubada de Babilônia. — Je 50:2.

Os reis babilônios Merodaque-Baladã (Is 39:1) e Evil-Merodaque (2Rs 25:27), sem dúvida, receberam estes nomes em honra deste deus. Com a ascensão de Babilônia em destaque, porque o Rei Hamurábi a tornou a capital de Babilônia, Merodaque também aumentou em importância. Conferiram-se-lhe os atributos de deuses anteriores, e pensa-se que os sacerdotes babilônios alteraram os relatos mitológicos para fazer de Merodaque o matador de Tiamat, e o criador do mundo e do homem. Textos babilônicos identificam Marduque (Merodaque) como filho de Ea (deus que presidia aos elementos aquosos), consorte de Sarpanitu e pai de Nebo.

A realeza que dominava Babilônia estava intimamente associada com a imagem de Merodaque no seu templo, Esagila, porque os governantes de Babilônia não eram empossados por uma coroação, mas tornavam-se reis por pegarem na mão de Merodaque. A cerimônia era repetida todo ano na festividade do Ano-Novo. Mesmo no tempo em que a Assíria controlava Babilônia, requeria-se dos reis da Assíria ir todo ano à cidade de Babilônia, à festividade do Ano-Novo, e legalizar a sua reivindicação do trono por pegar na mão de Merodaque.

O profeta Jeremias, com referência à queda de Babilônia, predisse que Merodaque 'ficaria aterrorizado'. Isto se cumpriu no sentido de que Merodaque mostrou-se incapaz de preservar a dignidade da Potência Mundial Babilônica, e visto que os conquistadores de Babilônia adoravam outras deidades, o futuro dele ficou bem incerto, cheio de premonições. — Je 50:2; veja BEL; DEUSES E DEUSAS (Deidades Babilônicas).

MERODAQUE-BALADÃ [do babilônico, significando "Marduque Deu um Filho"]. "Filho de Baladã" e rei de Babilônia, que enviou cartas e um presente ao Rei Ezequias, de Judá, depois que este rei se restabeleceu duma doença. (Is 39:1) Ele é chamado "Berodaque-Baladã" em 2 Reis 20:12, mas esta diferença geralmente é atribuída a um erro de escriba, ou, então, que representa uma tentativa de transliterar uma consoante acadiana com um som entre o de "m" e o de "b".

Merodaque-Baladã entregando uma concessão de terras a um oficial; o Rei Ezequias foi excessivamente cordial com os mensageiros de Merodaque-Baladã.

O nome de Merodaque-Baladã ocorre em inscrições cuneiformes assírias e babilônicas como "Marduk-apla-iddina". Aparece ali como governante dum distrito caldeu conhecido como Bit-Yakin, situado nos brejos acima da cabeceira do golfo Pérsico e ao S de Babilônia. Ele afirma ser descendente régio, dando o nome do Rei Eriba-Marduk, de Babilônia (considerado como da parte inicial do oitavo século AEC), como seu antepassado. — Iraq (Iraque), Londres 1953, Vol. XV, p. 124.

Tiglate-Pileser III, que governava ainda no início do reinado do Rei Acaz, de Judá (761-746 AEC), refere-se a Merodaque-Baladã como governante duma tribo caldaica que lhe prestou homenagem quando os assírios fizeram uma incursão em Babilônia.

Manda uma Delegação a Ezequias. Declara-se que Merodaque-Baladã entrou em Babilônia e se proclamou rei por ocasião da ascensão de Sargão II ao trono assírio. Merodaque-Baladã tinha o apoio dos elamitas nesta ação, e, embora Sargão logo tentasse desalojá-lo de Babilônia, o caldeu conseguiu manter a sua posição ali por um período de cerca de 12 anos, segundo a Lista de Reis Babilônios. Talvez fosse durante este tempo que ele enviou seus embaixadores ao Rei Ezequias, quer no 14.º ano do rei de Judá (732 AEC), quer pouco depois. Alguns, inclusive o historiador judeu Josefo, sugerem que o interesse de Merodaque-Baladã na saúde de Ezequias envolvia mais do que mera formalidade, e que o verdadeiro motivo era a tentativa de obter o apoio do reino de Judá, junto com o de Elão, numa coalizão contra a Assíria. De qualquer modo, a ação de Ezequias, de mostrar aos mensageiros do caldeu sua tesouraria real e seu arsenal (2Rs 20:13) foi totalmente condenada pelo profeta Isaías, como pressagiando a futura conquista de Judá por Babilônia. — Is 39:2-7.

Derrotado pela Assíria. Perto do fim do seu domínio de aproximadamente 12 anos sobre Babilônia, Merodaque-Baladã viu cortado seu principal apoio da parte de Elão pela vitória assíria sobre aquele reino, e depois ele foi atacado e obrigado a fugir de Babilônia. Apesar de perder Babilônia para os assírios, Merodaque-Baladã parece ter conseguido reter sua posição de governante de Bit-Yakin. A Lista de Reis Babilônios mostra um segundo reinado de nove meses (Polistor diz seis meses) de "Mardukaplaiddin" como rei de Babilônia durante o segundo ano após a morte de Sargão. Em geral, aceita-se isso como se referindo ao mesmo rei fazer um segundo esforço para se estabelecer no trono de Babilônia. Deve-se notar, porém, que as inscrições babilônicas, neste caso, referem-se a ele como "Mardukaplaiddin, nativo de Habi", em contraste com o "Mardukaplaiddin, [da] dinastia da Terra do Mar", no caso do anterior reinado. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 272) Este segundo reinado foi muito curto, visto que o rei assírio, Senaqueribe, prontamente ocupou Babilônia, e Merodaque-Baladã teve de se refugiar no Elão, onde parece ter terminado sua carreira ambiciosa. Apesar dos fracassos de Merodaque-Baladã, em tempos posteriores, os caldeus tornaram-se realmente o grupo étnico dominante no Império Babilônico.

MEROM, ÁGUAS DE [Lugar Elevado (Exaltado)]. Foi ali que as forças cananeias, confederadas sob Jabim, rei de Hazor, acamparam antes de serem derrotadas por Josué. Foi provavelmente pela primeira vez que os israelitas se confrontaram com cananeus equipados com cavalos e carros, conforme se pode inferir das instruções divinas então dadas a Josué, de queimar os carros e jarretar os cavalos. — Jos 11:1-9.

Conforme explicado por Y. Aharoni: "As 'águas de Merom' devem ter sido a fonte de água da cidade de Merom, junto à qual se reuniram as forças cananeias. Conhece-se Merom tanto de fontes egípcias do segundo milênio . . . como do relato de Tiglate-Pileser III sobre a sua expedição à Galileia . . . Aceita-se, em geral, identificar Merom com Meirun, ao sopé de Jebel Jarmaq, mas, na ausência dum adequado tel neste lugar, é preferível uma identificação um pouco mais ao norte. Seu nome possivelmente é preservado em Jebel Marun e em Marun er-Ras, e podemos considerar sua identificação com Tell el-Khirbeh, um dos grandes tel cananeus na parte meridional da Galileia Cananeia Superior. Ambas as sugeridas identificações estão a umas sete a oito milhas de Hazor, em linha reta." — The Land of the Bible (A Terra da Bíblia), traduzido para o inglês e editado por A. Rainey, 1979, pp. 225, 226.

MERONOTITA. Designação aplicada a Jedeías e a Jadom, evidentemente identificando-os como habitantes de Meronote. (1Cr 27:30; Ne 3:7) Alguns peritos acreditam que Meronote ficava perto de Gibeá, mas, fora disso, a sua localização exata não é conhecida. Outros a identificam provisoriamente com Beituniya, a menos de 5 km ao NNO de Gibeão.

MEROZ. Lugar amaldiçoado por um anjo por não ter vindo "em auxílio de Jeová". (Jz 5:23) Talvez os habitantes de Meroz não tivessem ajudado Baraque, o comandante designado por Jeová, na própria luta contra os cananeus sob Sísera. (Jz 5:5-16) Ou, se Meroz estava na rota de fuga do derrotado Sísera, talvez seus habitantes tivessem deixado de detê-lo. (Jz 4:17) Relatar a Bíblia a seguir o ato corajoso de Jael em matar Sísera dá algum apoio a este último conceito. (Jz 5:24-27) O anjo que proferiu a maldição foi possivelmente aquele que lutou por Israel.

Desconhece-se a localização exata de Meroz, embora alguns provisoriamente a situem em Khirbet Marus, a uns 8 km ao S de Quedes, em Naftali.

MÊS. Veja CALENDÁRIO.

MESA.

1. Filho primogênito de "Calebe, filho de Esrom", da tribo de Judá. Mesa era o pai, ou fundador, de Zife. — 1Cr 2:18, 42.

2. Rei de Moabe, no tempo dos reis Jeosafá, de Judá, e Acabe, Acazias e Jeorão, de Israel. Os moabitas, subjugados pelo reino setentrional de Israel, pagaram ao Rei Acabe um tributo de 100.000 cordeiros e 100.000 carneiros não tosquiados, evidentemente duma raça famosa pela qualidade da lã. Depois da morte de Acabe, Mesa rebelou-se contra o Rei Acazias, de Israel. Mas, Acazias morreu depois de um governo curto e foi sucedido por seu irmão Jeorão, que conseguiu uma aliança com Jeosafá, de Judá, e um rei não identificado de Edom, com o fim de subjugar Mesa novamente. Tomando uma rota difícil ao S do Mar Morto, acabou a água para as suas forças. Mas, o profeta Eliseu garantiu que, se se cavassem valas no ressequido vale de torrente, Jeová as encheria de água. — 2Rs 1:1; 3:4-19.

Isto aconteceu, e o reflexo do sol de manhã cedo na água fazia-a parecer sangue para os moabitas, possivelmente por causa da argila vermelha nas valas recém-escavadas. Esta ilusão os enganou, levando-os a pensar que os exércitos aliados de Israel, Judá e Edom se haviam voltado um contra o outro. Não era desarrazoado pensar assim, porque eles sabiam do ciúme entre Israel e Judá. Também, os edomitas não amavam os homens de Judá, os quais estavam nesta ocasião aliados com Israel. — 2Rs 3:20-23; compare isso com 2Cr 20:10, 11, 24, 25.

Pensando que seus inimigos se haviam matado uns aos outros, os moabitas gritaram: "Agora, pois, ao despojo, ó Moabe!" e entraram no acampamento de Israel, mas apenas para serem postos em fuga. Israel prosseguiu por destruir as cidades moabitas, por tapar seus mananciais e por encher seus lotes de terreno de pedras, até chegarem à cidade de Quir-Haresete (Quir de Moabe). — 2Rs 3:23-25.

Quando o Rei Mesa se viu encurralado, tomou 700 homens que puxavam da espada, e, num contra-ataque, tentou chegar ao rei de Edom (talvez pensando que encontraria ali a menor resistência), mas não o conseguiu. "Por fim tomou seu filho primogênito que ia reinar em seu lugar e o ofereceu como sacrifício queimado sobre a muralha." — 2Rs 3:26, 27.

A maioria dos comentadores concorda que Mesa ofereceu seu próprio filho em sacrifício ao seu deus Quemós. Os poucos que pensam de modo diferente dizem que o sacrificado foi um filho capturado do rei de Edom, citando Amós 2:1 como evidência, texto em que se faz referência a Moabe "queimar os ossos do rei de Edom para cal". Embora gramaticalmente o hebraico permita tal interpretação, esta última sugestão parece contrariar outros fatos conhecidos. Por exemplo, nunca se ouviu falar de moabitas e amonitas, vizinhos de Israel, sacrificarem seus inimigos aos seus deuses, mas era prática conhecida da sua religião oferecerem seus próprios filhos como sacrifícios queimados para apaziguar a ira dos seus deuses. (De 12:30, 31; Miq 6:6, 7) Portanto, é compreensível por que Mesa, este adorador de Quemós, confrontado com o iminente perigo duma derrota, teria recorrido a tal medida drástica.

A Pedra Moabita. A Pedra Moabita foi descoberta em Dhiban (Díbon), em 1868. É geralmente atribuída a Mesa, e seu conteúdo costuma ser consignado ao período que se inicia com os eventos registrados no capítulo três de Segundo Reis. Nesta famosa inscrição, Mesa comemora seu rompimento da dominação por Israel, que segundo ele durou 40 anos. Fazem-se nela também diversos comentários sobre os lugares que Mesa capturou (Medeba, Atarote, Nebo, Jaaz). Ao jactar-se de ser muito religioso, de construir cidades e uma estrada, bem como duma vitória que afirma ter obtido sobre Israel, Mesa dá todo o crédito disso ao seu deus Quemós. Mesa sabia também do Deus de Israel, Jeová, porque na 18.ª linha deste documento se encontra o Tetragrama. Mesa gaba-se ali: "Tomei dali os [vasos] de Yahweh, arrastando-os perante Quemós." (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 946) Todavia, omitem-se a própria derrota dele e o sacrifício de seu filho, conforme é de esperar. O periódico Biblical Archaeology Review (Revista de Arqueologia Bíblica; maio/junho 1986, p. 57) observa: "Inscrições monumentais em obeliscos ou em paredes de templos eram produzidas para fins de propaganda e para a glorificação do deus nacional e do governante do país. Portanto, não surpreende que Mesa não faça menção da campanha militar dos reis de Israel, de Judá e de Edom contra o seu país, a respeito da qual a Bíblia nos fornece um relato pormenorizado."

3. [hebr.: Meh·shá']. Filho de Saraim com sua esposa Hodes. Mesa tornou-se cabeça de família na tribo de Benjamim. — 1Cr 8:1, 8-10.

4. [hebr.: Me·shá']. Lugar limítrofe da região habitada pelos descendentes de Joctã. (Gên 10:29, 30) A Septuaginta grega traduziu o nome Mesa como Mas·sé. Por esta razão, pensa-se que "Mesa" seja grafia alternativa de "Massa", nome dum ismaelita, cujos descendentes parecem ter-se estabelecido na Arábia. — Gên 25:13, 14.

MESAQUE. Nome babilônico que o principal oficial da corte de Nabucodonosor deu a Misael, companheiro de Daniel. Não há certeza sobre o significado deste novo nome, mas talvez incluísse uma referência a Aku, deus sumeriano.

Mantém a Integridade Como Jovem. Mesaque (Misael) foi levado cativo de Jerusalém a Babilônia, em 617 AEC, junto com Joaquim e outros. Misael, Azarias, Hananias e Daniel foram então submetidos a um curso de treinamento de três anos, pela realeza babilônica, mostrando-se ao fim deste tempo superiores até mesmo aos conselheiros do rei. (2Rs 24:1, 6, 8, 12-16; Da 1:1-7, 17-20) Durante este tempo, estes quatro se mantiveram firmes na sua devoção a Deus, negando-se até mesmo a se poluir com as iguarias do rei. — Da 1:8-16.

Há três motivos prováveis pelos quais eles consideravam as iguarias do rei 'poluídas': (1) Os babilônios consumiam animais declarados impuros pela Lei mosaica; (2) não cuidavam de que os animais fossem devidamente sangrados, alguns talvez tendo sido estrangulados; (3) os pagãos frequentemente sacrificavam os animais primeiro aos seus deuses, considerando o consumo desta carne como parte da adoração desses deuses. — Da 1:8; compare isso com 1Co 10:18-20, 28.

Mais tarde, depois de Daniel ter sido promovido a um alto cargo governamental na corte do rei, Nabucodonosor, a pedido de Daniel, encarregou Mesaque, Sadraque e Abednego da administração do distrito jurisdicional de Babilônia. — Da 2:48, 49.

Nega-se a se Curvar diante da Imagem. Mesaque e seus dois companheiros chegaram novamente à atenção do rei por se negarem, à vista de todo o restante dos funcionários do governo, a se curvar diante da grande imagem que Nabucodonosor mandara fazer. Com plena fé em Jeová, disseram a Nabucodonosor que não participariam em servir os deuses do rei. Não fazia diferença se o Deus deles os libertasse da fornalha ou não; ainda assim manteriam a sua integridade para com ele, em vez de transigir para serem libertos. (Em He 11:34, 35, faz-se menção daqueles que "pararam a força do fogo" e "não queriam aceitar um livramento por meio de algum resgate, a fim de que pudessem alcançar uma ressurreição melhor".) Pela fé que demonstraram, Jeová os preservou por meio do seu anjo. De fato, ao saírem, "não ficara neles o cheiro do próprio fogo". Nabucodonosor, que havia ficado tão enfurecido que mandara aquecer a fornalha sete vezes mais do que de costume antes de lançar os três homens nela, reconheceu então o Deus deles como libertador. Além disso, ordenou que todo aquele que dissesse algo de mau contra o Deus de Mesaque fosse desmembrado e que sua casa fosse transformada em latrina pública. — Da 3:1-30.

MESELEMIAS [Jeová Faz Paz (Compensa; Retribui)]. Levita coatita e cabeça ancestral duma turma de coraítas. Ele "teve filhos e irmãos, homens capazes, dezoito", que foram designados com ele como porteiros do santuário, durante a reorganização dos serviços sacerdotais e levíticos pelo Rei Davi. (1Cr 26:1-3, 9) Ele é provavelmente o Selemias de 1 Crônicas 26:14. Seu filho Zacarias "foi o porteiro da entrada da tenda de reunião". — 1Cr 9:21.

MESEQUE.

1. Um dos filhos nascidos a Jafé, filho de Noé, depois do Dilúvio. (Gên 10:2; 1Cr 1:5) O nome evidentemente se estendia aos seus descendentes e à terra que ocuparam. O profeta Ezequiel menciona regularmente Meseque junto com Tubal, indicando que ficavam ao N da Palestina. São descritos como exportando escravos e cobre a Tiro, como sendo guerreiros, e como aliados ou súditos de 'Gogue de Magogue' na profetizada campanha feroz deste contra os "montes de Israel". (Ez 27:13; 32:26; 38:2, 3; 39:1, 2; veja GOGUE N.º 2.) Meseque é mencionado de forma independente de Tubal no Salmo 120:5, evidentemente por representar um povo agressivo, bárbaro.

Cerca de mil anos depois do Dilúvio, inscrições assírias começam a mencionar um povo chamado musku, que ocupava uma região na Ásia Menor, ao O da Assíria. Os imperadores assírios Tiglate-Pileser I, Tukulti Ninurta II; Assurnasirpal II e Sargão mencionam conflitos com eles. Mencionarem-se frequentemente os musku junto com os tabali (evidentemente o bíblico Tubal) fornece motivos para se crer que o nome musku derive de Meseque. Heródoto (III, 94) refere-se mais tarde da mesma maneira aos moschi e aos tibareni.

Muitos peritos sugerem que os musku devem ser relacionados com os frígios, os quais aparentemente dominavam grande parte do oeste e do centro da Ásia Menor por volta do fim do segundo milênio AEC. O Rei Mita de Muski, mencionado pelo imperador assírio Sargão, é tomado por alguns peritos como sendo o Rei Midas, da Frígia, descrito na tradição grega como governando naquele mesmo período.

2. Meseque ocorre no texto massorético em 1 Crônicas 1:17 como descendente de Sem, mas a genealogia correspondente em Gênesis 10:23 reza "Más".

MESEZABEL.

1. Homem de Judá, da família de Zerá, e cujo "filho" Petaías "estava ao lado do rei para todo assunto do povo". — Ne 11:24.

2. Pai de Berequias e antepassado do Mesulão que fez consertos na muralha de Jerusalém, no tempo de Neemias. — Ne 3:4.

3. Um dos "cabeças do povo", ou seu descendente, que atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" do tempo de Neemias. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 21.

MESILEMITE [duma raiz que significa "fazer paz; compensar; retribuir"]. Sacerdote e descendente de Imer. (1Cr 9:10, 12) Ele provavelmente é o Mesilemote de Neemias 11:13.

MESILEMOTE [duma raiz que significa "fazer paz; compensar; retribuir"].

1. Efraimita cujo "filho" Berequias era um dos cabeças de Efraim que persuadiram os israelitas dos dias do Rei Peca a libertar os cativos que haviam tomado numa bem-sucedida campanha militar contra Judá. — 2Cr 28:6-8, 12-15.

2. Sacerdote que descendia de Imer e que era antepassado de certos sacerdotes que moravam em Jerusalém, após o retorno dos judeus do exílio babilônico. (Ne 11:10, 13, 14) Ele é provavelmente o Mesilemite de 1 Crônicas 9:12.

MESOBABE [Retornado (Trazido de Volta); ou, possivelmente: Infiel]. Maioral da tribo de Simeão, que tinha uma família grande e que participou em tomar os pastos dos camitas e dos meunins, perto de Gedor, nos dias do Rei Ezequias, de Judá. — 1Cr 4:34-42.

MESOPOTÂMIA [do gr., que significa "[Terra] Entre Rios"]. Termo grego para a extensão de terra situada entre os rios Tigre e Eufrates. Evidentemente, correspondia à designação hebraica de sentido similar, Arã-Naaraim. (Sal 60:cab.) Na realidade, os tradutores da Septuaginta grega usualmente verteram "Arã-Naaraim" como "Mesopotâmia". — Veja ARÃ N.º 5.

A aplicação do termo "Mesopotâmia" varia tanto no uso antigo como no moderno. Basicamente, em sentido amplo, abrange toda a região entre o Tigre e o Eufrates, e se estende desde o golfo Pérsico, no S, até as montanhas da Turquia e do Irã, no N. Isto incluiria a planície aluvial da antiga Babilônia, que se estende uns 400 km ao S de Bagdá. (Veja BABILÔNIA N.º 2.) Em sentido mais restrito, porém, exclui Babilônia, chamando-se de Mesopotâmia apenas a região ao N. Esta região setentrional consiste num não muito alto planalto ondulado com numerosas bacias. É também uma região rochosa.

Evidência do amplo uso desta designação no primeiro século EC é encontrada em Atos 7:2, onde Estêvão falou de Abraão como morando na "Mesopotâmia" enquanto ainda estava em Ur, cidade de Babilônia. Mas não é possível determinar com certeza se a designação hebraica "Arã-Naaraim" também incluía Babilônia. Sempre que há uma base para se determinar a localização geográfica geral mencionada nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a designação "Arã-Naaraim" (Mesopotâmia) inclui a região setentrional em torno de Harã (Gên 24:2-4, 10) ou a região montanhosa, setentrional, em torno de Petor (De 23:4; compare isso com Núm 23:7). Embora não haja certeza da extensão da região sob o controle do rei mesopotâmio Cusã-Risataim (opressor de Israel no tempo do juiz Otniel), a sede do seu governo talvez também estivesse no N. (Jz 3:8-10; veja CUSÃ-RISATAIM.) Foi provavelmente da parte setentrional da Mesopotâmia que o rei amonita Hanum contratou carros e cavaleiros para sua luta contra o Rei Davi. — 1Cr 19:6, 7.

Entre os judeus e prosélitos presentes em Jerusalém na festividade de Pentecostes em 33 EC havia habitantes da Mesopotâmia. (At 2:1, 2, 9) Talvez incluíssem habitantes da parte meridional daquela terra, a saber, Babilônia. Neste respeito, é digno de nota que o historiador Josefo relata que "um grande número de judeus" se encontrava em Babilônia no primeiro século AEC. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XV, 14 (ii, 2).

MESSIAS. Da raiz verbal hebraica ma·sháhh, que significa "untar", e, assim, "ungir". (Êx 29:2, 7) Messias (ma·shí·ahh) significa "ungido" ou "o ungido". O equivalente grego é Khri·stós, ou Cristo. — Mt 2:4 n.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a forma adjetiva verbal ma·shí·ahh é aplicada a muitos homens. Davi foi oficialmente designado rei por ser ungido com óleo, e por isso é chamado de "o ungido", ou, literalmente, "messias". (2Sa 19:21; 22:51; 23:1; Sal 18:50) Outros reis, inclusive Saul e Salomão, são chamados de "ungido" ou de "o ungido de Jeová". (1Sa 2:10, 35; 12:3, 5; 24:6, 10; 2Sa 1:14, 16; 2Cr 6:42; La 4:20) O termo também é aplicado ao sumo sacerdote. (Le 4:3, 5, 16; 6:22) Os patriarcas Abraão, Isaque e Jacó são chamados de "ungidos" de Jeová. (1Cr 16:16, 22, n) O rei persa Ciro é chamado de "ungido", por ter sido designado por Deus para certa tarefa. — Is 45:1; veja UNGIDO, UNÇÃO.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a forma transliterada Mes·sí·as ocorre no texto grego em João 1:41, com a explicação "que, traduzido, quer dizer: Cristo". (Veja também Jo 4:25.) Às vezes, a palavra Khri·stós é usada sozinha com referência àquele que é ou que afirma ser o Messias, ou o Ungido. (Mt 2:4; 22:42; Mr 13:21) Na maioria das ocorrências, porém, Khri·stós vem acompanhado pelo nome pessoal Jesus, como nas expressões "Jesus Cristo" ou "Cristo Jesus", para chamar a ele de Messias. Ocasionalmente se usa a palavra sozinha, mas com referência específica a Jesus, entendendo-se que Jesus é O Cristo, como na declaração: 'Cristo morreu por nós.' — Ro 5:8; Jo 17:3; 1Co 1:1, 2; 16:24; veja CRISTO.

Messias nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Em Daniel 9:25, 26, a palavra ma·shí·ahh aplica-se exclusivamente ao vindouro Messias. (Veja SETENTA SEMANAS.) Todavia, muitos outros textos das Escrituras Hebraicas também apontam para este Vindouro, mesmo que não exclusivamente. Por exemplo, o Salmo 2:2 evidentemente teve a primeira aplicação ao tempo em que os reis filisteus tentaram destronar o ungido Rei Davi. Mas uma segunda aplicação ao predito Messias é indicada por Atos 4:25-27, onde o texto é aplicado a Jesus Cristo. Também, muitos dos homens chamados de "ungidos" prefiguravam ou retratavam de diversas maneiras a Jesus Cristo e a obra que ele faria; entre estes estavam Davi, o sumo sacerdote de Israel, e Moisés (chamado de "Cristo" em He 11:23-26).

Profecias que não usam "Messias". Diversos outros textos das Escrituras Hebraicas, que não mencionam especificamente o "Messias", eram entendidos pelos judeus como se aplicando a este. Alfred Edersheim localizou 456 trechos que a 'antiga Sinagoga chamava de messiânicos', e havia 558 referências nos mais antigos escritos rabínicos que apoiavam estas aplicações. (The Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah [A Vida e a Época de Jesus, o Messias], 1906, Vol. I, p. 163; Vol. II, pp. 710-737) Por exemplo, Gênesis 49:10 profetizou que o cetro de governo pertenceria à tribo de Judá, e que Siló viria através desta linhagem. O Targum de Onkelos, os Targuns de Jerusalém e o Midraxe reconhecem a expressão "Siló" como aplicada ao Messias.

As Escrituras Hebraicas contêm muitas profecias que fornecem pormenores sobre a formação, o tempo de aparecimento, as atividades do Messias, o tratamento que outros lhe dariam, e o seu lugar no arranjo de Deus. Os diversos indícios a respeito do Messias em conjunto formam assim um só grandioso quadro que ajudaria os verdadeiros adoradores a identificá-lo. Isto forneceria a base para se ter fé nele como o verdadeiro Líder enviado por Jeová. Embora os judeus não discernissem de antemão todas as profecias que se relacionavam com o Ungido, a evidência fornecida pelos Evangelhos mostra que eles tinham conhecimento suficiente para reconhecer o Messias quando realmente apareceu.

Entendimento no Primeiro Século EC. As informações históricas disponíveis revelam um quadro geral do alcance do entendimento a respeito do Messias, que prevalecia entre os judeus no primeiro século da Era Comum. Esta informação é colhida primariamente dos Evangelhos.

Rei e filho de Davi. Era comumente aceito entre os judeus que o Messias seria rei da linhagem de Davi. Quando os astrólogos perguntaram sobre "aquele que nasceu rei dos judeus", Herodes, o Grande, sabia que perguntaram sobre "o Cristo". (Mt 2:2-4) Jesus interrogou os fariseus sobre de quem o Cristo, ou Messias, seria descendente. Embora estes líderes religiosos não cressem em Jesus, sabiam que o Messias seria filho de Davi. — Mt 22:41-45.

Nascido em Belém. Miqueias 5:2, 4, havia indicado que de Belém sairia alguém para ser "governante em Israel", que seria "grande até os confins da terra". Entendia-se que isso se referia ao Messias. Quando Herodes, o Grande, perguntou aos principais sacerdotes e aos escribas onde o Messias nasceria, eles responderam: "Em Belém da Judeia", e citaram Miqueias 5:2. (Mt 2:3-6) E até mesmo alguns do povo comum sabiam isso. — Jo 7:41, 42.

Profeta que realizaria muitos sinais. Deus predissera por meio de Moisés a vinda dum grande profeta. (De 18:18) Nos dias de Jesus, os judeus esperavam a tal. (Jo 6:14) A maneira em que o apóstolo Pedro usou as palavras de Moisés, em Atos 3:22, 23, indica que ele sabia que a natureza messiânica delas seria aceita até mesmo pelos opositores religiosos, e isto evidencia o amplo entendimento de Deuteronômio 18:18. A mulher samaritana, junto à fonte, também pensava que o Messias seria profeta. (Jo 4:19, 25, 29) As pessoas esperavam que o Messias realizasse sinais. — Jo 7:31.

Algumas variedades nas crenças. É evidente que, embora o conhecimento sobre o vindouro Messias fosse comum entre os judeus, nem todos tinham o mesmo conhecimento ou entendimento sobre ele. Por exemplo, embora muitos soubessem que ele viria de Belém, outros não o sabiam. (Mt 2:3-6; Jo 7:27) Alguns acreditavam que o Profeta fosse alguém distinto do Cristo. (Jo 1:20, 21; 7:40, 41) Certas profecias a respeito do Messias não eram entendidas, nem mesmo pelos discípulos de Jesus. Isto se dava especialmente com as profecias a respeito da rejeição, do sofrimento, da morte e da ressurreição do Messias. (Is 53:3, 5, 12; Sal 16:10; Mt 16:21-23; 17:22, 23; Lu 24:21; Jo 12:34; 20:9) Todavia, depois de estas coisas terem ocorrido e as profecias terem sido explicadas, seus discípulos, e mesmo aqueles que ainda não eram discípulos, começaram a reconhecer a natureza profética desses textos das Escrituras Hebraicas. (Lu 24:45, 46; At 2:5, 27, 28, 31, 36, 37; 8:30-35) Visto que a maioria dos judeus não reconhecia que o Messias tinha de sofrer e morrer, os primitivos cristãos enfatizavam este ponto ao pregarem aos judeus. — At 3:18; 17:1-3; 26:21-23.

Expectativas Equivocadas. O relato de Lucas indica que muitos judeus esperavam ansiosamente o aparecimento do Messias na época específica em que Jesus estava na Terra. Simeão e outros judeus estavam "esperando a consolação de Israel" e "o livramento de Jerusalém", na época em que o menino Jesus foi levado ao templo. (Lu 2:25, 38) Durante o ministério de João, o Batizador, as pessoas 'estavam na expectativa' do Cristo, ou Messias. (Lu 3:15) Muitos, porém, esperavam que o Messias satisfizesse suas ideias preconcebidas. As profecias nas Escrituras Hebraicas mostravam que o Messias viria desempenhando dois papéis diferentes. Em um ele viria "humilde, e montado num jumento", ao passo que no outro viria "com as nuvens dos céus", para aniquilar os opositores e fazer todos os governos servi-lo. (Za 9:9; Da 7:13) Os judeus deixaram de reconhecer que estas profecias se relacionavam com dois aparecimentos distintos do Messias, os quais ocorreriam em tempos bem separados.

Fontes judaicas concordam com Lucas 2:38, que o povo daquele tempo aguardava o livramento de Jerusalém. The Jewish Encyclopedia (A Enciclopédia Judaica) observa: "Eles ansiavam o prometido libertador da casa de Davi, o qual os livraria do jugo do odiado usurpador estrangeiro, poria fim ao ímpio domínio romano e estabeleceria Seu próprio reinado de paz." (1976, Vol. VIII, p. 508) Tentaram fazer dele um rei terrestre. (Jo 6:15) Quando ele não satisfez as expectativas deles, rejeitaram-no.

Evidentemente, a expectativa de que o Messias seria um rei terrestre era compartilhada por João, o Batizador, e seus discípulos. João sabia que Jesus era o Messias e o Filho de Deus, tendo visto sua unção com espírito santo e tendo ouvido a voz de aprovação, de Deus. João não tinha falta de fé. (Mt 11:11) De modo que a sua pergunta: "Devemos esperar alguém diferente?" talvez significasse: 'Devemos esperar ainda outro que satisfará todas as esperanças dos judeus?' Em resposta, Cristo indicou as obras que fazia (coisas preditas nas Escrituras Hebraicas). Ele concluiu: "E feliz é aquele que não tropeçou por causa de mim." Esta resposta, embora indicasse que se precisaria de fé e de discernimento, satisfaria e consolaria João, assegurando-lhe que era Jesus quem cumpriria as promessas de Deus. (Mt 11:3; Lu 7:18-23) Também, antes da ascensão de Jesus, seus discípulos tinham a ideia de que ele, naquela época, livraria Israel da dominação gentia e estabeleceria o Reino (restaurando o reinado da linhagem davídica) na Terra. — Lu 24:21; At 1:6.

Falsos Messias. Depois da morte de Jesus, os judeus seguiram muitos falsos Messias, assim como Jesus predissera. (Mt 24:5) "Por meio de Josefo ficamos sabendo que parece que, no primeiro século, antes da destruição do Templo [em 70 EC], surgiram vários Messias, que prometeram o alívio do jugo romano, e encontraram prontos seguidores." (The Jewish Encyclopedia, Vol. X, p. 251) Daí, em 132 EC, Bar-Kokhba (Bar Koziba), um dos mais destacados pseudomessias, foi aclamado como Messias-rei. Ao esmagarem a revolta chefiada por ele, os soldados romanos mataram milhares de judeus. Ao passo que esses falsos Messias ilustram que muitos judeus estavam principalmente interessados num Messias político, eles mostravam também que esperavam corretamente um Messias em pessoa, não apenas uma era messiânica ou uma nação messiânica. Alguns creem que Bar-Kokhba era descendente de Davi, o que teria favorecido a sua pretensão messiânica. Todavia, visto que os registros genealógicos evidentemente foram destruídos em 70 EC, pretendentes posteriores ao cargo do Messias não podiam fornecer provas de serem da família de Davi. (O Messias, portanto, tinha de aparecer antes de 70 EC, como Jesus fez, para provar a sua pretensão de ser herdeiro de Davi. Isto mostra que aqueles que ainda esperam o aparecimento terrestre do Messias estão errados.) Entre esses posteriores falsos pretendentes ao messiado havia Moisés de Creta, que asseverava dividir o mar entre Creta e a Palestina, e Sereno, que desencaminhou muitos judeus na Espanha. The Jewish Encyclopedia alista 28 falsos Messias entre os anos 132 EC e 1744 EC. — Vol. X, pp. 252-255.

Jesus Foi Aceito Como o Messias. A evidência histórica encontrada nos Evangelhos demonstra que Jesus era deveras o Messias. No primeiro século, aqueles que estavam em condições de interrogar as testemunhas e examinar a evidência aceitavam as informações históricas como autênticas. Tinham tanta certeza da sua exatidão, que estavam dispostos a suportar perseguição e a morrer por causa da sua fé baseada nestas informações seguras. Os registros históricos dos Evangelhos mostram que diversas pessoas reconheceram abertamente que Jesus era o Cristo, ou Messias. (Mt 16:16; Jo 1:41, 45, 49; 11:27) Jesus não disse que não estavam certas, e ocasionalmente ele admitiu ser o Cristo. (Mt 16:17; Jo 4:25, 26) Às vezes, Jesus não dizia especificamente que ele era o Messias; outras vezes mandou que os outros não divulgassem isso. (Mr 8:29, 30; 9:9; Jo 10:24, 25) Visto que Jesus estava presente onde pessoas podiam ouvi-lo e ver suas obras, ele queria que cressem na base sólida desta evidência, para que a fé delas se fundasse no seu próprio testemunho ocular do cumprimento das Escrituras Hebraicas. (Jo 5:36; 10:24, 25; compare isso com Jo 4:41, 42.) Agora já se forneceu nos Evangelhos o registro do que Jesus era e do que fez, junto com as Escrituras Hebraicas, as quais forneceram abundante evidência do que ele faria, para que se saiba e creia que Jesus deveras é o Messias. — Jo 20:31; veja JESUS CRISTO.

2. Habitante gadita de Basã, alistado genealogicamente como filho de Abiail, durante os reinados de Jotão e de Jeroboão II (pelo visto duas listas diferentes, porque os reinados destes reis não coincidiram). — 1Cr 5:11, 13, 14, 16, 17.

9. Primeiro filho alistado do governador Zorobabel; descendente do Rei Davi. — 1Cr 3:1, 19.

13. Cabeça dentre os reunidos junto ao rio Aava para a viagem a Jerusalém, junto com Esdras, em 468 AEC. Mesulão foi um dos diversos designados por Esdras para reunir um grupo de levitas e de netineus para também fazerem a viagem. (Esd 8:15-20) Possivelmente trata-se do N.º 16, 17, 20 ou 21.

14. Levita que talvez se tenha oposto à admoestação de despedir as esposas estrangeiras encontradas por Esdras entre os israelitas quando retornou a Jerusalém. No entanto, o texto talvez signifique que ele apenas se opôs ao procedimento adotado para o cumprimento da medida. — Esd 10:10-15 n.

(Ne 3:4, 30) Mesulão deu também sua filha em casamento a Jeoanã, filho de Tobias, o amonita, união marital que causou uma divisão entre os israelitas restabelecidos. — Ne 6:17-19; 4:3; veja o N.º 13.

MESULEMETE [forma feminina de Mesulão]. Filha de "Haruz, de Jotbá", que se tornou esposa do Rei Manassés, de Judá, e mãe do Rei Amom. — 2Rs 21:19, 20.

METAIS. Mais de 75 por cento dos mais de cem elementos conhecidos ao homem são metais. Ouro, prata, cobre, ferro e chumbo são todos mencionados especificamente nas Escrituras. As primeiras referências bíblicas a metais ocorrem em Gênesis 2:11 e 4:22.

Nas suas qualidades físicas, os metais são opacos, fundíveis e dúcteis; têm lustro metálico e são geralmente bons condutores de calor e de eletricidade. Em sentido químico e físico, os metais têm certas qualidades distintivas. Para obter informações específicas e as ocorrências bíblicas, veja os acima mencionados metais sob os seus respectivos nomes; também os verbetes REFINAÇÃO, REFINADOR.

METAL, TRABALHADOR EM. Alguém que molda, malha, esculpe, grava ou de outro modo trabalha com metais. (Is 41:7) O primeiro "forjador de toda sorte de ferramenta de cobre e de ferro" na história registrada foi Tubalcaim. (Gên 4:22) Os antigos trabalhadores em metal fabricavam ferramentas, objetos domésticos, armas, armaduras, instrumentos musicais, enfeites e estatuetas. Além de modelarem objetos novos, faziam também consertos. (2Cr 24:12) Muitos eram especialistas em trabalhar com metais como ouro (Ne 3:8, 31, 32), prata (Jz 17:4; At 19:24) ou cobre (2Ti 4:14). Às vezes formavam uma espécie de associação ou grêmio. (Ne 3:31; At 19:24-28) Seu ofício exigia perícia em projetos artísticos.

Os israelitas talvez tivessem conhecimento de trabalhar em metais antes da sua entrada no Egito, ou podem tê-lo obtido ali. Na época do Êxodo, eles eram capazes de moldar um bezerro de ouro e uma serpente de cobre. (Êx 32:4; Núm 21:9) Mais impressionante, porém, foi a produção de diversos objetos de metal para o serviço no tabernáculo. Bezalel e seus ajudantes foram auxiliados pelo espírito de Jeová no seu trabalho com metais. — Êx 31:2, 3; 35:30-35.

Mais tarde, quando oprimidos pelos filisteus, não se permitiu aos israelitas terem seus próprios trabalhadores em metais. Esta medida os impediu de fabricarem armas. (1Sa 13:19-22) Sem dúvida por motivos similares, Nabucodonosor levou cativos os trabalhadores em metais e outros artífices na primeira vez que atacou Jerusalém. — 2Rs 24:14, 16; Je 24:1; 29:1, 2.

METEGUE-AMÁ [Rédeas de Amá (possivelmente: Côvado)]. Lugar que o Rei Davi tomou dos filisteus. (2Sa 8:1) Visto não se conhecer nenhum lugar com este nome, Metegue-Amá pode muito bem ser um termo figurativo, indicando uma das principais cidades dos filisteus. A passagem paralela em 1 Crônicas 18:1 diz: "Gate e suas aldeias dependentes." Em 2 Samuel 8:1, a American Standard Version (Versão Padrão Americana) evidentemente tomou o elemento "amá" em Metegue-Amá como derivado da palavra hebraica para "mãe" e traduziu Metegue-Amá por "as rédeas da cidade-mãe". Esta ideia é transmitida pela versão Almeida, edição atualizada, que reza "as rédeas da metrópole", em vez de "Metegue-Amá".

METUSAEL [Homem de Deus]. Descendente de Caim, através de Enoque. Metusael era filho de Meujael e pai de Lameque (não confundir com Lameque, o pai de Noé). — Gên 4:17, 18.

METUSALÉM [possivelmente: Homem do Projétil]. Filho do fiel profeta Enoque; pai de Lameque e avô de Noé. (Gên 5:21-29; 1Cr 1:1-4; Ju 14, 15) Metusalém, descendente de Adão através de Sete, era da oitava geração humana. (Lu 3:37, 38) Usufruiu uma vida de 969 anos, a mais longa do registro bíblico, que se tornou proverbial para longevidade. Ele faleceu em 2370 AEC, ano em que começou o Dilúvio. Mas as Escrituras dizem que Metusalém "morreu", não que pereceu no Dilúvio, em resultado duma execução divina. — Gên 5:27; veja VIDA, DURAÇÃO DA.

MEUJAEL [Golpeado por Deus]. Bisneto de Caim. Meujael foi o pai de Metusael e o avô de Lameque (não o Lameque que descendeu de Sete). — Gên 4:17, 18.

MEUMÃ. Um dos oficiais da corte do rei persa Assuero (Xerxes I), que governou nos dias de Mordecai e Ester. Meumã foi mencionado primeiro entre os sete oficiais da corte, aos quais Assuero mandou que trouxessem a Rainha Vasti à sua presença. — Est 1:10, 11.

MEUNINS. À base do nome, acha-se que os meunins tenham sido um povo árabe que morava em Ma'an ou nos arredores desta cidade, a uns 32 km ao ESE de Petra.

O Rei Uzias, de Judá (829-778 AEC), com a ajuda de Jeová, foi bem-sucedido na guerra contra os meunins. (2Cr 26:1, 7) Talvez naquele tempo alguns dos meunins cativos fossem constituídos em escravos do templo, e, portanto, seus descendentes são mais tarde alistados entre os netineus que retornaram do exílio babilônico. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 50; Ne 7:52; compare isso com Sal 68:18.

Durante o reinado de Ezequias (745-717 AEC), um grupo de simeonitas golpeou os meunins, que moravam em tendas, na vizinhança de Gedor. — 1Cr 4:24, 39-41; veja AMONINS.

MEZAABE [Águas de Ouro]. Genitor (talvez genitora) de Matrede e antepassado(a) de Meetabel, esposa de Hadar (Hadade), último rei de Edom mencionado por nome. — Gên 36:31, 39; 1Cr 1:50.

MEZOBAÍTA [De (Pertencente a) Zobá]. Termo que alude ao domicílio de Jaasiel. — 1Cr 11:47.

MEZUZÁ. Forma aportuguesada da palavra hebraica usada na Bíblia geralmente para designar a ombreira de porta. Mezu·záh e o plural mezu·zóhth ocorrem em Êxodo 12:7 (n), 22, 23, com referência a se esparrinhar o sangue da vítima pascoal nas ombreiras das portas, e em Êxodo 21:6, com referência a um escravo que, desejando permanecer no serviço do seu amo, era encostado na porta ou na "ombreira", furando-lhe seu amo a orelha com uma sovela. Fazem-se também referências às ombreiras do templo construído por Salomão (1Rs 6:31, 33; 7:5) e do templo simbólico observado por Ezequiel em visão. — Ez 41:21; 45:19; 46:2.

Nos tempos modernos, o termo aportuguesado "mezuzá" é usado para se referir a um pedaço retangular de pergaminho com o texto hebraico de Deuteronômio 6:4-9 e Deuteronômio 11:13-21, geralmente escrito em 22 linhas. O pergaminho é enrolado e colocado num receptáculo de madeira, metal ou vidro, afixado em ângulo na ombreira direita das moradias dos judeus ortodoxos, a parte de cima aponta para dentro e a parte de baixo, para fora. A palavra hebraica Shad·daí (que significa "Todo-Poderoso") está escrita no verso deste pergaminho e frequentemente é visível através duma abertura envidraçada do recipiente. Às vezes, o recipiente da mezuzá é artisticamente trabalhado. Quando os pios judeus ortodoxos entram na casa ou saem dela, eles tocam a mezuzá com a mão e recitam a oração: “Que Deus cuide de minha saída e de minha entrada agora e para sempre.” — Veja Sal 121:8.

O uso da mezuzá baseia-se na interpretação literal da ordem em Deuteronômio 6:9 (n) e 11:20.

MIAMIM. Veja MIJAMIM.

MIBAR [duma raiz que significa “escolher”]. Filho de Hagri; um dos poderosos das forças militares de Davi. (1Cr 11:26, 38) Alguns sugeriram que há uma discrepância no texto em 1 Crônicas 11:38, porque Bani, o gadita, não Mibar, é mencionado numa lista paralela em 2 Samuel 23:36. Eles sustentam que Mibar é uma alteração do hebraico para “de Zobá”, e que as palavras finais de 1 Crônicas 11:38 resultaram da leitura ben-hagh·rí (filho de Hagri) em lugar de ba·ní hag·ga·dhí (Bani, o gadita). Isto continua a ser conjectura.

MIBSÃO [Perfumado; Óleo de Bálsamo; Aromático].

1. Um dos filhos de Ismael e fundador duma família. — Gên 25:13; 1Cr 1:29.

2. Descendente de Simeão. — 1Cr 4:24, 25.

MIBZAR [possivelmente significando “Fortificação”]. Um dos xeques de Edom, ou Esaú. O nome Mibzar talvez passasse também a ser aplicado tanto aos descendentes dele como ao lugar onde se estabeleceram. — Gên 36:40, 42; 1Cr 1:53.

MICA, MICÁ [forma abreviada de Micael ou Micaías]. Os nomes em português, Mica, Micá e Miqueias, resultaram de uma pequena diferença na grafia hebraica.

1. Homem de Efraim. Violando o oitavo dos Dez Mandamentos (Êx 20:15), Micá tirou da mãe 1.100 moedas (peças) de prata. Quando ele confessou isso e as devolveu, ela disse: “Sem falta tenho de santificar a prata a Jeová, da minha mão, por meu filho, para fazer uma imagem esculpida e uma estátua fundida; e agora a devolverei a ti.” Ela levou então 200 peças de prata ao prateiro, que fez “uma imagem esculpida e uma estátua fundida”, que depois passaram a ficar na casa de Micá. Micá, que tinha “uma casa de deuses”, fez um éfode e terafins, e empossou um dos seus filhos para atuar como sacerdote para ele. Embora este arranjo ostensivamente se destinasse a honrar a Jeová, era crassamente impróprio, porque violava o mandamento que proibia a idolatria (Êx 20:4-6), e desconsiderava o tabernáculo de Jeová e Seu sacerdócio. (Jz 17:1-6; De 12:1-14) Mais tarde, Micá acolheu Jonatã, descendente de Gersom, filho de Moisés, no seu lar, contratando este jovem levita como seu sacerdote. (Jz 18:4, 30) Sentindo-se equivocadamente satisfeito com isso, Micá disse: “Agora sei que Jeová me fará o bem.” (Jz 17:7-13) Mas, Jonatã não era da linhagem de Arão e assim nem mesmo estava habilitado para o serviço sacerdotal, o que somente aumentava o erro de Micá. — Núm 3:10.

Naqueles dias, os danitas, à procura dum território em que morar, enviaram cinco espias, os quais com o tempo chegaram a Efraim “até a casa de Micá e foram passar a noite ali”. Já perto da casa de Micá, reconheceram a voz de Jonatã, descobriram o que ele estava fazendo ali e fizeram-no indagar de Deus se o seu empreendimento seria bem sucedido. O sacerdote disse-lhes: “Ide em paz. Vosso caminho em que andais está diante de Jeová.” (Jz 18:1-6) Subsequentemente, eles espionaram Laís e retornaram, falando aos seus irmãos sobre o lugar, em vista do que os cinco espias e 600 homens danitas, cingidos para a guerra, se dirigiram àquela cidade. Em caminho, ao passarem pela casa de Micá, os espias falaram aos seus irmãos sobre os objetos religiosos dele e sugeriram que os tomassem. Os danitas tomaram-nos e também convenceram o levita de que seria melhor para ele ser sacerdote duma tribo e família em Israel, do que apenas para um homem. Tomaram então a ele, o éfode, os terafins e a imagem esculpida e seguiram caminho. — Jz 18:7-21.

Pouco depois, Micá e um grupo de homens perseguiram os danitas. Quando os alcançou e foi perguntado sobre o motivo disso, Micá disse: “Tomastes os meus deuses que eu fiz, também o sacerdote, e seguis caminho, e o que me resta?” A isso, os filhos de Dã advertiram-no sobre um possível ataque, se Micá continuasse a segui-los e a protestar. Vendo que os danitas eram muito mais fortes do que seu grupo, Micá voltou para casa. (Jz 18:22-26) Depois, os danitas golpearam e incendiaram Laís, construindo no seu lugar a cidade de Dã. Jonatã e seus filhos tornaram-se sacerdotes dos danitas, “e a imagem esculpida de Micá, que este tinha feito, mantiveram erigida para si todos os dias em que a casa do verdadeiro Deus [o tabernáculo] permanecia em Silo”. — Jz 18:27-31.

2. Levita da família coatita de Uziel, da qual era cabeça, e seu irmão, Issias, o segundo, quando Davi distribuiu as designações de serviço levítico. — 1Cr 23:6, 12, 20; 24:24, 25.

3. Filho de Mefibosete (Meribe-Baal) e neto de Jonatã, filho do Rei Saul. Mica foi o pai de Pitom, Meleque, Tareia (Tareá, IBB) e Acaz. — 2Sa 9:12; 1Cr 8:33-35; 9:39-41.

4. Rubenita que era filho de Simei e pai de Reaías. Seu descendente, Beerá, era maioral da tribo de Rubem e foi levado ao exílio pelo rei assírio Tilgate-Pilneser (Tiglate-Pileser III). — 1Cr 5:1, 3-6; 2Rs 15:29.

5. Pai de Abdom (Acbor). Ele é também chamado Micaías, que é a forma mais extensa do seu nome. — 2Cr 34:20; 2Rs 22:12.

6. Um dos levitas (ou antepassado de um) que atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" do tempo de Neemias. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 9, 11.

7. Descendente levita de Asafe e filho de Zicri (também identificado como Zabdi e Zacur). Mica foi pai de Matanias e é também chamado Micá e Micaías. — 1Cr 9:14, 15; Ne 11:15, 17, 22; 12:35.

MICAEL [Quem É Semelhante a Deus?].

1. Pai do maioral Setur, da tribo de Aser, que foi um dos 12 enviados para espiar Canaã. — Núm 13:2, 13.

2. Antepassado de Asafe; da família de Gersom, filho de Levi. — 1Cr 6:39, 40, 43.

3. Um dos cabeças da tribo de Issacar; da família de Tola. — 1Cr 7:1-3.

4. Maioral da tribo de Manassés, que se bandeou para Davi em Ziclague. — 1Cr 12:20.

5. Pai de Onri, cabeça da casa paterna de Issacar durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 27:18.

6. Um dos filhos do Rei Jeosafá, de Judá, o qual, junto com seus irmãos, recebeu do pai presentes dispendiosos e cidades fortificadas. Todavia, quando seu irmão mais velho, Jeorão, tornou-se rei, Jeorão matou todos os seis irmãos mais novos, inclusive Micael. — 2Cr 21:1-4.

7. Gadita e descendente de Buz; antepassado do N.º 8, distante pelo menos cinco gerações. — 1Cr 5:11, 13, 14.

8. Gadita, primeiro dos sete filhos de Abiail, descendente do N.º 7 e cabeça duma casa de Gileade, alistado genealogicamente durante os dias do Rei Jeroboão II, de Israel, e do Rei Jotão, de Judá. — 1Cr 5:11-17.

9. Benjamita; descendente de Saraim e Husim, esposa dele, através de Elpaal e de Berias. — 1Cr 8:1, 8, 11-13, 16.

10. Pai do Zebadias que subiu com Esdras de Babilônia a Jerusalém, em 468 AEC. — Esd 8:1, 8.

MICAIA. Veja MICAÍAS N.º 1.

MICAÍAS [Quem É Semelhante a Jeová?].

1. Ou Micaia, esposa do Rei Roboão, filha de Uriel, de Gibeá, e mãe do Rei Abias, de Judá. Ela é também chamada "Maacá". — 2Cr 11:18, 20; 13:1, 2.

2. Filho de Inlá e profeta de Jeová para o reino setentrional de Israel, durante o reinado do Rei Acabe. (1Rs 22:8) Numa visita do Rei Jeosafá, de Judá, a Acabe, este rei de Israel convidou-o a participar numa campanha militar contra os sírios, para recuperar Ramote-Gileade. Jeosafá aceitou, mas pediu que se procurasse saber a palavra de Jeová. De modo que Acabe convocou 400 profetas e perguntou-lhes: "Devo ir contra Ramote-Gileade em guerra ou devo refrear-me?" Eles responderam na afirmativa, dizendo que Jeová entregaria a cidade na mão do rei. No entanto, Jeosafá queria mais garantias, em vista do que Acabe, relutantemente, mandou buscar Micaías, profeta que sempre profetizara o mal para ele. Os mensageiros enviados instaram com Micaías para que dissesse a Acabe palavras semelhantes àquelas de um dos outros profetas. No começo, Micaías fez isso, mas Acabe o colocou sob juramento para falar "a verdade em nome de Jeová". Em vista disso, Micaías disse: "Deveras, vejo todos os israelitas espalhados pelos montes como ovelhas sem pastor." — 1Rs 22:1-17; 2Cr 18:1-16.

Micaías passou então a contar sua visão, de Jeová sentado no Seu trono celestial e perguntando às criaturas espirituais reunidas: "Quem logrará a Acabe, para que suba e caia em Ramote-Gileade?" Um dos espíritos ofereceu-se a ir e a tornar-se "um espírito enganoso" na boca de todos os profetas de Acabe. Jeová respondeu: "Tu o lograrás, e ainda mais, sairás vencedor. Sai e faze assim." Micaías disse então a Acabe que Deus colocara um espírito enganoso na boca de todos os seus profetas, "mas o próprio Jeová falou de calamidade a teu respeito". Daí, o falso profeta Zedequias deu uma bofetada em Micaías e perguntou zombeteiramente: "Por onde é que passou o espírito de Jeová de mim para falar contigo?" Micaías respondeu destemidamente: "Eis que estarás vendo por onde, naquele dia em que entrarás na câmara mais recôndita para te esconder." Acabe ordenou então que Micaías fosse posto na casa de detenção, onde o profeta seria alimentado com uma ração reduzida de pão e água até que o rei retornasse em paz. Todavia, Acabe nunca retornou, porque, durante a batalha em Ramote-Gileade, "havia um homem que entesou o arco na sua inocência", a flecha atingiu o rei de Israel e ele morreu aos poucos. As últimas palavras de Micaías a Acabe tinham sido: "Se de fato voltares em paz, Jeová não falou comigo." A morte do rei provou que Micaías era deveras profeta de Jeová. — 1Rs 22:18-37; 2Cr 18:17-34.

3. Um dos príncipes que o Rei Jeosafá enviou através de Judá como instrutores, junto com levitas e sacerdotes. Eles tinham consigo "o livro da lei de Jeová" ao instruírem o povo em todas as cidades de Judá. — 2Cr 17:7-9.

4. Pai do Acbor (Abdom) que, junto com outros, foi enviado pelo Rei Josias para indagar de Jeová a respeito das palavras do recém-encontrado livro da Lei. Ele é também chamado Micá. — 2Rs 22:12, 13; 2Cr 34:20, 21.

5. “Filho de Gemarias, filho de Safã.” Ele estava presente no refeitório de seu pai, Gemarias, quando Baruque leu ali em público o rolo com as palavras de Jeová dadas por meio de Jeremias contra Israel, Judá e todas as nações. Depois de ouvir esta mensagem, Micaías relatou o que ouvira ao secretário e aos príncipes do Rei Jeoiaquim. — Je 36:2, 9-13.

6. Antepassado do sacerdote Zacarias, estando este último entre os que estavam com trombetas na cerimônia inaugural da reconstruída muralha de Jerusalém. Ele é também chamado Mica. — Ne 11:22; 12:31, 35.

7. Sacerdote entre os que, com trombetas, tocavam em um dos dois “coros de agradecimento”, participando na marcha de inauguração da reconstruída muralha de Jerusalém, nos dias de Neemias. — Ne 12:40, 41.

MICAL [provavelmente: Quem É Semelhante a Deus?]. Filha mais nova do Rei Saul, que se tornou esposa de Davi. Saul oferecera a Davi sua filha mais velha, Merabe, como esposa, mas deu-a a outro homem. Mical, porém, “amava a Davi”, e Saul ofereceu-a a Davi, se este conseguisse trazer os prepúcios de cem filisteus, sendo que Saul pensava que Davi morreria na tentativa de matar tantos guerreiros inimigos. Davi aceitou o desafio, apresentou a Saul 200 prepúcios de filisteus, e recebeu Mical por esposa. Mas, daí em diante, “Saul sentiu ainda mais temor por causa de Davi”, tornando-se permanente adversário dele. (1Sa 14:49; 18:17-29) Mais tarde, quando o ódio que Saul tinha a Davi atingiu seu auge, Mical ajudou Davi a fugir da ira do rei. Durante a longa ausência de Davi, Saul deu-a em casamento a Palti, filho de Laís, de Galim. — 1Sa 19:11-17; 25:44.

Depois, quando Abner procurou celebrar um pacto com Davi, Davi negou-se a recebê-lo, a menos que lhe trouxesse Mical. Davi, por mensageiro, apresentou sua exigência a Is-Bosete, filho de Saul, e Mical foi tirada do seu marido Paltiel (Palti) e restituída a Davi. — 2Sa 3:12-16.

Punida por Desrespeitar a Davi. Quando Davi, como rei, mandou trazer a Arca do Pacto a Jerusalém e demonstrou sua alegria pela adoração de Jeová por dançar com exuberância, “cingido dum éfode de linho”, Mical o observou duma janela e “começou a desprezá-lo no seu coração”. Quando Davi voltou para casa, Mical expressou sarcasticamente seus sentimentos, revelando falta de apreço pela espécie de zelo que Davi havia demonstrado pela adoração de Jeová e indicando que ela achava que ele agira dum modo nada dignificante. Davi censurou-a então e evidentemente também a puniu por não ter mais relações sexuais com ela, de modo que ela morreu sem filhos. — 2Sa 6:14-23.

Cria os Filhos da Sua Irmã. O relato em 2 Samuel 21:8 menciona “os cinco filhos de Mical, filha de Saul, que ela dera à luz a Adriel”, os quais estavam entre os membros da casa de Saul, que Davi entregou aos gibeonitas como expiação pela tentativa de Saul de aniquilá-los. (2Sa 21:1-10) O aparente conflito entre 2 Samuel 21:8 e 2 Samuel 6:23, que mostra que Mical morreu sem filhos, pode ser resolvido pelo conceito adotado por alguns comentadores, a saber, de que estes filhos eram os cinco filhos de Merabe, irmã de Mical, e que Mical os criou depois da morte prematura da mãe deles. — Veja MERABE.

MICLOTE.

1. Pai de Simeá (Simeã); descendente do benjamita Jeiel, de Gibeão. — 1Cr 8:1, 29-32; 9:35-38.

2. Líder designado para o serviço do rei durante o segundo mês na turma comandada por Dodai, o aoíta. — 1Cr 27:1, 4.

MICMÁS [Lugar Guardado [isto é: escondido]]. Lugar identificado com o atual Mukhmas, um morro de uns 600 m acima do nível do mar e a uns 11 km ao NNE de Jerusalém. Fica ao N do uádi Suweinit (Nahal Mikhmas), que se pensa ser o “desfiladeiro de Micmás”. (1Sa 13:23) Com a confluência de outros uádis, do SO e do NO, o uádi Suweinit se estende desde a região montanhosa de Efraim até o vale do Jordão.

Sem dúvida, com o fim de se preparar para libertar Israel do controle filisteu, o Rei Saul escolheu uma força de 3.000 homens. Destes, 2.000 acamparam com ele em Micmás e na região montanhosa de Betel, e os outros ocuparam posição junto ao filho dele, Jonatã, em Gibeá. Mais tarde, na vizinha Geba (“Gibeá”, Vg), Jonatã golpeou a “guarnição” dos filisteus. Em retaliação, os filisteus reuniram um grande exército, inclusive carros e cavaleiros, e aparentemente obrigaram Saul a retirar-se de Micmás para Gilgal. Apertados pelos filisteus, muitos israelitas esconderam-se em cavernas e em recessos; outros refugiaram-se ao L do Jordão. Esta dispersão dos guerreiros israelitas em face da ameaça dos filisteus foi mais tarde apresentada por Saul como motivo de não ter obedientemente aguardado a chegada de Samuel para oferecer o sacrifício. Repreendido por Samuel por seu ato presunçoso, Saul, com uma força reduzida de uns 600 homens, veio depois a Jonatã em Geba. (1Sa 13:1-16) De acordo com 1 Samuel 14:2, Saul evidentemente transferiu seu acampamento para Migrom, perto de Gibeá.

Jonatã Dá Início à Debandada dos Filisteus. Visto que três companhias de saqueadores filisteus saíam do seu acampamento em Micmás, e um posto avançado dos filisteus fazia surtidas ao "desfiladeiro de Micmás", Jonatã decidiu acabar com esta ameaça. (1Sa 13:16-23) Para isso, atravessou o desfiladeiro, o qual (se tiver sido o uádi Suweinit) constitui uma garganta funda com penhascos quase que verticais ao L de Geba (Jaba'). Dois morros salientes com íngremes encostas rochosas se elevam num ponto em que o uádi Suweinit faz uma curva acentuada. Talvez sejam 'os rochedos em forma de dente', Bozez e Sené, cujos penhascos em forma de dente talvez tivessem sido arredondados pelas forças erosivas de uns 30 séculos. (1Sa 14:1-7) Para um estranho, atravessar o labirinto de elevações, cômoros e rochas agudas no uádi teria sido quase que impossível. Mas Jonatã, criado em território benjamita, aparentemente o conhecia bem. Enquanto o acampamento de seu pai estivera em Micmás, e o seu próprio em Geba, Jonatã, sem dúvida, tivera várias oportunidades de se familiarizar melhor com o terreno.

Jonatã e seu escudeiro seguiram para Micmás e depois se expuseram à vista do posto avançado dos filisteus. Avistando-os, os filisteus clamaram: "Subi a nós e nós vos deixaremos saber uma coisa!" Então, de gatinhas, Jonatã, seguido pelo seu escudeiro, subiu a passagem íngreme até o posto avançado dos filisteus. Em dupla, golpearam cerca de 20 filisteus numa distância de aproximadamente metade da extensão dum terreno que uma junta de bois pode lavrar num dia. — 1Sa 14:8, 11-14 n.

Um terremoto divinamente enviado, cujos efeitos foram notados pelos vigias de Saul, lançou o acampamento dos filisteus em confusão. Até que Saul e seus homens apareceram no cenário, muitos dos filisteus já haviam matado uns aos outros na confusão e os demais haviam fugido. O exército de Saul, já então provavelmente equipado com as armas dos filisteus encontradas no lugar, perseguiu as forças inimigas em fuga. Juntando-se a eles os israelitas que se haviam escondido e os que haviam tomado o lado dos filisteus, "continuaram a golpear os filisteus desde Micmás até Aijalom". — 1Sa 14:15-23, 31.

De acordo com 1 Samuel 13:5, as forças filisteias em Micmás incluíam 30.000 carros de guerra. Este número é muito maior do que o envolvido em diversas outras expedições militares (veja Jz 4:13; 2Cr 12:2, 3; 14:9), e é difícil de imaginar como tantos carros de guerra podiam ter sido usados em terreno montanhoso. Por este motivo, 30.000 é geralmente encarado como erro de escriba. A Pesito siríaca e a edição lagardiana da Septuaginta grega rezam 3.000, e diversas outras traduções da Bíblia adotam esta versão. (BJ, CBC, MC) Todavia, sugeriram-se números ainda menores.

Séculos mais tarde, a profecia de Isaías menciona Micmás como o lugar em que o assírio conquistador 'depositaria seus objetos'. (Is 10:24, 28) Após o retorno dos israelitas do exílio babilônico, em 537 AEC, Micmás parece ter sido reocupada pelos benjamitas. — Esd 2:1, 2, 27; Ne 7:31; 11:31.

MICMETATE. Localidade na fronteira entre Efraim e Manassés. É identificada com Khirbet Juleijil, a pouca distância ao L de Siquém. Isto concorda com a declaração bíblica de que Micmetate ficava "defronte de Siquém". — Jos 16:5, 6; 17:7.

MICNEIAS [Manadas (Gado) de Jeová]. Um dos levitas que tocavam harpa enquanto a Arca estava sendo transportada da casa de Obede-Edom para Jerusalém. — 1Cr 15:17, 18, 21.

MICRI [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "vender"]. Benjamita e antepassado de Elá, que morava em Jerusalém depois do exílio babilônico. — 1Cr 9:1-3, 7, 8.

MICTÃO. Palavra hebraica que ocorre nos cabeçalhos de seis salmos atribuídos a Davi. (Sal 16, 56-60) Este termo pode simplesmente significar que os salmos são inscrições dos episódios que relatam.

MIDIÃ, MIDIANITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Midiã].

1. Um dos filhos de Abraão com sua concubina Quetura; pai de Efá, Efer, Anoque, Abida e Elda. (Gên 25:1, 2, 4; 1Cr 1:32, 33) Antes de morrer, Abraão deu dádivas a Midiã e aos outros filhos das suas concubinas, e depois os mandou para a terra do Oriente. — Gên 25:5, 6.

2. Os descendentes de Midiã, filho de Abraão, são coletivamente chamados de "Midiã" ou "midianitas". (Núm 31:2, 3) Às vezes, a Bíblia parece referir-se a eles como ismaelitas. (Veja Gên 37:25, 27, 28, 36; 39:1; Jz 8:22, 24.) Isto talvez dê a entender que os descendentes de Abraão através dos seus filhos Ismael e Midiã eram bem semelhantes no seu modo de vida, e pode ter havido maior fusão entre eles por casamentos mistos entre os dois povos. Parece também que pelo menos alguns dos queneus eram conhecidos como midianitas. Visto que os queneus já são mencionados como povo antes do nascimento de Midiã, isto talvez signifique que o cunhado queneu de Moisés, Hobabe, era midianita apenas dum ponto de vista geográfico. — Gên 15:18, 19; Núm 10:29; Jz 1:16; 4:11; veja ISMAELITA; QUENEU.

Os midianitas, como descendentes de Abraão, provavelmente falavam uma língua bem parecida ao hebraico. Gideão, por exemplo, parece não ter tido nenhuma dificuldade em entender os midianitas. (Jz 7:13-15; 8:18, 19) No entanto, há também a possibilidade de Gideão ter aprendido a língua dos midianitas, por Israel ter estado sete anos sob o domínio deles. — Jz 6:1.

Os midianitas eram primariamente nômades que moravam em tendas. (Jz 6:5, 6; Hab 3:7) Mas, nos dias de Moisés, relata-se também que moravam em cidades. (Núm 31:9, 10) Naquele tempo eram bastante prósperos, possuindo jumentos e animais do rebanho e da manada, que ascendiam a dezenas de milhares. (Núm 31:32-34) Suas riquezas incluíam enfeites de ouro com o peso total de mais de 191 kg (agora com o valor de mais de US$ 2.150.000). — Núm 31:50-52.

Parece que tanto os homens como as mulheres se adornavam com enfeites de ouro, inclusive com argolas para as narinas e arrecadas. Os reis midianitas trajavam-se com "roupas de lã tingida de roxo", e até seus camelos tinham colares ao pescoço, evidentemente com ornamentos em forma de lua. — Núm 31:50; Jz 8:21, 26.

Sem dúvida, os midianitas obtiveram grande parte da sua riqueza por meio de comércio e de saque. (Veja Gên 37:28; Jz 6:5, 6.) Já no tempo de José, caravanas de mercadores midianitas viajavam para o Egito. Foi a tal caravana indo ao Egito e levando resinas aromáticas que José foi vendido pelos seus meios-irmãos. — Gên 37:25, 28.

Provavelmente, algum tempo antes da entrada de Israel na Terra da Promessa, o rei edomita Hadade (filho de Bedade) obteve a vitória sobre os midianitas no campo de Moabe. — Gên 36:35; 1Cr 1:46.

Induzem Israel ao Pecado. Mais tarde, os midianitas mostraram-se hostis aos israelitas. Cooperaram com os moabitas em contratar o profeta Balaão para amaldiçoar Israel. (Núm 22:4-7) Quando isso falhou, os midianitas e os moabitas, seguindo o conselho de Balaão, astutamente usaram suas mulheres para induzir milhares de varões israelitas a se envolverem em imoralidade sexual e em idolatria relacionada com Baal de Peor. (Núm 25:1-9, 14-18; 31:15, 16; 1Co 10:8; Re 2:14) Depois disso, os israelitas, em obediência à ordem divina, vingaram-se de Midiã. As cidades midianitas e os acampamentos murados na região foram entregues ao fogo. Milhares de animais domésticos e muitos objetos de ouro foram tomados como despojo. Com exceção das virgens, todos, inclusive os cinco reis de Midiã — Evi, Requém, Zur, Hur e Reba — foram mortos. — Núm 31.

Menos de três séculos depois, os midianitas se haviam restabelecido suficientemente deste golpe para poder oprimir os israelitas por sete anos. (Veja Jz 6:1; 11:25, 26.) Ao lado dos amalequitas e dos "orientais", estes nômades, que moravam em tendas, junto com seu gado e seus inúmeros camelos, penetraram na terra de Israel até Gaza, saqueando os animais domésticos dos israelitas e também consumindo suas safras. — Jz 6:2-6.

Derrota Esmagadora Infligida por Gideão. Por fim, quando Israel clamou a Jeová por ajuda, ele suscitou Gideão para libertá-los. (Jz 6:7-16) A derrota infligida por Jeová por meio dele foi tão completa, que não há mais registro duma hostilização adicional por parte dos midianitas. (Jz 8:28) Seus príncipes Orebe e Zeebe foram mortos, assim como foram seus reis Zeba e Zalmuna. (Jz 7:25; 8:5, 21; veja GIDEÃO.) Séculos mais tarde, ainda se aludia à vitória sobre Midiã, ao ilustrar o esmagamento do poderio inimigo. — Is 9:4; 10:24-26; veja também Sal 83:9-11.

Em contraste com a anterior inimizade dos midianitas, uma profecia de restauração apontava para o tempo em que "os machos novos dos camelos de Midiã e de Efá" trariam presentes a Sião. — Is 60:5, 6, 11-14.

3. O território ocupado pelos midianitas era conhecido como "Midiã" ou a "terra de Midiã". (1Rs 11:18; Hab 3:7) Em geral se concorda que os descendentes de Midiã se fixaram principalmente na parte NO da Arábia, um pouco ao L do golfo de ʽAqaba. Mas, desconhece-se a extensão das suas terras, e ela deve ter variado no decorrer da sua história. Durante a vida de Moisés, parece que muitos midianitas viviam perto do território moabita e na vizinhança da região controlada pelo rei amorreu, Síon. — Núm 22:4; 31:8-12; Jos 13:21.

O próprio Moisés passou cerca de 40 anos na terra de Midiã. Casou-se ali com Zípora, uma das sete filhas de Jetro, sacerdote de Midiã. (Veja JETRO.) Com ela teve dois filhos, Gersom e Eliézer. O trabalho de Moisés como pastor para o seu sogro levou-o à região montanhosa em torno de Horebe, o que sugere que morava na vizinhança do golfo de ʽAqaba. Todavia, não se pode determinar se a região em torno do Horebe era então parte da "terra de Midiã". (Êx 2:15-22; 3:1; 4:18-20; 18:1-4; At 7:29, 30) Parece que, numa época posterior, falava-se de Edom pelo menos parcialmente como Midiã. — 1Rs 11:14-18.

MIDIM. Lugar no ermo de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 61) Midim talvez possa ser identificado com Khirbet Abu Tabaq, situado na baixada chamada el Buqeiʽa (Biqʽat Hureqanya; o vale de Acor?) perto da extremidade NO do Mar Morto.

MIGDAL-EL [Torre de Deus]. Cidade fortificada no território de Naftali. (Jos 19:32, 35, 38) Uma possível identificação sugerida para Migdal-El é Majadel. Este lugar fica num morro a uns 17 km ao ESE de Tiro.

MIGDAL-GADE [Torre de Boa Sorte]. Cidade de Judá na Sefelá. (Jos 15:20, 33, 37) Talvez possa ser identificada com Khirbet el-Mejdeleh (Horvat Migdal Gad), a uns 20 km ao O de Hébron.

MIGDOL [Torre].

1. Lugar egípcio usado como ponto de referência para descrever a localização do último acampamento dos israelitas em Pi-Hairote, antes de cruzar o Mar Vermelho. Eles deviam acampar "diante de Pi-Hairote, entre Migdol e o mar, à vista de Baal-Zefom". (Êx 14:2; Núm 33:5-8) Os peritos, em geral, sustentam que Migdol é provavelmente a pronúncia egípcia da palavra hebraica migh·dál, que significa "torre", e que, sem dúvida, se refere a um posto militar ou torre de vigia na fronteira egípcia. Todavia, há evidência de que havia diversos Migdol ao longo da fronteira egípcia; até mesmo hoje há três aldeias diferentes com o nome de Mashtul, a atual forma de Migdol em egípcio (de derivação copta). (Veja também o N.º 2.) Embora uma das Tabuinhas de Amarna mencione certo Ma-ag-da-lí, não indica sua localização. Visto que a localização dos outros lugares, Pi-Hairote e Baal-Zefom, é atualmente desconhecida, continua incerta a localização de Migdol. Alguns acham provável que tenha sido um lugar no alto do Jebel ʽAtaqah, sobranceira à extremidade setentrional do golfo de Suez. Embora não se saiba hoje de nenhuma evidência que relacione este lugar com o nome Migdol, seria obviamente um lugar estratégico para uma torre de vigia ou um posto de fronteira.

2. O Migdol mencionado pelos profetas Jeremias e Ezequiel uns 900 anos depois do Êxodo. Embora talvez se trate do mesmo que o já considerado, a maioria dos comentadores acredita que envolve um segundo Migdol egípcio.

O profeta Ezequiel predisse que sobreviria ao Egito uma devastação, evidentemente da parte de Babilônia, golpeando-o "desde Migdol até Siene, e até o termo da Etiópia". (Ez 29:10; 30:6) Visto que Siene se encontrava no extremo S do antigo Egito, parece que este Migdol ficava no extremo N, dando assim origem a uma descrição similar à frase conhecida, "desde Dã para baixo até Berseba", usada com referência à Palestina. (Jz 20:1) Depois da queda de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC, refugiados judeus estabeleceram-se em Migdol, Tafnes, Nofe (Mênfis) e na terra de Patros. Mas, Migdol e outros lugares também deveriam sentir a 'espada devoradora' do Rei Nabucodonosor, de Babilônia. — Je 44:1; 46:13, 14.

Este Migdol costuma ser identificado com uma fortaleza descrita em textos hieroglíficos egípcios como guardando os acessos do NE do país. O Itinerário de Antonino (Itinerarium Provinciarum Antonini Augusti) do terceiro século EC refere-se a um lugar chamado Magdolo, perto de Pelúsio, encontrando-se este último lugar na costa mediterrânea, no que se poderia chamar de entrada do Egito para os procedentes da Filístia. Embora não haja certeza disso, alguns peritos provisoriamente identificam esta fortaleza na fronteira, chamada Migdol, com Tell el-Heir, a uns 10 km ao SSO de Pelúsio (Tell el Farame).

MIGROM [Eira]. Um lugar "nos arrabaldes de Gibeá", onde o Rei Saul estava acampado quando Jonatã e seu escudeiro mataram uns 20 homens do posto avançado dos filisteus perto de Micmás. (1Sa 13:16, 23; 14:1, 2, 13-16) Tell Miryam, a cerca de 1 km ao OSO de Mukhmas (Micmás) é provisoriamente identificado com Migrom.

Em Isaías 10:28 prediz-se que Migrom seria uma das cidades pelas quais os assírios passariam em caminho para Jerusalém. Ser ela mencionada depois de Ai (Aiate) e antes de Micmás parece situar Migrom ao N, não ao S, de Micmás. Por isso sugeriu-se uma segunda Migrom (Makrun, ao NO de Micmás). Todavia, se a Migrom dos dias de Saul ainda existia, parece improvável que houvesse outra cidade com o mesmo nome a menos de 3 km de distância. De modo que a profecia talvez apenas aliste cidades a serem afetadas pela invasão assíria, e isso sem tomar em consideração a ordem ou a posição geográfica de uma cidade com relação a outra. (Is 10:24, 28-32) Assim, a Migrom de Isaías 10:28 talvez seja a mesma que a mencionada em 1 Samuel 14:2.

MIGUEL [Quem É Semelhante a Deus?]. O único santo anjo, além de Gabriel, mencionado por nome na Bíblia, e o único chamado de "arcanjo". (Ju 9) A primeira ocorrência do nome se acha no capítulo dez de Daniel, onde Miguel é descrito como "um dos mais destacados príncipes"; ele veio ajudar um anjo de categoria inferior, que sofreu oposição da parte do "príncipe do domínio real da Pérsia". Miguel foi chamado de 'príncipe do povo de Daniel', 'o grande príncipe que está de pé a favor dos filhos do povo de Daniel'. (Da 10:13, 20, 21; 12:1) Isto indica ser Miguel o anjo que guiou os israelitas através do ermo. (Êx 23:20, 21, 23; 32:34; 33:2) Esta conclusão é apoiada pelo fato de que "Miguel, o arcanjo, teve uma controvérsia com o Diabo e disputava acerca do corpo de Moisés". — Ju 9.

A evidência bíblica indica que o nome Miguel se aplicava ao Filho de Deus antes de ele deixar o céu para se tornar Jesus Cristo, e também depois do seu retorno. Miguel é o único mencionado como "o arcanjo", que significa "anjo principal" ou "anjo mais importante". O termo ocorre na Bíblia apenas no singular. Isto parece dar a entender que há ape-nas um a quem Deus designou como o principal, ou cabeça, da hoste angélica. Em 1 Tessalonicenses 4:16 descreve-se a voz do ressuscitado Senhor Jesus Cristo como a dum arcanjo, sugerindo que ele mesmo, efetivamente, é o arcanjo. Este texto descreve-o como descendo do céu com "chamada dominante". Portanto, é apenas lógico que a voz que faz esta chamada dominante seja descrita por uma palavra que não diminuiria ou rebaixaria a grande autoridade que Cristo Jesus tem agora como Rei dos reis e Senhor dos senhores. (Mt 28:18; Re 17:14) Se a designação "arcanjo" não se aplicasse a Jesus Cristo, mas a outros anjos, então não seria apropriada a referência à "voz de arcanjo". Neste caso, descreveria a voz de uma autoridade inferior à do Filho de Deus.

Há também outras correspondências que estabelecem que Miguel realmente é o Filho de Deus. Daniel, depois de fazer a primeira referência a Miguel (Da 10:13), registrou uma profecia que se estende ao "tempo do fim" (Da 11:40) e depois declarou: "E durante esse tempo pôr-se-á de pé Miguel, o grande príncipe que está de pé a favor dos filhos de teu povo [o de Daniel]." (Da 12:1) Miguel 'pôr-se de pé' devia ser associado a "um tempo de aflição tal como nunca se fez ocorrer, desde que veio a haver nação até esse tempo". (Da 12:1) Na profecia de Daniel, 'pôr-se de pé' frequentemente se refere à ação de um rei, quer por ele assumir o poder régio, quer por agir eficazmente na qualidade de rei. (Da 11:2-4, 7, 16b, 20, 21) Isto apoia a conclusão de que Miguel é Jesus Cristo, visto que Jesus é o Rei designado de Jeová, comissionado para destruir todas as nações no Har-Magedon. — Re 11:15; 16:14-16.

O livro de Revelação (Apocalipse 12:7, 10, 12) menciona especificamente Miguel relacionado com o estabelecimento do Reino de Deus, e liga este evento com tribulação para a Terra: "E irrompeu uma guerra no céu: Miguel e os seus anjos batalhavam com o dragão, e o dragão e os seus anjos batalhavam. E ouvi uma voz alta no céu dizer: 'Agora se realizou a salvação, e o poder, e o reino de nosso Deus, e a autoridade do seu Cristo, porque foi lançado para baixo o acusador dos nossos irmãos . . . Por esta razão, regozijai-vos, ó céus, e vós os que neles residis! Ai da terra e do mar.'" Jesus Cristo é mais adiante retratado como chefiando os exércitos celestiais na guerra contra as nações da Terra. (Re 19:11-16) Isto significaria um período de aflição para elas, que logicamente estaria incluído no "tempo de aflição" associado com Miguel pôr-se de pé. (Da 12:1) Visto que o Filho de Deus deve combater as nações, é apenas razoável que foi ele quem anteriormente, com seus anjos, batalhara contra o dragão sobre-humano, Satanás, o Diabo, e os anjos dele.

Jesus, na sua existência pré-humana, foi chamado de "a Palavra". (Jo 1:1) Ele tinha também o nome pessoal de Miguel. Por reter o nome Jesus depois da sua ressurreição (At 9:5), "a Palavra" mostra ser idêntico ao Filho de Deus na Terra. Reassumir ele seu nome celestial, Miguel, e seu título (ou nome) de "A Palavra de Deus" (Re 19:13) relaciona-o com sua existência pré-humana. O próprio nome Miguel, fazendo a pergunta: "Quem É Semelhante a Deus?" indica que Jeová Deus é sem igual, ou semelhante, e que Miguel, seu arcanjo, é seu grande Defensor ou Vingador.

MIJAMIM [Da Mão Direita].

1. Descendente de Arão, escolhido por sortes para encabeçar a sexta turma de serviço sacerdotal nos dias do Rei Davi. — 1Cr 24:1, 3, 5, 9.

2. Um dos cabeças dos sacerdotes que retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel. (Ne 12:1, 5, 7) Ele talvez tenha fundado a casa paterna de Miniamim, mencionada em Neemias 12:17 (onde o nome do cabeça desta casa parece ter sido uma inadvertida omissão de escriba no texto hebraico).

3. Um "dos filhos de Parós", que despediram "as esposas [estrangeiras] junto com os filhos", conforme aconselhados por Esdras. — Esd 10:25, 44.

4. Sacerdote (ou possivelmente antepassado dum sacerdote) alistado entre os que atestaram com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" no tempo de Neemias. (Ne 9:38; 10:1, 7, 8) Ele parece ser o mesmo que o Miniamim de Neemias 12:41.

No hebraico, Mijamim parece ser uma contração do nome Miniamim.

MILAGRES. Ocorrências que maravilham ou espantam; efeitos no mundo físico, que ultrapassam todos os conhecidos poderes humanos ou naturais, e que, portanto, são atribuídos a uma causa sobrenatural. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a palavra moh·féth, às vezes traduzida "milagre", significa também "portento", "maravilha" e "sinal". (De 28:46; 1Cr 16:12 n) Frequentemente é usada em conjunto com a palavra hebraica 'ohth, que também significa "sinal". (De 4:34) Nas Escrituras Gregas, a palavra dý·na·mis, "poder", é traduzida "obras poderosas", "capacidade", "milagre". — Mt 25:15; Lu 6:19; 1Co 12:10, ALA, BJ, IBB, NM.

Um milagre, espantoso para os olhos de quem o observa, é algo além da sua capacidade de realização ou mesmo de plena compreensão. É também uma obra poderosa, que exige maior poder ou conhecimento do que ele possui. Mas, do ponto de vista daquele que é a fonte de tal poder, não é milagre. Ele o compreende e tem a capacidade de realizá-lo. Assim, muitos atos realizados por Deus são espantosos para os humanos que os observam, mas são apenas o exercício do poder Dele. Quando alguém crê numa deidade, especialmente no Deus da criação, não pode coerentemente negar o poder de Deus, de realizar coisas espantosas aos olhos dos homens. — Ro 1:20; veja PODER, OBRAS PODEROSAS.

São os milagres compatíveis com as leis naturais?

Por estudo e observação, os pesquisadores têm identificado diversas operações uniformes de coisas no universo e têm reconhecido leis que abrangem tal uniformidade nos fenômenos naturais. Uma delas é a 'lei da gravidade'. Os cientistas admitem a complexidade, e ainda assim a confiabilidade dessas leis, e, ao chamá-las de "leis", dão a entender a existência Daquele que pôs essas leis em vigor. Os cépticos encaram os milagres como violação de leis que eles aceitam como naturais, irrevogáveis e inexoráveis; portanto, dizem eles, nunca ocorre um milagre. Convém lembrar-se de que a atitude deles é que, se algo é incompreensível e inexplicável para nós, tanto quanto discernimos essas leis, então não pode acontecer.

Todavia, cientistas habilitados ficam cada vez mais cautelosos quanto a dizer que certa coisa é impossível. O Professor John R. Brobeck, da Universidade de Pensilvânia (EUA), declarou: "O cientista não pode mais dizer honestamente que algo é impossível. Pode apenas dizer que é improvável. Mas, ele poderá dizer que algo é impossível de explicar em termos de nosso conhecimento atual. A ciência não pode dizer que todas as propriedades da matéria e todas as formas de energia são conhecidas. . . . [Para haver um milagre] uma coisa que precisa ser adicionada é uma fonte de energia desconhecida a nós, em nossas ciências biológicas e fisiológicas. Em nossas Escrituras, esta fonte de energia é identificada como o poder de Deus." (Time, 4 de julho de 1955) Desde que se fez esta declaração, desenvolvimentos científicos adicionais a tornaram mais enfática.

Os cientistas não entendem plenamente as propriedades do calor, da luz, da ação atômica e nuclear, da eletricidade, nem qualquer das formas de matéria mesmo em condições normais. Mais deficiente ainda é seu entendimento dessas propriedades sob condições incomuns ou anormais. Por exemplo, foi apenas relativamente recente que se começaram a fazer extensas investigações sob condições de extremo frio, mas, neste curto tempo, observaram-se muitas reações estranhas dos elementos. O chumbo, que não é condutor elétrico ideal, quando imerso em hélio líquido esfriado a uma temperatura de -271°C, estranhamente torna-se um supercondutor e um poderoso eletromagneto quando se coloca perto dele um ímã em barra. Em tal temperatura superfria, o próprio hélio parece desafiar a lei da gravidade por subir pelos lados do recipiente de vidro e transbordá-lo, saindo do recipiente. — Matter (Matéria), Life Science Library, 1963, pp. 68, 69.

Esta descoberta é uma das muitas que assombraram os cientistas, parecendo transtornar suas ideias anteriores. Então, como pode alguém dizer que Deus violou suas próprias leis ao realizar obras poderosas que aos homens pareciam assombrosas e miraculosas? Certamente, o Criador do universo físico tem perfeito controle sobre aquilo que criou e pode manobrar estas coisas dentro da estrutura das leis que criou inerentes nelas. (Jó 38) Ele pode criar as condições necessárias para a realização dessas obras; pode acelerar, retardar, modificar ou neutralizar reações. Ou os anjos, com poder superior ao do homem, podem fazer isso na execução da vontade de Jeová. — Êx 3:2; Sal 78:44-49.

O cientista certamente não suplanta ou ultrapassa as leis físicas quando aplica mais calor ou mais frio, ou mais oxigênio, e assim por diante, para acelerar ou retardar um processo químico. Não obstante, os cépticos questionam os milagres da Bíblia, inclusive o "milagre" da criação. Estes desafiadores afirmam, na realidade, que eles estão familiarizados com todas as condições e todos os processos que já ocorreram. Insistem em que as operações do Criador devem ficar restritas às limitações do entendimento que eles têm das leis que governam as coisas físicas.

Esta fraqueza da parte de cientistas é admitida por um professor sueco de física dos plasmas, que salientou: "Ninguém questiona a obediência da atmosfera da terra às leis da mecânica e da física atômica. Ainda assim, pode ser extremamente difícil para nós determinar como funcionam estas leis com respeito a qualquer situação determinada que envolva os fenômenos atmosféricos." (Worlds-Antiworlds [Mundos-Antimundos], de H. Alfvén, 1966, p. 5) Este professor aplicou essa ideia à origem do universo. Deus estabeleceu as leis físicas que governam a Terra, o Sol e a Lua, e dentro desta estrutura os homens puderam fazer coisas maravilhosas. Certamente, Deus podia aplicar as leis de modo a produzirem um resultado inesperado pelos humanos; não era problema para ele dividir o Mar Vermelho, de modo que 'as águas eram uma muralha' em ambos os lados. (Êx 14:22) Embora para o homem andar sobre a água seja uma façanha espantosa, com quanta facilidade pôde ser realizado no poder de "Aquele que estende os céus como uma gaze fina e que os estica como uma tenda em que morar"! Além disso, Deus é descrito como criando e controlando todas as coisas nos céus, e se diz que, "devido à abundância de energia dinâmica, sendo ele também vigoroso em poder, não falta nem sequer uma delas". — Is 40:21, 22, 25, 26.

Visto que o reconhecimento da existência duma lei, tal como a lei da gravidade, pressupõe um legislador de inteligência e poder extraordinários e sobre-humanos, por que questionar a sua capacidade de fazer maravilhas? Por que tentar limitar a operação dele às margens infinitesimamente estreitas do conhecimento e da experiência do homem? O patriarca Jó descreve a escuridão e a tolice em que Deus deixa cair os que assim contrapõem a sabedoria deles à Sua. — Jó 12:16-25; compare isso com Ro 1:18-23.

A Aderência de Deus à Sua Lei Moral. O Deus da criação não é um Deus excêntrico, que irresponsavelmente viola as suas próprias leis. (Mal 3:6) Este fato pode ser constatado na aderência de Deus às suas leis de moral, que estão em harmonia com as suas leis físicas, mas são mais elevadas e mais grandiosas do que aquelas. Sendo justo, ele não pode tolerar a injustiça. "És de olhos puros demais para ver o que é mau; e não podes olhar para a desgraça", diz o seu profeta. (Hab 1:13; Êx 34:7) Expressou sua lei a Israel: "Será alma por alma, olho por olho, dente por dente, mão por mão, pé por pé." (De 19:21) Quando desejava perdoar a homens desamparados, arrependidos, o pecado que é a causa da morte deles, Deus tinha de ter uma base legal, se havia de aderir à Sua lei. (Ro 5:12; Sal 49:6-8) Ele mostrou sua estrita aderência à lei, indo ao ponto de sacrificar seu Filho unigênito como resgate pelos pecados da humanidade. (Mt 20:28) O apóstolo Paulo salienta que, "por intermédio do livramento pelo resgate pago por Cristo Jesus", Jeová pôde "exibir a sua própria justiça . . . para que fosse justo, mesmo ao declarar justo o homem que tem fé em Jesus". (Ro 3:24, 26) Se soubermos avaliar que Deus, em respeito pelas suas leis de moral, não se refreou de sacrificar seu Filho amado, então certamente podemos raciocinar que ele nunca precisaria "violar" as suas leis físicas para realizar o que quisesse no âmbito da criação física.

Contrários à Experiência Humana? Meramente afirmar que não houve milagres não prova que não ocorreram. A veracidade de qualquer evento registrado da história talvez seja questionada por alguém que vive hoje, porque ele não esteve presente e não há agora testemunhas oculares vivas para confirmá-lo. Mas isto não altera os fatos da história. Alguns objetam aos relatos sobre milagres porque, conforme dizem, estes são contrários à experiência humana, quer dizer, a experiência humana que eles reconhecem como verdadeira à base de observação, de livros, e assim por diante. Se os cientistas realmente adotassem esta atitude na prática, haveria muito menos pesquisas e desenvolvimentos de coisas e processos novos por parte deles. Por exemplo, não continuariam a pesquisar uma cura para doenças "incuráveis", ou a viagem espacial a planetas ou mesmo mais longe no universo. Mas eles fazem tais investigações e às vezes produzem para a humanidade experiências definitivamente novas. O que se realiza hoje espantaria os homens da antiguidade, e uma boa parte das experiências comuns, cotidianas, do homem moderno seriam encaradas por eles como milagres.

Não "Refutados" pela Lógica. Alguns dos que se opõem ao relato bíblico acham que os milagres bíblicos podem ser explicados científica e logicamente como meros acontecimentos naturais, e que os escritores bíblicos apenas atribuíram estes acontecimentos à intervenção de Deus. É verdade que se empregaram coisas tais como terremotos. (1Sa 14:15, 16; Mt 27:51) Mas isto, por si só, não prova que Deus não teve uma mão nestes eventos. Estas coisas não só eram em si mesmas obras poderosas (por exemplo, os já mencionados terremotos), mas também a cronometragem era tal, que as probabilidades eram extremamente contrárias a serem um acontecimento acidental. Para ilustrar: Alguns têm alegado que o maná provido para os israelitas pode ser encontrado no deserto como exsudação doce, pegajosa, em tamargueiras e em arbustos. Mesmo que esta duvidosa afirmação seja verdade, a provisão dele para Israel ainda é um milagre por causa da sua cronometragem, porque não aparecia no solo no sétimo dia de cada semana. (Êx 16:4, 5, 25-27) Além disso, ao passo que criava bichos e cheirava mal quando era guardado até o dia seguinte, isso não acontecia quando este alimento era guardado para o sábado. (Êx 16:20, 24) Também se poderia dizer que a descrição deste maná como exsudação de árvores não concorda plenamente com a descrição bíblica do maná. O maná bíblico era achado no solo e se derretia no sol quente; podia ser amassado num gral, moído num moinho, cozido e assado. — Êx 16:19-23; Núm 11:8; veja MANÁ.

Credibilidade do Testemunho. A religião cristã está interligada com o milagre da ressurreição de Jesus Cristo. (1Co 15:16-19) A evidência de que ela ocorreu não era fraca, mas poderosa — houve mais de 500 testemunhas oculares para atestar que ela ocorreu. — 1Co 15:3-8; At 2:32.

Também se precisa tomar em consideração a motivação das pessoas que aceitaram o milagre da ressurreição de Jesus como verídico. Muitas haviam sofrido perseguição e a morte por causa das suas crenças — religiosas, políticas e outras. Mas os cristãos que sofreram assim não obtiveram nenhum ganho material ou político. Em vez de conseguirem poder, riqueza e destaque, muitas vezes sofreram a perda de todas estas coisas. Pregavam a ressurreição de Jesus, mas não usavam nenhuma forma de violência para promover suas crenças ou para se defender. E quando se leem seus argumentos, pode-se ver que eram pessoas razoáveis, não fanáticas. Procuravam amorosamente ajudar seu semelhante.

Características dos Milagres Bíblicos. Características notáveis dos milagres bíblicos são sua natureza aberta e pública, sua simplicidade, seu objetivo e sua motivação. Alguns foram realizados em particular ou perante grupos pequenos (1Rs 17:19-24; Mr 1:29-31; At 9:39-41), mas, frequentemente, eram públicos, perante milhares e mesmo milhões de observadores. (Êx 14:21-31; 19:16-19) As obras de Jesus eram francas e públicas — não havia segredo relacionado com elas; e ele curava todos os que vinham a ele, não falhando sob o pretexto de que alguns não tinham suficiente fé. — Mt 8:16; 9:35; 12:15.

A simplicidade caracterizava tanto as curas milagrosas como o controle sobre os elementos. (Mr 4:39; 5:25-29; 10:46-52) Em contraste com os feitos mágicos realizados com apetrechos, encenações, iluminação e rituais especiais, os milagres bíblicos geralmente eram realizados sem ostentação, muitas vezes em resposta a um encontro incidental, um pedido, e isso na via pública ou num lugar não preparado. — 1Rs 13:3-6; Lu 7:11-15; At 28:3-6.

A motivação de quem realizava o milagre não era ganhar destaque egoísta ou enriquecer alguém, mas era primariamente para glorificar a Deus. (Jo 11:1-4, 15, 40) Os milagres não eram atos misteriosos realizados apenas para satisfazer a curiosidade e para mistificar. Sempre ajudavam outros, às vezes diretamente de modo físico, e sempre de modo espiritual, encaminhando as pessoas para a adoração verdadeira. Assim como "dar-se testemunho de Jesus é o que inspira o profetizar ["é o espírito da profecia", ns]", assim muitos dos milagres também apontavam para Jesus como o enviado por Deus. — Re 19:10.

Os milagres bíblicos não envolviam apenas coisas animadas, mas também inanimadas, tais como acalmar o vento e o mar (Mt 8:24-27), iniciar e parar chuvas (1Rs 17:1-7; 18:41-45), e transformar água em sangue ou em vinho (Êx 7:19-21; Jo 2:1-11). Incluíam também todo tipo de curas físicas, tais como a lepra "incurável" (2Rs 5:1-14; Lu 17:11-19), e cegueira de nascença. (Jo 9:1-7) Esta grande variedade de milagres argumenta a favor da sua credibilidade quanto a terem sido apoiados pelo Criador, porque é lógico que somente o Criador podia influenciar todos os campos da experiência humana e todas as formas de matéria.

Objetivo na Primitiva Congregação Cristã. Os milagres serviram diversos objetivos importantes. O mais básico era que ajudavam a estabelecer ou a confirmar que um homem recebia poder e apoio de Deus. (Êx 4:1-9) As pessoas tiravam as conclusões certas com respeito tanto a Moisés quanto a Jesus. (Êx 4:30, 31; Jo 9:17, 31-33) Por meio de Moisés, Deus prometera um vindouro profeta. Os milagres de Jesus ajudavam os observadores a identificá-lo como tal. (De 18:18; Jo 6:14) Quando o cristianismo ainda era novo, os milagres corroboravam a mensagem para ajudar as pessoas a compreender que Deus estava apoiando o cristianismo e que se havia desviado do anterior sistema de coisas judaico. (He 2:3, 4) Com o tempo, os dons milagrosos ocorridos no primeiro século cessariam. Foram necessários apenas durante a infância da congregação cristã. — 1Co 13:8-11.

Na leitura da história dos Atos dos Apóstolos, vemos o espírito de Jeová operando de maneira poderosa e rápida, formando congregações e estabelecendo firmemente o cristianismo. (At 4:4; caps. 13, 14, 16-19) Nos poucos anos entre 33 e 70 EC, milhares de crentes foram ajuntados em muitas congregações, desde Babilônia até Roma, e talvez ainda mais para o oeste. (1Pe 5:13; Ro 1:1, 7; 15:24) É digno de nota que então existiam poucas cópias das Escrituras. Usualmente, apenas os abastados possuíam alguma espécie de rolos ou de livros. Em terras pagãs, não havia nenhum conhecimento da Bíblia ou do Deus da Bíblia, Jeová. Praticamente tudo tinha de ser feito verbalmente. Não havia comentários, concordâncias e enciclopédias bíblicas para pronta consulta. De modo que os dons milagrosos de conhecimento especial, sabedoria, falar em línguas e discernimento de expressões inspiradas eram então vitais para a congregação. (1Co 12:4-11, 27-31) Mas, conforme escreveu o apóstolo Paulo, quando estas coisas não mais fossem necessárias, cessariam.

Hoje a Situação É Diferente. Não vemos hoje Deus fazer tais milagres por meio de seus servos cristãos, porque todas as coisas necessárias existem e estão disponíveis para a população letrada do mundo, e, para ajudar aqueles que não sabem ler, mas estão dispostos a escutar, há cristãos maduros com conhecimento e sabedoria obtidos por estudo e por experiência. Não é necessário que Deus realize tais milagres nesta época para confirmar que Jesus Cristo é o libertador designado por Deus, ou para provar que Ele está apoiando Seus servos. Mesmo que Deus continuasse a dar aos seus servos a capacidade de realizar milagres, isto não convenceria a todos, porque nem mesmo todas as testemunhas oculares dos milagres de Jesus foram induzidas a aceitar os ensinos dele. (Jo 12:9-11) Por outro lado, os escarnecedores são advertidos pela Bíblia de que ainda se realizarão estupendos atos de Deus na destruição do atual sistema de coisas. — 2Pe 3:1-10; Re caps. 18, 19.

Em conclusão, pode-se dizer que aqueles que negam a existência de milagres, ou não creem que haja um Deus e Criador invisível, ou então eles creem que ele não tenha exercido seu poder de maneira sobre-humana desde a criação. Mas a sua descrença não invalida a Palavra de Deus. (Ro 3:3, 4) Os relatos bíblicos dos milagres de Deus e o bom objetivo que alcançaram, sempre em harmonia com as verdades e os princípios encontrados na Sua Palavra, incutem confiança em Deus. Oferecem forte garantia de que Deus se importa com a humanidade, e que ele pode e vai proteger aqueles que o servem. Os milagres fornecem modelos típicos, e o registro deles aumenta a fé em que Deus, no futuro, intervirá de modo milagroso, curando e abençoando a humanidade fiel. — Re 21:4.

MILALAI. Músico levita que marchou num dos cortejos inaugurais na muralha reconstruída de Jerusalém nos dias de Neemias. — Ne 12:31, 36.

MILCA.

1. Filha de Harã, irmão de Abraão (Abrão), e esposa do irmão dele, Naor (tio dela), e irmã de Ló. (Gên 11:27, 29) Betuel, um dos oito filhos de Milca, tornou-se pai de Rebeca. — Gên 22:20-23; 24:15, 24, 47.
2. Uma das cinco filhas de Zelofeade, que receberam uma herança no território de Manassés após a morte do seu pai. — Núm 26:33; 27:1-4; 36:10-12; Jos 17:3, 4.

MILCOM [duma raiz que significa "rei"]. Evidentemente, trata-se de Moloque, deus dos amonitas. Foi para Milcom e outras deidades que o Rei Salomão, quando se desviou da verdadeira adoração perto do fim do seu reinado, construiu altos. — 1Rs 11:4, 5, 7, 33; 2Rs 23:13; veja MOLOQUE.

MILETO. Cidade, agora em ruínas, na costa O da Ásia Menor. Fica perto da desembocadura do rio Meandro (Menderes) e tinha antigamente quatro portos. Por volta do sétimo século AEC, os jônios parecem ter transformado Mileto num próspero centro comercial, com diversas colônias junto ao Mar Negro e no Egito. Os produtos de lã, de Mileto, ficaram amplamente conhecidos. Um indício disso é que, em Ezequiel 27:18, a Septuaginta grega alista "lã de Mileto" entre as mercadorias comercializadas por Tiro. Mileto era também a cidade de famosos filósofos, tais como Tales (c. 625-547 AEC), considerado fundador da geometria, da astronomia e da filosofia gregas. No quinto século AEC, os persas capturaram e destruíram Mileto, por esta ter participado numa revolta. Mais tarde (em 334 AEC), a reconstruída cidade caiu diante de Alexandre, o Grande. Durante os períodos helênico e romano, Mileto presenciou uma considerável atividade arquitetônica. Uma impressionante ruína daquele período é um grande teatro construído num campo aberto.

Com o passar do tempo, a cidade declinou em importância. Atribui-se isso ao assoreamento das suas áreas portuárias pelo rio Meandro. A antiga Mileto parece ter existido num promontório que se estende do lado S do golfo Látmico. Atualmente, porém, as ruínas da cidade ficam a uns 8 km no interior, e aquilo que antes era o golfo é hoje um lago.

As Visitas de Paulo. O apóstolo Paulo chegou a Mileto por volta de 56 EC. Visto que ele queria chegar a Jerusalém até Pentecostes, se de todo possível, e não queria gastar tempo desnecessário na Ásia Menor, Paulo, pelo que parece em Assos, decidiu tomar um barco que passava ao largo de Éfeso. Mas, não negligenciou as necessidades da congregação ali. De Mileto, sem dúvida por mensageiro, Paulo solicitou a vinda dos anciãos da congregação de Éfeso, cerca de 50 km distante. O tempo adicional necessário para o aviso chegar a eles e estes virem a Mileto (talvez o mínimo de três dias) parece ter sido inferior ao que Paulo teria gasto indo a Éfeso. Isto se devia possivelmente a que o(s) barco(s) disponível(is), procedente(s) de Assos, que aportava(m) em Éfeso, parava(m) em mais portos do que aquele(s) que atracava(m) em Mileto. Ou talvez as circunstâncias em Éfeso teriam atrasado Paulo, se tivesse parado ali. — At 20:14-17.

Falando com os anciãos da congregação de Éfeso, Paulo recapitulou seu próprio ministério realizado entre eles, admoestou-os a prestarem atenção a si mesmos e ao rebanho, alertou-os ao perigo de "lobos opressivos" infiltrando-se na congregação, e incentivou-os a ficar despertos e a ter em mente o exemplo dele. Depois de informá-los de que não o veriam mais, esses superintendentes entregaram-se a muito choro, "lançaram-se ao pescoço de Paulo e o beijaram ternamente", e então o levaram ao barco. — At 20:18-38.

Numa ocasião não especificada, após o seu primeiro encarceramento em Roma, Paulo parece ter retornado a Mileto. Trófimo, que anteriormente o acompanhara de Mileto a Jerusalém, adoeceu, o que obrigou Paulo a deixá-lo para trás. — Veja At 20:4; 21:29; 2Ti 4:20.

MILHA. Medida de distância. (Mt 5:41n) Nas Escrituras, mí·li·on, a medida em questão, é provavelmente a milha romana (1.497,5 m). Em Lucas 24:13;

João 6:19; 11:18, a palavra mí·li·on não aparece no texto grego, mas, na língua original, as distâncias são dadas em termos de estádios (1 estádio romano = 1/8 de milha romana; 185 m). Na Tradução do Novo Mundo, os estádios mencionados em Lucas 24:13; João 6:19; 11:18, foram convertidos em quilômetros. Por exemplo, "sessenta estádios" são dados como "cerca de onze quilômetros". — Lu 24:13.

MILHAFRE [hebr.: 'ai·yáh, "milhafre-preto"; da·'áh, "milhafre-vermelho" ("milhafre-real"); e talvez dai·yáh, "mioto", provavelmente uma variedade de milhafre]. O milhafre é uma ave de rapina bem como necrófaga. Tanto o milhafre-preto como o vermelho, as variedades comuns na Palestina, estão incluídos entre as aves impuras, segundo a Lei. (Le 11:13, 14; De 14:12, 13) A lista de Deuteronômio contém ra·'áh em lugar de da·'áh, como em Levítico, mas acha-se que isso se deve à troca feita por um escriba, escrevendo o equivalente hebraico do "r" (ר) em lugar do "d" (ד), pois estas letras são bem parecidas. Veja MIOTO.

Acredita-se que o nome hebraico 'ai·yáh seja uma imitação do estridente grito do milhafre-preto (classificado pelos ornitólogos como Milvus migrans).

É incerto o significado original do nome hebraico da·'áh, mas, tem-se sugerido que indica um "voo de mergulho e dardejante", como na expressão "veio arremetendo [do hebr.: da·'áh] nas asas dum espírito" (Sal 18:10), e com referência à 'arremetida' da águia. (De 28:49; Je 48:40; 49:22) O nome indica assim uma ave de rapina, e Koehler e Baumgartner (Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], Leiden 1958, p. 198) sugerem o milhafre-vermelho (Milvus milvus).

Jó usou o milhafre-preto como exemplo de uma superior visão aguçada, ao mesmo tempo mostrando que a inventividade do homem e sua busca de riquezas o levam a sendas subterrâneas, que nem mesmo aves de rapina, de visão aguçada, conseguem ver. — Jó 28:7.

A maioria dos milhafres-pretos atravessam a Palestina para invernar na África. Um número crescente deles inverna agora em Israel. Constroem seus ninhos em forquilhas de árvores altas e armazenam alimentos no ninho antes de botar ovos. O milhafre-vermelho, raro visitante hibernal, é uma ave marrom-avermelhada, com listas pretas, e cabeça branco-acinzentada.

MILO [duma raiz que significa "encher"]. "A casa de Milo" ("Bete-Milo", ALA, BLH, IBB) talvez tenha sido uma fortaleza ou cidadela, e talvez fosse a "torre de Siquém". Pelo visto, os homens da "casa de Milo" participaram em tornar Abimeleque rei.

Milhafre-preto; ave imprópria para consumo, segundo a Lei mosaica.

As palavras proféticas de Jotão, filho de Gideão, indicaram que sobreviria um desastre à "casa de Milo", às mãos de Abimeleque. Isto se cumpriu quando Abimeleque incendiou a cripta da casa de El-Berite e ali pereceram todos os que se haviam refugiado nela. — Jz 9:6, 20, 46-49.

MIL PASSOS. Veja MILHA.

MINA. Unidade de peso, bem como de valor monetário. (1Rs 10:17; Esd 2:69; Ne 7:71) Segundo o texto hebraico de Ezequiel 45:12, uma mina (mané) equivale a 60 siclos. A tradução deste texto na Septuaginta grega, porém, atribui o valor de 50 siclos à mina. (Veja ALA, IBB.) Visto que, quando se mencionam na Bíblia grandes quantidades de siclos, os números são divisíveis por 50, isto pode indicar que, em tempos anteriores, a mina consistia em 50 siclos. — Gên 23:15; Êx 30:24; 38:29; Núm 31:52; 1Sa 17:5.

Há testemunho arqueológico que atribui à mina 50 siclos. Um peso, sem inscrição, de uns 4.565 g, encontrado em Tell Beit Mirsim, se fosse dividido em oito minas de 50 siclos, daria um siclo de 11,4 g. Este valor corresponde basicamente à média de uns 45 pesos inscritos de siclo encontrados na Palestina. Portanto, nesta publicação, a mina das Escrituras Hebraicas é calculada em 50 siclos, ou

1/60 de talento, isto é, 570 g. Por conseguinte, em valores modernos, a mina de prata equivaleria a US$ 110,10, e a mina de ouro, a US$ 6.422,50.

Existe também a possibilidade de que, como no caso do côvado, se atribuíam dois valores à mina, um talvez à mina real (veja 2Sa 14:26) e o outro à mina comum. — Veja Ez 40:5.

A mina (mna) das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs (Lu 19:13-25) é calculada em 100 dracmas, valor derivado de antigos escritores gregos. A dracma valia quase tanto quanto o denário. De modo que a mina era uma soma considerável. Seu valor atual seria de US$ 65,40; no primeiro século EC, isto equivalia a cerca de uma quarta parte do salário ganho anualmente por um trabalhador agrícola.

MINA, MINERAÇÃO. Escavações no subsolo para encontrar metais e pedras preciosas. Esta indústria é quase tão antiga como a humanidade. O relato de Gênesis menciona "Tubalcaim, forjador de toda sorte de ferramenta de cobre e de ferro", que vivia nos dias antediluvianos. (Gên 4:22) Moisés, escrevendo por volta de 1513 AEC, ao descrever o rio Píson, menciona "a terra de Havilá, onde há ouro. E o ouro daquela terra é bom". (Gên 2:11, 12) Não se sabe se o ouro de Ofir era minerado de veios subterrâneos, ou de aluviões. — 1Rs 9:28; Jó 28:16.

Estes metais, provavelmente, eram encontrados até certo ponto em forma bastante pura na superfície do solo ou perto dela. Com o tempo, usaram-se métodos de mineração subterrânea, ou em veios. Cavavam-se poços fundos ao lado de veios ricos em minério. Há uns 3.600 anos, Jó descreveu que mineiros haviam aberto "um poço de mina longe de onde residem pessoas". Ali esquadrinhavam, "nas trevas e na sombra tenebrosa", tendo descido e ficado precariamente suspensos para extrair os metais desejados. — Jó 28:1-11.

Os egípcios faziam extensa mineração no tempo do Êxodo; os israelitas, ao partirem do Egito, levaram consigo metais e pedras preciosas, mais tarde usados na construção do tabernáculo. (Êx 12:35, 36; 35:22; 39:6-14) As minas de turquesa egípcias ficavam na península do Sinai a uns 80 km do monte Sinai. Remanescentes da mineração feita pelos egípcios foram encontrados ao longo da costa L do Mar Vermelho.

Moisés descreveu a Terra da Promessa, na qual os israelitas estavam prestes a entrar, como "uma terra cujas pedras são ferro e de cujas montanhas extrairás o cobre". — De 8:9; veja COBRE, LATÃO, BRONZE; FERRO; REFINAÇÃO, REFINADOR.

MINI. Antigo reino divinamente convocado para lutar contra Babilônia. Naquela época, Mini estava aliado aos reinos de Ararate e Asquenaz, todos sob o controle de Ciro. — Je 51:27-29.

Não há certeza da localização exata deste antigo reino e do seu povo. Alguns cartógrafos o colocaram na região entre o lago Van e o rio Araxes (Araques). No entanto, a maioria dos comentadores é da opinião de que ficava na região geral ao SE do lago Van.

Se os manais, ou maneanos, eram os habitantes de Mini, conforme alguns peritos dizem, então, segundo inscrições cuneiformes, Mini se encontrava intermitentemente subjugado primeiro aos assírios e depois ao Império Medo. Segundo uma crônica babilônica, Nabopolassar, no décimo ano do seu reinado (636 AEC) "capturou os maneanos que haviam ido ajudá-los (i.e., os assírios)". (Assyrian and Babylonian Chronicles [Crônicas Assírias e Babilônicas], de A. K. Grayson, 1975, p. 91) Mas, no tempo da queda de Babilônia em 539 AEC, Mini era dominado pelo Império Medo-Persa.

MINIAMIM [Da Mão Direita].

1. Um dos levitas que serviram sob Core no cargo de confiança da distribuição da contribuição sagrada entre os seus irmãos nas cidades sacerdotais, nos dias do Rei Ezequias. — 2Cr 31:14, 15.

2. Uma das casas paternas, sacerdotais, que existiam no tempo do sumo sacerdote Joiaquim. (Ne 12:12, 17) O "Mijamim" de Neemias 12:5 talvez fosse seu fundador.

3. Sacerdote, daqueles que portavam trombetas, que participaram na cerimônia de inauguração da reconstruída muralha de Jerusalém nos dias de Neemias. (Ne 12:40, 41) É possível que ele seja o sacerdote chamado "Mijamim" em Neemias 10:7.

MINISTÉRIO. Obra e serviço realizados por ministro, servo ou ajudante responsável perante uma autoridade superior. No antigo Israel, os levitas serviam quais ministros de Jeová. Também foram usados profetas para ministrar de modo especial. (De 10:8; 21:5; veja LEVITAS; MINISTRO; SACERDOTE.) Todavia, com a vinda de Jesus Cristo à Terra, iniciou-se um novo ministério. Ele comissionou seus seguidores a fazer discípulos de pessoas de todas as nações. (Mt 28:19, 20) Concordemente, os cristãos levavam a um mundo alienado de Deus uma mensagem de reconciliação com Ele por meio de Cristo. — 2Co 5:18-20.

Os que eram receptivos ao "ministério da reconciliação" (2Co 5:18) precisavam ser treinados, ensinados, ajudados e dirigidos de modo correto, a fim de se tornarem e continuarem firmes na fé, bem como para eles mesmos realizarem a obra de fazer discípulos. (Veja 2Ti 4:1, 2; Tit 1:13, 14; 2:1; 3:8.) Portanto, depois de ascender ao céu, Cristo Jesus, como cabeça da congregação, deu "dádivas em homens", apóstolos, profetas, evangelizadores, pastores e instrutores, "visando o reajustamento dos santos para a obra ministerial, para a edificação do corpo do Cristo". — Ef 4:7-16; veja DONS DADOS POR DEUS.

Outro aspecto do ministério realizado internamente na congregação referia-se a cuidar de forma material de irmãos necessitados, mas merecedores. O ministério para o qual Estêvão e mais seis homens acreditados foram designados envolvia a distribuição de alimentos a viúvas cristãs. (At 6:1-6) Mais tarde, as congregações na Macedônia e na Acaia participaram num ministério de socorros para os irmãos pobres na Judeia. (2Co 8:1-4; 9:1, 2, 11-13) Quando a contribuição por fim foi ajuntada e Paulo se preparava para levá-la a Jerusalém, ele pediu que os irmãos em Roma orassem com ele, para que este ministério de socorros fosse aceitável aos santos a quem se destinava. — Ro 15:25, 26, 30, 31.

Alguns anos antes disso, uma similar demonstração de amor foi feita pelos cristãos de Antioquia, na Síria, ao participarem numa subministração de socorros aos irmãos que moravam na Judeia numa época de fome. — At 11:28-30.

MINISTRO. Este termo traduz a palavra hebraica mesha·réth e a grega di·á·ko·nos. O termo hebraico é um particípio do verbo sha·ráth, que significa "servir" ou "ministrar" a um superior, e é usado em sentido secular ou religioso. (Gên 39:4; De 10:8) A respeito da palavra di·á·ko·nos, D. Edmond Hiebert escreveu em Bibliotheca Sacra: "Sustentou-se que o termo é um composto da preposição [di·á], que significa 'através', e do substantivo [kó·nis], 'pó', de modo que o termo denota alguém que se apressa através do pó para realizar seu serviço. Mas, esta derivação sugerida não tem hoje aceitação geral. É mais provável que a raiz verbal tenha sido [di·é·ko] 'esticar-se de um lugar a outro', aparentada com o verbo [di·ó·ko], 'correr atrás, perseguir'. Neste caso, a ideia básica é de alguém que se estica com diligência e persistência para prestar serviço a favor de outros." — 1983, Vol. 140, p. 153.

No hebraico e no grego, estas palavras e suas formas aparentadas são aplicadas tanto a homens como a mulheres. (2Sa 13:17, 18; 1Rs 1:4, 15; 2Co 3:6; Ro 16:1) Josué era ministro (ou: ajudante) de Moisés "desde a sua idade viril". (Núm 11:28; Jos 1:1, n) O ajudante de Eliseu foi chamado de seu ministro e servente. (2Rs 4:43; 6:15) Reis e príncipes tinham seus ajudantes ou ministros da corte (2Cr 22:8; Est 2:2; 6:3), alguns dos quais serviam às mesas reais. — 1Rs 10:4, 5; 2Cr 9:3, 4.

Ministros Angélicos de Jeová. Jeová Deus criou os anjos às dezenas de milhões, tendo a todos eles sob o seu controle e que, sem dúvida, ele pode chamar por nome, assim como faz com as inúmeras estrelas. (Sal 147:4) Estes o servem como Seus ministros, fazendo a Sua vontade no Universo. (Sal 103:20, 21) O salmista diz a respeito de Jeová que ele "faz os seus anjos espíritos, seus ministros, um fogo devorador". (Sal 104:4) Eles são descritos como "espíritos para serviço público, enviados para ministrar aos que hão de herdar a salvação". (He 1:13, 14) Anjos ministraram a Jesus Cristo no ermo, depois de ele ter vencido as tentativas de Satanás, de induzi-lo a desviar-se da obediência a Jeová (Mt 4:11); quando ele orava em Getsêmani, também apareceu um anjo, fortalecendo-o. (Lu 22:43) Na visão do profeta Daniel, na qual "alguém semelhante a um filho de homem" recebeu o domínio de duração indefinida sobre todos os povos e línguas, mostram-se milhões de anjos ministrando em volta do trono do Antigo de Dias. — Da 7:9-14.

A Tribo de Levi. Depois de os israelitas terem sido libertos do Egito, e quando a nação foi organizada sob o pacto da Lei, Jeová escolheu os varões da tribo de Levi como seus ministros especiais. (Núm 3:6; 1Cr 16:4) Alguns deles, a família de Arão, eram sacerdotes. (De 17:12; 21:5; 1Rs 8:11; Je 33:21) Os levitas tinham deveres diversos no seu ministério; eram guardiães do santuário e todos os seus utensílios, ministros do canto, e assim por diante. — Núm 3:7, 8; 1Cr 6:32.

Profetas. Além de usar todos os varões da tribo de Levi, Jeová fez com que outros ministrassem ao seu povo de Israel de maneira especial. Estes eram os profetas, os quais serviam apenas conforme individualmente designados e comissionados por Jeová. Alguns deles também eram da linhagem sacerdotal, no entanto muitos eram de outras tribos de Israel. (Veja PROFETA.) Eram mensageiros de Jeová; eram enviados para avisar a nação quando ela se desviava da Lei, e eles procuravam fazer os reis e o povo voltar para a verdadeira adoração. (2Cr 36:15, 16; Je 7:25, 26) Suas profecias ajudavam, incentivavam e fortaleciam os de coração reto, especialmente em épocas de decadência espiritual e moral, e em ocasiões em que Israel era ameaçada por inimigos ao redor. — 2Rs 7; Is 37:21-38.

Suas profecias também apontavam para Jesus Cristo e o Reino messiânico. (Re 19:10) João, o Batizador, realizou uma obra notável, fazendo "voltar o coração dos pais para os filhos e o coração dos filhos para os pais", ao preparar o caminho para o representante de Jeová, o Senhor Jesus Cristo. (Mal 4:5, 6; Mt 11:13, 14; Lu 1:77-79) Os profetas não ministravam apenas aos seus contemporâneos, porque o apóstolo Pedro escreve aos cristãos: "Foi-lhes revelado que não era para eles, mas para vós, que ministravam as coisas que agora vos foram anunciadas por intermédio dos que vos declararam as boas novas com espírito santo enviado desde o céu. Nestas coisas é que os anjos estão desejosos de olhar de perto." — 1Pe 1:10-12.

Jesus Cristo. Jesus Cristo é o principal ministro (di·á·ko·nos) de Jeová. Ele "se tornou realmente ministro dos circuncisos em favor da veracidade de Deus, a fim de confirmar as promessas que Ele fez aos antepassados deles", também, "para que as nações glorificassem a Deus pela sua misericórdia". Portanto, "nele é que as nações basearão a sua esperança". — Ro 15:8-12.

A designação de Jesus procedia do próprio Jeová. Quando ele se apresentou para o batismo, "os céus se abriram", diz o relato, "e ele [João, o Batizador] viu o espírito de Deus descendo sobre ele [Jesus] como pomba. Eis que também houve uma voz dos céus, que disse: 'Este é meu Filho, o amado, a quem tenho aprovado.'" (Mt 3:16, 17) Na sua existência pré-humana, Jesus servira a Jeová por indizíveis eras, mas agora entrava num novo ministério. Jesus mostrou que ele era realmente ministro de Deus, servindo tanto a Deus como ao seu próximo. Por conseguinte, na sinagoga de sua cidade de Nazaré, Jesus pôde tomar o rolo de Isaías e ler o que agora é o capítulo 61, versículos 1, 2: "O espírito do Soberano Senhor Jeová está sobre mim, visto que Jeová me ungiu para anunciar boas novas aos mansos. Enviou-me para pensar os quebrantados de coração, para proclamar liberdade aos que foram levados cativos e ampla abertura dos olhos aos próprios presos; para proclamar o ano de boa vontade da parte de Jeová." Daí passou a dizer aos reunidos: "Hoje se cumpriu esta escritura que acabais de ouvir." — Lu 4:16-21.

Na ocasião em que Pedro pregou ao primeiro gentio convertido, Cornélio, ele descreveu o proceder de Jesus durante os três anos e meio de seu ministério terrestre, trazendo à atenção de Cornélio "Jesus, que era de Nazaré, como Deus o ungiu com espírito santo e poder, e ele percorria o país, fazendo o bem e sarando a todos os oprimidos pelo Diabo; porque Deus estava com ele". (At 10:38) Jesus literalmente percorria a pé seu território designado no serviço de Jeová e do povo. Não só isso, mas ele realmente entregou a sua própria alma como resgate a favor de outros. Ele disse: "O Filho do homem não veio para que se lhe ministrasse, mas para ministrar e dar a sua alma como resgate em troca de muitos." — Mt 20:28.

Ministros Cristãos. Jesus, na sua obra ministerial, associou consigo muitos outros, apóstolos e discípulos, os quais treinou para levarem avante a mesma obra ministerial. Primeiro enviou os 12, depois mais 70. A força ativa de Deus estava também sobre estes, habilitando-os a realizar muitos milagres. (Mt 10:1, 5-15, 27, 40; Lu 10:1-12, 16) Mas a principal obra que deviam realizar era pregar e ensinar as boas novas do Reino de Deus. Deveras, os milagres serviam principalmente para dar evidência pública da sua designação e aprovação por Jeová. — He 2:3, 4.

Jesus treinava seus discípulos, tanto por palavra como por exemplo. Não somente ensinava em público, mas também nas casas, levando as boas novas diretamente às pessoas. (Mt 9:10, 28; Lu 7:36; 8:1; 19:1-6) À base dos relatos fornecidos pelos escritores dos Evangelhos, torna-se evidente que os discípulos de Jesus estavam presentes em muitos dos casos em que ele dava testemunho a diversos tipos de pessoas, porque as próprias palestras se acham registradas. Segundo o livro de Atos, os discípulos dele seguiram este exemplo, fazendo visitas de casa em casa, para divulgar a mensagem do Reino. — At 5:42; 20:20; veja PREGADOR, PREGAÇÃO ("De Casa em Casa").

Jesus explicou aos seus discípulos como era o verdadeiro ministro de Deus, dizendo: "Os reis das nações dominam sobre elas, e os que têm autoridade sobre elas são chamados de Benfeitores. Vós, porém, não deveis ser assim. Mas, que o maior entre vós se torne como o mais jovem, e o que age como principal, como aquele que ministra. Pois, quem é maior, aquele que se recosta à mesa ou aquele que ministra? Não é aquele que se recosta à mesa?" Daí, usando seu próprio proceder e conduta como exemplo, prosseguiu: "Mas eu estou no vosso meio como quem ministra." (Lu 22:25-27) Naquela ocasião, ele demonstrou vigorosamente estes princípios, inclusive o da humildade, por lavar os pés dos discípulos. — Jo 13:5.

Jesus salientou ainda mais aos discípulos que os verdadeiros ministros de Deus não aceitam lisonjeiros títulos religiosos, nem os aplicam a outros. "Não sejais chamados Rabi, pois um só é o vosso instrutor, ao passo que todos vós sois irmãos. Além disso, não chameis a ninguém na terra de vosso pai, pois um só é o vosso Pai, o Celestial. Tampouco sejais chamados 'líderes', pois o vosso Líder é um só, o Cristo. Mas o maior dentre vós tem de ser o vosso ministro [ou: servo]. Quem se enaltecer, será humilhado, e quem se humilhar, será enaltecido." — Mt 23:8-12.

Os seguidores ungidos do Senhor Jesus Cristo são chamados de 'ministros das boas novas', como Paulo era (Col 1:23); são também "ministros dum novo pacto", estando nesta relação pactuada com Jeová Deus, tendo a Cristo por Mediador. (2Co 3:6; He 9:14, 15) Deste modo, são ministros de Deus e de Cristo. (2Co 6:4; 11:23) Sua habilitação procede de Deus por meio de Jesus Cristo, não de algum homem ou uma organização. A evidência de seu ministério não consta em algum papel ou certificado, como uma carta de recomendação ou autorização. Sua "carta" de recomendação é encontrada nas pessoas que ensinaram e treinaram para ser ministros de Cristo, iguais a eles mesmos. Sobre este assunto, o apóstolo Paulo diz: "Necessitamos talvez, como alguns homens, de cartas de recomendação para vós ou de vós? Vós mesmos sois a nossa carta, inscrita nos nossos corações, e conhecida e lida por toda a humanidade. Porque vós sois demonstrados ser carta de Cristo, escrita por nós, como ministros, inscrita, não com tinta, mas com espírito dum Deus vivente, não em tábuas de pedra, mas em tábuas carnais, nos corações." (2Co 3:1-3) Aqui, o apóstolo mostra o amor e a íntima associação, o cordial afeto e o cuidado que o ministro cristão tem para com aqueles a quem ministra, os quais são 'inscritos no coração' do ministro.

Assim, depois que Cristo ascendeu ao céu, ele deu "dádivas em homens" à congregação cristã. Entre estes havia apóstolos, profetas, evangelizadores, pastores e instrutores, dados "visando o reajustamento dos santos para a obra ministerial, para a edificação do corpo do Cristo". (Ef 4:7-12) A habilitação deles como ministros procede de Deus. — 2Co 3:4-6.

A Revelação (Apocalipse) dada ao apóstolo João retrata "uma grande multidão, que nenhum homem podia contar, de todas as nações, e tribos, e povos, e línguas". Não se fala deles como estando no novo pacto, e, deste modo, como ministros dele, assim como são os irmãos ungidos de Jesus Cristo; não obstante, mostra-se que eles têm uma posição limpa perante Deus e "prestam-lhe serviço sagrado, dia e noite, no seu templo". Portanto, estão ministrando, e podem corretamente ser chamados de ministros de Deus. Conforme mostram tanto a visão de Revelação como o próprio Jesus (por ilustração), no tempo da presença de Cristo no seu trono glorioso, haveria pessoas assim que também ministrariam amorosamente aos irmãos de Jesus Cristo, dando-lhes ajuda, atenção e assistência. — Re 7:9-15; Mt 25:31-40.

Servos Ministeriais na Congregação. Depois de alistar os requisitos para os que servem como "superintendentes" (e·pí·sko·poi) nas congregações, o apóstolo Paulo alista os requisitos para os designados como "servos ministeriais" (di·á·ko·noi). (1Ti 3:1-10, 12, 13) A palavra grega di·á·ko·nos, em certos lugares, é simplesmente traduzida por "ministro" (Mt 20:26) e 'servo'. (Mt 22:13) Visto que todos os cristãos são "ministros" (servos) de Deus, é evidente que o termo di·á·ko·noi, aqui, assume um sentido específico, relacionado com a ordem e a estrutura congregacionais. Assim, há dois grupos de homens ocupando posições de responsabilidade congregacional: os "superintendentes", ou "anciãos", e os "servos ministeriais". Em geral, havia diversos superintendentes bem como ajudantes ministeriais em cada congregação. — Fil 1:1; At 20:17, 28.

A lista dos requisitos para os servos ministeriais, em comparação com a lista para os superintendentes, bem como as designações para os dois cargos, indica que os servos ministeriais não recebiam a responsabilidade de ensino ou pastoreio (o pastor sendo supervisor do rebanho). A habilidade de ensinar não era um pré-requisito para serem designados. A própria designação di·á·ko·nos já indica que estes homens serviam como ajudantes do corpo de superintendentes na congregação, tendo por responsabilidade básica cuidar de assuntos de natureza não pastoral, para que os superintendentes pudessem concentrar seu tempo e sua atenção na atividade de ensino e de pastoreio.

Um exemplo do princípio que governa este arranjo pode ser encontrado na ação dos apóstolos, quando surgiram problemas com a distribuição (literalmente: o serviço, di·a·ko·ní·a) dos alimentos, feita diariamente entre os cristãos em necessidade, em Jerusalém. Declarando que 'não seria agradável que deixassem a palavra de Deus' para se preocupar com problemas relacionados com a administração de alimento material, os apóstolos instruíram os discípulos: "Procurai vós mesmos, dentre vós, sete homens acreditados, cheios de espírito e de sabedoria, para que os possamos designar para esta incumbência necessária; mas, nós mesmos nos devotaremos à oração e ao ministério [di·a·ko·ní·ai] da palavra." (At 6:1-6) Este era o princípio; mas não significa necessariamente, neste caso, que os sete não se habilitavam como "anciãos" (pre·sbý·te·roi), porque não se tratava duma situação normal ou regular, mas dum problema especial, de natureza bastante delicada, que havia surgido por causa do sentimento de que havia discriminação por motivo de nacionalidade. Visto que isso afetava toda a congregação cristã, era um assunto que exigia 'espírito e sabedoria', de modo que os sete homens escolhidos, na realidade, talvez fossem "anciãos" em sentido espiritual. Mas, eles assumiam então temporariamente uma tarefa que normalmente seria cuidada por "servos ministeriais". Tratava-se duma incumbência "necessária", mas não de importância igual à do "ministério da palavra".

Os apóstolos mostraram com esta ação sua avaliação correta do assunto, e pode-se presumir que os corpos de superintendentes nas congregações que surgiram fora de Jerusalém seguiram o exemplo deles na designação de tarefas a "servos ministeriais". Sem dúvida, havia muitos assuntos de natureza mais material, rotineira ou mecânica que exigiam atenção, talvez inclusive a compra de material para se fazerem cópias das Escrituras ou o próprio copiar delas.

As habilitações a serem satisfeitas pelos ajudantes ministeriais estabelecem padrões que protegeriam a congregação contra qualquer acusação legítima referente à escolha de homens para determinadas tarefas, mantendo assim a posição correta perante Deus e uma boa reputação perante as pessoas de fora. (Veja 1Ti 3:10.) Essas habilitações regiam a moral, a conduta e a espiritualidade, e, quando observa-das, incluíam no serviço homens sensatos, honestos, conscienciosos e fidedignos. Os que ministravam de maneira excelente adquiriam para si "uma posição excelente e muita franqueza no falar na fé, em conexão com Cristo Jesus". — 1Ti 3:13.

Governantes Terrestres. Deus tem permitido que os governos deste mundo operem até que chegue o Seu tempo devido para acabar com eles, após o que o Reino de Cristo governará a terra sem contestação. (Da 2:44; Re 19:11-21) Durante o tempo do seu governo tolerado, prestam ao povo muitos serviços, tais como a construção de estradas, a manutenção de escolas, de departamentos de polícia e do corpo de bombeiros, e outros serviços. Têm também leis para punir ladrões, assassinos e outros violadores da lei. Portanto, ao prestarem estes serviços e aplicarem estas leis legitimamente, eles são 'ministros' (di·á·ko·noi) de Deus. Quando alguém, mesmo um cristão, viola essas leis, a punição que recebe às mãos do governo procede de modo indireto de Deus, porque Deus é contra toda a iniquidade. Também, quando o governo protege o cristão contra violadores da lei, ele age como ministro de Deus. Segue-se que, quando o governante abusa da sua autoridade e age contra Deus, ele é responsável e tem de responder a Deus por isso. Quando tal governante iníquo tenta induzir o cristão a violar a lei de Deus, ele não age como ministro de Deus, e receberá punição de Deus. — Ro 13:1-4.

Falsos Ministros. Há homens que afirmam ser ministros de Deus, mas que são hipócritas; na realidade, são ministros de Satanás, que lutam contra Deus. O apóstolo Paulo teve de contender com tais, que perturbavam a congregação em Corinto. Disse a respeito deles: "Tais homens são falsos apóstolos, trabalhadores fraudulentos, transformando-se em apóstolos de Cristo. E não é de admirar, pois o próprio Satanás persiste em transformar-se em anjo de luz. Portanto, não é grande coisa se os ministros dele também persistem em transformar-se em ministros da justiça. Mas o fim deles será segundo as suas obras." — 2Co 11:13-15.

O surgimento de tais falsos ministros foi muitas vezes predito nas Escrituras. Paulo disse aos superintendentes da congregação de Éfeso, que depois da partida dele, entrariam na congregação lobos opressivos e não tratariam o rebanho com ternura; falariam coisas deturpadas para atrair a si os discípulos. (At 20:29, 30) Paulo também advertiu nas suas cartas contra tais apóstatas (2Te 2:3-12; 1Ti 4:1-5; 2Ti 3:1-7; 4:3, 4); Pedro descreveu-os (2Pe 2:1-3); e o próprio Jesus Cristo predisse a existência e a destruição deles (Mt 13:24-30, 36-43). — Veja HOMEM QUE É CONTRA A LEI.

MINITE. Uma das 20 cidades amonitas que Jefté subjugou depois de fazer seu voto a Jeová. (Jz 11:30-33) Séculos mais tarde, o "trigo de Minite" é mencionado como uma das mercadorias do comércio de Tiro. (Ez 27:2, 17) Desconhece-se a localização exata de Minite. Uma de diversas identificações possíveis é Khirbet Hanizeh (Umm el Hanafish), a uns 6 km ao ENE de Hésbon.

MIOTO [hebr.: dai·yáh]. O nome hebraico desta ave ocorre na lista de aves impuras, em Deuteronômio 14:13, mas não consta na lista correspondente em Levítico 11:14. Quatro manuscritos hebraicos, e também o Pentateuco samaritano e a Septuaginta grega, omitem dai·yáh em Deuteronômio 14:13. Alguns peritos acreditam que talvez se trate duma correção de escriba, originalmente colocada na margem, mas que por fim foi introduzida no próprio texto. Todavia, a forma plural (dai·yóhth) ocorre em Isaías 34:15, para descrever aves reunidas nas ruínas de Edom após a desolação dele.

A identificação desta ave é incerta. Sugeriu-se que o nome hebraico deriva do verbo que significa "arremeter" ou "vir dardejando". "Mioto" é uma tradução adequada, visto que se trata dum termo aplicado a diversas aves de rapina, embora especialmente ao milhafre-vermelho (Milvus milvus). A maioria dos atuais peritos relaciona a palavra hebraica dai·yáh com o milhafre, havendo na Palestina mais de uma variedade desta ave. — Veja MILHAFRE.

MIQUEIAS [Forma de Micael ou Micaías]. Escritor do livro bíblico que leva o seu nome, e profeta de Jeová durante os reinados dos reis Jotão, Acaz e Ezequias, de Judá (777-717 AEC). Miqueias era contemporâneo dos profetas Oseias e Isaías. Não se tem certeza da duração exata da sua atividade profética. Pelo visto, terminou de profetizar no fim do reinado de Ezequias, quando se concluiu a composição do livro do profeta. — Miq 1:1; Os 1:1; Is 1:1.

Miqueias era natural da aldeia de Moresete, ao SO de Jerusalém. (Je 26:18) Como morador na fértil Sefelá, o profeta estava bem familiarizado com a vida rural, o que o inspirou a tecer ilustrações significativas. (Miq 2:12; 4:12, 13; 7:1, 4, 14) Miqueias profetizou numa época muito turbulenta, em que floresciam a adoração falsa e a corrupção moral em Israel e em Judá, na qual, também, o Rei Ezequias instituiu reformas religiosas. (2Rs 15:32–20:21; 2Cr 27-32) Com boa razão, "a palavra de Jeová que veio a haver para Miqueias" advertiu que Deus transformaria Samaria em "um montão de ruínas do campo", e profetizou-se que "Sião será arada como mero campo e a própria Jerusalém se tornará meros montões de ruínas". (Miq 1:1, 6; 3:12) Ao passo que a devastação de Judá e de Jerusalém em 607 AEC ocorreu muitos anos depois dos dias de Miqueias, ele provavelmente viveu para ver a predita destruição de Samaria em 740 AEC. — 2Rs 25:1-21; 17:5, 6.

DESTAQUES DE MIQUEIAS

Declaração cândida das transgressões de Israel e de Judá, previsão da desolação de Samaria e de Jerusalém, e promessas de restauração.

Abrange um período até a desolação de Samaria em 740 AEC, e possivelmente depois dela.

As transgressões de Israel e de Judá são contrastadas com os requisitos justos de Jeová.

Opressores deitados na cama, tramam apoderar-se de casas e de campos; ao amanhecer o dia, executam suas tramas. (2:1, 2)

Transeuntes insuspeitosos são roubados; mulheres e crianças são vitimadas. (2:8, 9)

Os responsáveis pela administração da justiça exploram o povo como se este fosse animais. (3:1-3)

Falsos profetas clamam: "Paz!" — mas santificam a guerra contra todo aquele que "não põe nada nas suas bocas". (3:5)

Juízes, sacerdotes e profetas estão apenas atrás do lucro, mas alegam ter o apoio de Jeová. (3:9-11)

Virtualmente, não existem pessoas leais; príncipes e juízes procuram suborno, e nem mesmo se pode confiar nos familiares. (7:1-6)

Jeová libertou os do seu povo do Egito, e guiou-os e protegeu-os; nenhuma quantidade de sacrifícios compensará a revolta deles. (6:3-7)

Ele requer que seu povo exerça a justiça, ame a benignidade e ande modestamente com Ele. (6:8)

Os julgamentos de Jeová contra Israel; Judá também ficará afetada.

O julgamento de Jeová resultará em Samaria ser reduzida a um montão de ruínas; a calamidade atingirá até mesmo Judá e Jerusalém. (1:3-16)

A Israel sobrevirá calamidade; seus campos serão repartidos a outros. (2:3-5)

Jeová golpeará os do seu povo; estes comerão, mas não se fartarão, semearão, mas não usufruirão os frutos. (6:13-16)

Os remanescentes serão ajuntados e a verdadeira adoração será enaltecida.

Os remanescentes de Israel serão ajuntados "como o rebanho no redil", tendo o rei à sua frente e Jeová à cabeça deles. (2:12, 13)

Na parte final dos dias, o monte da casa de Jeová ficará elevado acima dos morros, e pessoas de muitas nações afluirão a ele; serão ensinadas por Jeová e não aprenderão mais a guerra. (4:1-4)

O povo restaurado andará no nome de Jeová; Sião será forte diante dos seus inimigos. (4:5-13)

Em Belém nascerá um governante, que pastoreará em nome de Jeová; sob o seu domínio, o assírio será rechaçado; os remanescentes de Jacó serão como o refrescante orvalho e como um poderoso leão. (5:2-9)

Jeová purificará seu povo da idolatria e executará vingança nas nações desobedientes. (5:10-15)

Estribem-se em Jeová; a alegria da "inimiga" acabará quando o povo arrependido de Jeová receber a atenção dele e vivenciar coisas maravilhosas, o que encherá as nações observantes de medo; Jeová perdoará os pecados do seu povo. (7:7-20)

MIQUEIAS, LIVRO DE. Livro profético das Escrituras Hebraicas que contém a palavra de Jeová dada por meio de Miqueias a respeito de Samaria e Jerusalém. (Veja MIQUEIAS.) Consiste em três seções básicas, cada uma delas começando com a palavra "ouvi". — Miq 1:2; 3:1; 6:1.

As palavras proféticas de Miqueias a respeito da desolação de Samaria devem ter sido proferidas antes da destruição daquela cidade em 740 AEC, e suas declarações orais, evidentemente, foram assentadas por escrito antes do fim do reinado de Ezequias.

No tempo de Miqueias prevaleciam condições morais deploráveis entre o povo de Israel e de Judá. Os líderes oprimiam o povo, especialmente os pobres. Juízes, sacerdotes e profetas andavam atrás de dinheiro. Idolatria, fraude, opressão, injustiças e derramamento de sangue abundavam. Era arriscado confiar até mesmo nos amigos confidenciais e nos membros da família. — Miq 1:7; 2:1, 2; 3:1-3, 9-12; 6:12; 7:2-6.

O livro de Miqueias apresenta candidamente os erros de Israel e de Judá. Ao passo que prediz a desolação de Samaria e de Jerusalém por causa das suas transgressões (Miq 1:5-9; 3:9-12), contém também promessas de restauração e de bênçãos divinas a seguir. — 4:1-8; 5:7-9; 7:15-17.

A autenticidade deste livro é bem confirmada. Harmoniza-se com o restante das Escrituras em mostrar que Jeová é um Deus misericordioso e amoroso, que perdoa o erro e passa por alto a transgressão. (Miq 7:18-20; compare isso com Êx 34:6, 7; Sal 86:5.) Desde os tempos mais primitivos, os judeus têm aceito este livro como autêntico. Cerca de um século depois do tempo de Miqueias, suas palavras proferidas durante o reinado de Ezequias, a respeito da desolação de Jerusalém, foram citadas por certos anciãos de Judá, ao apresentarem um ponto em defesa do profeta Jeremias. (Je 26:17-19; compare isso com Miq 3:12.) Séculos mais tarde, os principais sacerdotes e escribas dos judeus, à base da profecia de Miqueias, declararam confiantemente que o Cristo nasceria em Belém. (Mt 2:3-6; compare isso com Miq 5:2.) O cumprimento das profecias a respeito de Samaria, de Jerusalém e do Messias, ou Cristo, marcam este livro como inspirado por Deus. É também digno de nota que as palavras de Jesus sobre os inimigos do homem serem pessoas da sua própria casa são paralelas a Miqueias 7:6. — Mt 10:21, 35, 36.

MIRA. Veja MIRRA, I.

MIRIÃ [possivelmente: Rebelde].

1. Filha de Anrão e sua esposa Joquebede, ambos da tribo de Levi; irmã de Moisés e de Arão. (Núm 26:59; 1Cr 6:1-3) Embora não especificamente citada no relato, sem dúvida, foi ela a chamada de "sua irmã" que ficou observando para ver o que aconteceria com o menino Moisés, deitado numa arca colocada entre os juncos do rio Nilo. (Êx 2:3, 4) Depois que a filha de Faraó descobriu o bebê, 'teve compaixão dele' e reconheceu que se tratava de "um dos meninos dos hebreus", Miriã perguntou se podia chamar uma mulher hebreia para amamentar o menino. Quando a filha de Faraó mandou que fizesse isso, "a donzela foi imediatamente e chamou a mãe do menino" (Joquebede), que foi então empregada para cuidar de Moisés até que ele crescesse. — Êx 2:5-10.

Lidera em Cântico as Mulheres de Israel. Anos depois, tendo testemunhado o triunfo de Jeová sobre as forças militares de Faraó no Mar Vermelho, e ao ouvir o cântico de Moisés e dos homens de Israel, "Miriã, a profetisa", liderou as mulheres num alegre tocar de pandeiros e em dançar. Respondendo ao canto liderado por Moisés, Miriã cantou: "Cantai a Jeová, pois ele ficou grandemente enaltecido. Lançou no mar o cavalo e seu cavaleiro." — Êx 15:1, 20, 21.

Queixa-se de Moisés. Durante a estada dos israelitas no ermo, Miriã e Arão começaram a falar contra Moisés por causa da esposa cusita dele. A proeminência e a influência de Moisés junto ao povo talvez criassem em Miriã e em Arão o desejo ciumento de terem mais autoridade, de modo que diziam: "É somente por meio de Moisés que Jeová falou? Não falou também por meio de nós?" Mas Jeová estava escutando e de repente mandou que Moisés, Miriã e Arão fossem à tenda de reunião. Ali, Deus lembrou aos murmuradores que o irmão deles, Moisés, era Seu servo, aquele com quem Deus não falava de modo indireto, mas "boca a boca". A seguir, Jeová perguntou a Miriã e Arão: "Por que, pois, não temestes falar contra meu servo, contra Moisés?" Acendeu-se a ira de Deus contra eles, e, quando a nuvem sobre a tenda se retirou, "Miriã estava atacada de lepra branca como a neve". Arão suplicou por ela, Moisés intercedeu por ela, e Jeová permitiu que Miriã retornasse ao acampamento depois duma humilhante quarentena de sete dias. — Núm 12:1-15.

Ter sido somente Miriã afligida de lepra talvez sugira que ela era a instigadora da conduta errada naquela ocasião. (Veja ARÃO.) O pecado dela em murmurar contra Moisés talvez fosse maior do que o de Arão, tratando-se possivelmente até mesmo dum caso de ciúme de outra mulher (visto que eles começaram a falar contra Moisés por causa da esposa cusita dele), tomando Arão o lado de sua irmã em vez de apoiar a cunhada. Visto que Miriã era considerada profetisa, ela talvez gozasse da distinção de ser a mulher mais destacada em Israel. De modo que Miriã talvez receasse que a esposa de Moisés a ofuscasse. Independentemente de tais possibilidades, porém, e embora fosse crassamente impróprio Miriã e Arão murmurarem contra Moisés, era especialmente errado Miriã fazer isso, porque o lugar designado por Deus para a mulher é de sujeição ao homem. (1Co 11:3; 1Ti 2:11-14) A conduta pecaminosa de Miriã foi mais tarde usada como exemplo de aviso, pois, no fim da peregrinação no ermo, Moisés disse ao povo que acatasse as instruções sacerdotais a respeito da lepra e o exortou a se lembrar do que Jeová fizera a Miriã, quando saíam do Egito. — De 24:8, 9.

Miriã morreu e foi sepultada em Cades, no ermo de Zim, pouco antes da morte de Arão. (Núm 20:1, 28) Séculos mais tarde, Jeová, por meio do seu profeta Miqueias, fez lembrar o privilégio usufruído por Miriã em associação com seus irmãos, quando Israel saiu do Egito, dizendo: "Pois eu te fiz subir da terra do Egito e te remi da casa dos escravos; e passei a enviar diante de ti Moisés, Arão e Miriã." — Miq 6:4.

2. Descendente de Judá. — 1Cr 4:1, 17, 18.

MIRMA [possivelmente: Engano, Fraude]. Cabeça paterno da tribo de Benjamim e filho de Saraim com sua esposa Hodes. — 1Cr 8:1, 8-10.

MIRRA, I. Cidade importante na província da Lícia. Situada perto da costa do SO da Ásia Menor, Mirra (ou: Mira, BJ; CBC; PIB) ocupava um morro a uns 3 km no interior, junto ao rio Andraco. O lugar é hoje conhecido como Demre. O antigo nome Mirra evidentemente abrangia tanto a cidade como seu excelente porto.

O apóstolo Paulo, como prisioneiro em caminho para Roma, chegou a Mirra procedente de Cesareia via Sídon. Ali, ele e seus companheiros de viagem tiveram de passar para um navio que transportava cereais, procedente de Alexandria e com destino à Itália. (At 27:1-6, 38) Mirra ficava diretamente ao N de Alexandria, e, portanto, esta talvez fosse a rota regular de navios procedentes daquela cidade egípcia. Ou, pode ter acontecido que ventos contrários (At 27:4, 7) obrigaram o navio alexandrino a mudar de rumo e ancorar em Mirra.

Em Atos 21:1, alguns textos antigos acrescentam "e Mira" depois de "Pátara". (Veja BJ n, TEB n.) Embora este acréscimo não esteja em desacordo com o restante do relato, há evidência insuficiente para determinar se o nome Mirra, ou Mira, realmente constava no manuscrito original.

MIRRA, II. Resina aromática. (Cân 1:13; 4:6, 14; 5:1, 13) Não há certeza da sua fonte exata nos tempos antigos. Mas, em geral, a mirra é a resina obtida de diversos espinhosos arbustos ou pequenas árvores do gênero Commiphora, tais como a Commiphora myrrha ou a Commiphora abyssinica. Esses arbustos vicejam em áreas rochosas, especialmente em morros calcários. Sua madeira e casca têm cheiro forte. Embora a resina exsude por si só do caule, ou dos ramos grossos e rígidos de qualquer das variedades, a dimanação pode ser aumentada por meio de incisões. Inicialmente, a resina é macia e pegajosa, mas, ao pingar no solo, endurece.

A mirra era um dos ingredientes do óleo de santa unção. (Êx 30:23-25) Apreciada por sua fragrância, era usada para perfumar vestes, camas e outros objetos. (Veja Sal 45:8; Pr 7:17; Cân 3:6, 7.) A donzela sulamita, do Cântico de Salomão, parece ter aplicado mirra líquida ao corpo antes de se recolher à noite. (Cân 5:2, 5) Massagens com óleo de mirra estavam incluídas no tratamento especial de beleza dado a Ester. (Est 2:12) A mirra era também uma das substâncias usadas na preparação de cadáveres para o sepultamento. (Jo 19:39, 40) Parece ter sido considerada de valor suficiente para servir de presente para aquele que nasceu rei dos judeus. — Mt 2:1, 2, 11.

MISÃ. Veja MISÃO.

MISAEL [possivelmente: Quem É Semelhante a Deus?; ou: Quem Pertence a Deus?].

1. Levita coatita e filho de Uziel. (Êx 6:18, 22) Depois de Jeová ter executado Nadabe e Abiú, filhos de Arão, por terem oferecido fogo ilegítimo, Misael e seu irmão Elzafã carregaram os corpos deles para fora do acampamento. — Le 10:1-5.

2. Nome original de um dos três companheiros judeus de Daniel, que foi chamado "Mesaque" pelo principal oficial da corte de Babilônia. — Da 1:6, 7; veja MESAQUE.

3. Um dos homens que ficaram em pé à esquerda de Esdras, quando este copista leu no livro da Lei para os judeus reunidos em Jerusalém após o exílio babilônico. — Ne 8:3, 4.

MISAL [Lugar de Indagação]. Cidade fronteiriça de Aser, dada aos levitas gersonitas, aparentemente também chamada Masal. É provável que Misal ficasse perto do monte Carmelo. (Jos 19:24-26; 21:27, 30; 1Cr 6:74) Todavia, desconhece-se a sua localização exata.

MISÃO. Cabeça duma casa ancestral de Benjamim; filho ou descendente de Elpaal. — 1Cr 8:1, 11, 12.

MISERICÓRDIA. Expressão de bondosa consideração ou pena, que dá alívio aos desfavorecidos; terna compaixão; também, às vezes, abrandamento do julgamento ou da punição.

Misericórdia é uma tradução frequente da palavra hebraica ra·hhamím e da grega é·le·os (verbo: e·le·é·o). Um exame destes termos e do seu uso ajuda a trazer a lume seu pleno sabor e significado. O verbo hebraico ra·hhám é definido como significando "inflamar-se, acalorar-se com terna emoção; . . . ser compassivo". (A Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon [Léxico Hebraico e Caldeu], editado por B. Davies, 1957, p. 590) Segundo o lexicógrafo Gesenius: "A ideia primária parece ser a de acalentar, acalmar, e de suave emoção mental." (A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament [Léxico Hebraico e Inglês do Velho Testamento], traduzido por E. Robinson, 1836, p. 939) O termo é aparentado de perto com a palavra para "madre" ("ventre") ou pode referir-se às "entranhas", que ficam afetadas quando se sente cordial e terna comiseração ou compaixão. — Veja Is 63:15, 16; Je 31:20.

Nas Escrituras, ra·hhám é usado apenas uma vez pelo homem com referência a Deus, o salmista dizendo: "Terei afeição [forma de ra·hhám] por ti, ó Jeová, minha força." (Sal 18:1) Entre os humanos, José demonstrou esta qualidade quando "suas emoções íntimas [forma de ra·hhamím] estavam agitadas" para com o seu irmão Benjamim e ele se entregou ao pranto. (Gên 43:29, 30; compare isso com 1Rs 3:25, 26.) Quando as pessoas estavam sujeitas à possibilidade de serem tratadas dura e insensivelmente por captores (1Rs 8:50; Je 42:10-12) ou por oficiais de autoridade superior (Gên 43:14; Ne 1:11; Da 1:9), elas desejavam, e suplicavam piedade e misericórdia, ou seja, ser tratadas com favor, bondade e consideração. — Contraste isso com Is 13:17, 18.

A Misericórdia de Jeová. O termo é mais frequentemente usado com referência aos tratos de Jeová com os do seu povo pactuado. Ter Deus piedade (ra·hhám) para com eles é comparado à mulher que tem piedade com os filhos do seu ventre e ao pai que é misericordioso com os seus filhos. (Is 49:15; Sal 103:13) Visto que a nação de Israel frequentemente se desviava da justiça e sofria graves apuros, ela muitas vezes tinha necessidade especial de ajuda misericordiosa. Se mostrava a atitude correta de coração e se voltava para Jeová, ele, embora tivesse estado irado com ela, mostrava compaixão, favor e boa vontade. (De 13:17; 30:3; Sal 102:13; Is 54:7-10; 60:10) Enviar ele seu Filho para nascer em Israel era evidência duma vindoura "alvorada" de compaixão e misericórdia divinas para com eles. — Lu 1:50-58, 72-78.

A palavra grega é·le·os transmite em parte o sentido da hebraica ra·hhamím. Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine) diz: "ELEOS (ἔλεος) 'é a manifestação externa de piedade; presume que há necessidade da parte daquele que a recebe, e que há recursos adequados para satisfazer a necessidade daquele que a demonstra.' " O verbo (e·le·é·o) geralmente transmite a ideia de "condoer-se com a desgraça de outrem, e especialmente de condolência manifesta em ações". (1981, Vol. 3, pp. 60, 61) Por isso, os cegos, os possessos de demônios, os leprosos, ou as pessoas cujos filhos eram afligidos, achavam-se entre os que suscitavam é·le·os, a expressão de misericórdia, piedade. (Mt 9:27; 15:22; 17:15; Mr 5:18, 19; Lu 17:12, 13) Em resposta ao apelo: "Tem misericórdia de nós", Jesus realizava milagres, aliviando tais pessoas. Não fazia isso de modo rotineiro, apático, mas "penalizado" (Mt 20:31, 34), o escritor do Evangelho empregando aqui uma forma do verbo splag·khni·zo·mai, aparentado com splágkhna, que significa literalmente "intestinos". (At 1:18) Este verbo expressa o sentimento de piedade, ao passo que é·le·os se refere à manifestação ativa desta piedade, portanto, um ato de misericórdia.

Não se limita a ações judiciais. Em português, a palavra "misericórdia" costuma geralmente transmitir a ideia de refrear-se, de exercer moderação, como na administração de punição, moderação que é motivada pela compaixão ou comiseração. De modo que frequentemente tem conotação judicial, como no caso em que o juiz mostra clemência por abrandar a sentença do transgressor. Visto que a misericórdia de Deus sempre está em harmonia com as suas outras qualidades e normas justas, inclusive sua justiça e sua veracidade (Sal 40:11; Os 2:19), e visto que todos os homens são inerentemente pecaminosos e merecem a morte em retribuição pelo pecado (Ro 5:12; compare isso com Sal 130:3, 4; Da 9:18; Tit 3:5), é evidente que o perdão do erro ou o abrandamento da sentença ou da punição não raro está envolvido no uso de misericórdia por parte de Deus. (Sal 51:1, 2; 103:3, 4; Da 9:9; Miq 7:18, 19) Todavia, à base das informações precedentes, pode-se ver que os termos hebraico e grego (ra·hhamím; é·le·os) não se limitam ao perdão ou à moderação na aplicação duma penalidade judicial. O perdão dum erro, em si, não é a misericórdia geralmente retratada por esses termos, mas, antes, tal perdão abre o caminho para essa misericórdia. Deus, naturalmente, ao expressar misericórdia, nunca desconsidera suas perfeitas normas de justiça, e é por este motivo que ele forneceu o sacrifício resgatador por meio de seu Filho Jesus Cristo, tornando possível o perdão de pecados sem violar a justiça. — Ro 3:25, 26.

Portanto, a misericórdia, mais frequentemente, não se refere a uma ação negativa, a se refrear (de punir), mas a uma ação positiva, a uma expressão de bondosa consideração ou piedade que dá alívio aos desfavorecidos que necessitam de misericórdia.

Isto está bem ilustrado na parábola de Jesus a respeito do samaritano que viu um viajante prostrado à beira da estrada, tendo sido roubado e espancado. Ele mostrou que era o "próximo" deste homem, porque, movido por piedade, "agiu misericordiosamente para com ele", tratando as suas feridas e cuidando dele. (Lu 10:29-37) Isto não envolvia nenhum perdão de transgressões ou processos judiciais.

Portanto, as Escrituras mostram que a misericórdia de Jeová Deus não é uma qualidade que só se manifesta quando pessoas, a bem dizer, estão "em julgamento" perante ele por terem cometido alguma transgressão específica. Antes, é uma qualidade característica da personalidade de Deus, do seu modo normal de agir para com os em necessidade, uma faceta do seu amor. (2Co 1:3; 1Jo 4:8) Ele não é como os deuses falsos das nações — deuses insensíveis, impiedosos. Antes, "Jeová é clemente e misericordioso, vagaroso em irar-se e grande em benevolência. Jeová é bom para com todos, e suas misericórdias estão sobre todos os seus trabalhos". (Sal 145:8, 9; compare isso com Sal 25:8; 104:14, 15, 20-28; Mt 5:45-48; At 14:15-17.) Ele é "rico em misericórdia", e a sabedoria procedente dele é "cheia de misericórdia". (Ef 2:4; Tg 3:17) Seu Filho, que revelou como o Pai é (Jo 1:18), mostrou isso pela sua própria personalidade, pelo seu modo de falar e de agir. Quando multidões vinham para ouvi-lo, e mesmo antes de ver a reação delas ao que iria dizer, Jesus "teve pena [forma de splag·khní·zo·mai]", porque "andavam esfoladas e empurradas dum lado para outro como ovelhas sem pastor". — Mr 6:34; Mt 9:36; compare isso com Mt 14:14; 15:32.

As necessidades da humanidade. Obviamente, a incapacidade básica e maior da humanidade vem do pecado, herdado de seu antepassado Adão. Assim, todos sofrem premente necessidade, estão num estado lastimável. Jeová Deus agiu misericordiosamente para com a humanidade como um todo por prover os meios para que ela fique livre desta grande incapacidade, e as doenças e a morte consequentes. (Mt 20:28; Tit 3:4-7; 1Jo 2:2) Sendo Deus misericordioso, ele é paciente, porque "não deseja que alguém seja destruído, mas deseja que todos alcancem o arrependimento". (2Pe 3:9) Jeová deseja fazer o bem a todos, prefere isso (veja Is 30:18, 19), 'não se deleita na morte do iníquo', e "não é do seu próprio coração que ele tem atribulado ou está causando pesar aos filhos dos homens", como na destruição de Judá e de Jerusalém. (Ez 33:11; La 3:31-33) É a dureza de coração das pessoas, sua obstinação e sua recusa de aceitar a clemência e misericórdia dele, que o obriga a adotar um proceder diferente para com eles, fazendo com que Suas misericórdias lhes sejam 'cortadas'. — Sal 77:9; Je 13:10, 14; Is 13:9; Ro 2:4-11.

Não se deve abusar dela. Embora Jeová exerça grande misericórdia para com aqueles que se chegam a ele em sinceridade, de modo algum isentará da punição os que são impenitentes e que realmente a merecem. (Êx 34:6, 7) Ninguém pode abusar da misericórdia de Deus; não se pode pecar com completa impunidade e ficar eximido dos resultados naturais ou das consequências do seu proceder errado. (Gál 6:7, 8; compare isso com Núm 12:1-3, 9-15; 2Sa 12:9-14.) Jeová, em misericórdia, talvez mostre paciência e longanimidade, dando às pessoas a oportunidade de corrigir o seu proceder errado; embora manifeste sua desaprovação, talvez não as abandone completamente, mas misericordiosamente continue a suprir-lhes certa medida de ajuda e orientação. (Veja Ne 9:18, 19, 27-31.) Mas, se elas não correspondem, a paciência dele tem limites, e ele retira sua misericórdia e age contra elas por causa do seu próprio nome. — Is 9:17; 63:7-10; Je 16:5-13, 21; compare isso com Lu 13:6-9.

Não governada por padrões humanos. Não cabe aos humanos tentar estabelecer seus próprios padrões, ou normas, segundo os quais Deus deveria ter misericórdia. Ele, de Sua elevada posição celestial, e em harmonia com os seus próprios bons propósitos, com sua própria visão de longo alcance quanto ao futuro e com sua capacidade de ver o que há no coração, 'tem misericórdia de quem ele tiver misericórdia'. (Êx 33:19; Ro 9:15-18; compare isso com 2Rs 13:23; Mt 20:12-15.) No capítulo 11 de Romanos, o apóstolo trata da demonstração da inigualável sabedoria e misericórdia de Deus ao oferecer aos gentios a oportunidade de entrarem no Reino celestial. Os gentios encontravam-se fora da comunidade da nação de Deus, Israel, e, por isso, anteriormente não recebiam as misericórdias resultantes da relação pactuada com Deus; e, também, eles viviam em desobediência a Deus. (Veja Ro 9:24-26; Os 2:23.) Paulo explica que primeiro foram os de Israel que tiveram a oportunidade, mas que eles, na maior parte, foram desobedientes. Isto resultou em se abrir o caminho para gentios se tornarem parte do prometido "reino de sacerdotes e uma nação santa". (Êx 19:5, 6) Paulo conclui: "Porque Deus encerrou todos juntos [judeus e gentios] na desobediência, a fim de mostrar misericórdia para com todos eles." Por meio do sacrifício resgatador de Cristo, o pecado adâmico, que operava em toda a humanidade, podia ser eliminado para com todos os que exercessem fé (inclusive os gentios), e, por meio da morte dele na estaca de tortura, podia também ser eliminada a maldição da Lei de todos os que estavam sob ela (os judeus), de modo que todos podiam receber misericórdia. O apóstolo exclama: "Ó profundidade das riquezas, e da sabedoria, e do conhecimento de Deus! Quão inescrutáveis são os seus julgamentos e além de pesquisa são os seus caminhos!" — Ro 11:30-33; Jo 3:16; Col 2:13, 14; Gál 3:13.

Buscar a Misericórdia de Deus. Os desejosos de usufruir a misericórdia de Deus têm de buscá-lo, mostrando a atitude correta de coração por abandonar o proceder errado e os pensamentos prejudiciais (Is 55:6, 7); têm de temê-lo devidamente e mostrar apreço pelos Seus preceitos justos (Sal 103:13; 119:77, 156, 157; Lu 1:50); e caso se desviem do proceder justo que têm seguido, não devem tentar encobrir isso, mas têm de confessá-lo, e têm de mostrar genuína contrição e tristeza de coração (Sal 51:1, 17; Pr 28:13). Outro essencial absoluto é que eles mesmos precisam ser misericordiosos. Jesus disse: "Felizes os misericordiosos, porque serão tratados com misericórdia." — Mt 5:7.

Dádivas de Misericórdia. Os fariseus mostraram ter uma atitude impiedosa para com outros e foram censurados por Jesus com as palavras: "Ide, pois, e aprendei o que significa: 'Misericórdia quero, e não sacrifício.'" (Mt 9:10-13; 12:1-7; compare isso com Os 6:6.) Ele classificou a misericórdia com os assuntos mais importantes da Lei. (Mt 23:23) Conforme já se mencionou, embora essa misericórdia abranja clemência judicial, tal como os fariseus devem ter tido a oportunidade de mostrar, talvez como membros do Sinédrio, ela não se limitava a isso. De forma mais básica, referia-se à manifestação ativa de piedade ou compaixão, a atos de misericórdia. — Veja De 15:7-11.

Esta misericórdia pode ser expressa por meio de dádivas materiais. Mas, para valer perante Deus, tem de ter motivação correta, não mero 'egoísmo esclarecido'. (Mt 6:1-4) Entre as coisas em que Dorcas abundava estavam as "dádivas de misericórdia [forma de e·le·e·mo·sý·ne]" (At 9:36, 39), e, sem dúvida, também entre as de Cornélio, cujas dádivas, junto com as suas orações, resultaram em ele ser ouvido favoravelmente por Deus. (At 10:2, 4, 31) Jesus disse que o fracasso dos fariseus era não darem "como dádivas de misericórdia as coisas que estão no íntimo". (Lu 11:41) De modo que a misericórdia genuína tem de originar-se no coração.

Jesus e seus discípulos destacavam-se especialmente por fazerem misericordiosamente dádivas espirituais de valor muito superior às coisas materiais. (Veja Jo 6:35; At 3:1-8.) Os membros da congregação cristã, especialmente os que atuam como 'pastores' nela (1Pe 5:1, 2), têm de cultivar a dádiva da misericórdia. Sua misericórdia, tanto em sentido material como espiritual, precisa ser exercida "com animação", nunca de modo ressentido. (Ro 12:8) A fé de certos membros da congregação talvez enfraqueça, tornando-os espiritualmente doentes, a ponto de até expressarem dúvidas. Visto que estes se expõem ao perigo de sofrer morte espiritual, seus concristãos são exortados a continuar a ser misericordiosos para com estes e ajudá-los a evitar um fim destrutivo. Ao passo que continuam a ter misericórdia com alguns cujas ações não têm sido corretas, precisam ter cuidado de eles mesmos não caírem na tentação, cônscios de que não somente têm de amar a justiça, mas também odiar o que é mau. Portanto, sua misericórdia não significa que toleram o erro. — Ju 22, 23; compare isso com 1Jo 5:16, 17; veja DÁDIVAS DE MISERICÓRDIA.

A Misericórdia Exulta Triunfantemente sobre o Julgamento. O discípulo Tiago declara: "Pois, quem não praticar a misericórdia terá o seu julgamento sem misericórdia. A misericórdia exulta triunfantemente sobre o julgamento." (Tg 2:13) O contexto mostra que ele está elaborando as ideias expressas anteriormente acerca da verdadeira adoração, inclusive a expressão de misericórdia em cuidar dos atribulados, e de não mostrar favoritismo nem discriminação contra os pobres a favor dos ricos. (Tg 1:27; 2:1-9) Suas palavras seguintes também indicam isso, pois tratam das necessidades de irmãos 'em nudez e com falta de alimentos suficientes para o dia'. (Tg 2:14-17) Portanto, suas palavras correspondem às de Jesus, de que se terá misericórdia com os misericordiosos. (Mt 5:7; compare isso com Mt 6:12; 18:32-35.) Ao serem levados a julgamento por Deus, os que foram misericordiosos — tendo piedade e compaixão, e prestando ajuda ativa aos em necessidade — por sua vez, receberão misericórdia de Deus, e assim, na realidade, a misericórdia deles triunfará sobre qualquer julgamento adverso que de outro modo talvez se lançasse contra eles. Conforme declara o provérbio: "Aquele que mostra favor ao de condição humilde está emprestando a Jeová, e Ele lhe retribuirá o seu tratamento." (Pr 19:17) O ponto destacado por Tiago é corroborado por muitos outros textos. — Veja Jó 31:16-23, 32; Sal 37:21, 26; 112:5; Pr 14:21; 17:5; 21:13; 28:27; 2Ti 1:16, 18; He 13:16.

A Misericórdia do Sumo Sacerdote de Deus. O livro de Hebreus explica por que Jesus, como Sumo Sacerdote muito maior do que qualquer sacerdote da linhagem de Arão, tinha de se tornar homem, sofrer e morrer: "Consequentemente, ele estava obrigado a tornar-se igual aos seus 'irmãos' em todos os sentidos, para se tornar sumo sacerdote misericordioso e fiel nas coisas referentes a Deus, a fim de oferecer sacrifício propiciatório pelos pecados do povo." Por ter ele mesmo sofrido sob prova, "pode vir em auxílio daqueles que estão sendo postos à prova". (He 2:17, 18) Visto que possuem o registro da vida de Jesus, das suas palavras e dos seus atos, aqueles que se dirigem a Deus por meio de Jesus podem fazê-lo com confiança. "Pois temos por sumo sacerdote, não alguém que não se possa compadecer das nossas fraquezas, mas alguém que foi provado em todos os sentidos como nós mesmos, porém, sem pecado. Aproximemo-nos, portanto, com franqueza no falar, do trono de benignidade imerecida, para obtermos misericórdia e acharmos benignidade imerecida para ajuda no tempo certo." — He 4:15, 16.

Ter Jesus sacrificado sua própria vida foi um ato notável de misericórdia e amor. Na sua posição celestial como Sumo Sacerdote, ele deu evidência da sua misericórdia nos seus tratos com Paulo (Saulo), tendo misericórdia com ele por causa da ignorância de Paulo. Este declara: "Não obstante, a razão pela qual me foi concedida misericórdia era que, por meio de mim, como o principal caso, Cristo Jesus demonstrasse toda a sua longanimidade, como amostra dos que irão depositar a sua fé nele para a vida eterna." (1Ti 1:13-16) Assim como o Pai de Jesus, Jeová Deus, tivera muitas vezes misericórdia com Israel por salvá-lo dos seus inimigos, libertando-o dos seus opressores e levando-o a uma condição pacífica, próspera, assim os cristãos podem ter firme esperança na misericórdia a ser expressa por meio do Filho de Deus. Por isso, Judas escreve: "Mantende-vos no amor de Deus, ao passo que aguardais a misericórdia de nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo, visando a vida eterna." (Ju 21) A maravilhosa misericórdia de Deus por meio de Cristo incentiva os verdadeiros cristãos a não desistirem de seu ministério e a realizá-lo de modo altruísta. — 2Co 4:1, 2.

Tratamento Misericordioso dos Animais. Provérbios 12:10 diz: "O justo importa-se com a alma do seu animal doméstico, mas as misericórdias dos iníquos são cruéis." Ao passo que o justo conhece as necessidades dos seus animais e se interessa no bem-estar deles, a misericórdia do iníquo não é estimulada por essas necessidades. Segundo os princípios egoístas, insensíveis, do mundo, o tratamento que se dispensa aos animais baseia-se apenas no proveito que se pode tirar deles. O que o iníquo talvez considere ser um tratamento adequado pode na realidade ser um tratamento cruel. (Contraste isso com Gên 33:12-14.) A preocupação do justo para com os seus animais tem precedente no cuidado do próprio Deus para com eles como parte da sua criação. — Veja Êx 20:10; De 25:4; 22:4, 6, 7; 11:15; Sal 104:14, 27; Jon 4:11.

Misericórdia e Benignidade. Outras palavras intimamente associadas com os termos ra·hhamím e é·le·os, e frequentemente usadas com eles são a hebraica hhé·sedh (Sal 25:6; 69:16; Je 16:5; La 3:22), e a grega khá·ris (1Ti 1:2; He 4:16; 2Jo 3), as quais, respectivamente, significam "benevolência (amor leal)" e "benignidade imerecida". Hhé·sedh difere de ra·hhamím por enfatizar a devoção ou o amoroso apego leal ao alvo da benignidade, ao passo que ra·hhamím salienta o terno compadecimento ou piedade sentida. De modo similar, a principal diferença entre khá·ris e é·le·os é que khá·ris expressa especialmente a ideia duma dádiva gratuita e não merecida, dando assim ênfase à liberalidade e generosidade do dador, ao passo que é·le·os destaca a reação misericordiosa às necessidades dos atribulados ou desfavorecidos. De modo que khá·ris (benignidade imerecida) foi demonstrada por Deus para com o seu próprio Filho, quando "lhe deu bondosamente [e·kha·rí·sa·to] o nome que está acima de todo outro nome". (Fil 2:9) Esta benignidade não foi motivada por piedade, mas pela amorosa generosidade de Deus. — Veja BENIGNIDADE.

MISERICÓRDIA, DÁDIVAS DE. Veja DÁDIVAS DE MISERICÓRDIA.

MÍSIA. Região na parte NO da Ásia Menor. Suas fronteiras parecem ter variado, mas, basicamente, a Mísia confinava do O ao N com o mar Egeu, o Helesponto (Dardanelos) e a Propôntida (mar de Mármara). A Bitínia ficava ao L e a Lídia ao S. (Veja ÁSIA.) Paulo, na sua segunda viagem missionária, acompanhado por Silas e Timóteo, esforçou-se a ir à Bitínia, "mas o espírito de Jesus não lhes permitiu isso. De modo que deixaram Mísia de lado e desceram a Trôade". (At 15:40; 16:1-3, 7, 8) Visto que o porto marítimo de Trôade se encontrava na Mísia, isto evidentemente significa que Paulo e seus companheiros, embora passassem pela Mísia, deixaram-na de lado como campo para atividade missionária. Outras cidades da Mísia eram Adramítio (At 27:2), Assos (At 20:13, 14) e Pérgamo. — Re 1:11; veja TRÔADE.

MISMA.

1. Filho de Ismael e maioral dum clã árabe. — Gên 25:14, 16; 1Cr 1:30, 31.

2. Simeonita, filho de Mibsão e pai de Hamuel. — 1Cr 4:24-26.

MISMANA [Obesidade]. Um dos gaditas valentes do exército, que se juntaram às forças de Davi em Ziclague. Ele é o quarto alistado entre os cabeças do exército de Davi. — 1Cr 12:1, 10, 14.

MISPÁ, MISPÉ [que significa "Torre de Vigia"].

1. Uma região habitada pelos heveus e situada ao sopé do monte Hermom era conhecida como "terra de Mispá". (Jos 11:3) Pelo menos parte desta região, se não toda ela, talvez também fosse chamada de "o vale plano de Mispé". (Jos 11:8) A "terra de Mispá" era possivelmente a região em torno de Bânias (Cesareia de Filipe), ao S do monte Hermom ou a planície ao L do monte Hermom, ao longo do uádi et-Teim.

2. Cidade de Judá na Sefelá. (Jos 15:33, 38) Sua localização exata, porém, está em dúvida. Uma identificação sugerida é Khirbet Safiyeh, a uns 9 km ao S da antiga Azeca.

3. Cidade no território de Benjamim. (Jos 18:26, 28) Embora alguns sugiram uma possível identificação com Nebi Samwil (c. 8 km ao NO de Jerusalém), a maioria prefere Tell en-Nasbeh (c. 12 km ao N de Jerusalém) como o lugar antigo. A interpretação de certos achados arqueológicos parece dar preferência a Tell en-Nasbeh. Por exemplo, encontraram-se asas de jarro, com uma inscrição que alguns peritos acham ser as três letras hebraicas para m-s-p, possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Mispá.

Foi em Mispá que todos os homens combatentes de Israel se reuniram e decidiram agir contra os envolvidos num crime sexual em massa cometido em Gibeá, de Benjamim. Quando os benjamitas se recusaram a entregar os homens culpados daquela cidade, irrompeu uma guerra em plena escala. Por fim, a tribo de Benjamim foi quase que aniquilada; escaparam disso apenas 600 varões vigorosos. (Jz 20:1-48) Anteriormente, em Mispá, os israelitas haviam jurado que não dariam suas filhas em casamento a benjamitas. (Jz 21:1) Depois da batalha, portanto, tinham de se tomar medidas para preservar a tribo de Benjamim. Uma delas era dar aos benjamitas 400 virgens de Jabes-Gileade. O restante da população desta cidade havia sido destruído, porque nenhum dos seus habitantes fora a Mispá para apoiar a luta contra Benjamim. — Jz 21:5-12.

Num período posterior, o profeta Samuel congregou todo o Israel e orou por ele. Nesta ocasião, os israelitas jejuaram e confessaram seus pecados. Quando os filisteus ficaram sabendo desta reunião em Mispá, aproveitaram-se da situação para um ataque. Mas, Jeová lançou os inimigos dos israelitas em confusão, habilitando estes a subjugá-los. Pelo que parece, foi para comemorar esta vitória dada por Deus que Samuel erigiu uma pedra entre Mispá e Jesana, chamando-a de Ebenezer (que significa "Pedra de Ajuda"). Depois disso, Samuel continuou a julgar Israel, e, ao fazê-lo, percorria um circuito anual de Betel, Gilgal e Mispá. (1Sa 7:5-16) Mais tarde, em 1117 AEC, outra assembleia realizada em Mispá presenciou a apresentação de Saul, como primeiro rei de Israel, feita por Samuel. — 1Sa 10:17-25.

No décimo século AEC, Mispá foi reedificada pelo Rei Asa, de Judá, com material de Ramá, a cidade que o rei Baasa, de Israel, fora obrigado a abandonar. (1Rs 15:20-22; 2Cr 16:4-6) Uns três séculos mais tarde, em 607 AEC, o vitorioso rei babilônio, Nabucodonosor, designou Gedalias para ser governador dos judeus que permaneciam na terra de Judá. Gedalias administrava da sede em Mispá. O profeta Jeremias passou a morar ali. Também, os sobreviventes chefes de exército e outros judeus que haviam sido espalhados chegaram a Mispá. O governador Gedalias, embora avisado de antemão, não foi cauteloso e foi assassinado em Mispá. Também foram chacinados os caldeus e os judeus que estavam com ele. Após isso, 70 homens visitantes também foram mortos. O bando de assassinos, chefiados por Ismael, filho de Netanias, levou cativo o povo restante. Alcançados por Joanã, filho de Careá, Ismael escapou com oito homens, mas os cativos foram resgatados e mais tarde levados ao Egito. — 2Rs 25:23-26; Je 40:5–41:18.

Depois do exílio babilônico, homens de Mispá, e os príncipes Salune e Ezer, participaram em reparar a muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:7, 15, 19.

4. Cidade ao L do Jordão, em Gileade (Jz 10:17; 11:11, 29), talvez o mesmo lugar que a Mispá mencionada em Oseias 5:1. Mispá era a cidade de Jefté. (Jz 11:34) Alguns propõem sua localização em Khirbet Jal'ad, ou perto dali, a uns 23 km ao NO de Rabá ('Amman). Mas não há certeza da sua localização exata.

5. Uma cidade de Moabe em que Davi, enquanto proscrito pelo Rei Saul, fixou seus pais. (1Sa 22:3) Não se pode determinar com precisão a localização exata de Mispé. Alguns peritos acham que talvez seja o mesmo lugar que Quir de Moabe. (Is 15:1) Outros sugeriram Ruzm el-Mesrife (situada ao OSO de Madaba [a antiga Medeba]) como identificação.

MISPAR [possivelmente: Número]. Pessoa de destaque entre os judeus que retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico. (Esd 2:1, 2) Ele é chamado de Misperete em Neemias 7:7.

MISPERETE. Um dos líderes de destaque entre os judeus que retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico, em 537 AEC. (Ne 7:6, 7) Num relato paralelo, seu nome é dado como "Mispar". — Esd 2:2.

MISRAÍTAS. Uma das quatro famílias de Quiriate-Jearim, das quais descenderam os zoratitas e os estaolitas. — 1Cr 2:53.

MISREFOTE-MAIM [Queimas Junto às Águas]. Ponto até onde os israelitas perseguiram os exércitos dos reis do norte de Canaã aliados a Jabim, depois de os terem derrotado junto às águas de Merom. (Jos 11:1-5, 8) Quando a Terra da Promessa foi repartida em parcelas de herança, restava para ser conquistada a região desde o Líbano até Misrefote-Maim. (Jos 13:2, 6) Alguns identificam provisoriamente Misrefote-Maim com as ruínas em Khirbet el-Musheirefeh (Horvat Mashref), a uns 20 km ao NNE de Aco ('Akko). Este lugar teria possibilitado aos cidadãos de Misrefote-Maim o acesso às cidades da planície de Aco e também à bacia de Hula (Hulé). Pode ser que Misrefote-Maim (que significa "Queimas Junto às Águas") tenha recebido seu nome por causa das fontes termais situadas a uns 180 m do lugar.

MISTÉRIO. Veja SEGREDO SAGRADO.

MISTURA DE GENTE. Grupo de forasteiros (estrangeiros) que partiu do Egito junto com a nação de Israel. (Êx 12:37, 38 n; compare isso com Êx 12:43-49.) Algumas destas pessoas talvez fossem egípcios ou outros estrangeiros que decidiram seguir o verdadeiro Deus e a nação de Israel, depois de terem presenciado diversos dos golpes que Jeová aplicou no Egito. Outros deste grupo provavelmente eram egípcios que se haviam casado com israelitas, bem como os descendentes desta união. A israelita Selomite, da tribo de Dã, por exemplo, tinha marido egípcio e pelo menos um filho com ele. — Le 24:10, 11.

Este mesmo grupo é também chamado de "multidão mista [ou: a aglomeração (de gente); a ralé]", em Números 11:4. Sem dúvida, tanto sua formação não israelita como os rigores da peregrinação pelo ermo provocaram entre eles um espírito de queixa, que se tornou motivo de contenda. Sua expressão de anelos egoístas contagiou os israelitas, de modo que estes também começaram a chorar e a dizer: "Como nos lembramos dos peixes que costumávamos comer de graça no Egito, dos pepinos e das melancias, e dos alhos-porros, e das cebolas, e do alho! Mas agora a nossa alma está ressequida. Nossos olhos não veem nada senão o maná." — Núm 11:4-6.

Em Neemias 13:3 e Jeremias 25:20, a expressão "mistura de gente" indica não israelitas. Neemias faz referência a estrangeiros tais como moabitas e amonitas. (Ne 13:1) Que talvez estivessem também incluídos os filhos destes estrangeiros casados com israelitas (mestiços) é sugerido por terem os israelitas anteriormente despedido tanto suas esposas estrangeiras como seus filhos. — Esd 10:44.

MITCA [provavelmente, Doçura]. Um dos acampamentos de Israel no ermo. (Núm 33:28, 29) Desconhece-se hoje sua localização. Se Mitca for corretamente definido como "Doçura", o nome talvez aluda à boa água da região.

MITILENE. A principal cidade de Lesbos, uma ilha do mar Egeu ao largo da costa O da Ásia Menor. Por volta de 56 EC, o apóstolo Paulo, em caminho para Jerusalém, foi de navio a Mitilene, procedente de Assos, porto marítimo na costa da Ásia Menor, a uns 45 km ao NNO. (At 20:14) Não se mencionar o desembarque de Paulo ali talvez dê a entender que o navio apenas ancorou em Mitilene, possivelmente porque o necessário vento N tinha parado. No dia seguinte, o navio prosseguiu em direção SSO para Quios. — At 20:15.

Acredita-se que Mitilene tenha originalmente ocupado uma pequena ilha ao largo da costa leste de Lesbos. Mas, ao passo que a cidade aumentou, ela talvez fosse ligada a Lesbos por um dique e se expandisse ao longo da costa. Isto teria criado um porto no lado N e também um no lado S do dique. A cidade era famosa como sede de erudição literária e pela beleza arquitetônica dos seus prédios.

MITNITA. Termo aplicado a Josafá, um dos poderosos das forças militares de Davi. Não se sabe se "mitnita" se refere ao seu lugar de origem ou à designação da sua família. — 1Cr 11:26, 43.

MITREDATE [do persa, significando "Dádiva de Mitra"].

1. O tesoureiro de Ciro que, às ordens reais, entregou aos israelitas cerca de 5.400 utensílios de ouro e prata, do templo, para serem devolvidos a Jerusalém. — Esd 1:7, 8, 11.

2. Opositor à reconstrução pós-exílica do templo, que participou com outros em escrever uma carta ao Rei Artaxerxes, da Pérsia, acusando falsamente os judeus. — Esd 4:7.

MIZÁ. Xeque de Edom; descendente de Esaú através de Reuel. (Gên 36:17; 1Cr 1:34-37) Mizá era neto de Esaú, visto estar incluído entre "os filhos [ou: netos] de Basemate, esposa de Esaú", a qual era filha de Ismael e mãe de Reuel. — Gên 36:2, 3, 10, 13.

MIZRAIM. Alistado em segundo lugar entre os filhos de Cã. (Gên 10:6) Mizraim foi o progenitor das tribos egípcias (bem como de algumas tribos não egípcias), e o nome passou a ser sinônimo de Egito. (Gên 10:13, 14; 50:11) De modo que a palavra "Egito", nas traduções em português, na realidade verte a palavra hebraica Mits·rá·yim (ou Matsóhr, em alguns casos: 2Rs 19:24; Is 19:6; 37:25; Miq 7:12). As Tabuinhas de Amarna, escritas na primeira metade do segundo milênio AEC, chamam o Egito de Misri, o que é similar ao atual nome árabe do país (Misr).

Muitos peritos acham ser Mizraim uma forma dual, representando a dualidade do Egito (isto é, o Alto e o Baixo Egito), mas isto é conjectura. (Veja EGITO, EGÍPCIO.) Os nomes dos descendentes de Mizraim, pelo visto, estão na forma plural: Ludim, Anamim, Leabim, Naftuim, Patrusim, Casluim e Caftorim. (Gên 10:13, 14; 1Cr 1:11, 12) Por este motivo, costuma-se sugerir que eles representam mais o nome de tribos, do que filhos individuais. Embora isso seja possível, deve-se notar que há outros nomes que parecem ter a construção dual ou plural, tais como Efraim, Apaim e Diblaim (Gên 41:52; 1Cr 2:30, 31; Os 1:3), cada um deles obviamente referindo-se apenas a uma pessoa.

MNÁSON. Natural de Chipre e "antigo discípulo". Paulo, e os com ele, iam ser hospedados no lar de Mnáson, ao término duma viagem missionária do apóstolo, por volta de 56 EC. Alguns discípulos de Cesareia acompanharam o grupo de Paulo de Cesareia a Jerusalém, para levá-los a Mnáson. — At 21:15-17.

MÓ. Veja MOINHO, MÓ.

MOABE, MOABITAS.

1. Filho de Ló com sua filha mais velha. Como seu meio-irmão Amom, Moabe foi concebido depois que Ló e suas filhas deixaram Zoar e passaram a morar numa caverna da vizinha região montanhosa. Moabe tornou-se o antepassado dos moabitas. — Gên 19:30-38.

2. O território antigamente habitado pelos moabitas era chamado de "Moabe" e também de "campo(s) de Moabe". (Gên 36:35; Núm 21:20; Ru 1:2; 1Cr 1:46; 8:8; Sal 60:8) Anteriormente, os emins tinham ocupado esta terra, mas parecem ter sido desalojados pelos moabitas. (De 2:9-11; veja os vv 18-22.) Perto do fim da peregrinação de Israel no ermo, o território de Moabe parece ter-se estendido desde o vale da torrente de Zerede, no S, até o vale da torrente do Árnon, no N (uma distância de uns 50 km), sendo o Mar Morto a fronteira ocidental e o deserto Arábico uma fronteira indefinida no L. (Núm 21:11-13; De 2:8, 9, 13, 18, 19) Elevando-se abruptamente desde o Mar Morto, esta região é mormente um planalto recortado por gargantas e tem a elevação média de uns 900 m acima do mar Mediterrâneo. Na antiguidade, oferecia pastos para extensos rebanhos (2Rs 3:4), e sustentava vinhedos e pomares. (Veja Is 16:6-10; Je 48:32, 33.) Também se cultivavam cereais. — Veja De 23:3, 4.

Houve um período anterior, em que a terra de Moabe se estendia ao N do Árnon e incluía as "planícies desérticas de Moabe, defronte de Jericó, do outro lado do Jordão". (Núm 22:1) Mas, algum tempo antes da chegada dos israelitas, o rei amorreu Síon anexou esta região, e o Árnon tornou-se a fronteira N de Moabe. (Núm 21:26-30; Jz 11:15-18) Os amonitas também sofreram uma derrota às mãos de Síon, e foram empurrados para o norte e para o leste. O território que os amorreus conquistaram de ambos os povos formava uma cunha entre Moabe e Amom, e assim Moabe passou a ser delimitado ao norte pelo território amorreu e ao sul pelo território edomita. (Jz 11:13, 21, 22; compare isso com De 2:8, 9, 13, 14, 18.) Na sua maior extensão, o território de Moabe tinha aproximadamente 100 km de N a S, e 40 km de L a O.

Provavelmente, porque parte do território amorreu antes pertencera a Moabe, continuava a ser chamada de "terra de Moabe". (De 1:5) Foi neste anterior território moabita que os israelitas acamparam antes de cruzar o Jordão. (Núm 31:12; 33:48-51) Ali foi feito um segundo censo dos varões vigorosos de Israel, de 20 anos de idade para cima. (Núm 26:2-4, 63) Neste lugar, deram-se também ordens e decisões judiciais divinas a respeito de cidades levíticas, cidades de refúgio e heranças. (Núm 35:1–36:13) Moisés proferiu ali seus discursos finais e concluiu com Israel um pacto, exortando à fidelidade a Jeová. (De 1:1-5; 29:1) Por fim, Moisés subiu ao monte Nebo para ver a Terra da Promessa, e então morreu. Israel lamentou a morte de Moisés durante 30 dias nas planícies desérticas de Moabe. — De 32:49, 50; 34:1-6, 8.

Parentesco Entre Moabe e Israel. Os moabitas, sendo descendentes de Ló, sobrinho de Abraão, eram aparentados com os israelitas. A língua de ambos esses povos era bem similar, conforme se vê na inscrição na Pedra Moabita. Também, igual aos israelitas, os moabitas parecem ter praticado a circuncisão. (Je 9:25, 26) Não obstante, com poucas exceções, tais como Rute, e Itma, um poderoso do Rei Davi (Ru 1:4, 16, 17; 1Cr 11:26, 46), os moabitas mostraram ter grande inimizade a Israel.

Antes da entrada de Israel na Terra da Promessa. O cântico de Moisés, sobre Jeová destruir o poderio militar do Egito no Mar Vermelho, indicava que a notícia deste evento faria tremer os "déspotas de Moabe". (Êx 15:14, 15) Que os moabitas ficaram mesmo temerosos é indicado por seu rei, cerca de 40 anos depois, negar a Israel passagem pacífica através do seu domínio. (Jz 11:17) Por causa duma ordem direta de Deus, porém, os israelitas não atacaram os moabitas, mas, ao chegarem à fronteira meridional de Moabe, no vale da torrente de Zerede, contornaram o território de Moabe. (Núm 21:11-13; De 2:8, 9; Jz 11:18) Embora os moabitas vendessem alimentos e água aos israelitas (De 2:26-29), 'não vieram em auxílio de Israel com pão e água'. (De 23:3, 4) Isto evidentemente significa que os moabitas não os receberam hospitaleiramente, nem lhes forneceram provisões sem visar lucro.

Mais tarde, depois de cruzar o vale da torrente do Árnon, Israel se viu confrontado pelos amorreus, sob o Rei Síon, que anteriormente se havia apoderado de território moabita ao N do Árnon. Depois das vitórias dadas por Deus sobre este governante e também sobre o Rei Ogue, de Basã, os israelitas acamparam nas planícies desérticas de Moabe. (Núm 21:13, 21–22:1; De 2:24–3:8) O extenso acampamento israelita amedrontou os moabitas e seu Rei Balaque, que passaram a sentir um pavor mórbido. Embora não reivindicasse o anterior território moabita que os israelitas tomaram dos amorreus, Balaque deveras temeu pelo seu domínio. Por isso, ele consultou os anciãos de Midiã e mandou então mensageiros, anciãos tanto de Moabe como de Midiã, para contratarem o profeta Balaão, a fim de que viesse amaldiçoar Israel. (Núm 22:2-8; compare isso com Jz 11:25.) Foi assim que Balaque 'lutou' contra os israelitas. (Jos 24:9) No entanto, Jeová fez com que Balaão abençoasse Israel e até mesmo predissesse a ascendência de Israel sobre Moabe. (Núm caps. 23, 24; Jos 24:10; Ne 13:1, 2; Miq 6:5) Daí, seguindo a sugestão de Balaão, usaram-se mulheres moabitas e midianitas para induzir homens israelitas à imoralidade e à idolatria relacionada com Baal de Peor. Muitos israelitas sucumbiram a esta tentação, trazendo a ira de Jeová e a morte a 24.000 homens. (Núm 25:1-3, 6, 9; 31:9, 15, 16) Por terem deixado de auxiliar os israelitas com pão e água, e por contratarem Balaão para amaldiçoar Israel, os moabitas foram barrados de entrar na congregação de Jeová "até a décima geração". — De 23:3, 4; veja AMONITAS (Casamentos com Israelitas).

No tempo dos juízes. Durante o período dos juízes, os moabitas parecem ter expandido seu território ao N do Árnon, e, no reinado do seu Rei Eglom, ocuparam território israelita ao O do Jordão, pelo menos até a "cidade das palmeiras", Jericó. (Jz 3:12, 13; compare isso com De 34:3.) A subserviência de Israel a Moabe continuou por 18 anos, até que Eúde, benjamita canhoto, matou o Rei Eglom durante uma audiência particular com ele. Eúde liderou então os israelitas contra Moabe, golpeando cerca de 10.000 moabitas e subjugando-os. — Jz 3:14-30.

Neste período geral, quando houve fome em Judá, Elimeleque, com sua esposa Noemi e seus dois filhos, Malom e Quiliom, emigrou para a terra mais fértil de Moabe. Ali, os filhos se casaram com mulheres moabitas, Rute e Orpa. Após a morte dos três homens em Moabe e a melhora das condições em Israel, Noemi, acompanhada por Rute, retornou a Belém. Ali, Boaz, parente de Elimeleque, casou-se com Rute, a qual havia abandonado o politeísmo dos moabitas e se havia tornado adoradora de Jeová. Assim, Rute, uma moabita, tornou-se antepassada de Davi, e, portanto, também de Jesus Cristo. — Ru 1:1-6, 15-17, 22; 4:13, 17.

Igualmente, no tempo dos juízes, Israel começou a venerar as deidades dos moabitas, sem dúvida inclusive Quemós, o deus deles. (Jz 10:6; Núm 21:29; Je 48:46) Por adotarem essa adoração falsa de povos vizinhos, os israelitas perderam o favor de Jeová e sofreram às mãos dos seus inimigos. (Jz 10:7-10) Ainda no tempo de Samuel, o infiel Israel sofreu hostilização dos moabitas. — 1Sa 12:9-11.

Durante os reinados de Saul, de Davi e de Salomão. As dificuldades com os moabitas ainda continuaram por anos. Saul, o primeiro rei de Israel, guerreou vitoriosamente contra eles. (1Sa 14:47) Portanto, já que os moabitas teriam considerado Saul como inimigo, é compreensível que o rei de Moabe concordasse em que os pais de Davi, homem a quem Saul proscrevera, morassem em Mispé, em Moabe. — 1Sa 22:3, 4.

Mais tarde, quando o próprio Davi reinava, também havia guerra entre Israel e Moabe. Os moabitas foram totalmente subjugados e obrigados a pagar tributo a Davi. Pelo visto, no fim do conflito, dois terços dos combatentes de Moabe foram mortos. Parece que Davi mandou que se deitassem no chão, em fila, e então mediu esta fila para determinar quais os dois terços que deviam ser mortos e o terço que devia ser preservado vivo. (2Sa 8:2, 11, 12; 1Cr 18:2, 11) Foi possivelmente no decorrer do mesmo conflito que Benaia, filho de Jeoiada, "golpeou . . . os dois filhos de Ariel de Moabe". (2Sa 23:20; 1Cr 11:22) A vitória decisiva de Davi sobre os moabitas se deu em cumprimento das palavras proféticas de Balaão, proferidas mais de 400 anos antes: "Uma estrela há de avançar de Jacó, e um cetro há de se levantar de Israel. E ele há de rachar as têmporas da cabeça de Moabe, e o crânio de todos os filhos do tumulto de guerra." (Núm 24:17) Pelo visto, foi também com respeito a esta vitória que o salmista falou de Deus considerar Moabe como sua "panela de lavagem". — Sal 60:8; 108:9.

Salomão, filho de Davi, porém, desconsiderou a lei de Deus e se casou com mulheres moabitas que não se tinham tornado adoradoras de Jeová. A fim de agradá-las, Salomão construiu um alto a Quemós, deus delas. Foi só uns três séculos mais tarde, durante o reinado de Josias, que este alto foi tornado impróprio para adoração. — 1Rs 11:1, 7; 2Rs 23:13.

Até o exílio de Judá. Algum tempo depois de Israel se separar de Judá, os moabitas parecem ter recuperado território ao N do Árnon. Na estela de basalto negro conhecida como Pedra Moabita, o Rei Mesa, de Moabe, fala do Rei Onri, de Israel, como tomando posse da região de Medeba. Visto que o planalto de Medeba ficava no território de Rubem (Jos 13:15, 16), parece que Israel havia perdido esta região para os moabitas, de modo que Onri teve de recapturá-la mais tarde.

Evidentemente, Moabe permaneceu sob o controle israelita durante os reinados dos reis Onri e Acabe. Mas, após a morte de Acabe, o Rei Mesa, de Moabe, que "pagou ao rei de Israel cem mil cordeiros e cem mil carneiros não tosquiados", revoltou-se. (2Rs 1:1; 3:4, 5) A Pedra Moabita comemora esta revolta. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 946) Se forem identificadas corretamente como os mesmos lugares mencionados na Bíblia, 10 das cidades que o Rei Mesa afirma ter subjugado, capturado ou (re)construído, definitivamente ficavam em território israelita ao N do Árnon. Estas cidades eram Díbon, Atarote, Aroer, Quiriataim, Nebo, Baal-Meom (Núm 32:34, 37, 38), Medeba, Bamote-Baal, Jaaz (Jos 13:9, 17-19) e Bezer (Jos 20:8).

Dessemelhantes da inscrição propagandística de Mesa, as Escrituras relatam que os moabitas sofreram uma humilhante derrota. Jeorão (que se tornou rei de Israel uns dois anos após a morte de Acabe), recorrendo à ajuda do Rei Jeosafá, de Judá, e do rei de Edom, para sufocar a revolta moabita, marchou contra Moabe desde o S, via o ermo de Edom. Mas os exércitos aliados e seus animais quase que pereceram por falta de água. Procurou-se então a ajuda do profeta Eliseu, e, em cumprimento da profecia dele, de que Jeová ajudaria por causa de Jeosafá, o vale de torrente ficou cheio de água. Na manhã seguinte, o reflexo do sol sobre a água fez que esta parecesse aos moabitas como sangue. Chegando à conclusão errônea de que os exércitos aliados se haviam matado uns aos outros, os moabitas abandonaram toda a cautela e foram ao acampamento de Israel, apenas para serem postos em fuga. Ao progredir a batalha, cidades moabitas foram arruinadas, bons terrenos foram enchidos de pedras, árvores foram abatidas e mananciais foram tapados. Quando o Rei Mesa se viu encurralado na cidade de Quir-Haresete, perdendo a batalha, ele, com 700 homens, tentou sem sucesso arremeter contra o rei de Edom. Por fim, tomou seu filho primogênito e o ofereceu como sacrifício queimado sobre a muralha. Por este ou por outros motivos, "veio a haver grande indignação contra Israel", e se abandonou o sítio. — 2Rs 3:6-27.

Visto que esta humilhante derrota não ocorreu em solo estrangeiro, mas causou a devastação da terra de Moabe, é razoável supor que tinha de passar bastante tempo para a sua recuperação. De modo que parece provável que foi numa data anterior, durante o reinado de Jeosafá, que Moabe se juntou às forças de Amom e da região montanhosa de Seir para atacar Judá. Por intervenção de Jeová, os três exércitos se voltaram uns contra os outros e se destruíram. (2Cr 20:1, 22-24) Alguns peritos acreditam que no Salmo 83:4-9 se alude a este evento. — Compare 2Cr 20:14 com Sal 83:cab.

Em anos subsequentes, continuou a inimizade entre Moabe e Israel. Depois da morte do profeta Eliseu, guerrilhas dos moabitas invadiram regularmente Israel. (2Rs 13:20) Cerca de dois séculos depois, no tempo de Jeoiaquim, guerrilhas similares de moabitas contribuíram para a ruína de Judá nos seus últimos anos. (2Rs 24:2) Na destruição de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC, havia judeus que procuraram refúgio em Moabe, retornando a Judá quando Gedalias foi designado governador. — Je 40:11, 12.

Após o exílio. Depois que um restante israelita retornou do exílio babilônico, em 537 AEC, alguns se casaram com mulheres moabitas. Mas, acatando a admoestação de Esdras, despediram essas esposas e seus filhos. (Esd 9:1, 2; 10:10, 11, 44) Anos mais tarde, Neemias encontrou uma situação similar; muitos israelitas haviam tomado esposas moabitas. — Ne 13:1-3, 23.

Moabe nas Profecias. Em harmonia com sua longa história de oposição a Israel, Moabe é mencionado entre os empedernidos inimigos do povo de Jeová. (Veja Is 11:14.) Condenado por vituperar Israel, e por orgulho e altivez, Moabe ficaria finalmente desolada como Sodoma. (Sof 2:8-11; veja também Je 48:29.) Já no fim do nono século AEC, Amós escreveu que Moabe sofreria calamidade por "queimar os ossos do rei de Edom para cal". (Am 2:1-3) Ao passo que alguns tomam isso como significando que 2 Reis 3:26, 27, se refere à oferta em sacrifício feita pelo Rei Mesa, não de seu próprio filho, mas do primogênito do rei de Edom, esta inferência é improvável. Certa tradição judaica, porém, deveras relaciona o evento mencionado por Amós com a guerra travada contra Mesa e afirma que, algum tempo depois deste conflito, os moabitas desenterraram os ossos do rei de Edom e então os queimaram para cal. Mas o registro bíblico não fornece nenhuma base para se determinar a época envolvida.

Isaías (caps. 15, 16), aparentemente por volta do tempo da morte do Rei Acaz e enquanto a Assíria dominava, no oitavo século AEC, referiu-se a uma cidade moabita após outra como destinada a sofrer calamidade. Ele concluiu com as palavras: "E agora Jeová falou, dizendo: 'Dentro de três anos, segundo os anos de um trabalhador contratado, a glória de Moabe também terá de ser degradada com muita comoção de toda sorte, e os que restarem serão extremamente poucos, nada fortes.' " — Is 16:14.

Não é possível fixar com exatidão na corrente do tempo, à base de registros históricos, o cumprimento das profecias de Isaías e de Amós. Todavia, há evidência de que Moabe caiu sob o jugo da Assíria. O rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III menciona Salamanu, de Moabe, entre os que lhe pagavam tributo. Senaqueribe afirma ter recebido tributo de Kammusunadbi, o rei de Moabe. E os monarcas assírios Esar-Hadom e Assurbanipal mencionam os reis moabitas Musuri e Kamashaltu como sujeitos a eles. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 282, 287, 291, 294, 298) Há também evidência arqueológica de que muitos lugares em Moabe foram despovoados por volta do oitavo século AEC.

A profecia de Jeremias, do sétimo século AEC, apontava para o tempo em que Jeová faria um ajuste de contas com Moabe (Je 9:25, 26), fazendo isso por meio dos babilônios, sob o Rei Nabucodonosor. (Je 25:8, 9, 17-21; 27:1-7) Muitas cidades moabitas seriam reduzidas à desolação. (Je 48) Pelo visto, quando Judá sofreu a execução do julgamento de Jeová por meio dos babilônios, os moabitas disseram: "Eis que a casa de Judá é igual a todas as outras nações." Os moabitas, por deixarem assim de reconhecer que o julgamento realmente procedia de Deus e que os habitantes de Judá eram Seu povo, haviam de sofrer desastre, e assim 'viriam a conhecer Jeová'. — Ez 25:8-11; compare isso com Ez 24:1, 2.

O historiador judeu Josefo escreve que, no quinto ano depois da desolação de Jerusalém, Nabucodonosor voltou para guerrear contra a Coele-Síria, Amom e Moabe, e depois atacou o Egito. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], X, 181, 182 [ix, 7]) A respeito da confirmação arqueológica da desolação de Moabe, The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete), observa: "A exploração arqueológica tem demonstrado que Moabe ficou grandemente despovoado desde c. do início do sexto século, e muitos sítios desde c. do oitavo século. A partir do sexto século, nômades peregrinaram pela terra, até que fatores políticos e econômicos tornaram de novo possível a vida sedentária, nos últimos séculos AC." — Editado por G. A. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 3, p. 418; veja Ez 25:8-11.

Mais tarde, em cumprimento de Jeremias 48:47, Ciro, o conquistador de Babilônia, provavelmente permitiu que moabitas exilados retornassem à sua pátria.

O cumprimento exato das profecias a respeito de Moabe não pode ser negado. Há séculos, os moabitas deixaram de existir como povo. (Je 48:42)

Atualmente, o que se acha terem sido cidades moabitas, tais como Nebo, Hésbon, Aroer, Bete-Gamul e Baal-Meom, são hoje representadas por ruínas. Muitos outros lugares são agora desconhecidos.

A única explicação para o desaparecimento dos moabitas como povo é fornecida pela Bíblia. Comentou a edição de 1959 da Encyclopædia Britannica (Enciclopédia Britânica; Vol. 15, p. 629): "Israel continuou sendo uma grande potência, ao passo que Moabe desapareceu. É verdade que Moabe era continuamente assediada por hordas do deserto; a condição exposta do país é enfatizada pela cadeia de fortificações e castelos arruinados que até mesmo os romanos se viram compelidos a construir. Mas a explicação deve ser encontrada no próprio Israel, e especialmente na obra dos profetas."

Em vista do desaparecimento dos moabitas como povo, a inclusão de Moabe, em Daniel 11:41, entre as nações "no tempo do fim" (Da 11:40) deve ser logicamente encarada em sentido figurado. Evidentemente, os moabitas se referem a alguns dos que o "rei do norte" não consegue ter sob o seu controle.

MOADIAS [possivelmente: Tempo Designado (Festividade Periódica [Sazonal]; Reunião) de Jah]. Casa paterna, sacerdotal, da qual Piltai era cabeça nos dias de Joiaquim. (Ne 12:12, 17) Sugeriu-se que "Moadias" seja uma variante do nome "Maadias", e que Moadias é o sacerdote Maadias, que acompanhou Zorobabel a Jerusalém, após o exílio babilônico. — Ne 12:1, 5.

MOCHO. Veja CORUJA (MOCHO).

MODÉSTIA. Percepção das limitações da própria pessoa; também, castidade ou pureza pessoal. A raiz verbal hebraica tsa·náʽ é traduzida por "[andar] modestamente" em Miquéias 6:8, sua única ocorrência. O adjetivo aparentado, tsa·nú·aʽ (modesto), ocorre em Provérbios 11:2, onde é contrastado com a presunção. Embora alguns peritos atuais acreditem que o sentido desta raiz seja "ser cauteloso, cuidadoso, judicioso", muitos a tomam como significando "ser modesto". Por exemplo, A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament (Léxico Hebraico e Inglês do Velho Testamento; de Brown, Driver e Briggs, 1980, p. 857) diz que a raiz transmite a ideia de alguém retraído, modesto ou humilde. "Modéstia" traduz a palavra grega ai·dós. (1Ti 2:9) Ai·dós, usado em sentido moral, expressa a ideia de reverência, espanto reverente, respeito para com o sentimento ou a opinião de outros ou para com a consciência da própria pessoa, e assim expressa vergonha, amor-próprio, honradez, sobriedade e moderação. (A Greek-English Lexicon [Léxico Grego-Inglês], de H. Liddell e R. Scott, revisado por H. Jones, Oxford, 1968, p. 36) Comparando ai·dós com a palavra grega mais comum para "vergonha" (ai·skhý·ne; 1Co 1:27; Fil 3:19), o lexicógrafo Richard Trench diz que ai·dós é "a palavra mais nobre, e subentende o motivo mais nobre: nela está envolvida uma repugnância moral inata a praticar um ato desonroso, repugnância moral esta que só existe escassamente, ou não existe de forma alguma em [ai·skhý·ne]". Ele declara que "[ai·dós] sempre restringiria o homem bom de praticar um ato indigno, ao passo que [ai·skhý·ne] às vezes restringiria o homem mau". (Synonyms of the New Testament [Sinônimos do Novo Testamento], Londres, 1961, pp. 64, 65) Assim, a consciência está especialmente envolvida no efeito restritivo subentendido em ai·dós.

Perante Deus. Com respeito à modéstia, no sentido duma avaliação correta da própria pessoa, as Escrituras fornecem muitos conselhos. "A sabedoria está com os modestos", diz o provérbio. Isto se dá porque a pessoa modesta evita a desonra que acompanha a presunção ou a jactância. (Pr 11:2) Segue o proceder aprovado por Jeová, e, portanto, é sábia. (Pr 3:5, 6; 8:13, 14) Jeová ama tal pessoa e lhe concede sabedoria. Um dos requisitos para se obter o favor de Jeová é 'ser modesto em andar com ele'. (Miq 6:8) Isto envolve o devido apreço pela posição que se ocupa perante Deus, reconhecendo a pecaminosidade da própria pessoa em contraste com a grandiosidade, pureza e santidade de Jeová. Significa também que a pessoa deve reconhecer-se como criatura de Jeová, totalmente dependente Dele e sujeita à Sua soberania. Eva deixou de reconhecer isto. Ela foi empenhar-se pela completa independência e autodeterminação. A modéstia a teria ajudado a tirar da mente a ideia de se tornar "como Deus, sabendo o que é bom e o que é mau". (Gên 3:4, 5) O apóstolo Paulo aconselha contra o excesso de confiança em si mesmo e a presunção, dizendo: "Persisti em produzir a vossa própria salvação com temor e tremor." — Fil 2:12.

De Que Jactar-se. A jactância é o oposto da modéstia. A regra é: "Louve-te o estranho e não a tua própria boca; faça-o o estrangeiro e não os teus próprios lábios." (Pr 27:2) As palavras do próprio Jeová são: "Não se jacte o sábio da sua sabedoria, nem se jacte o poderoso da sua potência. Não se jacte o rico das suas riquezas. Mas quem se jacta, jacte-se da seguinte coisa: de ter perspicácia e de ter conhecimento de mim, que eu sou Jeová, Aquele que usa de benevolência, de juízo e de justiça na terra; porque é destas coisas que me agrado." — Je 9:23, 24; compare isso com Pr 12:9; 16:18, 19.

A Consideração de Deus com os Modestos. O apóstolo Paulo mostra a consideração de Deus com os modestos, e cita também a sua própria conduta na congregação como exemplo de tal atitude modesta. Ele escreveu aos cristãos em Corinto: "Pois observais a vossa chamada da parte dele, irmãos, que não foram chamados muitos sábios em sentido carnal, nem muitos poderosos, nem muitos de nobre estirpe; mas Deus escolheu as coisas tolas do mundo, para envergonhar os sábios; e Deus escolheu as coisas fracas do mundo, para envergonhar as coisas fortes; e Deus escolheu as coisas ignóbeis do mundo e as coisas menosprezadas, as coisas que não são, para reduzir a nada as coisas que são, a fim de que nenhuma carne se jacte à vista de Deus . . . assim como está escrito: 'Quem se jactar, jacte-se em Jeová.' E assim, quando fui ter convosco, irmãos, não fui com extravagância de linguagem ou de sabedoria, declarando-vos o segredo sagrado de Deus. Pois decidi não saber coisa alguma entre vós, exceto Jesus Cristo, e este pregado numa estaca. E fui ter convosco em fraqueza, e em temor, e com muito tremor; e a minha linguagem e aquilo que preguei não foram em palavras persuasivas de sabedoria, mas numa demonstração de espírito e de poder, para que a vossa fé não fosse na sabedoria de homens, mas no poder de Deus." — 1Co 1:26–2:5.

'Não Ir Além das Coisas Que Estão Escritas.' Mais adiante, na sua carta, Paulo enfatizou a necessidade de todos serem modestos, assim como ele mesmo demonstrara modéstia, numa avaliação correta de si mesmo. Os coríntios haviam caído na armadilha de jactar-se de certos homens, tais como Apolo, e até mesmo do próprio Paulo. Paulo corrigiu-os, dizendo-lhes que eram carnais, não espirituais, ao fazerem isso, acrescentando: "Agora, irmãos, estas coisas passei a aplicar a mim mesmo e a Apolo, para o vosso bem, para que, em nosso caso, aprendais a regra: 'Não vades além das coisas que estão escritas [isto é, de não irem além dos limites que as Escrituras especificam para os humanos na sua atitude de uns para com os outros e para com si mesmos]', a fim de que não fiqueis individualmente enfunados a favor de um contra o outro. Pois quem te faz diferir de outro? Deveras, o que tens que não tenhas recebido? Se, agora, deveras o tens recebido, por que te jactas como se não o tivesses recebido?" Manter isso em mente impedirá a altivez e a jactância com respeito a si mesmo ou a outro, quanto a linhagem, raça, cor ou nacionalidade, beleza física, capacidade, conhecimento, brilho intelectual, e assim por diante. — 1Co 4:6, 7.

O Exemplo de Jesus Cristo. Jesus Cristo é o mais excelente exemplo de modéstia. Ele disse aos seus discípulos que não podia fazer nenhuma única coisa da sua própria iniciativa, mas somente o que observava o Pai fazer, e que seu Pai é maior do que ele. (Jo 5:19, 30; 14:28) Jesus negou-se a aceitar títulos que não lhe cabiam. Quando um governante o chamou de "Bom Instrutor", Jesus respondeu: "Por que me chamas de bom? Ninguém é bom, a não ser um só, Deus." (Lu 18:18, 19) E ele disse aos seus discípulos que eles, como escravos de Jeová, não deviam sentir-se enfunados, quer por causa de coisas realizadas no serviço de Deus, quer por causa de seu valor para Deus. Antes, deviam ter a atitude de que, depois de terem feito tudo o que lhes fora determinado, "somos escravos imprestáveis. O que temos feito é o que devíamos fazer". — Lu 17:10.

Além disso, o Senhor Jesus Cristo, como homem perfeito na terra, era superior aos seus discípulos imperfeitos e tinha também grande autoridade da parte de seu Pai. Todavia, ao lidar com seus discípulos, tinha consideração com as limitações deles. Usava de delicadeza em treiná-los, e de linguagem apropriada para com eles. Não lhes impunha mais do que podiam suportar na ocasião. — Jo 16:12; compare isso com Mt 11:28-30; 26:40, 41.

Na Vestimenta e em Outros Bens. Ao instruir o superintendente Timóteo para cuidar de que se observasse a conduta correta na congregação, Paulo disse: "Desejo que as mulheres se adornem em vestido bem arrumado, com modéstia e bom juízo, não com estilos de trançados dos cabelos, e com ouro, ou pérolas, ou vestimenta muito cara, mas dum modo próprio das mulheres que professam reverenciar a Deus, a saber, por intermédio de boas obras." (1Ti 2:9, 10) Nisso o apóstolo não aconselha contra o esmero e a aparência boa e agradável, porque recomenda "vestido bem arrumado". Ele mostra, porém, a impropriedade da vaidade e da ostentação no modo de vestir — chamar com isso atenção para si mesmo ou para os meios de vida que se possui. Também está envolvida a modéstia relacionada com o respeito pelos sentimentos dos outros, e com o amor-próprio e a honorabilidade. A maneira de o cristão se vestir não deve chocar a decência, a susceptibilidade moral da congregação, ofendendo alguns. Este conselho quanto ao modo de se vestir lança adicionalmente luz sobre a atitude de Jeová para com o conceito correto e o uso de outros bens materiais que o cristão talvez possua. — Veja HUMILDADE.

MOINHO MANUAL. Veja MOINHO, MÓ.

MOINHO, MÓ. Engenho simples, que geralmente consiste em duas pedras (uma sobreposta à outra), entre as quais se moem diversos tipos de cereal, comestíveis, debulhados, para transformá-los em farinha. Era possível socar os grãos com um pilão num almofariz, triturá-los em cima de uma laje de pedra usando uma pedra superior, ou moê-los com um moinho manual giratório ou um moinho manual de alavanca. Tais dispositivos eram usados desde os primitivos tempos patriarcais, pois a esposa de Abraão, Sara, fez bolos redondos à base de "flor de farinha". (Gên 18:6) No ermo, os israelitas moíam o divinamente provido maná 'em moinhos manuais ou pilavam-no num gral'. — Núm 11:7, 8; veja GRAL, ALMOFARIZ.

O pão costumava ser assado todo dia, e cada família usualmente possuía seu próprio moinho manual. Triturar os cereais para fazer farinha era ordinariamente tarefa diária das mulheres no lar. (Mt 24:41; Jó 31:10; Êx 11:5; Is 47:1, 2) Levantavam-se de manhã cedo para preparar a farinha necessária para o pão do dia. O som dos moinhos manuais é mencionado na Bíblia como símbolo de condições pacíficas, normais. Inversamente, o abandono e a desolação eram indicados quando faltava "o som do moinho manual". — Je 25:10, 11; Re 18:21, 22; compare isso com Ec 12:3, 4.

Um moinho manual muito comum no tempo dos hebreus era um que parecia uma sela para montar a cavalo. Ele tinha duas pedras, uma mais comprida, na parte de baixo, e uma menor, na parte de cima. (De 24:6; Jó 41:24) Para usá-lo, a pessoa se ajoelhava atrás dele, pegava a pedra de cima com as duas mãos, e a movia para frente e para trás sobre a pedra de baixo, esmagando os grãos. Alguns moinhos desse tipo tinham a pedra de baixo inclinada, permitindo uma moagem mais eficaz. Mais tarde, passaram a ser usados moinhos giratórios e moinhos de alavanca. Os dois tinham uma abertura no centro da pedra de cima, onde o grão era colocado. O moinho de alavanca era retangular ou quadrado. A pedra de baixo era grande e a pedra de cima, de tamanho menor, era empurrada para frente e para trás, pressionando a pedra de baixo. Esse movimento era feito por meio de uma alavanca, que se encaixava num sulco na pedra de cima. Às vezes, o moinho de alavanca era colocado num lugar alto para que a pessoa pudesse operá-lo de pé. Já o moinho giratório tinha duas pedras redondas, e um pino fixado no meio servia de eixo para a pedra de cima. A pedra que ficava em cima era côncava, feita para encaixar e rodar sobre a pedra que ficava em baixo, que era convexa. Isso permitia que o grão triturado saísse pelo perímetro do moinho. Esse tipo de moinho ainda é usado atualmente. Hoje a pedra que fica em baixo é bem pesada e geralmente feita de basalto. Essa pedra costuma ter uns 46 cm de diâmetro e de 5 a 10 cm de espessura.

Usualmente eram duas as mulheres que operavam esta espécie de moinho manual. (Lu 17:35) Sentavam-se de frente uma para a outra, as duas com uma mão na manivela para fazer girar a mó superior. Uma das mulheres, com a mão livre, colocava o cereal para moer, em pequenas quantidades, na abertura da mó superior, ao passo que a outra recolhia a farinha à medida que saía da borda do moinho e caía na bandeja ou no pano estendido por baixo do moinho.

Visto que o pão costumava ser assado diariamente e com frequência os cereais eram moídos e transformados em farinha, a lei de Deus, dada a Israel, misericordiosamente proibia que se tomasse em penhor o moinho manual ou a mó superior dela, pertencentes à pessoa. O pão diário da família dependia do moinho manual. Portanto, apoderar-se dele ou da mó superior significava apoderar-se de "uma alma" ou de um "meio de vida". — De 24:6 n.

As Escrituras falam também de moinhos maiores. Jesus Cristo mencionou "uma mó daquelas que o burro faz girar". (Mt 18:6) Alguns acham que essa mó era a do tipo que se parece com a sela de um cavalo. Mas pode ser que ela fosse parecida com a que Sansão, enquanto cego, foi obrigado a girar para os filisteus quando "veio a ser moedor na casa dos presos". — Jz 16:21.

Em Revelação (Apocalipse), a repentina e derradeira destruição de Babilônia, a Grande, é comparada ao lançamento no mar de "uma pedra semelhante a uma grande mó". — Re 18:21.

MOISÉS [Retirado [isto é: salvo da água]]. "Homem do verdadeiro Deus", líder da nação de Israel, mediador do pacto da Lei, profeta, juiz, comandante, historiador e escritor. (Esd 3:2) Moisés nasceu em 1593 AEC, no Egito, sendo filho de Anrão, neto de Coate e bisneto de Levi. Sua mãe, Joquebede, era irmã de Coate. (Veja, porém, JOQUEBEDE.) Moisés era três anos mais moço do que seu irmão Arão. Miriã, irmã deles, era alguns anos mais velha. — Êx 6:16, 18, 20; 2:7.

Primórdios de Sua Vida no Egito. Moisés, menino "divinamente belo", foi poupado do decreto genocida de Faraó, que ordenava a destruição de todo recém-nascido menino hebreu. Foi ocultado pela mãe por três meses, depois foi colocado numa arca de papiro entre os juncos à beira do rio Nilo, onde foi encontrado pela filha de Faraó. Pela ação prudente de sua mãe e de sua irmã, Moisés passou a ser amamentado e treinado pela mãe, empregada para isso pela filha de Faraó, a qual o adotou então como seu filho. Como membro da casa de Faraó, ele foi "instruído em toda a sabedoria dos egípcios", tornando-se "poderoso nas suas palavras e ações", sem dúvida, poderoso em capacidade tanto mental como física. — Êx 2:1-10; At 7:20-22.

Apesar da sua posição favorecida e das oportunidades que se lhe ofereciam no Egito, o coração de Moisés estava com o escravizado povo de Deus. Deveras, ele esperava ser usado por Deus para libertá-los. No 40.º ano da sua vida, enquanto observava as cargas que seus irmãos hebreus levavam, ele viu um egípcio golpear um hebreu. Indo em defesa de seu coisraelita, ele matou o egípcio e o enterrou na areia. Foi neste ponto que Moisés fizera a decisão mais importante na sua vida: "Pela fé Moisés, quando cresceu, negou-se a ser chamado filho da filha de Faraó, escolhendo antes ser maltratado com o povo de Deus do que ter o usufruto temporário do pecado." Moisés renunciou com isso à honra e ao materialismo que poderia ter usufruído como membro da casa do poderoso Faraó. — He 11:24, 25.

Na realidade, Moisés achava ter chegado o tempo de ele poder salvar os hebreus. Mas eles não deram valor aos seus esforços, e Moisés se viu obrigado a fugir do Egito, quando Faraó soube da morte deste egípcio. — Êx 2:11-15; At 7:23-29.

Quarenta Anos em Midiã. Foi uma longa viagem através de território ermo até Midiã, onde Moisés procurou refúgio. Ali, junto a um poço, revelaram-se novamente a coragem e a prontidão de Moisés, de agir vigorosamente para ajudar os que sofrem injustiça. Quando pastores enxotaram as sete filhas de Jetro e seus rebanhos, Moisés livrou as moças e deu de beber aos seus rebanhos. Em resultado disso, foi convidado à casa de Jetro, onde passou a trabalhar para Jetro como pastor dos seus rebanhos, e, com o tempo, casou-se com uma das filhas de Jetro, Zípora, que lhe deu à luz dois filhos, Gersom e Eliézer. — Êx 2:16-22; 18:2-4.

Treinamento para serviço futuro. Embora fosse do propósito de Deus libertar os hebreus pela mão de Moisés, ainda não chegara o Seu tempo devido para isso; Moisés tampouco estava ainda qualificado para servir como encarregado do povo de Deus. Tinha de passar por mais 40 anos de treinamento. Precisava desenvolver ainda mais as qualidades de paciência, mansidão, humildade, longanimidade, brandura de temperamento, autodomínio, e aprender a esperar em Jeová, a fim de se tornar apto para guiar o povo de Deus. Ele tinha de ser treinado e preparado para suportar o desânimo, os desapontamentos e as dificuldades que iria encontrar, e a cuidar com benevolência, calma e força da multidão de problemas que surgiriam numa grande nação. Ele tinha muita erudição, e seu treinamento como membro da casa de Faraó sem dúvida deu-lhe dignidade, confiança e equilíbrio, e acentuou sua capacidade de organizar e de comandar. Mas a ocupação humilde de pastor em Midiã deu-lhe o treinamento necessário para desenvolver as excelentes qualidades que seriam ainda mais importantes para a tarefa que o aguardava. De modo similar, Davi passou por um treinamento rigoroso, mesmo depois de ter sido ungido por Samuel, e Jesus Cristo foi provado, testado e experimentado, a fim de ser aperfeiçoado como Rei e Sumo Sacerdote para sempre. "[Cristo] aprendeu a obediência pelas coisas que sofreu; e, depois de ter sido aperfeiçoado, tornou-se responsável pela salvação eterna de todos os que lhe obedecem." — He 5:8, 9.

Sua Designação Como Libertador. Perto do fim da sua estada de 40 anos em Midiã, Moisés estava pastoreando o rebanho de Jetro, perto do monte Horebe, quando ficou surpreso de ver um espinheiro em chamas, mas sem ser consumido. Ao se aproximar para inspecionar este grande fenômeno, o anjo de Jeová falou de dentro da chama, revelando que era então tempo para Deus libertar Israel da servidão e comissionando Moisés a ir em Seu nome memorável, Jeová. (Êx 3:1-15) Deus designou assim Moisés como Seu profeta e representante, e Moisés podia então corretamente ser chamado de ungido, ou messias, ou "Cristo", como em Hebreus 11:26. Jeová, por meio do anjo, forneceu as credenciais que Moisés podia apresentar aos anciãos de Israel. Estas eram na forma de três milagres como sinais. Aqui, pela primeira vez nas Escrituras, lemos que um humano foi habilitado a realizar milagres. — Êx 4:1-9.

Moisés não desqualificado por causa do seu acanhamento. No entanto, Moisés mostrou acanhamento, argumentando que não sabia falar fluentemente. Este era um Moisés mudado, bastante diferente daquele que, de iniciativa própria, se oferecera como libertador de Israel 40 anos antes. Ele continuou a insistir com Jeová, por fim pedindo que Jeová o dispensasse desta tarefa. Embora isso suscitasse a ira de Deus, este não rejeitou a Moisés, mas forneceu Arão, irmão de Moisés, como porta-voz. De modo que, assim como Moisés era representante de Deus, Moisés também se tornou "Deus" para Arão, que falava como representante dele. Na subsequente reunião com os anciãos de Israel e nos encontros com Faraó, parece que Deus dava a Moisés as instruções e ordens, e Moisés, por sua vez, as transmitia a Arão, de modo que Arão era quem realmente falava perante Faraó (sucessor do Faraó diante do qual Moisés fugira 40 anos antes). (Êx 2:23; 4:10-17) Mais tarde, Jeová chamou Arão de "profeta" de Moisés, querendo dizer que, assim como Moisés era o profeta de Deus, dirigido por Ele, assim Arão devia ser dirigido por Moisés. Também, informou-se a Moisés que ele estava sendo constituído em "Deus para Faraó", quer dizer, com poder e autoridade divinos sobre Faraó, de modo que não precisava então ter medo do rei do Egito. — Êx 7:1, 2.

Embora Deus o repreendesse, não cancelou a designação de Moisés por causa da relutância deste, em empreender a tremenda tarefa de libertador de Israel. Moisés não objetara por motivo da sua idade avançada, embora tivesse 80 anos. Quarenta anos mais tarde, à idade de 120 anos, Moisés ainda estava cheio de vigor e de vivacidade. (De 34:7) Durante os 40 anos que passou em Midiã, Moisés tivera muito tempo para meditar, e chegara a compreender o erro que cometera ao tentar libertar os hebreus por iniciativa própria. Dava-se então conta da sua própria inaptidão. E depois deste longo tempo, afastado de todos os assuntos públicos, sem dúvida foi um choque bastante grande receber a repentina oferta deste papel.

A Bíblia nos diz mais tarde: "O homem Moisés era em muito o mais manso de todos os homens na superfície do solo." (Núm 12:3) Como pessoa humilde, reconhecia que era apenas humano, com imperfeições e fraquezas. Não se impôs como líder invencível de Israel. Não expressou temor de Faraó, mas uma viva percepção das suas próprias limitações.

Perante o Faraó do Egito. Moisés e Arão eram agora as figuras-chaves numa 'batalha de deuses'. Faraó, nas pessoas dos sacerdotes-magos, cujos chefes evidentemente se chamavam Janes e Jambres (2Ti 3:8), convocou o poder de todos os deuses do Egito contra o poder de Jeová. O primeiro milagre que Arão realizou perante Faraó, sob a direção de Moisés, mostrou a supremacia de Jeová sobre os deuses do Egito, embora Faraó se tornasse ainda mais obstinado. (Êx 7:8-13) Mais tarde, quando ocorreu a terceira praga, até mesmo os sacerdotes se viram obrigados a admitir: "É o dedo de Deus!" E foram tão severamente afligidos pela praga dos furúnculos, que não conseguiram comparecer perante Faraó para se opor a Moisés durante esta praga. — Êx 8:16-19; 9:10-12.

Pragas causam abrandamento e endurecimento. Moisés e Arão tornaram-se os anunciadores de cada uma das Dez Pragas. As pragas ocorreram conforme anunciadas, comprovando a comissão de Moisés como representante de Jeová. O nome de Jeová foi declarado e muito comentado no Egito, realizando tanto um abrandamento como um endurecimento para com este nome — abrandando os israelitas e alguns dos egípcios; endurecendo Faraó, e seus conselheiros e apoiadores. (Êx 9:16; 11:10; 12:29-39) Em vez de os egípcios crerem que haviam ofendido os seus deuses, eles sabiam que era Jeová quem julgava os deuses deles. Depois de a nona praga ter sido executada, Moisés também já se tornara "muito grande na terra do Egito aos olhos dos servos de Faraó e aos olhos do povo". — Êx 11:3.

Houve também uma notável mudança nos homens de Israel. Primeiro haviam aceitado as credenciais de Moisés, mas, depois de sofrerem condições de trabalho mais duras, às ordens de Faraó, queixaram-se de Moisés, a ponto de que este, desanimado, apelou para Jeová. (Êx 4:29-31; 5:19-23) Naquela ocasião, o Altíssimo fortaleceu-o por lhe revelar que Ele ia agora cumprir aquilo que Abraão, Isaque e Jacó haviam aguardado, a saber, a plena revelação do significado do Seu nome, Jeová, por libertar Israel e estabelecê-lo como grande nação na Terra da Promessa. (Êx 6:1-8) Mesmo assim, os homens de Israel não deram ouvidos a Moisés. Mas agora, depois da nona praga, deram-lhe sólido apoio, cooperando de modo que, depois da décima praga, ele pôde organizá-los e guiá-los para saírem de modo ordeiro, "em formação de batalha". — Êx 13:18.

Coragem e fé necessárias para enfrentar Faraó. Foi só na força de Jeová e devido à operação do Seu espírito sobre eles que Moisés e Arão se mostraram à altura da tarefa que se lhes dera. Imagine a corte de Faraó, o rei da indisputada potência mundial daquele tempo. Havia ali um esplendor sem paralelo, achando-se o altivo Faraó, supostamente ele mesmo um deus, cercado por seus conselheiros, comandantes militares, guardas e escravos. Ademais, havia ali os líderes religiosos, os sacerdotes-magos, os principais opositores de Moisés. Estes homens, além do próprio Faraó, eram os mais poderosos no domínio. Todo este aparato impressionante estava alinhado para apoiar Faraó em endosso dos deuses do Egito. E Moisés e Arão compareceram perante Faraó, não uma vez, mas muitas vezes, o coração de Faraó endurecendo-se cada vez mais, porque ele estava decidido a manter seus valiosos escravos hebreus sob a sua dominação. Na realidade, Moisés e Arão, depois de anunciarem a oitava praga, foram expulsos de diante de Faraó, e depois da nona praga, ordenou-se-lhes que não tentassem ver novamente a face de Faraó, sob pena de morte. — Êx 10:11, 28.

Com isso em mente, torna-se bem compreensível que Moisés apelasse diversas vezes a Jeová, pedindo revigoramento e força. Mas, é preciso notar que ele nunca deixou de cumprir ao pé da letra aquilo que Jeová lhe mandou fazer. Nunca tirou uma só palavra do que Jeová lhe mandou dizer a Faraó, e a liderança de Moisés era tal que, por ocasião da décima praga, "todos os filhos de Israel fizeram assim como Jeová ordenara a Moisés e a Arão. Fizeram exatamente assim". (Êx 12:50) Moisés é apresentado aos cristãos como exemplo de notável fé. O apóstolo Paulo diz a respeito dele: "Pela fé abandonou o Egito, mas sem temer a ira do rei, porque permanecia constante como que vendo Aquele que é invisível." — He 11:27.

Antes da décima praga, Moisés teve o privilégio de instituir a Páscoa. (Êx 12:1-16) Junto ao Mar Vermelho, Moisés teve de enfrentar mais queixas do povo, que parecia encurralado e prestes a ser massacrado. Mas ele expressou a fé dum verdadeiro líder sob a poderosa mão de Jeová, assegurando a Israel que Jeová destruiria o perseguidor exército egípcio. Nesta crise, ele aparentemente clamou a Jeová Deus, porque Este lhe disse: "Por que persistes em clamar a mim?" Deus ordenou então que Moisés erguesse seu bastão e estendesse a mão sobre o mar, partindo-o. (Êx 14:10-18) Séculos mais tarde, o apóstolo Paulo disse a respeito da subsequente travessia do Mar Vermelho por Israel: "Os nossos antepassados estiveram todos debaixo da nuvem e todos passaram pelo mar, e todos foram batizados em Moisés, por meio da nuvem e do mar." (1Co 10:1, 2) Foi Jeová quem fez o batismo. A fim de serem livrados dos seus perseguidores assassinos, os antepassados judeus tiveram de unir-se a Moisés qual cabeça e seguir a liderança dele, ao passo que os guiou através do mar. Na realidade, toda a congregação de Israel foi assim imersa no libertador e líder Moisés.

Mediador do Pacto da Lei. No terceiro mês depois do Êxodo do Egito, Jeová demonstrou perante todo o Israel a grandeza da autoridade e responsabilidade que ele havia colocado sobre seu servo Moisés, bem como a intimidade da posição de Moisés com Deus. Diante de todo o Israel, reunido ao sopé do monte Horebe, Jeová chamou Moisés ao monte e, por meio de um anjo, falou com ele. Em certa ocasião, Moisés teve o privilégio de ter o que provavelmente fora a mais assombrosa experiência que qualquer homem já tivera antes da vinda de Jesus Cristo. Lá no alto do monte, sozinho, Jeová lhe deu uma visão da Sua glória, colocando a "palma" da Sua mão sobre Moisés, como anteparo, permitindo que Moisés o visse "pelas costas", evidentemente o fulgor posterior desta manifestação divina de glória. Daí, como que falou pessoalmente com Moisés. — Êx 19:1-3; 33:18-23; 34:4-6.

Jeová disse a Moisés: "Não podes ver a minha face, porque homem algum pode ver-me e continuar vivo." (Êx 33:20) E, séculos mais tarde, o apóstolo João escreveu: "Nenhum homem jamais viu a Deus." (Jo 1:18) O mártir cristão Estêvão disse aos judeus: "Este [Moisés] é aquele que veio a estar entre a congregação no ermo, com o anjo que falou com ele no Monte Sinai." (At 7:38) De modo que Jeová foi representado no monte por um anjo. Não obstante, a glória de Jeová manifestada pelo representante angélico de Jeová era tal, que a pele da face de Moisés emitia raios, de modo que os filhos de Israel não podiam suportar olhar para ele. — Êx 34:29-35; 2Co 3:7, 13.

Deus constituiu Moisés em mediador do pacto da Lei com Israel, uma posição íntima tal como nenhum homem ocupara perante Deus, exceto Jesus Cristo, o Mediador do novo pacto. Moisés aspergiu o livro do pacto com o sangue dos sacrifícios de animais, representando a Jeová como uma "parte", e o povo (sem dúvida os anciãos representativos) como a outra "parte". Leu o livro do pacto para o povo, que respondeu: "Tudo o que Jeová falou estamos dispostos a fazer e a ser obedientes." (Êx 24:3-8; He 9:19) No seu cargo de mediador, Moisés teve o privilégio de supervisionar a construção do tabernáculo e a fabricação dos seus utensílios, cujo modelo lhe fora dado por Deus, e de empossar o sacerdócio, ungindo o tabernáculo e Arão, o sumo sacerdote, com o óleo de composição especial. Daí supervisionou os primeiros serviços oficiais do recém-consagrado sacerdócio. — Êx caps. 25-29; Le caps. 8, 9.

Mediador apropriado. Moisés subiu várias vezes ao monte Horebe, em duas ocasiões permanecendo ali por 40 dias e noites. (Êx 24:18; 34:28) Depois da primeira destas ocasiões, retornou com duas tábuas de pedra, "inscritas pelo dedo de Deus", contendo "as Dez Palavras", ou os Dez Mandamentos, as leis básicas do pacto da Lei. (Êx 31:18; De 4:13) Nesta primeira ocasião, Moisés mostrou-se aptamente qualificado como mediador entre Jeová e Israel, e líder desta grande nação de talvez uns três milhões de pessoas, ou mais. Enquanto Moisés estava no monte, Jeová informou-o de que o povo se voltara para a idolatria, e Jeová disse: "Portanto, deixa-me agora, para que a minha ira se acenda contra eles e eu os extermine, e faça eu de ti uma grande nação." A resposta imediata de Moisés revelou que a santificação do nome de Jeová era para ele de importância primária — que ele era totalmente altruísta e não desejava ter fama. Não pediu nada para si mesmo, mas, antes, demonstrou preocupação com o nome de Jeová, que Ele recentemente enaltecera pelo milagre no Mar Vermelho, e mostrou consideração pela promessa de Deus feita a Abraão, Isaque e Jacó. Jeová, aprovando os rogos de Moisés, poupou o povo. Vê-se nisto que Jeová achava que Moisés desempenhava satisfatoriamente seu papel de mediador e que Ele respeitava o arranjo pelo qual havia designado Moisés para esse cargo. Assim, Jeová "começou a deplorar o mal que falou que ia fazer ao seu povo" — isto é, por causa da mudança das circunstâncias, ele mudou de atitude quanto a trazer o mal sobre eles. — Êx 32:7-14.

O zelo de Moisés pela adoração verdadeira, ao servir a favor de Deus, foi demonstrado quando desceu do monte. Vendo os festejadores idólatras, lançou as tábuas para o chão, quebrando-as, e convocou os que estavam do lado de Jeová. Os da tribo de Levi juntaram-se a Moisés, e ele lhes ordenou que matassem os que se empenhavam na adoração falsa. Isto resultou na matança de uns 3.000 homens. Daí voltou a Jeová, admitindo o grande pecado do povo, e rogando: "Mas agora, se perdoares o seu pecado, . . . e se não, por favor, extingue-me do teu livro que tens escrito." Deus não se desagradou dos rogos mediadores de Moisés, mas respondeu: "Extinguirei do meu livro aquele que tiver pecado contra mim." — Êx 32:19-33.

Muitas foram as ocasiões em que Moisés representou o lado de Jeová no pacto, demandando adoração pura, verdadeira, e executando julgamento nos desobedientes. Mais de uma vez ele se interpôs também entre a nação, ou pessoas da mesma, e sua destruição às mãos de Jeová. — Núm 12; 14:11-21; 16:20-22, 43-50; 21:7; De 9:18-20.

Altruísmo, Humildade, Mansidão. Os principais interesses de Moisés residiam no nome de Jeová e no Seu povo. Por conseguinte, não procurava glória e posição. Quando o espírito de Jeová veio sobre certos homens no acampamento e eles passaram a proceder como profetas, Josué, ajudante de Moisés, queria reprimi-los, evidentemente porque achava que eles detraíam da glória e da autoridade de Moisés. No entanto, Moisés respondeu: "Tens ciúmes em meu lugar? Não; quisera eu que todo o povo de Jeová fosse profeta, porque Jeová poria seu espírito sobre eles!" — Núm 11:24-29.

Embora Moisés fosse o líder da grande nação de Israel, designado por Jeová, ele estava disposto a aceitar conselho de outros, especialmente quando era de valor para a nação. Pouco depois de os israelitas partirem do Egito, Jetro visitou Moisés, trazendo consigo a esposa e os filhos de Moisés. Jetro notou quão arduamente Moisés trabalhava, esgotando-se ao cuidar dos problemas de todos que vinham a ele. Ele sugeriu sabiamente a Moisés um arranjo ordeiro, pelo qual este delegaria certos graus de responsabilidade a outros, para aliviar sua carga. Moisés escutou o conselho de Jetro, acatou-o e organizou o povo em grupos de mil, de cem, de cinquenta e de dez, com um chefe qual juiz para cada grupo. Apenas os casos difíceis eram então trazidos a Moisés. É também digno de nota que Moisés, ao explicar a Jetro o que estava fazendo, disse: "Caso [entre o povo] surja uma causa, ela tem de ser apresentada a mim e eu tenho de julgar entre um litigante e outro, e tenho de tornar conhecidas as decisões do verdadeiro Deus e suas leis." Com isso, Moisés indicava que reconhecia seu dever de não julgar segundo as suas próprias ideias, mas segundo as decisões de Jeová, e que, além disso, ele tinha a responsabilidade de ajudar o povo a conhecer e a acatar as leis de Deus. — Êx 18:5-7, 13-27.

Moisés repetidas vezes apontava para Jeová, não para si mesmo, como o verdadeiro Líder. Quando o povo começou a se queixar da comida, Moisés lhe disse: "Vossos resmungos não são contra nós [Moisés e Arão], mas contra Jeová." (Êx 16:3, 6-8) Possivelmente por Miriã achar que o destaque que ela tinha poderia ser eclipsado pela presença da esposa de Moisés, ela e Arão, ciumenta e desrespeitosamente, começaram a falar contra Moisés e a autoridade dele. O registro mostra que sua conversa era tanto mais desprezível, porque é neste ponto que se diz: "O homem Moisés era em muito o mais manso de todos os homens na superfície do solo." Moisés, pelo visto, hesitava em fazer valer sua autoridade, mansamente suportando este abuso. Jeová, porém, ficou irado diante deste desafio, que na realidade era uma afronta ao próprio Jeová. Ele cuidou desta questão e castigou severamente a Miriã. O amor de Moisés por sua irmã induziu-o a interceder por ela, clamando: "Ó Deus, por favor! Sara-a, por favor!" — Núm 12:1-15.

Obediência, Esperar em Jeová. Moisés esperava em Jeová. Embora fosse chamado de legislador de Israel, reconhecia que as leis não se originavam dele. Não era arbitrário, decidindo as questões à base do seu próprio conhecimento. Nas causas jurídicas para as quais não havia precedente, ou em que não conseguia discernir exatamente como aplicar a lei, ele apresentava o assunto a Jeová, para obter uma decisão judicial. (Le 24:10-16, 23; Núm 15:32-36; 27:1-11) Era cuidadoso em seguir instruções. Na obra complexa da construção do tabernáculo, e na fabricação dos seus utensílios e das vestimentas dos sacerdotes, Moisés exerceu uma criteriosa supervisão. O registro reza: "E Moisés passou a fazer segundo tudo o que Jeová lhe mandara. Fez exatamente assim." (Êx 40:16; compare isso com Núm 17:11.) Repetidas vezes nos deparamos com outras declarações no sentido de que as coisas eram feitas "assim como Jeová mandara a Moisés". (Êx 39:1, 5, 21, 29, 31, 42; 40:19, 21, 23, 25, 27, 29) É bom para os cristãos que ele agiu assim, porque o apóstolo Paulo salienta que estas coisas constituíam uma "sombra" e uma ilustração de coisas celestiais. — He 8:5.

Moisés Tropeça. Foi enquanto Israel acampava em Cades, provavelmente no 40.º ano das suas peregrinações, que Moisés cometeu um grave erro. A consideração deste incidente magnifica aos nossos olhos que Moisés não somente se encontrava numa posição grandemente privilegiada, mas também tinha uma responsabilidade muito pesada perante Jeová, como líder e mediador da nação. Por causa duma escassez de água, o povo começou a al-tercar amargamente com Moisés, culpando-o de tê-los conduzido para fora do Egito a um ermo árido. Moisés aguentara muito, suportando a perversidade e a insubordinação dos israelitas, compartilhando as dificuldades deles, e intercedendo por eles quando pecavam, mas então, momentaneamente, perdeu a sua mansidão e seu temperamento brando. Exasperados e amargurados em espírito, Moisés e Arão ficaram diante do povo, assim como Jeová ordenara. Mas, em vez de chamar atenção para Jeová como o Provisor, eles falaram duramente ao povo e chamaram atenção para si mesmos, Moisés dizendo: "Ouvi, agora, rebeldes! É deste rochedo que faremos sair água para vós?" Daí, Moisés golpeou o rochedo, e Jeová fez sair água dele, suficiente para a multidão e seus rebanhos. Mas Deus desagradou-se da conduta de Moisés e de Arão. Eles haviam falhado na sua responsabilidade primária, a saber, de magnificar o nome de Jeová. Tinham "faltado ao dever" para com Jeová, e Moisés 'falara precipitadamente com os seus lábios'. Mais tarde, Jeová decretou: "Visto que não mostrastes fé em mim para me santificar diante dos olhos dos filhos de Israel, por isso não levareis esta congregação à terra que lhes hei de dar." — Núm 20:1-13; De 32:50-52; Sal 106:32, 33.

Escritor. Moisés foi o escritor do Pentateuco, os primeiros cinco livros da Bíblia, a saber: Gênesis, Êxodo, Levítico, Números e Deuteronômio. Ser ele o escritor tem sido reconhecido pelos judeus durante toda a história deles, sendo esta seção da Bíblia conhecida a eles como a Tora, ou Lei. Jesus e os escritores cristãos frequentemente falam de Moisés como dando a Lei. Em geral, atribui-se a ele a escrita do livro de Jó, também do Salmo 90, e, possivelmente, do 91. — Mt 8:4; Lu 16:29; 24:27; Ro 10:5; 1Co 9:9; 2Co 3:15; He 10:28.

Sua Morte e Seu Sepultamento. Arão, irmão de Moisés, morreu aos 123 anos de idade, enquanto Israel estava acampado junto ao monte Hor, na fronteira de Edom, no quinto mês do 40.º ano da peregrinação. Moisés levou Arão ao monte, despiu-o das vestes sacerdotais, e vestiu com elas Eleazar, o mais velho filho vivo e sucessor de Arão. (Núm 20:22-29; 33:37-39) Cerca de seis meses mais tarde, Israel chegou às planícies de Moabe. Ali, Moisés, numa série de discursos, explicou a Lei à nação reunida, ampliando-a com os ajustes que seriam necessários quando Israel mudasse da vida nômade em acampamentos para se fixar na sua própria terra. No 12.º mês do 40.º ano (na primavera setentrional de 1473 AEC), ele anunciou ao povo que, segundo a designação de Jeová, Josué o sucederia como líder. Josué foi então comissionado e exortado a ser corajoso. (De 31:1-3, 23) Por fim, depois de recitar um cântico e abençoar o povo, Moisés subiu ao monte Nebo, segundo a ordem de Jeová, para ver a Terra da Promessa deste ponto elevado no monte e então morrer. — De 32:48-51; 34:1-6.

Moisés tinha 120 anos de idade quando morreu. Atestando seu vigor natural, a Bíblia comenta: "Seu olho não se havia turvado e seu vigor vital não lhe havia fugido." Ele foi sepultado por Jeová num lugar nunca descoberto. (De 34:5-7) Isto, provavelmente, foi para impedir que os israelitas fossem enlaçados pela adoração falsa por fazerem da sepultura dele um santuário. O Diabo, evidentemente, desejava usar o corpo de Moisés para uma finalidade assim, porque Judas, discípulo cristão e meio-irmão de Jesus Cristo, escreve: "Quando Miguel, o arcanjo, teve uma controvérsia com o Diabo e disputava acerca do corpo de Moisés, não se atreveu a lançar um julgamento contra ele em termos ultrajantes, mas disse: 'Jeová te censure.'" (Ju 9) Antes de passar para Canaã, sob a liderança de Josué, Israel guardou 30 dias de luto por Moisés. — De 34:8.

Profeta Que Jeová Conhecia "Face a Face". Quando Miriã e Arão questionaram a autoridade de Moisés, Jeová disse-lhes: "Se houvesse um profeta vosso para Jeová, seria numa visão que eu me daria a conhecer a ele. Falar-lhe-ia num sonho. Não assim com meu servo Moisés! Ele está sendo incumbido de toda a minha casa. Boca a boca falo com ele, mostrando-lhe assim, e não por enigmas; e a aparência de Jeová é o que ele contempla. Por que, pois, não temestes falar contra meu servo, contra Moisés?" (Núm 12:6-8) A conclusão do livro de Deuteronômio descreve a posição privilegiada de Moisés perante Jeová: "Mas, nunca mais se levantou em Israel um profeta semelhante a Moisés, a quem Jeová conhecia face a face, com respeito a todos os sinais e milagres que Jeová o mandara fazer na terra do Egito, a Faraó e a todos os seus servos, e a toda a sua terra, e concernente a toda mão forte e toda coisa mui espantosa que Moisés fizera perante os olhos de todo o Israel." — De 34:10-12.

Segundo as palavras de Jeová, Moisés, embora nunca visse literalmente a própria pessoa de Jeová, ele, como acima mencionado, teve uma relação mais direta, constante e íntima com Jeová do que qualquer outro profeta anterior a Jesus Cristo. A declaração de Jeová: "Boca a boca falo com ele", revela que Moisés tinha audiência pessoal com Deus (por meio de anjos, os quais têm acesso à própria presença de Deus; Mt 18:10). (Núm 12:8) Como mediador de Israel, usufruía virtualmente o arranjo duma contínua comunicação bilateral. A qualquer momento podia apresentar problemas de importância nacional e receber a resposta de Deus. Jeová incumbiu Moisés 'de toda a Sua casa', usando

Moisés como seu representante íntimo na organização da nação. (Núm 12:7; He 3:2, 5) Os profetas posteriores simplesmente continuavam a edificar sobre o alicerce lançado por meio de Moisés.

O modo em que Jeová lidava com Moisés era tão impressionante, que era como se Moisés realmente tivesse visto a Deus com os seus próprios olhos, em vez de apenas ter uma visão mental ou um sonho, no qual ouvisse Deus falar, a maneira usual em que Deus se comunicava com os seus profetas. Os tratos de Jeová com Moisés eram tão reais, que Moisés reagia como se tivesse visto "Aquele que é invisível". (He 11:27) Evidentemente, a impressão que Moisés teve era similar ao efeito da visão da transfiguração em Pedro, séculos mais tarde. A visão fora tão real para Pedro, que ele começou a participar nela falando, mas não se dando conta do que dizia. (Lu 9:28-36) E também o apóstolo Paulo teve uma visão tão real, que mais tarde ele disse a respeito de si mesmo: "Quer no corpo, quer à parte do corpo, não sei, Deus sabe." — 2Co 12:1-4.

Sem dúvida, o extraordinário sucesso de Josué em estabelecer Israel na Terra da Promessa, até certo ponto, foi em razão das excelentes qualidades inculcadas nele pelo treinamento e pelo exemplo de Moisés. Josué foi ministro de Moisés "desde a sua idade viril". (Núm 11:28) Pelo visto, era comandante militar sob Moisés (Êx 17:9, 10) e era chegado a Moisés como seu ajudante, em muitos acontecimentos. — Êx 24:13; 33:11; De 3:21.

Prefigurou Jesus Cristo. Jesus Cristo tornou claro que Moisés escrevera sobre ele, pois, em certa ocasião, ele disse aos seus oponentes: "Se acreditásseis em Moisés, teríeis acreditado em mim, porque este escreveu a meu respeito." (Jo 5:46) "Principiando por Moisés e por todos os Profetas", quando estava em companhia dos seus discípulos, Jesus "interpretou-lhes em todas as Escrituras as coisas referentes a si mesmo". — Lu 24:27, 44; veja também Jo 1:45.

Entre as coisas que Moisés escreveu a respeito de Cristo Jesus estão as palavras de Jeová: "Suscitar-lhes-ei do meio dos seus irmãos um profeta semelhante a ti; e deveras porei as minhas palavras na sua boca e ele certamente lhes falará tudo o que eu lhe mandar." (De 18:18, 19) O apóstolo Pedro, citando esta profecia, não deixou dúvida de que se referia a Jesus Cristo. — At 3:19-23.

De muitas maneiras, havia uma correspondência pictórica entre estes dois grandes profetas, Moisés e Jesus Cristo. Na infância, ambos escaparam da matança em massa ordenada pelos respectivos governantes do seu tempo. (Êx 1:22; 2:1-10; Mt 2:13-18) Moisés foi chamado para fora do Egito junto com o "primogênito" de Jeová, a nação de Israel, sendo o líder desta nação. Jesus foi chamado do Egito como primogênito de Deus. (Êx 4:22, 23; Os 11:1; Mt 2:15, 19-21) Ambos jejuaram 40 dias em lugares ermos. (Êx 34:28; Mt 4:1, 2) Ambos vieram em nome de Jeová, sendo que o nome do próprio Jesus significa "Jeová É Salvação". (Êx 3:13-16; Mt 1:21; Jo 5:43) Jesus, igual a Moisés, 'declarou o nome de Jeová'. (De 32:3; Jo 17:6, 26) Ambos demonstraram extraordinária mansidão e humildade. (Núm 12:3; Mt 11:28-30) Ambos possuíam as mais convincentes credenciais para mostrar que foram enviados por Deus — espantosos milagres de muitos tipos, indo Jesus Cristo mais longe do que Moisés por ressuscitar pessoas mortas. — Êx 14:21-31; Sal 78:12-54; Mt 11:5; Mr 5:38-43; Lu 7:11-15, 18-23.

Moisés foi o mediador do pacto da Lei entre Deus e a nação de Israel. Jesus foi o Mediador do novo pacto entre Deus e a "nação santa", o espiritual "Israel de Deus". (1Pe 2:9; Gál 6:16; Êx 19:3-9; Lu 22:20; He 8:6; 9:15) Ambos serviram como juízes, legisladores e líderes. (Êx 18:13; 32:34; Da 9:25; Mal 4:4; Mt 23:10; Jo 5:22, 23; 13:34; 15:10) Moisés foi encarregado da administração da 'casa de Deus', isto é, da nação, ou congregação, de Israel, e mostrou-se fiel nisso. Jesus mostrou sua fidelidade sobre a casa de Deus, que ele, como Filho de Deus, construíra, a saber, a nação, ou congregação, do Israel espiritual. (Núm 12:7; He 3:2-6) E, mesmo na morte, havia um paralelo: Deus deu fim ao corpo tanto de Moisés como de Jesus. — De 34:5, 6; At 2:31; Ju 9.

Perto do fim dos 40 anos de peregrinação de Moisés no ermo, enquanto pastoreava o rebanho de seu sogro, o anjo de Deus fez para ele uma manifestação milagrosa na chama dum espinheiro, ao sopé do monte Horebe. Jeová comissionou-o ali para libertar Seu povo do Egito. (Êx 3:1-15) Assim, Deus designou Moisés Seu profeta e representante, e Moisés podia então corretamente ser chamado de ungido, ou "Cristo". Para poder alcançar esta posição privilegiada, Moisés teve de renunciar aos "tesouros do Egito" e permitir "ser maltratado com o povo de Deus", sofrendo assim vitupério. No entanto, para Moisés, tal "vitupério do Cristo" era riqueza maior do que toda a opulência do Egito. — He 11:24-26.

Em Jesus Cristo encontramos um paralelo disso. Segundo o anúncio do anjo por ocasião do seu nascimento em Belém, ele se havia de tornar "um Salvador, que é Cristo, o Senhor". Tornou-se Cristo, ou Ungido, depois de o profeta João o ter batizado no rio Jordão. (Lu 2:10, 11; 3:21-23; 4:16-21) Após isso, ele admitiu que era "o Cristo", ou Messias. (Mt 16:16, 17; Mr 14:61, 62; Jo 4:25, 26) Também Jesus Cristo manteve os olhos fixos no prêmio e desprezou a vergonha que os homens lançavam sobre ele, assim como Moisés fizera. (Fil 2:8, 9; He 12:2) É neste Moisés Maior que a congregação cristã é batizada — em Jesus Cristo, o predito Profeta, Libertador e Líder. — 1Co 10:1, 2.

MOLADÁ [duma raiz que significa "dar à luz; tornar-se pai; parir"]. Uma das cidades, no S de Judá, aquinhoadas a Simeão. Moladá permaneceu nas mãos desta tribo pelo menos até o reinado de Davi. (Jos 15:21, 26; 19:1, 2; 1Cr 4:24, 28, 31) Após o exílio, alguns de Judá repovoaram este lugar. — Ne 11:25, 26.

Não se identificou com certeza o lugar de Moladá.

MOLIDE [duma raiz que significa "dar à luz; tornar-se pai; parir"]. Homem de Judá e descendente de Esrom através de Jerameel. Molide era filho de Abisur com sua esposa Abiail. — 1Cr 2:4, 5, 9, 25-29.

MOLOQUE [duma raiz que significa "reinar" ou "rei", mas com as vogais de bó·sheth, "vergonha", para indicar repugnância]. Deidade especialmente associada com os amonitas (1Rs 11:5, 7, 33; At 7:43; compare isso com Am 5:26); possivelmente o mesmo que Milcom. (1Rs 11:5, 33) Em Jeremias 32:35, Moloque é mencionado em paralelo com Baal, o que sugere, se não uma identificação, pelo menos alguma relação entre os dois. Diversas autoridades consideram "Moloque" mais como título, em vez de como nome duma deidade específica, e, portanto, apresentou-se a ideia de que a designação "Moloque" talvez tenha sido aplicada a mais de um deus.

Concorda-se em geral que o Malcão mencionado em 2 Samuel 12:30 e em 1 Crônicas 20:2 seja a imagem-ídolo do deus amonita Milcom, ou Moloque, embora o termo hebraico possa ser vertido por "seu rei". (Veja ALA; IBB.) Anteriormente, no relato bíblico, o rei amonita é chamado pelo seu nome Hanum (2Sa 10:1-4); portanto, é razoável concluir que apareceria o nome Hanum em vez de Malcão no registro bíblico, se a referência fosse ao rei, em vez de ao ídolo. Também, acha-se improvável que um rei usasse uma coroa que pesava cerca de 34 kg. Pelo mesmo motivo, sugeriu-se que Davi colocou a coroa de Malcão na cabeça apenas temporariamente, talvez para indicar sua vitória sobre o deus falso. Segundo a versão do Targum, adotada por diversos tradutores, a coroa tinha apenas uma joia preciosa. Isto tem dado margem à ideia de que era antes a joia preciosa, em vez de a própria coroa, que veio a estar na cabeça de Davi.

Sacrifícios de Crianças a Moloque. A lei de Deus para Israel prescrevia a pena de morte para todo aquele, mesmo o residente forasteiro, que entregasse seu descendente a Moloque. (Le 20:2-5) Não obstante, israelitas apóstatas, tanto no reino de Judá como no reino das dez tribos, fizeram seus filhos passar pelo fogo. — 2Rs 17:17, 18; Ez 23:4, 36-39.

O 'passar pelo fogo' para Moloque tem sido considerado por alguns como significando um ritual de purificação, por meio do qual as crianças eram devotadas ou dedicadas a Moloque; outros entendem que se tratava do sacrifício real. Não pode haver dúvida de que os cananeus e os israelitas apóstatas realmente sacrificavam seus filhos. (De 12:31; Sal 106:37, 38) O Rei Acaz, de Judá, "passou a queimar seus filhos ["seu filho", Sy] no fogo". (2Cr 28:3) A passagem paralela em 2 Reis 16:3 reza: "Fez até mesmo seu próprio filho passar pelo fogo." Isto indica que "passar pelo fogo" pelo menos algumas vezes é sinônimo de sacrifício. Todavia, é provável que a adoração de Moloque não era sempre e em todo lugar igual. Por exemplo, o Rei Salomão, sob a influência das suas esposas estrangeiras, construiu altos para Moloque e para outras deidades, mas só no tempo de Acaz se faz menção de sacrifícios de crianças. (1Rs 11:7, 8) Sem dúvida, se esta prática abominável tivesse existido anteriormente, teria sido denunciada junto com as outras formas de idolatria existentes nos reinados dos diversos reis. Por este motivo, alguns comentadores são a favor do conceito de que a expressão "passar pelo fogo" se aplicava originalmente a um rito de purificação, e posteriormente passou a significar o próprio sacrifício.

"A passagem" para Moloque, mencionada na nota de rodapé sobre Levítico 18:21, evidentemente refere-se a devotar ou dedicar os filhos a este deus falso. Este texto tem sido traduzido de forma diversa: "Da tua descendência não darás nenhum para dedicar-se a Moloque." (ALA) "Da tua semente não darás para a fazer passar pelo fogo perante Moloque." (Al) "Não entregarás os teus filhos para consagrá-los a Moloc." (BJ) "Não deves permitir que alguém da tua descendência seja devotado a Moloque." — NM.

Acaz e Manassés são os únicos reis de Judá mencionados como fazendo seus filhos passar pelo fogo. Todavia, em vista do ímpeto dado por estes dois reis ao sacrifício de crianças, esta prática parece ter ficado arraigada entre os israelitas em geral. (2Rs 16:3; 21:6; Je 7:31; 19:4, 5; 32:35; Ez 20:26) As crianças, pelo menos ocasionalmente, eram primeiro mortas, em vez de serem queimadas vivas. — Ez 16:20, 21.

O Rei Josias profanou Tofete, principal centro da adoração de Moloque em Judá, a fim de impedir que as pessoas fizessem seus filhos passar pelo fogo. (2Rs 23:10-13) Mas isso não erradicou esta prática para sempre. Ezequiel, que começou a servir como profeta 16 anos depois da morte de Josias, menciona a ocorrência dela nos seus dias. — Ez 20:31.

Apresentou-se a ideia de que o Moloque a quem se sacrificavam as crianças tinha a forma de homem, mas cabeça de touro. Diz-se que esta imagem era aquecida até ficar rubro, e as crianças eram lançadas nos seus braços estendidos, caindo assim na fornalha ardente embaixo. Este conceito baseia-se na maior parte na descrição do Cronos ou Moloque cartaginês, fornecida pelo historiador grego Diodoro da Sicília, do primeiro século AEC. — Diodorus of Sicily (Diodoro da Sicília), XX, 14, 4-6.

Quanto à prática da astrologia relacionada com a adoração de Moloque, veja ASTRÓLOGOS.

MONSTRO MARINHO. Esta expressão geralmente traduz a palavra hebraica tan·nín (tan·ním, "monstro marinho", em Ez 29:3; 32:2). Este termo é traduzido por "cobra grande" quando não é mencionado em relação com o mar ou a água (Je 51:34) ou quando o contexto indica definitivamente uma referência a cobras. (Êx 7:9, 12; compare isso com Êx 4:2, 3.) Sem dúvida, tan·nín inclui uma variedade de grandes animais marinhos (Gên 1:21; Sal 148:7), mas este termo usualmente é empregado em sentido figurado. Parece haver alusão à destruição de Faraó e suas hostes na frase: "Tu [Jeová] . . . quebraste as cabeças dos monstros marinhos nas águas." (Sal 74:13) Em Isaías 51:9, o "monstro marinho" aparece em paralelo com Raabe (o Egito; compare isso com Is 30:7), e, portanto, pode denotar o Egito, ou talvez a referência seja ao Faraó, como em Ezequiel 29:3 e 32:2. O fiel Jó perguntou se ele mesmo era "um monstro marinho", que se tinha de pôr uma guarda sobre ele. — Jó 7:12; veja LEVIATÃ.

MONTE, MONTANHA. Massa terrestre que se eleva notavelmente acima dos morros ou colinas na respectiva região. A diferença entre morros e montanhas é relativa. Numa região de morros baixos, um monte talvez seja apenas umas dezenas de metros mais alto do que as redondezas, ao passo que em regiões montanhosas, os picos menores talvez também sejam chamados de morros, embora sejam muito mais altos do que um monte isolado, tal como o monte Tabor, de 562 m. — Jz 4:6.

A palavra hebraica har pode referir-se a montes específicos, inclusive o monte Sinai, o monte Gerizim, o monte Ebal, o monte Gilboa e o monte Sião. (Êx 19:11; De 11:29; 1Sa 31:8; Is 4:5) Pode também referir-se a uma cordilheira tal como a do Ararate (Gên 8:4) e a inteiras regiões elevadas, como as regiões montanhosas de Efraim (Jos 17:15), de Naftali (Jos 20:7) e de Gileade (De 3:12), bem como às regiões antigamente ocupadas pelos amorreus e pelos amonitas. (De 1:7, 20; 2:37) A palavra aramaica tur (Da 2:35) designa um monte, assim como a palavra grega ó·ros. — Veja os artigos sobre os respectivos montes por nome.

Montanhas da Palestina. A Palestina, como um todo, é uma terra bastante montanhosa, embora tenha poucos cumes impressionantes. Ao O do rio Jordão, encontram-se as montanhas de Judá no sul, inclusive o monte Moriá, o monte Sião e o monte das Oliveiras. (2Cr 3:1; Sal 48:2; Mr 13:3) O setor central desta cordilheira estende-se para o NE, até o monte Gilboa (1Sa 31:1), e abrange as montanhas de Efraim e de Samaria, com os históricos picos do Gerizim e do Ebal. (Jos 19:50; De 11:29) Ao NNO, a serra do Carmelo se projeta para dentro do mar Mediterrâneo. — Je 46:18.

O vale de Jezreel (Esdrelom) divide a cadeia primária de montes duma secundária, mais ao N. Esta última inclui o monte Tabor (Jz 4:6) e a cordilheira costeira dos montes do Líbano. — Jz 3:3; 1Rs 5:6.

Ao L do vale de abatimento tectônico encontram-se os planaltos de Edom e de Moabe (2Cr 20:10) e os elevados penhascos ao longo da margem oriental do Mar Morto, inclusive o monte Nebo, do alto do qual Moisés viu a Terra da Promessa, e também o planalto ao L do vale do Jordão, que tem em média cerca de 600 m de altitude. (De 3:10; 34:1-3; Jos 13:8, 9; 20:8) Esta região montanhosa se estende para o N ao encontro da cordilheira do Antilíbano, com seu majestoso monte Hermom, o pico mais alto de toda a região palestina. — Cân 4:8.

O Valor das Montanhas. As montanhas influenciam o clima e a precipitação pluvial; coletam a água e a canalizam para os rios ou a preservam em reservatórios subterrâneos que alimentam mananciais nos vales abaixo. (De 8:7) Suas encostas sustentam árvores (2Cr 2:16, 18), vinhedos e diversas culturas. (Sal 72:16; Pr 27:25; Is 7:23-25; Je 31:5) Suas elevações maiores têm servido de eiras. (Is 17:13) As montanhas constituíam uma proteção natural contra exércitos invasores (Sal 125:2); ofereciam refúgio e locais de armazenagem em tempos de perigo (Gên 19:17, 30; Jz 6:2; Mt 24:16; compare isso com Re 6:15), bem como abrigo para a vida selvagem. (Sal 50:10, 11; 104:18; Is 18:6) Forneciam lugares para cidades. (Mt 5:14) A mineração produzia minérios valiosos. (De 8:9) Também se extraíam das montanhas valiosas pedras para construção. — 1Rs 5:15-17.

Propriedade de Jeová. Todos os montes pertencem a Jeová Deus, por ele ser seu Formador. (Sal 95:4; Am 4:13) Todavia, as expressões "monte de Jeová", ou 'de Deus', frequentemente se aplicam em sentido especial aos montes em que Jeová revelara a sua presença. Estes incluem o monte Sinai ou Horebe (Êx 3:1; Núm 10:33), e o monte associado com o santuário de Jeová. — Sal 24:3.

Uso Figurado e Profético. Às vezes, o termo "monte" é aplicado ao solo, à vegetação e às árvores na superfície do monte. (Veja Sal 83:14.) O salmista diz a respeito de Jeová: "Toca nos montes, e eles fumegam." (Sal 104:32; 144:5, 6) Isto talvez indique que relâmpagos podem incendiar florestas nos montes, fazendo assim o monte fumegar. Os efeitos dum forte temporal parecem ser descritos quando a Bíblia fala de montes 'fluírem' ou 'se derreterem'. (Jz 5:5; Sal 97:5) Chuvas pesadas produzem riachos e violentas torrentes que levam o solo embora, como que derretendo-o. De modo similar, foi predito que a expressão da ira de Jeová contra as nações resultaria numa matança tal, que o sangue dos mortos derreteria os montes, isto é, levaria o solo embora. (Is 34:1-3) As montanhas 'gotejarem vinho doce' significa que os vinhedos nas suas encostas produziriam com abundância. — Jl 3:18; Am 9:13.

No monte Sinai, a revelação da presença de Jeová foi acompanhada por manifestações físicas tais como relâmpagos, fumaça e fogo. O monte também tremeu. (Êx 19:16-18; 20:18; De 9:15) Parece que este e outros fenômenos físicos forneceram a base para expressões figuradas encontradas em outras partes da Bíblia. (Veja Is 64:1-3.) Evidentemente, se faz menção do tremor do monte Sinai sob a figura de linguagem de 'montes saltitando como carneiros'. (Sal 114:4, 6) 'Incendiar os alicerces dos montes' talvez aluda a uma atividade vulcânica (De 32:22), e os 'alicerces dos montes ficarem agitados' refere-se a serem abalados, possivelmente por um terremoto. — Sal 18:7.

Representam governos. Nos simbolismos bíblicos, montes podem representar reinos ou governos dominantes. (Da 2:35, 44, 45; compare isso com Is 41:15; Re 17:9-11, 18.) Babilônia, com suas conquistas militares, arruinou outras terras, e, por isso, é chamada de "monte ruinoso". (Je 51:24, 25) Um salmo que narra as atividades de Jeová contra homens belicosos retrata-o como estando "envolvido em luz, mais majestoso do que as montanhas de presa". (Sal 76:4) "As montanhas de presa" talvez representem reinos agressivos. (Veja Na 2:11-13.) Davi disse a respeito de Jeová: "[Tens] feito a minha montanha ficar de pé em força", o que provavelmente significa que Jeová enalteceu o reino de Davi e o estabeleceu firmemente. (Sal 30:7; compare isso com 2Sa 5:12.) Representarem os montes reinos ajuda no entendimento do significado daquilo que é descrito em Revelação (Apocalipse) 8:8 como "algo semelhante a um grande monte ardendo com fogo". Sua semelhança a um monte ardente sugere que está associado a uma forma de governo de natureza destrutiva como o fogo.

A profecia de Daniel indicou que o Reino de Deus, depois de destruir os outros reinos, se tornaria um grande monte e encheria a terra inteira. (Da 2:34, 35, 44, 45) Isto significava que estenderia seu abençoado domínio sobre toda a terra. O salmista escreveu: "Que os montes levem a paz ao povo, também os morros, por meio da justiça." (Sal 72:3) Em harmonia com este salmo, as bênçãos mencionadas em relação com o monte de Deus, tais como o banquete de Jeová para todos os povos, seriam usufruídas na terra. — Is 25:6; veja também Is 11:9; 65:25.

Associados com adoração. O monte Sião tornou-se um monte santo quando Davi levou a Arca sagrada à tenda que armara ali. (2Sa 6:12, 17) Visto que a Arca estava associada com a presença de Jeová, e Davi evidentemente agira sob orientação divina (De 12:5), isto significava que Jeová escolhera o monte Sião como seu lugar de morada. Com respeito a esta escolha, Davi escreveu: "A região montanhosa de Basã é um monte de Deus [isto é, criado por Deus]; a região montanhosa de Basã é um monte de picos. Por que estais vigiando com inveja, ó montes de picos, o monte que Deus desejou para si, para morar? Sim, o próprio Jeová residirá ali para sempre. . . . O próprio Jeová chegou de Sinai [quando pela primeira vez revelou a sua presença à inteira nação de Israel] ao lugar santo." (Sal 68:15-17) A região montanhosa de Basã pode ser identificada com o monte Haurã (Jebel ed Druz), e é a esta cadeia de montes que talvez se refiram as expressões "monte de Deus" e "monte de picos". Embora o monte Haurã se eleve muito acima do monte Sião, Jeová escolheu o lugar menos notável como seu lugar de morada.

Depois de se construir o templo no monte Moriá, o termo "Sião" passou a incluir o lugar do templo, e, portanto, Sião permanecia o santo monte de Deus. (Is 8:18; 18:7; 24:23; Jl 3:17) Visto que o templo de Jeová ficava em Jerusalém, a própria cidade também era chamada de "santo monte". (Is 66:20; Da 9:16, 20) Talvez se referisse a orar na direção dos montes de Jerusalém que o salmista disse: "Levantarei meus olhos para os montes. Donde virá a minha ajuda? Minha ajuda procede de Jeová." — Sal 121:1, 2; compare isso com Sal 3:4; 1Rs 8:30, 44, 45; Da 6:10.

A profecia de Isaías 2:2, 3, e a de Miqueias 4:1, 2, apontavam para o tempo em que "o monte da casa de Jeová" ficaria "firmemente estabelecido acima do cume dos montes" e 'se elevaria acima dos morros', com pessoas de muitas nações afluindo a ele. Que "o monte da casa de Jeová" havia de ficar acima dos montes e dos morros indica a posição elevada da verdadeira adoração, porque montes e morros, na antiguidade, serviam como locais de adoração idólatra e de santuários de deuses falsos. — De 12:2; Je 3:6; Ez 18:6, 11, 15; Os 4:13.

Num cumprimento típico, entre 29 e 70 EC, durante a parte final dos dias do sistema de coisas judaico, a adoração de Jeová foi elevada acima da sublime elevação que nações pagãs davam aos seus deuses falsos. O Rei, Jesus Cristo, fez um "irrompimento" ao enaltecer a verdadeira adoração, e ele foi seguido, primeiro por um restante da nação de Israel, e depois por pessoas de todas as nações. (Is 2:2; Miq 2:13; At 10:34, 35) Num cumprimento antitípico, na parte final dos dias deste sistema de coisas, a adoração de Jeová tem sido elevada até o céu. O Rei, Jesus Cristo, guiou os do restante do Israel espiritual à adoração pura, e eles foram seguidos por uma grande multidão procedente de todas as nações. — Re 7:9.

Obstáculos. Às vezes, montes representam obstáculos. Por exemplo, os obstáculos que se interpuseram no caminho do retorno de Israel do exílio babilônico e os que mais tarde impediram o progresso da reconstrução do templo foram comparados a montes. (Is 40:1-4; Za 4:7) A fé pode remover obstáculos montanhescos similares, e, se for da vontade de Deus, até mesmo montes literais. — Mt 17:20; 21:21; Mr 11:23; 1Co 13:2.

Estabilidade, permanência ou elevação. Atribuem-se aos montes estabilidade e permanência. (Is 54:10; Hab 3:6; compare isso com Sal 46:2.) Portanto, quando o salmista falou da justiça de Jeová ser como "as montanhas de Deus" (Sal 36:6), ele talvez se referisse a que a justiça de Jeová é imutável. Ou, visto que os montes são elevados, isto talvez indique que a justiça de Deus excede em muito à do homem. (Veja Is 55:8, 9.) Com relação ao derramamento da sétima tigela da ira de Deus, Revelação 16:20 diz: "Não se acharam montes." Isto sugere que mesmo coisas tão elevadas como os montes não escapariam do derramamento da ira de Deus. — Veja Je 4:23-26.

Os montes se regozijam e louvam a Jeová. Quando Jeová volta favoravelmente sua atenção para o seu povo, isto exerce um bom efeito sobre a terra. As encostas dos montes, cultivadas e cuidadas, deixam de ter uma aparência descuidada, como se pranteassem num estado de desolação ou praga. Portanto, em sentido figurado, os montes 'gritam de júbilo', e sua beleza e produtividade louvam a Jeová. — Sal 98:8; 148:7-9; compare isso com Is 44:23; 49:13; 55:12, 13; Ez 36:1-12.

MONTE DAS OLIVEIRAS. Veja OLIVEIRAS, MONTE DAS.

MONTE DE REUNIÃO. Expressão que ocorre em Isaías 14:13; onde o rei de Babilônia é retratado como dizendo no seu coração: "Enaltecerei o meu trono acima das estrelas de Deus e assentar-me-ei no monte de reunião, nas partes mais remotas do norte."

Alguns peritos sustentam que este "monte de reunião" era alguma distante elevação setentrional que os babilônios consideravam como moradia dos seus deuses. Todavia, em vez de ser profético duma declaração real que o rei de Babilônia faria, as palavras de Isaías 14:13 refletem qual seria sua ambição e atitude. (Veja Is 47:10.) As palavras fazem parte duma expressão proverbial dos israelitas restabelecidos contra o rei de Babilônia. (Is 14:1-4) Daí, segue-se logicamente que o "monte de reunião" deve ser identificado à luz das Escrituras e não à base do que talvez fosse um conceito religioso pagão do rei de Babilônia. O rei de Babilônia certamente não teria nenhum desejo de enaltecer seu trono acima das estrelas de um deus a quem ele adorava. Também, Isaías 14:14 mostra claramente que a referência não é aos deuses babilônicos, mas ao Altíssimo. Portanto, o "monte de reunião" tem de ser associado com o Deus Altíssimo.

No tempo de Isaías havia apenas um monte, o monte Sião (cujo nome passou a incluir a área do templo no monte Moriá), onde Deus se reunia com seu povo de forma representativa. (Veja Is 8:18; 18:7; 24:23; Jl 3:17.) Podia apropriadamente ser chamado de "monte de reunião", porque todos os varões israelitas maduros deviam comparecer no santuário ali perante a face de Jeová, três vezes por ano. (Êx 23:17) O Salmo 48:1, 2, confirma adicionalmente esta identificação por situar o monte Sião mais para o norte, o que se harmoniza com estar o "monte de reunião" situado "nas partes mais remotas do norte".

MONUMENTO. Coluna, placa, edifício ou outro marco erigido em lembrança de alguma pessoa ou de um evento especial. Uns poucos são mencionados na Bíblia, embora nem todos sejam chamados de monumentos.

Jeová apareceu a Jacó numa visão noturna, confirmando para ele o pacto abraâmico (1781 AEC). Em comemoração, Jacó tomou a pedra que havia usado como apoio para a cabeça, erigiu-a para se parecer a uma coluna e ungiu-a com óleo. Depois chamou aquele lugar de Betel. (Gên 28:10-19) Uns 20 anos mais tarde, Jacó e Labão, ao concluírem um pacto de paz entre si, erigiram uma coluna, também um montão de pedras, na região montanhosa de Gileade, a fim de servir ali de lembrete do seu acordo. (Gên 31:25, 44-52) Quando Jeová levou Israel à Terra da Promessa (1473 AEC), erigiram-se dois monumentos no lugar onde atravessaram o rio Jordão, um no meio da corrente e o outro na margem O do rio, em Gilgal. Estes deviam servir de marcos comemorativos daquela travessia milagrosa, e quando seus filhos mais tarde perguntassem sobre o que estes monumentos representavam, os pais deviam contar-lhes o que Jeová fizera a favor do seu povo. — Jos 4:4-9, 20-24.

O Rei Saul, após a sua vitória sobre os amalequitas, erigiu "para si um monumento [hebr.: yadh]". (1Sa 15:12) A palavra hebraica yadh, na maioria das vezes traduzida por "mão", também pode significar "monumento", pois, assim como a mão erguida atrai o olhar e chama atenção de modo específico, assim também um monumento traz à atenção das pessoas certas coisas.

O Monumento de Absalão (hebr.: yadh) tinha a forma duma coluna, igual a tantos outros. Absalão erigiu-o na Baixada do Rei, não muito longe de Jerusalém, porque, conforme disse: "Não tenho filho para fazer meu nome ser lembrado." (2Sa 18:18) Todavia, hoje não se sabe nada sobre este monumento ou sua localização além daquilo que a Bíblia nos diz. Não deve ser confundido com o chamado túmulo no vale do Cédron, que a tradição eclesiástica atribui a Absalão, mas que pertence ao período greco-romano de arquitetura. — Veja ABSALÃO.

Semelhantes a Absalão, os eunucos não têm esperança de uma prole para fazer perdurar seu nome. No entanto, se forem fiéis a Jeová, e não como o traiçoeiro Absalão, Jeová promete dar-lhes "algo melhor do que filhos e filhas", a saber, "dar-lhes na minha casa e dentro das minhas muralhas um monumento [hebr.: yadh] e um nome . . . Um nome por tempo indefinido, um que não será decepado". — Is 56:4, 5; compare isso com Pr 22:1.

Também se erigiam pedras tumulares quais monumentos, como, por exemplo, aquela que marcava "a sepultura do homem do verdadeiro Deus", que predisse o que Josias faria contra o altar em Betel. — 2Rs 23:16-18; 1Rs 13:1, 2.

MORCEGO [hebr.: 'atal·léf]. Mamífero voador que, tirando as suas grandes asas de pele membranosa, se parece ao camundongo. As Escrituras classificam o morcego entre as criaturas voadoras impuras que não podiam ser consumidas pelos israelitas. (Le 11:19; De 14:18) Encontram-se hoje em Israel cerca de 20 diferentes espécies de morcegos (quirópteros).

Durante a luz do dia, os morcegos, em geral, se dependuram de cabeça para baixo em cavernas escuras ou em prédios abandonados, depois saem ao anoitecer para caçar alimento durante as horas de escuridão. Quando grande número deles se dependuram num só lugar, há um cheiro repulsivo, murino. Em algumas cavernas, o esterco de morcego se acumulou em camadas de uma considerável grossura, oferecendo uma valiosa fonte de fertilizante. É sem dúvida por causa do hábito do morcego, de se dependurar em lugares escuros, que o profeta Isaías fala de se lançarem deuses de ouro e de prata diante dos morcegos. Tudo o que esses ídolos merecem é um lugar escuro e sujo, em vez de os lugares de honra e destaque que seus adoradores enganados lhes concedem. — Is 2:20.

MORDAÇA, AÇAIMO. Dispositivo destinado a cobrir a boca do animal e a impedir que morda ou coma.

Na antiga Palestina, frequentemente se usava gado quando havia uma grande quantidade de cereal para debulhar. Em preparação, os molhos eram desatados e espalhados sobre a superfície dura da eira, até se formar uma camada grossa. Daí, um ou mais animais pisavam o cereal com os cascos, ou o cereal era debulhado por meio dum trenó ou outro implemento que puxavam sobre ele. A Lei mosaica ordenava: "Não deves açaimar o touro quando debulha." (De 25:4) Assim não era torturado pelo desejo de comer um pouco do cereal em cuja debulha gastava sua força. — Veja Pr 12:10.

O princípio envolvido em Deuteronômio 25:4 também pode ser aplicado a trabalhadores humanos. Paulo disse a Timóteo: "Os anciãos, que presidem de modo excelente, sejam contados dignos de dupla honra, especialmente os que trabalham arduamente no falar e no ensinar." Daí, confirmando seu conselho, o apóstolo citou a lei sobre não açaimar o touro quando debulha. (1Ti 5:17, 18) Também, como parte do seu argumento para mostrar aos coríntios que "o Senhor ordenou que os que proclamam as boas novas vivam por meio das boas novas", ele citou Deuteronômio 25:4 e depois escreveu: "Importa-se Deus com touros? Ou é ao todo por nossa causa que ele diz isso? Realmente, foi escrito por nossa causa, porque o homem que lavra deve lavrar em esperança e o homem que debulha deve fazê-lo na esperança de ser participante." — 1Co 9:8-14.

O salmista Davi usou "mordaça" em sentido figurado, ao dizer que pôs uma como guarda à sua boca para não pecar. — Sal 39:1.

MORDECAI.

1. Homem que retornou a Jerusalém e Judá em 537 AEC, após os 70 anos de exílio em Babilônia. (Esd 2:1, 2) Mordecai era um destacado israelita e líder que ajudava Zorobabel, e ele foi notabilizado na lista genealógica, inicial, da restabelecida comunidade em Judá. — Ne 7:5-7.

2. "Filho de Jair, filho de Simei, filho de Quis, benjaminita" (Est 2:5), primo mais velho e guardião de Ester. (Est 2:7) Mordecai é apresentado exclusivamente no livro bíblico de Ester. Este livro relata seu papel de destaque nos assuntos do Império Persa, no começo do quinto século AEC. A evidência indica que foi ele o escritor do livro de Ester.

Alguns duvidam da autenticidade deste livro ou que Mordecai tenha sido uma pessoa real. A objeção deles, de que ele teria de ter pelo menos 120 anos de idade, tendo uma bela prima 100 anos mais moça, baseia-se na suposição errônea de que Ester 2:5, 6, denota que Mordecai foi ao exílio babilônico junto com o Rei Jeconias. Todavia, o objetivo bíblico neste texto não é contar a história de Mordecai, mas de fornecer a sua linhagem. Quis pode ter sido o bisavô de Mordecai, ou mesmo um antepassado mais remoto, que "tinha sido levado ao exílio". Outro ponto de vista, em harmonia com a expressão bíblica, é que Mordecai, embora nascido no exílio, foi considerado como tendo sido levado ao exílio em 617 AEC, porque se encontrava nos lombos dos seus antepassados, ainda não nascido. — Veja He 7:9, 10.

Leal Como Servo do Rei. No relato, Mordecai, embora fosse exilado judeu, era servo do rei. Ele soube que a Rainha Vasti havia sido deposta pelo Rei Assuero, da Pérsia, e que todas as belas virgens jovens, de todo o império, estavam sendo reunidas para que entre elas se encontrasse uma substituta para o cargo de rainha. A prima de Mordecai, Ester, uma moça "bonita de figura e bela de aparência", foi apresentada como candidata para ser rainha, mas não se revelou sua origem judaica. (Est 2:7, 8) Ela foi escolhida como rainha. Mordecai continuou a cumprir os seus deveres, "sentado no portão do rei", quando lhe trouxeram a informação de que dois dos oficiais da corte, Bigtã e Teres, tramavam deitar mão no Rei Assuero. Ele avisou o rei por meio de Ester, e seu ato de lealdade foi registrado "no livro dos assuntos dos dias". — Est 2:21-23.

Recusa Curvar-se Diante de Hamã. Subsequentemente, Hamã, o agagita, foi feito primeiro-ministro por Assuero, que ordenou que todos no portão do rei se prostrassem diante de Hamã na recém-enaltecida posição dele. Mordecai recusou terminantemente fazer isso e apresentou como motivo ser judeu. (Est 3:1-4) Basear Mordecai sua ação neste motivo prova que isso tinha que ver com a sua relação, qual judeu dedicado, com o seu Deus Jeová. Ele reconhecia que prostrar-se diante de Hamã envolvia mais do que apenas lançar-se por terra diante dum personagem enaltecido, assim como israelitas haviam feito no passado, apenas reconhecendo a posição superior de tal como governante. (2Sa 14:4; 18:28; 1Rs 1:16) No caso de Hamã, havia um bom motivo para Mordecai não se curvar. Hamã provavelmente era amalequita, e Jeová expressara estar em guerra com Amaleque, "de geração em geração". (Êx 17:16; veja HAMÃ.) Para Mordecai, era um assunto de integridade para com Deus e não uma questão política.

Hamã ficou furioso, especialmente depois de se dar conta de que Mordecai era judeu. Seu ódio era tão grande, que estragou-lhe a satisfação por todo o seu poder e os seus privilégios, enquanto Mordecai ficava sentado no portão e recusava curvar-se diante dele. Não limitando sua vingança só a Mordecai, Hamã extraiu do rei um decreto, determinando a destruição de todos os do povo de Mordecai no domínio da Pérsia. — Est 3:5-12.

Usado para Livrar Israel. Em face do edito de destruição de todos os judeus no império, Mordecai expressou fé em que Ester tinha sido elevada à sua dignidade régia, nesta época propícia, para libertar os judeus. Mostrou a Ester a pesada responsabilidade dela e orientou-a para implorar o favor e a ajuda do rei. Embora isso pusesse em perigo a sua própria vida, Ester concordou em fazê-lo. — Est 4:7–5:2.

De forma bem oportuna para Mordecai e os judeus (pois tratava-se da própria questão da lealdade de Mordecai para com o rei), a atenção do Rei Assuero, numa noite de insônia, foi providencialmente dirigida para o livro oficial dos registros do Estado. Lembrou-se assim ao rei que Mordecai não tinha sido recompensado por um serviço prestado, isto é, de revelar a trama sediciosa de Bigtã e Teres. Em vista disso, o rei desejava honrar grandiosamente a Mordecai — para o desgosto de Hamã, a quem se ordenou que providenciasse e proclamasse esta homenagem publicamente. — Est 6:1-12.

Ester conseguiu indiciar Hamã por grave difamação e calúnia contra os judeus, e pela trama traiçoeira também contra os próprios interesses do rei. O enfurecido Assuero ordenou a pena de morte para Hamã, e a estaca de 22 m de altura, erigida por Hamã para Mordecai, foi usada para pendurar o corpo do próprio Hamã. — Est 7:1-10.

Mordecai substituiu então Hamã como primeiro-ministro e recebeu o anel de sinete do próprio rei para selar documentos do estado. Ester encarregou Mordecai da casa de Hamã, que o rei lhe havia dado. Daí, Mordecai usou a autorização do rei para emitir uma contraordem, concedendo aos judeus o direito legal de se defenderem. Para os judeus, isso era uma luz de libertação e de alegria. Muitos no Império Persa aliaram-se aos judeus, e, quando chegou o dia 13 de adar, o dia em que as leis entraram em vigor, os judeus estavam preparados. As autoridades os apoiaram por causa da elevada posição de Mordecai. Em Susã, a luta foi prorrogada por mais um dia. Mais de 75.000 inimigos dos judeus no Império Persa foram destruídos, inclusive os dez filhos de Hamã. (Est 8:1–9:18) Com a confirmação de Ester, Mordecai ordenou a celebração anual da festividade dos dias 14 e 15 de adar, os “dias de Purim”, para haver regozijo e banquetes, e para darem presentes uns aos outros e aos pobres. Os judeus aceitaram esta festividade e a impuseram aos seus descendentes e a todos os que se juntaram a eles. Sendo o segundo no império, Mordecai foi respeitado pelos judeus, o povo dedicado de Deus, e continuou a trabalhar para o bem-estar deles. — Est 9:19-22, 27-32; 10:2, 3.

Homem de Fé. Mordecai era homem de fé, igual aos mencionados pelo apóstolo Paulo no capítulo 11 de Hebreus, embora não seja mencionado ali por nome. Demonstrou coragem, determinação, integridade, e lealdade a Deus e seu povo, e seguiu o princípio mais tarde expresso por Jesus: “Pagai de volta a César as coisas de César, mas a Deus as coisas de Deus.” (Mt 22:21) Ele e Ester eram da tribo de Benjamim, a respeito da qual o patriarca Jacó profetizara: “Benjamim continuará a dilacerar como lobo. De manhã comerá o animal apanhado e à noitinha repartirá o despojo.” (Gên 49:27) A atividade desses benjamitas se deu na noitinha da nação de Israel, depois de não terem mais reis no trono, e eles terem ficado sob domínio gentio. É possível que Mordecai e Ester tenham tido o privilégio de destruir os últimos dos odiados amalequitas. O interesse de Mordecai no bem-estar dos seus patrícios indica que ele tinha fé de que dentre os filhos de Israel viria a Semente de Abraão, para abençoar todas as famílias da terra. — Gên 12:2; 22:18.

MORDOMO. O encarregado duma casa ou de certa propriedade pertencente a outro. A palavra hebraica so·khén é traduzida por “mordomo” (Is 22:15); mo·shél, que significa “administrador”, também se refere a um mordomo. (Gên 24:2 n) A palavra grega oi·ko·nó·mos (mordomo) também pode ser traduzida por “administrador doméstico”. — Lu 12:42, n.

O mordomo podia ser um homem liberto ou um escravo de confiança. O ‘mordomo injusto’, mencionado por Jesus numa das suas ilustrações, parece ser apresentado como homem liberto. (Lu 16:1, 2, 4) Reis, e muitas outras pessoas abastadas ou de destaque, tinham um mordomo, e havia diferença entre os homens quanto ao grau de autoridade que se concedia ao mordomo. A palavra grega e·pí·tro·pos, “encarregado”, está intimamente relacionada em sentido, visto que o mordomo muitas vezes tinha a supervisão sobre a casa, bem como sobre outros servos e a propriedade, e às vezes sobre assuntos comerciais. — Gál 4:1-3; Lu 16:1-3.

Abraão tinha um servo fiel, Eliézer, de Damasco, como encarregado dos seus extensos bens, que consistiam em grande abundância de gado, e, em certa época, em muitos escravos, embora Abraão não possuísse terras, exceto um terreno para sepultamento. (Gên 13:2; 14:14; 15:2; 23:17-20; At 7:4, 5) José, enquanto escravo no Egito, passou a ficar encarregado da casa de Potifar. (Gên 39:1-4, 8, 9) Mais tarde, ele também tinha um mordomo. (Gên 44:4) O Rei Elá, de Israel, tinha um homem encarregado da sua casa em Tirza. Este provavelmente era também o costume de outros reis antigos. (1Rs 16:9) Sebna era o mordomo da casa do rei, nos dias do Rei Ezequias, de Judá, mas foi infiel e foi substituído por Eliaquim, filho de Hilquias. — Is 22:15, 20, 21.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs observamos que o Rei Herodes Ântipas tinha um homem encarregado da sua casa; a esposa deste homem ministrava de seus bens a Jesus. (Lu 8:3) Jesus, numa ilustração, mencionou um homem encarregado dos trabalhadores dum vinhedo, que lhes pagou no fim do dia. — Mt 20:8.

As responsabilidades e os deveres administrativos do mordomo descrevem aptamente o ministério confiado aos cristãos por Jeová Deus. Na profecia de Jesus sobre os últimos dias, ele descreve “o escravo fiel e discreto”, que também serve de mordomo para ele, um administrador da família da fé, para dar o “alimento no tempo apropriado”. (Mt 24:45; Lu 12:42-44) Os superintendentes na congregação cristã são “mordomos”, e requer-se deles estrita fidelidade. (Tit 1:7; 1Co 4:1, 2) Paulo, como apóstolo, especialmente como apóstolo para os gentios, fora incumbido dum serviço de mordomo especial. (1Co 9:17; Ef 3:1, 2) Pedro salienta a todos os cristãos, superintendentes e outros, que eles são mordomos da benignidade imerecida de Deus, expressa de vários modos, e mostra que cada um tem a sua esfera, ou lugar, no arranjo de Deus, em que pode desincumbir-se fielmente de seu cargo de mordomo. — 1Pe 4:10.

MORÉ.

1. Pelo menos no tempo de Abraão, as grandes árvores de Moré constituíam um bem conhecido marco perto de Siquém, e parecem ter continuado assim ainda por séculos. (Gên 12:6; De 11:30; talvez se aluda também a elas em Gên 35:4; Jos 24:25, 26; Jz 9:6.) Alguns peritos relacionam a “árvore grande de Meonenim” com as “árvores grandes de Moré”. (Jz 9:37) “Moré” talvez fosse o nome do dono original do terreno, perto de Siquém, que possuía uma especialmente destacada árvore ou um arvoredo ou bosque de árvores grandes.

2. Nome de um morro, em cuja vizinhança os midianitas foram derrotados por Gideão. (Jz 7:1) Acha-se, em geral, que este morro seja a elevação calva, cinzenta, de Jebel Dahi (Giv'at Ha-More), a uns 8 km ao N do lugar sugerido do poço de Harode.

MORESETE, MORESETE-GATE [Possessão de Gate]. Evidentemente, a cidade do profeta Miqueias. (Je 26:18; Miq 1:1) Tell el-Judeideh (Tel Goded), a uns 35 km ao SO de Jerusalém e a cerca de 10 km ao SE de Gate, é uma possível identificação dela. O nome composto, Moresete-Gate (Miq 1:14), dá a entender que a cidade estava de algum modo associada com Gate. Talvez fosse em algumas ocasiões dominada por aquela cidade filisteia, visto que os filisteus controlavam outros lugares além das suas cinco cidades principais (sendo Gate uma das cinco). — 1Sa 6:18; 27:5.

Alguns acham que Miqueias 1:14 seja um jogo de palavras com o nome Moresete (que significa "Possessão"). O termo hebraico para "presentes de despedida", neste texto, indica uma pessoa ou uma possessão temporária ou permanentemente entregue ou despachada. Concordemente, Sião (Miq 1:13) perderia esta cidade, sendo a própria Moresete os "presentes de despedida".

MORIÁ. Nome da elevação rochosa em que Salomão construiu um magnífico templo para Jeová. Anteriormente, seu pai Davi comprara o terreno do jebuseu Araúna (Ornã) para erigir ali um altar, uma vez que este foi o divinamente indicado meio de acabar com o flagelo resultante do pecado de Davi relacionado com um censo. — 2Sa 24:16-25; 1Cr 21:15-28; 2Cr 3:1; veja ARAÚNA.

A antiga tradição judaica vincula o lugar do templo com o monte na "terra de Moriá", onde Abraão, às ordens de Deus, tentou oferecer Isaque. (Gên 22:2; veja Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], VII, 329-334 [xiii, 4].) Isto faria da "terra de Moriá" a região montanhosa em torno de Jerusalém. Foi para a "terra de Moriá" que Abraão viajou desde a vizinhança de Berseba; e, no terceiro dia, ele viu à distância este lugar divinamente designado. — Gên 21:33, 34; 22:4, 19.

Alguns têm objetado à identificação do monte Moriá com o monte do Templo em Jerusalém, por causa da sua distância de Berseba e de não ser observável "à distância". Mas, Abraão devia fazer a viagem "à terra de Moriá". No primeiro dia, Abraão levantou-se cedo, selou seu jumento, rachou a lenha, colocou-a sobre o animal, e depois iniciou a jornada. (Gên 22:2, 3) Foi "no terceiro dia que Abraão levantou os olhos e começou a ver o lugar [a terra de Moriá] à distância". Assim, o segundo foi o único dia só de viagem. Sobre a visibilidade do monte Moriá e a distância da viagem, O Novo Dicionário da Bíblia observa: "Entretanto, a distância do sul da Filístia para Jerusalém é de cerca de 80 quilômetros, que bem pode requerer três dias de viagem, e no livro de Gênesis o lugar em foco não é um 'monte Moriá', mas um dentre diversos montes numa terra desse nome, e as colinas sobre as quais Jerusalém está edificada são visíveis à distância. Por conseguinte, não há necessidade de duvidarmos que o sacrifício de Abraão teve lugar no local que posteriormente foi Jerusalém, se não na colina do Templo." (Editor Organizador J. Douglas, 1966, Vol. II, p. 1073, Junta Editorial Cristã) Portanto, é concebível que a jornada de uns 80 km a pé, de Berseba ao monte Moriá, tivesse levado mais de dois dias inteiros.

Evidentemente, o monte Moriá ficava bastante distante da Salém do tempo de Abraão, de modo que a tentativa de sacrificar Isaque não ocorreu em plena vista dos habitantes da cidade. Não há registro de que estes tenham presenciado o incidente ou tentado interferir nele. Que o lugar ainda se encontrava um tanto isolado séculos depois pode ser deduzido de que, nos dias de Davi, havia uma eira no monte Moriá. Todavia, não se faz nenhuma menção de construções naquele lugar. — 2Cr 3:1.

Atualmente, o santuário islâmico conhecido como Domo do Rochedo fica no alto do monte Moriá. — Veja JERUSALÉM (Períodos Posteriores).

MORRO. O termo hebraico giv·'áh e o termo grego bou·nós referem-se a uma elevação natural da superfície da terra, mais baixa do que um monte. Morros arredondados são especialmente notados na Judeia, embora sejam também encontrados em outras partes da Palestina.

Ocasionalmente, morros serviram de lugares de sepultamento e de esconderijo. (Jos 24:33; 1Sa 23:19; 26:1) Frequentemente, construíam-se neles casas e cidades, como a casa de Abinadabe, onde a Arca foi guardada por uns 70 anos. — 1Sa 7:1, 2.

Ao salientar a grandiosidade do Todo-Poderoso, o profeta Isaías mostra que Jeová, na realidade, pode 'pesar os morros na balança'. (Is 40:12) Os montes e os morros são descritos como "sempiternos" e 'durando indefinidamente', mas, atribui-se permanência ainda maior à benevolência de Deus e ao seu pacto de paz. — Is 54:10; Gên 49:26; De 33:15.

Antes de empreenderem uma viagem, governantes orientais frequentemente enviavam homens na frente para prepararem o caminho por remover pedras, aterrar depressões, nivelar lugares irregulares, e, às vezes, até mesmo nivelar morros. Em sentido figurado, os morros foram nivelados para tornar possível o desimpedido retorno dos judeus de Babilônia a Jerusalém, em 537 AEC. Isto era também profético da obra preparatória feita por João, o Batizador, antes do aparecimento do Messias. — Is 40:4; Lu 3:1-6.

Muitas vezes era nos morros que os israelitas realizavam adoração idólatra, imitando os cananeus. (De 12:2; 1Rs 14:23; 2Rs 17:9, 10; Is 65:7; Je 2:20; 17:1-3; Ez 6:13; 20:28; Os 4:13) Isto explica a resposta profética ao apelo para que Israel voltasse a Jeová: "Eis-nos aqui! Chegamos a ti, pois tu, ó Jeová, és nosso Deus. Verdadeiramente, tanto os morros como o tumulto nos montes são da falsidade." — Je 3:22, 23.

Portanto, era bem apropriado que tanto Isaías como Miqueias predissessem que "o monte da casa de Jeová" ficaria firmemente estabelecido acima do cume dos montes e se elevaria acima dos morros. (Is 2:2; Miq 4:1) Em nítido contraste com isso, aqueles que não fizerem a vontade de Jeová no tempo da Sua obra de execução "dirão aos montes: 'Cobri-nos!' e aos morros: 'Caí sobre nós!'" — Os 10:8; Lu 23:30; compare isso com Is 2:19; Re 6:16, 17.

MORTE. A cessação de todas as funções da vida, portanto, o oposto da vida. (De 30:15, 19) Na Bíblia, as mesmas palavras das línguas originais para "morte" ou "morrer" são aplicadas com relação a humanos, a animais e a plantas. (Ec 3:19; 9:5; Jo 12:24; Ju 12; Re 16:3) Todavia, no caso dos humanos e dos animais, a Bíblia mostra a função vital do sangue para sustentar a vida, declarando que "a alma da carne está no sangue". (Le 17:11, 14; Gên 4:8-11; 9:3, 4) Tanto os humanos como os animais são mencionados como 'expirando', isto é, 'exalando' o fôlego da vida (hebr.: nish·máth hhai·yím). (Gên 7:21, 22; compare isso com Gên 2:7.) E as Escrituras mostram que a morte dos humanos e dos animais segue à perda do espírito (força ativa) da vida (hebr.: rú·ahh hhai·yím). — Gên 6:17 n; 7:15, 22; Ec 3:19; veja ESPÍRITO.

Do ponto de vista bíblico, o que é a morte?

É de interesse notar a correspondência destes pontos bíblicos com o que se sabe cientificamente sobre o processo da morte. No caso dos humanos, por exemplo, quando o coração cessa de bater, o sangue deixa de transportar nutrientes e oxigênio (obtido pela respiração) aos bilhões de células do corpo. No entanto, A Enciclopédia Delta Universal (1987, Vol. 10, p. 5475) salientou: "Uma pessoa cujo coração e pulmões param de funcionar pode ser considerada clinicamente morta, mas pode não ter ocorrido a morte somática. Células individuais do corpo continuam a viver por vários minutos. A pessoa pode ser ressuscitada se o coração e os pulmões recomeçarem a funcionar e levarem às células o oxigênio de que necessitam. Depois de cerca de 3 minutos, as células do encéfalo — que são as mais sensíveis à falta de oxigênio — principiam a morrer. Em pouco, a pessoa estará morta além da possibilidade de ressurreição. Gradualmente, outras células do corpo também irão morrendo. As últimas a perecer são as células dos ossos, dos pelos e da pele, que podem continuar a crescer por várias horas." Assim, ao passo que é evidente a importância vital da respiração e do sangue em manter a ativa força de vida (rú·ahh hhai·yím) nas células do corpo, ao mesmo tempo também se torna claro que não é somente a cessação da respiração ou das batidas do coração, mas sim o desaparecimento da força de vida, ou espírito, das células do corpo que causa a morte conforme mencionada nas Escrituras. — Sal 104:29; 146:4; Ec 8:8.

A Causa da Morte dos Humanos. Nas Escrituras, a primeira referência à morte ocorre em Gênesis 2:16, 17, na ordem de Deus ao primeiro homem a respeito de comer da árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau, cuja violação resultaria na morte. (Veja NM n.) Todavia, a morte dos animais, como processo natural, evidentemente já vigorava, visto que eles são deixados completamente fora da apresentação bíblica da introdução da morte na família humana. (Veja 2Pe 2:12.) A seriedade do aviso de Deus sobre a pena de morte pela desobediência, portanto, seria compreensível ao seu filho humano, Adão. A desobediência de Adão ao seu Criador causou-lhe a morte. (Gên 3:19; Tg 1:14, 15) Depois, o pecado de Adão e sua consequência, a morte, se espalharam a todos os homens. — Ro 5:12; 6:23.

Às vezes, apresentam-se certos textos como suposta evidência de que a morte física fora intencionada como consequência natural para os humanos, assim como para os animais; por exemplo, citam-se as referências à duração da vida do homem como 'setenta ou oitenta anos' (Sal 90:10) e a declaração do apóstolo, de que "está reservado aos homens morrer uma vez para sempre, mas depois disso um julgamento". (He 9:27) No entanto, todos esses textos foram escritos depois de a morte se introduzir na humanidade, e são aplicados a humanos imperfeitos, pecaminosos. Pelo menos é preciso tomar em consideração a enorme longevidade dos homens que viveram antes do Dilúvio como reflexo do notável potencial do corpo humano, ultrapassando o de qualquer animal, mesmo nas condições mais ideais. (Gên 5:1-31) A Bíblia relaciona inconfundivelmente a introdução da morte na família humana com o pecado de Adão, conforme já se mostrou.

Diz-se que a humanidade apartada de Deus pelo pecado, em geral, está em "escravização à corrupção". (Ro 8:21) Esta escravização se deve à operação do pecado nos seus corpos, produzindo seus frutos corrompedores, e todos os que não são obedientes a Deus estão sob o domínio do pecado como seus escravos, "visando a morte". (Ro 6:12, 16, 19-21) Declara-se que Satanás tem "os meios de causar a morte". (He 2:14, 15) Ele é chamado de "homicida" (Jo 8:44), não necessariamente por ele matar de modo direto, mas porque faz isso por meio de engano e de sedução ao pecado, por induzir ou estimular a transgressão que leva à corrupção e à morte (2Co 11:3), e também por fomentar atitudes assassinas na mente e no coração dos homens. (Jo 8:40-44, 59; 13:2; compare isso com Tg 3:14-16; 4:1, 2.) Portanto, a morte não é apresentada como amigo do homem, mas como "inimigo". (1Co 15:26) Geralmente, são os que sofrem extrema ou insuportável dor que desejam a morte. — Jó 3:21, 22; 7:15; Re 9:6.

A Condição dos Mortos Humanos. Mostra-se que os mortos "não estão cônscios de absolutamente nada", e que a morte é um estado de completa inatividade. (Ec 9:5, 10; Sal 146:4) Os que morrem são descritos como indo para o "pó da morte" (Sal 22:15), tornando-se "impotentes na morte". (Pr 2:18; Is 26:14) Na morte não há menção de Deus, nem se dá louvor a ele. (Sal 6:5; Is 38:18, 19) Tanto nas Escrituras Hebraicas como nas Gregas, a morte é comparada ao sono, uma comparação apropriada não só por causa da condição inconsciente dos mortos, mas também por causa da esperança de se acordar por meio da ressurreição. (Sal 13:3; Jo 11:11-14) O ressuscitado Jesus é chamado de "as primícias dos que adormeceram na morte". — 1Co 15:20, 21; veja HADES; SEOL.

Ao passo que os antigos egípcios e outros povos de nações pagãs, e especialmente os filósofos gregos, criam fortemente na imortalidade da alma humana, tanto as Escrituras Hebraicas como as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs dizem que a alma (hebr.: né·fesh; gr.: psy·khé) morre (Jz 16:30; Ez 18:4, 20; Re 16:3), precisa ser liberta da morte (Jos 2:13; Sal 33:19; 56:13; 116:8; Tg 5:20), ou, como na profecia messiânica a respeito de Jesus Cristo, é 'esvaziada até a própria morte' (Is 53:12; compare isso com Mt 26:38). O profeta Ezequiel condena aqueles que conspiram 'para entregar à morte as almas que não deviam morrer' e 'para preservar vivas as almas que não deviam viver'. — Ez 13:19; veja ALMA.

Assim, The Interpreter's Bible (A Bíblia do Intérprete; Vol. II, p. 1015), ao comentar 1 Samuel 25:29, observa que "a ideia de o homem consistir em corpo e alma que se separam na morte não é hebraica, mas grega". (Editada por G. Buttrick, 1953) De modo similar, Edmond Jacob, Professor do Antigo Testamento na Universidade de Estrasburgo, salienta que, visto que, nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a vida da pessoa está diretamente relacionada com a alma (hebr.: né·fesh), "é natural que a morte seja às vezes representada como o desaparecimento desta nephesh (Gên. 35:18; I Reis 17:21; Jer. 15:9; Jonas 4:3). O 'partir' da nephesh tem de ser encarado como figura de linguagem, porque ela não continua a existir independente do corpo, mas morre com ele (Núm. 31:19; Juí. 16:30; Eze. 13:19). Nenhum texto bíblico autoriza a declaração de que a 'alma' se separa do corpo no momento da morte". — The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete), editado por G. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 1, p. 802.

Redenção da Condenação à Morte. O Salmo 68:20 declara: "A Jeová, o Soberano Senhor, pertencem as saídas da morte." Cristo Jesus, por meio do sacrifício da sua vida humana, tornou-se o "Agente Principal" da vida e da salvação da parte de Deus (At 3:15; He 2:10) e por meio dele se garante a abolição da morte. (2Ti 1:10) Jesus, por ter sofrido a morte, 'provou a morte por todo homem' e proveu um "resgate correspondente por todos". (He 2:9; 1Ti 2:6) Por meio do "um só ato de justificação" realizado por Jesus tornou-se possível o cancelamento da condenação à morte que o pecado causa, para que homens de toda sorte pudessem ser "declarados justos para a vida". (Ro 5:15, 16, 18, 19; He 9:27, 28; veja DECLARAR JUSTO; RESGATE.) De modo que se pode dizer a respeito dos verdadeiros seguidores de Jesus que eles, na realidade, 'têm passado da morte para a vida'. (Jo 5:24) Os que desobedecem ao Filho e não exercem amor, porém, 'permanecem na morte' e sob a condenação de Deus. (1Jo 3:14; Jo 3:36) Aqueles que querem ficar livres da condenação e livres "da lei do pecado e da morte" têm de ser guiados pelo espírito de Deus e produzir os frutos deste, pois "a mentalidade segundo a carne [pecaminosa] significa morte". — Ro 8:1-6; Col 1:21-23.

O proceder sacrificial de Jesus, que terminou na sua morte e na sua ressurreição, foi por ele comparado ao batismo. (Mr 10:38, 39; Lu 12:50; compare isso com Ef 4:9, 10.) O apóstolo Paulo mostrou que os seguidores ungidos de Jesus também passam por um batismo similar na morte, resultando na sua ressurreição para a glória celestial. (Ro 6:3-5; Fil 3:10, 11) Paulo, expressando seu sincero desejo de assumir a vida celestial, mostrou que os cristãos ungidos com o espírito não querem a morte em si, nem querem jazer "nus" na morte, mas sim 'revestir-se' de um corpo celestial, a fim de poder estar no "lar com o Senhor". (2Co 5:1-8; compare isso com 2Pe 1:13-15.) No ínterim, a morte "opera" neles enquanto, por seu ministério, levam a mensagem da vida àqueles a quem ministram. — 2Co 4:10-14; Pr 18:21; veja BATISMO (Batismo em Cristo Jesus, na Sua Morte).

Os beneficiados por este ministério incluem os da grande multidão que têm a perspectiva de sobreviver à grande tribulação e usufruir a vida eterna na terra paradísica. Eles também, por causa da sua fé no valor expiatório de pecados do sacrifício de Jesus, passam a ter uma condição limpa perante Deus. — 1Jo 2:2; Re 7:9, 14.

Jesus mesmo diz que ele tem "as chaves da morte e do Hades" (Re 1:18), e ele as usa para livrar os detidos pela morte. (Jo 5:28, 29; Re 20:13) Ter Jeová Deus livrado Jesus do Hades dá "garantia a todos os homens" do futuro dia de julgamento ou ajuste de contas por Deus, e fornece a garantia de que haverá uma ressurreição daqueles que estão no Hades. (At 17:31; 1Co 15:20, 21) Os que herdam o Reino de Deus em imortalidade são descritos como triunfando sobre a morte na sua ressurreição, de modo a vencer o "aguilhão" dela. — 1Co 15:50, 54-56; compare isso com Os 13:14; Re 20:6.

A Destruição da Morte. Em Isaías 25:8, faz-se a promessa profética de que Deus "realmente tragará a morte para sempre, e o Soberano Senhor Jeová certamente enxugará as lágrimas de todas as faces". O aguilhão que produz a morte é o pecado (1Co 15:56), e é deste modo que todos os que têm o pecado e sua acompanhante imperfeição têm a morte operando nos seus corpos. (Ro 7:13, 23, 24) Portanto, a abolição da morte exige a abolição do que produz a morte: o pecado. Por se eliminarem da humanidade obediente os últimos vestígios do pecado, a autoridade da morte será abolida e a própria morte será destruída, e isto há de ser realizado durante o reinado de Cristo. (1Co 15:24-26) Deste modo, "não haverá mais" a morte causada à raça humana pela transgressão de Adão. (Ro 5:12; Re 21:3, 4) Sua destruição é figurativamente comparada a ela ser lançada num "lago de fogo". — Re 20:14; veja LAGO DE FOGO.

Segunda Morte. "O lago de fogo", no qual são lançados a morte, o Hades, a "fera" simbólica e "o falso profeta", Satanás, seus demônios e os persistentes praticantes da iniquidade na terra, é mostrado significar "a segunda morte". (Re 20:10, 14, 15; 21:8; Mt 25:41) Inicialmente, a morte resultou da transgressão de Adão e foi assim transmitida à humanidade; portanto, "a segunda morte" deve ser diferente desta morte herdada. À base dos textos citados, é evidente que ser livrado da "segunda morte" é impossível. A situação daqueles que estão na "segunda morte" corresponde ao resultado do que se avisa em textos tais como Hebreus 6:4-8; 10:26, 27; e Mateus 12:32. Por outro lado, os representados como obtendo "a coroa da vida" e como tendo parte na "primeira ressurreição", estão livres de qualquer possibilidade de dano causado pela segunda morte. (Re 2:10, 11) Estes, que hão de reinar com Cristo, recebem a imortalidade (isenção da morte) e incorrupção, e, por isso, estão fora do alcance da "autoridade" da segunda morte. — 1Co 15:50-54; Re 20:6; compare isso com Jo 8:51.

Uso Ilustrativo. A morte é personificada como "rei" que domina a humanidade desde o tempo de Adão (Ro 5:14), junto com o domínio do Rei Pecado. (Ro 6:12) Assim, estes reis são mencionados como exercendo sua "lei" sobre os que estão sujeitos ao seu domínio. (Ro 8:2) Com a vinda de Cristo e a provisão do resgate, a benignidade imerecida passou a exercer um reinado superior sobre os que aceitam a dádiva de Deus, "visando a vida eterna". — Ro 5:15-17, 21.

Embora os homens, desconsiderando os propósitos de Deus, talvez tentem fazer seu próprio pacto com o Rei Morte, esse falhará. (Is 28:15, 18) A morte, igual a um cavaleiro que cavalga atrás da guerra e da fome, é retratada como causando a mortandade em massa aos habitantes da terra. — Re 6:8; compare isso com Je 9:21, 22.

Os espiritualmente doentes ou aflitos são descritos como "chegando aos portões da morte" (Sal 107:17-20; compare isso com Jó 38:17; Sal 9:13), e aqueles que passam por tais "portões" entram na figurativa "casa de reunião para todo o vivente" (Jó 30:23; compare isso com 2Sa 12:21-23), a qual tem "quartos interiores" (Pr 7:27) e uma capacidade nunca plenamente esgotada para receber vítimas. (Hab 2:5) Aqueles que vão para o Seol são como ovelhas pastoreadas pela morte. — Sal 49:14.

As "ânsias da morte". Em Atos 2:24, o apóstolo Pedro diz a respeito de Jesus que se lhe 'afrouxaram as ânsias da morte, porque não era possível que ele continuasse a ser segurado por ela'. A palavra grega (o·dín), aqui traduzida por "ânsias", é em outro lugar usada para indicar dores de parto (1Te 5:3), mas pode significar também esforço penoso, dor, calamidade ou aflição em geral. (Mt 24:8) Adicionalmente, foi usada pelos tradutores da Septuaginta grega para verter a palavra hebraica hhé·vel, em textos onde o sentido evidente é o de "corda". (2Sa 22:6; Sal 18:4, 5) Uma palavra hebraica aparentada significa "dores de parto", o que levou alguns comentadores e lexicógrafos a sugerir que o termo grego (o·dín), usado por Lucas em Atos 2:24, também tinha este sentido duplo, pelo menos no grego helenístico dos tempos apostólicos. De modo que algumas traduções vertem a frase, neste versículo, por "os grilhões [ou: os laços] da morte". (ALA; CBC; IBB; LR; Ne) Em numerosos textos, o perigo da morte é representado como procurando enlaçar o ameaçado por ela (Pr 13:14; 14:27) com cordas que o cercam e o arrastam às "circunstâncias aflitivas do Seol". (Sal 116:3) Embora outros textos, já considerados, mostrem que não há consciência na morte, e indicam que Jesus não estava sofrendo dor literal enquanto morto, todavia, a morte é apresentada como experiência amarga e aflitiva (1Sa 15:32; Sal 55:4; Ec 7:26), não apenas pela dor que usualmente a precede (Sal 73:4, 5), mas pela perda de toda a atividade e liberdade, causada pelas suas garras paralisadoras. Portanto, talvez fosse neste sentido que a ressurreição de Jesus lhe 'afrouxou' as "ânsias da morte", libertando-o das suas garras aflitivas.

Mudança de estado ou condição espiritual. A morte é usada para ilustrar a condição espiritualmente morta do mundo em geral, de modo que Jesus podia falar sobre 'os mortos enterrarem os mortos', e o apóstolo Paulo podia referir-se à mulher que vive para a gratificação sensual como "morta, embora esteja vivendo". (Lu 9:60; 1Ti 5:6; Ef 2:1) E, visto que a morte física livra a pessoa de todas as dívidas ou obrigações existentes até aquele momento (Ro 6:7), ser o cristão liberto ou livrado do pecado (Ro 6:2, 11) e da condenação da Lei mosaica (Ro 7:2-6) também é comparado à morte, 'morrendo' ele para com a sua anterior situação e obrigações. Quem morre assim em sentido figurado, é claro, ainda está fisicamente vivo e está deste modo livre para seguir a Cristo como escravo da justiça. — Ro 6:18-20; Gál 5:1.

O uso da morte para representar uma mudança de estado ou condição da pessoa lança luz sobre visões proféticas, tais como a no livro de Ezequiel, em que os do povo de Deus, no exílio em Babilônia, são comparados a ossos ressequidos, e a pessoas mortas e enterradas. (Ez 37:1-12) Eles haviam de "reviver" e ser estabelecidos mais uma vez no seu próprio solo. (Ez 37:13, 14) Ilustrações comparáveis são encontradas em Revelação (Apocalipse) 11:3, 7-12, e Lucas 16:19-31.

MOSCA [hebr.: zevúv, moscas]. Inseto de duas asas (díptero) do gênero Musca, que usualmente deposita os ovos sobre matéria em decomposição ou sobre dejetos. Os diminutos pelos que cobrem o corpo e as pernas da mosca, bem como as almofadas de pelos pegajosos em cada pé, transportam bactérias — milhões delas, no caso duma única mosca-doméstica.

"Moscas mortas fazem o óleo do fabricante de unguento cheirar mal, borbulhar", escreveu o congregante. A putrefação de moscas mortas faria com que o óleo exalasse um cheiro ruim e que fermentasse, arruinando-o, assim como um pouco de tolice prejudicaria a reputação de alguém conhecido por sua sabedoria e glória. — Ec 10:1.

Isaías fala de Jeová assobiar às moscas na extremidade dos canais do Nilo, do Egito, e às abelhas da terra da Assíria, para que pousem nos escarpados vales de torrente, nas fendas dos rochedos, nas moitas de espinhos e em todos os bebedouros de Judá. Evidentemente, isso deve ser entendido em sentido figurado, as moscas denotando os exércitos do Egito e as abelhas, os exércitos dos assírios. — Is 7:18, 19.

O nome do deus venerado pelos filisteus em Ecrom, "Baal-Zebube", significa "Dono das Moscas". Isto tem dado margem à ideia de que seus adoradores talvez o achassem capaz de controlar este inseto. Visto que o fornecimento de oráculos era associado com Baal-Zebube, outros sugeriram que o nome talvez denote que este deus fornecia oráculos por meio do voo ou do zumbido da mosca. — 2Rs 1:2, 6; veja BAAL-ZEBUBE; MOSCÃO.

MOSCÃO [hebr.: 'a·róv]. Há alguma incerteza quanto ao inseto específico designado pela palavra original hebraica que ocorre nas Escrituras com referência à quarta praga sobre o Egito, a primeira de que os israelitas foram poupados em Gósen. (Êx 8:21, 22, 24, 29, 31; Sal 78:45; 105:31) 'A·róv tem sido traduzido de forma diversa por "moscão" (JB, NM, Ro), "besouro" (Yg), "moscas" (BJ, LEB, So), "borrachudos" (AT) e "mosca-dos-estábulos" (ou "mosca-do-gado") (LXX).

O termo "moscão" pode incluir as diversas espécies de mutuca e de moscardo. As fêmeas do moscardo picam a pele dos animais bem como do homem e então sugam o sangue. No estágio de larva, a mosca-do-berne vive como parasita no corpo de animais e do homem; o tipo que infesta humanos é encontrado nos trópicos. Portanto, uma praga de moscões deve ter causado grande sofrimento aos egípcios e seu gado, e, em certos casos, até a morte.

MOSERÁ, MOSEROTE. Lugar onde os israelitas acampavam quando Arão morreu. (De 10:6) Encontrava-se evidentemente perto do monte Hor (em que Arão morreu), mas desconhece-se sua localização exata. (Núm 33:38) A forma plural de Moserá, "Moserote", ocorre em Números 33:30, 31, e, pelo visto, refere-se a um anterior acampamento israelita ali.

MOSQUITO [hebr.: qé·rets]. Qualquer de uma grande variedade de insetos de duas asas, com cabeça redonda e pernas longas, finas e de cinco juntas. As fêmeas possuem forte probóscide, que as habilita a picar a pele do homem e de animais, a fim de sugar o sangue. A palavra hebraica traduzida por "mosquito" (NM) ocorre como substantivo apenas em Jeremias 46:20, onde é usada para representar os babilônios sob Nabucodonosor, o inimigo ao norte, que viria contra o Egito, a "novilha bonita".

MOSTARDA [gr.: si·na·pi]. Erva de crescimento rápido, a cuja semente ou grão Jesus se referiu numa ilustração sobre o Reino dos céus (Mt 13:31, 32; Mr 4:30-32; Lu 13:18, 19; veja ILUSTRAÇÕES) e ao salientar que mesmo apenas um pouco de fé já pode realizar muito. (Mt 17:20; Lu 17:6) Diversas espécies de mostardeiras são encontradas em forma espontânea na Palestina, sendo a variedade comumente cultivada a mostarda-negra (Brassica nigra). Em solo rico, a semente, depois de alguns meses, pode tornar-se uma planta arbórea de até 4,5 m de altura, com um caule central da grossura do braço de um homem. As flores das mostardeiras são amarelas, e as folhas têm bordas um tanto irregulares e são de cor verde-escuro. As vagens desenvolvidas contêm uma fileira de sementes, sendo as da mostarda-negra marrom-escuras. No outono, os caules e os ramos da mostardeira endurecem e se tornam rígidos, bastante fortes para sustentar pássaros tais como pintarroxos e tentilhões, que se alimentam dessas sementes.

Ao passo que alguns talvez argumentem que o grão de mostarda não é "a menor" de todas as sementes, sendo menores as das orquídeas, e que realmente não se torna "uma árvore", deve-se ter em mente que Jesus usava termos conhecidos aos seus ouvintes. No que se referia aos ouvintes de Jesus, o grão de mostarda, deveras, estava entre as menores sementes plantadas, e é digno de nota que os árabes chamam de "árvores" plantas menores do que a mostardeira. — Mt 13:31, 32.

MOZA, I [Saída].

1. Descendente de Judá e filho de Calebe com sua concubina Efá. — 1Cr 2:46.

2. Benjamita e descendente do Rei Saul. Era filho de Zinri e pai de Bineia. — 1Cr 8:33-37; 9:42, 43.

MOZA, II [Drenado (Prensado; Espremido)]. Cidade benjamita. (Jos 18:21, 26) Acha-se que o antigo lugar ficava na aldeia de Qalunyah (Mevasseret Ziyyon), ou perto dela, que se encontra a uns 7 km ao ONO do monte do Templo em Jerusalém. Asas de jarros com o nome de Moza estampado nelas foram encontradas em Jericó e em Tell en-Nasbeh.

MULHER. Pessoa humana adulta do sexo feminino, que já passou da puberdade. A expressão hebraica para mulher é 'ish·sháh (literalmente: homem feminino), que também é traduzida "esposa". De modo similar, o termo grego gy·né é traduzido tanto "mulher" como "esposa".

Criação. Antes de o homem Adão pedir uma companheira humana, Deus, seu Criador, tomou providências. Depois de colocar Adão no jardim do Éden e dar-lhe a lei a respeito da árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau, Jeová disse: "Não é bom que o homem continue só. Vou fazer-lhe uma ajudadora como complemento dele." (Gên 2:18) Ele não obrigou o homem a procurar uma companheira entre os animais, mas trouxe os animais a Adão para este dar-lhes nome. Adão não tinha inclinação para a bestialidade, e era capaz de determinar que entre estes não havia companheira adequada para ele. (Gên 2:19, 20) "Por isso, Jeová Deus fez cair um profundo sono sobre o homem, e, enquanto ele dormia, tirou-lhe uma das costelas e fechou então a carne sobre o seu lugar. E da costela que havia tirado do homem, Jeová Deus passou a construir uma mulher e a trazê-la ao homem. O homem disse então: 'Esta, por fim, é osso dos meus ossos e carne da minha carne. Esta será chamada Mulher, porque do homem foi esta tomada.'" — Gên 2:21-23.

Posição e Responsabilidades. A mulher, criada a partir do homem, dependera do homem para ser trazida à existência. Sendo parte do homem, "uma só carne" com ele, e sendo complemento e ajudadora dele, estava sujeita a ele qual cabeça. Ela também estava sob a lei de Deus, dada a Adão, a respeito da árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau. Tinha a responsabilidade de se empenhar para o bem do homem. Juntos deviam ter filhos e exercer domínio sobre os animais. — Gên 1:28; 2:24.

Visto que o normal para as mulheres nos tempos bíblicos era casar-se, os textos bíblicos que tratam das responsabilidades da mulher usualmente se referem à sua posição como esposa. O dever primário de todas as mulheres em Israel era servir a Jeová Deus na verdadeira adoração. Abigail, que se tornou esposa de Davi após o falecimento do seu imprestável marido Nabal, é um exemplo disso. Embora Nabal adotasse um proceder mau, negando-se a usar seus bens materiais para ajudar Davi, o ungido de Jeová, Abigail dava-se conta de que, como esposa de Nabal, não era obrigada a seguir seu marido em tal ação contrária à vontade de Jeová. Jeová a abençoou quando a ajuda que prestou ao ungido dele mostrou a persistência dela na adoração correta. — 1Sa 25:23-31, 39-42.

Em segundo lugar, a mulher devia obedecer ao marido. Ela tinha a responsabilidade de trabalhar arduamente para o bem da família e de trazer honra ao seu cabeça marital. Isto resultaria na maior glória para ela. Provérbios 14:1 diz: "A mulher realmente sábia edificou a sua casa, mas a tola a derruba com as suas próprias mãos." Sempre devia falar bem de seu marido e aumentar o respeito dos outros por ele, e ele devia poder orgulhar-se dela. "A esposa capaz é uma coroa para o seu dono, mas aquela que age vergonhosamente é como podridão nos seus ossos." (Pr 12:4) A posição honrosa e os privilégios dela como esposa, junto com as bênçãos que recebe por sua fidelidade, diligência e sabedoria, são descritos no capítulo 31 de Provérbios. — Veja ESPOSA.

A mulher hebreia que era mãe tinha muito que ver com ensinar aos filhos justiça, respeito e diligência, e frequentemente empenhava-se muito em dar conselhos e em influenciar os filhos mais velhos para o bem. (Gên 27:5-10; Êx 2:7-10; Pr 1:8; 31:1; 2Ti 1:5; 3:14, 15) As moças, em especial, eram treinadas para serem boas esposas por aprender da mãe as artes de cozinhar, de tecer e da administração geral da casa, ao passo que o pai ensinava ao filho um ofício. As esposas também tinham liberdade para se expressar perante o marido (Gên 16:5, 6) e às vezes ajudavam-no a tomar decisões certas. — Gên 21:9-13; 27:46–28:4.

Usualmente eram os pais que escolhiam a noiva para um homem. Mas, sem dúvida, sob a Lei, como aconteceu anteriormente no caso de Rebeca, a moça tinha a oportunidade de expressar seus sentimentos e sua vontade no assunto. (Gên 24:57, 58) Embora se praticasse a poligamia, Deus ainda não tendo agido para restaurar o estado original da monogamia quando se estabeleceu a congregação cristã (Gên 2:23, 24; Mt 19:4-6; 1Ti 3:2), regulamentaram-se as relações polígamas.

Até mesmo as leis militares favoreciam tanto a esposa como o marido, eximindo o homem recém-casado durante um ano. Isto oferecia ao casal a oportunidade de exercer seu direito de ter um filho, o que seria de grande consolo para a mãe durante a ausência do marido, e ainda mais, caso ele morresse em batalha. — De 20:7; 24:5.

As leis aplicavam-se com vigor igual tanto aos homens como às mulheres culpados de adultério, incesto, bestialidade e outros crimes. (Le 18:6, 23; 20:10-12; De 22:22) As mulheres não deviam usar roupa de homem, nem o homem vestir-se de mulher, prática que podia abrir o caminho para a imoralidade, inclusive o homossexualismo. (De 22:5) As mulheres podiam participar nos benefícios dos sábados, das leis que governavam os nazireus, nas festividades, e, em geral, de todas as provisões da Lei. (Êx 20:10; Núm 6:2; De 12:18; 16:11, 14) A mãe, bem como o pai, deviam ser honrados e obedecidos. — Le 19:3; 20:9; De 5:16; 27:16.

Privilégios na Congregação Cristã. Para os convocados por Deus para a chamada celestial (He 3:1), para serem co-herdeiros de Jesus Cristo, não há distinção entre homens e mulheres, em sentido espiritual. O apóstolo escreve: "Todos vós sois, de fato, filhos de Deus, por intermédio da vossa fé em Cristo . . . não há nem macho nem fêmea; pois todos vós sois um só em união com Cristo Jesus." (Gál 3:26-28) Todos estes precisam passar por uma transformação de natureza por ocasião da ressurreição, sendo feitos juntamente partícipes da "natureza divina", estado em que ninguém será mulher, porque não há sexo feminino entre as criaturas espirituais, sendo o sexo o meio provido por Deus para a reprodução das criaturas terrestres. — 2Pe 1:4.

Proclamadoras das boas novas. As mulheres, chamadas de "filhas" e de "servas" na profecia de Joel, estavam entre aqueles que receberam os dons do espírito santo, no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC. Daquele dia em diante, as mulheres cristãs favorecidas com estes dons falavam línguas estrangeiras, que não entendiam antes, e elas 'profetizavam', não necessariamente fazendo predições de importantes eventos futuros, mas falando das verdades bíblicas. — Jl 2:28, 29; At 1:13-15; 2:1-4, 13-18; veja PROFETISA.

Falarem das verdades bíblicas a outros não era limitado a concrentes. Antes de Jesus ascender ao céu, ele dissera aos seus seguidores: "Ao chegar sobre vós o espírito santo, recebereis poder e sereis testemunhas de mim tanto em Jerusalém como em toda a Judeia e Samaria, e até à parte mais distante da terra." (At 1:8) Depois, no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, quando o espírito santo foi derramado sobre eles, todo o grupo de uns 120 discípulos (inclusive algumas mulheres) receberam poderes como suas testemunhas (At 1:14, 15; 2:3, 4); e a profecia de Joel (2:28, 29), citada nesta ocasião por Pedro, incluía uma referência a tais mulheres. De modo que eram contadas entre os que tinham a responsabilidade de ser testemunhas de Jesus tanto "em Jerusalém como em toda a Judeia e Samaria, e até à parte mais distante da terra". Coerente com isso, o apóstolo Paulo, mais tarde, relatou que Evódia e Síntique, em Filipos, se 'haviam esforçado lado a lado com ele nas boas novas'; e Lucas menciona Priscila como participando com o marido Áquila em 'expor o caminho de Deus' em Éfeso. — Fil 4:2, 3; At 18:26.

Reuniões congregacionais. Havia reuniões em que essas mulheres podiam orar ou profetizar, desde que usassem uma cobertura na cabeça. (1Co 11:3-16; veja COBERTURA PARA A CABEÇA.) No entanto, nas reuniões que evidentemente eram públicas, quando "a congregação inteira", bem como "incrédulos", se reunia num só lugar (1Co 14:23-25), as mulheres deviam 'ficar caladas'. Se 'quisessem aprender algo, podiam interrogar seu próprio marido em casa, pois era ignominioso para uma mulher falar na congregação'. — 1Co 14:31-35.

Embora não se permitisse à mulher ensinar numa reunião congregacional, ela podia ensinar fora da congregação pessoas que desejassem aprender a verdade da Bíblia e as boas novas sobre Jesus Cristo (veja Sal 68:11), bem como podia ser 'instrutora do que é bom' para mulheres mais jovens (e os filhos) dentro da congregação. (Tit 2:3-5) Mas ela não devia exercer autoridade sobre o homem, nem discutir com homens, por exemplo, nas reuniões da congregação. Devia lembrar-se do que aconteceu com Eva, e de que Deus expressou a questão da posição da mulher depois de Adão e Eva terem pecado. — 1Ti 2:11-14; Gên 3:16.

Homens servem como superintendentes, servos ministeriais. Na consideração das "dádivas em homens" feitas por Cristo à congregação, não há menção de mulheres. As palavras "apóstolos", "profetas", "evangelizadores", "pastores" e "instrutores" estão todas no masculino. (Ef 4:8, 11) Efésios 4:11 é traduzido na versão American Translation: "E ele nos deu alguns homens como apóstolos, alguns como profetas, alguns como missionários, alguns como pastores e instrutores." — Veja Mo, NM; também Sal 68:18.

De pleno acordo com isso, quando o apóstolo Paulo escreveu a Timóteo sobre as qualificações para os cargos de serviço de "superintendentes" (e·pí·sko·poi), que também eram "anciãos" (pre·sbý·te·roi), e de "servos ministeriais" (di·á·ko·noi) na congregação, ele declarou especificamente que estes tinham de ser homens, e, se casados, 'maridos de uma só esposa'. Nenhuma das considerações deste assunto pelos apóstolos considera o cargo de "diaconisa" (di·a·kó·nis·sa). — 1Ti 3:1-13; Tit 1:5-9; compare isso com At 20:17, 28; Fil 1:1.

Embora se mencione Febe (Ro 16:1) como "ministra" (di·á·ko·nos, sem o artigo definido grego), é evidente que ela não era serva ministerial designada na congregação, porque as Escrituras não fazem nenhuma provisão para isso. O apóstolo não disse que a congregação devia receber instruções dela, mas, antes, que devia acolhê-la bem e 'auxiliá-la em qualquer assunto em que pudesse necessitar deles'. (Ro 16:2) Referir-se Paulo a ela como ministra evidentemente tinha que ver com a atividade dela na divulgação das boas novas, e ele chamava Febe de ministra associada com a congregação de Cencreia. — Veja At 2:17, 18.

No lar. A mulher é descrita nas Escrituras como "um vaso mais fraco, o feminino". Deve ser tratada concordemente pelo marido. (1Pe 3:7) Ela tem muitos privilégios, tais como ensinar os filhos e em geral cuidar dos assuntos domésticos, sob a aprovação e a direção do marido. (1Ti 5:14; 1Pe 3:1, 2; Pr 1:8; 6:20; cap. 31) Ela tem o dever de estar em sujeição ao marido. (Ef 5:22-24) Deve-lhe os direitos conjugais. — 1Co 7:3-5.

Adorno. A Bíblia, em parte alguma, condena o adorno na vestimenta ou o uso de joias, mas ela ordena que os fatores determinantes devem ser a modéstia e o decoro. O apóstolo manda que a vestimenta feminina seja bem arrumada e que as mulheres se adornem "com modéstia e bom juízo". Não se deve dar ênfase no estilo de cabelo, no adorno e na roupa cara, mas, antes, nas coisas que contribuem para a beleza espiritual, a saber, em "boas obras" e na "pessoa secreta do coração, na vestimenta incorruptível dum espírito quieto e brando". — 1Ti 2:9, 10; 1Pe 3:3, 4; compare isso com Pr 11:16, 22; 31:30.

O apóstolo Pedro diz a tais mulheres submissas, que demonstram uma conduta casta, respeitosa e piedosa, que "vós vos tornastes filhas [de Sara], desde que persistais em fazer o bem e não temais qualquer causa para terror". De modo que tais mulheres têm uma grandiosa oportunidade, não por descenderem da fiel Sara em sentido carnal, mas por imitá-la. Sara teve o privilégio de dar à luz Isaque e tornar-se antepassada de Jesus Cristo, o qual é primariamente o 'descendente [literalmente: semente] de Abraão'. (Gál 3:16) Assim, as esposas cristãs, que mostram ser figurativamente filhas de Sara mesmo para com maridos incrédulos, com certeza receberão uma rica recompensa das mãos de Jeová. — 1Pe 3:6; Gên 18:11, 12; 1Co 7:12-16.

Mulheres Ministravam a Jesus. Mulheres usufruíam privilégios relacionados com o ministério terrestre de Jesus, mas não os privilégios concedidos aos 12 apóstolos e aos 70 evangelistas. (Mt 10:1-8; Lu 10:1-7) Diversas mulheres ministravam a Jesus de seus bens. (Lu 8:1-3) Uma delas ungiu-o alguns dias antes da morte dele, e, por causa deste ato, Jesus prometeu: "Onde quer que se pregarem estas boas novas em todo o mundo, o que esta mulher fez também será contado em lembrança dela." (Mt 26:6-13; Jo 12:1-8) Havia mulheres entre aqueles a quem Jesus apareceu de modo especial no dia da sua ressurreição, e havia mulheres entre os a quem ele apareceu mais tarde. — Mt 28:1-10; Jo 20:1-18.

Uso Figurado. Em vários casos, mulheres são usadas em sentido simbólico para representar congregações ou organizações de pessoas. São também usadas para simbolizar cidades. A glorificada congregação de Cristo é chamada de sua "noiva", também de "a cidade santa, Nova Jerusalém". — Jo 3:29; Re 21:2, 9; 19:7; compare isso com Ef 5:23-27; Mt 9:15; Mr 2:20; Lu 5:34, 35.

Jeová dirigiu-se à congregação ou nação de Israel como sua "mulher", sendo ele como "dono marital" dela em razão da relação entre eles pelo pacto da Lei. Nas profecias de restauração, ele fala deste modo a Israel, às vezes dirigindo suas palavras a Jerusalém, a cidade governante da nação. Os "filhos" e as "filhas" (Is 43:5-7) desta mulher eram os membros da nação de Israel. — Is 51:17-23; 52:1, 2; 54:1, 5, 6, 11-13; 66:10-12; Je 3:14; 31:31, 32.

Em muitos casos, outras nações ou cidades são mencionadas no feminino, ou como mulheres. Algumas são: Moabe (Je 48:41), Egito (Je 46:11), Rabá de Amom (Je 49:2), Babilônia (Je 51:13) e a simbólica Babilônia, a Grande. — Re 17:1-6; veja BABILÔNIA, A GRANDE; FILHA.

A "mulher" de Gênesis 3:15. Na ocasião em que Deus sentenciou os pais da humanidade, Adão e Eva, ele fez a promessa dum descendente, ou semente, que seria dado à luz pela "mulher" e que esmiuçaria a cabeça da serpente. (Gên 3:15) Este era um "segredo sagrado" que Deus se propôs revelar no seu tempo devido. (Col 1:26) Alguns fatores envolvidos nas circunstâncias existentes na época da promessa profética fornecem a chave para a identificação desta "mulher". Visto que a semente dela devia esmiuçar a cabeça da serpente, ela teria de ser mais do que mera semente humana, porque as Escrituras mostram que Deus não dirigiu as suas palavras a uma serpente literal no solo. Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 12:9 se mostra que a "serpente" é Satanás, o Diabo, uma pessoa espiritual. Por conseguinte, a "mulher" da profecia não podia ser uma mulher humana, tal como Maria, mãe de Jesus. O apóstolo, em Gálatas 4:21-31, lança luz sobre este assunto. — Veja SEMENTE (DESCENDENTE).

Nesta passagem, o apóstolo fala da esposa livre de Abraão e da sua concubina Agar, e diz que Agar corresponde à cidade literal de Jerusalém sob o pacto da Lei, sendo os "filhos" dela os cidadãos da nação judaica. Sara, esposa de Abraão, diz Paulo, corresponde à "Jerusalém de cima", que é a mãe espiritual de Paulo e dos seus associados gerados pelo espírito. Esta "mãe" celestial seria também a "mãe" de Cristo, que é o mais velho dentre os seus irmãos espirituais, que têm todos a Deus como pai. — He 2:11, 12; veja LIVRE, MULHER.

Segue-se de forma lógica e em harmonia com as Escrituras que a "mulher" de Gênesis 3:15 seria uma "mulher" espiritual. E, correspondendo a que a "noiva", ou "esposa", de Cristo não é uma mulher individual, mas uma composta, constituída de muitos membros espirituais (Re 21:9), a "mulher" que dá à luz os filhos espirituais de Deus, a 'esposa' de Deus (profeticamente predita nas palavras de Isaías e Jeremias, conforme já citadas), é constituída de muitas pessoas espirituais. É um corpo composto de pessoas, uma organização, sim, uma celestial.

Esta "mulher" é descrita na visão de João, no capítulo 12 de Revelação. Mostra-se que ela dá à luz um filho varão, um governante, que há de "pastorear todas as nações com vara de ferro". (Veja Sal 2:6-9; 110:1, 2.) Esta visão foi dada a João muito depois do nascimento humano de Jesus e também depois da unção deste como o Messias de Deus. Visto que obviamente se trata da mesma pessoa, deve ter referência, não ao nascimento humano de Jesus, mas a outro evento, a saber, ser ele empossado no poder do Reino. De modo que aqui se retrata o nascimento do Reino messiânico de Deus.

Mais tarde, mostra-se Satanás perseguindo a "mulher" e travando guerra com "os remanescentes da sua semente". (Re 12:13, 17) Sendo a "mulher" celestial, e Satanás, nesta ocasião, já tendo sido lançado para a terra (Re 12:7-9), ele não podia atingir as pessoas celestiais que constituem a "mulher", mas podia atingir os remanescentes da "semente" dela, os irmãos de Jesus Cristo ainda na terra. Foi deste modo que ele perseguiu a "mulher".

Outros usos. Ao predizer que sobreviriam a Israel condições de fome se desobedecesse e violasse o Seu pacto, Deus disse: "Dez mulheres cozerão vosso pão em apenas um forno e darão vosso pão de volta pelo peso." A fome seria tão grande, que dez mulheres precisariam de apenas um forno, ao passo que normalmente cada uma delas usaria um. — Le 26:26.

Depois de avisar Israel das calamidades que lhe sobreviriam por causa da sua infidelidade, Jeová disse por meio do seu profeta Isaías: "E sete mulheres segurarão realmente um só homem, naquele dia, dizendo: 'Comeremos o nosso próprio pão e vestiremos as nossas próprias capas; apenas sejamos chamadas pelo teu nome, para tirar o nosso vitupério.' " (Is 4:1) Nos dois versículos precedentes (Is 3:25, 26), Deus havia indicado que os homens de Israel cairiam na guerra. De modo que estava falando a Israel sobre a falta de homens que tais condições causariam na nação, criando uma escassez tal, que diversas mulheres se prenderiam a um só homem. Elas se contentariam de assumir o nome dele e de receber um pouco de atenção masculina, mesmo que tivessem de compartilhá-lo com outras mulheres. Aceitariam a poligamia ou o concubinato para terem uma pequena participação na vida dum homem. Assim se eliminaria um pouco do vitupério da viuvez ou da condição de não casada, e sem filho.

Numa profecia de consolo para Israel, Jeová disse: "Até quando te virarás para este e para aquele lado, ó filha infiel? Pois Jeová criou uma coisa nova na terra: A mera fêmea cercará estreitamente o varão vigoroso." ("A mulher seduz o homem!" Bíblia Sagrada, Edição Pastoral) (Je 31:22) Até então, Israel, com quem Deus estava numa relação marital em razão do pacto da Lei, 'virava-se para este lado e para aquele lado' em infidelidade. Agora, Jeová convida a "virgem de Israel" a colocar marcos de estrada e postes indicadores para guiá-la de volta e para fixar seu coração na estrada principal de retorno. (Je 31:21) Jeová porá seu espírito nela, de modo que ela estará bem ansiosa de voltar. Assim, como a esposa cercaria estreitamente o marido, a fim de voltar a ter uma boa relação com ele, assim Israel cercaria estreitamente a Jeová Deus, a fim de voltar a ter uma boa relação com ele qual seu marido.

O "desejo de mulheres". A profecia de Daniel diz a respeito do "rei do norte": "Não dará consideração ao Deus de seus pais; e não dará consideração ao desejo de mulheres, nem a todo outro deus, porém, magnificar-se-á acima de todos os outros. Mas dará glória ao deus dos baluartes, na sua posição." (Da 11:37, 38) As "mulheres", aqui, talvez representem as nações mais fracas, as quais, como vasos mais fracos, se tornam 'criadas' do "rei do norte". Têm seus deuses que elas desejam e adoram, mas o "rei do norte" os desconsidera e presta homenagem ao deus do militarismo.

Os "gafanhotos" simbólicos. Na visão dos "gafanhotos" simbólicos em Revelação 9:1-11, estes gafanhotos são retratados como tendo "cabelo como o cabelo das mulheres". Em harmonia com o princípio bíblico de que o cabelo comprido da mulher é sinal de sujeição ao seu cabeça marital, o cabelo destes "gafanhotos" simbólicos deve representar a sujeição daqueles que eles simbolizam àquele que a profecia mostra ser seu cabeça e rei. — Veja ABADON.

144.000 'não poluídos com mulheres'. Em Revelação 14:1-4, diz-se que os 144.000 descritos como estando em pé no monte Sião, junto com o Cordeiro, foram "comprados da terra. Estes são os que não se poluíram com mulheres; de fato, são virgens". Mostra-se que eles têm uma relação mais íntima com o Cordeiro do que quaisquer outros, sendo os únicos que dominam o "novo cântico". (Re 14:1-4) Isto indica que constituem a "noiva" do Cordeiro. (Re 21:9) São pessoas espirituais, conforme revela estarem em pé no monte Sião celestial, junto com o Cordeiro. Portanto, 'não se poluírem com mulheres' e serem 'virgens' não significa que nenhum destes 144.000 se casou, porque as Escrituras não proíbem que as pessoas, na terra, que são co-herdeiros de Cristo, se casem. (1Ti 3:2; 4:1, 3) Tampouco indica que todos os 144.000 são homens, porque "não há nem macho nem fêmea", no que se refere à relação espiritual dos co-herdeiros de Cristo. (Gál 3:28) As "mulheres", portanto, têm de ser mulheres simbólicas, sem dúvida, organizações religiosas, tais como Babilônia, a Grande, e suas 'filhas', organizações de religião falsa, sendo que afiliar-se a elas e participar nelas impediria alguém de ser imaculado. (Re 17:5) Esta descrição simbólica se harmoniza com o requisito da Lei, de que o sumo sacerdote de Israel só podia tomar uma virgem por esposa, porque Jesus Cristo é o grande Sumo Sacerdote de Jeová. — Le 21:10, 14; 2Co 11:2; He 7:26.

Quanto a Jesus dirigir-se a Maria como "mulher", veja MARIA N.º 1 (Respeitada e Amada por Jesus).

MULHER LIVRE. Veja LIVRE, MULHER.

MULO [hebr.: pé·redh; pir·dáh (mula)]. Descendência híbrida dum jumento e duma égua. O corpo do mulo se assemelha ao do cavalo, mas a cabeça curta e grossa, as orelhas longas, a crina curta, os pés pequenos, e a cauda terminada num tufo de pelos compridos, são característicos do jumento. O mulo (Equus asinus mulus) combina algumas das melhores qualidades de ambos os genitores: a resistência, a robustez e o andar firme do jumento, e a força, o vigor e a coragem do cavalo. Esse animal está menos propenso a doenças do que o cavalo, mostra ter mais paciência ao carregar fardos pesados e tem uma vida muito mais longa. O asinino, descendente dum garanhão e duma jumenta, é menor do que o mulo, e não tem tanta força e beleza. Tanto o mulo como a mula, com raras exceções, são estéreis.

Estes animais estavam entre os presentes trazidos a Salomão pelos reis que desejavam ouvir a sua sabedoria. (1Rs 10:24, 25; 2Cr 9:23, 24) Outros mulos talvez fossem obtidos de mercadores, tais como os fenícios. (Ez 27:8, 9, 14) No tempo de Davi, os mulos eram usados como montaria por pessoas de destaque. A própria mula de Davi foi designada para ser usada por Salomão por ocasião da sua unção em Giom. — 2Sa 13:29; 18:9; 1Rs 1:33, 34, 38, 39.

Os mulos eram apreciados como bestas de carga. (2Rs 5:17; 1Cr 12:40) Jeová, por meio do seu profeta Isaías, indicou que os mulos seriam um dos meios de transporte para trazer seu povo espalhado a Jerusalém. (Is 66:20) Portanto, é digno de nota que, no cumprimento da profecia, os que retornaram do exílio babilônico trouxeram consigo 245 mulos, além de outras bestas de carga. — Esd 2:66; Ne 7:68.

Os humanos são aconselhados a não se transformarem em pessoas sem entendimento, iguais ao cavalo ou ao mulo, cuja fogosidade é preciso reprimir por meio de freio ou cabresto. — Sal 32:9.

MUNDO. Este é o termo costumeiro usado na tradução do termo grego kó·smos em todas as ocorrências nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, exceto em 1 Pedro 3:3, onde é vertido "adorno". "Mundo" pode significar (1) a humanidade como um todo, à parte da sua condição moral ou modo de vida, (2) a estrutura das circunstâncias humanas em que a pessoa nasce e em que vive (e, neste sentido, é às vezes bastante similar ao termo grego ai·ón, "sistema de coisas"), ou (3) as massas da humanidade à parte dos servos aprovados de Jeová.

A King James Version (Versão Rei Jaime) usa a palavra "world" ("mundo") não só para traduzir kó·smos, mas também mais três palavras gregas, em algumas das suas traduções destas (ge; ai·ón; oi·kou·mé·ne) e cinco diferentes palavras hebraicas ('é·rets; hhé·dhel; hhé·ledh; 'oh·lám; te·vél). Isto resulta numa mistura ofuscante e confusa de sentidos, que torna difícil obter o entendimento correto dos textos envolvidos. Traduções posteriores serviram para elucidar consideravelmente esta confusão.

A palavra hebraica 'é·rets e a grega ge (da qual derivam as palavras "*ge*ografia" e "*ge*ologia") significam "terra; chão; solo" (Gên 6:4; Núm 1:1; Mt 2:6; 5:5; 10:29; 13:5), embora, em alguns casos, talvez representem em sentido figurado as pessoas da Terra, como no Salmo 66:4 e em Revelação (Apocalipse) 13:3. Tanto 'oh·lám (hebr.) como ai·ón (gr.) se relacionam basicamente com um período de duração indefinida. (Gên 6:3; 17:13; Lu 1:70) Ai·ón pode também significar o "sistema de coisas" que caracteriza determinado período, era ou época. (Gál 1:4) Hhé·ledh (hebr.) tem um sentido algo similar e pode ser traduzido por termos tais como "duração da vida" e "sistema de coisas". (Jó 11:17; Sal 17:14) Oi·kou·mé·ne (gr.) significa "terra habitada" (Lu 21:26), e te·vél (hebr.) pode ser traduzido por "solo produtivo". (2Sa 22:16) Hhé·dhel (hebr.) ocorre apenas em Isaías 38:11, e na versão Almeida é traduzido por "mundo" na expressão "moradores do mundo". The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete; editado por G. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 4, p. 874) sugere a tradução "habitantes de (o mundo de) cessação", salientando que a maioria dos peritos são a favor do texto de alguns manuscritos hebraicos em que ocorre hhé·ledh em lugar de hhé·dhel. A Tradução do Novo Mundo reza "habitantes da [terra da] cessação". — Veja IDADE, ERA; SISTEMAS DE COISAS; TERRA.

"Kósmos" e Seus Vários Sentidos. O sentido básico da palavra grega kó·smos é "ordem" ou "arranjo". E ao ponto em que o conceito de beleza está relacionado com ordem e simetria, kó·smos transmite também esta ideia, e, portanto, era frequentemente usado pelos gregos para significar "adorno", em especial com relação a mulheres. Foi usado assim em 1 Pedro 3:3. Daí provém também a palavra portuguesa "cosmético". O verbo aparentado ko·smé·o tem o sentido de 'pôr em ordem', em Mateus 25:7, e o de 'adornar(-se)' ou 'decorar' em outros textos. (Mt 12:44; 23:29; Lu 11:25; 21:5; 1Ti 2:9; Tit 2:10; 1Pe 3:5; Re 21:2, 19) O adjetivo kó·smi·os, em 1 Timóteo 2:9 e 3:2, descreve aquilo que é "bem-arrumado" ou "ordeiro".

Evidentemente, porque o Universo manifesta ordem, os filósofos gregos, às vezes, aplicavam kó·smos a toda a criação visível. Todavia, não havia nenhuma unanimidade real de conceito entre eles, sendo que alguns restringiam a palavra apenas aos corpos celestes, ao passo que outros a usavam para o Universo inteiro. O uso de kó·smos para descrever a criação material como um todo ocorre em alguns escritos apócrifos (veja Sabedoria 9:9; 11:17), que foram escritos no período em que a filosofia grega se infiltrava em muitos campos judaicos. Mas nos inspirados escritos das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, este sentido está virtual ou talvez totalmente ausente. Pode parecer que alguns textos usem o termo neste sentido, tal como o do relato do discurso do apóstolo aos atenienses no Areópago. Paulo disse ali: "O Deus que fez o mundo [forma de kó·smos] e todas as coisas nele, sendo, como Este é, Senhor do céu e da terra, não mora em templos feitos por mãos." (At 17:22-24) Visto que o uso de kó·smos no sentido de universo era comum entre os gregos, Paulo talvez empregasse esse termo neste sentido. Mesmo neste caso, porém, é inteiramente possível que o usasse num dos sentidos considerados no restante deste artigo.

Relacionado com a Humanidade. A obra Synonyms of the New Testament (Sinônimos do Novo Testamento; Londres, 1961, pp. 201, 202), de Richard C. Trench, depois de apresentar o uso filosófico de kó·smos para se referir ao Universo, diz: "A este significado de κόσμος [kó·smos], como o universo material, . . . seguiu-se o de κόσμος como a estrutura externa das coisas, em que o homem vive e se locomove, que existe para ele e da qual ele constitui o centro moral (João xvi. 21; I Cor. xiv. 10; I João iii. 17); . . . e depois os próprios homens, a totalidade das pessoas que vivem no mundo (João i. 29; iv. 42; II Cor. v. 19); e, além disso, e eticamente, todos os que não são da ἐκκλησία [ek·kle·si·a; a igreja ou congregação], alienados da vida de Deus e pelas obras iníquas que são inimigos para Ele (I Cor. i. 20, 21; II Cor. vii. 10; Tia. iv. 4)."

De modo similar, o livro Studies in the Vocabulary of the Greek New Testament (Estudos do Vocabulário do Novo Testamento Grego; 1946, p. 57), de K. S. Wuest, cita o perito em grego Cremer como dizendo: "Visto que kósmos é considerado como aquela ordem de coisas cujo centro é o homem, dirige-se a atenção principalmente a ele, e kósmos denota a humanidade dentro desta ordem de coisas, a humanidade conforme ela se manifesta nesta ordem e por meio dela (Mt 18:7)."

Toda a humanidade. Kó·smos, ou o "mundo", portanto, está intimamente relacionado e vinculado com a humanidade. É assim na literatura secular grega e é assim especialmente nas Escrituras. Quando Jesus disse que o homem que anda à luz do dia "vê a luz deste mundo [forma de kó·smos]" (Jo 11:9), talvez pareça que "mundo" se refere simplesmente ao planeta Terra, que tem o Sol como sua fonte de luz do dia. Todavia, as próximas palavras dele falam de o homem andando à noite, que colide com algo "porque a luz não está nele". (Jo 11:10) É primariamente para a humanidade que Deus deu o Sol e os outros corpos celestes. (Veja Gên 1:14; Sal 8:3-8; Mt 5:45.) De modo similar, usando a luz em sentido espiritual, Jesus disse aos seus seguidores que eles seriam "a luz do mundo" (Mt 5:14), certamente não querendo dizer que eles iluminariam o planeta, porque prossegue mostrando que a iluminação deles seria para a humanidade, "perante os homens". (Mt 5:16; compare isso com Jo 3:19; 8:12; 9:5; 12:46; Fil 2:15.) A pregação das boas novas "em todo o mundo" (Mt 26:13) significa também pregá-las à humanidade como um todo, assim como em algumas línguas a expressão "todo o mundo" é a maneira comum de dizer "todos" (também em francês tout le monde; em espanhol todo el mundo). — Veja Jo 8:26; 18:20; Ro 1:8; Col 1:5, 6.

Num sentido básico, portanto, kó·smos se refere a toda a humanidade. Portanto, as Escrituras descrevem o kó·smos, ou mundo, como culpado de pecado (Jo 1:29; Ro 3:19; 5:12, 13) e necessitado de um salvador para dar-lhe vida (Jo 4:42; 6:33, 51; 12:47; 1Jo 4:14), o que é aplicável apenas à humanidade, não à criação inanimada, nem aos animais. Este é o mundo que Deus amou tanto, que "deu o seu Filho unigênito, a fim de que todo aquele que nele exercer fé não seja destruído, mas tenha vida eterna". (Jo 3:16, 17; compare isso com 2Co 5:19; 1Ti 1:15; 1Jo 2:2.) Este mundo da humanidade constitui o campo em que Jesus Cristo lançou a semente excelente, "os filhos do reino". — Mt 13:24, 37, 38.

Quando Paulo diz que as "qualidades invisíveis [de Deus] são claramente vistas desde a criação do mundo em diante, porque são percebidas por meio das coisas feitas", ele deve querer dizer desde a criação da humanidade, porque somente quando a humanidade apareceu é que havia na Terra mentes capazes de 'perceber' essas qualidades invisíveis por meio da criação visível. — Ro 1:20.

De modo similar, João 1:10 diz a respeito de Jesus que "o mundo [kó·smos] veio à existência por intermédio dele". Embora seja verdade que Jesus participou na produção de todas as coisas, inclusive dos céus e do planeta Terra, e de todas as coisas nele, kó·smos aplica-se aqui primariamente à humanidade, em cuja produção Jesus também participou. (Veja Jo 1:3; Col 1:15-17; Gên 1:26.) Por isso diz o restante do versículo: "Mas o mundo [isto é, o mundo da humanidade] não o conheceu."

"A fundação do mundo." Esta nítida vinculação de kó·smos com o mundo da humanidade ajuda também a entender o que se quer dizer com "a fundação do mundo", mencionada em diversos textos. Estes textos falam de certas coisas ocorrendo "desde a fundação do mundo". Essas incluem o 'derramamento de sangue dos profetas' a partir do tempo de Abel, um "reino preparado", e 'nomes inscritos no rolo da vida'. (Lu 11:50, 51; Mt 25:34; Re 13:8; 17:8; compare isso com Mt 13:35; He 9:26.) Tais coisas se relacionam com a vida e a atividade humanas, e, portanto, "a fundação do mundo" deve relacionar-se com o começo da humanidade, não da criação inanimada ou da criação animal. Hebreus 4:3 mostra que as obras criativas de Deus não foram então iniciadas, mas estavam "acabadas desde a fundação do mundo". Visto que Eva evidentemente era a última das obras criativas, terrestres, de Jeová, a fundação do mundo não podia precedê-la.

Conforme mostrado sob ABEL (N.º 1) e PRESCIÊNCIA, PREDETERMINAÇÃO (Predeterminação do Messias), o termo grego (ka·ta·bo·lé) para "fundação" pode referir-se à fecundação humana. Ka·ta·bo·lé significa literalmente "o lançamento para baixo [de semente]", e em Hebreus 11:11 pode ser traduzido por "conceber" (Al, CBC, NM). Seu uso ali evidentemente se refere a Abraão 'lançar para baixo' sêmen humano para gerar um filho, e a Sara receber este sêmen para ficar grávida.

Portanto, "a fundação do mundo" não precisa ser tomada como significando o início da criação do Universo material, nem se refere a expressão "antes da fundação do mundo" (Jo 17:5, 24; Ef 1:4; 1Pe 1:20) a um ponto no tempo, anterior à criação do Universo material. Antes, essas expressões evidentemente se relacionam com o tempo em que a raça humana foi 'fundada' por meio do primeiro casal humano, Adão e Eva, que, fora do Éden, começou a conceber semente que se podia beneficiar das provisões de libertação do pecado herdado, feitas por Deus. — Gên 3:20-24; 4:1, 2.

'Espetáculo ao mundo, tanto a anjos como a homens.' Alguns entenderam que o uso da palavra kó·smos, em 1 Coríntios 4:9, inclui tanto criaturas espirituais, invisíveis, como criaturas humanas, visíveis, vertendo o texto: "Somos feitos espetáculo ao mundo, tanto a anjos como a homens." (IBB; ALA; AS) Já a edição revista e corrigida da versão Almeida oferece uma tradução alternativa, dizendo: "Ao mundo, aos anjos, e aos homens." Esta última maneira de traduzir é também como outras versões traduzem aqui o texto grego. (BJ; CBC; MC; PIB; So) A tradução de Young, em inglês, reza: "Tornamo-nos um espetáculo para o mundo, e mensageiros, e homens." Pouco antes disso, em 1 Coríntios 1:20, 21, 27, 28; 2:12; 3:19, 22, o escritor usa a palavra kó·smos para significar o mundo da humanidade, de modo que evidentemente ele não se afasta deste sentido logo a seguir, em 1 Coríntios 4:9, 13. Portanto, caso se admita a tradução "tanto a anjos como a homens", esta expressão é apenas uma intensificação, não para aumentar o sentido da palavra kó·smos, mas para aumentar os espectadores como incluindo mais do que o mundo da humanidade, de modo a incluir tanto "anjos" como "homens". — Veja Ro.

A esfera de vida humana e sua estrutura. Isto não significa que kó·smos perde todo o seu sentido original de "ordem" ou "arranjo", tornando-se apenas sinônimo de humanidade. A própria humanidade reflete certa ordem, sendo composta de famílias, tribos, e tendo-se desenvolvido em nações e grupos linguísticos (1Co 14:10; Re 7:9; 14:6), com suas classes rica e pobre, e outros grupos. (Tg 2:5, 6) A estrutura das coisas que cerca e afeta a humanidade tem sido edificada na Terra ao passo que a humanidade tem aumentado em número e em anos de existência. Quando Jesus falou a respeito de um homem 'ganhar o mundo inteiro, mas com isso perder a sua alma', evidentemente queria dizer ganhar tudo o que a esfera humana de vida e a sociedade humana como um todo podiam oferecer. (Mt 16:26; compare isso com 6:25-32.) De significado similar são as palavras de Paulo a respeito daqueles que "fazem uso do mundo", e de os casados estarem 'ansiosos das coisas do mundo' (1Co 7:31-34), assim como também tem a referência de João aos "meios deste mundo para sustentar a vida". — 1Jo 3:17; compare isso com 1Co 3:22.

No sentido de se referir à estrutura, ordem ou esfera da vida humana, kó·smos tem um sentido similar ao da palavra grega ai·ón. Em alguns casos, as duas palavras são quase que intercambiáveis. Por exemplo, relata-se que Demas abandonou o apóstolo Paulo porque "amava o atual sistema de coisas [ai·ó·na]"; ao passo que o apóstolo João avisou contra "amar o mundo [kó·smon]" com seu modo de vida que agrada à carne pecaminosa. (2Ti 4:10; 1Jo 2:15-17) E aquele a quem João 12:31 descreve como "o governante deste mundo [kó·smou]" é identificado em 2 Coríntios 4:4 como "o deus deste sistema de coisas [ai·ó·nos]".

O apóstolo João, no fim do seu Evangelho, diz que ele supunha que, se todas as coisas feitas por Jesus fossem escritas em todos os pormenores, "o próprio mundo [forma de kó·smos] não poderia conter os rolos escritos". (Jo 21:25) Ele não usou ge (a terra) ou oi·kou·mé·ne (a terra habitada), dizendo que o planeta não poderia conter os rolos, mas ele usou kó·smos, evidentemente querendo dizer que a sociedade humana (com o então existente espaço em bibliotecas) não estava em condições de receber os registros volumosos (no estilo de livro usado naquele tempo) que isso teria exigido. Veja também textos tais como João 7:4; 12:19, para notar usos similares de kó·smos.

Vir 'ao mundo'. Quando alguém 'nasce neste mundo', então, ele não somente nasce na humanidade, mas torna-se também parte da estrutura das circunstâncias humanas em que os homens vivem. (Jo 16:21; 1Ti 6:7) Todavia, embora as menções de alguém ir ou vir ao mundo possam referir-se ao nascimento dele na esfera de vida humana, nem sempre é assim. Jesus, por exemplo, disse em oração a Deus: "Assim como tu me enviaste ao mundo, eu também os [os discípulos dele] enviei ao mundo." (Jo 17:18) Ele os enviou ao mundo como homens adultos, não como recém-nascidos. João fala a respeito de falsos profetas e enganadores como tendo "saído pelo mundo afora". — 1Jo 4:1; 2Jo 7.

As muitas menções de Jesus 'vir ou ser enviado ao mundo' evidentemente não se referem primariamente, se é que se referem, ao seu nascimento humano, porém, de forma mais razoável, aplicam-se a ele sair à humanidade, realizando publicamente seu ministério a partir do seu batismo e da sua unção, atuando como portador de luz para o mundo da humanidade. (Veja Jo 1:9; 3:17, 19; 6:14; 9:39; 10:36; 11:27; 12:46; 1Jo 4:9.) Seu nascimento humano foi apenas um meio necessário para este fim. (Jo 18:37) Corroborando isso, o escritor de Hebreus representa Jesus como proferindo palavras do Salmo 40:6-8 "ao entrar no mundo", e Jesus logicamente não fez isso como recém-nascido. — He 10:5-10.

Quando seu ministério público entre a humanidade chegou ao fim, Jesus sabia "que havia chegado a sua hora para se transferir deste mundo para o Pai". Morreria como homem e seria ressuscitado para a vida no domínio espiritual, do qual procedera. — Jo 13:1; 16:28; 17:11; compare isso com Jo 8:23.

"As coisas elementares do mundo." Em Gálatas 4:1-3, depois de mostrar que uma criança é como um escravo, no sentido de estar sob a guarda de outros, até à maioridade, Paulo declara: "Igualmente também nós, quando éramos pequeninos, continuávamos escravizados pelas coisas elementares [stoi·khei·a] pertencentes ao mundo." Ele passa então a mostrar que o Filho de Deus chegou no "pleno limite do tempo" e livrou os que se tornavam seus discípulos de estarem debaixo da Lei, para que pudessem receber a adoção de filhos. (Gál 4:4-7) De modo similar, em Colossenses 2:8, 9, 20, ele adverte os cristãos em Colossos contra serem levados embora "por intermédio de filosofia e de vão engano, segundo a tradição de homens, segundo as coisas elementares [stoi·khei·a] do mundo e não segundo Cristo; porque é nele que mora corporalmente toda a plenitude da qualidade divina", salientando que eles 'morreram junto com Cristo para com as coisas elementares do mundo'.

A respeito da palavra grega stoi·khei·a (plural de stoi·khei·on) usada por Paulo, The Pulpit Commentary (Comentário do Púlpito; Gálatas, p. 181) diz: "À base do sentido primário de 'estacas colocadas em fila', . . . o termo [stoi·khei·a] era aplicado às letras do alfabeto, como colocadas em fila, e, assim, aos constituintes primários da fala; daí, aos constituintes primários de todos os objetos na natureza, como, por exemplo, os quatro 'elementos' (veja 2 Ped. iii. 10, 12); e aos 'rudimentos' ou primeiros 'elementos' de qualquer ramo de conhecimento. É neste último sentido que ocorre em Heb. v. 12." (Editado por C. Spence, Londres, 1885) O verbo aparentado stoi·khé·o significa "andar ordeiramente". — Gál 6:16.

Paulo, nas suas cartas aos gálatas e aos colossenses, evidentemente não se referia às partes básicas ou componentes da criação material, mas, antes, como observa o Critical and Exegetical Hand-Book (Manual Crítico e Exegético; 1884, Gálatas, p. 168) do perito alemão Heinrich A. W. Meyer, referia-se aos "elementos da humanidade não cristã", isto é, aos seus princípios fundamentais ou primários. Os escritos de Paulo mostram que isto incluiria as filosofias e os ensinos enganosos baseados puramente em padrões, conceitos, raciocínios e mitologia humanos, tais como os com que os gregos e outros povos pagãos se deleitavam. (Col 2:8) Todavia, torna-se claro que ele usou também o termo como abrangendo coisas de natureza judaica, não apenas ensinos judaicos não bíblicos, que exigiam ascetismo, ou "adoração dos anjos", mas também o ensino de que os cristãos deviam colocar-se sob a obrigação de guardar a Lei mosaica. — Col 2:16-18; Gál 4:4, 5, 21.

É verdade que a Lei mosaica era de origem divina. No entanto, ela já fora cumprida então em Cristo Jesus, "a realidade" indicada pelas suas sombras, e, portanto, era obsoleta. (Col 2:13-17) Além disso, o tabernáculo (e mais tarde o templo) era "mundanal", ou de construção humana, portanto, "mundano" (gr.: ko·smi·kón; He 9:1, Mo), quer dizer, da esfera humana, não da celestial ou espiritual, e os requisitos relacionados com ele eram "exigências legais referentes à carne e foram impostas até o tempo designado para se endireitar as coisas". Cristo Jesus já havia entrado na "tenda maior e mais perfeita, não feita por mãos, isto é, não desta criação", no próprio céu. (He 9:8-14, 23, 24) Ele mesmo dissera a uma mulher samaritana que chegaria o tempo em que não se usaria mais o templo em Jerusalém como parte essencial da verdadeira adoração, mas que os verdadeiros adoradores 'adorariam o Pai com espírito e verdade'. (Jo 4:21-24) Portanto, com a morte, a ressurreição e a ascensão de Cristo Jesus ao céu havia cessado a necessidade de usar essas coisas que eram apenas "representações típicas" (He 9:23) dentro da esfera humana, retratando coisas maiores de natureza celestial.

Portanto, os cristãos gálatas e colossenses podiam então adorar segundo o modo superior baseado em Cristo Jesus. Ele, não os humanos, nem os princípios ou ensinos destes, nem mesmo as "exigências legais referentes à carne", conforme encontradas no pacto da Lei, deviam ser reconhecidos por eles como norma determinada e pleno meio de se medir a veracidade de qualquer ensino ou modo de vida. (Col 2:9) Os cristãos não devem ser como crianças, por voluntariamente se colocarem sob aquilo que foi comparado a um pedagogo ou tutor, a saber, a Lei mosaica (Gál 3:23-26), mas devem estar numa relação com Deus, semelhante à de um filho adulto com o pai. A lei era elementar, "o A B C da religião", em comparação com o ensino cristão. (Critical and Exegetical Hand-Book de H. Meyer, 1885, Colossenses, p. 292) Os cristãos ungidos, por terem sido gerados para a vida celestial, na realidade haviam morrido e sido pregados na estaca para com o kó·smos da esfera de vida humana, em que haviam vigorado regulamentos tais como a circuncisão carnal; eles se haviam tornado "uma nova criação". (2Co 5:17; Col 2:11, 12, 20-23; compare isso com Gál 6:12-15; Jo 8:23.) Sabiam que o Reino de Jesus não é de fonte humana. (Jo 18:36) Certamente não deviam retornar "às coisas elementares, fracas e mesquinhas", da esfera humana (Gál 4:9) e assim ser iludidos a renunciar às "riquezas da plena certeza do seu entendimento" e ao "conhecimento exato do segredo sagrado de Deus, a saber, Cristo", em quem se acham ocultos "todos os tesouros da sabedoria e do conhecimento". — Col 2:1-4.

O mundo alienado de Deus. Um uso de kó·smos, peculiar das Escrituras, é fazê-lo representar o mundo da humanidade à parte dos servos de Deus. Pedro escreve que Deus trouxe o Dilúvio "sobre um mundo de pessoas ímpias", preservando Noé e sua família; deste modo, "o mundo daquele tempo sofreu destruição, ao ser inundado pela água". (2Pe 2:5; 3:6) Pode-se notar de novo que a referência aqui não é à destruição do planeta ou dos corpos celestes do universo, mas é restrita à esfera humana, neste caso, à sociedade humana injusta. Foi este "mundo" que Noé condenou pelo seu proceder fiel. — He 11:7.

O injusto mundo, ou sociedade humana, antediluviano terminou, mas a própria humanidade não acabou, pois foi preservada em Noé e sua família. Após o Dilúvio, a maioria da humanidade de novo se desviou da justiça, produzindo outra sociedade humana iníqua. Todavia, ainda havia aqueles que adotaram um proceder separado, aderindo à justiça. No decorrer do tempo, Deus designou Israel como seu povo escolhido, trazendo-o a uma relação pactuada com si mesmo. Visto que os israelitas foram assim diferenciados do mundo em geral, Paulo podia usar kó·smos, "mundo", como equivalente de "pessoas das nações", ou "gentios", não israelitas, em Romanos 11:12-15. (NM; Al) Ele salientou ali que a apostasia de Israel levou Deus a revogar sua relação pactuada com eles, e que isso abriu o caminho para gentios entrarem em tal relação e em Suas riquezas, sendo reconciliados com Deus. (Veja Ef 2:11-13.) Assim, o "mundo", ou kó·smos, durante este período pós-diluviano e pré-cristão, novamente designava toda a humanidade fora dos servos aprovados de Deus, e especificamente os fora de Israel, durante o período da relação pactuada deste com Jeová. — Veja He 11:38.

De modo similar e com grande frequência, kó·smos é usado para significar toda a sociedade humana não cristã, sem consideração de raça. Este é o mundo que odiava Jesus e os seguidores dele, porque davam testemunho acerca da sua injustiça e porque se mantinham separados dele; este mundo mostrou assim ódio ao próprio Jeová Deus e não chegou a conhecê-lo. (Jo 7:7; 15:17-25; 16:19, 20; 17:14, 25; 1Jo 3:1, 13) É sobre este mundo da sociedade humana injusta e seus reinos que o Adversário de Deus, Satanás, o Diabo, exerce domínio; de fato, ele se constituiu em "o deus" deste mundo. (Mt 4:8, 9; Jo 12:31; 14:30; 16:11; compare isso com 2Co 4:4.) Deus não produziu tal mundo injusto; este deve o desenvolvimento ao Seu principal Opositor, em cujo poder "o mundo inteiro jaz". (1Jo 4:4, 5; 5:18, 19) Satanás e suas "forças espirituais iníquas nos lugares celestiais" atuam como os invisíveis "governantes mundiais [ou: cosmocratas; gr.: ko·smo·krá·to·ras]" do mundo alienado de Deus. — Ef 6:11, 12

Estes textos não se referem simplesmente à humanidade, da qual os discípulos de Jesus faziam parte, mas a toda a sociedade humana organizada fora da verdadeira congregação cristã. Senão, os cristãos não poderiam deixar de fazer "parte do mundo" sem morrer e cessar de viver na carne. (Jo 17:6; 15:19) Embora inevitavelmente vivam no meio desta sociedade de pessoas do mundo, que inclui os que praticam fornicação, idolatria, extorsão e outras práticas assim (1Co 5:9-13), esses cristãos têm de manter-se limpos e imaculados da corrupção e do aviltamento desse mundo, não mantendo relações amigáveis com ele, para que não sejam condenados junto com ele. (1Co 11:32; Tg 1:27; 4:4; 2Pe 1:4; 2:20; compare isso com 1Pe 4:3-6.) Não se podem deixar guiar pela sabedoria do mundo, que é tolice aos olhos de Deus, nem podem 'inalar' o "espírito do mundo", isto é, a força ativa egoísta e pecaminosa dele. (1Co 1:21; 2:12; 3:19; 2Co 1:12; Tit 2:12; compare isso com Jo 14:16, 17; Ef 2:1, 2; 1Jo 2:15-17; veja ESPÍRITO [Impelente Inclinação Mental].) Assim, por meio da sua fé, eles 'vencem o mundo' da sociedade humana injusta, assim como o Filho de Deus fez. (Jo 16:33; 1Jo 4:4; 5:4, 5) Esta sociedade humana injusta está prestes a passar, por destruição divina (1Jo 2:17), assim como pereceu o ímpio mundo antediluviano. — 2Pe 3:6.

Finda o mundo ímpio; preservada a humanidade. Assim, o kó·smos a favor do qual Jesus morreu deve referir-se ao mundo da humanidade encarado simplesmente como família humana, toda a carne humana. (Jo 3:16, 17) Quanto ao mundo no sentido de sociedade humana alienada de Deus e realmente em inimizade com Deus, Jesus não orou a favor de tal mundo, mas apenas por aqueles que saíram daquele mundo e depositaram fé nele. (Jo 17:8, 9) Assim como carne humana sobreviveu no Dilúvio à destruição da ímpia sociedade humana, ou mundo, assim Jesus mostrou que carne humana há de sobreviver à grande tribulação que ele comparou àquele Dilúvio. (Mt 24:21, 22, 36-39; compare isso com Re 7:9-17.) Deveras, promete-se que "o reino do mundo" (evidentemente referindo-se à humanidade) se tornaria "o reino de nosso Senhor e do seu Cristo", e os que reinam com Cristo no seu Reino celestial hão de "reinar sobre a terra", portanto, sobre a humanidade à parte da finada ímpia sociedade humana dominada por Satanás. — Re 11:15; 5:9, 10.

MUPIM. Um dos "filhos" de Benjamim (Gên 46:21); evidentemente o mesmo que Sefufão (Núm 26:39), Sefufã (1Cr 8:5) e Supim (supins) (1Cr 7:12).

MURALHA. Veja MUROS.

MUROS. Estruturas de alvenaria que servem de barreira, que dividem terrenos ou formam recintos. Desde que o homem constrói casas e cidades, ele tem edificado muros e paredes de diversos materiais, numa variedade de formatos, para servir a uma diversidade de objetivos. O tamanho e a resistência das estruturas depende em grande parte da construção dos muros e das paredes, e dos materiais usados.

Os muros do palácio de Davi eram de pedra talhada. (2Sa 5:11) De modo similar, as paredes externas do templo de Salomão, pelo que parece, eram de pedra de cantaria, sendo algumas das suas faces internas recobertas de tábuas de cedro. (1Rs 6:2, 7, 15) Estes painéis internos de madeira, por sua vez, eram requintadamente decorados com entalhes e recobertos de ouro. (1Rs 6:29; 1Cr 29:4; 2Cr 3:4, 7) As superfícies internas das paredes do palácio de Belsazar eram rebocadas. (Da 5:5) As paredes das casas do povo em geral costumavam ser de construção simples — tijolos secados ao sol, pedras não lavradas, ou reboco aplicado a uma estrutura de madeira. Às vezes, a parede era caiada. — At 23:3.

Muralhas de Cidade. Na antiguidade, o medo induzia as pessoas a erigir muralhas protetoras em torno de cidades grandes, para impedir invasões inimigas. (1Rs 4:13; Is 25:12) Os habitantes das pequenas "cidades dependentes" em torno delas (Núm 21:15) também se refugiavam dentro das cidades muradas quando atacados. A Lei mosaica fazia uma distinção legalista entre cidades muradas e não muradas, referente aos direitos dos proprietários das casas. (Le 25:29-31) As muralhas não somente forneciam uma barreira física entre as residências da cidade e o inimigo, mas também forneciam uma posição elevada, de cima da qual os defensores podiam proteger as muralhas contra serem minadas, cavarem-se túneis ou serem brechadas por aríetes. (2Sa 11:20-24; 20:15; Sal 55:10; Cân 5:7; Is 62:6; Ez 4:1, 2; 26:9) Como contramedida, as forças atacantes às vezes erguiam muros de sítio como barreiras, detrás dos quais atacavam as muralhas da cidade. — 2Rs 25:1; Je 52:4; Ez 4:2, 3; 21:22; veja FORTIFICAÇÕES.

Outros Muros. Frequentemente construíam-se muros de pedra para cercar vinhedos ou campos, e para formar currais, ou redis para ovelhas. (Núm 22:23-25; Pr 24:30, 31; Is 5:5; Miq 2:12; Hab 3:17) E havia também muros que serviam de arrimo para os terraços nas encostas de colinas. (Jó 24:11) Estes muros eram de natureza bastante permanente, construídos de pedras não lavradas do campo e às vezes assentadas com argila ou argamassa.

Muros Simbólicos. Nas Escrituras, muralhas ou muros são às vezes mencionados em sentido figurado, como representativos de proteção ou segurança (1Sa 25:16; Pr 18:11; 25:28), ou como símbolo de separação. (Gên 49:22; Ez 13:10) Neste último sentido, Paulo escreveu aos efésios: "Pois ele [Cristo] é a nossa paz, aquele que das duas partes fez uma só e que destruiu o muro no meio, que os separava." (Ef 2:14) Paulo estava bem familiarizado com o muro no meio do pátio do templo em Jerusalém, que levava um aviso no sentido de que nenhum não judeu podia ultrapassar este muro, sob pena de morte. No entanto, quando Paulo escreveu aos efésios, em 60 ou 61 EC, embora talvez aludisse a ele de forma ilustrativa, ele realmente não queria dizer que o muro literal tivesse sido abolido, porque ainda estava de pé. Antes, o apóstolo se referia ao pacto da Lei, que por séculos atuara como muro de separação entre judeus e gentios. Este "muro" simbólico havia sido abolido à base da morte de Cristo, quase 30 anos antes.

Disse-se a Jeremias que ele seria como muralhas fortificadas de cobre contra aqueles que se lhe opunham. (Je 1:18, 19; 15:20) Em outra ilustração, o povo de Deus, embora morando como que numa cidade sem muralhas literais, portanto, parecendo indefeso, usufruiria paz e segurança por causa da ajuda invisível de Deus. (Ez 38:11) Ou, de outro ponto de vista, cidade forte seria aquela que tivesse a Jeová como "muralha de fogo" (Za 2:4, 5), ou que tivesse muralhas de salvação erigidas por Jeová, em vez de umas apenas de pedra ou tijolo. (Is 26:1) "A cidade santa, Nova Jerusalém", que desce do céu, é mencionada como tendo "uma grande e alta muralha" de jaspe, com a altura de 144 côvados (64 m), e se diz que tem 12 pedras de alicerce de pedras preciosas, que têm gravados os nomes dos 12 apóstolos. — Re 21:2, 12, 14, 17-19.

MURTA [hebr.: hadhás]. A murta (Myrtus communis) cresce quer como arbusto, quer como árvore, e é comum em Israel e no Líbano, crescendo bem em solo pedregoso. Pode atingir a altura de 9 m, mas usualmente é encontrada como arbusto de 2 a 3 m de altura. Sendo sempre-verde, é bastante ramalhuda, e tem folhas verde-escuras, grossas, lustrosas; produz cachos de flores brancas, fragrantes, que, ao amadurecer, se tornam pequenas bagas azul-escuras. Quase toda a planta possui um fragrante óleo condimentoso usado em perfumes. As bagas, embora aromáticas, são comestíveis. A murta é hoje encontrada especialmente na Galileia Superior e no vale do Jordão, mas cresce também na região de Jerusalém, como evidentemente também acontecia no tempo de se registrar a visão de Zacarias, em Zacarias 1:8-11, 16.

Os ramos fragrantes da murta eram usados junto com os ramos de outras árvores para cobrir as temporárias cabanas ou barracas ao ar livre, usadas pelos hebreus durante a Festividade das Barracas. (Ne 8:14, 15) Nas profecias de restauração, prediz-se que a murta, com sua fragrância e beleza, cresceria em lugar da urtiga, e surgiria até mesmo no ermo. — Is 41:19; 55:13.

O nome hebraico de Ester, esposa do rei persa Assuero, era Hadassa, que significa "Murta". — Est 2:7.

MUSARANHOS [hebr.: hhafar·pa·róhth]. Pequenos animais semelhantes a ratinhos, cobertos de pelos finos e curtos. Pensa-se que o termo da língua original derive duma raiz que significa "cavar" (Gên 26:15), e, por isso, diversos peritos sugerem que talvez denote qualquer um duma variedade de animais que cavam tocas, inclusive ratos, camundongos, espálaces, gerbos, e outros semelhantes. Todavia, segundo Koehler e Baumgartner, hhafar·pa·róhth designa "musaranho". — Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros (Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento), Leiden, 1958, p. 322.

Estas criaturas têm focinho longo e afilado, olhos pequenos e orelhas arredondadas, tendo uma aparência um tanto amarrotada. Os musaranhos, tendo enorme apetite, podem devorar num dia mais do que seu próprio peso em alimentos. Subsistem mormente de insetos e vermes, embora também se alimentem de pequenos animais do seu próprio tamanho ou maiores, tais como camundongos. A espécie de musaranho mencionada em Isaías 2:20 é identificada por I. Aharoni como Crocidura religiosa. — Osiris, Brugge, 1938, Vol. 5, p. 463.

MUSI. Neto de Levi e filho de Merari. (Êx 6:16, 19) Musi tornou-se pai de três filhos e fundou a família chamada de musitas. — 1Cr 23:23; Núm 26:58.

MÚSICA. Uma das dádivas de Deus, por meio da qual o homem pode expressar louvor e agradecimentos ao seu Criador, bem como dar vazão às suas emoções, suas tristezas e suas alegrias. Na adoração de Jeová Deus tem-se destacado especialmente o canto, mas também a música instrumental tem desempenhado um papel vital. Não só tem servido para acompanhar os vocalistas, mas também para complementar seu canto. De modo que não surpreende que haja na Bíblia, do princípio ao fim, inúmeras referências tanto à música vocal como à instrumental, associada com a adoração verdadeira e de outra maneira. — Gên 4:21; 31:27; 1Cr 25:1; Re 18:22.

História. A primeira referência da Bíblia à música ocorre antes do Dilúvio, na sétima geração depois de Adão: "[Jubal] mostrou ser o fundador de todos os que manejam a harpa e o pífaro." Isto talvez descreva a invenção dos primeiros instrumentos musicais ou talvez até mesmo o estabelecimento de uma espécie de profissão musical. — Gên 4:21.

Nos tempos patriarcais, a música parece ter feito parte da vida, a julgar pelo desejo de Labão, de dar a Jacó e às suas próprias filhas uma despedida com música. (Gên 31:27) Canto e acompanhamento musical marcaram a celebração da libertação no Mar Vermelho e dos retornos vitoriosos de batalha, de Jefté, Davi e Saul. — Êx 15:20, 21; Jz 11:34; 1Sa 18:6, 7.

Nas duas ocasiões relacionadas com o transporte da Arca a Jerusalém, havia presentes vocalistas e instrumentalistas. (1Cr 13:8; 15:16) Nos anos posteriores da vida de Davi, Jeová, por meio dos seus profetas Natã e Gade, ordenou o estabelecimento duma organização musical para o santuário. — 1Cr 23:1-5; 2Cr 29:25, 26.

A organização musical iniciada por Davi entrou em pleno funcionamento no templo de Salomão. A grandiosidade e magnitude da música por ocasião da dedicação do templo pode ser apreciada pelo fato de que só os trombeteiros somavam 120. (2Cr 5:12, 13) Mas, ao passo que a nação relaxou na sua fidelidade a Jeová, todos os aspectos da adoração verdadeira sofreram, inclusive a música. Todavia, quando os reis Ezequias e Josias instituíram suas reformas, bem como quando os judeus retornaram do exílio babilônico, fizeram-se esforços para restabelecer o arranjo de música que Jeová havia indicado desejar. (2Cr 29:25-28; 35:15; Esd 3:10) Mais tarde, quando Neemias inaugurou a muralha de Jerusalém, os cantores levíticos, com pleno acompanhamento instrumental, contribuíram grandemente para a alegria desta ocasião. (Ne 12:27-42) Embora as Escrituras não mencionem mais nada sobre a música relacionada com a adoração no templo depois do tempo de Neemias, outros registros, tais como o Talmude, falam de se usar música ali até a destruição do templo em 70 EC.

Quão grande era o grupo musical no templo em Jerusalém?

Em conjunto com os preparativos para o templo de Jeová, Davi reservou 4.000 levitas para o serviço musical. (1Cr 23:4, 5) Dentre estes, 288 eram "treinados no cântico a Jeová, todos peritos". (1Cr 25:7) Todo o arranjo estava sob a direção de três exímios músicos, Asafe, Hemã e Jedutum (pelo visto, também chamado Etã). Visto que cada um destes homens também era descendente de um dos três filhos de Levi, respectivamente Gersom, Coate e Merari, as três principais famílias levíticas estavam assim representadas na organização musical para o templo. (1Cr 6:16, 31-33, 39-44; 25:1-6) Os filhos destes três homens totalizavam 24, todos eles fazendo parte dos já mencionados 288 hábeis músicos. Cada filho foi designado por sortes para ser cabeça de uma turma de músicos. Sob a sua direção havia mais 11 "peritos", escolhidos dentre os seus próprios filhos bem como de outros levitas. Deste modo, os 288 ([1 + 11] × 24 = 288) músicos levíticos peritos, igual aos sacerdotes, foram divididos em 24 turmas. Caso todos os remanescentes 3.712 'aprendizes' tenham sido similarmente distribuídos, isto daria em média cerca de 155 homens a mais em cada uma das 24 turmas, significando que havia cerca de 13 levitas nos diversos estágios de educação e treinamento musical para cada perito. (1Cr 25:1-31) Visto que os trombeteiros eram sacerdotes, seriam um acréscimo aos músicos levíticos. — 2Cr 5:12; compare isso com Núm 10:8.

Música Instrumental. A Bíblia fornece muito pouca informação sobre o formato ou a construção dos mais de uma dúzia de diferentes instrumentos musicais que ela menciona. Portanto, a maioria dos peritos se apoiam muito no que os arqueólogos descobriram a respeito dos instrumentos usados pelas nações contemporâneas, vizinhas. Todavia, isto talvez nem sempre sirva de guia fidedigno, visto que parece que Israel sobressaía em música, em comparação com seus vizinhos. Além disso, alguns relacionaram diversos instrumentos das Escrituras com os usados nos tempos atuais no Oriente Médio, os quais supostamente remontam ao passado. Isto, também, é conjectura.

Os instrumentos musicais da Bíblia podem ser classificados do seguinte modo:

De cordas: alaúde, cítara, harpa.

De sopro: buzina, flauta, gaita de foles, pífaro, trombeta, (possivelmente) neilote.

De percussão: címbalos, pandeiro, sistro.

Veja os artigos sobre os respectivos instrumentos mencionados acima para obter mais informações.

Não há motivo para se crer que os instrumentos musicais de Israel fossem rudimentares em formato, construção ou tonalidade. A Bíblia nota que as harpas e os instrumentos de cordas para uso no templo eram da mais seleta madeira de algum, importada, e as trombetas eram de prata. (1Rs 10:11, 12; Núm 10:2) Sem dúvida, usavam-se os artífices mais habilitados na fabricação dos instrumentos para o templo.

Tanto as Escrituras como manuscritos não bíblicos, que datam de antes da Era Comum, atestam a qualidade dos instrumentos, bem como a competência dos músicos israelitas. Os Rolos do Mar Morto declaram que várias trombetas tinham de executar complexos sinais "como com uma só boca". Isto não somente exigiria músicos hábeis, mas também instrumentos construídos de tal maneira, que todos estivessem sintonizados um com o outro. Que não havia dissonância é indicado pelo relato inspirado sobre a música na inauguração do templo de Salomão: "Os [cento e vinte] que tocavam as trombetas e os cantores eram como que um, fazendo um só som ser ouvido." — 2Cr 5:12, 13.

A Bíblia alista apenas quatro instrumentos definitivamente pertencentes à orquestra do templo: trombetas, harpas, instrumentos de cordas (hebr.: ne·va·lím) e címbalos. Embora isso, nos padrões modernos, não pareça ser uma orquestra completa, nunca se intencionava que esta fosse uma orquestra sinfônica, mas apenas uma para fornecer acompanhamento para o canto no templo. Tal conjunto de instrumentos serviria de modo excelente para esta finalidade. — 2Cr 29:25, 26; Ne 12:27, 41, 42.

Quanto às ocasiões em que os instrumentos sagrados eram tocados, as Escrituras relacionam as seguintes, com referência às trombetas: "No dia da vossa alegria e nas vossas épocas festivas, e nos começos dos vossos meses, tendes de tocar as trombetas sobre as vossas ofertas queimadas e os vossos sacrifícios de participação em comum." (Núm 10:10) Depois de se estabelecer a organização musical para o templo, é provável que os outros instrumentos se juntassem às trombetas nestas e em outras ocasiões especiais. Esta conclusão, bem como o procedimento musical seguido, parecem ser indicados pela ordem dos eventos descritos por ocasião da renovação dos serviços sagrados pelo Rei Ezequias, depois de ele ter purificado o templo: "Na hora em que principiou a oferta queimada, principiou o canto de Jeová e também as trombetas, sim, sob a regência dos instrumentos de Davi, rei de Israel. E toda a congregação se curvava enquanto ressoava o canto e tocavam as trombetas — tudo isto até acabar a oferta queimada." (2Cr 29:27, 28) Estarem as trombetas "sob a regência dos instrumentos de Davi" parece indicar que os trombeteiros tocavam de maneira a complementar os outros instrumentos, em vez de se sobrepor a eles. Todo o grupo de músicos ficou postado "ao leste do altar". — 2Cr 5:12.

Música Vocal. Os cantores no templo eram varões levitas. Em parte alguma das Escrituras se fala de mulheres vocalistas no templo. Um dos targuns (sobre Ec 2:8) indica claramente que elas não faziam parte do coro. Estarem as mulheres proibidas até mesmo de entrar em certas áreas do templo parece excluí-las de ocuparem ali qualquer posição oficial. — 2Cr 5:12; Ne 10:39; 12:27-29.

Dava-se considerável importância ao canto no templo. Isto se evidencia em muitas referências bíblicas aos cantores, bem como em que eles estavam 'livres dos deveres' comuns aos outros levitas, para se devotarem inteiramente ao seu serviço. (1Cr 9:33) Continuarem como grupo especial de levitas é enfatizado por estarem alistados separadamente entre os que retornaram de Babilônia. (Esd 2:40, 41) Até mesmo a autoridade do rei persa Artaxerxes (Longímano) foi exercida a favor deles, isentando-os, junto com outros grupos especiais, de 'imposto, tributo e pedágio'. (Esd 7:24) Mais tarde, o rei ordenou que houvesse "uma provisão fixa para os cantores, conforme cada dia exigia". Embora se atribua esta ordem a Artaxerxes, é mais provável que foi emitida por Esdras, à base dos poderes que lhe foram concedidos por Artaxerxes. (Ne 11:23; Esd 7:18-26) De modo que é compreensível que, embora todos os cantores fossem levitas, a Bíblia faça referência a eles como grupo especial, falando de "os cantores, e os levitas". — Ne 7:1; 13:10.

As Escrituras mencionam outros cantores, homens e mulheres, à parte da adoração no templo. Exemplos destes são os cantores e as cantoras mantidos por Salomão na sua corte; também, os cerca de 200 cantores de ambos os sexos que, além dos músicos levíticos, retornaram de Babilônia. (Ec 2:8; Esd 2:65; Ne 7:67) Estes cantores não levíticos, comuns em Israel, eram empregados não só para realçar diversas ocasiões festivas, mas também para entoar endechas em tempos de tristeza. (2Sa 19:35; 2Cr 35:25; Je 9:17, 20) O costume de contratar músicos profissionais em ocasiões de alegria e de tristeza parece ter continuado ainda no tempo em que Jesus esteve na terra. — Mt 11:16, 17.

Embora a música não se destaque tanto nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs como nas Escrituras Hebraicas, ela não é desconsiderada ou despercebida. A música instrumental com relação à adoração verdadeira é mencionada apenas em sentido figurado nas Escrituras Gregas (Re 14:2); todavia, o canto parece ter sido bastante comum entre os servos de Deus. Jesus e seus apóstolos cantaram louvores após a Refeição Noturna do Senhor. (Mr 14:26) Lucas fala de Paulo e Silas cantarem na prisão, e Paulo incentivava os concrentes a entoarem cânticos de louvor a Jeová. (At 16:25; Ef 5:18, 19; Col 3:16) A declaração de Paulo em 1 Coríntios 14:15, a respeito do canto, parece indicar que era uma particularidade regular da adoração cristã. João, ao registrar sua visão inspirada, fala de diversas criaturas celestiais cantarem a Deus e a Cristo. — Re 5:8-10; 14:3; 15:2-4.

A Natureza da Música Bíblica. O nível moral mais elevado dos israelitas e sua literatura superior, conforme exemplificados pela poesia e pela prosa das Escrituras Hebraicas, sugerem que a música do antigo Israel provavelmente transcendia à dos seus contemporâneos. Por certo, a inspiração para a música de Israel era bem mais sublime do que a das nações vizinhas. De interesse é um baixo-relevo assírio, em que o Rei Senaqueribe é representado exigindo que o Rei Ezequias lhe pagasse como tributo músicos de ambos os sexos. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 288.

Alguns sustentam já por muito tempo que a música hebraica era toda melodia, sem harmonia. No entanto, o mero destaque da harpa e de outros instrumentos de cordas em Israel já pesa fortemente contra tal suposição. É quase inconcebível que um músico tocasse um instrumento de muitas cordas e deixasse de notar que uma combinação de certos tons era bem agradável, ou que uma série específica de notas, como num arpejo, produz um som agradável. Certa fonte abalizada em história da música, Curt Sachs, declara: "O arraigado preconceito de que a harmonia e a polifonia [duas ou mais partes musicais ou vozes combinadas] têm sido uma prerrogativa do Ocidente medieval e moderno não tem fundamento." Ele prossegue dizendo que, mesmo entre culturas primitivas, há muitos exemplos de música em quintas, quartas, terceiras, bem como em oitavas, e que, entre esses povos, incluindo certas tribos de pigmeus, desenvolveu-se a antifonia justaposta (canto alternativo de dois grupos de vocalistas) em regular canto canônico.

Baseado numa pesquisa mundial, Sachs apresenta a conclusão de que "os coros e as orquestras relacionados com o Templo em Jerusalém sugerem um elevado padrão de educação, de perícia e de conhecimento musicais". Ele continua: "É importante compreender que o antigo Oriente ocidental possuía uma música bem diferente da que os historiadores do século dezenove lhe atribuem. . . . Embora não saibamos como soava essa música antiga, dispomos de suficiente evidência de sua força, de sua dignidade e de sua maestria." — The Rise of Music in the Ancient World: East and West (A Ascensão da Música no Mundo Antigo: Oriente e Ocidente), 1943, pp. 48, 101, 102.

As Escrituras dão a entender uma conclusão similar. Por exemplo, nos cabeçalhos dos Salmos aparece mais de 30 vezes a expressão "Ao regente" (NM; AT). (Sal 11; e outros) Outras traduções rezam "regente do coro" (BV), "Músico Principal" (AS; KJ; Le; Ro), e "mestre do canto" (ALA; BJ; CBC; PIB). O termo hebraico parece referir-se a alguém que de certo modo orientava a execução do canto, seu arranjo, seu ensaio e o treinamento dos cantores levíticos, ou na sua execução oficial. Talvez isso fosse dirigido ao principal músico de cada uma das 24 turmas de músicos do santuário, ou pode ter sido outro dos exímios músicos, visto que o registro diz que eles deviam "agir como regentes". (1Cr 15:21; 25:1, 7-31) Em mais uns 20 Salmos, os cabeçalhos são ainda mais específicos na sua referência a "regentes": "Ao regente, em instrumentos de cordas", "Ao regente, na oitava inferior", e assim por diante. (Sal 4, 12, e outros; veja SEMINITE.) Além disso, há referências bíblicas aos "cabeças dos cantores", aos "peritos" e aos 'aprendizes'. Tudo isso atesta um elevado padrão de música. — Ne 12:46; 1Cr 25:7, 8.

Grande parte do canto em grupo, em Israel, parece ter sido antifônico, quer por dois meios-coros se alternarem em cantar linhas paralelas, quer por um solista e um coro de responso se alternarem. Nas Escrituras, isto parece ser chamado de 'responder'. (Êx 15:21; 1Sa 18:6, 7) Este tipo de canto é indicado pelo próprio estilo em que alguns dos salmos foram escritos, tais como o Salmo 136. A descrição dos dois grandes coros de agradecimento, no tempo de Neemias, e da sua participação na inauguração da muralha de Jerusalém, indica que cantavam neste estilo. — Ne 12:31, 38, 40-42; veja CÂNTICO.

Pode-se dizer que entoar um canto em forma de salmodia situa-se entre o cantar propriamente dito e o falar. Seu diapasão é bastante monótono e repetitivo, com ênfase no ritmo. Embora o salmodiar continue bastante popular em algumas das principais religiões do mundo, seu uso na Bíblia parece limitar-se a endechas, como no caso em que Davi entoou uma endecha pela morte de seu amigo Jonatã e do Rei Saul. (2Sa 1:17; 2Cr 35:25; Ez 27:32; 32:16) Somente numa endecha ou num lamento seria preferível o estilo de salmodia ao da melodia de música, ou à modulação e ênfase oral de pura fala. — Veja ENDECHA.

MUSITAS [possivelmente: De (Pertencentes a) Moisés]. Família levítica que descendeu de Musi, filho de Merari. — Núm 3:17, 20, 33; 26:58.

MUTE-LABÉM. Diz-se tradicionalmente que a expressão incluída no cabeçalho de um dos salmos de Davi (Sal 9) significa "[a respeito da] morte do filho". Alguns comentadores sugerem que isto indicava ao regente da música o nome ou talvez as palavras iniciais dum cântico conhecido que fornecia a melodia a ser usada em cantar este salmo. Uma possibilidade do sentido desta palavra é oferecida pelo Targum, em que o cabeçalho do Salmo 9 reza: "Sobre a morte do homem que saiu de entre os campos", aludindo a um campeão. A referência aqui parece ser a Golias, campeão filisteu, que Davi derrotou na batalha entre os acampamentos israelita e filisteu. — 1Sa 17:45-51.

N

NAÃ [Agradável]. Filho de Calebe, filho de Jefuné, da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 4:1, 15.

NAALAL [Aguada; Pastagem]. Cidade em Zebulão, designada aos levitas meraritas. (Jos 19:10, 14, 15; 21:34, 35) Era também chamada de Naalol. Os zebulonitas, em vez de fazerem conforme haviam sido divinamente instruídos e expulsarem os cananeus que habitavam aquela cidade, sujeitaram-nos a trabalhos forçados. (Jz 1:30; 2:2) Não há certeza da localização de Naalal.

NAALIEL [Torrente (Vale de Torrente) de Deus]. Lugar onde os israelitas acamparam pouco antes da sua luta contra o rei amorreu Síon. (Núm 21:19-24) O Onomasticon (Onomástico) de Eusébio situa-o perto do Árnon. Por isso costuma-se relacionar Naaliel com um ou outro de dois uádis, o Wala (tributário do Árnon) e o Zarqa Ma'in, a uns 19 km ao N do Árnon. A localização em qualquer desses dois uádis se enquadraria nas identificações sugeridas para Mataná e Bamote, os dois acampamentos israelitas entre os quais aparentemente ficava Naaliel.

NAALOL [Aguada; Pastagem]. Nome alternativo de Naalal, cidade em Zebulão. — Jz 1:30.

NAAMÁ [Agradável].

1. Descendente de Caim; irmã de Tubalcaim e filha de Lameque e Zilá. — Gên 4:17-19, 22.

2. Esposa amonita de Salomão e mãe de Roboão. — 1Rs 14:21; 2Cr 12:13.

3. Cidade de Judá na Sefelá. (Jos 15:20, 33, 41) Sua localização exata é incerta.

NAAMÃ [duma raiz que significa "ser agradável"].

1. Neto de Benjamim através de seu primogênito, Bela. (1Cr 8:1-4, 7) Tendo fundado uma família, os naamitas na tribo de Benjamim (Núm 26:40), o próprio Naamã é alistado em outro lugar como um dos "filhos" de Benjamim. — Gên 46:21.

2. Um chefe do exército sírio do décimo século AEC, durante os reinados de Jeorão, de Israel, e de Ben-Hadade II, da Síria. Naamã, 'grande homem, valente, poderoso e estimado', foi aquele por meio de quem "Jeová dera salvação à Síria". (2Rs 5:1) A Bíblia não fornece pormenores sobre como e por que Naamã foi usado para dar esta salvação à Síria. Uma possibilidade é que Naamã chefiou as forças sírias que com bom êxito resistiram aos esforços do rei assírio Salmaneser III de tomar a Síria. Visto que a Síria, por permanecer livre, constituía um estado-tampão entre Israel e a Assíria, isto talvez servisse ao objetivo de retardar o avanço agressivo da Assíria no O até que chegasse o tempo devido de Jeová para permitir que o reino setentrional fosse ao exílio.

Curado da Lepra. Naamã era leproso, e embora os sírios não exigissem seu isolamento, como a lei de Jeová exigia dos leprosos em Israel, mesmo assim, saber que podia ser curado desta repugnante doença era deveras boas novas. Obteve estas novas por meio da escrava israelita da sua esposa, moça que lhe falou sobre um profeta em Samaria, que podia curar a lepra. Naamã partiu imediatamente para Samaria, com uma carta de apresentação de

Ben-Hadade II. No entanto, o rei israelita Jeorão, depois de recebê-lo com frieza e suspeita, enviou-o a Eliseu. Eliseu não se encontrou pessoalmente com Naamã, mas, em vez disso, mandou que seu servo dissesse a Naamã que se banhasse sete vezes no rio Jordão. Com orgulho ferido, e evidentemente achando que, sem cerimônia e futilmente, tinha sido mandado de um lugar para outro, Naamã virou-se enfurecido para ir embora. Se os seus ajudantes não tivessem raciocinado com ele e indicado a razoabilidade das instruções recebidas, Naamã teria voltado ainda leproso ao seu país. Acontece que ele se banhou sete vezes no Jordão e ficou milagrosamente limpo, o único leproso que Eliseu foi usado para curar. — 2Rs 5:1-14; Lu 4:27.

Torna-se Adorador de Jeová. Então, cheio de gratidão e humilde apreço, o chefe do exército sírio retornou a Eliseu, a uma distância de talvez 50 km, e ofereceu-lhe um presente bem generoso, que o profeta insistentemente recusou. Naamã pediu então um pouco de terra de Israel, "a carga de um par de mulos", para levar para casa, a fim de que pudesse oferecer sacrifícios a Jeová sobre solo de Israel, votando que daí em diante não adoraria outro deus. Naamã talvez pensasse em oferecer sacrifícios a Jeová sobre um altar de terra. — 2Rs 5:15-17; compare isso com Êx 20:24, 25.

A seguir, Naamã solicitou que Jeová o perdoasse quando ele, na execução de seus deveres civis, se curvasse perante o deus Rimom, junto com o rei, o qual evidentemente era idoso e doentio, e se apoiava em Naamã. Neste caso, curvar-se ele seria apenas mecânico, tendo por único objetivo cumprir com o dever de dar apoio físico ao rei, e não em adoração pessoal. Eliseu acreditou no sincero pedido de Naamã, respondendo: "Vai em paz." — 2Rs 5:18, 19.

Depois de partir, Naamã foi alcançado pelo cobiçoso servo de Eliseu, Geazi, o qual, mentindo, fez parecer que Eliseu mudara de ideia, e, afinal aceitaria uns presentes. Naamã, de bom grado, deu-lhe presentes de prata e de roupa. Mas, Jeová puniu Geazi por este ato ganancioso e mentiroso, com o qual tentara lucrar com a operação do espírito de Jeová, abusando do cargo de ajudante de Eliseu, infligindo a lepra a ele e aos seus descendentes por tempo indefinido. — 2Rs 5:20-27.

NAAMANI [duma raiz que significa "consolo"]. Um dos que retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico. — Ne 7:6, 7.

NAAMATITA [De (Pertencente a) Naamá]. Designação aplicada ao companheiro de Jó, Zofar (Jó 2:11; 11:1; 20:1; 42:9), e que identifica sua família ou seu lugar de morada. Djebel-el-Na'ameh, no NO da Arábia, tem sido apresentado como possível lugar onde Zofar morava.

NAAMITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Naamã]. Família de israelitas descendente de Naamã, neto de Benjamim. — Núm 26:38, 40.

NAÃO [Consolo]. Cunhado de Hodias, descendente de Judá. — 1Cr 4:1, 19.

NAARÁ.

1. [Moça; Mulher Jovem]. Esposa do Assur de Judá, com quem teve quatro filhos. — 1Cr 4:1, 5, 6.

2. [duma raiz que significa "sacudir de si"]. Cidade na fronteira de Efraim (Jos 16:5, 7, lit.: Ná·a·rah, "Naará"), que se acha ser Naarã. (1Cr 7:28) Geralmente acha-se que Naará corresponde à No·o·ráth do Onomasticon (Onomástico) de Eusébio (136, 24). Josefo parece chamar este lugar de Neara. Ele relata que metade da sua água fora desviada para irrigar as palmeiras perto do palácio de Arquelau em Jericó. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XVII, 340 [xiii, 1]) Foi tentativamente identificado com Tell el-Jisr, a uns 3 km ao NO de Jericó.

NAARÃ [duma raiz que significa "sacudir de si"]. Cidade fronteiriça de Efraim (1Cr 7:20, 28), aparentemente trata-se de Naará (Ná·a·rah). — Jos 16:5, 7; veja NAARÁ N.º 2.

NAARAI.

1. [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Nearias, que significa "Rapaz (Homem Jovem) de Jah"]. Filho de Esbai e um poderoso nas forças militares de Davi. (1Cr 11:26, 37) Talvez seja o "Paarai, o arbita", mencionado em 2 Samuel 23:35, no que parece ser uma lista paralela.

2. Beerotita (berotita) e um dos escudeiros de Joabe. Naarai estava entre os poderosos das forças militares de Davi. — 2Sa 23:24, 37; 1Cr 11:26, 39.

NAÁS [Serpente].

1. Rei dos amonitas, na época em que Saul iniciou seu reinado. Naás levou seu exército contra Jabes, em Gileade. O relato reza: "Em vista disso, todos os homens de Jabes disseram a Naás: 'Conclui conosco um pacto para que te sirvamos.' Naás, o amonita, disse-lhes então: 'Nesta condição o concluirei convosco, na condição de se furar todo olho direito vosso, e terei de pô-lo como vitupério sobre todo o Israel.' Os anciãos de Jabes, por sua vez, disseram-lhe: 'Dá-nos um prazo de sete dias e enviaremos mensageiros a todo o território de Israel, e se não houver quem nos salve, então teremos de sair a ti.'" Israel reuniu-se em torno de Saul, foi a Jabes e derrotou Naás. Apenas poucos do exército de Naás escaparam vivos. — 1Sa 11:1-11; 12:11, 12.

Num rolo do Mar Morto, designado 4QSam[a], que se acredita ser do primeiro século AEC, insere-se a seguinte informação logo antes de 1 Samuel 11:1: "[Na]ás, rei dos filhos de Amom, oprimiu severa-mente os filhos de Gade e os filhos de Rubem, e ele furou t[odos] os seus olhos direitos e lançou ter[ror e pavor] em Israel. Não sobrou nenhum dos filhos de Israel al[ém do Jordão cu]jo olho direito nã[o fosse fura]do por Naá[s, rei] dos filhos de Amom; exceto que sete mil homens [fugiram dos] filhos de [A]mom e entraram em [J]abes-Gileade. Cerca de um mês depois . . .” (Bible Review [Revista Bíblica], 1985, Vol. 1, N.º 3, p. 28) Basicamente a mesma informação é fornecida por Josefo. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), VI, 68-70 (v, 1).

Segundo Josefo (Jewish Antiquities, VI, 79 [v, 3]), este Naás foi morto na batalha pelas forças de Saul. Se a informação de Josefo for correta, então o Naás que foi bondoso para com Davi, alguns anos mais tarde, deve ter sido filho e sucessor do Naás derrotado por Saul. Neste caso, o nome Naás pode ter sido um título concedido a uma série de pessoas, assim como os títulos “Abimeleque”, “Faraó” e “Jabim”. Quando este segundo Naás mencionado morreu, Davi enviou embaixadores ao filho dele, Hanum, o qual entendeu errado as intenções honrosas de Davi e humilhou grandemente os representantes deste. Isto, por sua vez, provocou uma série de acontecimentos, que por fim levou a serem os amonitas derrotados por Davi. — 2Sa 10:1-5; 11:1; 12:26-31; 1Cr 19:1-5; 20:1-3.

2. Pai da irmã ou meia-irmã de Davi, Abigail, e possivelmente pai de Zeruia. Era o avô de Amasa, e talvez também de Abisai, Asael e Joabe. (2Sa 17:25; 1Cr 2:16, 17) Abigail é chamada de “filha de Naás”, mas ela e sua irmã não são chamadas diretamente de filhas de Jessé, pai de Davi, embora sejam mencionadas como as “irmãs” dos filhos de Jessé, inclusive Davi. Isto deixa diversas relações possíveis: (1) Que Naás era mulher, esposa de Jessé e mãe de todos os envolvidos (o nome podia ser dado a pessoas de ambos os sexos), mas isto não é muito provável, porque as mulheres eram incluídas numa genealogia apenas por motivos especiais, que aqui parecem faltar. (2) Que Naás era outro nome de Jessé, conforme sugere a antiga tradição judaica. A Septuaginta grega (edição lagardiana) tem “Jessé” em vez de Naás em 2 Samuel 17:25. (3) Que Naás era o anterior marido da esposa de Jessé (uma sugestão mais provável) e que ela deu à luz para Naás duas filhas, Abigail e Zeruia, antes de se casar com Jessé e dar-lhe vários filhos. — Veja ABIGAIL N.º 2.

3. Habitante da cidade amonita de Rabá. Seu filho Sobi mostrou bondade para com Davi por enviar-lhe suprimentos quando ele fugiu para Maanaim, por causa da rebelião de Absalão. (2Sa 17:27-29) Ele era possivelmente um israelita que passou a morar em Rabá, depois de os amonitas ali terem sido derrotados por Israel. — 2Sa 12:26-31.

NAATE [Repouso; Sossego].

1. Xeque de Edom, filho de Reuel e neto de Esaú e sua esposa Basemate, filha de Ismael. — Gên 36:2-4, 13, 17.

2. Levita, descendente de Coate e antepassado de Samuel. (1Cr 6:16, 22-28) Ele parece também ser chamado “Toú” e “Toá”. — 1Sa 1:1; 1Cr 6:33-35.

3. Levita designado pelo Rei Ezequias como comissário para ajudar Conanias e Simei em supervisionar “a contribuição, e o décimo, e as coisas sagradas” trazidos ao templo. — 2Cr 31:12, 13.

NABAL [Insensato; Estúpido]. Rico maonita proprietário de ovelhas, que pastava e tosquiava seus rebanhos em Carmelo de Judá. Nabal era também conhecido como calebita, isto é, descendente de Calebe. Poucos personagens bíblicos são descritos com tanto desprezo como Nabal. “Era duro e mau nas suas práticas”; “ele é um homem demasiado imprestável [filho de Belial] para se falar com ele”; “paga de volta o mal em troca do bem”; “a insensatez está com ele”. — 1Sa 25:2, 3, 17, 21, 25.

Os homens de Davi haviam protegido os rebanhos de Nabal, de 3.000 ovelhas e 1.000 caprídeos, contra bandos de incursores. Depois de mostrar esta bondade e não ser culpado de apropriação indébita, Davi solicitou a Nabal uma ajuda material a ele e aos seus homens, na época da tosquia, ocasião tradicional de festejos e de hospitalidade. Mas Nabal “lançou invectivas” sobre os mensageiros de Davi e os mandou embora de mãos vazias. Os próprios homens de Nabal temiam a reação de Davi, mas não se sentiam à vontade para falar com Nabal sobre isso. Um deles, porém, falou à esposa de Nabal, Abigail. Quando Davi se aproximava com a intenção de matar Nabal, Abigail foi ao encontro dele com generosos presentes de comida e de bebida, e persuadiu-o a não se tornar culpado de derramar o sangue do seu marido. Ao retornar para casa, ela encontrou Nabal “bêbedo a mais não poder”, de modo que esperou até a manhã seguinte para falar-lhe sobre o seu encontro com Davi e quão perto da morte ele levara todos. Nisso, “o coração dele ficou morto dentro dele e ele próprio ficou como pedra”, talvez indicando algum tipo de paralisia, ou então se referindo ao efeito sobre as emoções íntimas de Nabal. (Veja De 28:28; Sal 102:4; 143:4.) Cerca de dez dias depois, Nabal foi morto por Jeová. (1Sa 25:2-38) Davi tomou então a sensata e corajosa Abigail por esposa. — 1Sa 25:39-42; 27:3; 30:5; 2Sa 2:2; 3:3.

NABI. Filho de Vofsi, da tribo de Naftali. Ele foi um dos 12 homens que Moisés enviou para espiar a terra de Canaã e foi um dos que retornaram com um relatório mau. — Núm 13:1-3, 14, 16, 31-33.

NABONIDO [do babilônico, significando "Nebo [deus babilônio] É Exaltado"]. Último monarca supremo do Império Babilônico; pai de Belsazar. À base de textos cuneiformes, acredita-se que ele tenha governado por uns 17 anos (556-539 AEC). Era dado à literatura, às artes e à religião.

Nas suas próprias inscrições, Nabonido afirma ser de ascendência nobre. Uma tabuinha encontrada perto da antiga Harã dá evidência de que a mãe ou avó de Nabonido era devota do deus-lua Sin. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 311, 312) Nabonido, como rei, mostrou grande devoção à adoração do deus-lua, tanto em Harã como em Ur, onde este deus ocupava uma posição dominante. — FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 324.

Tabuinhas cuneiformes do oitavo ano de Nabucodonosor (nisã de 617-nisã de 616 AEC) alistam certo Nabu-na'id como aquele "que está sobre a cidade", e alguns historiadores acreditam que se trate do Nabonido que mais tarde se tornou rei. Todavia, isto significaria que Nabonido era bem moço quando foi posto em tal cargo administrativo e que era extremamente idoso por ocasião da queda de Babilônia, uns 77 anos mais tarde (539 AEC).

Heródoto, o historiador grego (I, 74), ao considerar os eventos do 20.º ano de Nabucodonosor (nisã de 605-nisã de 604 AEC), descreve um tratado negociado entre os lídios e os medos, tendo um "Labineto, rei da Babilônia", por mediador. Acredita-se que Labineto seja o modo de Heródoto escrever o nome de Nabonido. Mais tarde, Heródoto (I, 188) refere-se a Ciro, o persa, como lutando contra o filho de Labineto e Nitócris.

Num livro da Série Oriental de Yale, intitulado Nabonidus and Belshazzar (Nabonido e Belsazar), o Professor R. P. Dougherty aventa a hipótese de que Nitócris era a filha de Nabucodonosor e que Nabonido (Labineto), portanto, era o genro de Nabucodonosor. (1929, p. 63; veja também pp. 17, 30.) Por sua vez, acha-se que o "filho" de Nitócris e Nabonido (Labineto), mencionado por Heródoto, seja Belsazar, contra quem Ciro realmente lutou. Embora este argumento se baseie em muitos raciocínios dedutivos e indutivos, poderia explicar o motivo da ascensão de Nabonido ao trono de Babilônia. Isto também se harmonizaria com o fato bíblico de Nabucodonosor ser chamado de "pai" do filho de Nabonido, Belsazar (Da 5:11, 18, 22), visto que o termo "pai" às vezes tem o sentido de avô ou de antepassado. Este ponto de vista faz de Belsazar o neto de Nabucodonosor. — Veja, porém, BELSAZAR.

A ascensão de Nabonido ao trono seguiu-se ao assassinato de Labasi-Marduque. Todavia, referir-se Nabonido a si mesmo, numa das suas inscrições, como o "poderoso delegado" de Nabucodonosor e de Neriglissar, indica que ele afirmava ter obtido o trono por meios legítimos e não era usurpador.

Em diversos prismas, Nabonido associa consigo seu filho primogênito, Belsazar, nas suas orações ao deus-lua. (Documents From Old Testament Times [Documentos dos Tempos do Antigo Testamento], editado por D. W. Thomas, 1962, p. 73) Uma inscrição mostra que no seu terceiro ano, antes de sair numa campanha que resultou na conquista de Tema, na Arábia, Nabonido designou Belsazar para o reinado em Babilônia. O mesmo texto indica que Nabonido ofendeu o povo do seu império por concentrar a adoração no deus-lua e por deixar de estar em Babilônia para celebrar a festividade do Ano-novo. O documento conhecido como a Crônica de Nabonido declara que, no 7.º, 9.º, 10.º e 11.º ano do seu reinado, Nabonido estava na cidade de Tema, e em cada caso faz-se a declaração: "O rei não veio a Babilônia [para as cerimônias do mês de nisanu]; a (imagem do) deus Nebo não veio a Babilônia, a (imagem do) deus Bel não saiu (de Esagila em procissão), a fest[ividade do Ano-novo foi omitida]." (Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 306) Devido à condição mutilada do texto, o registro dos outros anos é incompleto.

Registra-se em outra parte a respeito da cidade de Tema, um oásis: "Ele tornou a cidade bela, construiu (ali) [seu palácio] como o palácio em Su·an·na (Babilônia)." (Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 313) Parece que Nabonido estabeleceu sua residência real em Tema, e outros textos mostram que caravanas de camelos procedentes de Babilônia levavam provisões para lá. Embora não abandonasse sua posição como rei do império, Nabonido confiou a administração do governo de Babilônia a Belsazar. Visto que Tema era uma cidade de entroncamento de antigas rotas de caravanas, pelas quais se transportavam ouro e especiarias através da Arábia, o interesse de Nabonido nela talvez fosse motivado por razões econômicas ou talvez se baseasse em fatores de estratégia militar. Apresenta-se também a sugestão de que ele achava politicamente aconselhável administrar os assuntos de Babilônia através de seu filho. Outros fatores, tais como o clima saudável de Tema e o destaque da adoração da lua na Arábia, também foram mencionados como possíveis motivos da aparente preferência de Nabonido por Tema.

Não há informações disponíveis sobre as atividades de Nabonido entre o seu 12.º e o seu último ano. Prevendo a agressão dos medos e dos persas, sob Ciro, o Grande, Nabonido havia entrado numa aliança com o Império Lídio e com o Egito. A Crônica de Nabonido mostra Nabonido de volta em Babilônia no ano do ataque medo-persa, quando se celebrava a festividade do Ano-novo e se traziam à cidade os diversos deuses de Babilônia. A respeito do avanço de Ciro, a Crônica declara que, após a vitória em Ópis, ele capturou Sipar (c. 60 km ao N de Babilônia) e que "Nabonido fugiu". Daí, segue o relato da conquista medo-persa de Babilônia, e declara-se que Nabonido, ao retornar, foi preso. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 306) Os escritos de Beroso, sacerdote babilônio do terceiro século AEC, contam que Nabonido saíra para enfrentar as forças de Ciro em batalha, mas foi derrotado. Eles contam adicionalmente que Nabonido se refugiou em Borsipa (ao SSO de Babilônia) e que, após a queda de Babilônia, Nabonido rendeu-se a Ciro e foi depois deportado para Carmânia (no S da Pérsia). Este relato coincide com o registro bíblico no capítulo 5 de Daniel, que mostra que Belsazar era o rei atuante em Babilônia por ocasião da sua derrubada.

Quanto à ausência de qualquer menção direta de Nabonido no capítulo 5 de Daniel, pode-se notar que a descrição de Daniel trata de apenas pouquíssimos eventos anteriores à queda de Babilônia, e o próprio colapso do império é apresentado apenas em poucas palavras. Todavia, seu domínio parece ser indicado em Daniel 5:7, 16, 29, onde Belsazar oferece fazer de Daniel o terceiro governante no reino, dando a entender que Nabonido era o primeiro e Belsazar o segundo. Neste respeito, o Professor Dougherty comenta: "O quinto capítulo de Daniel pode ser considerado como se harmonizando com os fatos, ao não consignar nenhum lugar a Nabonido na narrativa, pois ele parece não ter tido nenhuma participação nos eventos que decorreram quando Gobrias [à testa do exército de Ciro] entrou na cidade." — Nabonidus and Belshazzar, pp. 195, 196; veja também pp. 73, 170, 181; veja Da 5:1 n.

O que contém realmente a Crônica de Nabonido?

Também chamada de "Crônica Ciro-Nabonido" e de "A Tabuinha Analística de Ciro", trata-se do fragmento duma tabuinha de argila agora guardado no Museu Britânico. Descreve primariamente os eventos principais do reinado de Nabonido, último monarca supremo de Babilônia, inclusive o conciso relato da queda de Babilônia diante das tropas de Ciro. Embora, sem dúvida, procedesse originalmente de Babilônia e fosse escrita em letra cuneiforme babilônica, os peritos que examinaram seu estilo de escrita dizem que talvez date de algum tempo no período selêucida (312-65 AEC), portanto, dois séculos, ou mais, depois dos dias de Nabonido. É considerado como certamente uma cópia de um documento anterior. O tom desta crônica glorifica tão fortemente a Ciro, ao passo que apresenta Nabonido numa luz depreciativa, que se pensa ter sido a obra dum escriba persa, e, deveras, tem sido chamada de "propaganda persa". Todavia, embora talvez seja assim, os historiadores acham que os dados circunstanciais contidos nela, não obstante, são fidedignos.

Apesar da concisão da Crônica de Nabonido — uma tabuinha de uns 14 cm de largura no ponto mais largo e tendo aproximadamente o mesmo comprimento — ela continua sendo o mais completo registro cuneiforme disponível da queda de Babilônia. Na terceira das suas quatro colunas, começando com a linha 5, seções pertinentes rezam: "[Décimo sétimo ano:] . . . No mês de tasritu, quando Ciro atacou o exército de Acade, em Ópis sobre o Tigre, os habitantes de Acade se revoltaram, mas ele (Nabonido) massacrou os habitantes confusos. No 14.º dia, Sipar foi capturada sem batalha. Nabonido fugiu. No 16.º dia, Gobrias (Ugbaru), governador de Gutium, e o exército de Ciro entraram em Babilônia sem batalha. Depois, Nabonido foi preso em Babilônia ao voltar (para lá). . . . No mês de arasamnu, no 3.º dia, Ciro entrou em Babilônia, raminhos verdes foram espalhados diante dele — impôs-se à cidade o estado de 'Paz' (sulmu)." — Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 306.

Pode-se notar que a frase "décimo sétimo ano" não consta na tabuinha, estando danificada esta parte do texto. Esta frase é inserida pelos tradutores, porque eles acreditam que o 17.º ano de reinado de Nabonido foi seu último. Assim, presumem que a queda da cidade de Babilônia se deu naquele ano do seu reinado e que, se a tabuinha não estivesse danificada, essas palavras apareceriam no espaço agora danificado. Mesmo que o reinado de Nabonido tenha durado mais do que em geral se supõe, isto não mudaria a data aceita de 539 AEC como ano da queda de Babilônia, porque há outras fontes que indicam este ano. Este fator, porém, diminui até certo ponto o valor da Crônica de Nabonido.

Embora falte o ano, não obstante, o mês e o dia da queda da cidade constam no texto que resta. Recorrendo a estes, os cronologistas seculares calculam que o dia 16 de tasritu (tisri) caiu em 11 de outubro do calendário juliano, e 5 de outubro do calendário gregoriano, no ano 539 AEC. Visto que esta data é aceita, não havendo evidência em contrário, pode ser usada como data fundamental na coordenação da história secular com a história bíblica. — Veja CRONOLOGIA.

É interessante o que a Crônica diz sobre a noite da queda de Babilônia: "O exército de Ciro entrou em Babilônia sem luta." Isto provavelmente significa que não houve um conflito generalizado, e concorda com a profecia de Jeremias, de que 'os poderosos de Babilônia deixariam de lutar'. — Je 51:30.

As evidentes referências a Belsazar na Crônica também são de interesse. Embora Belsazar não seja mencionado especificamente por nome, à luz de trechos posteriores da Crônica (col. II, linhas 5, 10, 19, 23), a coluna 1, linha 8, é considerada por Sidney Smith, em sua obra Babylonian Historical Texts: Relating to the Capture and Downfall of Babylon (Textos Babilônicos Históricos: Relacionados com a Captura e a Queda de Babilônia; Londres, 1924, p. 100), como mostrando que Nabonido confiou o reinado a Belsazar, tornando-o corregente. A Crônica declara repetidas vezes que o 'príncipe herdeiro estava em Acade [Babilônia]', ao passo que o próprio Nabonido estava em Tema (na Arábia). Todavia, não se mencionar Belsazar por nome, nem se fazer menção da sua morte na Crônica de Nabonido, de modo algum lança dúvida sobre a exatidão do livro inspirado de Daniel, em que o nome de Belsazar ocorre oito vezes e sua morte conclui o relato vívido da derrubada de Babilônia, narrada no capítulo 5. Bem ao contrário, os peritos em cuneiforme admitem que a Crônica de Nabonido é extremamente resumida, e, além disso, conforme já mostrado, são da opinião de que foi escrita para difamar Nabonido, não para fornecer história pormenorizada. Deveras, conforme diz R. P. Dougherty na sua obra Nabonidus and Belshazzar (p. 200): "A narrativa bíblica pode ser interpretada como sendo superior por empregar o nome Belsazar." — O grifo é nosso.

Embora a coluna 4 da Crônica esteja seriamente danificada, peritos concluíram, à base do que resta dela, que o assunto era um sítio posterior de Babilônia por algum usurpador. Pensa-se que o primeiro sítio de Babilônia que se seguiu a Ciro tenha sido durante o levante de Nabucodonosor III, que afirmou ser filho de Nabonido, Nidintu-Bel. Ele foi derrotado no ano de ascensão de Dario I, em fins de 522 AEC.

NABOTE. Jezreelita, dono dum vinhedo e vítima duma trama iníqua da Rainha Jezabel. O vinhedo de Nabote, em Jezreel, estava à vista do palácio do Rei Acabe. Nabote não aceitou a oferta de Acabe, de comprar o vinhedo ou de trocá-lo por um vinhedo melhor em outro lugar, visto que Jeová proibira a venda perpétua duma herança de família. (1Rs 21:1-4; Le 25:23-28) A esposa de Acabe, a Rainha Jezabel, porém, tramou fazer com que duas falsas testemunhas acusassem Nabote de blasfemar a Deus e o rei. Assim, Nabote e seus filhos foram mortos (2Rs 9:26), habilitando Acabe a tomar posse do vinhedo. Por causa deste assassinato, Elias predisse que os cães não só comeriam Jezabel, mas também lamberiam o sangue de Acabe no mesmo lugar em que lamberam o sangue de Nabote. A descendência de Acabe seria similarmente decepada. (1Rs 21:5-23) Esta pronúncia divina cumpriu-se. — 1Rs 22:34, 38; 2Rs 9:21, 24-26, 35, 36; 10:1-11.

NABUCODONOSOR, NABUCODOROSOR [do acadiano, que significa "Ó Nebo, Protege o Herdeiro!"]. Segundo governante do Império Neobabilônico; filho de Nabopolassar e pai de Avil-Marduque (Evil-Merodaque), que o sucedeu no trono. Nabucodonosor reinou por 43 anos (624-582 AEC), período que inclui os "sete tempos" em que comia vegetação como touro. (Da 4:31-33) Para distinguir este monarca dum governante babilônio do mesmo nome, mas dum período bem anterior (da dinastia Isin), os historiadores referem-se a ele como Nabucodonosor II.

Dados históricos em inscrições cuneiformes atualmente disponíveis sobre Nabucodonosor de certo modo complementam o registro bíblico. Declaram que foi no 19.º ano do reinado de Nabopolassar que ele reuniu seu exército, assim como fez seu filho Nabucodonosor, então príncipe herdeiro. Os dois exércitos, evidentemente, atuavam de forma independente, e depois de Nabopolassar voltar a Babilônia dentro de um mês, Nabucodonosor guerreou de modo bem-sucedido em território montanhoso, retornando depois a Babilônia com muito despojo. Durante o 21.º ano do reinado de Nabopolassar, Nabucodonosor marchou com o exército babilônico para Carquemis, para lutar ali contra os egípcios. Ele conduziu suas forças à vitória. Isto ocorreu no quarto ano do reinado do Rei Jeoiaquim, de Judá (625 AEC). — Je 46:2.

As inscrições mostram, além disso, que a notícia da morte de seu pai fez Nabucodonosor voltar a Babilônia, e no dia primeiro de elul (agosto-setembro) ele ascendeu ao trono. Neste seu ano de ascensão, ele retornou a Hatu, e "no mês sebate [janeiro-fevereiro, 624 AEC] ele levou o enorme despojo de Hatu para Babilônia". (Assyrian and Babylonian Chronicles [Crônicas Assírias e Babilônicas], de A. K. Grayson, 1975, p. 100) Em 624 AEC, no primeiro ano oficial do seu reinado, Nabucodonosor levou novamente suas forças através de Hatu; capturou e saqueou a cidade filisteia de Ascalom. (Veja ASCALOM.) Durante o seu segundo, o terceiro e o quarto ano como rei, dirigiu campanhas adicionais em Hatu, e, evidentemente, no quarto ano, fez do rei Jeoiaquim, de Judá, seu vassalo. (2Rs 24:1) Também, no quarto ano, Nabucodonosor levou suas forças ao Egito, e no conflito resultante, ambos os lados sofreram pesadas baixas.

Conquista de Jerusalém. Mais tarde, a rebelião do Rei Jeoiaquim, de Judá, contra Nabucodonosor evidentemente resultou num sítio dos babilônios contra Jerusalém. Parece que foi durante este sítio que Jeoiaquim morreu e seu filho Joaquim ascendeu ao trono de Judá. Mas, apenas três meses e dez dias depois, o reinado do novo rei terminou quando Joaquim se rendeu a Nabucodonosor (no mês de adar [fevereiro-março] durante o sétimo ano de reinado de Nabucodonosor [terminando em nisã de 617 AEC], segundo as Crônicas Babilônicas). Uma inscrição cuneiforme (Museu Britânico 21946) declara: "O sétimo ano: No mês de quisleu, o rei de Acade reuniu seu exército e marchou até Hatu. Acampou-se contra a cidade de Judá, e no segundo dia do mês de adar ele capturou a cidade (e) capturou (seu) rei [Joaquim]. A um rei da sua própria escolha [Zedequias] ele designou na cidade (e) tomando o enorme tributo, ele levou este a Babilônia." (Assyrian and Babylonian Chronicles, de A. K. Grayson, 1975, p. 102; FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 326) Além de Joaquim, Nabucodonosor levou outros membros da família real, oficiais da corte, artífices e guerreiros ao exílio babilônico. Foi ao tio de Joaquim, Matanias, que Nabucodonosor fez rei de Judá, e ele mudou o nome de Matanias para Zedequias. — 2Rs 24:11-17; 2Cr 36:5-10; veja CRONOLOGIA; JEOIAQUIM; JOAQUIM.

Algum tempo depois, Zedequias rebelou-se contra Nabucodonosor, aliando-se com o Egito em busca de proteção militar. (Ez 17:15; compare isso com Je 27:11-14.) Isto trouxe os babilônios de volta a Jerusalém, e em 10 de tebete (dezembro-janeiro), no nono ano do reinado de Zedequias, Nabucodonosor sitiou Jerusalém. (2Rs 24:20; 25:1; 2Cr 36:13) No entanto, notícias de que uma força militar de Faraó estava saindo do Egito fez os babilônios levantar temporariamente o sítio. (Je 37:5) Subsequentemente, as tropas de Faraó foram obrigadas a retornar ao Egito, e os babilônios reiniciaram o sítio de Jerusalém. (Je 37:7-10) Por fim, em 607 AEC, em 9 de tamuz (junho-julho) do 11.º ano do reinado de Zedequias (o 19.º ano de Nabucodonosor, contado desde o seu ano de ascensão, ou seu 18.º ano de reinado), a muralha de Jerusalém foi brechada. Zedequias e seus homens fugiram, mas foram apanhados na planície desértica de Jericó. Visto que Nabucodonosor se havia retirado para Ribla, "na terra de Hamate", Zedequias foi levado à presença dele ali. Nabucodonosor mandou matar todos os filhos de Zedequias, e depois cegou e amarrou Zedequias, para levá-lo preso a Babilônia. Os pormenores depois da conquista, inclusive o incêndio do templo e das casas de Jerusalém, o fim dado aos utensílios do templo e a tomada de cativos, foram cuidados por Nebuzaradã, chefe da guarda pessoal. Gedalias, designado por Nabucodonosor, serviu como governador dos que não foram levados cativos. — 2Rs 25:1-22; 2Cr 36:17-20; Je 52:1-27, 29.

Seu Sonho duma Imensa Estátua. O livro de Daniel declara que foi "no segundo ano" do reinado de Nabucodonosor (provavelmente contado a partir da destruição de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC, e, portanto, referindo-se realmente ao seu 20.º ano de reinado) que Nabucodonosor teve o sonho sobre uma estátua de cabeça de ouro. (Da 2:1) Ao passo que os sacerdotes-magos, os conjuradores e os caldeus não puderam interpretar este sonho, o profeta judeu Daniel o fez. Isto induziu Nabucodonosor a reconhecer o Deus de Daniel como "Deus de deuses e Senhor de reis, e Revelador de segredos". Daí, constituiu Daniel "governante de todo o distrito jurisdicional de Babilônia e prefeito supremo sobre todos os sábios de Babilônia". Nabucodonosor designou também os três companheiros de Daniel, Sadraque, Mesaque e Abednego para postos administrativos. — Da 2.

Posteriores Exílios dos Judeus. Cerca de três anos mais tarde, no 23.º ano do reinado de Nabucodonosor, mais judeus foram levados ao exílio. (Je 52:30) Este exílio provavelmente envolvia judeus que haviam fugido para terras que mais tarde foram conquistadas pelos babilônios. A declaração do historiador Josefo corrobora tal conclusão: "No quinto ano depois do saque de Jerusalém, que era o vigésimo terceiro ano do reinado de Nabucodonosor, Nabucodonosor marchou contra a Coele-Síria, e, depois de ocupá-la, fez guerra tanto contra os moabitas como os amanitas. Daí, depois de sujeitar a si estas nações, invadiu o Egito a fim de subjugá-lo. Ele matou o rei que estava governando, designou outro em seu lugar e levou os judeus que estavam no país como cativos para Babilônia." — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), X, 181, 182 (ix, 7).

Toma Tiro. Foi também algum tempo depois da queda de Jerusalém, em 607 AEC, que Nabucodonosor iniciou o sítio contra Tiro. Durante este sítio, as cabeças dos soldados 'ficaram calvas' pelo atrito dos capacetes, e seus ombros 'ficaram esfolados' por carregarem os materiais usados na construção de obras de sítio. Visto que Nabucodonosor não recebeu nenhum "salário" por servir como instrumento de Jeová na execução do julgamento contra Tiro, Ele prometeu-lhe as riquezas do Egito. (Ez 26:7-11; 29:17-20; veja TIRO.) Um fragmentário texto babilônico, que data do 37.º ano de Nabucodonosor (588 AEC), deveras menciona a campanha contra o Egito. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 308) Mas, não se pode determinar se isto se refere à conquista original ou a uma ação militar posterior.

Projetos de Construção. Além de conseguir muitas vitórias militares e de expandir o Império Babilônico em cumprimento de profecias (veja Je 47-49), Nabucodonosor empenhou-se em considerável atividade de construção. Supostamente para satisfazer a saudade da sua rainha meda, Nabucodonosor construiu os Jardins Suspensos, classificados como uma das sete maravilhas do mundo antigo. Muitas das existentes inscrições cuneiformes de Nabucodonosor falam de seus projetos de construção, inclusive os de templos, palácios e muralhas. Um trecho de uma destas inscrições reza:

"Nabucodorosor, Rei de Babilônia, o restaurador de Esagila e Ezida, filho de Nabopolassar eu sou. Como proteção para Esagila, para que nenhum poderoso inimigo e destruidor pudesse tomar Babilônia, para que a linha de batalha não se chegasse a Imgur-Bel, a muralha de Babilônia, aquilo que nenhum rei anterior fez [eu fiz]; no cercado de Babilônia eu fiz como cerca uma forte muralha no lado leste. Escavei um fosso, atingi o nível da água. Vi então que a muralha que meu pai havia preparado era pequena demais na sua construção. Construí com betume e com tijolos uma poderosa muralha que, igual a um monte, não poderia ser movida, e liguei-a à muralha de meu pai; lancei seus alicerces no peito do mundo subterrâneo; ergui seu topo como montanha. Ao longo desta muralha, para reforçá-la, construí uma terceira, e como base duma muralha protetora lancei um alicerce de tijolos, e construí-o sobre o peito do mundo subterrâneo e lancei seu alicerce. Reforcei as fortificações de Esagila e Babilônia e estabeleci o nome de meu reinado para sempre." — Archaeology and the Bible (Arqueologia e a Bíblia), de G. Barton, 1949, pp. 478, 479.

Isto se harmoniza com a jactância de Nabucodonosor pouco antes de perder a sanidade: "Não é esta Babilônia, a Grande, que eu mesmo construí para a casa real com o poderio da minha potência e para a dignidade da minha majestade?" (Da 4:30) Mas quando, em cumprimento do divinamente enviado sonho sobre a árvore derrubada, sua faculdade de raciocínio foi restaurada, Nabucodonosor teve de reconhecer que Jeová é capaz de humilhar os que andam em orgulho. — Da 4:37; veja LOUCURA.

Muito Religioso. Há indícios de que Nabucodonosor era extremamente religioso, construindo e embelezando os templos de numerosas deidades babilônicas. Estava especialmente devotado à adoração de Marduque, o principal deus de Babilônia. A ele Nabucodonosor dava crédito pelas suas vitórias militares. Troféus de guerra, inclusive os vasos sagrados do templo de Jeová, parecem ter sido depositados no templo de Marduque (Merodaque). (Esd 1:7; 5:14) Uma inscrição de Nabucodonosor diz: "Para a tua glória, ó exaltado MERODAQUE, construí uma casa. . . . Que ela receba em seu seio o tributo abundante dos Reis das nações e de todos os povos!" — Records of the Past: Assyrian and Egyptian Monuments (Registros do Passado: Monumentos Assírios e Egípcios), Londres, 1875; Vol. V, p. 135.

A imagem de ouro erigida por Nabucodonosor na planície de Dura talvez tenha sido dedicada a Marduque e destinada a promover a união religiosa no império. Enfurecido pela recusa de Sadraque, Mesaque e Abednego de adorar esta imagem, mesmo depois de receberem uma segunda oportunidade, Nabucodonosor ordenou que fossem lançados numa fornalha ardente, aquecida sete vezes mais do que de costume. Todavia, quando estes três hebreus foram libertados por um anjo de Jeová, Nabucodonosor se viu obrigado a dizer que "não há outro deus que possa livrar assim como este". — Da 3.

Nabucodonosor também parece ter confiado muito na adivinhação ao fazer o planejamento das suas operações militares. Por exemplo, a profecia de Ezequiel retrata o rei de Babilônia empregando a adivinhação para decidir se devia ir contra Rabá de Amom ou contra Jerusalém. — Ez 21:18-23.

NAÇÕES. Em sentido amplo e geral, uma nação é composta de pessoas mais ou menos aparentadas por laços de sangue, e que possuem uma língua comum. Tal grupo nacional usualmente ocupa um território geográfico específico e está sujeito a algu-ma forma de controle governamental central. Segundo o Theological Dictionary of the Old Testament (Dicionário Teológico do Velho Testamento): "O hebraico evidencia a tendência de goy descrever um povo em termos da sua afiliação política e territorial, e assim de se aproximar muito mais ao nosso atual termo 'nação'. 'am [povo], inversamente, sempre retém a forte ênfase no elemento de consanguinidade como base de união para formar um povo." (Editado por G. J. Botterweck e H. Ringgren, Vol. 2, 1975, p. 427) Os termos gregos é·thnos (nação) e la·ós (povo) são usados de modo similar. Nas Escrituras, as formas plurais de gohy e é·thnos usualmente se referem a nações gentias.

Origem. A primeira menção feita da formação de nações distintas ocorre no período pós-diluviano, em relação com a construção da Torre de Babel. Os participantes neste projeto estavam unidos na sua oposição ao propósito de Deus. O fator principal que facilitou a ação unida era que "toda a terra continuava a ter um só idioma e um só grupo de palavras". (Gên 11:1-4) Jeová notou isso e, por confundir a língua deles, "os espalhou dali por toda a superfície da terra". — Gên 11:5-9; MAPA Vol. 1, p. 329.

Separado então pelas barreiras de comunicação, cada grupo linguístico desenvolveu sua própria cultura, arte, costumes, características e religião — cada qual o seu próprio modo de realizar as coisas. (Le 18:3) Alienados de Deus, os diversos povos inventaram muitos ídolos de suas deidades míticas. — De 12:30; 2Rs 17:29, 33.

Havia três grandes ramos dessas nações descendentes dos filhos e dos netos dos filhos de Noé: Jafé, Cã e Sem, os quais eram reconhecidos como pais fundadores das respectivas nações chamadas pelos nomes deles. A listagem em Gênesis, capítulo 10, portanto, poderia ser chamada de mais antiga tabela de nações, 70 em número. Quatorze tinham origem jafética, 30 camítica e 26 semítica. (Gên 10:1-8, 13-32; 1Cr 1:4-25) Para obter mais informações sobre estes grupos nacionais, veja a TABELA, Vol. 1, p. 329, bem como os artigos sobre cada um dos 70 descendentes de Noé.

Naturalmente, com o passar do tempo, houve muitas mudanças. Algumas nações foram absorvidas pelos seus vizinhos ou desapareceram totalmente, por fraqueza, doenças ou guerras; outras surgiram por novas migrações e aumentos de população. Às vezes, o espírito do nacionalismo tornava-se muito forte entre certos grupos, e isto, junto com grandes façanhas militares, dava a homens ambiciosos o necessário impulso para desenvolverem impérios mundiais às custas de nações mais fracas.

Pai de Nações. Deus mandou que Abrão partisse de Ur e se mudasse para uma terra que Ele lhe mostraria, pois, conforme Ele disse: "Farei de ti uma grande nação." (Gên 12:1-4) Mais tarde, Deus ampliou a sua promessa, dizendo: "Tu te tornarás certamente pai duma multidão de nações. . . . E vou fazer-te muitíssimo fecundo e vou fazer que te tornes nações, e reis sairão de ti." (Gên 17:1-6) Esta promessa se cumpriu. O filho de Abraão, Ismael, gerou "doze maiorais, segundo os seus clãs" (Gên 25:13-16; 17:20; 21:13, 18), e por meio dos seis filhos de Quetura, outras nações remontavam sua linhagem a Abraão. (Gên 25:1-4; 1Cr 1:28-33; Ro 4:16-18) De Isaque, filho de Abraão, descenderam os israelitas e os edomitas. (Gên 25:21-26) Em sentido muito maior e espiritual, Abraão tornou-se "pai de muitas nações", porque pessoas de muitos grupos nacionais, inclusive as da congregação cristã em Roma, em razão da sua fé e obediência, podiam chamar Abraão de seu pai, o "pai de todos os que têm fé". — Ro 4:11, 16-18; veja ISRAEL N.º 2.

Como Deus Encara as Nações. Deus, como Criador e Soberano Universal, tem o direito absoluto de fixar os limites territoriais das nações (caso decida fazer isso), assim como fez com Amom, Edom e Israel. (De 2:17-22; 32:8; 2Cr 20:6, 7; At 17:26) A grandiosidade do Altíssimo e Excelso sobre toda a terra não pode ser comparada com nações da humanidade. (Je 10:6, 7) Na realidade, as nações, à vista dele, são apenas como uma gota dum balde. (Is 40:15, 17) Portanto, quando tais nações se alvoroçam e murmuram contra Jeová, como quando mataram Jesus numa estaca de tortura, Ele apenas caçoa delas, e confunde e destrói seu presunçoso conselho contra Ele. — Sal 2:1, 2, 4, 5; 33:10; 59:8; Da 4:32b, 34, 35; At 4:24-28.

No entanto, apesar de toda a superlativa grandiosidade e poder de Jeová, ninguém pode de direito acusá-lo de ser injusto no tratamento que dispensa a grupos nacionais. Não faz diferença se Deus está lidando com um único homem ou com toda uma nação, ele nunca compromete seus princípios justos. (Jó 34:29) Se a nação estiver arrependida, assim como o povo de Nínive, ele a abençoará. (Jon 3:5-10) Mas, se ela passar a fazer o mal, mesmo estando em pacto com ele, então a destruirá. (Je 18:7-10) Quando surge uma questão, Jeová envia seus profetas com uma mensagem de aviso. (Je 1:5, 10; Ez 2:3; 33:7) Deus não é parcial para com ninguém, quer grande quer pequeno. — De 10:17; 2Cr 19:7; At 10:34, 35.

Portanto, quando nações inteiras se recusam a reconhecer a Jeová e a obedecer-lhe, ou quando o eliminam da sua mente e do seu coração, Jeová executa nelas seus julgamentos. (Sal 79:6; 110:6; 149:7-9) Devota-as à destruição e retorna-as ao Seol. (Sal 9:17; Is 34:1, 2; Je 10:25) Deus, em linguagem descritiva, diz que as nações iníquas serão entregues ao Seu Filho, o chamado “Fiel e Verdadeiro . . . A Palavra de Deus”, para serem espatifadas. — Sal 2:7-9; Re 19:11-15; compare isso com Re 12:5.

A Nova Nação do Israel Espiritual. Durante séculos, Jeová Deus lidou exclusivamente com o Israel natural, vez após vez enviando seus profetas à nação para que o povo se desviasse do seu proceder errante. Por fim, enviou seu Filho, Cristo Jesus, mas a maioria o rejeitou. Por isso, Jesus disse aos principais sacerdotes e fariseus descrentes: “O reino de Deus vos será tirado e será dado a uma nação que produza os seus frutos.” — Mt 21:33-43.

O apóstolo Pedro identificou claramente esta “nação” como composta de pessoas que haviam aceito a Cristo Jesus. (1Pe 2:4-10) De fato, Pedro aplicou a concristãos as mesmas palavras dirigidas ao Israel natural: “Vós sois ‘raça escolhida, sacerdócio real, nação santa, povo para propriedade especial.’” (1Pe 2:9; veja Êx 19:5, 6.) Todos eles reconheciam Deus como Governante, e Seu Filho como Senhor e Cristo. (At 2:34, 35; 5:32) Possuíam a cidadania celestial (Fil 3:20) e foram selados com o espírito santo, que era um penhor antecipado da sua herança celestial. (2Co 1:22; 5:5; Ef 1:13, 14) Ao passo que o Israel natural era constituído em nação sob o pacto da Lei, a “nação santa” dos cristãos gerados pelo espírito tornou-se tal sob o novo pacto. (Êx 19:5; He 8:6-13) Por estes motivos, era bem apropriado serem chamados de “nação santa”.

Quando o espírito santo foi derramado pela primeira vez sobre cerca de 120 discípulos de Jesus (todos judeus naturais) no dia de Pentecostes no ano 33 EC, tornou-se evidente que Deus estava lidando com uma nova nação espiritual. (At 1:4, 5, 15; 2:1-4; compare isso com Ef 1:13, 14.) Mais tarde, começando no ano 36 EC, tornar-se membro da nação santa foi estendido a gentios incircuncisos, os quais também receberam o espírito de Deus. — At 10:24-48; Ef 2:11-20.

A respeito da pregação das boas novas a todas as nações, veja BOAS NOVAS.

Gogue e Magogue. O livro bíblico de Revelação (Apocalipse; 20:7, 8) declara que, depois do Reinado Milenar de Cristo, Satanás “sairá para desencaminhar aquelas nações nos quatro cantos da terra, Gogue e Magogue”. Evidentemente, essas nações são produto de rebelião contra a administração de Cristo. — Veja GOGUE N.º 3.

NACOM [possivelmente: Firmemente Estabelecido]. De acordo com 2 Samuel 6:6, o nome da eira em que Uzá morreu por segurar a Arca do Pacto. O relato paralelo em 1 Crônicas 13:9 diz “Quidom”, provavelmente indicando que um escritor mencionou o nome do lugar, e o outro o do dono, ou que um nome é uma forma alterada do outro.

NADABE [Disposto; Nobre; Generoso].

1. Primogênito de Arão e Eliseba. (Êx 6:23; 1Cr 6:3) Nadabe nasceu no Egito e participou do grande Êxodo junto com Israel. Nadabe, com um irmão mais moço que ele, Abiú, e mais 70 israelitas, foram chamados com Arão e Moisés ao monte Sinai, onde tiveram uma visão de Jeová. (Êx 24:1, 9-11) Nadabe e seus três irmãos foram investidos do sacerdócio junto com seu pai. (Êx 28:1; 40:12-16) Mas, antes que o dia acabasse, Nadabe e Abiú abusaram do seu cargo por oferecer fogo ilegítimo. Não se declara exatamente o que tornou o fogo ilegítimo, mas, provavelmente, foi mais do que apenas a embriaguez (sugerida pela imediata proibição de os sacerdotes beberem vinho ou outra bebida inebriante quando em serviço). Todavia, a embriaguez talvez tenha contribuído para a sua transgressão. Por causa desta transgressão, eles foram mortos por fogo da parte de Jeová, e deu-se fim aos seus corpos fora do acampamento. (Le 10:1-11; Núm 26:60, 61) Nadabe e Abiú morreram antes de terem gerado filhos, deixando seus irmãos Eleazar e Itamar fundar as duas casas sacerdotais. — Núm 3:2, 4; 1Cr 24:1, 2.

2. Descendente de Judá na linhagem de Jerameel; filho de Samai, e pai de Selede e Apaim. — 1Cr 2:3, 25, 26, 28, 30.

3. Filho de Jeiel, da tribo de Benjamim. — 1Cr 8:1, 29, 30; 9:35, 36.

4. Filho de Jeroboão e segundo rei do reino setentrional das dez tribos de Israel. Nadabe governou por parte de dois anos, começando por volta de 976 AEC, durante os quais ele continuou com a adoração de bezerros instituída por seu pai. Enquanto sitiava Gibetom, anterior cidade levita (Jos 21:20, 23) tomada pelos filisteus, Nadabe foi assassinado por Baasa, o qual matou então todos os membros remanescentes da casa de Jeroboão, a fim de se assegurar o trono. — 1Rs 14:20; 15:25-31.

NADADOR. Alguém que consegue locomover-se na água pelo uso dos braços e das pernas. Saber nadar era comum entre os antigos. (Ez 47:5; At 27:42, 43) Num primitivo texto egípcio, certo pai menciona que seus filhos tomavam aulas de natação, e relevos assírios retratam guerreiros nadando, frequentemente com a ajuda de peles infladas.

Saber nadar era obrigatório para os pescadores. Quando usavam uma rede, ocasionalmente mergulhavam na água e puxavam uma parte da beirada com pesos por baixo do restante da rede para formar um fundo. Embora o pescador Pedro aparente-mente fosse bom nadador (Jo 21:7, 8), começou a afundar e clamou para que Jesus Cristo o salvasse, na ocasião em que Pedro andou sobre a água. O motivo provavelmente foi a água muito agitada, além do medo do próprio Pedro. — Mt 14:27-31.

Numa profecia contra Moabe, Isaías fez alusão ao que o nadador faz, dizendo: "A mão de Jeová pousará sobre este monte e Moabe terá de ser trilhado no seu lugar, como quando se trilha um monte de palha na estrumeira. E ele terá de bater com [literalmente: estender] as suas mãos no meio dele, assim como quando o nadador bate com elas para nadar, e terá de rebaixar a sua altivez com os movimentos intricados das suas mãos." (Is 25:10, 11) Esta versão, bem como a da Septuaginta grega, sugere que Jeová estende suas mãos contra Moabe para aplicar golpes destrutivos. Outra versão, porém, faz de Moabe o nadador. Por exemplo, a versão Almeida, edição atualizada, declara: "A mão do SENHOR descansará neste monte; mas Moabe será trilhado no seu lugar, como se pisa a palha na água da cova da esterqueira; no meio disto estenderá ele as mãos, como as estende o nadador para nadar; mas o SENHOR lhe abaterá a altivez, não obstante a perícia das suas mãos."

NAFIS [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "alma"]. O 11.º alistado dos 12 filhos de Ismael. (Gên 25:13-16; 1Cr 1:29-31) Sendo maioral, ele também encabeçou uma tribo ismaelita que adotou seu nome e presumivelmente habitou o território que beirava a fronteira L ou NE da Terra da Promessa. Nos dias de Saul, as tribos israelitas de Rubem, Gade e a meia-tribo de Manassés que moravam ao L do Jordão travaram uma guerra bem-sucedida contra os agarenos e seus confederados, inclusive a tribo de Nafis, e capturaram grande quantidade de gado e de gente. (1Cr 5:10, 18-22) Conforme alguns peritos sugerem, é possível que esses cativos de Nafis tenham sido postos a trabalhar como escravos netineus no santuário, e que, depois do retorno do exílio babilônico, seus descendentes eram chamados de filhos de Nefusesim, ou Nefusim. — Ne 7:46, 52; Esd 2:43, 50.

NAFTALI [Minhas Lutas].

1. Segundo filho que Bila, serva de Raquel, deu à luz a Jacó em Padã-Arã. (Gên 35:25, 26; Êx 1:1, 4; 1Cr 2:1, 2) Visto que Bila substituíra sua ama Raquel, Naftali, assim como seu irmão germano mais velho, Dã, era considerado pela estéril Raquel como seu próprio filho. Embora sua irmã Leia já tivesse então quatro filhos (Gên 29:32-35), Raquel ficou jubilante com o êxito de obter um segundo filho por meio da sua serva, e exclamou: "Com lutas árduas lutei com a minha irmã. Saí também vencedora!" O nome dado a este filho, Naftali (que significa "Minhas Lutas"), expressou apropriadamente os sentimentos de Raquel por ocasião do nascimento dele. — Gên 30:2-8.

Mais tarde, o próprio Naftali tornou-se pai de quatro filhos, Jazeel (Jaziel), Guni, Jézer e Silém (Salum). (Gên 46:24; 1Cr 7:13) Quando o moribundo patriarca Jacó relatou aos seus filhos o que lhes aconteceria na "parte final dos dias", sua declaração sobre Naftali, embora uma das mais breves, foi favorável. — Gên 49:1, 2, 21.

2. Tribo de Israel que levava o nome de Naftali e se compunha de quatro famílias tribais, descendentes dos filhos dele, Jazeel, Guni, Jézer e Silém. (Núm 26:48, 49) Cerca de um ano depois de os israelitas partirem do Egito, os homens combatentes desta tribo, dos 20 anos para cima, somavam 53.400. (Núm 1:42, 43) Enquanto estava no ermo, a tribo de Naftali, sob a liderança do seu maioral Aira, acampava ao N do tabernáculo, ao lado das tribos de Aser e de Dã. Como parte da divisão de três tribos do acampamento de Dã, a tribo de Naftali, junto com Dã e Aser, era a última na ordem de marcha e ocupava a importante posição de retaguarda. — Núm 1:15, 16; 2:25-31; 7:78; 10:25-28.

Quando se fez um segundo censo, cerca de quatro décadas depois do Êxodo do Egito, o número dos varões vigorosos da tribo havia caído para 45.400. (Núm 26:50) Entre os homens perdidos da tribo estava Nabi, um dos dez espias que trouxera um relatório mau e desanimou os israelitas de entrar na Terra da Promessa. — Núm 13:14, 16, 31-33; 14:35-37.

Depois de finalmente cruzar o Jordão e participar na conquista de Jericó e Ai, sob a liderança de Josué, Naftali foi uma das tribos que 'ficara de pé para a invocação do mal' diante do monte Ebal. (Jos 6:24, 25; 8:28, 30-35; De 27:13) Quando chegou o tempo da repartição da terra em heranças tribais, Pedael, como divinamente designado representante da tribo de Naftali, ajudou nisso a Josué e a Eleazar, o sacerdote. — Núm 34:16, 17, 28; Jos 19:51.

Herança de Terra. O território designado à tribo de Naftali ficava na parte setentrional da Terra da Promessa. (De 34:1, 2) Ao L, ela confinava com o mar da Galileia e o rio Jordão. Por uma boa distância, o território de Aser se estendia ao longo da fronteira ocidental. A região designada a Zebulão confinava com Naftali tanto ao O como ao S, e Issacar ficava ao S. (Veja Jos 19:32-34.) A menção de que o termo de Naftali atingia "Judá no Jordão" (Jos 19:34) evidentemente não significa que se estendia até o território da tribo de Judá, situada a uma considerável distância ao S de Naftali. Neste caso, "Judá" provavelmente se refere à região ao L do Jordão ocupada pela família de Jair. Embora Jair fosse considerado manassita, por causa de sua avó paterna (Núm 32:41; Jos 13:29, 30), ele, por causa de seu avô paterno, era descendente de Judá. (1Cr 2:5, 21, 22) De modo que a região dada à família de Jair podia apropriadamente ser chamada de Judá, à base da linhagem de Jair.

O território de Naftali incluía 19 cidades fortificadas e seus povoados. (Jos 19:35-39) Uma destas cidades, Quedes, foi dada aos levitas e atribuiu-se-lhe condição sagrada como cidade de refúgio. (Jos 20:7, 9) Mais duas cidades, Hamate (Hamote-Dor ou Hamom) e Cartã (Quiriataim), também foram designadas aos levitas. (Jos 19:35; 21:6, 32; 1Cr 6:62, 76) Os cananeus não foram expulsos de Bete-Semes e Bete-Anate, mais duas cidades de Naftali, mas foram sujeitos a trabalhos forçados. — Jz 1:33.

A terra antigamente ocupada pela tribo de Naftali, embora montanhosa (Jos 20:7), é fértil. Especialmente férteis são a planície triangular (de Genesaré), no lado NO do mar da Galileia, e a região de Hula (Hulé). A bênção dirigida por Moisés a Naftali talvez aluda à terra de herança da tribo. "Naftali está satisfeito com a aprovação e cheio da bênção de Jeová. Toma deveras posse do oeste e do sul." (De 33:23) "Oeste" pode também ser traduzido por "mar" (CBC) ou por "lago" (AlA), e, portanto, pode indicar o mar da Galileia; e "sul" talvez designe o território mais sulino de Naftali, beirando este mar. Existe também a possibilidade de que o texto, embora aluda ao mar da Galileia, devia rezar: "O mar e seus peixes são a sua posse." — NM n.

Do Tempo dos Juízes Até o Exílio. Na sua profecia no leito de morte, Jacó referira-se a Naftali como "corça esbelta". (Gên 49:21) Isto talvez aluda à ligeireza da tribo e sua perícia na guerra, e a história da tribo parece comprovar isso. Dez mil homens de Naftali e de Zebulão atenderam corajosamente a convocação de Baraque para combater as bem equipadas forças sob o comando de Sísera, e, depois, foram abençoados com a vitória. O próprio Baraque, evidentemente, era da tribo de Naftali, visto que Quedes, em Naftali, parece ter sido sua cidade. (Jz 4:6-15; 5:18) A tribo de Naftali também deu apoio ao juiz Gideão na luta contra os midianitas. — Jz 6:34, 35; 7:23, 24.

Anos mais tarde, 1.000 chefes e mais 37.000 guerreiros da tribo de Naftali vieram a Hébron para tornar Davi rei sobre todo o Israel. Relacionado com os festejos deste evento, trouxeram-se alimentos de tão longe como Issacar, Zebulão e Naftali. (1Cr 12:23, 34, 38-40) Sob a liderança do Rei Davi, a tribo de Naftali parece ter tido uma participação notável na subjugação dos inimigos de Israel. — Sal 68:cab., 1, 27.

Algumas décadas depois da divisão do reino de Israel, Naftali sofreu hostilização do rei sírio Ben-Hadade I. (1Rs 15:20; 2Cr 16:4) Cerca de dois séculos depois, durante o reinado de Peca, habitantes de Naftali foram levados ao exílio assírio por Tiglate-Pileser III. (2Rs 15:29) Quase um século depois da derrubada do reino setentrional, o Rei Josias, de Judá, destemidamente estendeu sua destruição dos apetrechos da idolatria ao N, até os lugares devastados de Naftali dominado pela Assíria. — 2Cr 34:1-7.

A Profecia de Isaías. É bem possível que a humilhação sofrida às mãos dos assírios seja mencionada em Isaías 9:1: "A obscuridade não será como quando a terra estava em aperto, como no tempo anterior, quando se tratava com desprezo a terra de Zebulão e a terra de Naftali." A seguir, Isaías indica que num tempo posterior se daria honra ao que havia sido tratado com desprezo — "o caminho junto ao mar, na região do Jordão, Galileia das nações". Ele prossegue: "O povo que andava na escuridão viu uma grande luz. Quanto aos que moram na terra de sombra tenebrosa, resplandeceu sobre eles a própria luz." (Is 9:1, 2) Estas mesmas palavras foram citadas por Mateus (4:13-17) e aplicadas a Cristo Jesus, "a luz do mundo", e à sua atividade. (Jo 8:12) Visto que Jesus fez de Cafarnaum, no território de Naftali, a "sua própria cidade" (Mt 4:13; 9:1), em certo sentido ele podia ser considerado como pertencente a Naftali. Portanto, também as palavras proféticas de Jacó a respeito de Naftali: "Ele dá palavras de elegância", poderiam razoavelmente ser aplicadas a Jesus. (Gên 49:21) O filho de Deus deveras proferiu "palavras de elegância", induzindo até mesmo oficiais mandados para prendê-lo a exclamar: "Nunca homem algum falou como este." — Jo 7:46.

Mencionado em Visões. Na visão de Ezequiel, a terra designada a Naftali ficava entre Aser e Manassés (Ez 48:3, 4), e um dos portões da cidade chamada "O Próprio Jeová Está Ali" levava o nome de Naftali. (Ez 48:34, 35) Também em visão, o apóstolo João ouviu que haviam sido selados 12.000 da tribo (espiritual) de Naftali. — Re 7:4, 6.

NAFTUIM. Alistado entre os descendentes de Mizraim, filho de Cã. (Gên 10:6, 13, 14; 1Cr 1:11, 12) Como se dá com os outros nomes nesta lista, os peritos usualmente tomam a forma evidentemente plural como indicando uma tribo ou um povo. Presumindo que o nome derive de alguma relação geográfica, alguns peritos frequentemente associam Naftuim com uma frase egípcia que significa "os do Delta", e nesta base se incluem os naftuins entre os habitantes do Baixo (setentrional) Egito. A exatidão destes conceitos ainda não é conclusiva.

NAGAI. Antepassado de Jesus Cristo, alistado na sua genealogia conforme apresentada por Lucas. — Lu 3:23, 25.

NAIM. Cidade galileia em que Jesus Cristo ressuscitou o filho único duma viúva. (Lu 7:11-17) Naim é identificado com a aldeia de Nein (Naʽim), no lado NO do Jebel Dahi (Givʽat Ha-More; o morro de Moré), a uns 10 km ao SSE de Nazaré. Fica na região geral indicada por Jerônimo e Eusébio como o lugar antigo. Sobranceira à planície de Jezreel (Esdrelom), Naim encontra-se num agradável ambiente natural. Também, as águas duma fonte existente ali sustentam excelentes olivais e figueirais. Atualmente a aldeia é bem pequena, mas as ruínas nesta área mostram que era muito maior em séculos anteriores. — FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 738.

Em 31 EC, durante a sua primeira viagem de pregação na Galileia, Cristo Jesus chegou a Naim procedente da vizinhança de Cafarnaum. (Lu 7:1-11) As duas localidades ficavam separadas por uma distância de uns 35 km. O "portão" pode ter sido um simples espaço entre as casas, pelo qual a estrada penetrava em Naim, pois não há nenhuma evidência de que uma muralha alguma vez cercasse a cidade. Provavelmente, foi na entrada oriental de Naim que Jesus e seus discípulos encontraram o cortejo fúnebre, que talvez se dirigisse aos túmulos que havia no morro ao SE da atual Nein. Tendo pena da viúva agora sem filho, Jesus chegou-se ao esquife e ressuscitou o filho dela. A notícia deste milagre se espalhou pela região e até chegou à Judeia. Talvez aludam também a este evento as palavras "os mortos estão sendo levantados", que faziam parte da resposta de Jesus aos mensageiros mais tarde enviados pelo encarcerado João, o Batizador. — Lu 7:11-22.

NAIOTE. Aparentemente, um lugar onde certos profetas moravam no tempo de Samuel. (1Sa 19:18–20:1) Talvez se refira a certa localidade ou a um bairro da cidade de Ramá, na região montanhosa de Efraim. (Veja RAMÁ N.º 5.) O crítico de textos S. R. Driver corrobora este conceito, observando: "É provavelmente o nome duma localidade em Ramá, cujo significado está perdido para nós." — Notes on the Hebrew Text and the Topography of the Books of Samuel (Notas sobre o Texto Hebraico e sobre a Topografia dos Livros de Samuel), Oxford, 1966, p. 159.

NAJA (COBRA-CAPELO) [hebr.: pé·then]. Cobra extremamente venenosa da Ásia e da África. A naja mencionada em seis passagens da Bíblia, sem dúvida, é a naja ou áspide egípcia (Naja haje), comumente usada no encantamento de cobras, tanto em tempos bíblicos como hoje. Igual à cobra-capelo-indiana e à cobra-real asiática, a naja egípcia dilata o pescoço quando irritada.

A naja ataca com um bote de seu corpo erguido, acompanhado por um agudo assobio. Ao morder, as mandíbulas da naja seguram o objeto tenazmente e então ela começa um peculiar movimento de mastigação para assegurar-se de que uma grande dose de veneno penetre na ferida. Por causa disso, e da extrema toxicidade do veneno, as najas (ou cobras-capelo) estão entre as criaturas mais perigosas.

Os israelitas estavam bem familiarizados com esta cobra, não só enquanto estavam no Egito, mas também durante a sua peregrinação pelo ermo. Moisés, dirigindo-se aos israelitas no ermo, referiu-se ao veneno da naja, "o veneno cruel de najas". (De 32:33) O termo "cruel" descreve bem o efeito do veneno da naja. Sobre o seu efeito, Findlay Russell, M.D., no seu livro Snake Venom Poisoning (Envenenamento por Peçonha de Cobra; 1980, p. 362), diz que os sintomas começam com o decaimento das pálpebras, e isto pode ser seguido pela dificuldade de respirar, pela paralisia dos olhos, da língua e da garganta, e pode possivelmente incluir até convulsões e parada cardíaca.

O veneno da naja atua sobre os nervos, causa paralisia do sistema respiratório, e frequentemente é fatal para o homem, a menos que se dê prontamente um antídoto. Zofar fala do "fel de najas" e do "veneno das najas". — Jó 20:14, 16.

O salmista, usando de linguagem figurativa, relaciona a mortífera naja com o leão e diz a respeito daqueles que fizeram de Jeová a sua confiança: "Pisarás no leãozinho e na naja; pisotearás o leão novo jubado e a cobra grande." (Sal 91:13) Isaías, falando do reajuntamento do povo de Jeová, profetiza condições mudadas para eles, descrevendo um tempo em que "a criança de peito há de brincar sobre a toca da naja; e a criança desmamada porá realmente sua própria mão sobre a fresta de luz da cobra venenosa". — Is 11:8, 11, 12.

Como pode a naja "escutar a voz dos encantadores"?

A Bíblia menciona o ouvido da naja e alude à capacidade dela de "escutar a voz dos encantadores". (Sal 58:4, 5) Visto que as serpentes não têm aberturas auriculares de superfície e pareciam aos naturalistas ser indiferentes a sons, muitos presumiam que estes répteis fossem surdos. Comentando este erro, The New Encyclopædia Britannica (A Nova Enciclopédia Britânica; 1987, Vol. 27, p. 159) declara: "Esta suposição é incorreta; as serpentes são sensíveis a algumas ondas sonoras transmitidas pelo ar e podem captá-las através de um mecanismo que serve de substituto da membrana timpânica. . . . Além disso, embora a sensitividade da maioria das serpentes à frequência média dos tons baixos seja inferior à da maioria dos outros tipos de ouvido, não é tanto assim. Em algumas serpentes, porém, a sensitividade é quase tão aguda como na maioria dos lagartos com tipos convencionais de abertura auricular e mecanismo do ouvido médio."

NAOR.

1. Pai de Tera e avô de Abraão. Naor era filho de Serugue e descendente de Sem. Viveu 148 anos (2177 a 2029 AEC). — Gên 11:22-26; 1Cr 1:24-27; Lu 3:34-36.

2. Filho de Tera; neto de Naor (N.º 1); e irmão de Abraão. (Gên 11:26; Jos 24:2) Naor casou-se com Milca, irmã de Ló e filha do outro irmão de Naor, Harã, portanto, a sobrinha de Naor. Com ela teve 8 filhos, e com sua concubina Reumá teve mais 4 filhos, no total de 12, alguns dos quais tornaram-se cabeças tribais. (Gên 11:27, 29; 22:20-24) Por meio do seu filho Betuel, Naor tornou-se avô de Labão e de Rebeca, e bisavô de Leia, Raquel, Jacó (Israel) e Esaú. — Gên 24:15, 24, 47; 29:5, 16; 1Cr 1:34.

O relato de Gênesis sobre Tera e Abraão partirem de Ur dos caldeus não inclui o nome de Naor na lista dos viajantes. (Gên 11:31) No entanto, parece que ele foi mais tarde, porque o servo de Abraão, procurando uma esposa para Isaque, viajou a Harã, onde Tera passara a morar e onde morreu, e onde vivia Labão, neto de Naor, quando Jacó foi ter com ele. (Gên 11:31, 32; 12:4; 27:43) O servo de Abraão veio à "cidade de Naor", quer à própria Harã, quer a um lugar próximo, talvez a Nahur frequentemente mencionada em diversas tabuinhas de Mari, do segundo milênio AEC. (Gên 24:10; 29:4; The Biblical Archaeologist [O Arqueólogo Bíblico], 1948, p. 16) E quando Jacó se separou de Labão, este invocou "o deus de Abraão e o deus de Naor" para julgar entre eles. — Gên 31:53; veja HARÃ N.º 4.

NARCISO. Cabeça duma família em Roma. Quando Paulo escreveu sua carta aos romanos, ele solicitou que seus cumprimentos fossem dados aos "da família de Narciso, que estão no Senhor". — Ro 16:11.

NARDO [hebr.: nerd; gr.: nár·dos]. Pequena planta aromática (Nardostachys jatamansi) encontrada nos montes Himalaia. As hastes e as raízes desta planta, em geral, são consideradas a fonte do nardo mencionado nas Escrituras. (Cân 1:12; 4:13, 14; Mr 14:3) O nardo se distingue por seus feixes de hastes escuras, piliformes, de uns 5 cm de comprimento, que se projetam do topo da raiz. As folhas brotam da parte superior da planta, a qual termina com espiguetas de flores róseas.

Para preservar a sua fragrância, o nardo, um líquido leve, fragrante, avermelhado, era selado em frascos de alabastro, uma pedra macia, usualmente esbranquiçada, marmórea, assim chamada pelo nome de Alabastron, Egito, onde se fabricavam recipientes deste material. O quase meio quilo de óleo perfumado, "nardo genuíno", que Maria derramou dum vaso de alabastro sobre a cabeça e os pés de Jesus Cristo, 'em vista do seu enterro', foi avaliado em 300 denários, o equivalente a cerca de um ano de salário. (Mr 14:3-9; Jo 12:3-8; Mt 20:2) Ser este óleo perfumado tão caro sugere que sua fonte talvez tenha sido a distante Índia.

Por ser muito caro, o nardo muitas vezes era adulterado e até mesmo falsificado. Portanto, é digno de nota que tanto Marcos como João usam a expressão "nardo genuíno". (Mr 14:3; Jo 12:3) Essências valiosas, seladas em pequenos vasos de alabastro, eram antigamente um bom investimento. — Jo 12:5.

NARINAS, ARGOLA PARA AS. Veja ARGOLA PARA AS NARINAS.

NARIZ, NARINAS. A parte da face que permite a passagem do ar na respiração, e serve como o órgão do olfato.

Quando Deus criou Adão, passou a "soprar nas suas narinas o fôlego [forma de nesha·máh] de vida, e o homem veio a ser uma alma vivente". (Gên 2:7) Este "fôlego de vida" não só enchia os pulmões de ar, mas também dava ao organismo a força vital sustentada pela respiração. O fôlego inalado pelo corpo através das narinas é essencial à vida; sustenta a força de vida. No Dilúvio, "morreu tudo em que o fôlego da força da vida estava ativo nas suas narinas, a saber, todos os que estavam em solo seco". — Gên 7:22.

A palavra hebraica para nariz ou narinas ('af) frequentemente é usada para se referir à face inteira. Adão foi sentenciado a obter sua subsistência do solo 'no suor do seu rosto [literalmente: "nariz" ou "narinas"]'. (Gên 3:19) Ló curvou-se com o rosto (nariz) por terra diante dos anjos visitantes. — Gên 19:1.

Sensitividade de Olfato e de Paladar. A área olfativa fica na parte superior das fossas nasais, onde os nervos olfativos terminam em filetes que se parecem a pelos; nesta área se encontram também as fininhas terminações do nervo trigêmeo. O sentido do olfato, nos humanos, é muito apurado. Segundo um artigo na revista Scientific American (fevereiro de 1964, p. 42): "O sentido do olfato, obviamente, é um sentido químico, e sua sensitividade é proverbial; para o químico, a faculdade do nariz, de classificar e caracterizar substâncias, é quase que incrível. Lida com compostos complexos que o químico poderia levar meses para analisar no laboratório; o nariz os identifica instan-taneamente, mesmo numa quantidade tão pequena (como um décimo milionésimo de um grama) que os mais sensíveis instrumentos modernos de laboratório muitas vezes não conseguem detectar a substância, muito menos ainda analisá-la e identificá-la."

O nariz desempenha também um grande papel no paladar. Há quatro sabores primários: doce, salgado, azedo e amargo. Estes são reconhecidos pelas papilas gustativas. No entanto, grande parte do sabor do alimento é percebido por causa do sentido do olfato. Por exemplo, quem tiver as narinas entupidas achará difícil distinguir entre dois tipos de alimento, visto que a maioria dos alimentos tem então sabor um tanto insípido.

Beleza. Um nariz bem-feito, por sua posição de destaque, contribui muito para a beleza do rosto. No Cântico de Salomão (7:4), ser o nariz da donzela sulamita comparado à "torre do Líbano", talvez se refira à simetria do seu nariz, que dava dignidade e beleza ao seu rosto. Deus exigia que os sacerdotes de Israel, por serem seus representantes perante o povo, não tivessem defeitos, um dos requisitos sendo que nenhum sacerdote tivesse nariz fendido ou mutilado. — Le 21:18.

Usos Ilustrativos e Figurados. A palavra para nariz ou narina ('af) é muitas vezes usada em sentido figurado para ira (por causa da respiração violenta ou ofegante da pessoa enfurecida). (Veja IRA, I.) É também usada com referência às ações de Jeová motivadas por Sua ira (Sal 18:8, 15) ou quando ele exerce sua poderosa força ativa. — Êx 14:21; 15:8.

A repugnante idolatria em que Israel caiu foi motivo da ira ardente de Jeová contra eles, a qual ele expressou por meio do profeta Isaías, dizendo: "Estes são fumaça nas minhas narinas, um fogo ardendo o dia inteiro." — Is 65:5.

Provérbios 30:32, 33, declara: "Se agiste de modo insensato por te elevares a ti mesmo, e se fixaste nisto teu pensamento, põe a mão à boca. Pois, bater o leite é o que produz manteiga, e premer o nariz é o que faz sair sangue, e premer a ira é o que produz a altercação." Isto destaca fortemente as dificuldades que se podem causar por falar de modo errado ou por abrigar rancor, ou por dar vazão a ele. Aqui, num jogo de palavras, há uma forma dual da palavra para "nariz".

NASCENTE, POENTE. A hora em que o sol surge no horizonte, e a hora em que desaparece no horizonte. Estas horas eram pontos fundamentais na vida diária das pessoas no período bíblico. Para a maioria delas, o amanhecer abria a cortina para as atividades do dia e o escurecer a fechava de novo. Conforme escreveu o salmista: "O próprio sol . . . se põe. Tu causas a escuridão para que se torne noite; nela se movem todos os animais selváticos da floresta. Os leões novos jubados estão bramindo pela presa e por procurarem do próprio Deus o seu alimento. O sol começa a raiar — eles se recolhem e se deitam nos seus próprios esconderijos. O homem sai para a sua atividade e para o seu serviço até à noitinha. Quantos são os teus trabalhos, ó Jeová! A todos eles fizeste em sabedoria. A terra está cheia das tuas produções." — Sal 104:19-24.

O nascer do sol marcava o começo do período diurno natural, e, quando Jesus Cristo estava na terra, o início da contagem das "doze horas de luz no dia". (Mr 16:2; Jo 11:9) Naturalmente, muitos se levantavam antes do amanhecer, tais como a mulher diligente de Provérbios 31:15. Jesus também é mencionado como se levantando antes de surgir o sol, para passar tempo em oração. (Mr 1:35) Com o nascer do sol, abriam-se os grandes portões das cidades, os homens iam aos seus campos ou vinhedos, as mulheres se enfileiravam junto aos poços para pegar água, as pessoas enchiam as feiras e os pescadores atracavam para vender a pesca da noite, após o que limpavam e consertavam suas redes.

As atividades e os trabalhos normais do dia prosseguiam até o pôr do sol. Quando este se aproximava, os homens retornavam dos campos, os amos pagavam-lhes o salário do dia, as mulheres levavam para casa o suprimento de água para a noite, os portões da cidade se fechavam e os vigias iniciavam a primeira das quatro vigílias da noite, ao passo que em toda a cidade começavam a tremeluzir as lâmpadas a óleo nas casas. (Jz 19:14-16; Mt 20:8-12; De 24:15; Gên 24:11; Ne 13:19; Mr 13:35) Para muitos, porém, o trabalho prosseguia após a refeição noturna, ao passo que homens e mulheres diligentes teciam ou se empenhavam em outros ofícios portas adentro. (Pr 31:18, 19; 2Te 3:8) Ocasionalmente, Jesus e seus apóstolos também prosseguiam com o seu ministério e atividades relacionadas noite adentro. — Mt 14:23-25; Mr 1:32-34; 4:35-39; Lu 6:12; 2Co 6:4, 5.

Ao passo que o pôr do sol marcava o fim do período diurno, para os judeus assinalava o início de um novo dia calendar, o qual começava oficialmente ao pôr do sol, sendo contado de noitinha a noitinha. (Le 23:32; compare isso com Mr 1:21, 32, que mostra que o dia, neste caso um sábado, terminava à noitinha.) Portanto, era com o pôr do sol que começava o 14 de nisã, e vinha a hora para abater o cordeiro e comer a Páscoa. — Êx 12:6-10; De 16:6; Mt 26:20; veja PÁSCOA.

Visto que o dia terminava com o pôr do sol, a Lei exigia que se fizessem então certas coisas. Uma vestimenta tomada em penhor tinha de ser devolvida ao seu dono "ao pôr do sol". (Êx 22:26; De 24:13) Naquela hora, também, deviam ser pagos os salários aos trabalhadores contratados (De 24:15), um cadáver pendurado num madeiro tinha de ser removido e enterrado (De 21:22, 23; Jos 8:29; 10:26, 27), e quem tivesse estado cerimonialmente impuro tinha de se banhar, e, após o pôr do sol, era considerado novamente limpo (Le 22:6, 7; De 23:11). Terminar o dia e começar o novo ao pôr do sol dava sentido à exortação do apóstolo: "Não se ponha o sol enquanto estais encolerizados." — Ef 4:26.

O nascente e o poente são ocasionalmente usados em sentido figurado. Em 2 Samuel 23:3, 4, o reinado dum governante justo que teme a Deus é tido como tão revigorante "como a luz da manhã quando raia o sol, uma manhã sem nuvens". (Veja Mal 4:2; Mt 17:2; Re 1:16.) A Jeová Deus faz-se a solicitação a favor dos servos dele: "Sejam os que te amam como quando o sol sai na sua potência." — Jz 5:31; Mt 13:43; Sal 110:3; Da 12:3; contraste isso com Miq 3:5, 6; Jo 3:19, 20.

Os termos "nascente" e "poente" são também usados em sentido geográfico, significando de L a O. (Êx 27:13; Jos 1:4; Sal 107:3; Re 16:12) Este é o sentido do Salmo 113:3: "Desde o nascente do sol até o seu poente, o nome de Jeová deve ser louvado." (Veja também Mal 1:11; Is 45:6.) 'Desde o nascente até o poente' pode significar também o dia inteiro.

NASCER DE NOVO. Veja FILHO(S) DE DEUS (Filhos Cristãos de Deus).

NASCIMENTO. A palavra hebraica ya·ládh significa "dar à luz; produzir; tornar-se pai de". (Gên 4:1, 2; 16:15; 30:39; 1Cr 1:10) Ela é aparentada com yé·ledh ("filho", "menino" [Gên 21:8]), moh·lé·dheth (nascimento; lar; parentela [Gên 31:13 n]) e toh·le·dhóhth (história; origens históricas; gerações; genealogia [Gên 2:4 n; Mt 1:1 n]). O termo hebraico hhil (ou: hhul), embora usado primariamente com respeito a sentir dores de parto, é usado em Jó 39:1 e em Provérbios 25:23 no sentido de parir. (Compare isso com Is 26:17, 18; veja DORES DE PARTO.) O termo grego gen·ná·o significa "tornar-se pai de; tornar-se mãe de; dar à luz; nascer". (Mt 1:2; Lu 1:57; Jo 16:21; Mt 2:1) Ti·kto é traduzido por "dar à luz". — Mt 1:21.

Há "tempo para nascer", disse Salomão, e nos humanos, normalmente, isto ocorre cerca de 280 dias após a concepção. (Ec 3:2) Para os pais, o dia em que seu bebê nasce usualmente é de muita alegria, embora para a pessoa, segundo o sábio Rei Salomão, o dia da morte, se ela teve uma vida de boas realizações e tiver um bom nome perante Deus, é ainda melhor do que o dia em que nasceu. — Lu 1:57, 58; Ec 7:1.

Desde tempos primitivos, parteiras ajudavam no parto. Usava-se um tipo de assento de parto para ajudar a mãe e para facilitar o trabalho da parteira. Talvez fossem duas pedras ou tijolos sobre os quais a mãe se agachava ou acocorava durante o parto. (Êx 1:16) A palavra hebraica para "assento do parto", em Êxodo ('ov·ná·yim), é aparentada com a palavra hebraica para "pedra" e ocorre só mais uma vez na Bíblia (Je 18:3), onde é traduzida por "roda de oleiro". The International Standard Bible Encyclopedia (A Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional) declara: "A palavra é usada em ambos os lugares na forma dual, o que aponta, sem dúvida, para o fato de a roda de oleiro ser composta de dois discos, e sugere que o assento de parto era similarmente duplo." (Vol. 1, 1979, p. 516) Antigos hieróglifos confirmam que tais assentos de parto eram usados no Egito.

Procedimentos pós-parto, na maioria realizados por parteiras, são mencionados em Ezequiel 16:4, embora em sentido figurado. O cordão umbilical era cortado e o bebê era lavado, esfregado com sal e então enfaixado. O uso do sal talvez fosse para secar a pele, e para torná-la firme e proporcionar-lhe tono. Enfaixar o bebê da cabeça aos pés, como foi feito com Jesus (Lu 2:7), quase dava à criança um aspecto de múmia, e servia para manter o corpo aquecido e ereto; por se passarem as faixas sob o queixo e sobre o alto da cabeça, segundo se diz, treinava-se a criança a respirar pelas narinas. Este tipo de cuidado dispensado a recém-nascidos remonta à antiguidade, porque Jó conhecia tais faixas. — Jó 38:9.

Depois de se cuidar das necessidades imediatas da mãe e da criança, o bebê era apresentado ao pai, ou se dava a notícia do nascimento, e o pai reconhecia o bebê como seu. (Je 20:15) Assim, também, quando uma serva, como substituta, dava à luz a criança gerada pelo marido da sua senhora estéril, reconhecia-se o bebê como pertencente à senhora. (Gên 16:2) Evidentemente era isto que Raquel quis dizer quando solicitou que sua escrava Bila 'desse à luz sobre os seus joelhos', a fim de que 'obtivesse dela filhos'. (Gên 30:3) Não era o caso de o parto ocorrer literalmente sobre os joelhos de Raquel, mas de ela embalar a criança sobre os seus joelhos, como se fosse sua própria. — Veja Gên 50:23.

Quer por ocasião do nascimento do bebê, quer quando era circuncidado, oito dias mais tarde, um dos pais dava-lhe o nome. Se havia uma diferença de opinião, a decisão do pai quanto ao nome era definitiva. (Gên 16:15; 21:3; 29:32-35; 35:18; Lu 1:59-63; 2:21) Costumeiramente, o bebê era amamentado pela mãe (Gên 21:7; Sal 22:9; Is 49:15; 1Te 2:7), embora pareça que às vezes se usavam outras mulheres para isso. (Êx 2:7) A criança usualmente só era desmamada aos dois ou três anos, ou mais. Parece que Isaque já tinha cinco anos; e no caso dele, este evento era motivo de celebração e festejos. — Gên 21:8; 1Sa 1:22, 23.

Sob a Lei mosaica, a mulher que teve um menino era cerimonialmente impura por 7 dias, requerendo mais 33 dias para a sua purificação. Se a criança era menina, então a mãe era considerada impura por 14 dias, requerendo mais 66 dias para a purificação. Ao fim do período de purificação, deviam-se fazer para ela uma oferta queimada e uma oferta pelo pecado: um carneirinho e uma rola ou um pombo novo, ou então duas rolas ou dois pombos novos, segundo a situação dos pais da criança. (Le 12:1-8; Lu 2:24) Se o filho era o primogênito, ele tinha de ser remido pelo pagamento de cinco siclos de prata (US$ 11). — Núm 18:15, 16; veja PRIMOGÊNITO, PRIMEIRO NASCIDO.

As Escrituras usam muitas vezes em sentido figurado termos relacionados com o nascimento natural. (Sal 90:2; Pr 27:1; Is 66:8, 9; Tg 1:15) A severidade das dores de parto descreve bem um inescapável sofrimento vindo de outras fontes. (Sal 48:6; Je 13:21; Miq 4:9, 10; Gál 4:19; 1Te 5:3) Em sentido espiritual, Jesus disse que é preciso que se "nasça de água e espírito" para entrar no Reino. Isto envolve ser batizado em água e ser gerado pelo espírito de Deus, tornando-se assim filho de Deus com a perspectiva de participar no Reino celestial. (Jo 3:3-8; 2Co 5:17; 1Pe 1:3, 23) Revelação (ou Apocalipse), em linguagem simbólica, descreve o 'nascimento de um filho, um varão', no céu, após um período de agonizante dor. — Re 12:1-5.

NASOM [duma raiz que significa "serpente"]. Maioral da tribo de Judá no ermo. Nasom era filho de Aminadabe e estava na quinta geração alistada, depois de Judá. (1Cr 2:3-10) Sua irmã era a esposa de Arão. (Êx 6:23) Nasom constituía um elo na linhagem que levou a Davi e a Jesus, tornando-se pai de Salmom, que se casou com Raabe, e avô de Boaz, o qual, por sua vez, casou-se com Rute. — 1Cr 2:11-15; Ru 4:20; Mt 1:4-6, 16; Lu 3:32.

Como maioral de Judá, a principal tribo de Israel, Nasom ajudou Moisés no primeiro registro dos homens combatentes, feito no ermo. Ele apresentou uma contribuição para o serviço do tabernáculo quando se inaugurou o altar, e chefiou o exército de Judá, de 74.600 homens, que liderava a ordem de marcha de Israel. — Núm 1:2-7; 2:3, 4; 7:2, 11-17; 10:14.

NATÃ [[Deus] Deu].

1. Descendente de Judá. Filho de Atai e pai de Zabade. O avô de Natã era um servo egípcio de nome Jara. — 1Cr 2:3, 34-36.

2. Profeta de Jeová durante o reinado de Davi; possivelmente da tribo de Levi. Quando o rei revelou a Natã seu desejo de construir um templo para a adoração de Jeová, o profeta respondeu: "Tudo o que tiveres no coração — vai, faze." (2Sa 7:1-3; 1Cr 17:1, 2) Todavia, naquela noite, Jeová informou Natã que, em vez de Davi construir um templo, Jeová construiria para Davi uma casa duradoura, e que, mais tarde, o descendente de Davi construiria a casa de Jeová. Assim, por meio de Natã, Jeová anunciou a Davi um pacto para um reino "por tempo indefinido", na linhagem de Davi. — 2Sa 7:4-17; 1Cr 17:3-15.

Natã foi enviado mais tarde por Jeová para apontar tanto a magnitude do pecado de Davi contra Urias, o hitita, referente a Bate-Seba, como a penalidade divina imposta por causa disso. Fez isso com tato, mas de forma vigorosa, usando uma ilustração. Davi foi assim manobrado a expressar, sem o saber e sem preconceito pessoal, seu próprio julgamento de tal ato. Natã informou-o então: "Tu mesmo és o homem!" e expressou o julgamento de Jeová sobre Davi e sua casa. — 2Sa 12:1-18; veja também Sal 51:cab.

Com o tempo, nasceu a Davi e a Bate-Seba um segundo filho, chamado Salomão. Jeová amava este filho; de modo que enviou seu profeta Natã, o qual, "por causa de Jeová", chamou o menino de Jedidias, que significa "Amado de Jah". (2Sa 12:24, 25) Nos dias finais da vida de Davi, quando Adonias tentou usurpar o trono, Natã tomou medidas apropriadas para trazer o assunto à atenção de Davi. Natã participou então em ungir e empossar Salomão como rei. — 1Rs 1:5-40.

Parece que Natã, junto com Gade, aconselhou Davi sobre o uso correto de instrumentos musicais relacionados com o santuário. (2Cr 29:25) Natã e Gade foram evidentemente os usados para registrar as informações contidas nos últimos capítulos de Primeiro Samuel e de todo o Segundo Samuel. (1Cr 29:29) "Entre as palavras de Natã, o profeta", foram também registrados os "assuntos de Salomão". — 2Cr 9:29.

Este Natã pode ter sido o pai de Azarias e de Zabude, que ambos ocupavam cargos importantes durante o reinado de Salomão. Azarias era um supervisor principesco dos prepostos, ao passo que Zabude servia como sacerdote e amigo íntimo, e conselheiro, do rei. — 1Rs 4:1, 5.

3. Pai de Igal e irmão de Joel, dois dos poderosos de guerra, de Davi. — 2Sa 23:8, 36; 1Cr 11:26, 38.

4. Filho de Davi com sua esposa Bate-Seba, que lhe nasceu em Jerusalém. (2Sa 5:13, 14; 1Cr 3:5) Traça-se a linhagem natural do Messias desde Davi, através de Natã e seus descendentes, até Jesus, evidentemente através da mãe de Jesus, Maria.

(Lu 3:23, 31) A respeito da ocasião em que "olharão para Aquele a quem traspassaram", a profecia de Zacarias diz que haverá uma lamentação amarga e lamento em todo país, família por família, e especialmente pelas famílias de Davi, de Levi, dos simeítas e da "família da casa de Natã". (Za 12:10-14) Se a família da casa de Natã, mencionada aqui, descendeu do filho de Davi, isto a tornaria uma das famílias de Davi. Portanto, a lamentação afetaria famílias dentro de famílias.

5. Um dos nove cabeças dos exilados acampados junto ao rio Aava, os quais Esdras enviou para recrutar ministros para os serviços da casa de Deus em Jerusalém. — Esd 8:15-17.

6. Ex-exilado em Babilônia e um dos 13 filhos de Binui, que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras acatando as instruções de Esdras. — Esd 10:10, 11, 38-42, 44.

NATÃ-MELEQUE [O Rei Deu]. Oficial da corte de Judá, cujo refeitório ficava nos pórticos do templo. O Rei Josias, adotando medidas contra a adoração falsa, fez que os cavalos que reis de Judá tinham entregue ao sol "cessassem de entrar na casa de Jeová junto ao refeitório de Natã-Meleque". — 2Rs 23:11.

NATANAEL [do hebr., significando "Deus Deu"]. Presumivelmente o nome de Bartolomeu, portanto, um dos 12 apóstolos de Jesus. Bartolomeu, que significa "Filho de Tolmai", era um termo patronímico (isto é, nome derivado do pai). O apóstolo João usa o nome próprio dele, Natanael, ao passo que Mateus, Marcos e Lucas o chamam de Bartolomeu. Ao fazerem isso, associam Filipe e Bartolomeu, assim como João relaciona Filipe com Natanael. (Mt 10:3; Mr 3:18; Lu 6:14; Jo 1:45, 46) Não era incomum pessoas serem conhecidas por mais de um nome. Por exemplo, "Simão, filho de João", passou a ser conhecido também como Cefas e Pedro. (Jo 1:42) Nem era excepcional ser Natanael chamado de Bartolomeu, ou "Filho de Tolmai", assim como outro homem era chamado simplesmente de Bartimeu, ou "Filho de Timeu". (Mr 10:46) Os dois nomes, Natanael e Bartolomeu, são usados intercambiavelmente pelos escritores cristãos nos séculos seguintes.

Natanael era de Caná da Galileia. (Jo 21:2) Começou a seguir muito cedo a Jesus no ministério do Amo. Filipe, depois de aceitar a convocação de Jesus: "Sê meu seguidor", procurou imediatamente seu amigo Natanael e convidou-o a 'vir e ver' o Messias. Natanael perguntou: "Pode sair algo bom de Nazaré?", mas ele aceitou então o convite. Jesus, vendo-o chegar, observou: "Eis um israelita de verdade, em quem não há fraude." Natanael deve ter sido um homem excepcional para Jesus fazer essa declaração. Por Jesus dizer isso e declarar que vira Natanael sob uma figueira antes de Filipe o chamar, Natanael confessou que Jesus, deveras, era "o Filho de Deus, . . . Rei de Israel". Jesus assegurou-lhe que ele 'veria coisas maiores do que estas'. — Jo 1:43-51.

Natanael, como um dos 12, estava constantemente presente durante o ministério de Jesus, sendo treinado para serviço futuro. (Mt 11:1; 19:25-28; 20:17-19, 24-28; Mr 4:10; 11:11; Jo 6:48-67) Após a morte e ressurreição de Jesus, Natanael e outros apóstolos voltaram para a sua pescaria, e foi quando se aproximavam da margem no seu barco, certa manhã, que Jesus os chamou. Natanael, diferente de Pedro, ficou no barco até atracar, e então, juntando-se aos demais no desjejum, acompanhou a significativa palestra entre Jesus e Pedro. (Jo 21:1-23) Ele estava também com os outros apóstolos quando se reuniam para oração, e no dia de Pentecostes. — At 1:13, 14; 2:42.

NATUREZA. Constituição básica de alguma coisa. Pode referir-se ao que a pessoa é de nascença, bem como a qualidades hereditárias junto com costumes adquiridos. Os tradutores, em geral, vertem as palavras gregas fý·sis e fy·si·kós (a forma adjetiva) respectivamente por "natureza" e "natural".

Homens e Animais. Que o homem possui natureza diferente da dos animais selvagens, e que até mesmo os animais selvagens não são todos da mesma natureza, é demonstrado pela declaração de Tiago 3:7: "Porque toda espécie [gr.: fý·sis, "natureza"] de fera, bem como de ave, e de bicho rastejante, e de animal marinho, há de ser domada e tem sido domada pelo gênero humano [fý·sei tei an·thro·pí·nei, "natureza pertencente ao homem"]." Esta diferença em "natureza" revela a variedade existente na criação de Deus e é mantida pela lei divina, de que cada um se reproduza segundo a sua própria espécie. — Gên 1:20-28; compare isso com 1Co 15:39.

Natureza Divina. Também os que estão no céu, as criaturas espirituais de Deus, têm natureza diferente. O apóstolo Pedro fala aos seus concristãos, os irmãos espirituais de Jesus Cristo, sobre "as promessas preciosas e mui grandiosas, para que, por intermédio delas, vos tornásseis parceiros na natureza divina [fý·se·os]". (2Pe 1:4) Pedro mostrou na sua primeira carta que isto significa participar com Cristo na sua glória quais pessoas espirituais: "Deus . . . nos deu um novo nascimento [a·na·gen·né·sas he·más, "tendo regenerado a nós"] para uma esperança viva por intermédio da ressurreição de Jesus Cristo dentre os mortos, para uma herança incorruptível, e imaculada, e imarcescível. Ela está reservada nos céus para vós." (1Pe 1:3, 4) A "natureza divina" requer uma mudança de natureza por meio de morte e ressurreição, conforme o apóstolo Paulo torna claro em Primeira Coríntios, capítulo 15. Ele explica que o cristão tem de morrer e tem de ser ressuscitado num corpo diferente, um espiritual, o que requer uma mudança. — 1Co 15:36, 38, 44, 49, 51.

Natureza Inerente. Paulo chama seus patrícios judeus de "judeus por natureza", isto é, nascidos de pais judeus, dos filhos de Israel, ou Jacó. — Gál 2:15; compare isso com Ro 2:27.

Na ilustração da oliveira, ele chama os judeus carnais de ramos naturais (ka·tá fý·sin, "segundo a natureza") da oliveira cultivada. Ele diz aos cristãos gentios: "Porque, se foste cortado da oliveira que é brava por natureza e foste enxertado, contrário à natureza, numa oliveira cultivada, quanto mais aqueles, que são naturais, serão enxertados na sua própria oliveira!" (Ro 11:21-24) A oliveira brava é infrutífera ou produz um fruto muito inferior, mas é costume, nos países mediterrâneos, enxertar nela ramos de oliveira cultivada para produzir bons frutos. Mas Paulo se referiu a um costume menos comum: enxertar ramos de uma oliveira brava numa árvore cultivada. Daí ele diz que um enxerto desse tipo é "contrário à natureza". Paulo usa isso para destacar que foi pela bondade imerecida de Deus que os gentios substituíram os "ramos naturais". Os judeus haviam sido 'cultivados' durante séculos por Jeová, mas os gentios haviam sido 'bravos', não tendo a religião verdadeira, nem produzindo frutos para Deus. Mas agora eles podiam passar a produzir frutos excelentes. Jeová ia garantir isso por meio desse bem-sucedido 'enxerto'.

Também, no seu argumento aos gálatas, para impedir que fossem escravizados por ensinos judaizantes, Paulo disse: "Quando não conhecíeis a Deus, então foi que trabalhastes como escravos para os que por natureza não são deuses." Estes falsos deuses que eles haviam adorado, pela sua própria origem e produção, não eram realmente deuses; era-lhes impossível atingir tal posição. Eles não somente não tinham autoridade para ser deuses, mas não tinham tais qualidades na sua natureza ou constituição intrínseca. — Gál 4:8.

Consciência. Certas tendências ou qualidades são inatas na humanidade, realmente dadas ao homem desde o começo. O apóstolo Paulo comenta a consciência, ou pelo menos um vestígio dela, que ainda persiste no homem decaído, embora ele, em muitos casos, se tenha desviado de Deus e não possua a Sua lei. Isto explica por que todas as nações criaram muitas leis que estão em harmonia com a justiça e o juízo, e muitas pessoas seguem certos bons princípios. Paulo diz: "Pois, sempre que pessoas das nações, que não têm lei, fazem por natureza as coisas da lei, tais pessoas, embora não tenham lei, são uma lei para si mesmas. Elas é que são quem demonstra que a matéria da lei está escrita nos seus corações, ao passo que a sua consciência lhes dá testemunho e nos seus próprios pensamentos são acusadas ou até mesmo desculpadas." — Ro 2:14, 15.

Ao considerar o assunto da chefia com a congregação cristã, Paulo trouxe à atenção a regra de que a mulher deve usar uma cobertura na cabeça quando ora ou profetiza perante a congregação, em sinal de sujeição. Ilustrando isso, ele disse: "Não ensina a própria natureza que, se um homem tiver cabelo comprido, é uma desonra para ele; mas, se a mulher tiver cabelo comprido, é uma glória para ela? Porque o cabelo dela foi-lhe dado em lugar de mantilha." — 1Co 11:14, 15.

A referência de Paulo à "própria natureza" evidentemente inclui mais do que um "costume", que ele menciona no versículo 16 relacionado com o uso duma cobertura na cabeça por parte das mulheres. Características hereditárias provavelmente também influíam no que os cristãos em Corinto consideravam como natural. Entre os europeus (tais como os gregos), o cabelo das mulheres, quando não é cortado, usualmente fica bem mais comprido do que o dos homens. Mas isso não acontece com o cabelo liso dos orientais e dos índios, nem com o cabelo crespo dos negros e dos melanésios.

Além de se aperceberem das qualidades hereditárias entre eles, os cristãos em Corinto sabiam que era costume geral os homens apararem o cabelo a um comprimento moderado. Isto era também comum entre os homens judeus; de modo que o cabelo comprido, não cortado, dos nazireus, marcava-os como homens que não seguiam o costume geral. (Núm 6:5) Por outro lado, as judias geralmente usavam o cabelo bastante comprido. (Lu 7:38; Jo 11:2) Na cidade grega de Corinto, rapar o cabelo da mulher, ou cortá-lo bem curto, era sinal de ela ser escrava, ou de estar em situação de desonra por ter sido apanhada em fornicação ou adultério. — 1Co 11:6.

Portanto, quando Paulo disse que "a própria natureza" os ensinava, evidentemente pensava nos diversos fatores que influenciavam a atitude deles para com o que era natural.

Ao dizer: "Não ensina a própria natureza . . .?", Paulo não personificava a natureza, como se fosse uma deusa. Antes, Deus dera ao homem a faculdade de raciocínio. Por observar e raciocinar sobre as coisas como Deus as fizera, e sobre o resultado de as usar de diversas maneiras, o homem pode aprender muito sobre o que é correto. Quem realmente ensina é Deus, e o homem, com a mente corretamente orientada pela Palavra de Deus, pode encarar as coisas na sua perspectiva e relação corretas, discernindo assim de modo certo o que é natural ou desnatural. Desta maneira, a pessoa pode ter neste sentido uma consciência treinada, e pode evitar a consciência aviltada e que aprova coisas desnaturais. — Ro 1:26, 27; Tit 1:15; 1Co 8:7.

Uso Natural do Corpo. É errado os homens e as mulheres usarem seu corpo dum modo que esteja em desarmonia com as funções para as quais Deus os criou. Neste sentido, o que é desnatural é pecaminoso. As Escrituras descrevem a impureza e a condenação que sobrevêm àqueles que praticam tais coisas: "É por isso que Deus os entregou a ignominiosos apetites sexuais, pois tanto as suas fêmeas trocaram o uso natural [fy·si·kén] de si mesmas por outro contrário à natureza; e, igualmente, até os varões abandonaram o uso natural da fêmea e ficaram violentamente inflamados na sua concupiscência de uns para com os outros, machos com machos, praticando o que é obsceno e recebendo em si mesmos a plena recompensa, que se devia ao seu erro." Tais pessoas rebaixam-se ao nível dos animais. (Ro 1:26, 27; 2Pe 2:12) Vão atrás de coisas carnais erradas porque, iguais a animais, lhes falta razoabilidade, não tendo eles espiritualidade. — Ju 7, 10.

Nascimento. Outra palavra grega traduzida por "natural" é gé·ne·sis, que significa literalmente "nascimento" ou "origem". Tiago fala de "um homem que olha para o seu rosto natural [literalmente: o rosto do seu nascimento] num espelho". (Tg 1:23) Tiago diz também que "a língua é um fogo", e que ela "incendeia a roda da vida natural [literalmente: a roda do nascimento]". (Tg 3:5, 6) Tiago talvez aluda aqui a uma roda, tal como a dum carro, que podia ser incendiada por um eixo quente, em brasas. De modo similar, a língua pode incendiar toda a roda da vida da pessoa, a qual obteve por nascimento, tornando a vida um círculo vicioso, possivelmente até mesmo resultando na sua própria destruição como por fogo.

NAUM [Confortador [isto é, alguém que encoraja]].

1. Profeta israelita do sétimo século AEC e escritor do livro que leva o seu nome. Naum talvez estivesse em Judá quando registrou sua profecia. (Na 1:15) Ser ele elcosita evidentemente significa que morava em Elcos, que era possivelmente uma cidade ou aldeia de Judá. — Na 1:1; veja ELCOSITA.

2. Antepassado pós-exílico de Jesus Cristo na linhagem da sua mãe terrestre, Maria. — Lu 3:25.

NAUM, LIVRO DE. Este livro é uma profética "pronúncia contra Nínive", capital do Império Assírio. Este livro bíblico foi escrito por Naum, o elcosita. (Na 1:1) O cumprimento histórico daquela pronúncia profética atesta a autenticidade do livro. Algum tempo depois de a cidade egípcia de Nô-Amom (Tebas) sofrer uma humilhante derrota no sétimo século AEC (3:8-10), escreveu-se o livro de Naum, completado antes da predita destruição de Nínive em 632 AEC. — Veja ASSÍRIA; NÍNIVE.

Harmonia com Outros Livros da Bíblia. O livro de Naum concorda plenamente com o restante das Escrituras em descrever Jeová como "Deus que exige devoção exclusiva", que é "vagaroso em irar-se e grande em poder", mas de modo algum se refreia de punir. (Na 1:2, 3; compare isso com Êx 20:5; 34:6, 7; Jó 9:4; Sal 62:11.) "Jeová é bom, baluarte no dia da aflição. E ele tem conhecimento dos que procuram refugiar-se nele." (Na 1:7; compare isso com Sal 25:8; 46:1; Is 25:4; Mt 19:17.) Estas qualidades são claramente manifestadas em ele libertar os israelitas da opressão assíria e em executar vingança na Nínive culpada de sangue, depois de um considerável tempo de tolerância.

São também dignas de nota as similaridades entre o capítulo 1 de Naum e o Salmo 97. As palavras de Isaías (10:24-27; 30:27-33), a respeito do julgamento de Jeová contra a Assíria, são até certo ponto paralelas aos capítulos 2 e 3 de Naum. — Compare também Is 52:7; Na 1:15; Ro 10:15.

DESTAQUES DE NAUM

Pronúncia contra Nínive, capital da Assíria.

Escrito algum tempo antes de Nínive ser destruída em 632 AEC.

Jeová executa vingança nos seus adversários. (1:1-6)

- Jeová exige devoção exclusiva; embora seja vagaroso em irar-se, não se refreia de punir quando isto é merecido.
- Ninguém pode ficar de pé contra o calor da Sua ira; diante dele o mar se resseca, os montes tremem, os morros se derretem, a terra é sublevada.

A execução dos iníquos dá alívio aos que esperam em Jeová. (1:7–3:19)

- Jeová é baluarte protetor para os que confiam nele, mas exterminará os inimigos.
- Anunciar-se-ão boas novas a Judá; o "imprestável" será decepado, e a adoração verdadeira será realizada sem impedimento.
- Jeová recolherá os seus, mas Nínive será assolada e seus carros de guerra serão queimados.
- A cidade culpada de sangue será saqueada como punição pelos seus pecados; nada poderá salvá-la, seus guerreiros ficaram como mulheres.
- O golpe infligido ao rei da Assíria ficou incurável.

Fundo Histórico. Embora se assegurasse ao Rei Acaz, que não tinha fé, que a conspiração do rei sírio Rezim e do rei israelita Peca fracassaria na tentativa de depô-lo como rei (Is 7:3-7), ele imprudentemente apelou para o rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III (Tilgate-Pilneser) em busca de ajuda. Por fim, esta ação "causou-lhe aflição, e não o fortaleceu", porque Judá passou a estar sob o pesado jugo da Assíria. (2Cr 28:20, 21) Mais tarde, o filho e sucessor de Acaz, Ezequias, rebelou-se contra o domínio assírio. (2Rs 18:7) Depois disso, o monarca assírio, Senaqueribe, invadiu Judá e tomou uma cidade fortificada após outra, resultando numa extensa desolação do país. (Veja Is 7:20, 23-25; 8:6-8; 36:1, 2.) O próximo rei de Judá, Manassés, foi capturado por chefes do exército assírio e levado a Babilônia (então sob controle assírio). — 2Cr 33:11.

Visto que Judá tinha assim sofrido por muito tempo sob a mão pesada da Assíria, a profecia de Naum a respeito da iminente destruição de Nínive era boas novas. Naum escreveu como se a Assíria já tivesse sofrido a queda: "Eis sobre os montes os pés daquele que traz boas novas, aquele que publica a paz. Ó Judá, celebra as tuas festividades. Paga os teus votos; porque não mais passará por ti nenhum imprestável. Certamente será decepado na sua inteireza." (Na 1:15) Não haveria mais interferência por parte dos assírios; nada impediria os judeus de assistir ou de celebrar as festividades. Sua libertação do opressor assírio seria completa. (Veja Na 1:9.) Também, todos os outros povos que soubessem da destruição de Nínive haveriam de "bater palmas", ou regozijar-se, com a calamidade dela, porque a maldade da cidade causara-lhes muitos sofrimentos. — 3:19.

A agressividade militar dos assírios tornara Nínive uma "cidade de derramamento de sangue". (Na 3:1) Seu tratamento dos cativos de guerra era cruel e desumano. Alguns eram queimados ou esfolados vivos. Outros eram cegados ou se lhes cortavam o nariz, as orelhas ou os dedos. Frequentemente, os cativos eram conduzidos por cordões com ganchos que furavam o nariz ou os lábios. Deveras, Nínive merecia ser destruída pela sua culpa de sangue.

NAVALHA. Instrumento afiado, usado para rapar o cabelo. As duas palavras hebraicas para navalha derivam duma raiz que significa "expor". (Is 3:17) Espécimes deste instrumento encontrados no Egito são de bronze. Estes achados harmonizam-se com o registro bíblico, de que se usavam ali navalhas desde tempos primordiais. — Gên 41:14.

Embora os homens de Israel usassem barba e cabelos moderadamente longos, pelo visto usavam a navalha para apará-los; em Atos 18:18, faz-se também menção de o cabelo ser "rapado" (Al) ou 'cortado rente' (NM). (Veja também 2Sa 19:24; Ez 44:20.) Os levitas rapavam o corpo todo com navalha, por ocasião da investidura no serviço junto à tenda de reunião, no ermo. (Núm 8:7) Quem estivesse sob o voto de nazireu não devia usar a navalha na cabeça até terminar o período do voto. (Núm 6:5, 18; Jz 13:5; 16:17; At 21:23, 24) Samuel, que era levita, já antes do seu nascimento foi devotado por sua mãe ao serviço da tenda de reunião. Nunca devia passar navalha no cabelo da sua cabeça. — 1Sa 1:11.

Jeová advertiu Judá de que o assírio seria usado por Jeová como "navalha" para 'rapar a cabeça e os pelos dos pés', e para 'arrasar até mesmo a barba', evidentemente retratando a devastação de grande parte da terra de Judá e ser a população capturada levada embora. — Is 7:20.

Que espadas podiam ser tão afiadas como navalha é demonstrado pela ordem de Deus a Ezequiel, de usar uma espada como navalha de barbeiro para cortar seu cabelo e sua barba, e depois golpear um terço do cabelo com a espada, retratando a vindoura destruição pela espada de parte da população de Jerusalém. (Ez 5:1, 2, 12) Isto mostra também que a profissão de barbeiro existia desde há muito.

Por causa do dano cortante que pode ser causado pela língua usada de modo enganoso, ela é comparada a uma navalha. — Sal 52:2.

NAVIO. Embarcação relativamente grande de alto-mar. Em geral, a Bíblia faz apenas menção incidental de navios (ou barcos), de navegação e da aparelhagem dos navios, mas fornece alguns indícios sobre os navios nos tempos bíblicos. Outras descrições de antigos navios derivam de anais históricos de diversas nações ou de representações pictóricas de navios mercantes, batalhas navais, e assim por diante.

Egípcios. Canas de papiro, entrelaçadas e amarradas, constituíam o material para uma variedade de barcos egípcios. Em tamanho, eles iam desde pequenos botes de rio, que podiam acomodar um ou apenas poucos caçadores ou pescadores, e ser rapidamente movidos a remo pelo Nilo, até os grandes veleiros com proa voltada para o alto e resistentes o suficiente para singrar o alto-mar. Os etíopes e os babilônios também usavam barcos de cana; Babilônia igualmente possuía uma grande frota de galés.

Um relevo em Medinet Habu retrata embarcações egípcias com um mastro com vela e um cesto de gávea no alto do mastro. Também eram movidos a remo, com um remo grande na popa como leme. A proa tinha a forma de cabeça de leoa, com o corpo de uma pessoa asiática na boca.

Navios grandes com velas retangulares e mais de 20 remos, tendo provavelmente uma quilha no centro, faziam longas viagens através do mar Mediterrâneo. Que navios singravam os mares já no tempo de Moisés é mostrado no aviso de Jeová nas planícies de Moabe, no sentido de que, se os israelitas desobedecessem, seriam 'levados de volta ao Egito em navios', para ali serem oferecidos no mercado de escravos. — De 28:68.

Fenícios. O profeta Ezequiel (27:3-7), ao retratar a cidade de Tiro como lindo navio, fornece pormenores que evidentemente representam a descrição dum navio fenício. Tinha pranchas do durável junípero, um único mastro de cedro-do-líbano, e remos de "árvores maciças" de Basã, provavelmente de carvalho. A proa, provavelmente alta e curva, era de cipreste, incrustada de marfim. A vela era de colorido linho egípcio, e a cobertura do convés (talvez um toldo sobre o convés para dar sombra) era de lã tingida. As junturas do navio eram calafetadas. (Ez 27:27) Os fenícios eram hábeis marinheiros, realizando um extenso comércio na região do Mediterrâneo, indo até Társis (provavelmente a Espanha). Alguns acreditam que, com o tempo, o termo "navios de Társis" passou a significar o tipo de navio usado pelos fenícios no comércio com aquele ponto distante, isto é, uma embarcação em boas condições de navegabilidade, capaz de fazer uma longa viagem. (1Rs 22:48; Sal 48:7; Is 2:16; Ez 27:25) Jonas possivelmente fugiu num navio deste tipo. Este tinha convés, deixando espaço no porão para carga e para passageiros. — Jon 1:3, 5.

Uma das esculturas de Senaqueribe retrata um navio fenício com um convés de superestrutura, duas fileiras de remos, uma vela e um anteparo em torno do convés superior, no qual se penduravam escudos. A proa deste navio de guerra era longa e pontuda.

Navios Hebraicos. Quando Dã se estabeleceu na Terra da Promessa, falava-se dele como morando por um tempo em navios (Jz 5:17), possivelmente referindo-se ao seu território designado na costa filisteia. (Jos 19:40, 41, 46) O território de Aser ficava ao longo do litoral, e incluía as cidades de Tiro e de Sídon (embora não haja evidência de que estas cidades fossem alguma vez tomadas por Aser). As tribos de Manassés, Efraim e Judá tinham território ao longo da costa do Mediterrâneo, de modo que elas também estavam bastante familiarizadas com navios. (Jos 15:1, 4; 16:8; 17:7, 10) Manassés, Issacar e Naftali também tinham terras junto ao mar da Galileia ou perto dele.

Embora Israel, pelo visto, tivesse usado barcos desde tempos primitivos, Salomão foi evidentemente o primeiro governante de Israel a dar ênfase à navegação comercial. Com a ajuda de Hirão, construiu uma frota de navios de carga, que navegavam de Eziom-Géber até Ofir. (1Rs 9:26-28; 10:22; 2Cr 8:17, 18; 9:21) Esses navios eram tripulados em conjunto por israelitas e marinheiros experientes de Tiro. A cada três anos, os navios vinham com cargas de ouro, prata, marfim, macacos e pavões. — 1Rs 9:27; 10:22.

O Rei Jeosafá, de Judá, entrou mais tarde em sociedade com o iníquo Rei Acazias, de Israel, na construção de navios em Eziom-Géber, a fim de enviá-los a Ofir em busca de ouro; mas, Jeová o advertiu da Sua desaprovação desta aliança. Concordemente, os navios naufragaram em Eziom-Géber, e Jeosafá, pelo visto, rejeitou o pedido de Acazias, de uma nova tentativa com este projeto. — 1Rs 22:48, 49; 2Cr 20:36, 37.

Durante o Primeiro Século EC. No primeiro século EC, muitos navios mercantes, de diversos tipos, singravam as águas do Mediterrâneo. Alguns deles eram barcos costeiros como o barco de Adramítio em que Paulo, como prisioneiro, viajou de Cesareia a Mirra. (At 21:1-6; 27:2-5) Todavia, o navio mercante que Paulo tomou em Mirra era um navio grande, levando uma carga de trigo, e tinha uma tripulação e passageiros no total de 276 pessoas. (At 27:37, 38) Josefo relata que velejou certa vez num navio que levava 600 passageiros. — The Life (A Vida), 15 (3).

Paulo viajara muito de navio; já sofrera três naufrágios antes desta viagem. (2Co 11:25) Aquele em que viajava esta vez era um veleiro que tinha uma vela grande e um traquete, e era governado por dois grandes remos situados na popa. Esses navios frequentemente tinham uma figura de proa representando certos deuses ou deusas. (O navio que Paulo tomou depois tinha como figura de proa "Filhos de Zeus".) (At 28:11) Um bote, ou esquife, era puxado pelo navio. Era usado para ir à praia quando o navio ancorava perto duma costa. A fim de impedir que fosse inundado ou destroçado, o esquife era içado a bordo durante tempestades. Nesta viagem de Paulo, a violência da tormenta que se levantou fez com que os marujos cingissem o navio (evidentemente tratava-se de passar cordas ou correntes sob o casco de um lado para outro, a fim de que o navio não se rompesse), arriassem os aparelhos (evidentemente o cordame), lançassem a carga de trigo no mar, lançassem fora a armação e amarrassem os remos do leme (para impedir serem danificados). — At 27:6-19, 40.

O Mar da Galileia. Os Evangelhos mencionam frequentemente a presença de barcos no mar da Galileia. Parece que estes eram principalmente usados para a pesca com redes (Mt 4:18-22; Lu 5:2; Jo 21:2-6), embora se fizesse também a pesca com anzol. (Mt 17:27) Às vezes, Jesus usava um barco como lugar conveniente do qual pregar a multidões na praia próxima (Mt 13:2; Lu 5:3), e ele e seus apóstolos os usavam muitas vezes como transporte. (Mt 9:1; 15:39; Mr 5:21) Um barco assim era movido a remos ou uma pequena vela. (Mr 6:48; Lu 8:22) Embora a Bíblia não descreva esses barcos de pesca, alguns deles eram suficientemente grandes para acomodar 13 ou mais pessoas. — Mr 8:10; Jo 21:2, 3; veja GALERA; MARUJO.

Âncoras. As primeiras âncoras, tanto quanto se saiba, eram de pedra e eram baixadas da proa do navio. Mais tarde, usavam-se no Mediterrâneo âncoras de madeira, em forma de gancho, lastreadas com pedra ou metal. Algumas tinham braços de chumbo. Uma amostra descoberta na vizinhança de Cirene pesa uns 545 kg. Por fim, usavam-se âncoras inteiramente feitas de metal, algumas delas do formato conhecido, e outras de patas duplas. Os marujos do navio em que Paulo navegava lançaram quatro âncoras da popa do navio (a prática às vezes adotada para aguentar um temporal). (At 27:29, 30, 40) Usava-se uma sonda de chumbo para determinar a profundidade da água. — At 27:28.

O apóstolo Paulo usa o termo "âncora" em sentido figurado ao falar a seus irmãos espirituais em Cristo, chamando a esperança que se lhes apresenta de "âncora para a alma". — He 6:19; compare isso com Ef 4:13, 14; Tg 1:6-8.

NAZARÉ [provavelmente: Cidade [do] Rebentão]. Cidade da Baixa Galileia, onde Jesus morou a maior parte da sua vida terrestre junto com seus meios-irmãos e meias-irmãs. (Lu 2:51, 52; Mt 13:54-56) Tanto José como Maria eram habitantes de Nazaré quando Gabriel anunciou o vindouro nascimento de Jesus. (Lu 1:26, 27; 2:4, 39) Mais tarde, depois de voltarem do Egito, passaram a morar novamente em Nazaré. — Mt 2:19-23; Lu 2:39.

Localização. A maioria dos peritos identifica Nazaré com En Nasira (Nazerat) na Galileia. (FOTOS, Vol. 2, p. 539) Se esta opinião for correta, Nazaré ficava nas montanhas baixas logo ao N do vale de Jezreel e aproximadamente a meio caminho entre a ponta S do mar da Galileia e a costa do Mediterrâneo. Encontrava-se numa bacia entre morros que se elevam de 120 a 150 m acima dela. A região era bem povoada, com diversas cidades e aldeias perto de Nazaré. Também, calcula-se que se podia ir a pé, em sete horas, de Nazaré a Ptolemaida, na costa do Mediterrâneo; a Tiberíades, na margem do mar da Galileia, em cinco horas; e a Jerusalém, em três dias.

Em certa ocasião, o povo de Nazaré tentou lançar Jesus da "beirada do monte em que se situava a sua cidade". (Lu 4:29) Isto não quer dizer que Nazaré ficava à própria borda ou beira do monte, mas ficava num que tinha uma borda da qual queriam lançar Jesus. Alguns o identificaram com um penhasco de uns 12 m de altura ao SO da cidade.

O Destaque de Nazaré. É difícil dizer com certeza exatamente quanto destaque Nazaré tinha no primeiro século. A opinião mais comum dos comentadores é que Nazaré era então uma aldeia bastante retirada, insignificante. A principal declaração bíblica usada para apoiar esta opinião é o que Natanael disse quando soube que Jesus era de lá: "Pode sair algo bom de Nazaré?" (Jo 1:46) Alguns tomaram isso como significando que Nazaré era desprezada, mesmo por pessoas da Galileia. (Jo 21:2) Nazaré encontrava-se perto de rotas comerciais da região, mas não diretamente junto a elas. Não foi mencionada por Josefo, embora ele se referisse à vizinha Jafia como a maior aldeia fortificada de toda a Galileia, dando a ideia de que Nazaré era ofuscada por sua vizinha.

Por outro lado, Natanael talvez simplesmente expressasse surpresa de Filipe afirmar que um homem da cidade vizinha de Nazaré, na Galileia, fosse o prometido Messias, pois as Escrituras tinham predito que este procederia de Belém, em Judá. (Miq 5:2) Josefo não mencionou muitas povoações na Galileia, de modo que não mencionar ele Nazaré deixa de ser especialmente significativo. É digno de nota que a Bíblia não chama Nazaré de aldeia, mas sempre de "cidade". (Lu 1:26; 2:4, 39) Além disso, a vizinha Séforis era uma importante cidade fortificada, com uma corte distrital do Sinédrio. Todavia, não importa qual tenha sido o tamanho ou o destaque de Nazaré, ela era conveniente para importantes rotas comerciais e cidades principais, de modo que seus habitantes tinham pronto acesso a informações sobre as atividades sociais, religiosas e políticas daquele tempo. — Veja Lu 4:23.

Atitude do Povo. Ao passo que Jesus crescia, ele progredia "no favor de Deus e dos homens". (Lu 2:52) Ele e seus meios-irmãos, e suas meias-irmãs, eram conhecidos ao povo de Nazaré, e era "costume" dele frequentar toda semana a sinagoga local. (Mt 13:55, 56; Lu 4:16) Quando tinha cerca de 30 anos de idade, Jesus partiu de Nazaré e foi batizado por João. (Mr 1:9; Lu 3:23) Alguns meses mais tarde, perto do início do seu ministério galileu, Jesus retornou a Nazaré e leu na sinagoga, em voz alta, Isaías 61:1, 2, aplicando o texto a si mesmo. O povo mostrou falta de fé e tentou matá-lo, "mas ele passou pelo seu meio e seguiu caminho", indo morar em Cafarnaum. — Lu 4:16-30; Mt 4:13.

Um ano mais tarde, Cristo visitou novamente Nazaré. (Mt 13:54-58; Mr 6:1-6) Embora alguns tenham achado que esta era a mesma ocasião que a mencionada em Lucas 4:16-30, a ordem dos eventos em Mateus, Marcos e Lucas indicam que não, assim como também que as atividades de Jesus e os resultados eram um pouco diferentes. Até então, sua fama talvez já tivesse aumentado, de modo que se lhe deu uma recepção mais hospitaleira. Embora muitos tropeçassem por ele ser homem local, não há menção de o povo tentar matá-lo esta vez. Ele realizou algumas obras poderosas, mas não muitas, por causa da falta de fé do povo. (Mt 13:57, 58) Jesus partiu então e iniciou seu terceiro giro pela Galileia. — Mr 6:6.

NAZARENO [provavelmente do hebr. né·tser, "rebentão"]. Epíteto descritivo aplicado a Jesus e mais tarde aos seus seguidores. Os nomes nazareno e nazireu não devem ser confundidos, porque, embora de grafia parecida em português, derivam de palavras hebraicas totalmente diferentes, com sentidos diferentes. — Veja NAZIREU.

Era natural e não muito incomum chamar Jesus de nazareno, visto que desde a infância (com menos de três anos de idade) fora criado como filho do carpinteiro local na cidade de Nazaré, um lugar a uns 100 km ao N de Jerusalém. O costume de associar pessoas com o lugar de onde vieram era comum naqueles dias. — 2Sa 3:2, 3; 17:27; 23:25-37; Na 1:1; At 13:1; 21:29.

Jesus, em lugares bem espalhados e por todo tipo de pessoas, era frequentemente chamado de nazareno. (Mr 1:23, 24; 10:46, 47; 14:66-69; 16:5, 6; Lu 24:13-19; Jo 18:1-7) O próprio Jesus aceitou e usou este nome. (Jo 18:5-8; At 22:6-8) No letreiro que Pilatos mandou colocar na estaca de tortura, ele escreveu em hebraico, latim e grego: "Jesus, o Nazareno, o Rei dos Judeus." (Jo 19:19, 20) A partir de Pentecostes de 33 EC, os apóstolos, bem como outros, muitas vezes chamavam Jesus Cristo de nazareno, ou como sendo de Nazaré. — At 2:22; 3:6; 4:10; 6:14; 10:38; 26:9.

Profético. Mateus salientou que o nome Nazareno fora profeticamente predito como outro sinal que identificava Jesus Cristo como o prometido Messias. Ele trouxe isso à atenção dos seus leitores, ao contar que José, após a morte de Herodes, trouxe Maria e seu filho de volta do Egito. "Além disso", escreveu Mateus, "recebendo em sonho um aviso divino, [José] retirou-se para o território da Galileia e foi morar numa cidade chamada Nazaré, para que se cumprisse o que fora falado por intermédio dos profetas: 'Ele será chamado Nazareno.'" — Mt 2:19-23.

Nazaré não é mencionada nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Alguns supõem que Mateus se referiu a algum livro profético perdido ou a uma tradição não escrita, mas a sua expressão, "falado por intermédio dos profetas", é usada por escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs apenas com referência à mesma coleção canônica das Escrituras Hebraicas que temos hoje. Pelo que parece, a chave do entendimento está em equacionar Nazareno com né·tser, mencionado acima como significando renovo.

Com isto em mente, é evidente que Mateus se referiu ao que Isaías (11:1) dissera a respeito do Messias: "Do toco de Jessé terá de sair um renovo; e das suas raízes frutificará um rebentão [we·né·tser]." Outra palavra hebraica, tsé·mahh, também significa renovo, ou rebentão, e foi usada por outros profetas ao se referirem ao Messias. Mateus usou o plural, dizendo que "profetas" haviam mencionado este vindouro "Rebentão", ou renovo. Por exemplo, Jeremias escreveu sobre o "renovo justo" como brotando para Davi. (Je 23:5; 33:15) Zacarias descreve um rei-sacerdote "cujo nome é Renovo", profecia que só se podia aplicar a Jesus, o nazareno, o grande construtor do Templo espiritual. — Za 3:8; 6:12, 13.

NAZIREU [Selecionado; Dedicado; Separado]. Havia duas categorias de nazireus: os voluntários e os que os eram por designação divina. Os regulamentos que governavam os nazireus voluntários são encontrados no livro de Números, capítulo 6. Tanto homens como mulheres podiam fazer um voto especial a Jeová, de viver como nazireu por um período de tempo. Todavia, no caso duma moça ou duma mulher, se o pai ou o marido ouvisse o voto e não o aprovasse, ele podia cancelá-lo. — Núm 30:1-8.

Três restrições principais recaíam sobre os que faziam um voto de nazireu: (1) Não deviam tomar nenhuma bebida inebriante; nem deviam comer algum produto da videira, quer verde, quer maduro ou seco, nem beber seu suco, quer no estado fresco, fermentado ou como vinagre. (2) Não deviam cortar o cabelo da cabeça. (3) Não deviam tocar em cadáver, nem mesmo o dum parente chegado: pai, mãe, irmão ou irmã. — Núm 6:1-7.

Votos Especiais. Quem fazia este voto especial devia "viver como nazireu [isto é, dedicado, separado] para Jeová", e não para os aplausos de homens devido à ostentação de ascetismo fanático. Antes, "todos os dias do seu nazireado ele é santo para Jeová". — Núm 6:2, 8; compare isso com Gên 49:26, n.

Portanto, os requisitos impostos aos nazireus tinham significado e sentido especial na adoração de Jeová. Iguais ao sumo sacerdote que, por causa do seu cargo sagrado, não devia tocar em cadáver, nem mesmo de seus parentes mais chegados, tampouco os nazireus o deviam fazer. Proibia-se ao sumo sacerdote e aos subsacerdotes, por causa da séria responsabilidade dos seus cargos, beber vinho ou bebida inebriante ao realizarem seus deveres sagrados perante Jeová. — Le 10:8-11; 21:10, 11.

Além disso, o nazireu (hebr.: na·zír) "deve mostrar-se santo, deixando crescer as madeixas do cabelo de sua cabeça", o que servia de sinal sublime pelo qual todos podiam prontamente reconhecer seu santo nazireado. (Núm 6:5) A mesma palavra hebraica, na·zír, era usada com respeito à videira "não podada" durante os sagrados anos sabáticos e de jubileu. (Le 25:5, 11) É também de interesse que a placa de ouro na frente do turbante do sumo sacerdote, que tinha inscrito nela as palavras: "A santidade pertence a Jeová", era chamada de "sinal sagrado de dedicação [hebr.: né·zer, da mesma raiz que na·zír]". (Êx 39:30, 31) Do mesmo modo, o ornamento oficial da cabeça, ou diadema, usado pelos reis ungidos de Israel, também era chamado de né·zer. (2Sa 1:10; 2Rs 11:12; veja COROA; DEDICAÇÃO.) O apóstolo diz que, na congregação cristã, o cabelo comprido da mulher lhe é dado em lugar de uma mantilha. É para ela um lembrete natural de que ocupa uma posição diferente da do homem; ela deve lembrar-se da sua posição submissa no arranjo de Deus. Tais requisitos — cabelo não cortado (desnatural para o homem), a abstinência total de vinho, bem como a necessidade de ser limpo e imaculado — incutiam no nazireu dedicado a importância da abnegação e da completa submissão à vontade de Jeová. — 1Co 11:2-16; veja CABELO; COBRIR A CABEÇA; NATUREZA.

Requisitos caso o nazireu ficasse aviltado. O nazireu se tornava impuro por sete dias se tocasse num cadáver, mesmo que, por um acidente além do seu controle, ele inadvertidamente tocasse em alguém que tivesse morrido ao seu lado. No sétimo dia, devia rapar a cabeça e purificar-se, e no dia seguinte ele devia levar ao sacerdote duas rolas (ou dois pombos novos), uma como oferta pelo pecado, a outra como sacrifício queimado; também devia apresentar um carneirinho como oferta pela culpa. Além disso, quem tivesse feito o voto de nazireu tinha de começar a contar de novo desde o início os dias do voto estipulados no início. — Núm 6:8-12.

Requisitos no término do voto. Ao terminar a duração especificada do voto, o nazireu apresentava-se aos sacerdotes diante da tenda de reunião, trazendo consigo os sacrifícios prescritos que consistiam num carneirinho para uma oferta queimada, uma cordeira para uma oferta pelo pecado e o carneiro para uma oferta de participação em comum. Devia também trazer um cesto de bolos e obreias não fermentados, bem untados com azeite, junto com as apropriadas ofertas de cereais e de bebida. Além destes sacrifícios necessários, o nazireu trazia ao santuário outras ofertas, segundo os seus recursos. (Núm 6:13-17, 21) A seguir, o cabelo comprido do nazireu era cortado e colocado no fogo sob o sacrifício de participação em comum. Daí, porções das ofertas eram colocadas sobre as suas mãos pelo sacerdote oficiante e movidas pelo sacerdote como oferta movida perante Jeová. — Núm 6:18-20.

Parece que, com o tempo, os judeus tornaram possível que pessoas abastadas provessem os sacrifícios necessários, como ato de caridade, para pessoas de poucos meios, que desejavam fazer o voto de nazireu.

Este parece ter sido o costume reconhecido aproveitado pelo apóstolo Paulo ao chegar a Jerusalém no fim da sua terceira viagem. Para aquietar rumores falsos de que Paulo tinha "ensinado a todos os judeus entre as nações . . . [não andar] nos costumes solenes" da nação judaica, os irmãos cristãos de Paulo recomendaram o seguinte plano. "Há conosco quatro homens que têm um voto sobre si", disseram a Paulo. "Toma contigo estes homens e purifica-te cerimonialmente junto com eles, e toma conta das despesas deles, para que se lhes rape a cabeça." — At 21:20-26.

O período que alguém podia ser nazireu era opcional da parte daquele que fazia o voto. A tradição judaica (não a Bíblia) dizia que não podia ser menos de 30 dias, porque se achava que qualquer período inferior a isso degradava a solenidade do voto, tornando-o corriqueiro.

Nazireus Vitalícios. No caso dos que Jeová designava como nazireus para toda a vida, escolhidos por ele para serviço especial, eles não faziam nenhum voto e não eram restritos por um prazo (cujos dias eram contados de novo desde o começo do voto quando este fosse quebrado antes de ser completado). Por estes motivos, os mandamentos de Jeová para eles diferiam de certo modo dos seus requisitos para os nazireus voluntários. Sansão foi tal nazireu designado por Deus para toda a vida, tendo sido divinamente designado assim antes de ser concebido. Nem mesmo para a sua mãe era isso um assunto opcional. Visto que o filho dela seria nazireu, um anjo ordenou-lhe observar regulamentos especiais — não beber vinho nem bebida inebriante, nem comer algo impuro durante a gravidez. — Jz 13:2-14; 16:17.

Referente a Sansão, o regulamento era que "não deve vir navalha sobre a cabeça dele". (Jz 13:5) Todavia, não se lhe impôs nenhuma proibição quanto a tocar em cadáveres. Por isso, matar Sansão um leão, ou golpear ele 30 filisteus e depois despojar os corpos das suas vestes, não profanou seu nazireado. Em mais outra ocasião, com a aprovação de Deus, ele matou mil inimigos: "Com a queixada dum jumento — um montão, dois montões!" — Jz 14:6, 19; 15:14-16.

No caso de Samuel, foi a sua mãe, Ana, que fez o voto, separando seu filho ainda não concebido para o serviço de Jeová como nazireu. Ela disse em oração a Deus: "Se sem falta . . . deres à tua escrava um descendente masculino, eu o entregarei a Jeová todos os dias da sua vida ["e ele não beberá vinho nem bebida forte", (1Rs 1:11, LXX)] e não passará navalha sobre a sua cabeça." (1Sa 1:9-11, 22, 28) João, o Batizador, não devia "beber nenhum vinho nem bebida forte". Dão-se poucos outros pormenores a respeito do seu nazireado, exceto que também ele, por designação divina, devia ser tal desde o dia em que nascesse. — Lu 1:11-15; compare isso com Mt 3:4; 11:18.

João, o Batizador, estava entre os nazireus que o próprio Jeová suscitou. Como ele disse pela boca do seu profeta Amós: "Continuei a suscitar alguns dos vossos filhos como profetas e alguns dos vossos jovens como nazireus." Todavia, eles nem sempre eram aceitos ou respeitados, e o Israel transviado tentou até mesmo quebrantar a sua integridade para com Jeová. (Am 2:11, 12) Quando a plena medida dos pecados de Israel atingiu seus limites e Jeová removeu o Israel típico em 607 AEC, nem mesmo os nazireus infiéis em Jerusalém escaparam. Jeremias descreve como os anteriormente sadios e fortes nazireus ficaram escuros quando sua pele se enrugou sobre os seus ossos por causa da terrível fome. — La 4:7-9.

NEÁ. Cidade mencionada na descrição dos termos territoriais de Zebulão. (Jos 19:10, 13, 14, 16) Não há certeza da localização de Neá. Alguns a relacionam com Tell el-Wawiyat, apenas a 1,3 km ao NNO de Rummana, cerca de 10 km ao N de Nazaré.

NEÁPOLIS [Cidade Nova]. Cidade da Grécia, na extremidade N do mar Egeu, que servia de porto marítimo para Filipos. Ela é geralmente relacionada com a atual Cavala. Esta cidade ocupa um promontório rochoso à cabeceira do golfo de Cavala. Seu porto fica no lado ocidental, e a própria Cavala fica a uns 15 km ao SE das ruínas de Filipos. Inscrições em latim indicam que a cidade dependia de Filipos, nos tempos romanos, e restos de um aqueduto ali parecem ser de construção romana. A Via Egnácia, construída pelos romanos, ligava Neápolis com Filipos e seguia para o oeste até Durazzo (Durrës), no mar Adriático.

Foi em Neápolis que o apóstolo Paulo primeiro entrou na Europa em resposta à chamada de 'passar à Macedônia'. Dali ele foi a Filipos, levando provavelmente três ou quatro horas para cruzar a serra entre as duas cidades. (At 16:9-11) Uns seis anos mais tarde, Paulo, sem dúvida, passou novamente por Neápolis. — At 20:6.

NEARIAS [Rapaz (Homem Jovem) de Jah].

1. Simeonita, filho de Isi. Nearias e seus três irmãos chefiaram uma força de 500 homens que derrotou os amalequitas no monte Seir e depois passaram a morar ali. — 1Cr 4:42, 43.

2. Filho de Semaías, pai de Elioenai, Hisquias e Azricão, e descendente de Davi. — 1Cr 3:1, 22, 23.

NEBAI [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "vicejar; dar fruto"]. Um dos "cabeças do povo", cujo descendente, se não ele mesmo, atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" dos dias de Neemias. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 19.

NEBAIOTE. Primogênito dos 12 filhos de Ismael e fundador de uma das destacadas tribos árabes. (Gên 25:13-16; 1Cr 1:29-31) A irmã de Nebaiote, Maalate (ou possivelmente Basemate), casou-se com seu primo Esaú. (Gên 28:9; 36:2, 3) Os descendentes de Nebaiote não são identificados como morando em determinada localidade; provavelmente eram nômades, mudando-se como beduínos com seus rebanhos. No tempo de Isaías, "os rebanhos de Quedar" (Quedar era irmão de Nebaiote) e "os carneiros de Nebaiote" foram vinculados numa profecia que predizia que esses animais serviriam para fornecer sacrifícios no altar de Jeová. — Is 60:7.

Alguns peritos tentaram equacionar os descendentes de Nebaiote com os nabateus de tempos posteriores, mas a evidência apresentada em apoio desta sugestão não é conclusiva.

NEBALATE. Lugar povoado por benjamitas após o exílio babilônico. (Ne 11:31, 34) Nebalate é geralmente identificada com Beit Nebala (Horvat Nevallat). Situado numa colina baixa a uns 6 km ao ENE da atual Lida (Lod), Beit Nebala é sobranceira à extremidade SE da planície de Sarom.

NEBATE [Ele Olhou Para]. Efraimita e pai do Rei Jeroboão I, primeiro governante do reino de dez tribos de Israel. — 1Rs 11:26; 2Rs 14:23, 24.

NEBLINA. Veja BRUMA, NEBLINA, NÉVOA.

NEBO.

1. Cidade moabita que passou a ficar sob o controle do rei amorreu Síon, algum tempo antes de os israelitas entrarem na Terra da Promessa. (Veja Núm 21:26; 32:3; Is 15:2.) Depois de Israel ter derrotado Síon, os rubenitas reconstruíram Nebo. (Núm 32:37, 38) No entanto, no começo do nono século AEC, parece que os rubenitas (1Cr 5:1, 8) perderam a cidade, pois, na Pedra Moabita, o Rei Mesa se gaba de tê-la tomado de Israel às ordens do seu deus Quemós. Mais tarde, tanto Isaías

(no oitavo século AEC) como Jeremias (no sétimo século AEC) mencionam Nebo em profecias dirigidas contra Moabe. — Is 15:2; Je 48:1, 22.

Nebo costuma ser identificada com Khirbet Mekhayyet (ou: Qaryat el Mukhaiyat), situada a uns 8 km ao SO de Hésbon. Existem ali ruínas duma antiga fortaleza. Também foram encontradas ali grandes quantidades de fragmentos de cerâmica (que se pensa datarem desde o século 12 até o começo do sexto século AEC).

2. Cidade cujos representantes retornaram do exílio babilônico. (Esd 2:1, 29) Evidentemente para diferenciar esta Nebo da N.º 1, ela é chamada de a 'outra Nebo'. (Ne 7:33) A atual Nuba, situada a uns 11 km ao NO de Hébron, tem sido apresentada como possível identificação. No entanto, em Esdras 10:43, 44 talvez seja o nome de um homem cujos descendentes voltaram do exílio e despediram suas esposas.

3. Evidentemente, um dos montes de Abarim. Foi de cima do monte Nebo ou do cume do Pisga (que talvez fosse parte do monte Nebo ou o Nebo talvez fosse parte do Pisga) que Moisés viu a Terra da Promessa, e então morreu ali. (De 32:48-52; 34:1-4) O monte Nebo geralmente é identificado com Jebel en-Neba (Har Nevo). Este monte tem uma altitude de mais de 800 m acima do nível do mar e fica a uns 17 km ao L do ponto em que o Jordão deságua no Mar Morto. Acredita-se que o Pisga talvez seja o Ras es-Siyaghah, um cume logo ao NO do pico do Jebel en-Neba e um pouco mais baixo que ele. Num dia claro, o cume do Ras es-Siyaghah oferece uma esplêndida vista dos montes Hermom, Tabor, Ebal e Gerizim, a cordilheira central em que se encontram Belém e Hébron, bem como do vale do Jordão e do Mar Morto.

4. Deidade cuja humilhação com a queda de Babilônia foi predita pelo profeta Isaías. (Is 46:1, 2) Nebo era adorado tanto em Babilônia como na Assíria. Era identificado com o planeta Mercúrio, e era considerado filho de Marduque e Sarpanitu, e consorte de Tashmitum. Para os adoradores de Nebo ele era um deus de sabedoria e de erudição, "o deus que possui inteligência", "aquele que ouve de longe", "aquele que ensina" e "senhor do estilo para tabuinhas". — The Seven Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World (As Sete Grandes Monarquias do Antigo Mundo Oriental), de G. Rawlinson, 1885, Vol. I, p. 91; Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 450.

A proeminência desta deidade é ilustrada pela referência do rei babilônio Nabonido a Nebo como "o administrador de todo o mundo superior e inferior, que prolonga a duração da minha vida", e também como aquele "que estende (a duração do) meu domínio". Nabonido atribuiu a Nebo ter-lhe colocado nas mãos "o cetro correto, o bastão legítimo, que (só ele) assegura o engrandecimento do país". (Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 310) Outro indício da importância de Nebo na religião babilônica é que uma forma do nome aparece nos nomes dos reis babilônios *Nabu*codonosor, *Nabo*polassar e *Nabo*nido; também em *Nebu*zaradã (2Rs 25:8) e talvez em Abed*nego*. — Da 1:7.

Nebo é destacadamente associado com a antiga cidade de Borsipa (a atual Birs ou Birs-Nimrud), perto de Babilônia. Todo Dia do Ano-novo, na primavera, a imagem de Nebo era levada em procissão sagrada de Borsipa a Babilônia. Depois, quando a imagem era devolvida ao seu santuário em Borsipa, a imagem de Marduque (também chamado pelo título de Bel [Senhor]) era carregada parte do caminho junto com a de Nebo. Portanto, era bem apropriado que a profecia de Isaías mencionasse especificamente a vindoura desgraça de Bel e de Nebo na queda de Babilônia. — Is 46:1, 2.

NEBUSAZBÃ [do acadiano, significando "Ó Nebo, Livra-me!"]. O Rabe-Saris, principal oficial da corte, nas forças de Nabucodonosor que destruíram Jerusalém em 607 AEC. Nabusazbã foi um dos diversos príncipes que ordenaram a libertação de Jeremias. (Je 39:13, 14) Ou Nebusazbã é chamado pelo seu título, ou então outro homem era também chamado Rabe-Saris, no grupo que se sentou no Portão do Meio depois que os babilônios abriram uma brecha na muralha de Jerusalém. — Je 39:2, 3.

NEBUZARADÃ [do babilônico, significando "Nebo Deu Descendência"]. Chefe da guarda pessoal e figura principal nas forças de Nabucodonosor por ocasião da destruição de Jerusalém propriamente dita, em 607 AEC. Parece que Nebuzaradã não estava presente durante o sítio inicial de Jerusalém e quando sofreu a brecha, porque foi cerca de um mês mais tarde que ele "veio a Jerusalém", depois de o Rei Zedequias ter sido levado a Nabucodonosor e ter sido cegado. — 2Rs 25:2-8; Je 39:2, 3; 52:6-11.

De fora da cidade, Nebuzaradã dirigiu as operações babilônicas de destruição da cidade, que começaram "no dia sétimo do mês" (o quinto mês, abe), e que incluíram o saque dos tesouros do templo, a demolição da muralha, lidar com os cativos e permitir que alguns dos mais humildes permanecessem ali. (2Rs 25:8-20; Je 39:8-10; 43:5, 6; 52:12-26) Três dias mais tarde, no dia dez do mês, parece que Nebuzaradã "entrou em Jerusalém" (NM, CBC, MC, PIB), e, depois duma inspeção, pôs fogo na casa de Jeová e reduziu a cidade a cinzas. (Je 52:12, 13) Josefo observou que foi no mesmíssimo dia, no dia dez do quinto mês, em que o templo de Salomão foi queimado, que também o templo reconstruído de Herodes foi incendiado, em 70 EC. — The Jewish War (A Guerra Judaica), VI, 250 (iv, 5); VI, 268 (iv, 8), veja AB.

Nebuzaradã, às ordens de Nabucodonosor, libertou Jeremias e falou com ele bondosamente, deixando-o escolher o que queria fazer, oferecendo-se a cuidar dele e concedendo-lhe alguns suprimentos. Nebuzaradã foi também porta-voz do rei de Babilônia na designação de Gedalias como governador sobre os remanescentes ali. (2Rs 25:22; Je 39:11-14; 40:1-7; 41:10) Cerca de cinco anos mais tarde, 602 AEC, Nebuzaradã levou outros judeus ao exílio, evidentemente aqueles que tinham fugido para territórios vizinhos. — Je 52:30.

NECO. Faraó do Egito, contemporâneo do Rei Josias, de Judá. Segundo o historiador grego Heródoto (II, 158, 159; IV, 42), Necos (Neco) era filho de Psamético (Psamtik I) e sucedeu ao pai como governante do Egito. Embora iniciasse a construção dum canal para ligar o Nilo com o Mar Vermelho, não completou este projeto. Todavia, enviou uma frota fenícia numa viagem em torno da África. Esta viagem foi completada com êxito em três anos.

Perto do fim do reinado de 31 anos de Josias (659-629 AEC), o Faraó Neco estava em caminho para ajudar os assírios junto ao rio Eufrates. Naquela ocasião, Josias desconsiderou "as palavras de Neco provenientes da boca de Deus" e foi mortalmente ferido ao tentar rechaçar as forças egípcias em Megido. Cerca de três meses depois, o Faraó Neco tomou cativo a Jeoacaz, sucessor de Josias no trono, e tornou Eliaquim, de 25 anos, seu vassalo, mudando o nome do novo governante para Jeoiaquim. Neco impôs também uma pesada multa ao reino de Judá. (2Cr 35:20–36:4; 2Rs 23:29-35) Em Carquemis, entre três e quatro anos mais tarde (625 AEC), as forças de Neco foram derrotadas pelos babilônios sob o comando de Nabucodonosor. — Je 46:2.

NECODA [Salpicado; Sarapintado].

1. O antepassado de um grupo de netineus que retornaram do exílio babilônico em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 43, 48; Ne 7:46, 50.

2. O antepassado de um grupo 'que não era capaz de informar qual a casa de seus pais e sua origem'. (Esd 2:59, 60; Ne 7:61, 62) Visto que os nomes de Delaías e Tobias, associados com Necoda nestes versículos, não ocorrem em outra parte numa lista de exilados que retornaram, presume-se que este Necoda seja uma pessoa diferente do N.° 1.

NEDABIAS [Jah Está Disposto (Nobre; Generoso)]. Último filho mencionado do Rei Jeconias (Joaquim), nascido durante o exílio de Jeconias em Babilônia. (1Cr 3:17, 18; 2Rs 24:15; Je 29:1, 2, 4, 6) Nedabias era descendente de Davi, da tribo de Judá, e tio de Zorobabel, governador pós-exílico. — 1Cr 3:1, 17-19; Ag 1:1.

NEELÃO [De (Pertencente a) Neelão; ou, possivelmente: O Sonhador]. Talvez a cidade do falso profeta Semaías. (Je 29:24, 31, 32) Mas, desconhece-se um lugar com este nome. Portanto, alguns têm sugerido que "de Neelão" talvez seja a designação duma família e assim traduzem a frase por "o neelamita". (Al, ALA, MC, So) Outros acreditam que Jeremias talvez estivesse fazendo um trocadilho com a palavra hebraica hha·lám, que significa "sonho". — Veja Je 23:25.

NEEMIAS [Jah Consola].

1. Possível líder entre os que retornaram do exílio babilônico junto com Zorobabel. — Esd 2:1, 2; Ne 7:7.

2. Filho de Asbuque e príncipe sobre metade do distrito de Bete-Zur. Visto que a cidade de Bete-Zur ficava na região montanhosa de Judá (Jos 15:21, 48, 58), Neemias talvez fosse de Judá. Em 455 AEC, ele participou no conserto da muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:16.

3. Filho de Hacalias e irmão de Hanani; copeiro do rei persa Artaxerxes (Longímano), e, posteriormente, governador dos judeus, reconstrutor da muralha de Jerusalém e escritor do livro bíblico que leva seu nome. — Ne 1:1, 2, 11; 2:1; 5:14, 16.

Durante o 20.° ano do Rei Artaxerxes, no mês de quisleu (novembro-dezembro), Neemias, enquanto estava no castelo de Susã, recebeu visitantes, seu irmão Hanani e outros homens de Judá. Ao lhes perguntar, falaram-lhe sobre os grandes apuros dos judeus, e que a muralha e os portões de Jerusalém ainda estavam em ruínas. Neemias sentiu-se induzido a chorar. Por dias seguidos ele pranteou, continuamente jejuando e orando. Confessou o pecado de Israel, e, à base das palavras de Deus a Moisés (De 30:1-4), suplicou a Jeová 'fazê-lo objeto de misericórdia' diante do Rei Artaxerxes, para que seu plano de reconstruir a muralha de Jerusalém fosse bem-sucedido. — Ne 1.

Mais tarde, no mês de nisã (março-abril), as orações de Neemias foram respondidas. O rei notou a face sombria de Neemias e perguntou sobre o motivo disso. Neemias informou-o então sobre o estado lastimável dos assuntos em Jerusalém. Quando lhe foi perguntado o que procurava obter, Neemias, orando imediatamente a Deus, solicitou permissão do rei para retornar e reconstruir Jerusalém. O pedido lhe foi concedido. Além disso, Neemias recebeu cartas do rei, dando-lhe o direito de livre passagem através das regiões sob a jurisdição de governadores ao O do rio Eufrates e concedendo-lhe também suprimentos de madeira para o projeto. Ele partiu para Jerusalém acompanhado por chefes da força militar e cavaleiros. — Ne 2:1-9.

Reconstruída a Muralha de Jerusalém. Depois de estar em Jerusalém por três dias, Neemias, sem que alguém o soubesse, exceto uns poucos homens com ele, fez uma inspeção noturna da cidade. Ao passo que os demais caminhavam, Neemias andava montado num animal, provavelmente um cavalo ou um jumento. As ruínas encontradas eram tão extensas que bloqueavam a passagem. Apesar disso, Neemias conseguiu terminar a inspeção. — Ne 2:11-16.

Terminada a inspeção, Neemias revelou seu plano aos judeus, trazendo à atenção deles a mão de Jeová no assunto. Incentivados assim, eles responderam: "Levantemo-nos, e temos de construir." Apesar das palavras depreciativas de Sambalá, o horonita, de Tobias, o amonita, e de Gesém, o árabe, os consertos começaram aproximadamente no dia quatro de ab (julho-agosto). — Ne 2:17-20; compare isso com Ne 6:15.

Ao passo que a obra progredia, Sambalá e Tobias continuavam a depreciar e a escarnecer os esforços dos judeus, de consertar a muralha de Jerusalém. Neemias fez disso assunto de oração, "e o povo continuou a ter coração para trabalhar". Quando a muralha atingiu metade da sua altura, Sambalá, Tobias e povos vizinhos intensificaram sua oposição a ponto de conspirarem lutar contra Jerusalém. Neemias repetidas vezes recebeu neste sentido informações dos judeus que moravam perto da cidade. Novamente, Neemias mostrou em oração confiança em Jeová. Para enfrentar a tensa situação, ele armou os trabalhadores, providenciando que outros montassem guarda e esboçando um sistema de alarme. Neemias, à noite, nem mesmo tirava a roupa, evidentemente para estar pronto para lutar caso soasse um sinal de alarme dos vigias. — Ne 4.

Mesmo nesta situação premente, Neemias não estava ocupado demais para dar a devida consideração ao clamor dos judeus. Ouvindo as suas queixas de que estavam sendo oprimidos por terem de pagar juros, ele censurou os nobres e os delegados governantes, providenciando uma grande assembleia, e, depois de expor este mal, mandou que a situação fosse corrigida. — Ne 5:1-13.

Foi depois disso que os inimigos fizeram tentativas de parar a obra de reconstrução. Quatro vezes tentaram desviar Neemias do seu projeto, mas ele os informou que não podia tirar tempo da grande obra que estava fazendo. Depois disso, Sambalá enviou uma carta aberta com falsas acusações e sugeriu que se encontrassem para trocar ideias. Neemias respondeu: "Não vieram acontecer tais coisas como estás dizendo, mas é do teu próprio coração que as inventas." Tentando mais um truque, Tobias e Sambalá contrataram um judeu para amedrontar Neemias, a fim de que cometesse o erro de esconder-se no templo. Todavia, Neemias não se intimidou, e o conserto foi terminado com bom êxito no dia 25 de elul (agosto-setembro), apenas 52 dias depois do início da obra de reconstrução. No entanto, Tobias continuou a enviar cartas intimidadoras a Neemias. — Ne 6.

Terminada a muralha, Neemias dirigiu sua atenção à obra da organização dos servos do templo. A seguir, colocou dois homens no comando da cidade, um deles sendo seu irmão Hanani. Neemias deu também instruções a respeito da abertura e do fechamento dos portões da cidade, e a guarda deles. — Ne 7:1-3.

Registro Genealógico. Naquela época, a população de Jerusalém era bem pequena. Parece que foi por isso que Deus pôs no coração de Neemias reunir os nobres, os delegados governantes e o povo para serem alistados genealogicamente, porque as informações assim obtidas podiam servir de base para se tomarem medidas com o fim de aumentar a população de Jerusalém. Enquanto Neemias dava atenção a este registro genealógico, parece que ele encontrou o registro daqueles que tinham retornado com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico. — Ne 7:4-7.

Restaurada a Observância da Lei. Foi provavelmente sob a orientação de Neemias que se realizou uma assembleia na praça pública perto do Portão das Águas. Embora evidentemente o sacerdote Esdras tomasse a dianteira em dar instruções na Lei, Neemias também participou nisso. (Ne 8:1-12) A seguir, realizou-se a Festividade das Barracas, de oito dias de duração. Dois dias mais tarde, os israelitas se reuniram novamente. Durante esta reunião, fez-se uma confissão geral do pecado de Israel. Depois se redigiu um contrato de confissão. Este contrato de confissão, ou "arranjo fidedigno", foi atestado pelos príncipes, pelos levitas e pelos sacerdotes. Neemias, "o Tirsata [governador]", foi o primeiro a atestá-lo com selo. (Ne 8:13–10:1) Todo o povo concordou em se refrear de casamentos com estrangeiros, em observar os sábados e em apoiar o serviço do templo. A seguir, escolheu-se por sortes uma pessoa em dez para morar permanentemente em Jerusalém. — Ne 10:28–11:1.

Foi depois disso que se inaugurou a muralha de Jerusalém. Para esta ocasião, Neemias designou dois grandes coros de agradecimento bem como cortejos para percorrer a muralha em direções opostas. Isto foi feito, e todos se encontraram no templo para oferecer sacrifícios. Além disso, designaram-se homens como encarregados das contribuições para os sacerdotes e os levitas. — Ne 12:27-47.

Cerca de 12 anos depois, no 32.º ano de Artaxerxes, Neemias partiu de Jerusalém. Quando retornou, encontrou condições deploráveis entre os judeus. Eliasibe, o sumo sacerdote, fizera no pátio do templo um refeitório para ser usado por Tobias, o mesmo homem que antes se opusera ferrenhamente à obra de Neemias. Neemias agiu imediatamente. Lançou fora do refeitório toda a mobília de Tobias e mandou que o refeitório fosse purificado.

Além disso, Neemias tomou medidas para assegurar as contribuições para os levitas e pôs em vigor a estrita observância do sábado. Disciplinou também aqueles que tinham tomado esposas estrangeiras, sendo que os filhos que tiveram com estas mulheres nem mesmo sabiam falar a língua judaica: "E comecei a ralhar com eles, e a invocar o mal sobre eles, e a golpear alguns homens deles, e a arrancar seu cabelo, e a fazê-los jurar por Deus: 'Não deveis dar vossas filhas a seus filhos, e não deveis aceitar nenhumas das suas filhas para os vossos filhos ou para vós mesmos.' "

"Ralhar" Neemias com esses homens, sem dúvida, foi por ele repreendê-los e censurá-los por meio da lei de Deus, expondo a sua atuação errada. Estes homens colocavam a nação restaurada no desfavor de Deus, depois de Deus a ter bondosamente repatriado de Babilônia para restaurar a adoração verdadeira em Jerusalém. Neemias 'invocou o mal sobre eles', o que significa que recitou os julgamentos da lei de Deus contra tais violadores. Ele os 'golpeou', provavelmente não em pessoa, mas ordenou que fossem açoitados como ação judicial, oficial. 'Arrancou-lhes (parte do) cabelo.' Isto era símbolo de indignação moral e de ignomínia perante o povo. (Veja Esd 9:3.) Neemias enxotou então o neto do sumo sacerdote Eliasibe, que se havia tornado genro de Sambalá, o horonita. — Ne 13:1-28.

Neemias, Exemplo Notável. Neemias se destaca como primoroso exemplo de fidelidade e devoção. Era altruísta, abandonando uma posição de destaque como copeiro na corte de Artaxerxes para empreender a reconstrução das muralhas de Jerusalém. Visto haver muitos inimigos, Neemias se expôs de bom grado ao perigo a favor do seu povo e da adoração verdadeira. Ele não só dirigiu o conserto da muralha de Jerusalém, mas também teve parte ativa e pessoal nesta tarefa. Não desperdiçou tempo, era corajoso e destemido, confiava plenamente em Jeová, e era discreto no que fazia. Sendo zeloso pela adoração verdadeira, Neemias conhecia a lei de Deus e a aplicava. Preocupava-se com edificar a fé dos seus coisraelitas. Mostrava ser homem que manifestava o devido temor a Jeová Deus. Embora impusesse vigorosamente a lei de Deus, não era prepotente sobre os outros para fins egoístas, mas mostrava preocupação com os oprimidos. Nunca exigiu o pão devido ao governador. Antes, fornecia alimentos para um considerável número de pessoas às suas próprias custas. (Ne 5:14-19) Apropriadamente, Neemias podia orar: "Lembra-te deveras de mim, ó meu Deus, para o bem." — Ne 13:31.

NEEMIAS, LIVRO DE. Livro das Escrituras Hebraicas que relata primariamente eventos ocorridos pouco antes da governadoria de Neemias em Judá e durante ela. (Ne 5:14; 13:6, 7) As palavras iniciais deste relato inspirado identificam o escritor como "Neemias, filho de Hacalias" (1:1), e grande parte acha-se escrito na primeira pessoa.

Tempo Abrangido e Época da Escrita. O mês de quisleu (novembro-dezembro) de certo 20.º ano é o ponto de referência com que começa a narrativa histórica. (Ne 1:1) Como é evidente de Neemias 2:1, este 20.º ano tem de ser o do reinado de Artaxerxes. Obviamente, o 20.º ano, neste caso, não é contado como começando em nisã (março-abril), porque o quisleu do 20.º ano não podia preceder ao nisã (mencionado em Ne 2:1) do mesmo 20.º ano. De maneira que pode ser que Neemias tenha usado seu próprio modo de contar o tempo, calculando o começo do ano lunar em tisri (setembro-outubro), mês que os judeus hoje reconhecem como início do seu ano civil. Outra possibilidade é que o reinado do rei tenha sido contado a partir da data real em que o monarca ascendeu ao trono. Pode ter sido assim, embora os escribas babilônicos continuassem a contar os anos de reinado do rei persa na sua base costumeira do cálculo de nisã a nisã, conforme mostram suas tabuinhas cuneiformes.

A evidência histórica fidedigna e o cumprimento de profecia bíblica apontam para 455 AEC como o ano em que caiu o nisã do 20.º ano do reinado de Artaxerxes. (Veja PÉRSIA, PERSAS [Os Reinados de Xerxes e de Artaxerxes].) Portanto, o quisleu que precedeu ao nisã daquele 20.º ano caiu em 456 AEC, e o 32.º ano do reinado de Artaxerxes (a última data mencionada em Neemias [13:6]) incluiu parte de 443 AEC. Portanto, o livro de Neemias abrange um período de quisleu de 456 AEC até algum tempo depois de 443 AEC.

Foi no 32.º ano do reinado de Artaxerxes que Neemias partiu de Jerusalém. Ao voltar, verificou que os judeus não sustentavam os sacerdotes e os levitas, que a lei do sábado estava sendo violada, que muitos se haviam casado com mulheres estrangeiras e que os descendentes dos casamentos mistos nem sabiam falar a língua dos judeus. (Ne 13:10-27) Terem as condições deteriorado a tal ponto indica que a ausência de Neemias foi por um período considerável. Mas não há maneira de se determinar exatamente quanto tempo depois de 443 AEC Neemias terminou o livro que leva o seu nome.

Concordância com Outros Livros Bíblicos. O livro de Neemias exalta a Jeová Deus. Revela-o como o Criador (Ne 9:6; compare isso com Gên 1:1; Sal 146:6; Re 4:11), como Deus que responde às orações sinceras dos seus servos (Ne 1:11–2:8; 4:4, 5, 15, 16; 6:16; compare isso com Sal 86:6, 7) e como Defensor do seu povo (Ne 4:14, 20; compare isso com Êx 14:14, 25). Ele é "um Deus de atos de perdão, clemente e misericordioso, vagaroso em irar-se e abundante em benevolência" (Ne 9:17; compare isso com Núm 14:18), o "Deus dos céus, o Deus grande e atemorizante, guardando o pacto e a benevolência para com os que o amam e que guardam os seus mandamentos". — Ne 1:5; compare isso com De 7:9, 10, 21.

No livro de Neemias encontram-se numerosas alusões à Lei. Estas envolvem as calamidades resultantes da desobediência e as bênçãos advindas do arrependimento (Le 26:33; De 30:4; Ne 1:7-9), empréstimos (Le 25:35-38; De 15:7-11; Ne 5:2-11), alianças matrimoniais com estrangeiros (De 7:3; Ne 10:30), sábados, o livramento de dívidas (Êx 20:8; Le 25:4; De 15:1, 2; Ne 10:31), o fogo do altar (Le 6:13; Ne 10:34), a Festividade das Barracas (De 31:10-13; Ne 8:14-18), e a entrada de moabitas e amonitas na congregação de Israel (De 23:3-6; Ne 13:1-3), bem como os dízimos, as primícias e as contribuições. — Êx 30:16; Núm 18:12-30; Ne 10:32-39.

Neste livro há também informações históricas que são encontradas em outras partes das Escrituras Hebraicas. (Ne 9:7-35; 13:26; compare Ne 13:17, 18, com Je 17:21-27.) E a história contemporânea

DESTAQUES DE NEEMIAS

Eventos relacionados com a reconstrução das muralhas de Jerusalém e a subsequente eliminação das práticas erradas entre os judeus.

Abrange um período que começa mais de 80 anos depois do retorno dos judeus do exílio em Babilônia.

As muralhas de Jerusalém são reconstruídas em face de oposição.

- Em Susã, Neemias fica sabendo da condição arruinada da muralha de Jerusalém; ele ora a Jeová em busca de apoio, depois pede ao monarca persa, Artaxerxes, permissão para ir e reconstruir a cidade e sua muralha; Artaxerxes consente. (1:1–2:9)
- Chegando a Jerusalém, Neemias inspeciona à noite as muralhas arruinadas; depois, revela aos judeus seu propósito de reconstruí-las. (2:11-18).
- Sambalá, Tobias e Gesém — todos estrangeiros — opõem-se à reconstrução; primeiro tentam escárnio, depois conspiram para lutar contra Jerusalém; Neemias arma os trabalhadores, e estes continuam com a construção. (2:19–4:23)
- Tramas contra o próprio Neemias fracassam, e a muralha é completada em 52 dias. (6:1-19)
- A muralha é inaugurada; na cerimônia, dois coros de agradecimento e cortejos marcham em direções opostas no alto da muralha e se encontram no templo; há muita alegria. (12:27-43)

Os assuntos de Jerusalém são postos em ordem.

- Depois de completada a muralha, Neemias torna Jerusalém segura com portões e designa deveres a porteiros, cantores e levitas; encarrega da cidade Hanani e Hananias. (7:1-3)
- Neemias empreende fazer um registro genealógico do povo; ele encontra o livro do registro genealógico dos que retornaram de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel; os sacerdotes que não conseguem comprovar sua genealogia são impedidos de atuar 'até que o sacerdote se ponha de pé com Urim e Tumim'. (7:5-73)
- Jerusalém tem pouca população, de modo que se designa por sortes um em cada dez do povo para morar na cidade. (7:4; 11:1, 2)

Fazem-se esforços para melhorar a condição espiritual dos judeus.

- Judeus abastados concordam em fazer devoluções aos seus irmãos pobres, aos quais cobraram erroneamente juros sobre empréstimos. (5:1-13)
- Numa assembleia pública, Esdras lê a Lei, e certos levitas participam na explicação dela; o povo chora, mas é incentivado a regozijar-se, porque o dia é santo; alegram-se também por compreender o que se leu para eles. (8:1-12)
- No dia seguinte, à base da leitura da Lei, o povo fica sabendo da celebração da Festividade das Barracas; acata isso por celebrar a festividade com grande alegria. (8:13-18)
- A seguir, realiza-se um ajuntamento durante o qual o povo confessa seus pecados nacionais e reexamina os tratos de Jeová com Israel; jura também guardar a Lei, refrear-se de casamentos com estrangeiros, e aceitar as obrigações para a manutenção do templo e seus serviços. (9:1–10:39)
- Depois da inauguração da muralha, há outra leitura pública da Lei; quando discernem que os amonitas e os moabitas não deviam ser permitidos na congregação, eles separam de Israel "toda a mistura de gente". (13:1-3)
- Após uma prolongada ausência, Neemias retorna a Jerusalém e verifica que as coisas haviam deteriorado; ele purifica os refeitórios, ordena a contribuição de dízimos para o sustento dos levitas e dos cantores, impõe a guarda do sábado e repreende os que se casaram com mulheres estrangeiras. (13:4-30)

no relato ilustra outras passagens bíblicas. Os Salmos 123 e 129 têm paralelo histórico no que se passou com Neemias e outros judeus quando reconstruíram a muralha de Jerusalém. (Ne 4:1-5, 9; 6:1-14) Induzir Jeová a Artaxerxes a fazer a Sua vontade por atender a solicitação de Neemias, de reconstruir a muralha de Jerusalém, ilustra historicamente Provérbios 21:1: "O coração do rei é como correntes de água na mão de Jeová. Vira-o para onde quer que se agrade." — Ne 2:4-8.

Tanto o livro de Esdras (2:1-67) como o livro de Neemias (7:6-69) alistam o número de exilados de diversas famílias ou casas que retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico. Os relatos se harmonizam em dar o total de 42.360 israelitas que retornaram, além de escravos e cantores. (Esd 2:64; Ne 7:66) Todavia, há diferenças nos dados fornecidos referentes a cada família ou casa, e as cifras individuais em ambas as listagens apresentam um total muito inferior a 42.360. Muitos peritos atribuem estas variações a erros de escriba. Embora não se possa desconsiderar por completo este aspecto, há outras possíveis explicações para as diferenças.

Pode ser que Esdras e Neemias basearam suas listagens em fontes diferentes. Por exemplo, Esdras pode ter usado um documento que alistava os candidatos ao retorno à sua pátria, ao passo que Neemias talvez copiasse um registro que alistava os que realmente retornaram. Visto que havia sacerdotes que não podiam comprovar sua genealogia (Esd 2:61-63; Ne 7:63-65), não é desarrazoado concluir que muitos outros israelitas se viram confrontados com o mesmo problema. Portanto, os 42.360 podem ser a soma total do número de cada família, além de muitos outros que não puderam comprovar sua linhagem. Mais tarde, porém, alguns talvez conseguissem comprovar sua genealogia correta. Isto talvez explique como a flutuação nos números ainda podia fornecer o mesmo total.

NEFEGUE.

1. Filho de Izar, e irmão de Corá e de Zicri. Era da tribo de Levi, e primo de Moisés e de Arão. — Êx 6:16, 18, 20, 21.

2. Um dos filhos do Rei Davi nascidos em Jerusalém. — 2Sa 5:13-15; 1Cr 3:5, 7; 14:3-6.

NEFILINS [Derrubadores; Os Que Fazem [Outros] Cair]. Esta é uma transliteração da palavra hebraica nefi·lím, no plural nas suas três ocorrências na Bíblia. (Gên 6:4; Núm 13:33 [duas vezes]) Evidentemente, deriva da forma causativa do verbo na·fál (fazer cair; cortar), conforme encontrado, por exemplo, em 2 Reis 3:19; 19:7.

O relato da Bíblia que descreve o desagrado de Jeová com os homens nos dias de Noé, antes do Dilúvio, conta que "os filhos do verdadeiro Deus" tomaram para si esposas dentre as atraentes filhas dos homens. Daí menciona a presença de "nefilins", dizendo: "Naqueles dias veio a haver os nefilins na terra, e também depois, quando os filhos do verdadeiro Deus continuaram a ter relações com as filhas dos homens e elas lhes deram filhos; eles eram os poderosos [hebr.: hag·gib·bo·rím] da antiguidade, os homens de fama." — Gên 6:1-4.

Identidade. Comentadores bíblicos, tomando em conta o versículo 4, fizeram diversas sugestões sobre a identidade desses nefilins. Alguns acham que a derivação do nome indica que os nefilins haviam caído do céu, isto é, que eram 'anjos caídos', anjos que pecaram. Outros, usando uma linha de raciocínio um tanto curiosa, dizem que o nome nefilins indica que eles 'caíram do céu' no sentido de que foram 'gerados por seres celestiais'. Outros peritos, fixando a atenção principalmente na declaração "e também depois" (v 4), disseram que os nefilins não eram 'anjos caídos', nem os "poderosos", uma vez que "naqueles dias veio a haver nefilins na terra", antes de os filhos de Deus terem relações sexuais com mulheres. Estes últimos peritos são da opinião de que os nefilins simplesmente eram homens iníquos assim como Caim — assaltantes, rufiões e tiranos, que percorriam a terra até serem destruídos pelo Dilúvio. Mais outro grupo, tomando em consideração não apenas o significado do nome nefilins, mas também o contexto do versículo 4, conclui que os próprios nefilins não eram anjos, mas eram os descendentes híbridos resultantes de anjos materializados terem relações sexuais com as filhas dos homens.

Os mesmos que os "gib·bo·rím". Certas traduções da Bíblia ajustam a posição da frase "e também depois", colocando-a perto do início do versículo 4, identificando assim os nefilins com os "poderosos", os gib·bo·rím, mencionados na última parte do versículo. Por exemplo: "Naquele tempo, como também mais tarde, quando os filhos de Deus se uniram às filhas dos homens e estas deram à luz, havia gigantes [hebr.: han·nefi·lím] sobre a terra. São estes os heróis [hebr.: hag·gib·bo·rím] dos tempos de antanho, aqueles homens famosos." — Gên 6:4, LEB; veja também AT, BLH, Mo e NIV.

A Septuaginta grega também sugere que os "nefilins" e os "poderosos" eram idênticos, por usar a mesma palavra gí·gan·tes (gigantes) para traduzir ambos os termos.

Reexaminando o relato, vemos que os versículos 1 a 3 falam de "os filhos do verdadeiro Deus" tomarem esposas, e da declaração de Jeová, de que sua paciência com os homens acabaria depois de 120 anos. O versículo 4 diz então que "naqueles dias" veio a haver nefilins na terra, evidentemente nos dias em que Jeová fez a declaração. Daí, mostra que esta situação continuou "depois, quando os filhos do verdadeiro Deus continuaram a ter relações com as filhas dos homens", e descreve em mais pormenores o resultado da união dos "filhos do verdadeiro Deus" com mulheres.

Quem eram os 'filhos de Deus' que geraram os nefilins?

Quem eram "os filhos do verdadeiro Deus" envolvidos nisso? Eram homens que adoravam a Jeová (diferentes da humanidade iníqua em geral), conforme alguns afirmam? Evidentemente que não. A Bíblia dá a entender que o casamento deles com as filhas dos homens resultou em atiçar a maldade na terra. Noé e seus três filhos, junto com as respectivas esposas, eram os únicos no favor de Deus e foram os únicos preservados através do Dilúvio. — Gên 6:9; 8:15, 16; 1Pe 3:20.

Portanto, se estes "filhos do verdadeiro Deus" eram apenas homens, surge a pergunta: Por que eram seus descendentes "homens de fama" mais do que aqueles dos iníquos, ou do fiel Noé? Também se poderia fazer a pergunta: Por que mencionar seu casamento com as filhas dos homens como algo especial? Casamentos e ter filhos já ocorriam por mais de 1.500 anos.

Portanto, os filhos de Deus, mencionados em Gênesis 6:2, devem ter sido anjos, espirituais "filhos de Deus". Esta expressão é aplicada aos anjos em Jó 1:6; 38:7. Este conceito é apoiado por Pedro, que fala dos "espíritos em prisão, os quais outrora tinham sido desobedientes, quando a paciência de Deus esperava nos dias de Noé". (1Pe 3:19, 20) Judas também escreve sobre "os anjos que não conservaram a sua posição original, mas abandonaram a sua própria moradia correta". (Ju 6) Os anjos tinham o poder de se materializar em forma humana, e alguns anjos fizeram isso para trazer mensagens de Deus. (Gên 18:1, 2, 8, 20-22; 19:1-11; Jos 5:13-15) Mas o céu é a moradia correta das pessoas espirituais, e os anjos ali têm posições de serviço sob Jeová. (Da 7:9, 10) Abandonarem esta moradia para morar na terra e deixarem seu serviço designado para ter relações carnais equivalia a uma rebelião contra as leis de Deus, e era perversão.

A Bíblia declara que os anjos desobedientes são agora "espíritos em prisão", tendo sido 'lançados no Tártaro' e 'reservados com laços sempiternos, em profunda escuridão, para o julgamento do grande dia'. Isto parece indicar que se encontram grandemente restritos, incapazes de novamente se materializar assim como fizeram antes do Dilúvio. — 1Pe 3:19; 2Pe 2:4; Ju 6.

Crescente Iniquidade. "Os poderosos da antiguidade, os homens de fama", produzidos por estes casamentos, não eram homens de fama para Deus, pois não sobreviveram ao Dilúvio assim como Noé e sua família. Eram "nefilins", rufiões, tiranos, os quais, sem dúvida, contribuíram para piorar as condições. Seus pais angélicos, conhecendo a constituição do corpo humano e podendo materializar-se, não estavam criando vida, mas viviam nestes corpos humanos, e, por coabitarem com mulheres, geraram filhos. Seus filhos, os "poderosos", portanto, eram híbridos não autorizados. Pelo visto, os nefilins, por sua vez, não tiveram filhos.

Na Mitologia. A fama e o pavor gerado pelos nefilins, ao que parece, deu margem a muitas mitologias de povos pagãos que, após a confusão de línguas em Babel, foram espalhados por toda a terra. Embora as formas históricas do relato de Gênesis fossem muito distorcidas e floreadas, havia uma notável semelhança nestas antigas mitologias (as dos gregos sendo apenas um exemplo), em que deuses e deusas coabitaram com humanos para produzir heróis sobre-humanos e temíveis semideuses com características de deus-homem. — Veja GRÉCIA, GREGOS (Religião Grega).

Relatório Que Visava Aterrorizar. Os dez espias que trouxeram aos israelitas no ermo um relatório falso sobre a terra de Canaã declararam: "Todo o povo que vimos no meio dela são homens de tamanho extraordinário. E vimos ali os nefilins, os filhos de Anaque, que são dos nefilins; de modo que ficamos aos nossos próprios olhos como gafanhotos, e assim também éramos aos olhos deles." Sem dúvida, havia alguns homens grandes em Canaã, conforme mostram outros textos bíblicos, mas nunca, exceto neste "relato mau", cuidadosamente fraseado em linguagem destinada a aterrorizar e causar pânico entre os israelitas, são chamados de nefilins. — Núm 13:31-33; 14:36, 37.

NEFTOA. Nome associado com um manancial no termo entre Judá e Benjamim. (Jos 15:1, 9; 18:11, 15) Este manancial costuma ser identificado com o em Lifta ('En Neftoah), ao L de Quiriate-Jearim e a uns 4 km ao ONO do monte do Templo em Jerusalém. Embora esta identificação concorde com Josué 15:9, Josué 18:15, 16, parece situar "o manancial das águas de Neftoa" ao O de Quiriate-Jearim. Tradutores da Bíblia têm lidado de várias maneiras com esta aparente discrepância. Seguindo a leitura da Septuaginta grega, A Bíblia de Jerusalém substitui "para o oeste" por "em direção de Gasim". Na versão Almeida da Imprensa Bíblica Brasileira, o texto foi mudado em harmonia com Josué 15:9 e reza "até Efrom", em vez de "para o oeste" ("ao ocidente", Al). Ronald A. Knox traduz a palavra hebraica yám·mah (para o oeste) segundo seu significado literal como "para o mar" (veja So), e explica numa nota de rodapé: "Isto devia significar para o oeste, para o Mediterrâneo, mas parece bastante claro que, neste ponto, a fronteira de Benjamim virava para o leste; e o mar é presumivelmente o Mar Morto, seu limite leste."

O Negebe* (o sul de Judá), *embora em geral um terreno agreste, outrora sustentava uma substancial população.

NEFUSESIM, NEFUSIM. Cabeça de família de netineus, de quem alguns descendentes retornaram do exílio babilônico junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. (Ne 7:6, 7, 46, 52; Esd 2:43, 50) Ele era possivelmente de linhagem ismaelita através da tribo de Nafis. — Gên 25:13-15; 1Cr 1:29-31; 5:19.

NEGEBE [Sul]. Acha-se que a palavra hebraica né·ghev deriva duma raiz que significa "ser ressequido", e frequentemente denota a região semi-árida ao S dos montes de Judá. O termo né·ghev passou a significar também "sul" e é usado com referência a um lado sulino (Núm 35:5), a um termo meridional (Jos 15:4) e a um portão meridional (Ez 46:9). Em algumas traduções não se mantém a diferença entre a designação geográfica e o ponto cardeal, resultando em traduções confusas. Um exemplo disso é Gênesis 13:1, onde a tradução de né·ghev como "sul" (Al, AS, KJ, Le) faz parecer que Abraão saiu do Egito em direção sul, quando na realidade se dirigiu para o norte, através do Negebe, a Betel. Mas esta dificuldade tem sido eliminada em muitas traduções modernas. — ALA, BJ, CBC, NM.

Topografia. O Negebe dos tempos antigos parece ter abrangido uma região desde o distrito de Berseba, no N, até Cades-Barneia, no S. (Gên 21:14; Núm 13:17, 22; 32:8) O profeta Isaías descreveu esta região como uma terra de condições difíceis, guarida de leões, leopardos e cobras. (Is 30:6) Na parte setentrional, há ocasionais fontes, poços e lagoas, e a tamargueira é uma das poucas árvores que vicejam ali. (Gên 21:33) Ao SO de Berseba ficam duas pequenas áreas e uma relativamente grande de dunas de areia. Grande parte do Negebe é um planalto de 450 a 600 m acima do nível do mar, com cumes de até 1.050 m de altitude. Ao S e ao L de Berseba há serras agrestes, em geral na direção L-O.

História. As cisternas, os socalcos murados e as ruínas de muitas cidades encontrados no Negebe indicam que aquela região antigamente sustentava uma considerável população. Foi ali que os patriarcas Abraão e Isaque encontraram pastagens para os seus grandes rebanhos. (Gên 13:1, 2; 20:1; 24:62) E no tempo de Abraão, o rei elamita Quedorlaomer, com seus três aliados, derrotou os habitantes do Negebe. — Gên 14:1-7.

Séculos mais tarde, os espias israelitas, enviados por Moisés, entraram na Terra da Promessa através do Negebe, que naquele tempo era habitado pelos amalequitas. (Núm 13:17, 22, 29) Sob a liderança de Josué, todos os habitantes do Negebe foram derrotados (Jos 10:40; 11:16) e as cidades nesta região tornaram-se parte do território da tribo de Simeão. (Jos 19:1-6) Também os queneus nômades, aparentados com Moisés por afinidade, passaram a morar no Negebe. (Jz 1:16; compare isso com 1Sa 15:6, 7.) Pelo visto, os israelitas não mantiveram o controle sobre esta região. No decorrer dos anos, houve repetidos choques com os cananeus do Negebe e especialmente com os amalequitas. (Jz 1:9; 6:3; 1Sa 15:1-9; 30:1-20) Davi, partindo da cidade de Ziclague, que lhe fora dada pelo rei filisteu Aquis, fez incursões contra os gesuritas, os girzitas e os amalequitas do Negebe. (1Sa 27:5-8) Parece que foi só quando Davi reinou, depois de derrotar os edomitas, que Israel obteve controle completo sobre o Negebe. (2Sa 8:13, 14) O posterior Rei Uzias, de Judá, evidentemente construiu torres e escavou cisternas nesta região. — 2Cr 26:10.

Depois da destruição de Jerusalém pelos babilônios, Obadias predisse que os israelitas seriam restabelecidos na sua terra, inclusive no Negebe. — Ob 19, 20.

NEGLIGENCIAR. Esta palavra tem o sentido de não prestar atenção a; desconsiderar; ser remisso nos cuidados ou no tratamento de (alguém ou alguma coisa); deixar de realizar ou executar (ordens, deveres, e assim por diante). A palavra pode ter a conotação de deliberação ou intenção nesta falha, ou apenas de omissão por indiferença ou descuido.

Um dos diversos termos hebraicos que têm o sentido de "negligenciar" é o verbo pa·rá', que literalmente significa "soltar". (Núm 5:18) Tem o sentido de "ficar desgrenhado" na aparência física (Le 10:6), "ficar desenfreado" na conduta (Êx 32:25) e de "negligenciar" a disciplina ou de "esquivar-se" dela. (Pr 13:18; 15:32; veja Êx 5:4, onde é vertido por "largar".) Outra palavra é 'a·záv, que literalmente significa "abandonar". (De 29:25; 1Rs 12:8) Assim, Neemias incentivou os verdadeiros adoradores a não "negligenciar" a casa do verdadeiro Deus. (Ne 10:39; veja 13:11.) Outro termo hebraico que designa negligência literalmente significa "frouxidão", como a de um arco frouxo. — Je 48:10; compare isso com Sal 78:57.

A palavra grega a·me·lé·o (de a, "não", e mé·lo, "cuidar de") contém mais especificamente a ideia de estar desinteressado, de não se importar, e não tanto o sentido de desintencional omissão ou descaso. Depois de descrever a severa punição pela desobediência à Lei mosaica, o apóstolo Paulo diz: "Como escaparemos nós, se tivermos negligenciado [gr.: a·me·lé·san·tes, "estado desinteressados (em)"] uma salvação de tal magnitude, sendo que começou a ser anunciada por intermédio do nosso Senhor . . . ao passo que Deus se juntou em dar testemunho?" Aqui ele indica que não se trata dum caso de omissão, mas sim de desinteresse, de 'desvio' (v 1), de desobediência à palavra de Deus falada por meio de seu Filho unigênito. — He 2:1-4, Int.

Mateus usou uma forma desta palavra grega ao contar a ilustração de Jesus, de uma festa de casamento. Os convidados pelo rei para a festa de casamento de seu filho não compareceram. Por que não? Não por um lapso, mas, "indiferentes, foram embora, um para o seu próprio campo, outro para o seu negócio comercial". Por causa desta indiferença, foram considerados indignos. — Mt 22:5, 8.

O jovem Timóteo recebeu a pesada responsabilidade de superintendente em Éfeso. Paulo admoestou-o: "Não negligencies [ou: não descuides de] o dom em ti, que te foi dado por intermédio duma predição e quando o corpo de anciãos pôs as suas mãos sobre ti." Requereu muita ação enérgica da parte de Timóteo evitar ser negligente. Ele tinha de se empenhar na leitura, em ensino, conduta, exortação e exemplo corretos, mostrando interesse por dar constante e indivisa atenção. Do contrário, ele poderia sair perdendo por negligência, por falta de real interesse no favor de Deus que recebera. — 1Ti 4:11-16, Int.

Paulo cita as palavras de Jeová a respeito de Israel, quando Ele falou do pacto da Lei, dizendo: "Pacto meu que eles próprios violaram, embora eu mesmo tivesse a posse marital deles." (Je 31:32) Em vez de "embora eu mesmo tivesse a posse marital deles", a Septuaginta reza: "e eu deixei de me importar com eles". Sem dúvida, isto explica por que esta citação, em Hebreus 8:9, reza: "Porque não continuaram no meu pacto, de modo que parei de me importar com eles [não mostrei interesse neles]." Jeová certamente não foi negligente no sentido de descuido ou lapso; antes, ele mostrou grande interesse no seu povo pactuado, até que este desconsiderou a Sua palavra e se rebelou contra ele. Só então, e nesta base, foi que ele 'deixou de se importar [gr.: e·mé·le·sa] com eles'.

NEGUEBE. Veja NEGEBE.

NEIEL. Cidade de Aser (Jos 19:24, 27), identificada com Khirbet Ya'nin (Horvat Ya'anin), a uns 15 km ao ESE de Aco.

NEILOTE. Transliteração de nehhi·lóhth, termo hebraico de derivação e sentido incertos, que ocorre apenas no cabeçalho do Salmo 5. Neilote parece ser um termo musical, e muitos acreditam que se refira a um instrumento de sopro, relacionando-o com uma raiz hebraica aparentada com hha·lìl (flauta). Todavia, a frase "para Neilote" talvez se refira a uma melodia. A Septuaginta grega e a Vulgata latina vertem o termo "[para] aquela que herda".

NEMUEL.

1. Primeiro alistado dos cinco filhos de Simeão e cabeça de família dos nemuelitas. (Núm 26:12-14; 1Cr 4:24) Na lista daqueles que entraram no Egito junto com Jacó ele é chamado de Jemuel. — Gên 46:8, 10; Êx 6:15.

2. Filho de Eliabe e bisneto de Rubem. Seus irmãos eram os rebeldes Datã e Abirão, que a terra tragou. — Núm 26:5, 8, 9; De 11:6.

NEMUELITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Nemuel]. Família de Simeão, descendente de Nemuel. — Núm 26:12.

NER [Lâmpada]. Benjamita, filho de Abiel (Jeiel), pai de Abner e Quis, e avô do Rei Saul. — 1Sa 14:50, 51; 1Cr 8:33; 9:39; veja ABIEL N.º 1.

NEREU. Um irmão que, junto com sua irmã, foi incluído nos cumprimentos que Paulo enviou à congregação de Roma. (Ro 16:15) O nome é também encontrado em inscrições romanas que alistam alguns da casa do imperador, bem como em lendas.

NERGAL. Deidade babilônica, especialmente adorada em Cuta, cidade que, segundo a história, era dedicada a Nergal. O povo de Cute (Cuta), que o rei da Assíria estabeleceu no território de Samaria, continuou a adorar esta deidade. (2Rs 17:24, 30, 33) Alguns peritos sugerem que Nergal originalmente estava associado com o fogo e o calor do sol, e que, mais tarde, ele passou a ser considerado deus da guerra e da caça, bem como causador de pestilência. Os apelidos aplicados a Nergal em textos religiosos indicam que, basicamente, era encarado como destruidor. Ele é chamado de "o rei enraivecido", "o violento" e "aquele que queima". Nergal passou também a ser considerado o deus do mundo subterrâneo e consorte de Eresquigal. Pensa-se que o leão de cabeça humana e de asas tenha sido o emblema de Nergal.

Nergal-Sarezer, o Rabe-Mague, um dos príncipes de Nabucodonosor, evidentemente derivou seu nome deste deus. — Je 39:3, 13.

NERGAL-SAREZER [do acadiano, significando "Que Nergal Proteja o Rei"].

1. Príncipe babilônio do tempo de Nabucodonosor. — Je 39:3.

2. Outro importante príncipe das forças de Nabucodonosor por ocasião da derrubada de Jerusalém, diferenciado do N.º 1 pelo acréscimo do título Rabe-Mague. Foi este Rabe-Mague que ajudou na soltura de Jeremias. — Je 39:3, 13, 14.

Visto que este nome tem uma tão notável semelhança com o encontrado em inscrições babilônicas (Nergal-shar-usur), alguns peritos acham que este príncipe era Neriglissar (forma grega), que se crê ter sido o sucessor do Rei Evil-Merodaque (Avil-Marduque). — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 308.

NÉRI [do hebr., forma abreviada de Nerias]. Descendente do Rei Davi através de Natã, na linhagem régia de Jesus. Segundo Lucas, Sealtiel era o filho de Néri, porém, Mateus diz que Jeconias era o pai de Sealtiel. (Mt 1:12; Lu 3:27) Pode ser que Sealtiel se tenha casado com a filha de Néri, tornando-se assim seu genro. Nas listas genealógicas hebraicas, não era incomum chamar o genro de filho. Portanto, ambos os relatos são corretos.

NERIAS [Minha Lâmpada É Jeová]. Filho de Maseias e pai tanto de Baruque, secretário de Jeremias, como de Seraías, aquele que leu para a cidade de Babilônia a denúncia contra ela. — Je 32:12; 36:4, 8, 14, 32; 43:3, 6; 45:1; 51:59-64.

NERO. Veja CÉSAR.

NETAIM. Lugar em Judá, habitado por alguns oleiros que estavam a serviço do rei. (1Cr 4:21-23) Desconhece-se hoje a localização de Netaim.

NETANEL [Deus Deu].

1. Maioral da tribo de Issacar; filho de Zuar. (Núm 1:8, 16) Neste cargo, ele supervisionou o censo no ermo para Issacar, apresentou sua dádiva quando se inaugurou o altar do tabernáculo e chefiou um exército de 54.400. — Núm 2:5, 6; 7:11, 18-23; 10:15.

2. Quarto filho mencionado de Jessé e um irmão mais velho do Rei Davi. — 1Cr 2:13-15.

3. Levita cujo filho Semaías era secretário durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 24:6.

4. Sacerdote que tocou a trombeta diante da Arca do Pacto no cortejo que a acompanhou a Jerusalém. — 1Cr 15:24.

5. Porteiro levita designado no tempo de Davi para a área ao S do santuário, onde ficavam as casas de armazenagem; quinto filho de Obede-Edom. — 1Cr 26:4, 8, 15.

6. Príncipe enviado pelo Rei Jeosafá para ensinar a lei de Jeová nas cidades de Judá. — 2Cr 17:7-9.

7. Chefe de levitas, que contribuiu animais para o sacrifício na grande celebração da Páscoa feita por Josias. — 2Cr 35:9, 18, 19.

8. Cabeça da casa paterna de Jedaías, nos dias de Joiaquim, sucessor de Jesua. — Ne 12:12, 21.

9. Sacerdote dentre aqueles filhos de Pasur, que haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram às instâncias de Esdras. (Esd 10:22, 44) Possivelmente é o N.º 10.

10. Músico num dos cortejos que celebraram a reconstrução da muralha de Jerusalém nos dias de Neemias. (Ne 12:31, 35, 36) Possivelmente o N.º 9.

NETANIAS [Jeová Deu].

1. Terceiro filho mencionado dos quatro de Asafe, escolhido por Davi para o serviço musical no santuário. Das 24 turmas, Netanias encabeçava a quinta. — 1Cr 25:1, 2, 12.

2. Levita do grupo composto por sacerdotes, levitas e príncipes, enviados pelo Rei Jeosafá, no terceiro ano do seu reinado, para ensinar a lei de Jeová nas cidades de Judá. — 2Cr 17:7-9.

3. Filho de Selemias e pai de Jeudi, que leu o rolo de Jeremias para o Rei Jeoiaquim, em 625 AEC. — Je 36:14, 21, 23.

4. Filho de Elisama e pai de Ismael, assassino do governador Gedalias. — 2Rs 25:23, 25; Je 40:8, 14, 15; 41:1-18.

NETINEUS [(Os) Dados]. Escravos ou ministros não israelitas que serviam no templo. (1Cr 9:2; Esd 8:17) Representantes de 35 famílias de netineus estavam entre os que retornaram do exílio babilônico junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:1, 2, 43-54, 58; Ne 7:46-56, 60; os filhos de Acube, de Hagabe e de Asná, alistados por Esdras, não são mencionados por Neemias. Talvez fossem incluídos sob o nome de outras famílias.) Também em 468 AEC, alguns netineus acompanharam Esdras de Babilônia a Jerusalém. (Esd 7:1-7) Depois, certos netineus participaram no conserto da muralha de Jerusalém. (Ne 3:26) Participaram também com os israelitas num pacto para se manterem livres de alianças matrimoniais com estrangeiros. — Ne 10:28-30.

É provável que muitos dos netineus fossem descendentes dos gibeonitas que Josué havia constituído em "ajuntadores de lenha e tiradores de água para a assembleia e para o altar de Jeová". (Jos 9:23, 27) Parece que outros netineus descendiam dos cativos tomados pelo Rei Davi e seus príncipes. (Esd 8:20; compare isso com Sal 68:18.) Os netineus pertencentes à família de Meunim talvez fossem descendentes de cativos tomados pelo Rei Uzias, de Judá. (2Cr 26:7; Esd 2:50; Ne 7:52) Mais outro grupo, "os filhos de Nefusim" (Nefusesim), talvez fossem descendentes de Ismael através de Nafis. — Gên 25:13-15; Esd 2:50; Ne 7:52.

Nos tempos pós-exílicos, os netineus moravam em Ofel, pelo visto, perto da área do templo, bem como em outras cidades. (Esd 2:70; Ne 3:26, 31; 7:73; 11:3, 21) Por causa da sua obra no templo, o rei persa Artaxerxes isentou-os do pagamento de impostos, tributos e pedágios. — Esd 7:24.

NETOFA [duma raiz que significa "gotejar; pingar"], NETOFATITAS. Pequena aldeia de Judá, provavelmente situada em Khirbet Bedd Faluh, a uns 4 km ao SSE de Belém, e seus habitantes. A Bíblia trata principalmente dos seus habitantes, os quais, no começo, evidentemente eram aparentados com os que se estabeleceram em Belém. — 1Cr 2:54.

Entre os netofatitas havia Maarai e Helebe (Helede; Heldai), poderosos de Davi, que se tornaram chefes de turmas do exército. (2Sa 23:8, 28, 29; 1Cr 11:26, 30; 27:13, 15) Alguns netofatitas foram deixados em Judá depois da deportação geral para Babilônia, e eles apoiaram o governador Gedalias. (2Rs 25:23; Je 40:8) Diversos netofatitas, descendentes dos levados a Babilônia, retornaram com Zorobabel em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:1, 2, 22; Ne 7:26) Alguns levitas que moravam nos povoados dos netofatitas vieram a Jerusalém para a inauguração da muralha reconstruída. — 1Cr 9:14, 16; Ne 12:27, 28.

NEUM. Evidentemente, uma grafia alternativa de Reum, um dos homens que retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico. — Esd 2:2; Ne 7:7.

NEUSTA. Filha de Elnatã, de Jerusalém, e esposa do Rei Jeoiaquim. Quando os primeiros cativos foram levados para Babilônia, em 617 AEC, depois do governo de três meses do filho dela, Joaquim, Neusta também foi levada e provavelmente permaneceu ali pelo resto da vida. — 2Rs 24:6, 8, 12; Je 29:2.

NEVE. Cristais brancos de água congelada, formados do vapor da água na atmosfera. Cada cristal de neve que cai purifica a atmosfera e traz consigo compostos de elementos, tais como enxofre e nitrogênio, contribuindo assim para a fertilização do solo ao supri-lo de umidade. (Is 55:10, 11) A neve pode ser fonte de água limpa para a lavagem. (Jó 9:30) Embora rara ou desconhecida em certas regiões da Palestina, ela às vezes cai durante janeiro e fevereiro em regiões montanhosas, tal como em Jerusalém. (Veja 2Sa 23:20; 1Cr 11:22.) Na maior parte do ano há neve nas altitudes e nas ravinas da cordilheira do Líbano; o elevado monte Hermom tem o cume coberto de neve quase que o ano inteiro. (Je 18:14) O Salmo 68:14 refere-se à neve em Zalmom, que é parte do monte Haurã (Jebel ed Druz), situado ao L do Jordão.

Jeová, o Produtor da neve, pode também controlá-la. (Jó 37:6; Sal 147:16) A fim de servir seu propósito, Deus tem armazenado neve e saraiva "para o dia de peleja e de guerra". — Jó 38:22, 23.

Uso Ilustrativo. Em símiles bíblicos usa-se a neve para ajudar a transmitir a ideia de brancura. (Êx 4:6; Núm 12:10; 2Rs 5:27; Da 7:9; Mt 28:3; Re 1:14) Às vezes é associada com pureza. (Is 1:18; La 4:7) Por exemplo, Davi rogou a Deus para que o purificasse de pecado, lavando-o para que se tornasse "mais branco do que a neve". — Sal 51:7.

Os três companheiros de Jó, que não lhe eram fonte de verdadeiro consolo, foram comparados a uma torrente hibernal, engrossada por gelo e neve derretidos das montanhas, mas que seca no calor do verão. (Jó 6:15-17) Diz-se que o Seol arrebata pecadores assim como a seca e o calor fazem com as águas da neve. (Jó 24:19) Assim como a neve no verão é desnatural e arruinaria as plantações, assim "a glória não é apropriada para o estúpido". (Pr 26:1) Todavia, o enviado fiel, aquele que cumpre com sua comissão para a satisfação daquele que o envia, é comparado a uma bebida refrescada com neve dos montes e que refrigera num dia quente de colheita. — Pr 25:13.

NÉVOA. Veja BRUMA, NEBLINA, NÉVOA.

NEZIÁ [duma raiz que significa "supervisionar; superar; suportar"]. Antepassado de um grupo de netineus que retornaram com Zorobabel após o exílio babilônico, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 54; Ne 7:46, 56.

NEZIBE [duma raiz que significa "erguer; postar; erigir"]. Lugar de Judá na Sefelá. (Jos 15:20, 33, 43) Costuma ser identificado com Khirbet Beit Nesib (Horvat Neziv), a uns 11 km ao NO de Hébron.

NIBAZ. Deidade adorada pelos avitas, que o rei da Assíria estabeleceu no território de Samaria depois da deportação dos israelitas após a queda do reino das dez tribos. (2Rs 17:24-31) Além da breve referência bíblica a Nibaz, não se pode dizer nada com certeza sobre a natureza ou a forma deste deus.

NIBSÃ. Cidade no ermo de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 61, 62) Desconhece-se a localização exata de Nibsã. Mas é provisoriamente identificada com Khirbet el-Maqari, situada numa serra plana a uns 16 km ao SE de Jerusalém.

NICANOR [provavelmente: Conquistador]. Um dos sete homens "cheios de espírito e de sabedoria", aprovados pelos apóstolos para cuidar da distribuição diária de alimentos na primitiva congregação de Jerusalém. — At 6:1-6.

NICODEMOS [Conquistador do Povo]. Fariseu e instrutor de Israel, governante dos judeus (isto é, membro do Sinédrio), mencionado somente no Evangelho de João. Nicodemos ficou impressionado com os sinais que Jesus realizara em Jerusalém na época da Páscoa de 30 EC. Assim, ele visitou Jesus certa noite e confessou que Jesus vinha da parte de Deus. (Provavelmente por medo dos judeus, preferiu a cobertura da escuridão para esta primeira visita.) Foi a Nicodemos que Jesus falou sobre "nascer de novo", a fim de ver o Reino de Deus, sobre nenhum homem ter ascendido ao céu, sobre o amor de Deus conforme demonstrado por ele enviar o Filho à Terra, e sobre a necessidade de se exercer fé. — Jo 2:23; 3:1-21.

Cerca de dois anos e meio mais tarde, na Festividade das Barracas, os fariseus enviaram oficiais para prenderem Jesus. Quando os oficiais voltaram de mãos vazias, os fariseus escarneceram deles por terem feito um relatório favorável de Jesus, em vista do que Nicodemos falou, dizendo: "Será que a nossa lei julga um homem sem que primeiro o tenha ouvido e venha a saber o que ele está fazendo?" Nisso, os outros zombaram dele. (Jo 7:45-52) Depois da morte de Jesus, Nicodemos acompanhou José de Arimateia, aquele discípulo temeroso, trazendo um pesado rolo de mirra e aloés (c. 100 libras romanas [33 kg]), uma oferta cara, para a preparação do corpo de Jesus para o sepultamento. (Jo 19:38-40) Não há nenhuma evidência bíblica pró ou contra as tradições que dizem que Nicodemos, mais tarde, tornou-se discípulo, foi expulso do Sinédrio e de Jerusalém, teve uma morte de mártir, e assim por diante.

NICOLAU [Conquistador do Povo].

1. Um dos sete homens habilitados que a congregação recomendou aos apóstolos para a tarefa de distribuir alimentos, a fim de assegurar um tratamento justo e equitativo entre os da primitiva congregação de Jerusalém após o Pentecostes de 33 EC. Dentre os sete, Nicolau é o único chamado de "prosélito de Antioquia", o que sugere que ele talvez fosse o único não judeu do grupo, os nomes gregos dos outros sendo comuns mesmo entre os judeus naturais. — At 6:1-6.

2. A "seita de Nicolau" (ou: dos nicolaítas) é condenada em duas das sete cartas às congregações, nos capítulos 2 e 3 de Revelação (Apocalipse). O "anjo" da congregação de Éfeso foi elogiado por odiar "as ações da seita de Nicolau", que o próprio Cristo Jesus também odeia. (Re 2:1, 6) Na congregação em Pérgamo, porém, havia alguns que 'se apegavam ao ensino da seita de Nicolau', sendo exortados a se afastarem desse e a se arrependerem. — Re 2:12, 15, 16.

Além daquilo que consta em Revelação sobre a seita de Nicolau, nada mais se sabe dela, nem das suas práticas e ensinos, os quais são condenados, nem da sua origem e desenvolvimento. O advérbio "assim", que segue à referência ao proceder imoral e idólatra adotado pelos israelitas devido "ao ensino de Balaão" (Re 2:14, 15), talvez indique alguma similaridade, mas Revelação faz uma distinção entre os dois. Não há motivo para ligar esta seita com Nicolau, o cristão de Antioquia (N.º 1), só por ele ser a única pessoa com este nome na Bíblia, como fizeram alguns dos primitivos escritores eclesiásticos. Nem se justifica dizer que alguma seita apóstata tomou o nome dele para dar peso à sua transgressão. É mais provável que Nicolau tenha sido uma pessoa não identificada na Bíblia, que deu nome a este movimento ímpio.

NICÓPOLIS [Cidade de Conquista]. Cidade em que o apóstolo Paulo decidiu passar o inverno em uma das suas viagens, e à qual instou com Tito que viesse. (Tit 3:12) A nota no fim da carta de Paulo a Tito, na King James Version (Versão Rei Jaime), que indica ter sido ela escrita "de Nicópolis da Macedônia", não consta nos mais antigos manuscritos. Evidentemente, Paulo não escreveu sua carta de Nicópolis, visto que Tito 3:12 dá a entender que ele ainda não fora, mas apenas decidira passar o inverno ali.

Dentre as diversas cidades antigas chamadas Nicópolis, a Nicópolis do Epiro, situada numa península no NO da Grécia e a uns 10 km ao N de Preveza, parece enquadrar-se melhor na referência bíblica. Sendo ela uma cidade de destaque, seria um bom lugar para Paulo proclamar as boas novas, e ela estava situada convenientemente tanto para Paulo (que parece ter estado então na Macedônia) como para Tito (em Creta). É possível que Paulo tenha sido preso em Nicópolis e então levado a Roma para seu último encarceramento e sua execução.

Otaviano (Augusto) fundou Nicópolis em comemoração da sua vitória naval (de 31 AEC) sobre Antônio e Cleópatra junto à vizinha Áccio. Os Jogos de Áccio, instituídos por ele em honra do deus Apolo, também serviam para comemorar este evento. A própria cidade ocupava o lugar do acampamento romano, e lá onde havia ficado sua tenda, Otaviano construiu um templo para o deus Netuno. A maioria dos edifícios públicos, segundo o historiador Josefo, foram erigidos pelos interesses e a ajuda financeira de Herodes, o Grande. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XVI, 147 (v, 3).

NIGELA. Veja COMINHO, COMINHO-PRETO (NIGELA).

NÍGER [do lat., significando "Escuro; Negro"]. Nome latino dado a Simeão, um dos "profetas e instrutores" da congregação de Antioquia, Síria. — At 13:1.

NILO. Nome grego dado ao rio, cujo vale, na parte setentrional, formava a terra do antigo Egito, tornando aquela parte do país essencialmente um oásis fluvial. (MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 531) Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, o rio é regularmente chamado pelo termo ye'ór (às vezes ye'óhr). Esta palavra significa "rio" ou "canal" (como em Daniel 12:5 e em Isaías 33:21), ou "galeria cheia de água" (um poço aberto na mineração, como em Jó 28:10). Num caso, usa-se ye'ór para se referir ao rio Tigre (o bíblico Hídequel) da Mesopotâmia. (Da 12:5-7; compare isso com 10:4.) Todas as outras ocorrências, conforme o contexto indica, aplicam-se ao Nilo, ou, na forma plural, aos canais do Nilo. (Sal 78:44; Is 7:18) O nome egípcio (jrw) para o rio, pelo menos a partir da chamada Décima Oitava Dinastia, corresponde de perto ao hebraico.

O Curso do Nilo. O Nilo é geralmente classificado como o rio mais comprido da terra. Sua extensão de 6.671 km é medida desde as suas nascentes, que surgem na região dos lagos dos atuais Ruanda e Burundi. Elas deságuam no lago Vitória, e dali um rio passa para o lago Alberto (lago Mobutu Sese Seko); mais ao norte, o rio é conhecido como o Nilo Branco. Em Cartum, o Nilo Branco conflui com o Nilo Azul, que cascateia desde os montes da Etiópia setentrional. Ao norte de Cartum, o rio forma o Nilo propriamente dito, e como tal recebe as águas de apenas mais um tributário, o rio Atbara, cuja confluência com o Nilo ocorre uns 300 km ao NE de Cartum. O Nilo serpenteia então através do desolado planalto do Sudão setentrional, passando sobre seis separados leitos de granito duro, que criam seis cataratas entre Cartum e Assuã (a bíblica Siene), ponto onde a Núbia terminava e o antigo Egito começava. Por fim, tendo perdido grande parte do seu volume por causa da evaporação no escaldante sol e das demandas de irrigação do Egito, as águas do Nilo deságuam no mar Mediterrâneo a uns 2.700 km ao N de Cartum.

O vale do Nilo é bem estreito ao longo da maior parte do curso do rio. Em grande parte da Núbia, o rio flui através duma garganta, beirada em ambos os lados pelo deserto. Ao norte de Assuã, no que era o Alto Egito, o vale se amplia, mas os penhascos rochosos em ambos os lados nunca distam entre si muito mais do que uns 20 km. Todavia, quando o rio atinge a região logo ao N do atual Cairo, ele se divide em dois braços principais, agora chamados de Roseta e de Damieta, pelos nomes das cidades portuárias situadas na desembocadura destes braços na costa do Mediterrâneo. Esta ramificação das águas do Nilo cria o pantanoso Delta do Nilo. Na antiguidade, o rio tinha outros braços, sendo que os historiadores e geógrafos gregos, clássicos, mencionam de cinco a sete. Estes braços, e alguns dos canais, desde então assorearam e ficaram grandemente reduzidos ou foram eliminados.

Importância das Cheias Anuais. Uma característica ímpar deste grande rio é a regularidade da sua cheia, todo ano, e a consequente inundação das suas margens, ladeadas por aldeias agrícolas. Isto é produzido pelas fortes chuvas sazonais (bem como pelo degelo da neve nas montanhas) na Etiópia, que convertem o Nilo Azul numa torrente que se precipita para a sua junção com o Nilo Branco, levando ricos sedimentos dos planaltos etíopes. O rio Atbara também acrescenta maior fluxo para aumentar o volume do Nilo.

Antes da construção da represa de Assuã, isto fazia com que o rio começasse a aumentar em volume no Egito a partir de junho, atingindo o pico em setembro e depois baixando aos poucos. Ao baixarem, as águas deixavam para trás um depósito de solo muito fértil na forma duma camada fina de lama.

Numa terra virtualmente sem chuva, a agricultura egípcia dependia totalmente destas inundações anuais das terras baixas. Uma cheia insuficiente tinha o mesmo efeito que uma seca, provocando fome; ao passo que uma cheia excessiva causava danos às obras de irrigação (bem como às casas). A preocupação dos egípcios com uma desejável quantidade de inundação se vê nos nilômetros (medidores do nível do rio), descobertos em lugares antigos. Sem estas inundações, o deserto, nunca muito longe, avançaria de ambos os lados até às margens do rio. No entanto, as cheias e as baixas do Nilo, com poucas exceções, têm sido tão regulares, que o Egito, em toda a sua história, era famoso por suas abundantes safras e por sua riqueza agrícola.

Essa total dependência da economia egípcia das águas do Nilo foi bem ilustrada no sonho de Faraó, em que as sete vacas gordas subiram do Nilo e pastaram o capim do rio, ao passo que as sete vacas magras vieram do mesmo lugar. Isto representava aptamente o modo em que uma boa safra podia ser consumida por anos péssimos, resultantes de insuficiente inundação. — Gên 41:17-21.

O transbordamento das águas do Nilo sobre as suas margens foi usado para descrever o avanço de exércitos em marcha (Je 46:7, 8; 47:2, 3), ao passo que o profeta Amós usou a cheia e a baixa das águas do Nilo para representar a agitação que sobreviria ao infiel Israel. (Am 8:8; 9:5) Outros profetas usaram a metáfora do secamento do Nilo para representar o desastre que sobreviria ao Egito em resultado do julgamento de Deus contra aquela nação. A falta das águas do Nilo não só arruinaria a agricultura e a pecuária, mas danificaria também a pesca e a produção de linho. — Is 19:1, 5-10; Ez 29:9, 10; Za 10:11.

Para reter parte das águas de inundação para uso posterior na irrigação, durante a época do crescimento das safras, os egípcios construíram diques de terra para represar as águas lamacentas em grandes bacias de captação. Assim, quando Jeová trouxe a primeira praga sobre o Egito, transformando suas águas em sangue, as do próprio Nilo, a água nos seus canais e nos banhados de juncos, e as "águas represadas", foram todas convertidas em sangue. — Êx 7:14-25.

Outras Características. Além de suprir água para plantas e para animais domésticos, o Nilo era a fonte de água potável para os egípcios. (Êx 7:18, 21, 24) Exceto durante o estágio inicial da inundação, a água era bem agradável. Ao longo dos canais do Nilo e dos banhados de juncos cresciam papiros em abundância; estes eram a fonte do material de escrita dos egípcios e eram usados para a construção de barcos. (Is 18:2) As margens e os banhados de juncos eram o habitat de muitas aves selváticas, que se alimentavam de rãs e de outras criaturas pequenas. (Êx 8:5, 9-11) Gravuras egípcias mostram a caça de aves em pequenos barcos. As águas do rio Nilo serviam também para banho; registra-se que a filha de Faraó se banhava ali. (Êx 2:5) Uma gravura egípcia apresenta uma bem similar cena de banho duma mulher nobre com suas quatro criadas. O Nilo era também a principal via do país inteiro. Barcos dirigindo-se para o N acompanhavam a corrente rio abaixo, ao passo que os que se dirigiam para o S (rio acima) eram empurrados pelos ventos prevalecentes, que sopravam para o interior procedentes do mar Mediterrâneo, no norte. Navios comerciais da Fenícia e de Creta podiam subir o rio até Tebas (a bíblica Nô-Amom; Na 3:8) e mais além.

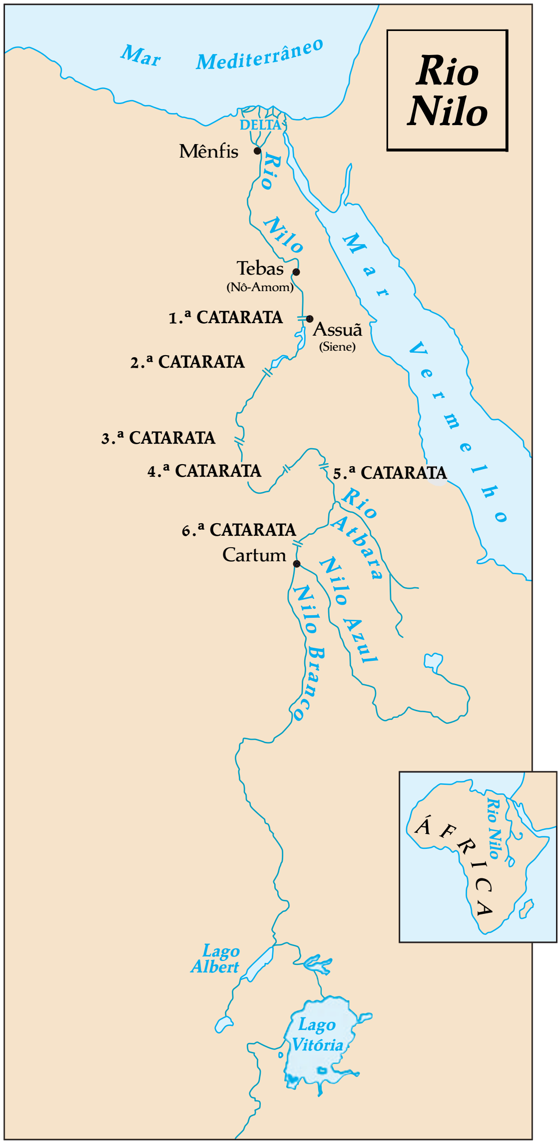
O Nilo figurava com destaque nas defesas egípcias contra invasões. Suas cataratas no S tornavam difícil um ataque da direção da Núbia-Etiópia, ao passo que o terreno pantanoso em torno da região do Delta impedia a entrada de grandes exércitos vindos do continente asiático. Alguns peritos sugerem que a jactância do rei assírio Senaqueribe, no sentido de secar todos os canais do Nilo com os seus pés, indicava sua confiança em poder transpor os fossos defensivos cheios de água em torno das cidades e fortalezas egípcias. — 2Rs 19:24.

Os ciclos do Nilo serviam de base para o calendário sazonal dos egípcios, que tinha três estações de quatro meses: 'Akhet, ou Inundação; Peret, o Surgimento (evidentemente da terra com o retorno das águas ao seu leito); e Shomu, a estação Seca (verão). O período logo depois de as águas atingirem o ponto mais alto era de maior atividade; quando prevalecia o nível alto das águas, programavam-se trabalhos de construção para prover certa medida de empregos.

Acha-se que o símbolo dum "grande monstro marinho jazendo no meio dos . . . canais do Nilo", aplicado ao Faraó no livro de Ezequiel, seja tirado dos crocodilos que habitam o Nilo desde a antiguidade. (Ez 29:3-5) O hipopótamo também era frequente, geralmente identificado com o animal chamado de "beemote" em Jó 40:15.

Os egípcios adoravam o Nilo como deus da fertilidade, sob o nome de Hápi. Este deus era basicamente retratado como homem, mas com grandes seios femininos, a cabeça coroada de plantas aquáticas e um cinto de pescador em volta da cintura gorda. Anualmente realizavam-se em sua honra festividades acompanhadas por sacrifícios, no início de cada período de inundação. Alguns peritos sugerem que a menção de Faraó ir ao Nilo, em Êxodo 7:15, relacionava-se com algum ato devocional matutino, embora possa ter sido apenas uma caminhada matinal ou para ver a altura do rio.



NILO, CANAIS DO. Canais de irrigação que bifurcam do rio Nilo. (Êx 7:19; 8:5; Sal 78:44) A palavra hebraica para canais do Nilo (ye'o·rím) é a forma plural de ye'ór (o rio Nilo). A economia egípcia dependia totalmente do Nilo, que fornecia água para irrigação nesta terra virtualmente sem chuva e inundava regularmente a terra, deixando para trás um depósito de ricos sedimentos. O suprimento de alimentos da nação dependia deste fenômeno. Portanto, a transformação destas águas em sangue resultou numa calamidade nacional, assim como secarem-se os canais do Nilo pressagiaria desastre. — Is 19:6; veja NILO.

NINFA [Noiva]. Cristã que vivia em Laodiceia ou em Colossos, ou perto dali, em cuja casa se realizavam reuniões congregacionais, e a quem Paulo enviou cumprimentos. — Col 4:15.

NINHO. Lugar que uma ave ou um animal prepara para criar os filhotes; também abrigo, toca ou uma residência aconchegante, confortável, cômoda. — Pr 27:8; Is 10:14; 16:2.

Os ninhos das aves variam grandemente em localização, tamanho e construção, mas cada tipo é mais apropriado do que outro para o uso específico visado. As localizações dos diferentes tipos variam desde o solo ou a areia (fala-se também das serpentes como tendo ‘ninhos’ no solo ou entre rochas; Is 34:15) até tufos de capim, arbustos, rochedos, árvores, troncos ocos de árvores, penhascos marítimos, montes, fendas nos prédios do homem, e até mesmo suspensos entre canas sobre a água. Entre os materiais de construção usados estão galhinhos, folhas, algas marinhas, lã, algodão, feno, palha, musgo, pelos, penas, lanugem de plantas, crina de cavalo, pedacinhos de pano, e assim por diante. Em geral, os ninhos servem de proteção contra predadores, como abrigo nas tempestades e como isolamento contra o calor e o frio.

A fim de impressionar Jó com a sabedoria do Criador, Jeová chamou atenção para a águia que “constrói o seu ninho no alto, que . . . reside num rochedo e passa a noite no pico dum rochedo e num lugar inacessível”. (Jó 39:27, 28) E para ilustrar o cuidado amoroso de Deus para com Israel, Moisés mencionou a águia, que “remexe seu ninho”, evidentemente com referência à maneira em que a águia incita e às vezes empurra seus filhotes para o ar, para ensinar-lhes a voar. De modo similar, Jeová trouxe Israel como nação para fora do Egito. Teve terno cuidado com a jovem nação em toda a peregrinação pelo ermo e quando ela se estabeleceu na Terra da Promessa, assim como a águia vigia os filhotes e cuida deles durante as suas lições de voo. — De 32:11; veja ÁGUIA.

O pombo-das-rochas também constrói seu ninho no alto, em lugares rochosos. Os altos rochedos na vizinhança do Mar Morto oferecem numerosas fendas e cavernas para os seus ninhos. Jeremias talvez tivesse em mente esses ninhos isolados ao pronunciar julgamento contra Moabe, que morava nesta região: “Deixai as cidades e residi nos rochedos, habitantes de Moabe, e tornai-vos como a pomba que faz seu ninho nas regiões da boca do barranco.” — Je 48:28; veja a declaração de Balaão, em Núm 24:21.

A grossa folhagem dos fortes cedros-do-líbano serviam como lugar excelente para a nidificação de outras aves; havia ali amplo abrigo e esconderijo o ano inteiro. O salmista citou isso como exemplo das maravilhosas provisões de Deus para o bem-estar das suas criaturas. — Sal 104:16, 17.

Sob a Lei, os israelitas estavam proibidos de tirar os ovos ou os filhotes dum ninho e ao mesmo tempo matar a mãe. Isto impedia a crueldade de se extirpar completamente a família com um só golpe. A mãe devia ser poupada, para produzir mais filhotes. — De 22:6, 7.

Quando certo escriba disse a Jesus: “Instrutor, eu te seguirei para onde quer que fores”, Jesus respondeu: “As raposas têm covis e as aves do céu têm poleiros [ou, “ninhos”], mas o Filho do homem não tem onde deitar a cabeça.” (Mt 8:19, 20; Lu 9:57, 58) Jesus salientou ali que, para aquele homem ser seu seguidor, ele teria de abandonar a ideia de ter os confortos e as comodidades costumeiramente usufruídos, e teria de confiar plenamente em Jeová. Este princípio é refletido na oração-modelo que ele ensinou aos discípulos: “Dá-nos hoje o nosso pão para este dia”, e na sua declaração: “Podeis estar certos, assim, de que nenhum de vós que não se despedir de todos os seus bens pode ser meu discípulo.” — Mt 6:11; Lu 14:33.

Uso Figurado. Nas mensagens de julgamento contra Edom, Deus usou os ninhos da águia em pontos elevados como símbolo do lugar literalmente alto de Edom nas montanhas, bem como da sua altivez e presunção. — Je 49:15-18; Ob 1-4; veja a declaração de Deus contra Babilônia, em Hab 1:6; 2:6-11.

Ao profetizar contra Jerusalém, Jeremias mencionou a eminência das árvores do Líbano e o valor da sua madeira de cedro, usada especialmente por reis e por ricos na construção de suas casas. O palácio do rei de Judá e os prédios governamentais em Jerusalém haviam sido construídos na maior parte de cedro. Por isso, Jeremias falou dos habitantes de Jerusalém como ‘morando no Líbano, aninhados nos cedros’. Mas, eles seriam rebaixados desta posição elevada. — Je 22:6, 23.

Um ‘Compartimento’. Em Gênesis 6:14, a palavra hebraica qin·ním (“ninhos”) é traduzida por “pequenos quartos” (So), “cabines” (AT) e “compartimentos” (NM). Evidentemente, tratava-se de compartimentos relativamente pequenos na arca construída por Noé, e, similares aos ninhos de aves, serviam de proteção e abrigo durante o tempo crítico em que homens e animais de outro modo estavam indefesos.

NÍNIVE. Cidade da Assíria, fundada por Ninrode, “poderoso caçador em oposição a Jeová”. Junto com Reobote-Ir, Calá e Resem constituía “a grande cidade”. (Gên 10:9, 11, 12; Miq 5:6) Muito mais tarde, tornou-se a capital do Império Assírio. Como tal, Nínive era uma "cidade de derramamento de sangue" (Na 3:1), porque os assírios travavam muitas guerras de conquista e usavam métodos brutais na matança dos guerreiros capturados. Sem dúvida, as campanhas militares contribuíam muito para a riqueza da cidade. (Na 2:9) A principal deidade de Nínive parece ter sido Istar, deusa do amor e da guerra.

Investigações Arqueológicas. Kuyunjik e Nebi Yunus ("Profeta Jonas"), duas elevações situadas na margem L do rio Tigre defronte de Mosul, no N do Iraque, assinalam o lugar do que anteriormente era a grande cidade de Nínive. Uma aldeia moderna, com cemitério e mesquita, ocupa Nebi Yunus. Por isso, esta elevação, que encobre um palácio de Esar-Hadom, foi pouco investigada. Em Kuyunjik, porém, as escavações trouxeram à tona muito que atesta a glória passada de Nínive. Os achados incluem milhares de tabuinhas cuneiformes da biblioteca de Assurbanipal e as ruínas do palácio de Senaqueribe, e do de Assurbanipal. Estes palácios eram estruturas impressionantes. Baseado nos seus achados, Sir Austen Layard escreveu:

"O interior do palácio assírio deve ter sido tanto magnífico como imponente. Conduzi o leitor através das suas ruínas, e ele pode julgar qual a impressão que os salões deviam dar ao estranho que, nos dias da antiguidade, entrasse pela primeira vez na morada dos reis assírios. Ele era introduzido pelo portal guardado por colossais leões ou touros de alabastro branco. No primeiro salão, via-se cercado por registros entalhados do império. Batalhas, sítios, triunfos, as façanhas da caça, as cerimônias religiosas, eram retratados nas paredes, esculpidos em alabastro e pintados em deslumbrantes cores. Debaixo de cada gravura achavam-se gravadas, em caracteres enchidos de cobre brilhante, inscrições que descreviam as cenas representadas. Acima dos entalhes havia pinturas de outros eventos — o rei, assistido por seus eunucos e guerreiros, recebendo seus prisioneiros, entrando em alianças com outros monarcas ou realizando algum dever sagrado. Estas representações eram cercadas por bordas coloridas, de desenho requintado e elegante. A árvore emblemática, touros alados e animais monstruosos eram conspícuos entre os ornamentos. Na parte superior do salão havia a figura colossal do rei adorando diante da deidade suprema, ou recebendo do seu eunuco o copo sagrado. Era assistido por guerreiros que carregavam as armas dele, e pelos sacerdotes ou pelas divindades presidentes. Suas vestes compridas, e as de seus seguidores, eram adornadas com grupos de figuras, de animais e de flores, todos pintados em cores brilhantes.

"O estranho pisava em lajes de alabastro, cada uma delas com uma inscrição, registrando os títulos, a genealogia e as realizações do grande rei. Diversas entradas, formadas por gigantescos leões ou touros alados, ou pelas figuras de deidades guardiães, davam acesso a outros compartimentos, os quais por sua vez davam acesso a salões mais distantes. Em cada um deles havia novas esculturas. Nas paredes de alguns havia cortejos de figuras colossais — homens armados e eunucos seguindo o rei, guerreiros carregados de despojos, conduzindo prisioneiros, ou levando presentes e ofertas aos deuses. Nas paredes de outros retratavam-se sacerdotes alados, ou divindades presidentes, postados diante das árvores sagradas.

"Os tetos acima dele eram divididos em compartimentos quadrados, pintados com flores ou com figuras de animais. Alguns eram incrustados com marfim, cada compartimento estando cercado por bordas e molduras elegantes. As vigas, bem como os lados das câmaras, talvez fossem dourados, ou mesmo revestidos de ouro e prata; e as madeiras mais raras, sendo o cedro conspícuo entre elas, eram usadas para o madeiramento. Aberturas quadradas nos tetos das câmaras deixavam entrar a luz do dia." — Nineveh and Its Remains (Nínive e Suas Ruínas), 1856, Parte II, pp. 207-209.

No Tempo de Jonas. Jonas, o profeta de Jeová, no nono século AEC, declarou a iminente ruína de Nínive por causa da iniquidade dos seus habitantes. Todavia, visto que o povo, inclusive o rei, se arrependeu, Jeová poupou a cidade. (Jon 1:1, 2; 3:2, 5-10) Naquele tempo, Nínive era uma grande cidade, "de três dias de caminhada". (Jon 3:3) Havia na sua população mais de 120.000 homens. (Jon 4:11) Esta descrição bíblica não é refutada pela evidência arqueológica. André Parrot, curador-chefe dos Museus Nacionais Franceses, observou:

"Assim como, hoje em dia, aquela parte de Londres situada dentro de seus limites antigos é muito diferente da que é chamada de 'grande Londres' — termo que inclui os subúrbios e indica uma área muito maior — assim também talvez as pessoas que viviam muito longe da Assíria entendiam, pela palavra 'Nínive', o que é agora conhecido como 'o triângulo assírio' . . ., que se estende de Corsabade, no norte, até Nimrud, no sul, e, junto com uma cadeia quase contínua de povoados, abrange uma distância de umas vinte e seis milhas [quarenta e dois quilômetros]. . . .

"Felix Jones calculava que a população de Nínive poderia totalizar 174.000 pessoas, e, bem recentemente, em suas escavações em Nimrud, M. E. L. Mallowan descobriu uma estela de Assurnasirpal, em que se acha registrado que ele convidou, para um banquete, o total fabuloso de 69.574 convivas. Mallowan considera que, levando-se em conta os estrangeiros, a população de Calac (Nimrud) poderia ser de 65.000 pessoas. Nínive, porém, tem o dobro da área de Nimrud, e, assim, pode-se reconhecer que o total encontrado em Jonas 4.11 é indiretamente confirmado." — Nineveh and the Old Testament (Nínive e o Velho Testamento), 1955, pp. 85, 86; veja JONAS N.º 1; JONAS, LIVRO DE.

Sua Destruição Cumpre Profecias. Embora se arrependessem, em vista da pregação de Jonas (Mt 12:41; Lu 11:30, 32), os ninivitas recaíram e novamente seguiram seus caminhos iníquos. Foi muitos anos depois de o rei assírio Senaqueribe ter sido assassinado em Nínive, na casa de seu deus, Nisroque (2Rs 19:36, 37; Is 37:37, 38), que Naum (1:1; 2:8–3:19) e Sofonias (2:13-15) predisseram a destruição daquela cidade iníqua. Suas profecias se cumpriram quando as forças conjuntas de Nabopolassar, rei de Babilônia, e de Ciaxares, o medo, sitiaram e capturaram Nínive. A cidade foi evidentemente incendiada, porque muitos dos relevos assírios mostram danos ou manchas causadas por fogo e pela acompanhante fumaça. A Crônica Babilônica que fala sobre a destruição de Nínive relata: "Levaram o grande despojo da cidade e do templo (e) [transformaram] a cidade num montão de ruínas." (Assyrian and Babylonian Chronicles [Crônicas Assírias e Babilônicas], de A. Grayson, 1975, p. 94; FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 958) Até o dia de hoje, Nínive é um lugar desolado, e, na primavera, rebanhos pastam perto ou em cima da elevação de Kunyunjik.

Data da Queda de Nínive. Embora apagada na existente tabuinha cuneiforme que relata a queda de Nínive, a data deste evento, o 14.º ano de Nabopolassar, pode ser fornecida pelo contexto. É também possível situar a destruição de Nínive no esquema da cronologia bíblica. Segundo certa crônica babilônica, os egípcios foram derrotados em Carquemis no 21.º ano do reinado de Nabopolassar. A Bíblia mostra que isto aconteceu no quarto ano do reinado de Jeoiaquim, ou em 625 AEC. (Je 46:2) Portanto, a captura de Nínive (uns sete anos antes), no 14.º ano do reinado de Nabopolassar, cairia no ano 632 AEC. — Veja ASSÍRIA (A queda do império).

NINRA [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "leopardo"]. Cidade ao L do Jordão, construída ou reconstruída pelos gaditas; forma abreviada de Bete-Ninra. — Núm 32:3-5, 34, 36; veja BETE-NINRA.

NINRIM [possivelmente: Leopardos]. Em profecias dirigidas contra Moabe, tanto Isaías como Jeremias mencionam as "águas de Ninrim". (Is 15:5-9; Je 48:34, 35) À base da fertilidade da região circundante, alguns identificam as águas de Ninrim com as do uádi Nimrin, que deságuam no Jordão ao N do Mar Morto. (Veja BETE-NINRA.) A ordem em que se mencionam lugares nas profecias, porém, parece indicar um lugar no S de Moabe. De modo que muitos preferem a identificação com o uádi en-Numeirah, que deságua na extremidade SE do Mar Morto, a uns 17 km ao OSO de Karak. As profecias prediziam que estas águas se tornariam "meras desolações", quer em sentido figurado, por causa da desolação do país, quer talvez por causa do represamento das suas correntes por forças inimigas.

NINRODE. Filho de Cus. (1Cr 1:10) Os escritos rabínicos derivaram o nome Ninrode do verbo hebraico ma·rádh, que significa "rebelar". Assim, o Talmude Babilônico (Erubin 53*a*) declara: "Então, por que foi ele chamado de Ninrode? Porque incitou todo o mundo a se rebelar (himrid) contra a Sua soberania [i.e., a de Deus]." — Encyclopedia of Biblical Interpretation (Enciclopédia de Interpretação Bíblica), de Menahem M. Kasher, Vol. II, 1955, p. 79.

Ninrode foi o fundador e rei do primeiro império a existir depois do Dilúvio. Ele se distinguiu como poderoso caçador "diante de" (em sentido desfavorável; hebr.: lif·néh; "contra" ou "em oposição a"; compare isso com Núm 16:2; 1Cr 14:8; 2Cr 14:10) Jeová. (Gên 10:9 n) Embora, neste caso, alguns peritos atribuam um sentido favorável à preposição hebraica que significa "diante de", os targuns judaicos, os escritos do historiador Josefo e também o contexto do capítulo 10 de Gênesis sugerem que Ninrode era poderoso caçador em desafio a Jeová.

No começo, o reinado de Ninrode incluía as cidades de Babel, Ereque, Acade e Calné, todas na terra de Sinear. (Gên 10:10) Portanto, foi provavelmente sob a sua direção que começou a construção de Babel e da sua torre. Tal conclusão está também de acordo com o conceito judaico tradicional. Josefo escreveu: "Pouco a pouco, [Ninrode] transformou o estado de coisas numa tirania, sustentando que a única maneira de afastar os homens do temor a Deus era fazê-los continuamente dependentes do seu próprio poder. Ele ameaçou vingar-se de Deus, se Este quisesse novamente inundar a terra; porque construiria uma torre mais alta do que poderia ser atingida pela água e vingaria a destruição dos seus antepassados. O povo estava ansioso de seguir este conselho de [Ninrode], achando ser escravidão submeter-se a Deus; de modo que empreenderam construir a torre . . . e ela subiu com rapidez além de todas as expectativas." — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), I, 114, 115 (iv, 2, 3).

Parece que, depois da construção da Torre de Babel, Ninrode estendeu seu domínio ao território da Assíria e construiu ali "Nínive, e Reobote-Ir, e Calá, e Resem, entre Nínive e Calá: esta é a grande cidade". (Gên 10:11, 12; compare isso com Miq 5:6.)

Visto que a Assíria evidentemente derivou seu nome de Assur, filho de Sem, Ninrode, como neto de Cã, deve ter invadido território semita. Assim, parece que Ninrode começou a tornar-se um poderoso, ou herói, não só como caçador de animais, mas também como guerreiro, homem de agressão. (Gên 10:8) A Cyclopædia (Ciclopédia) de M'Clintock e Strong observa: "Que a poderosa caça não se limitava a ir em seu encalço é evidente de sua íntima relação com a edificação de oito cidades. . . . O que Ninrode fez ao sair no encalço [da caça] como caçador era o primeiro indício do que conseguiu como conquistador. Pois a caça e o heroísmo, desde antigamente, estavam associados de modo especial e natural . . . Os monumentos assírios representam também muitas proezas na caça, e a palavra é muitas vezes empregada para indicar uma campanha. . . . A caça e a batalha, que no mesmo país, em tempos posteriores, estavam tão intimamente relacionadas, portanto, podem estar aqui virtualmente associadas ou identificadas. O significado, então, será que Ninrode foi o primeiro, depois do dilúvio, a fundar um reino, a unir os espalhados fragmentos do domínio patriarcal e a consolidá-los sob si próprio como único cabeça e senhor; e tudo isso em desafio a Jeová, pois significava a intrusão violenta do poder camítico em território semítico." — 1894, Vol. VII, p. 109.

A respeito da deificação de Ninrode, veja DEUSES E DEUSAS (Deidades Babilônicas).

NINSI. Pai de Jeosafá (não o rei) e avô de Jeú. (1Rs 19:16; 2Rs 9:2, 14, 20; 2Cr 22:7) O nome foi encontrado inscrito num fragmento de antiga cerâmica, desenterrado em Samaria.

NISÃ. Nome pós-exílico do primeiro mês lunar judaico do calendário sagrado, correspondendo a parte de março e a parte de abril. (Ne 2:1; Est 3:7) Este mês, primeiro chamado "abibe", era originalmente considerado o sétimo mês e evidentemente é o mês mencionado em Gênesis 8:4. Por ocasião do Êxodo do Egito, Jeová designou este mês como "o primeiro dos meses do ano". (Êx 12:2; 13:4; Núm 33:3) Daí em diante, havia uma distinção entre o calendário sagrado instituído por Jeová e o anterior calendário secular. — Veja ABIBE; CALENDÁRIO.

A temperatura era muitas vezes bastante fresca neste mês primaveril, e em Jerusalém acendiam-se fogos à noite para fornecer aquecimento. (Jo 18:18) Tem caído neve em Jerusalém até mesmo em 6 de abril, como aconteceu em 1949. O nisã ocorria aproximadamente no fim da estação chuvosa, e contava-se com as chuvas serôdias, ou de primavera, para o pleno desenvolvimento dos cereais antes da colheita. (De 11:14; Os 6:3; Je 5:24) Nesta época do ano, o rio Jordão normalmente estava na cheia. (Jos 3:15; 1Cr 12:15) A colheita da cevada começava nas planícies costeiras, e embaixo no vale subtropical do Jordão o trigo já amadurecia. (Ru 1:22; 2:23) Por volta desta época, o linho colhido, no terraço de Raabe em Jericó, ofereceu um lugar para os espias israelitas se esconderem. — Jos 2:6; 4:19.

Ajuste do Calendário Lunar. A ordem de Deus exigia que os israelitas oferecessem um molho das primícias da sua colheita no dia 16 de nisã (abibe), e que, no 50.º dia depois disso, apresentassem uma segunda oferta de cereais. Estas ofertas correspondiam, de forma natural, às colheitas de cevada e de trigo, respectivamente. Este preceito tornou essencial um ajuste no calendário de meses lunares usado pelos israelitas. Era necessário compensar a diferença de 11¼ dias entre o pleno ano solar e o ano lunar mais curto. Senão, num espaço de três anos, o mês de nisã ocorreria uns 33 dias mais cedo na estação e muito antes da colheita da cevada. O registro bíblico não especifica que método era originalmente usado pelos israelitas para conseguir tal coordenação, mas a evidência indica que se acrescentava um 13.º mês a cada dois ou três anos para recolocar as estações na sua posição certa no ano calendar. Parece provável que isto era determinado pela simples observação, relacionando a lua nova com o ponto vernal do Sol, ou equinócio da primavera (do hemisfério setentrional), que ocorre por volta de 21 de março de cada ano. Se a lua nova, que normalmente marcaria o começo do mês de nisã (abibe) ficava distante demais do tempo do equinócio da primavera, então o mês era contado como um 13.º mês, ou mês intercalar, e o nisã começava na próxima lua nova. Foi só no quarto século EC que os judeus adotaram um calendário definitivamente padronizado.

A primeira festividade de nisã era a Páscoa, originalmente celebrada no Egito; ela ocorria no dia 14 do mês e incluía o sacrifício do cordeiro pascoal. (Êx 12:2-14; Le 23:5; De 16:1) O dia seguinte era o começo da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, de uma semana de duração, do dia 15 ao dia 21 do mês. Em 16 de nisã, havia a oferta das primícias da colheita da cevada. — Êx 12:15-20; 23:15; 34:18; Le 23:6-11.

Instituída a Refeição Noturna do Senhor. Mais de 15 séculos depois do Êxodo, em 14 de nisã do ano 33 EC, Jesus reuniu-se com os seus 12 apóstolos em Jerusalém, para celebrar a última Páscoa válida, e então, depois de despedir o traiçoeiro Judas, ele passou a instituir a comemoração da sua morte por meio da Ceia ou Refeição Noturna do Senhor. (Mt 26:17-30; 1Co 11:23-25) Antes de passar o 14 de nisã, ele morreu como o Cordeiro de Deus. Em 16 de nisã, o dia em que o sacerdote no templo movia as primícias da colheita da cevada, Jesus, como primícias da ressurreição, foi levantado de novo para a vida. — Lu 23:54–24:7; 1Co 15:20.

Em obediência às instruções de Cristo: "Persisti em fazer isso em memória de mim", o dia 14 de nisã continua a ser observado pelos seus seguidores, até o dia de hoje, como a ocasião para se comemorar a morte de Cristo. — Lu 22:19, 20; veja REFEIÇÃO NOTURNA DO SENHOR.

NISROQUE. Deidade adorada por Senaqueribe, rei da Assíria. Foi no templo de Nisroque que Adrameleque e Sarezer assassinaram seu pai Senaqueribe. (2Rs 19:36, 37; Is 37:38) Diversos peritos sugerem identificar Nisroque com o deus do fogo Nuscu, o qual, conforme se pensava, ajudava a causar a derrota dos inimigos na guerra e servia de mensageiro dos deuses, bem como qual dispensador da justiça. Todavia, não é possível identificar agora Nisroque com alguma conhecida deidade assíria.

NÍVEL. Instrumento usado para nivelar superfícies ou colocá-las em ângulo reto para com o fio do prumo. O "nível" (hebr.: mish·qé·leth ou mish·qó·leth) era empregado por carpinteiros, pedreiros e outros artesãos da antiguidade, para conseguir exatidão horizontal na construção de paredes ou de outras estruturas, ao passo que o prumo era usado para assegurar precisão vertical. Os pedreiros egípcios parecem ter empregado um nível na forma da letra "A", com uma curta linha de prumo suspensa do ápice. Evidentemente, quando a linha pendente coincidia com o marco central na barra horizontal, isto indicava que a superfície sobre a qual se achava estava em nível. As Escrituras, porém, não fornecem nenhuma descrição desses níveis, e mencionam esse instrumento apenas de modo figurado.

O nível pode ser usado para a construção correta dum prédio ou para testar se merece ser preservado. Jeová predisse que aplicaria à refratária Jerusalém "o cordel de medir aplicado a Samaria e também o nível aplicado à casa de Acabe". Deus medira Samaria e a casa do Rei Acabe e achara que eram moralmente ruins e desonestas, o que resultou na destruição delas. Do mesmo modo, Deus julgaria Jerusalém e seus governantes, expondo a iniquidade deles e causando a destruição dessa cidade. Estes eventos ocorreram realmente em 607 AEC. (2Rs 21:10-13; 10:11) Por meio de Isaías, os diversos iníquos fanfarrões e governantes do povo em Jerusalém foram avisados da sua iminente calamidade e da declaração de Jeová: "Eu vou fazer do juízo o cordel de medir e da justiça o nível." As normas do verdadeiro juízo e da genuína justiça revelariam quem era e quem não era realmente servo de Deus, resultando quer na preservação, quer na destruição. — Is 28:14-19.

NÔ, NÔ-AMOM [do egípcio, significando "Cidade de Amom [deus egípcio]"]. Cidade de destaque e antiga capital do Egito, situada em ambas as margens do Nilo superior, a uns 530 km ao S do Cairo. Os gregos conheciam-na como Tebas, nome costumeiramente usado hoje em dia.

No passado, alguns peritos sustentaram que a palavra hebraica "Nô" é uma versão incorreta do nome egípcio. (Je 46:25) Todavia, o Professor T. O. Lambdin salienta que "recentes investigações na fonologia egípcio-cóptica indicam que a grafia hebraica pode muito bem ser correta e pode refletir uma anterior pronúncia egípcia . . . O problema se complica ainda mais com a incerteza dos egiptólogos a respeito da precisa leitura consonantal da própria palavra egípcia." — The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete), editado por G. A. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 4, pp. 615, 616.

Em antigos textos egípcios, a cidade é chamada de "a Cidade de Amom". Isto se dá porque ela se tornou o principal centro da adoração do deus Amom, que ascendeu de deidade menor para a posição de principal deus da nação, igualado pelos gregos a Zeus (Júpiter). (Veja AMOM, II N.º 4.) Ali os faraós construíram enormes monumentos e templos, cobrindo uma extensa área na margem L do Nilo (em Karnak e Lúxor), com outros templos magníficos e uma enorme área de sepulturas na margem O. O templo de Amom em Karnak é considerado a maior estrutura colunar já erigida, sendo que algumas das suas maciças colunas têm cerca de 3,5 m de diâmetro.

Torna-se a Capital do Egito. Especialmente durante o período chamado de "Novo Reino ou Império: Dinastias 18-20", Tebas atingiu grande destaque, tornando-se a capital do país. Ali, a grande distância do mar e da ponte terrestre que dava para a Ásia oferecia boa proteção daquela direção. Pode ser que, por haver no Baixo Egito um governo muito fraco e desacreditado, após o Êxodo dos israelitas, a realeza do Alto Egito se aproveitou da situação e conseguiu ascendência. De qualquer modo, existe evidência de uma considerável reorganização naquela época.

Centro sacerdotal. Mesmo quando o controle administrativo mudou para outros lugares, Nô-Amom (Tebas) continuou a ser uma cidade rica e proeminente, centro do poderoso sacerdócio de Amom, cujo principal sacerdote era o segundo em poder e riqueza depois do próprio Faraó. Mas, no sétimo século AEC, a agressão assíria se estendeu ao Egito, durante o governo do rei assírio Esar-Hadom. Seu filho e sucessor, Assurbanipal, renovou a conquista, chegando a Tebas e saqueando cabalmente a cidade. Foi evidentemente a esta devastação que o profeta Naum se referiu ao advertir Nínive, capital da Assíria, de uma destruição de magnitude similar. (Na 3:7-10) As defesas de Nô-Amom, que se estendiam através da estrada desde a Palestina e até Nilo acima, falharam, e as riquezas de seu tráfico comercial e dos templos religiosos tornaram-se o prêmio dos assírios saqueadores.

Arruinada. No entanto, lá pelo fim do sétimo século ou no começo do sexto século, Nô-Amom havia recuperado uma posição de certo destaque. Jeremias e Ezequiel predisseram um julgamento de Jeová Deus contra o principal deus do Egito, Amom de Nô, e sobre Faraó e todos os deuses egípcios, julgamento que viria pela mão do rei babilônio Nabucodonosor. (Je 46:25, 26; Ez 30:10, 14, 15) O governante persa Cambises aplicou outro golpe severo em Nô-Amom, em 525 AEC, e a cidade passou a declinar, sendo por fim totalmente arruinada pelos romanos sob Caio Cornélio Galo, por causa da sua participação numa revolta contra o domínio romano (30/29 AEC). Hoje existem apenas pequenas aldeias em torno das maciças ruínas dos templos dos impotentes deuses de Nô.

NOA [hebr.: No·ʽáh]. Uma das cinco filhas de Zelofeade, da tribo de Manassés. Visto que Zelofeade morreu sem ter filhos varões, Jeová decretou que as filhas deviam receber por herança a propriedade tribal do pai. Isto estabeleceu um precedente legal. Mais tarde se determinou também que filhas herdeiras deviam tornar-se esposas de homens da sua própria tribo, para reter a herança, a fim de que esta não passasse de tribo em tribo. — Núm 26:28-33; 27:1-11; 36:6-12; Jos 17:3, 4.

NOÁ [duma raiz que significa "descansar; assentar-se"]. Quarto filho alistado de Benjamim. (1Cr 8:1, 2) Visto que ele não é mencionado entre os alistados no capítulo 46 de Gênesis, ele provavelmente nasceu depois de a família ter entrado no Egito. Alguns supõem que Noá era outro nome de Sefufão, ou era seu descendente. — Núm 26:39.

NOADIAS [Jah Manteve Encontro Marcado; Jah Teve Encontro Marcado].

1. Filho de Binui; levita que, no quarto dia depois da chegada de Esdras a Jerusalém, em 468 AEC, ajudou a inventoriar a prata, o ouro e os utensílios do templo. — Esd 8:32, 33.

2. Profetisa que, em 455 AEC, foi destacada por nome como aquela que tentou impedir a reconstrução das muralhas de Jerusalém por procurar amedrontar Neemias. — Ne 6:14.

NOBA.

1. [duma raiz verbal que significa "latir; ladrar"]. Israelita, provavelmente da tribo de Manassés, que capturou Quenate e suas aldeias dependentes. Deu depois à cidade seu próprio nome. — Núm 32:42.

2. Uma cidade ao L do Jordão, capturada por Noba. (Núm 32:39, 42) Evidentemente, o nome Noba não perdurou, porque mais tarde ela é chamada pelo seu nome original, Quenate. (1Cr 2:23) As ruínas de Qanawat, a uns 90 km ao SSE de Damasco, costumam ser identificadas com o lugar antigo.

3. Um lugar ao E do Jordão e perto de Jogbeá, em Gade. (Núm 32:34, 35; Jz 8:11) Desconhece-se hoje sua localização exata.

NOBE. Cidade evidentemente situada no território de Benjamim e perto de Jerusalém. Embora haja alguma dúvida sobre a localização exata de Nobe, Neemias 11:31, 32, e Isaías 10:28-32 indicam que ficava perto de Anatote e possivelmente vizinha a um morro do qual se podia ver Jerusalém. Alguns a identificam provisoriamente com um lugar em Ras el Mushraf (monte Scopus), a cerca de 1,5 km ao NE do monte do Templo em Jerusalém. Isto a situaria logo ao N do monte das Oliveiras.

Quando Davi fugia de diante de Saul, ele se dirigiu ao sumo sacerdote Aimeleque, que estava em Nobe, "a cidade dos sacerdotes", e recebeu de Aimeleque alguns pães da proposição como alimento para os seus homens, e a espada de Golias, que era guardada ali. Talvez o tabernáculo tivesse sido mudado para Nobe, quando Silo sofreu o julgamento adverso de Deus. (Veja 1Sa 14:3; Sal 78:60; Je 7:12-14.) Mais tarde Saul acusou Aimeleque de conspiração, por ter dado ajuda a Davi. À ordem de Saul, Doegue, o edomita, matou o sumo sacerdote e mais 84 sacerdotes. Daí, Doegue matou os homens, as mulheres, as crianças e os animais de Nobe. Somente Abiatar, filho de Aimeleque, escapou. — 1Sa 21:1-9; 22:6-23.

Nobe era um dos lugares mencionados com relação ao avanço dos assírios contra Jerusalém. (Is 10:24, 32) Ela foi repovoada por benjamitas após o retorno do exílio babilônico. — Ne 11:31, 32.

NOBRE. Veja LÍDER, NOBRE, PRÍNCIPE.

NODABE. Um dos grupos confederados, esmagadoramente derrotados, com a ajuda de Jeová, pelas tribos de Rubem e Gade, e a meia tribo de Manassés. (1Cr 5:18-22) Nada mais se sabe desta tribo, exceto a possível preservação do nome dela no da aldeia de Nudebe, no deserto ao L da Palestina.

NOÉ [Hebr.: Nó·ahh, provavelmente: Descanso; Consolo]. Filho de Lameque e décimo na linhagem de Adão através de Sete; nascido em 2970 AEC, 126 anos depois da morte de Adão. Quando seu pai Lameque deu nome a Noé, ele disse: "Este nos trará consolo do nosso trabalho e da dor das nossas mãos, que resulta do solo que Jeová amaldiçoou." — Gên 5:28-31.

Sem Defeito Entre os Seus Contemporâneos. O mundo em que Noé vivia havia degenerado. Durante este período, anjos que abandonaram sua posição e moradia original, correta, se tinham casado com mulheres e tinham produzido filhos, "homens de fama", provocando a violência que enchia a terra (Gên 6:1-4; Ju 6), até "que toda inclinação dos pensamentos do seu coração [i.e., do homem] era só má, todo o tempo", e a terra veio a estar "arruinada, porque toda a carne havia arruinado seu caminho na terra". (Gên 6:5, 11, 12) Mas, Noé evitou esta corrupção e é descrito pela Palavra de Deus como "homem justo. Mostrou-se sem defeito entre os seus contemporâneos. Noé andou com o verdadeiro Deus". (Gên 6:8, 9) Noé podia ser chamado de "sem defeito" porque, dessemelhante daquele mundo ímpio, ele estava plenamente à altura do que Deus requeria dele. — Compare isso com Gên 6:22; veja PERFEIÇÃO.

Jeová se Propôs Destruir Aquele Mundo. Jeová fixou um limite de tempo para a existência daquele mundo ímpio, dizendo: "Meu espírito não há de agir por tempo indefinido para com o homem, porquanto ele é carne. Concordemente, seus dias hão de somar cento e vinte anos." (Gên 6:3) Este era um decreto judicial divino. Cerca de 20 anos depois, nasceu o primeiro filho de Noé (provavelmente Jafé; 2470 AEC), e o registro mostra que outro filho, Sem, nasceu dois anos mais tarde. Não se declara quando Cã nasceu, mas estes três filhos já eram adultos e casados quando se deu a Noé a instrução divina de construir uma arca. Por conseguinte, restavam antes do Dilúvio provavelmente apenas 40 ou 50 anos. (Gên 6:13-18) Então, introduzido num pacto com Jeová (Gên 6:18) e ajudado pela família, Noé passou a trabalhar como construtor e como "pregador da justiça", avisando aquela geração iníqua da impendente destruição. — 2Pe 2:5.

Preservação Através do Dilúvio. As pessoas não criam que Deus agisse para destruir um mundo de iniquidade. Portanto, foi por Noé ter forte fé que ele, em implícita obediência, fez "segundo tudo o que Deus lhe mandara. Fez exatamente assim". (Gên 6:22) Foi por causa da sua inabalável fé em Jeová que o escritor cristão do livro de Hebreus o incluiu naquela "tão grande nuvem de testemunhas". Ele escreveu: "Pela fé Noé, depois de receber aviso divino de coisas ainda não observadas, mostrou temor piedoso e construiu uma arca para a salvação de sua família, e, por intermédio desta fé, ele condenou o mundo e tornou-se herdeiro da justiça que é segundo a fé." — He 11:7; 12:1.

Sete dias antes de as águas do Dilúvio começarem a cair, Jeová mandou que Noé ajuntasse os animais na arca. No sétimo dia daquela semana, "Noé entrou assim na arca, e com ele seus filhos e sua esposa, e as esposas de seus filhos, antes de virem as águas do dilúvio. . . . Depois Jeová fechou a porta atrás dele". Naquele mesmo dia, "chegou o dilúvio e destruiu a todos". — Gên 7:1-16; Lu 17:27.

Com os ocupantes da arca preservou-se o fio da vida humana e animal. Sobreviveu também a adoração verdadeira, e, por meio de Noé e sua família, Deus levou avante a história da criação, junto com um sistema de contagem do tempo remontando à criação do homem, e a língua original (mais tarde chamada de hebraica). Noé manteve um registro exato dos eventos importantes durante a sua estada na arca. — Gên 7:11, 12, 24; 8:2-6, 10, 12-14.

Bênçãos Pós-Diluvianas e Pacto do Arco-Íris. Após cerca de um ano na arca, Noé e sua família saíram para uma terra recém-lavada. A arca viera a pousar nos montes da cordilheira do Ararate. Em apreço pela benevolência, misericórdia e mão protetora de Jeová, Noé construiu um altar e ofertou "alguns de todos os animais limpos, e de todas as criaturas voadoras limpas" como sacrifício a Jeová. Jeová agradou-se disso e revelou a Noé que a terra não mais seria amaldiçoada, nem infligiria Deus um golpe em tudo assim como havia feito. Sempre haveria "sementeira e colheita, e frio e calor, e verão e inverno, e dia e noite". — Gên 8:18-22.

Jeová abençoou os sobreviventes do Dilúvio, ordenando-lhes: "Sede fecundos e tornai-vos muitos, e enchei a terra." Daí, ele estabeleceu novos decretos para o bem-estar deles: (1) Permitiu-lhes bondosamente acrescentar a carne de animais à sua alimentação; (2) mas, visto que a alma está no sangue, não se devia consumir o sangue; (3) instituiu-se a pena capital aplicada por autoridade devidamente constituída. Essas leis eram obrigatórias para toda a humanidade, descendente dos três filhos de Noé. — Gên 1:28; 9:1-7; 10:32.

Depois de estabelecer esses decretos, Jeová passou a dizer: "E quanto a mim, eis que estabeleço o meu pacto convosco e com a vossa descendência depois de vós, e com toda alma vivente que está convosco, dentre as aves, dentre os animais e dentre todas as criaturas viventes da terra convosco . . . Sim, deveras estabeleço o meu pacto convosco: Não mais será toda a carne decepada pelas águas dum dilúvio e não mais virá a haver dilúvio para arruinar a terra." O arco-íris até hoje continua como "sinal", ou lembrete, deste pacto. — Gên 9:8-17; Is 54:9.

Embriaguez de Noé. Noé viveu 350 anos depois do Dilúvio. O relato narra, de forma cândida e honesta: "Então, Noé principiou como lavrador e passou a plantar um vinhedo. E começou a beber do vinho e ficou embriagado, e deste modo se descobriu no meio da sua tenda." (Gên 9:20, 21) Isto não indica que Noé era um beberrão habitual. A Bíblia relata este caso para fornecer o fundo histórico para o incidente que se seguiu, evento este que teve profundo efeito sobre a história do mundo. Antes do Dilúvio, Noé não participava no 'beber' dos daquela sociedade iníqua, os quais, sem dúvida, levavam ao extremo suas bebedeiras. Essas coisas embotavam-lhes a sensibilidade, e, sem dúvida, eram um fator em desconsiderarem o aviso de Deus, não fazendo caso, "até que veio o dilúvio e os varreu a todos". — Mt 24:38, 39; Lu 17:27.

Enquanto Noé dormia na sua tenda, Cã, e talvez também seu filho Canaã, ficaram envolvidos em alguma espécie de desrespeito para com Noé. O relato reza: "Por fim, Noé acordou do seu vinho e soube o que lhe havia feito seu filho mais moço." Em geral, entende-se ser Cã chamado aqui o "filho mais moço" de Noé. Todavia, na Bíblia, a expressão se refere às vezes ao neto, que neste caso era Canaã. Qualquer que tenha sido a situação, Cã, pai de Canaã, foi contar isso aos seus dois irmãos, em vez de ele mesmo cobrir Noé, assim como esses fizeram. Noé, quando soube deste episódio, amaldiçoou Canaã e bendisse o Deus de Sem, Jeová. — Gên 9:20-27.

A Rebelião de Ninrode. Noé foi o primeiro patriarca da sociedade pós-diluviana. (Gên 10:1-32) No entanto, enquanto ainda vivia, surgiu novamente a religião falsa entre aqueles que estavam sob a liderança de Ninrode, conforme se vê na tentativa rebelde deles de construir "uma torre com o seu topo nos céus", para não serem espalhados "por toda a superfície da terra". Isto era diametralmente oposto à ordem de Deus, de 'encher a terra', e era também uma rebelião contra a posição de Noé como profeta de Deus. Noé faleceu cerca de dois anos antes do nascimento de Abraão. Portanto, ele chegou a ver o julgamento de Jeová contra os construtores da Torre de Babel e o espalhamento daqueles rebeldes sobre a superfície da terra. Noé e Sem não estavam envolvidos na construção da torre, e, consequentemente, não sofreram a confusão da sua língua, mas continuaram a falar a língua original do homem, que Deus dera a Adão. — Gên 9:1, 28, 29; 11:1-9.

Modelo Profético. Os profetas Isaías, Ezequiel e Jesus Cristo, bem como os apóstolos Pedro e Paulo, falaram a respeito de Noé, servo de Deus. Jesus e Pedro mostraram que os dias de Noé eram proféticos da "presença do Filho do homem" e dum futuro "dia do julgamento e da destruição dos homens ímpios". Jeová, ao poupar Noé e sua família quando destruiu aquele mundo iníquo, estava "estabelecendo para as pessoas ímpias um modelo das coisas que hão de vir". — 2Pe 3:5-7; 2:5, 6; Is 54:9; Ez 14:14, 20; Mt 24:37-39; He 11:7; 1Pe 3:20, 21.

NOEMI [Minha Agradabilidade]. Sogra de Rute, que foi antepassada de Davi e de Jesus Cristo. — Mt 1:5.

Noemi era esposa de Elimeleque, efratita de Belém de Judá, nos dias dos juízes. Durante uma severa fome, ela, seu marido e seus dois filhos, Malom e Quiliom, mudaram-se para Moabe. Elimeleque faleceu ali. Os filhos casaram-se então com as moabitas Rute e Orpa, mas, cerca de dez anos depois, eles morreram sem deixar filhos. — Ru 1:1-5.

A enviuvada Noemi decidiu retornar a Judá. Suas duas noras enviuvadas começaram a acompanhá-la, mas Noemi recomendou que voltassem e se casassem na sua própria terra, porque Noemi já ficara "velha demais para vir a pertencer a um esposo" e não lhes podia dar filhos como maridos. Orpa retornou, mas Rute se apegou a Noemi, por amor a Noemi e ao Deus dela, Jeová. — Ru 1:6-17.

Ao chegar a Belém, Noemi disse às mulheres que a cumprimentaram: "Não me chameis Noemi [Minha Agradabilidade]. Chamai-me Mara [Amarga], pois o Todo-Poderoso o fez muito amargo para mim." (Ru 1:18-21) Visto que era a época da colheita da cevada, Rute foi amorosamente trabalhar na respiga para o sustento de Noemi e de si mesma, e, por acaso, foi parar no campo de Boaz. (Ru 2:1-18) Quando ela contou a Noemi no campo de quem trabalhava, Noemi reconheceu nisso a mão de Jeová, visto que Boaz era um parente próximo de Elimeleque, e, portanto, um dos resgatadores delas. Ela incentivou Rute a trazer este fato à atenção de Boaz. (Ru 2:19–3:18) Boaz agiu prontamente, seguindo o costumeiro procedimento legal no resgate da propriedade de Elimeleque das mãos de Noemi. Rute tornou-se então esposa de Boaz a favor de Noemi, segundo a lei do levirato, ou casamento de cunhado. Quando lhes nasceu um filho, as vizinhas deram-lhe o nome de Obede, dizendo: "À Noemi nasceu um filho." Obede tornou-se assim herdeiro legal da casa de Elimeleque, de Judá. — Ru 4:1-22.

NOFÁ. Segundo o texto massorético, parece ter sido um lugar em Moabe. (Núm 21:29, 30) Desconhece-se hoje tal lugar.

NOFE. O usual nome nas Escrituras Hebraicas para Mênfis, importante cidade do antigo Egito. — Is 19:13; Je 2:16; 44:1; 46:14, 19; Ez 30:13, 16; veja MÊNFIS.

NOGÁ [duma raiz que significa "brilhar"]. Filho do Rei Davi, que lhe nasceu em Jerusalém. — 1Cr 3:5-7; 14:3-6.

NOGUEIRAS [hebr.: 'eghóhz]. A donzela sulamita, em O Cântico de Salomão (6:11), fala de descer "ao jardim das nogueiras". As nogueiras mencionadas aqui podem bem ter sido a nogueira-europeia (Juglans regia). Esta árvore é nativa do sudeste da Europa e do oeste da Ásia, e é atualmente cultivada na Galileia, e nas encostas do Líbano e do monte Hermom. Josefo, o historiador judeu, fala de ela crescer em abundância na região do mar da Galileia, no primeiro século EC. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], III, 516, 517 [x, 8]) A nogueira é uma árvore bonita, atingindo até 9 m de altura, tendo folhas fragrantes que fornecem uma excelente sombra. A madeira tem grão compacto e é prezada pelos marceneiros por sua beleza. O fruto da nogueira é envolto numa casca que contém ácido tânico, e, quando fervido, produz um corante marrom forte. As nozes são altamente apreciadas pelo seu rico sabor e são prensadas para produzir um óleo de qualidade quase igual à do azeite de oliva.

NOITE. O período de escuridão entre o pôr do sol e o alvorecer foi chamado por Jeová Deus de "Noite". (Gên 1:5, 14) Entre o pôr do sol e a própria escuridão há um curto período de crepúsculo vespertino, quando as estrelas se tornam visíveis. Os hebreus chamavam este período de né·shef, e, evidentemente, é a este período que se refere a expressão "entre as duas noitinhas", encontrada em Êxodo 12:6. (Pr 7:9) De modo similar, no fim da escuridão da noite, há um crepúsculo matutino que leva à alvorada, e isto era expresso pela mesma palavra hebraica. Assim, o escritor diz no Salmo 119:147: "Levantei-me cedo no crepúsculo matutino."

Divisão Hebraica. Os hebreus dividiam a noite em vigílias. "Quando me lembro de ti no meu leito de repouso, medito em ti durante as vigílias da noite." (Sal 63:6) Visto que Juízes 7:19 fala duma "vigília média da noite", parece evidente que havia três delas nos tempos primitivos. Pelo visto, cada vigília abrangia um terço do tempo entre o pôr do sol e a alvorada, ou cerca de quatro horas cada uma, dependendo da época do ano. A primeira vigília se estendia assim das 18 às 22 horas. A "vigília média da noite" começava por volta das 22 horas e se estendia até cerca das 2 horas da madrugada. Esta foi a hora estratégica para Gideão fazer o ataque de surpresa ao acampamento midianita. A terceira vigília era chamada de "vigília da madrugada", que se estendia de cerca das 2 horas da madrugada até o nascer do sol. Foi durante esta vigília da madrugada que Jeová fez com que os exércitos egípcios, perseguidores, passassem a ter sérias dificuldades na sua tentativa de travessia do Mar Vermelho. — Êx 14:24-28; veja também 1Sa 11:11.

Divisão Romana. Pelo menos na época do domínio romano, os judeus adotaram a prática grega e romana de quatro vigílias noturnas. Jesus, evidentemente, referiu-se a estas quatro divisões quando disse: "Portanto, mantende-vos vigilantes, pois não sabeis quando vem o senhor da casa, quer tarde no dia, quer à meia-noite, quer ao canto do galo, quer cedo de manhã." (Mr 13:35) A vigília "tarde no dia" ia do pôr do sol até cerca das 21 horas. A segunda vigília, chamada de "meia-noite", começava por volta das 21 horas e terminava à meia-noite. (Lu 12:38) O "canto do galo" se estendia da meia-noite até por volta das 3 horas da manhã. Foi provavelmente durante este tempo que se deu o canto do galo mencionado em Marcos 14:30. (Veja GALO, CANTO DO.) Finalmente, das 3 da manhã até o nascer do sol era a quarta vigília, "cedo de manhã". — Mt 14:25; Mr 6:48.

Numa ocasião se faz menção duma hora específica das 12 horas que constituem o período noturno. Atos 23:23 diz que foi na "terceira hora", ou por volta das 21 horas, que o comandante militar ordenou que as tropas levassem Paulo de Jerusalém em caminho para Cesareia.

Ao passo que os judeus iniciavam o novo dia ao pôr do sol, segundo o costume romano a meia-noite era o ponto fixado para o fim e o começo do dia. Isto evitava o problema resultante do prolongamento e da abreviação das horas da luz do dia por causa das estações (como ocorria quando o dia começava ao pôr do sol), e permitia a divisão do dia em dois períodos iguais de 12 horas o ano inteiro. Este é o costume seguido hoje na maioria das nações.

Uso Figurado. A palavra "noite" é às vezes usada em sentido figurado, ou simbólico, na Bíblia. Em João 9:4, Jesus falou da vinda da "noite em que nenhum homem pode trabalhar". Jesus referiu-se ali ao tempo de ele ser julgado, pregado na estaca e morto, quando estaria impedido de se empenhar nas obras de seu pai. — Veja Ec 9:10; Jó 10:21, 22.

Em Romanos 13:11, 12, é evidente que "a noite" se refere a um período de escuridão causado pelo

Adversário de Deus, que há de ser eliminado por Cristo Jesus e seu reinado. (Veja Ef 6:12, 13; Col 1:13, 14.) Em 1 Tessalonicenses 5:1-11, os servos de Deus, que foram esclarecidos pela verdade, são contrastados com as pessoas do mundo que não o foram. Seu modo de vida manifesta que são "filhos da luz e filhos do dia. Não [pertencem] nem à noite nem à escuridão". (Veja Jo 8:12; 12:36, 46; 1Pe 2:9; 2Co 6:14.) Uma mensagem similar é encontrada em Miqueias 3:6, onde o profeta diz aos que rejeitam a verdadeira orientação divina: "Portanto, vós tereis noite, de modo que não haverá visão; e tereis escuridão, para que não se pratique a adivinhação. E o sol há de se pôr sobre os profetas e o dia terá de escurecer-se sobre eles." — Veja Jo 3:19-21.

A noite, em geral, é também usada para representar um tempo de adversidade, visto que ela, com suas trevas e escuridão, é a hora em que os animais selvagens perambulam, em que exércitos lançam ataques de surpresa, em que ladrões penetram furtivamente e em que se cometem outros atos maldosos. (Sal 91:5, 6; 104:20, 21; Is 21:4, 8, 9; Da 5:25-31; Ob 5) É nestes diferentes sentidos figurados que temos de entender os textos de Revelação (Apocalipse) 21:2, 25, e 22:5, onde se nos assegura que na "Nova Jerusalém" "tampouco haverá mais noite".

NOITIBÓ. Veja CORUJA (MOCHO).

NOIVA, PREÇO DA. Veja CASAMENTO.

NOIVADO. Promessa mútua de um futuro casamento. Entre os hebreus, as negociações envolvidas usualmente dependiam dos pais do casal, especialmente dos dois pais. (Gên 24:1-4; 38:6; 21:21) Muitas vezes tomavam-se em consideração os desejos do jovem. (Jz 14:2) No caso das moças que herdavam propriedade ancestral por o pai ter falecido sem ter filhos varões, elas podiam tornar-se esposa de quem quisessem, desde que se casassem dentro da sua tribo. (Núm 36:6) No caso de Isaque, foi realmente Jeová quem escolheu sua noiva. (Gên 24:50, 51) A escolha da noiva e o pedido de casamento, usualmente feito pelos pais ou só pelo pai do noivo, eram seguidos pelos esponsais, ou noivado. Este era um procedimento formal, tratado pelos pais da noiva e frequentemente por um amigo ou representante legal do noivo. — Gên 24:1-4; Jo 3:29.

Uma característica destacada do noivado era o mó·har, o preço da noiva. Este termo mó·har ocorre três vezes na Bíblia. (Gên 34:12; Êx 22:16, 17; 1Sa 18:25) O preço da noiva era usualmente pago aos pais. No caso de Rebeca, o servo de Abraão deu "coisas seletas" à mãe e ao irmão dela, Labão, que tomou a dianteira em fazer os arranjos. (Gên 24:53) O mó·har podia ser também em forma de serviço prestado. (Gên 29:15-30; Jos 15:16) Êxodo 22:16, 17, mostra que o mó·har era pago ao pai duma moça seduzida como indenização pela ofensa cometida, mesmo que o pai se negasse a dá-la em casamento. Ocasionalmente, a noiva recebia um presente do pai como "presente de despedida", e, às vezes, como no caso de Rebeca, davam-se presentes à noiva por ocasião do noivado. — 1Rs 9:16; Jos 15:17-19; Gên 24:53.

Os hebreus consideravam o casal de noivos como comprometidos e como já casados, embora só coabitassem depois de se completarem as formalidades do casamento. — Gên 19:8, 14; Jz 14:15, 16, 20.

Entre os judeus, o noivado era considerado como tão obrigatório que, caso o casamento não se realizasse por uma mudança de ideia da parte do noivo, ou por um motivo justificado, a moça não podia casar-se com outro até ela ser liberta pelo devido processo jurídico, isto é, por um certificado de divórcio. (Mt 1:19) Se a noiva cometesse fornicação com outro homem enquanto estava comprometida, ela era julgada adúltera e sentenciada à morte. (De 22:23, 24) Mesmo que um homem tivesse relações sexuais com uma escrava destinada a outro homem, mas ainda não remida, ou liberta, ambos eram culpados e eram punidos. Todavia, não eram mortos porque ela não fora ainda liberta. — Le 19:20-22.

O noivo estava eximido do serviço militar. — De 20:7.

Quanto à idade para o noivado, a Bíblia não declara nenhumas restrições. Nos países do Oriente Médio, hoje em dia, o casamento frequentemente ocorre depois de a noiva atingir a idade de 16 anos e às vezes ainda com menos idade. Os talmudistas proibiam o casamento no caso do homem de menos de 13 anos e um dia de idade, e, no caso da moça, de menos de 12 anos e um dia.

Em geral não havia um prolongado período de anos entre o noivado e o casamento, embora pudesse haver ocasiões em que o intervalo era necessário para que o noivo pudesse pagar o preço estipulado ou prestar os serviços desejados. No caso de Jacó, o período de noivado foi de sete anos, durante os quais ele serviu por Raquel, mas recebeu Leia. Daí, esperou mais uma semana antes de receber Raquel, embora continuasse a servir Labão por mais sete anos por ela. — Gên 29:20-28.

O cristão deve considerar sua palavra de promessa como obrigatória, e, no caso dum noivado, ele deve seguir o princípio expresso por Cristo: "Deixai simplesmente que a vossa palavra Sim signifique Sim, e o vosso Não, Não; pois tudo o que for além disso é do iníquo" (Mt 5:37), e por Tiago: "Mas, o vosso sim signifique sim e o vosso não, não, para que não caiais sob o julgamento." — Tg 5:12.

A Noiva de Cristo. Jesus Cristo tem uma noiva, a congregação cristã, que é seu corpo. (Ef 1:22, 23) Em Pentecostes de 33 EC, os primeiros membros da "noiva" receberam o espírito santo com seu milagroso dom de línguas. Isto era similar aos presentes de noivado, constituindo para a noiva espiritual de Cristo um "penhor antecipado da [sua] herança, com o propósito de livrar por meio dum resgate a propriedade do próprio Deus, para o seu glorioso louvor". (Ef 1:13, 14) O apóstolo Paulo falou daqueles aos quais havia apresentado a verdade sobre Cristo e que se haviam tornado cristãos como prometidos em casamento, e exortou-os a permanecerem puros como virgem casta de Cristo. (2Co 11:2, 3) Esses prometidos em noivado a Cristo, enquanto na terra, são considerados comprometidos e são convidados à refeição noturna do casamento do Cordeiro. — Re 19:9.

NOME. Palavra ou frase que constitui uma designação distintiva de pessoa, lugar, animal, planta ou outro objeto. "Nome" pode significar a reputação da pessoa ou a própria pessoa.

"Toda família no céu e na terra deve o seu nome" a Jeová Deus. (Ef 3:14, 15) Este estabeleceu a primeira família humana e permitiu que Adão e Eva tivessem filhos. Portanto, as linhagens de descendência terrestre lhe devem seu nome. Ele é também o Pai da sua família celestial. E assim como ele chama por nome todas as incontáveis estrelas (Sal 147:4), ele sem dúvida deu nomes aos anjos. — Jz 13:18.

Um exemplo interessante de como se deu nome a algo totalmente novo envolve a provisão milagrosa do maná. Quando os israelitas o viram pela primeira vez, exclamaram: "Que é isto?" (man hu'?) (Êx 16:15) Pelo visto é por isso que o chamaram de "maná", que provavelmente significa: "Que é isto?" — Êx 16:31.

As opiniões dos peritos variam sobre a origem de certos nomes, das suas raízes componentes e do seu significado. Por estes motivos, os significados apresentados para os nomes bíblicos diferem de uma obra de referência para outra. Nesta publicação, a autoridade primária para se determinar o significado de nomes é a própria Bíblia. Um exemplo é o significado do nome Babel. Em Gênesis 11:9, Moisés escreveu: "É por isso que foi chamada pelo nome de Babel, porque Jeová confundiu ali o idioma de toda a terra." Moisés relacionou aqui "Babel" com o verbo radical ba·lál (confundir), indicando assim que "Babel" significa "Confusão".

Os nomes bíblicos, de forma variada, consistem ou em um só elemento, ou em frase ou sentença; os que têm mais de uma sílaba frequentemente têm formas abreviadas. Quando a Bíblia não declara especificamente a origem de um nome, fez-se empenho de determinar sua raiz ou seus elementos componentes pelo uso de dicionários modernos, respeitados. O dicionário usado para a determinação das raízes dos nomes hebraicos e aramaicos se chama Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros (Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento; de L. Koehler e W. Baumgartner, Leiden, 1958), com a sua parcialmente completada revisão. Para os nomes gregos, consultou-se como dicionário principal a nona edição de A Greek-English Lexicon (Léxico Grego-Inglês; de H. G. Liddell e R. Scott, e revisado por H. S. Jones, Oxford, 1969). As traduções encontradas na Tradução do Novo Mundo das Escrituras Sagradas foram então usadas para atribuir sentidos a essas raízes. Por exemplo, o nome Elnatã compõe-se das raízes 'El (Deus) e na·thán (dar), significando assim "Deus Deu". — Veja Gên 28:4, onde na·thán é traduzido por "deu".

Nomes de Animais e de Plantas. Jeová Deus concedeu ao primeiro homem Adão o privilégio de dar nome às criaturas inferiores. (Gên 2:19) Sem dúvida, os nomes dados eram descritivos. Isto é sugerido por alguns dos nomes hebraicos de animais e mesmo de plantas. Uma palavra hebraica para "jumento" (hhamóhr) evidentemente deriva duma raiz que significa "ficar avermelhado", referindo-se à cor usual do animal. O nome hebraico da rola (tohr ou tor) evidentemente imita o arrulho lamentoso desta ave: "tur-r-r tur-r-r". "Aquele que desperta" designa a amendoeira, pelo visto por ser uma das primeiras árvores a florescer.

Nomes de Lugares e Aspectos Topográficos. Às vezes, homens deram a lugares seu próprio nome, o de seus descendentes ou de seus antepassados. O assassino Caim construiu uma cidade e lhe deu o nome de seu filho Enoque. (Gên 4:17) Noba começou a chamar a cidade conquistada de Quenate segundo o seu próprio nome. (Núm 32:42) Os danitas, depois de capturarem Lesem, chamaram a cidade de Dã, que era o nome de seu antepassado. — Jos 19:47; veja também De 3:14.

Como no caso de altares (Êx 17:14-16), poços (Gên 26:19-22) e fontes (Jz 15:19), os lugares frequentemente receberam nomes à base dos eventos que ocorreram ali. Exemplos disso são Babel (Gên 11:9), Jeová-Jiré (Gên 22:13, 14), Berseba (Gên 26:28-33), Betel (Gên 28:10-19), Galeede (Gên 31:44-47), Sucote (Gên 33:17), Abel-Mizraim (Gên 50:11), Massá, Meribá (Êx 17:7), Taberá (Núm 11:3), Quibrote-Ataavá (Núm 11:34), Hormá (Núm 21:3), Gilgal (Jos 5:9), a Baixada de Acor (Jos 7:26) e Baal-Perazim (2Sa 5:20).

Houve casos em que os aspectos físicos forneceram a base para o nome de lugares, de montes e de rios. As cidades de Geba e Gibeá (que ambos significam "Morro; Colina"), sem dúvida, receberam seu nome por ocuparem morros. Líbano (que significa "Branca [Montanha]") talvez recebesse seu nome da cor clara dos seus penhascos e picos calcários, ou de estarem suas encostas superiores cobertas de neve na maior parte do ano. Aldeias e cidades, por se encontrarem perto de poços, fontes e cursos de água, frequentemente recebiam nomes prefixados por "en" (fonte, ou: nascente), "ber" (poço) e "abel" (curso de água).

Outros nomes foram derivados de características tais como tamanho, ocupação e produtos. Exemplos disso são Belém (que significa "Casa de Pão"), Betsaida (Casa do Caçador (ou: do Pescador)), Gate (Lagar de Vinho) e Bezer (Lugar Inacessível).

Lugares receberam também o nome de animais e de plantas, muitos deles aparecendo em forma composta. Entre estes havia Aijalom (que significa "Lugar da Corça; Lugar do Veado"), En-Gedi (Fonte (Nascente) do Cabritinho), En-Eglaim (Fonte (Manancial) de Dois Bezerros), Acrabim (Escorpiões), Baal-Tamar (Dono da Palmeira) e En-Tapua (Fonte (Manancial) da Maçã (Macieira)).

"Bete" (que significa "casa"), "baal" (dono; amo) e "quiriate" (cidade) frequentemente constituíam a parte inicial de nomes compostos.

Nomes de Pessoas. No período inicial da história bíblica, davam-se nomes às crianças quando nasciam. Mais tarde, porém, os meninos hebreus recebiam nome por ocasião da circuncisão, no oitavo dia. (Lu 1:59; 2:21) Usualmente, quer o pai quer a mãe dava o nome à criança. (Gên 4:25; 5:29; 16:15; 19:37, 38; 29:32) Uma exceção notável, porém, foi o filho nascido a Boaz e Rute. As vizinhas de Noemi, sogra de Rute, chamaram o menino de Obede (que significa "Servo; Servidor"). (Ru 4:13-17) Havia também ocasiões em que os pais recebiam orientação divina sobre o nome a ser dado aos filhos. Entre os que receberam seu nome assim estavam Ismael (Deus Ouve (Escuta)) (Gên 16:11), Isaque (Riso) (Gên 17:19), Salomão (duma raiz que significa "paz") (1Cr 22:9) e João (o equivalente português de Jeoanã, que significa "Jeová Mostrou Favor; Jeová Foi Clemente") (Lu 1:13).

Especialmente os nomes dados sob orientação divina com frequência tinham significado profético. O nome do filho de Isaías, Maer-Salal-Hás-Baz (que significa "Apressa-te, ó Despojo! Ele Veio Depressa à Pilhagem; ou: Apressando-se ao Despojo, Ele Veio Depressa à Pilhagem"), mostrava que o rei da Assíria subjugaria Damasco e Samaria. (Is 8:3, 4) O nome do filho de Oseias, Jezreel (Deus Semeará), apontava para um futuro ajuste de contas com a casa de Jeú. (Os 1:4) Os nomes de mais dois filhos dados à luz pela esposa de Oseias, Lo-Ruama ([Com Ela] Não se Teve Misericórdia) e Lo-Ami (Não Meu Povo), indicavam que Jeová rejeitou Israel. (Os 1:6-10) No caso do Filho de Deus, o nome Jesus (Jeová É Salvação) era profético do seu papel como Salvador designado por Jeová, ou seu meio de salvação. — Mt 1:21; Lu 2:30.

O nome dado a um filho muitas vezes refletia as circunstâncias associadas com o seu nascimento, ou os sentimentos do pai ou da mãe. (Gên 29:32–30:13, 17-20, 22-24; 35:18; 41:51, 52; Êx 2:22; 1Sa 1:20; 4:20-22) Eva chamou seu primogênito de Caim (que significa "Algo Produzido"), pois, conforme ela disse: "Produzi um homem com o auxílio de Jeová." (Gên 4:1) Eva deu ao filho que lhe nasceu depois do assassinato de Abel, por considerá-lo substituto dele, o nome de Sete (Designado; Posto; Colocado). (Gên 4:25) Isaque chamou o mais novo dos seus gêmeos de Jacó (Agarrador do Calcanhar; Suplantador), porque, ao nascer, este menino segurava o calcanhar de Esaú, seu irmão. — Gên 25:26; veja o caso de Peres, em Gên 38:28, 29.

Às vezes, a aparência do bebê ao nascer fornecia a base para o seu nome. O primogênito de Isaque foi chamado de Esaú (que significa "Peludo") por causa da sua incomum aparência peluda ao nascer. — Gên 25:25.

Nomes dados aos filhos muitas vezes eram combinados com El (que significa "Deus") ou com uma abreviatura do nome divino, Jeová. Esses nomes podiam expressar a esperança dos pais, refletir seu apreço por terem sido abençoados com um descendente, ou seu reconhecimento a Deus. Exemplos disso são Jedeías (possivelmente: Que Jeová Se Sinta Alegre), Elnatã (Deus Deu), Jeberequias (Jeová Abençoa), Jonatã (Jeová Deu), Jeozabade (provavelmente: Jeová Dotou), Eldade (possivelmente: Deus Amou), Abdiel (Servo de Deus), Daniel (Meu Juiz É Deus), Jeozadaque (provavelmente: Jeová Declara Justo) e Pelatias (Jeová Proveu Escape [Fuga]).

"Ab" (que significa "pai"), "a" (irmão), "am" (povo), "bate" (filha) e "ben" (filho) faziam parte de nomes compostos tais como Abida (Pai (Me) Conheceu), Abias, ou "Abijah" (Meu Pai É Jeová), Aiezer (Meu Irmão É Ajudador), Amiúde (Meu Povo É Dignidade), Aminadabe (Meu Povo Está Disposto (É Nobre; Generoso)), Bate-Seba (Filha de Abundância; possivelmente: Filha [Nascida em] o Sétimo [Dia]) e Ben-Hanã (Filho Daquele Que Mostra Favor; Filho do Clemente). "Meleque" (rei), "adon" (senhor) e "baal" (dono; amo) também eram combinados com outras palavras para formar nomes compostos, tais como Abimeleque (Meu Pai É Rei), Adonias (Jeová É Senhor) e Baal-Tamar (Dono da Palmeira).

As designações dadas a animais e a plantas eram ainda outra fonte de nomes para pessoas. Alguns nomes são Débora (que significa "Abelha"), Dorcas ou Tabita (Gazela), Jonas (Pomba), Raquel (Ovelha; Cordeira), Safã (Procávia) e Tamar (Palmeira).

Conforme indicado pela repetição de certos nomes nas listas genealógicas, parece ter-se tornado comum dar aos filhos o nome dum parente. (Veja 1Cr 6:9-14, 34-36.) Foi por este motivo que os parentes e os conhecidos de Elisabete objetaram a ela querer chamar seu filho recém-nascido de João. — Lu 1:57-61; veja GENEALOGIA (Repetição de nomes).

No primeiro século EC, não era incomum que os judeus, especialmente os que viviam fora de Israel ou em cidades com população mista de judeus e gentios, tivessem um nome hebraico ou aramaico junto com um nome latim ou grego. Talvez fosse por isso que Dorcas também se chamava Tabita, e o apóstolo Paulo também se chamava Saulo.

Às vezes, os nomes passavam a ser considerados como reflexo da personalidade ou das tendências características do indivíduo. Esaú, referente ao seu irmão, observou: "Não é por isso que ele é chamado pelo nome de Jacó [Agarrador do Calcanhar; Suplantador], que ele me suplantasse estas duas vezes? Já tomou a minha primogenitura, e eis que agora tomou a minha bênção!" (Gên 27:36) Abigail observou a respeito do seu marido: "Ele é tal qual seu nome. Nabal [Insensato; Estúpido] é o seu nome e a insensatez está com ele." (1Sa 25:25) Noemi, não mais achando que seu nome era apropriado em vista das calamidades que lhe sobrevieram, disse: "Não me chameis Noemi [Minha Agradabilidade]. Chamai-me Mara [Amarga], pois o Todo-poderoso o fez muito amargo para mim." — Ru 1:20.

Mudanças de nomes ou novos nomes. Às vezes, para determinado fim, mudavam-se nomes, ou a pessoa recebia um nome adicional. Quando estava morrendo, Raquel chamou seu recém-nascido de Ben-Oni (que significa "Filho do Meu Pesar"), mas o seu marido enlutado, Jacó, decidiu chamá-lo de Benjamim (Filho da Mão Direita). (Gên 35:16-18) Jeová mudou o nome de Abrão para Abraão (Pai Duma Multidão) e o de Sarai (possivelmente: Contenciosa) para Sara (Princesa), sendo ambos estes novos nomes proféticos. (Gên 17:5, 6, 15, 16) Por causa da perseverança de Jacó em engalfinhar-se com um anjo, foi-lhe dito: "Não serás mais chamado pelo nome de Jacó, mas, sim, Israel, [Contendedor (Perseverador) com Deus; ou: Deus Contende] pois contendeste com Deus e com homens, de modo que por fim prevaleceste." (Gên 32:28) Esta mudança de nome era sinal da bênção de Deus e ela foi mais tarde confirmada. (Gên 35:10) Portanto, é evidente que, quando as Escrituras falam profeticamente de "um novo nome", isto se refere a um nome que representaria apropriadamente quem o levasse. — Is 62:2; 65:15; Re 3:12.

Às vezes se davam novos nomes a pessoas promovidas a altos postos governamentais ou àqueles que recebiam privilégios especiais. Visto que estes nomes eram dados por superiores, a mudança de nome também podia significar que o portador do novo nome ficava sujeito àquele de quem o recebeu. Depois de José se tornar administrador de alimentos do Egito, ele foi chamado de Zafenate-Paneia. (Gên 41:44, 45) O Faraó Neco, ao fazer de Eliaquim rei vassalo em Judá, mudou-lhe o nome para Jeoiaquim. (2Rs 23:34) Do mesmo modo, Nabucodonosor, ao fazer de Matanias seu vassalo, mudou-lhe o nome para Zedequias. (2Rs 24:17) Daniel e seus três companheiros hebreus, Hananias, Misael e Azarias, receberam nomes babilônicos, depois de serem escolhidos para treinamento especial em Babilônia. — Da 1:3-7.

Um acontecimento na vida posterior da pessoa às vezes servia de base para se lhe dar um novo nome. Por exemplo, Esaú recebeu seu nome Edom (que significa "Vermelho") por causa do vermelho cozido de lentilhas pelo qual vendeu seu direito de primogênito. — Gên 25:30-34.

Nomes de Anjos. A Bíblia contém os nomes pessoais de apenas dois anjos, Gabriel (que significa "Um Vigoroso de Deus") e Miguel (Quem É Semelhante a Deus?). Talvez para não receberem indevida honra ou veneração, os anjos às vezes não revelavam seu nome às pessoas às quais apareceram. — Gên 32:29; Jz 13:17, 18.

O que está incluído em se conhecer o nome de Deus?

A criação material confirma a existência de Deus, mas não revela o nome de Deus. (Sal 19:1; Ro 1:20) Conhecer alguém o nome de Deus significa mais do que apenas estar familiarizado com a palavra. (2Cr 6:33) Significa realmente conhecer a Pessoa — seus propósitos, suas atividades e suas qualidades conforme reveladas na Sua Palavra. (Veja 1Rs 8:41-43; 9:3, 7; Ne 9:10.) Isto é ilustrado no caso de Moisés, homem a quem Jeová 'conhecia por nome', isto é, intimamente. (Êx 33:12) Moisés teve o privilégio de ver uma manifestação da glória de Jeová e também de ouvir 'declarado o nome de Jeová'. (Êx 34:5) Esta declaração não era uma simples repetição do nome Jeová, mas era uma declaração sobre os atributos e as atividades de Deus. "Jeová, Jeová, Deus misericordioso e clemente, vagaroso em irar-se e abundante em benevolência e em verdade, preservando a benevolência para com milhares, perdoando o erro, e a transgressão, e o pecado, mas de modo algum isentará da punição, trazendo punição pelo erro dos pais sobre os filhos e sobre os netos, sobre a terceira geração e sobre a quarta geração." (Êx 34:6, 7) De modo similar, o cântico de Moisés, que contém as palavras "pois declararei o nome Jeová", relata os tratos de Deus com Israel e descreve a Sua personalidade. — De 32:3-44.

Quando Jesus Cristo estava na terra, ele 'manifestou o nome de seu Pai' aos seus discípulos. (Jo 17:6, 26) Embora estes discípulos já conhecessem este nome e estivessem familiarizados com as atividades de Deus, conforme registradas nas Escrituras Hebraicas, eles vieram a conhecer Jeová de modo muito melhor e mais grandioso por meio Daquele que "está na posição junto ao seio do Pai". (Jo 1:18) Cristo Jesus representava perfeitamente seu Pai, fazendo as obras Dele e não falando da sua própria iniciativa, mas sim as palavras do Pai. (Jo 10:37, 38; 12:50; 14:10, 11, 24) É por isso que Jesus podia dizer: "Quem me tem visto, tem visto também o Pai." — Jo 14:9.

Isto mostra claramente que os únicos que realmente conhecem o nome de Deus são os Seus servos obedientes. (Veja 1Jo 4:8; 5:2, 3.) Portanto, a garantia dada por Jeová no Salmo 91:14 aplica-se a tais pessoas: "Protegê-lo-ei por ele ter chegado a conhecer meu nome." O nome em si não é uma fórmula mágica, mas Aquele que tem este nome pode dar proteção ao seu povo devoto. De modo que o nome representa o próprio Deus. É por isso que o provérbio diz: "O nome de Jeová é uma torre forte. O justo corre para dentro dela e recebe proteção." (Pr 18:10) Isto é o que fazem aqueles que lançam seu fardo sobre Jeová. (Sal 55:22) Do mesmo modo, amar o nome de Jeová (Sal 5:11), cantar-lhe louvores (Sal 7:17), invocá-lo (Gên 12:8), dar-lhe graças (1Cr 16:35), jurar por ele (De 6:13), lembrá-lo (Sal 119:55), temê-lo (Sal 61:5), procurá-lo (Sal 83:16), confiar nele (Sal 33:21), exaltá-lo (Sal 34:3) e esperar nele (Sal 52:9) significa fazer estas coisas com referência ao próprio Jeová. Ultrajar o nome de Deus é blasfemar a Deus. — Le 24:11, 15, 16.

Jeová tem ciúme do seu nome, não tolerando nenhuma rivalidade ou infidelidade em questões de adoração. (Êx 34:14; Ez 5:13) Ordenou-se aos israelitas nem mesmo mencionar o nome de outros deuses. (Êx 23:13) Visto que os nomes de deuses falsos aparecem nas Escrituras, evidentemente a referência a isso trata de se mencionarem os nomes de deuses falsos em sentido de adoração.

O fracasso de Israel, como povo para o nome de Deus, quanto a viver à altura das Suas justas ordens, constituiu profanação ou aviltamento do nome de Deus. (Ez 43:8; Am 2:7) Visto que a infidelidade dos israelitas resultou em serem punidos por Deus, isto também resultou em outras nações falarem desrespeitosamente do Seu nome. (Veja Sal 74:10, 18; Is 52:5.) Essas nações, por não reconhecerem que o castigo era da parte de Jeová, atribuíam erroneamente as calamidades que sobrevieram a Israel à incapacidade de Jeová de proteger seu povo. Jeová, para limpar seu nome de tal vitupério, agiu em prol do Seu nome e restabeleceu um restante de Israel na sua terra. — Ez 36:22-24.

Por Jeová manifestar-se de modos especiais, ele fez com que seu nome fosse lembrado. Nos lugares onde isso ocorreu, erigiram-se altares. — Êx 20:24; compare isso com 2Sa 24:16-18; veja JEOVÁ.

O Nome do Filho de Deus. Por Jesus Cristo ter permanecido fiel até a própria morte, ele foi recompensado pelo Pai, recebendo uma posição superior e "o nome que está acima de todo outro nome". (Fil 2:5-11) Todos os que desejam a vida têm de reconhecer o que este nome representa (At 4:12), inclusive a posição de Jesus como Juiz (Jo 5:22), Rei (Re 19:16), Sumo Sacerdote (He 6:20), Resgatador (Mt 20:28) e Agente Principal da salvação. — He 2:10; veja JESUS CRISTO.

Cristo Jesus, como "Rei dos reis e Senhor dos senhores", também há de chefiar os exércitos celestiais para travar guerra em justiça. Como executor da vingança de Deus, ele demonstrará poderes e qualidades totalmente desconhecidos aos que lutarem contra ele. Apropriadamente, pois, "ele tem um nome escrito que ninguém conhece, exceto ele mesmo". — Re 19:11-16.

Diversos Usos da Palavra "Nome". Podia-se "invocar" determinado nome sobre uma pessoa, uma cidade ou um prédio. Quando Jacó adotou os filhos de José como seus próprios, ele declarou: "Seja invocado sobre eles o meu nome e o nome dos meus pais, Abraão e Isaque." (Gên 48:16; veja também Is 4:1; 44:5.) Invocar-se o nome de Jeová sobre os israelitas indicava que eram seu povo. (De 28:10; 2Cr 7:14; Is 43:7; 63:19; Da 9:19) Jeová pôs também seu nome sobre Jerusalém e sobre o templo, aceitando-os assim como centro legítimo da Sua adoração. (2Rs 21:4, 7) Joabe decidiu não completar a captura de Rabá, a fim de que não se invocasse seu nome sobre esta cidade, isto é, para que não se lhe atribuísse a captura dela. — 2Sa 12:28.

Quem morria sem deixar filhos varões tinha seu nome como que "retirado". (Núm 27:4; 2Sa 18:18) Portanto, o arranjo do casamento de cunhados, delineado pela Lei mosaica, servia para preservar o nome do falecido. (De 25:5, 6) Por outro lado, a destruição de uma nação, de um povo ou de uma família significava a extinção do seu nome. — De 7:24; 9:14; Jos 7:9; 1Sa 24:21; Sal 9:5.

Falar ou agir 'em nome de' outrem denotava fazer isso como representante dele. (Êx 5:23; De 10:8; 18:5, 7, 19-22; 1Sa 17:45; Est 3:12; 8:8, 10) Similarmente, acolher alguém em nome de outro indicava o reconhecimento daquele outro. Portanto, 'receber um profeta em nome dum profeta' significava receber o profeta por ele ser tal. (Mt 10:41, Tr, NM) E batizar em "o nome do Pai, e do Filho, e do espírito santo", significa fazê-lo em reconhecimento do Pai, do Filho e do espírito santo. — Mt 28:19.

Reputação ou Fama. No uso bíblico, "nome" frequentemente denota fama ou reputação. (1Cr 14:17 n) Dar mau nome a alguém significava fazer uma acusação falsa contra ele, manchando a sua reputação. (De 22:19) Ter seu nome 'lançado fora como iníquo' significava perder a boa reputação. (Lu 6:22) Foi para fazerem para si "um nome célebre", em desafio a Jeová, que os homens começaram a construir uma torre e uma cidade após o Dilúvio. (Gên 11:3, 4) Por outro lado, Jeová prometeu engrandecer o nome de Abrão, se este deixasse seu país e seus parentes, a fim de ir para outra terra. (Gên 12:1, 2) O que confirma o cumprimento desta promessa é que até o dia de hoje poucos nomes dos tempos antigos se tornaram tão grandes como o de Abraão, especialmente como exemplo de notável fé. Milhões de pessoas ainda afirmam ser herdeiros da bênção abraâmica por causa da sua ascendência carnal dele. De modo similar, Jeová engrandeceu o nome de Davi por abençoá-lo e conceder-lhe vitórias sobre os inimigos de Israel. — 1Sa 18:30; 2Sa 7:9.

Quando se nasce, não se tem nenhuma reputação, de modo que o nome é pouco mais do que um rótulo. É por isso que Eclesiastes 7:1 diz: "Um nome é melhor do que bom óleo, e o dia da morte é melhor do que o dia em que se nasce." Não ao nascer, mas durante o pleno decurso da vida da pessoa, é que seu "nome" assume verdadeiro significado no sentido de identificá-la como alguém que pratica a justiça ou como alguém que pratica a iniquidade. (Pr 22:1) O nome de Jesus, pela fidelidade dele até a morte, tornou-se o único nome 'dado entre os homens, pelo qual temos de ser salvos', e ele 'herdou um nome mais excelente' do que o dos anjos. (At 4:12; He 1:3, 4) Salomão, porém, para com quem se expressou a esperança de que seu nome se tornasse "mais esplêndido" do que o de Davi, morreu com o nome de relapso para com a adoração verdadeira. (1Rs 1:47; 11:6, 9-11) "O próprio nome dos iníquos apodrecerá", ou se tornará odioso mau cheiro. (Pr 10:7) Por este motivo, "deve-se escolher antes um [bom] nome do que riquezas abundantes". — Pr 22:1.

Nomes Inscritos no "Livro da Vida". Parece que Jeová Deus, falando de modo figurativo, tem inscrito nomes no livro da vida desde "a fundação do mundo". (Re 17:8) Visto que Cristo Jesus falou de Abel como vivendo na "fundação do mundo", isto indica que se faz referência ao mundo da humanidade resgatável que veio à existência depois de nascerem filhos a Adão e Eva. (Lu 11:48-51) Evidentemente, o nome de Abel era o primeiro registrado neste rolo simbólico.

Os nomes que constam no rolo da vida, porém, não são nomes de pessoas que foram predestinadas para obter a aprovação de Deus e a vida. Isto se evidencia em as Escrituras falarem de 'apagar' nomes "do livro da vida". Portanto, parece que somente quando alguém se torna servo de Jeová é seu nome inscrito no "livro da vida", e somente se ele continuar fiel terá o seu nome conservado neste livro. — Re 3:5; 17:8; compare isso com Êx 32:32, 33; Lu 10:20; Fil 4:3; veja também VIDA.

Nomes Registrados no Rolo do Cordeiro. De modo similar, os nomes dos que adoram a fera simbólica não estão registrados no rolo do Cordeiro. (Re 13:8) Esta fera recebeu sua autoridade, seu poder e seu trono do dragão, Satanás, o Diabo. Portanto, os que adoram a fera fazem parte da 'semente da serpente'. (Re 13:2; compare isso com Jo 8:44; Re 12:9.) Mesmo já antes de nascerem filhos a Adão e Eva, Jeová Deus indicara que haveria inimizade entre a 'semente [descendente] da mulher' e a 'semente [descendente] da serpente'. (Gên 3:15) Assim, desde a fundação do mundo, já se determinara que nenhum adorador da fera teria seu nome inscrito no rolo do Cordeiro. Somente pessoas sagradas do ponto de vista de Deus teriam este privilégio. — Re 21:27.

Visto que este rolo pertence ao Cordeiro, é lógico que os nomes constantes nele seriam os daqueles que Deus lhe deu. (Re 13:8; Jo 17:9, 24) Portanto, é digno de nota que a próxima referência ao Cordeiro, no livro de Revelação (Apocalipse), o retrata como estando em pé no Monte Sião junto com 144.000 pessoas compradas dentre a humanidade. — Re 14:1-5.

NORA. A esposa do filho em relação aos pais dele. As mesmas palavras hebraica (kal·láh) e grega (ným·fe), traduzidas por "nora", são também vertidas por "noiva", em certos casos. — Cân 4:8-12; Is 61:10; Je 7:34; Jo 3:29; Re 18:23; 21:2, 9; 22:17.

Visto que, nos tempos patriarcais, usualmente o próprio pai providenciava o casamento do filho, a nora, em grande parte, era escolha dele. (Gên 24) Ela era acolhida na família, e quando esta se mudava, ela a acompanhava. (Gên 11:31) A Lei mosaica proibia sob pena de morte ao homem ter relações sexuais com a nora. — Le 18:15; 20:12; Ez 22:11.

O gênio da nora e sua atitude para com os parentes por afinidade variavam muito. Por exemplo, Rute mostrava ser companheira muito leal e devotada de sua sogra Noemi, mais do que Orpa, dizendo: "Teu povo será o meu povo, e teu Deus, o meu Deus. Onde quer que morreres, morrerei eu." (Ru 1:6-17, 22; 4:14, 15) As esposas hititas de Esaú eram fonte de muita consternação para os sogros, Isaque e Rebeca. (Gên 26:34; 27:46) Cristo Jesus predisse que a mensagem do Reino separaria noras de sogras. — Lu 12:53.

NORTE. Além do usual termo tsa·fóhn, o norte era também indicado pela direção "à esquerda", visto que se encarava o lado do nascente, no leste. (Gên 14:15 n) No uso bíblico, o "norte" pode indicar uma parte da terra (Sal 107:3; Is 43:6; Lu 13:29), a direção norte (Êx 26:20; 1Rs 7:25; Re 21:13), o céu setentrional (Jó 26:7), e diversas terras ou reinos (inclusive a Assíria [Sof 2:13] e Babilônia [Je 46:10]) situados um tanto ao N e L da terra habitada pelos israelitas. Embora Babilônia, sobre o rio Eufrates, na realidade ficasse ao L de Tiro, Ezequiel 26:7 fala do rei de Babilônia como vindo do norte contra Tiro. Do mesmo modo, a calamidade a ser sofrida por Judá e Jerusalém às mãos dos babilônios é mencionada como vinda "do norte". (Je 1:14, 15) O motivo disso parece ser que, ao marcharem para o oeste, os exércitos babilônicos tomaram uma rota setentrional e assim evitaram a passagem pelo deserto. Na realidade, este era o caminho costumeiro, conforme mostram os registros babilônicos.

Uma vez que se atribui a várias terras e reinos uma localização setentrional, frequentemente o contexto e outros textos relacionados ajudam a determinar o que se quer dizer com "norte" ou "terra do norte". Por exemplo, Isaías 21:2, 9, e Daniel 5:28 mostram que as nações "da terra do norte", mencionadas em Jeremias 50:9, incluem os medos, os persas e os elamitas. Pelo visto, as nações que atacaram Babilônia eram consideradas como exército unido ou adversário comum de Babilônia, "uma congregação". Muitas das nações envolvidas nisso ficavam bem ao N de Babilônia (Je 51:27, 28), e pelo menos grande parte da Média ficava ao NE de Babilônia. Evidentemente, o ataque veio também do norte, visto que Ciro interrompeu o fluxo do rio ao N da cidade.

"O Rei do Norte." Fatos da história fornecem mais outra base para se determinar como o "norte" deve ser entendido em alguns textos. Um caso pertinente é "o rei do norte" mencionado no capítulo 11 de Daniel. A evidência histórica indica que o "rei poderoso", de Daniel 11:3, era Alexandre, o Grande (ou: Magno). Depois da morte de Alexandre, o império, por fim, foi dividido entre seus quatro generais. Um destes generais, Seleuco Nicátor, tomou a Mesopotâmia e a Síria, o que o tornou o governante do território situado ao N da Palestina. Outro general, Ptolomeu Lago, obteve o controle sobre o Egito, ao SO da Palestina. Portanto, com Seleuco Nicátor e Ptolomeu Lago começou a longa luta entre "o rei do norte" e "o rei do sul". Todavia, a profecia a respeito do "rei do norte" se estende desde o tempo de Seleuco Nicátor até o "tempo do fim". (Da 11:40) Logicamente, pois, a identidade nacional e política do "rei do norte" mudaria no decurso da história. Mas, ainda seria possível determinar a sua identidade à base do que a profecia disse que "o rei do norte" faria. — Veja o livro Preste Atenção à Profecia de Daniel!, 1999, pp. 211-285.

A Residência de Jeová. O "norte" ocorre também nas Escrituras com referência ao lugar onde Jeová residia de forma representativa com os israelitas. — Sal 48:1, 2; Is 14:13, 14; veja MONTE DE REUNIÃO.

NOVA JERUSALÉM. Expressão que ocorre duas vezes, e somente no altamente simbólico livro de Revelação (Apocalipse). (Re 3:12; 21:2) Perto do fim dessa série de visões, e depois de ver Babilônia, a Grande, destruída, o apóstolo João diz: "Vi também a cidade santa, Nova Jerusalém, descendo do céu, da parte de Deus, e preparada como noiva adornada para seu marido." — Re 21:2.

A Noiva do Cordeiro. À luz de outros textos, a identidade da Nova Jerusalém é tornada certa. Ela é "como noiva". Mais adiante, João escreve: "Um dos sete anjos . . . falou comigo, dizendo: 'Vem para cá, mostrar-te-ei a noiva, a esposa do Cordeiro.' Levou-me assim no poder do espírito para um grande e alto monte, e mostrou-me a cidade santa de Jerusalém descendo do céu, da parte de Deus, e tendo a glória de Deus. Seu resplendor era semelhante a uma pedra mui preciosa, como pedra de jaspe, brilhando como cristal." — Re 21:9-11.

A Nova Jerusalém é noiva de quem? Do Cordeiro de Deus, Jesus Cristo, que derramou seu sangue sacrificialmente pela humanidade. (Jo 1:29; Re 5:6, 12; 7:14; 12:11; 21:14) Quem é ela? Ela é composta dos membros da glorificada congregação cristã. A congregação na Terra foi comparada a uma "virgem casta" a ser apresentada a Cristo. (2Co 11:2) Também, o apóstolo Paulo compara a congregação a uma esposa, que tem a Cristo por Marido e Cabeça. — Ef 5:23-25, 32.

Outrossim, o próprio Cristo se dirige à congregação, em Revelação 3:12, prometendo que o vencedor fiel terá escrito nele "o nome do meu Deus e o nome da cidade do meu Deus, a nova Jerusalém, que desce do céu da parte do meu Deus, e aquele meu novo nome". A esposa leva o nome do marido.

Portanto, os que são vistos em pé com o Cordeiro, no Monte Sião, 144.000 em número, que têm o nome do Cordeiro e o do Pai dele escrito na testa, evidentemente são o mesmo grupo, a noiva. — Re 14:1.

Por que não pode a "Nova Jerusalém" ser uma cidade do Oriente Médio?

A Nova Jerusalém é celestial, não terrena, porque desce "do céu, da parte de Deus". (Re 21:10) De modo que esta cidade não é construída por homens, nem tem ruas e prédios literais, erigidos no Oriente Médio no lugar da antiga cidade de Jerusalém, que foi destruída em 70 EC. Os membros da classe da noiva, enquanto na Terra, são informados de que sua "cidadania existe nos céus", e que sua esperança é receber "uma herança incorruptível, e imaculada, e imarcescível". "Ela está reservada nos céus para vós", diz o apóstolo Pedro. — Fil 3:20; 1Pe 1:4.

Em 537 AEC, Jeová criou "novos céus e uma nova terra", quando o restante judaico foi restabelecido em Jerusalém após o exílio babilônico. (Is 65:17) Evidentemente, a governadoria de Zorobabel (descendente de Davi), ajudada pelo sumo sacerdote Josué, na cidade de Jerusalém, constituía então os "novos céus". (Ag 1:1, 14; veja CÉU, I [Novos céus e nova terra].) A Nova Jerusalém, junto com Cristo no trono nesta cidade simbólica, constitui os "novos céus" que governam a "nova terra", a qual é a sociedade humana na Terra.

Que a Nova Jerusalém é deveras uma cidade celestial é adicionalmente apoiado pela visão dela observada por João. Somente uma cidade simbólica podia ter as dimensões e o esplendor da Nova Jerusalém. Sua base era quadrada, com uns 555 km de cada lado, ou cerca de 2.220 km de circunferência, isto é, 12.000 estádios. Sendo a cidade um cubo, a sua altura era igual ao seu comprimento e à sua largura. Nenhuma cidade construída pelo homem jamais poderia estender-se tanto no "espaço sideral". Ela era cercada por uma muralha de 144 côvados (64 m) de altura. A própria muralha, construída de jaspe, por sua vez repousava sobre 12 pedras de alicerce, pedras preciosas de grande beleza — jaspe, safira, calcedônia, esmeralda, sardônio, sárdio, crisólito, berilo, topázio, crisópraso, jacinto e ametista. Nestas 12 pedras de alicerce estavam gravados os nomes dos 12 apóstolos do Cordeiro. A cidade propriamente dita, dentro destas belas muralhas, não era menos gloriosa, porque foi descrita como de "ouro puro, como vidro límpido", tendo uma rua larga de "ouro puro, como vidro transparente". — Re 21:12-21.

Um Governo Puro e Benéfico. A entrada da Nova Jerusalém através das suas magníficas muralhas era por 12 portões, três de cada lado, cada um feito de uma enorme pérola. Embora estes portões nunca se fechassem, "tudo o que não for sagrado, e todo aquele que praticar uma coisa repugnante e a mentira, de modo algum entrará nela; somente os escritos no rolo da vida do Cordeiro entrarão". Uma cidade deveras santa e sagrada, todavia, não se via nela nenhum templo de adoração, porque "Jeová Deus, o Todo-Poderoso, é o seu templo, também o Cordeiro o é". E não havia "necessidade do sol, nem da lua, para brilhar sobre ela, pois a glória de Deus a iluminava, e a sua lâmpada era o Cordeiro". Seu domínio sobre as nações será benéfico para elas, porque "as nações andarão por meio da sua luz". — Re 21:22-27.

NOVILHA [hebr.: ʽegh·láh; gr.: dá·ma·lis]. Vaca nova que ainda não teve cria.

Havia uma novilha entre os animais que Abraão cortou pelo meio, e ele viu então "uma fornalha fumegante e uma tocha acesa que passava entre esses pedaços". Isto ocorreu com relação a Deus concluir com ele um pacto. — Gên 15:9-18.

Em Israel, quem tocasse num cadáver humano, num osso humano ou num túmulo, ou quem entrasse numa tenda em que jazia um cadáver, era impuro. Ele tinha de passar por um processo específico de purificação, sob pena de ser 'decepado do meio da congregação'. Neste processo usavam-se as cinzas duma sadia novilha vermelha, sobre a qual não tinha vindo jugo. Espargia-se sobre o impuro água misturada com uma parte destas cinzas. Paulo fez referência a este processo, mostrando que este só tinha o efeito de santificar no que se referia à pureza da carne, mas que tipificava a verdadeira purificação da consciência por meio do sacrifício de Jesus Cristo. — Núm 19:1-22; He 9:13, 14.

Usava-se também uma novilha quando recaía culpa de sangue sobre uma cidade, por causa de um assassinato de que não se conhecia o assassino. Os anciãos da cidade mais próxima onde se encontrou o morto, acompanhados por alguns dos sacerdotes dos filhos de Levi, tinham de tomar uma novilha ainda não posta a trabalhar e quebrar-lhe a nuca num vale de torrente não cultivado, em que houvesse água corrente. Daí, os anciãos daquela cidade tinham de lavar as mãos sobre a novilha e apelar a Deus, para que não pusesse a culpa pelo sangue sobre a cidade. Deus ouvia o rogo e absolvia a cidade da culpa pelo sangue inocente derramado. Evidentemente, quebrar-se a nuca da novilha, em vez de ela ser morta como oferta pelo pecado, indicava que, em símbolo, a novilha sofria a punição que cabia ao assassino desconhecido, e este processo não servia de modo algum para beneficiar o assassino, como expiação pelo seu crime. A Jeová Deus, que vê tudo, cabia o julgamento do próprio assassino. Naturalmente, se mais tarde se descobrisse quem era o assassino, ele seria morto pelo assassinato, conforme a Lei exigia. A cerimônia com a vaca nova tornava o assunto de conhecimento público e tendia a ajudar na descoberta do assassino. — De 21:1-9; Núm 35:30-33.

O profeta Jeremias falou figurativamente sobre a nação do Egito, quando ela estava prosperamente estabelecida e bem alimentada na sua terra, como "novilha bonita", mas predisse que viria a derrota dela. (Je 46:20, 21) O mesmo profeta comparou também os conquistadores babilônios do povo de Deus com uma novilha escarvando a relva tenra, por exultarem sobre a sua captura de Israel. (Je 50:11) Oseias falou de Efraim, o reino de dez tribos, como outrora tendo sido qual novilha treinada, sob as instruções e as bênçãos de Deus, tendo abundância, visto que o animal que debulhava podia comer dos frutos do seu trabalho, que era comparativamente leve. — Os 10:11; De 25:4.

NUM. Pai de Josué, sucessor de Moisés; filho de Elisama, da tribo de Efraim. — Êx 33:11; Jos 1:1; 1Cr 7:20, 26, 27.

NÚMERO, NUMERAL. No hebraico antigo, os números eram escritos por extenso. Algum tempo depois do exílio em Babilônia, os judeus adotaram até certo ponto a prática de usar suas letras alfabéticas como símbolos de algarismos. Todavia, este uso não ocorre nem mesmo nos manuscritos bíblicos, hebraicos, pós-exílicos. Um dos espécimes de escrita hebraica mais antigos existentes é a inscrição tirada do túnel de água de Siloé (provavelmente do tempo do reinado de Ezequias [745-717 AEC]), na qual as medidas se encontram escritas por extenso. Escrever os números por extenso fornece uma medida adicional de exatidão e fidedignidade aos manuscritos das Escrituras Hebraicas, copiadas muitas vezes, pois, ao fazer cópia, um numeral é mais fácil de ser confundido do que uma palavra.

Em hebraico, os números acima de dez são uma combinação de palavras, tais como 12 (dois e dez) (Gên 14:4), exceto que 20 é o plural de dez; 30 é uma palavra plural derivada de três; 40 é uma palavra plural derivada de quatro, assim por diante. Cem é uma palavra distinta; 200 é a forma dual dela. Outras "centenas" são compostas de duas palavras, como: 300. O número mais elevado expresso por uma só palavra hebraica é 20.000, forma dual de 10.000 (miríade). Números maiores são combinações de palavras. Por exemplo, em 1 Crônicas 5:18, o número 44.760 literalmente é quarenta e quatro mil e sete de centenas e sessenta. O milhão é escrito como mil milhares. (2Cr 14:9) A família de Rebeca abençoou-a, dizendo: "Que tu, nossa irmã, te tornes milhares de vezes dez mil [literalmente: milhares de miríades]." (Na realidade, a posteridade de Rebeca passou a ascender a muitos milhões.) (Gên 24:55, 60) Na visão de Daniel mostra-se que Jeová tem "dez mil vezes dez mil [literalmente: uma miríade de miríades]" de pé diante dele. — Da 7:10.

Ocasionalmente usam-se números em sentido aproximado, como números redondos, por exemplo, no Salmo 90:10, onde o salmista fala do limite de idade do homem, e possivelmente também em 1 Reis 19:18 (7.000 que não se haviam curvado diante de Baal) e 2 Crônicas 14:9 (o milhão de etíopes derrotados por Asa).

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, os numerais, em geral, são expressos em palavras. O número da "fera" ocorre em palavras nos manuscritos Sinaítico e Alexandrino. — Re 13:18.

Uso Bíblico, não Numerologia. Visto que a Bíblia é um livro tanto de história como de profecia, os números fornecidos nela podem ser literais ou simbólicos. O contexto usualmente revela em que sentido se usa o número. Certos números frequentemente ocorrem na Bíblia em sentido ilustrativo, figurativo ou simbólico, e nesses casos é vital entender o seu significado para se compreender o texto. Todavia, este uso bíblico de números não deve ser confundido com a numerologia, em que se atribui ocultismo místico a numerais, a suas combinações e aos totais numéricos. A numerologia parece ter tido sua origem na antiga Babilônia, e, assim como outras formas de adivinhação, está sob a condenação divina. — De 18:10-12.

A seguir, consideraremos alguns usos figurativos de certos números usados com destaque na Bíblia.

Um. Este número, quando usado em sentido figurado, transmite a ideia de singeleza, exclusividade, bem como de unidade e harmonia de propósito e ação. "Jeová, nosso Deus, é um só Jeová", disse Moisés. (De 6:4) Só ele é Soberano. Ele é único. Não compartilha sua glória com ninguém, como se dá com os deuses trinitários pagãos. (At 4:24; Re 6:10; Is 42:8) Há unicidade de propósito e atividade entre Jeová e Jesus Cristo (Jo 10:30), e deve haver completa unidade dos discípulos de Cristo com Deus, com Seu Filho e uns com os outros. (Jo 17:21; Gál 3:28) Tal unidade é ilustrada pelo arranjo matrimonial. — Gên 2:24; Mt 19:6; Ef 5:28-32.

Dois. O número dois ocorre frequentemente num contexto jurídico. O acordo no relato de duas testemunhas dá força ao testemunho. Duas testemunhas, ou mesmo três, eram necessárias para se confirmar um assunto perante os juízes. Este princípio é também seguido na congregação cristã. (De 17:6; 19:15; Mt 18:16; 2Co 13:1; 1Ti 5:19; He 10:28) Deus aderiu a este princípio ao apresentar seu Filho ao povo como Salvador da humanidade. Jesus disse: "Também, na vossa própria Lei está escrito: 'O testemunho de dois homens é verdadeiro.' Eu sou um que dá testemunho de mim mesmo, e o Pai que me enviou dá testemunho de mim." — Jo 8:17, 18.

Fazer algo pela segunda vez — por exemplo, repetir uma declaração ou uma visão, mesmo apenas de modo paralelo — confirmava o assunto como certo e verdadeiro (como no sonho de Faraó a respeito das vacas e das espigas; Gên 41:32). A poesia hebraica, bíblica, está cheia de paralelismos de ideias, que fixam com mais firmeza na mente as verdades declaradas e ao mesmo tempo clarificam os assuntos pela variedade de fraseologia no paralelismo. — Veja Sal 2, 44, e outros.

Na profecia de Daniel, ter certa fera "dois chifres" simbolizava a dualidade de governo do Império Medo-Persa. — Da 8:20, 21; compare isso com Re 13:11.

Três. Embora a atestação de duas testemunhas referente ao mesmo assunto fornecesse suficiente prova para uma ação legal, três tornavam o testemunho ainda mais forte. O número três, portanto, é às vezes usado para representar intensidade, ênfase ou maior força. "Um cordão tríplice não pode ser prontamente rompido em dois." (Ec 4:12) Produziu-se ênfase na pergunta tríplice de Jesus a Pedro, depois que Pedro negara Jesus três vezes. (Mt 26:34, 75; Jo 21:15-17) A visão em que se mandou Pedro comer de todos os tipos de animais, inclusive os que eram impuros segundo a Lei, foi intensificada por lhe ser apresentada três vezes. Isto, sem dúvida, tornou mais fácil a Pedro compreender, quando Cornélio e sua casa aceitaram as boas novas, que Deus voltara então sua atenção para as pessoas incircuncisas das nações, consideradas impuras pelos judeus. — At 10:1-16, 28-35, 47, 48.

A intensidade da santidade e pureza de Jeová é enfatizada pela declaração de criaturas celestiais: "Santo, santo, santo é Jeová." (Is 6:3; Re 4:8) Antes de tirar do trono o último rei da linhagem de Davi, Jeová disse: "Uma ruína, uma ruína, uma ruína a farei. Também, quanto a esta, certamente não virá a ser de ninguém, até que venha aquele que tem o direito legal, e a ele é que terei de dá-lo." Ele mostrou assim enfaticamente que não haveria rei davídico sentado no trono de Jerusalém em Seu nome — o trono ficaria absolutamente vago — até o tempo de Deus estabelecer seu Messias no poder do Reino. (Ez 21:27) A intensidade dos ais que sobreviriam aos que moram na terra é prevista pela tripla repetição da declaração de "ai". — Re 8:13.

Quatro. Quatro é às vezes o número que expressa universalidade ou quadrangulação em simetria e forma. É encontrado três vezes em Revelação (Apocalipse) 7:1. Ali, os "quatro anjos" (todos os encarregados dos "quatro ventos", prontos para a destruição completa) estavam em pé nos "quatro cantos" da terra (de onde podiam soltar os ventos de modo oblíquo ou diagonal, e nenhuma parte da terra ficaria poupada). (Veja Da 8:8; Is 11:12; Je 49:36; Za 2:6; Mt 24:31.) A Nova Jerusalém é "quadrada", com todas as dimensões iguais, tendo realmente forma cúbica. (Re 21:16) Outras expressões figuradas que usam o número quatro são encontradas em Zacarias 1:18-21; 6:1-3; Revelação 9:14, 15.

Seis. Este número às vezes representa imperfeição. O número da "fera" é 666 e é chamado de "número de homem", indicando que tem que ver com o homem imperfeito, decaído, e parece simbolizar a imperfeição daquilo que é representado pela "fera". Enfatizando-se o número seis no terceiro grau (o seis aparecendo na posição de unidade, dezena e centena), portanto, salienta a imperfeição e a deficiência do que a fera representa ou retrata. — Re 13:18.

Sete. Sete é frequentemente usado nas Escrituras para significar inteireza. Às vezes tem referência a se levar uma obra a cabo. Ou pode referir-se ao ciclo completo de coisas como estabelecidas ou permitidas por Deus. Por concluir a sua obra para com a terra em seis dias criativos e repousar no sétimo dia, Jeová estabeleceu o padrão para todo o arranjo sabático, desde a semana de sete dias até o ano de jubileu que seguia o ciclo de sete vezes sete anos. (Êx 20:10; Le 25:2, 6, 8) A Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados e a Festividade das Barracas duravam sete dias cada uma. (Êx 34:18; Le 23:34) Sete ocorre muitas vezes com relação a regras levíticas de ofertas (Le 4:6; 16:14, 19; Núm 28:11) e de purificações. — Le 14:7, 8, 16, 27, 51; 2Rs 5:10.

As "sete congregações" de Revelação, com todas as suas características, fornecem o quadro completo de todas as congregações de Deus na terra. — Re 1:20–3:22.

As "sete cabeças" da "fera" (Re 13:1) mostram até que ponto se permitiria à fera desenvolver-se. Embora a "fera cor de escarlate" seja chamada de "oitavo" rei, provém dos sete e não existe à parte da fera de sete cabeças (Re 17:3, 9-11), o que se dá também com a "imagem" da "fera". (Re 13:14) De modo similar, a "fera" de dois chifres realmente coexiste com a "fera" original, que procura colocar seu "sinal" em todas as pessoas. — Re 13:11, 16, 17.

Jeová foi longânime com os israelitas, mas avisou-os de que, se o desconsiderasse, apesar da Sua disciplina, então os castigaria "sete vezes", ou seja, cabalmente, pelos pecados deles. — Le 26:18, 21, 28.

Nas partes históricas das Escrituras, sete ocorre frequentemente para denotar inteireza, ou a realização completa duma obra. Os israelitas exerceram plena fé e obediência por marcharem durante sete dias em volta de Jericó, rodeando-a sete vezes no sétimo dia, após o que a muralha da cidade desmoronou. (Jos 6:2-4, 15) Elias mostrou plena fé na eficácia da sua oração a Deus por ordenar seu servo, no monte Carmelo, a ir observar o céu sete vezes antes de aparecer a nuvem de chuva. (1Rs 18:42-44) Naamã, o leproso, teve de banhar-se sete vezes no rio Jordão. Ele, como poderoso general sírio, teve de demonstrar considerável humildade para executar este procedimento recomendado pelo profeta Eliseu, mas Jeová o purificou por ele ter feito isso obedientemente. (2Rs 5:10, 12) A pureza, a inteireza, a perfeição e a excelência das declarações de Jeová são comparadas com força e intensidade poéticas à prata refinada num forno de fundição, depurada sete vezes. (Sal 12:6) A misericórdia de Jeová é magnificada pela declaração: "O justo talvez caia até mesmo sete vezes, e ele se há de levantar." (Pr 24:16) Que Ele merece todo o louvor é declarado pelo salmista: "Eu te tenho louvado sete vezes por dia." — Sal 119:164.

O livro de Revelação está pleno do uso simbólico do número sete com relação às coisas de Deus e da sua congregação, e também às coisas do Adversário de Deus, Satanás, o Diabo, na sua luta total em oposição a Deus e Seu povo. — Re 1:4, 12, 16; 5:1, 6; 8:2; 10:3; 12:3; 13:1; 15:1, 7; 17:3, 10; e outros textos.

Múltiplos de sete são usados em sentido similar de inteireza. Setenta (dez vezes sete) é usado profeticamente nas "setenta semanas" da profecia de Daniel que trata da vinda do Messias. (Da 9:24-27; veja SETENTA SEMANAS.) Jerusalém e Judá ficaram desolados por 70 anos, por sua desobediência a Deus, "até que a terra tivesse saldado [completamente] os seus sábados". — 2Cr 36:21; Je 25:11; 29:10; Da 9:2; Za 1:12; 7:5.

Setenta e sete, repetição de sete no número, equivalia a dizer "indefinidamente" ou "sem limite". Jesus aconselhou os cristãos a perdoarem seus irmãos a tal ponto. (Mt 18:21, 22) Visto que Deus ordenara que aquele que matasse Caim, o assassino, tinha de "sofrer vingança sete vezes", Lameque, que parece ter matado um homem em defesa própria, disse: "Se Caim há de ser vingado sete vezes, então Lameque setenta vezes e sete." — Gên 4:15, 23, 24.

Oito. O número oito também era usado para dar ênfase à inteireza de alguma coisa (um mais do que sete, número geralmente usado para inteireza), deste modo às vezes representando abundância. Jeová assegurou ao seu povo livrá-lo da ameaça da Assíria, dizendo que se levantariam contra o assírio "sete pastores, sim, [não apenas sete, mas] oito caudilhos da humanidade". (Miq 5:5) Como clímax apropriado da última festividade do ano sagrado, a Festividade das Barracas, o oitavo dia havia de ser um de santo congresso, de assembleia solene, dia de total descanso. — Le 23:36, 39; Núm 29:35.

Dez. Dez é um número que denota plenitude, totalidade, o conjunto, a soma de tudo o que existe de alguma coisa. Deve-se notar também que, onde o número sete e dez são usados juntos, o sete representa aquilo que é mais elevado ou superior, e o dez representa algo de natureza subordinada.

As Dez Pragas derramadas sobre o Egito expressaram plenamente os julgamentos de Deus sobre o Egito — tudo o que era necessário para humilhar plenamente os deuses falsos do Egito e quebrantar o poder do Egito sobre Israel, o povo de Deus. As "Dez Palavras" constituíam as leis básicas do pacto da Lei, sendo as aproximadamente 600 outras leis apenas uma ampliação delas, elucidando-as e explicando a sua aplicação. (Êx 20:3-17; 34:28) Jesus usou o número dez em diversas das suas ilustrações para indicar inteireza ou totalidade de algo. — Mt 25:1; Lu 15:8; 19:13, 16, 17.

Uma das feras da visão de Daniel e certas feras descritas em Revelação tinham dez chifres. Evidentemente, estes representavam todas as potências, ou "reis", da terra que constituem o arranjo animalesco. (Da 7:7, 20, 24; Re 12:3; 13:1; 17:3, 7, 12) A plenitude da prova ou do período de prova que Deus determina para os seu servos ou permite que sofram é expresso em Revelação 2:10: "Não tenhas medo das coisas que estás para sofrer. Eis que o Diabo estará lançando alguns de vós na prisão, para que sejais plenamente provados, e para que tenhais tribulação por dez dias."

Doze. O patriarca Jacó teve 12 filhos varões, que se tornaram a base das 12 tribos de Israel. Os descendentes foram organizados por Deus, sob o pacto da Lei, como nação de Deus. Portanto, doze parece representar um divinamente constituído arranjo completo, equilibrado. (Gên 35:22; 49:28) Jeová escolheu 12 apóstolos, que constituem os alicerces secundários da Nova Jerusalém, edificada sobre Jesus Cristo. (Mt 10:2-4; Re 21:14) Há 12 tribos "dos filhos de Israel" espiritual, cada tribo tendo 12.000 membros. — Re 7:4-8.

Múltiplos de 12 também são às vezes significativos. Davi estabeleceu 24 turmas do sacerdócio para servirem em rodízio no templo mais tarde construído por Salomão. (1Cr 24:1-18) Isto ajuda a identificar os "vinte e quatro anciãos" sentados ao redor do trono de Deus, trajados de roupas exteriores brancas e usando coroas. (Re 4:4) Aos seguidores das pisadas de Jesus Cristo, seus irmãos espirituais, promete-se um reinado e sacerdócio junto com ele nos céus. Esses anciãos não podem ser apenas os apóstolos, que eram só 12 em número. Portanto, evidentemente, representam o inteiro grupo do "sacerdócio real", os 144.000 (conforme representados nas 24 turmas sacerdotais que serviam no templo) nas suas posições nos céus, como coroados reis e sacerdotes. — 1Pe 2:9; Re 7:4-8; 20:6.

Quarenta. Em uns poucos casos, períodos de julgamento e de punição parecem estar associados com o número 40. (Gên 7:4; Ez 29:11, 2) Nínive recebeu 40 dias para se arrepender. (Jon 3:4) Outro uso do número 40 salienta um paralelo na vida de Jesus Cristo com a de Moisés, que tipificava a Cristo. Ambos os homens passaram por 40 dias de jejum. — Êx 24:18; 34:28; De 9:9, 11; Mt 4:1, 2.

NÚMEROS, LIVRO DE. O quarto livro do Pentateuco. Deriva seu nome dos dois censos dos filhos de Israel mencionados nele. Narra eventos que ocorreram na região do monte Sinai, durante as peregrinações de Israel no ermo e nas planícies de Moabe. A narrativa abrange principalmente um período de 38 anos e 9 meses, de 1512 a 1473 AEC. (Núm 1:1; De 1:3, 4) Os acontecimentos narrados em Números 7:1-88 e 9:1-15, embora tenham ocorrido antes dos eventos do contexto, fornecem informações de fundo que constituem uma parte essencial do livro.

Escritor. A escrita do livro de Números, desde tempos antigos, tem sido atribuída a Moisés. A ampla evidência fornecida pelo próprio livro confirma isso. Não há nenhum indício de outra vida levada por Israel do que a no Egito e depois no ermo. Ao comentar a época em que se construiu Hébron, o escritor usa a cidade egípcia de Zoã como ponto de referência. (Núm 13:22) A idade de Zoã, razoavelmente, seria de conhecimento geral de um homem como Moisés, que "foi instruído em toda a sabedoria dos egípcios". — At 7:22.

Certas ordens registradas no livro de Números são exclusivas da situação de uma nação em movimento. Estas incluem os prescritos acampamentos tribais (Núm 1:52, 53), a ordem de marcha (2:9, 16, 17, 24, 31) e os sinais de trombeta para convocar a assembleia e para levantar acampamento (10:2-6). Também, a lei sobre a quarentena é fraseada para se ajustar à vida num acampamento. (5:2-4) Diversas outras ordens são declaradas dum modo que exige uma aplicação futura quando os israelitas morassem na Terra da Promessa. Entre estas estão: o uso de trombetas para convocar à guerra (10:9), a separação de 48 cidades para os levitas (35:2-8), a ação a ser tomada contra a idolatria e os habitantes de Canaã (33:50-56), a escolha de seis cidades de refúgio, instruções sobre como lidar com casos de pessoas que afirmassem ser homicidas acidentais (35:9-33), e leis que envolviam heranças e o casamento de herdeiras (27:8-11; 36:5-9).

Além disso, o registro dos acampamentos israelitas é definitivamente atribuído a Moisés (Núm 33:2), e as palavras concludentes do livro de Números também indicam ser ele o escritor do relato. — 36:13.

Autenticidade. A autenticidade deste livro é confirmada além de qualquer dúvida. Notável é a sua candura. Não se escondem condutas erradas e derrotas. (Núm 11:1-5, 10, 32-35; 14:2, 11, 45) Até mesmo as transgressões do próprio Moisés, de seu irmão Arão, de sua irmã Miriã, e de seus sobrinhos Nadabe e Abiú são expostas. (3:3, 4; 12:1-15; 20:2-13) Várias vezes, os acontecimentos registrados neste livro são repetidos nos Salmos (78:14-41; 95:7-11; 105:40, 41; 106:13-33; 135:10, 11; 136:16-20). Por suas alusões a grandes eventos e outros pormenores registrados em Números, Josué (4:12; 14:2), Jeremias (2Rs 18:4), Neemias (9:19-22), Davi (Sal 95:7-11), Isaías (48:21), Ezequiel (20:13-24), Oseias (9:10), Amós (5:25), Miqueias (6:5), o mártir cristão Estêvão (At 7:36), os apóstolos Paulo (1Co 10:1-11) e Pedro (2Pe 2:15, 16), o discípulo Judas (v 11) e o Filho de Deus (Jo 3:14; Re 2:14) mostraram que aceitavam este registro como parte da Palavra inspirada de Deus. Há também a profecia de Balaão a respeito da estrela que avançaria de Jacó, profecia que teve seu cumprimento inicial quando Davi se tornou rei e depois subjugou os moabitas e os edomitas. — Núm 24:15-19; 2Sa 8:2, 13, 14.

Valor. O livro de Números ilustra fortemente a importância da obediência a Jeová, do respeito por ele e seus servos, da necessidade de se ter fé e de se prevenir contra homens ímpios (Núm 13:25–14:38; 22:7, 8, 22; 26:9, 10; He 3:7–4:11; 2Pe 2:12-16; Ju 11; Re 2:14), de não se pôr Jeová à prova, por falta de fé (Núm 21:5, 6; 1Co 10:9), bem como de refrear-se de resmungar (Núm 14:2, 36, 37; 16:1-3, 41; 17:5, 10; 1Co 10:10, 11) e da imoralidade sexual (Núm 25:1-9; 31:16; 1Co 10:6, 8). Os tratos de Jeová com Israel evidenciam grande poder, misericórdia e benevolência, bem como ser ele vagaroso em irar-se, embora não se refreie de punir os que o merecem. (Núm 14:17-20) Além disso, a posição e o ministério de Moisés (Núm 12:7; He 3:2-6), a milagrosa provisão de água saída dum rochedo (Núm 20:7-11; 1Co 10:4), erguer-se a serpente de cobre (Núm 21:8, 9; Jo 3:14, 15) e da água de purificação (Núm 19:2-22; He 9:13, 14) forneceram quadros proféticos que se cumpriram em Cristo Jesus.

O relato fornece matéria de fundo que esclarece outros textos. Mostra em que base o Rei Ezequias, de Judá, pôde providenciar a Páscoa em 14 de zive (iiar), em vez de em 14 de nisã (abibe). (Núm 9:10, 11; 2Cr 30:15) A plena consideração do nazireado (Núm 6:2-21) explica por que Sansão e Samuel não deviam cortar o cabelo (Jz 13:4, 5; 1Sa 1:11), e por que João, o Batizador, não devia tomar bebida inebriante. (Lu 1:15) Para ver outros exemplos, compare Números 2:18-23 com Salmo 80:2; Números 15:38 com Mateus 23:5; Números 17:8-10 com Hebreus 9:4; Números 18:26 com Hebreus 7:5-9; Números 18:31 com 1 Coríntios 9:13, 14; Números 28:9, 10, com Mateus 12:5.

DESTAQUES DE NÚMEROS

Narrativa histórica que demonstra quão vital é ser obediente a Jeová em todas as circunstâncias e respeitar seus representantes.

Abrange os eventos durante a maior parte do tempo em que Israel esteve no ermo, em caminho para a Terra da Promessa.

As tribos de Israel são registradas e organizadas.

- Cerca de um ano após o Êxodo do Egito, todos os varões israelitas de 20 anos de idade para cima são registrados, exceto os levitas. (1:1-49)
- A cada divisão de três tribos se designa um lugar para acampar e uma posição na ordem de marcha. (2:1-34)
- Os levitas são postos à parte para ajudar os sacerdotes; todos os levitas de mais de um mês de idade são registrados; são tomados por Jeová em troca dos primogênitos das outras tribos. (3:1-51)
- Os varões de Coate, Gérson e Merari, os três filhos de Levi, de 30 a 50 anos de idade, são contados e recebem designações de serviço. (4:1-49)
- Outro censo dos israelitas é feito pouco antes da sua entrada na Terra da Promessa. (26:1-65)

Os israelitas recebem ordens divinas a respeito da sua adoração e dos seus tratos de uns com os outros.

- Estabelecem-se requisitos para os nazireus. (6:1-21)
- Celebra-se a Páscoa; fazem-se provisões para que todos os impuros ou em viagem distante possam celebrá-la um mês depois de 14 de nisã. (9:1-14)
- Dão-se diversos regulamentos a respeito dos deveres e dos privilégios dos sacerdotes e levitas, inclusive para a preparação da água de purificação e seu uso. (18:1–19:22)
- Alistam-se as ofertas que têm de ser apresentadas diariamente, todos os sábados, no início de cada mês, durante as festividades e durante o sétimo mês. (28:1–29:40)
- Registram-se as ordens de Jeová referentes aos votos. (30:1-16)
- Os culpados têm de confessar e compensar os prejudicados. (5:5-8)
- Estabelece-se o procedimento para tratar de casos em que a esposa é suspeita de adultério secreto. (5:11-31)
- Providenciam-se seis cidades de refúgio. (35:9-34)

Os israelitas mostram falta de apreço pelas provisões de Jeová e desobedecem às suas ordens.

- O povo queixa-se do maná e almeja carne; quando Jeová provê codornizes, muitos agem com extrema gulodice e são punidos com a morte. (11:4-34)
- Eles acreditam no relato mau dos dez espias temerosos e querem voltar ao Egito; Moisés tem de interceder por eles. (13:1–14:19)
- Quando aquela geração rebelde é sentenciada a perambular e morrer no ermo, o povo tenta entrar na Terra da Promessa sem a bênção de Jeová e sofre uma derrota militar. (14:26-45)

Há falta de respeito para com os representantes visíveis de Jeová.

- Miriã e Arão falam contra Moisés; Jeová golpeia Miriã com lepra. (12:1-15)
- Corá, Datã, Abirão, Om e 250 maiorais se levantam contra Moisés e Arão; Jeová executa os rebeldes, e isto dá margem para mais resmungos; outros 14.700 morrem. (16:1-50)
- Em Cades, os israelitas se queixam amargamente de Moisés e de Arão por causa da falta de água; quando Jeová fornece milagrosamente um suprimento de água, Moisés e Arão deixam de santificar o nome de Jeová e assim perdem o privilégio de entrar na Terra da Promessa. (20:1-13)
- Os israelitas se cansam e falam contra Jeová e Moisés; sofrem uma praga de serpentes e muitos morrem; Moisés intercede pelo povo, e todo aquele que foi picado pode salvar-se por olhar para uma serpente de cobre. (21:4-9)

Jeová abençoa Israel, mas insiste na devoção exclusiva ao passo que a nação se prepara para entrar em Canaã.

- Jeová dá a Israel a vitória sobre o rei de Arade. (21:1-3)
- Israel derrota Síon e Ogue, tomando posse da terra deles. (21:21-35)
- Balaque contrata Balaão para amaldiçoar os israelitas; Jeová o obriga em vez disso a abençoar Israel. (22:2–24:25)
- Mulheres moabitas engodam homens israelitas à idolatria e à fornicação; 24.000 morrem por assim caírem na apostasia; Jeová se abranda quando Fineias não tolera rivalidade para com Ele. (25:1-18)

NUNE [נ; final, ן]. A 14.ª letra do alfabeto hebraico. É uma das cinco letras hebraicas que têm formas diferentes quando usadas como última letra duma palavra. No hebraico, ela é a letra inicial de cada um dos oito versículos do Salmo 119:105-112. — Veja HEBRAICO.

NUVEM. Massa visível de partículas, usualmente de água ou de gelo, suspensa alto no ar. A principal palavra hebraica para "nuvem" é ʽa·nán, referindo-se a maioria das suas ocorrências à coluna de "nuvem" que conduzia os israelitas através do ermo desértico. (Êx 13:21) Uma "camada fina de pó", "nuvens", "céu nublado" e "céu" são indicados por formas da palavra hebraica shá·hhaq, derivada duma raiz que significa "esmiuçar; desgastar". (Is 40:15; Sal 36:5; Je 51:9; Sal 89:37; Sal 18:42; Jó 14:19) As palavras gregas para "nuvem" são né·fos e ne·fé·le, ao passo que gnó·fos se refere a uma "nuvem escura". — He 12:1; Mt 17:5; He 12:18.

Em Israel, desde meados de junho até meados de setembro, o céu geralmente está limpo, com exceção de nuvens de pó, que aparecem especialmente perto do fim da estação seca, por causa dos ventos quentes do L procedentes do deserto. Também, especialmente em agosto, há ocasionais nuvens cirros-estratos procedentes do O, que não trazem chuva. Até mesmo estas são bem-vindas para os habitantes, porque fornecem um pouco de sombra e assim trazem um ligeiro alívio do calor. (Is 25:5; compare isso com Jó 7:2.) Em setembro ou outubro, as nuvens começam a surgir com mais frequência no horizonte ocidental, formando-se sobre o Mediterrâneo, embora muitas vezes a estação chuvosa só comece realmente em meados de outubro. Mas, durante o verão, em algumas partes do país, há uma cerração de manhã, que desaparece logo com o nascer do sol. — Os 6:4.

Durante a estação das chuvas, pode surgir rapidamente um temporal, começando com uma pequeníssima nuvem no O. (1Rs 18:44, 45) A esperança dos lavradores aumentava quando uma nuvem surgia nas regiões ocidentais. (Lu 12:54) Todavia, quem hesitasse em fazer a colheita por estar olhando para nuvens incertas sairia perdendo. Isto é usado como admoestação para os servos de Deus, para que prossigam com seu trabalho em todas as condições. — Ec 11:4.

A sabedoria e a potência de Jeová Deus, o Criador, são representadas pelo controle que exerce sobre as nuvens. Ele as chama de "talhas de água" que entornam e despejam seu conteúdo sobre a terra. Ele diz: "Quem pode contar exatamente as nuvens em sabedoria, ou as talhas de água do céu — quem as pode entornar?" (Jó 38:37) Descreve o processo da evaporação e da condensação, dizendo: "Ele puxa para cima as gotas de água; filtram como chuva para a sua neblina, de modo que as nuvens pingam, destilam abundantemente sobre a humanidade. Deveras, quem pode entender as camadas de nuvens, os estrondos desde a sua barraca?" — Jó 36:27-29.

Uso Ilustrativo. Jeová, a quem nenhum homem pode ver e continuar vivo, simboliza sua presença por uma nuvem. No monte Sinai, por ocasião de se dar a Lei a Israel, uma nuvem escura cobria o monte; da nuvem procediam relâmpagos e trovões, e o clangor de trombeta, e uma alta voz. (Êx 19:16-19; 24:15; He 12:18, 19) Jeová disse a Moisés que ele aparecia desta maneira para falar-lhe e para que, ao ouvir isso, o povo depositasse fé em Moisés como representante de Deus. — Êx 19:9.

Jeová enviou um anjo numa nuvem como "seu próprio mensageiro pessoal" para conduzir Israel para fora do Egito e através do ermo. (Is 63:9) Por meio do anjo, de forma representativa, Jeová olhou para fora da nuvem para lançar o acampamento dos egípcios em confusão. (Êx 13:21, 22; 14:19, 24, 25) Jeová usou também uma nuvem para batizar os israelitas como nação em Moisés, havendo águas em ambos os lados e a nuvem acima e atrás deles. Assim foram "batizados em Moisés, por meio da nuvem e do mar". — 1Co 10:2: veja também Núm 14:14.

Quando se montou o tabernáculo no ermo, a nuvem residia sobre ele e "a glória de Jeová enchia o tabernáculo", de modo que Moisés não podia entrar nele. (Êx 40:34, 35; compare isso com 1Rs 8:10-12; Re 15:8.) Depois disso, a nuvem erguia-se sobre o Santíssimo, no qual havia a Arca do Pacto, e esta nuvem tornava-se uma coluna de fogo à noite. Sem dúvida, esta nuvem era visível de todas as partes do acampamento, marcando o centro deste. Quando ela se elevava, Israel preparava-se para levantar acampamento. Quando se movia, eles seguiam a sua direção até o próximo lugar de acampamento, embora o lugar exato de se armar o acampamento talvez fosse escolhido com a ajuda de Hobabe, que conhecia bem aquela terra, inclusive as aguadas e outras particularidades necessárias para um acampamento de proporções tão enormes. — Êx 40:34-38; Núm 10:29-32.

Dentro do Santíssimo, sobre a Arca do Pacto, havia uma nuvem muito brilhante, a única luz para iluminar este compartimento. (Le 16:2) No hebraico pós-bíblico era chamado de Shechinah. No Dia da Expiação, quando o sumo sacerdote entrava no Santíssimo com o sangue de animais, ele estava simbolicamente na presença de Jeová. Em outras ocasiões, quando não entrava no Santíssimo, mas ficava diante da cortina para apresentar um assunto de importância a Jeová, a fim de obter a sua resposta, ele era considerado como estando em pé diante de Jeová. — Núm 27:21.

Num caso, ouviu-se a voz do próprio Jeová de dentro duma nuvem luminosa, expressando aprovação do seu Filho unigênito. Tal era a nuvem brilhante sobre Jesus e seus três apóstolos, Pedro, Tiago e João, no monte da transfiguração. — Mt 17:5.

Quando Jesus subiu ao céu, então, segundo o registro, "uma nuvem o arrebatou para cima, fora da vista deles". (At 1:9) Os discípulos não viram Jesus indo embora em cima duma nuvem, mas, antes, a nuvem obscureceu-o da vista deles. Isto nos ajuda a entender as palavras de Jesus a respeito da sua presença: "Verão o Filho do homem vindo numa nuvem, com poder e grande glória", e a declaração de Revelação (Apocalipse): "Ele vem com as nuvens e todo olho o verá." (Lu 21:27; Mt 24:30; Re 1:7) Em casos passados, nuvens representavam presença invisível; mas os observadores podiam "ver" com seus "olhos" mentais o significado disso. Neste caso, as ocorrências físicas visíveis induziriam o observador a "ver" ou reconhecer que Cristo está invisivelmente presente. — Veja também Mt 24; Mr 13; Re 14:14.

Quando Jesus veio à terra, com todas as identificações do Messias, os judeus negaram-se egoistamente a reconhecê-lo porque exigiam como prova do Messiado dele que cumprisse literalmente a visão de Daniel 7:13, 14, em que se mostra o Filho do homem chegar com as nuvens do céu perante o Antigo de Dias, Jeová Deus, para receber seu reino. Confundiram a presença dele no poder do Reino com a sua primeira vinda. Ele lhes disse que não se lhes daria nenhum sinal assim. — Lu 11:29.

Favor. "Nuvens" têm uma boa conotação para aqueles que agradam a Deus. Provérbios 16:15 diz que a boa vontade do rei "é como a nuvem da chuva primaveril". O efeito da nuvem, de cobrir e ocultar a visibilidade, é usado para descrever a ação de Jeová para com os pecados do seu povo, obliterando as transgressões deles "como que com uma nuvem". (Is 44:22) Inversamente, ele bloqueia como que com uma massa de nuvem a aproximação dos que são rebeldes, para que suas orações não passem. — La 3:44.

Transitoriedade, inconsistência. As nuvens nevoentas da madrugada, que rapidamente desaparecem, são usadas em sentido figurado para representar a benevolência inconstante e breve de Efraim e de Judá para com Deus, bem como para representar a pouca duração de Efraim por se ter voltado para a adoração falsa. — Os 6:4; 13:3.

O homem que se jacta das suas dádivas, mas que nunca as dá, é tão desapontador como uma nuvem sem chuva. (Pr 25:14) Aqueles que professam ser cristãos, mas que se entregam à imoralidade, que praticam corrupção e contaminam a congregação, por seguirem avidamente seus desejos carnais, são comparados a nuvens sem água levadas pelos ventos. — Ju 12; veja BRUMA, NEBLINA, NÉVOA.

O

OADE. Terceiro filho alistado de Simeão. (Gên 46:10; Êx 6:15) Seu nome não consta como fundador duma família na posterior lista de recenseamento. — Núm 26:12-14.

OBADIAS [Servo de Jeová].

1. Cabeça de família na tribo de Issacar; filho de Izraías e descendente de Tola. — 1Cr 7:1-3.

2. Zebulonita cujo filho foi príncipe dessa tribo no reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 27:19, 22.

3. Poderoso guerreiro gadita que atravessou o Jordão na cheia e apoiou Davi enquanto este vivia como fugitivo do furor de Saul. — 1Cr 12:8, 9, 14, 15.

4. Mordomo doméstico do Rei Acabe. Embora o Rei Acabe e Jezabel praticassem iniquidades, Obadias temia grandemente a Jeová, ocultando 100 profetas de Jeová, "aos cinquenta, numa caverna", quando Jezabel ordenara que todos fossem mortos. Durante a seca divinamente imposta e predita por Elias, Acabe, amo de Obadias, repartiu certo território com ele, e cada qual estava à procura de capim para alimentar o gado, ocasião em que Elias encontrou-se com Obadias. Elias não fora visto por Acabe durante a seca, um período de uns três anos. Ao ser mandado informar a Acabe que Elias tinha voltado, Obadias, com muito medo, hesitou em ir até que lhe foi dada a certeza de que o profeta não partiria, pois Acabe certamente mataria seu servo se esta notícia se mostrasse falsa. — 1Rs 18:1-16.

5. Príncipe enviado por Jeosafá para ensinar a lei de Jeová nas cidades de Judá. — 2Cr 17:7, 9.

6. Descendente distante de Saul e de Jonatã, na tribo de Benjamim. — 1Cr 8:33-38; 9:44.

7. Levita, da tribo de Merari, um dos supervisores dos consertos que o Rei Josias ordenou que fossem feitos no templo. — 2Cr 34:8, 12.

8. Profeta de Jeová e o escritor do quarto dentre os livros proféticos chamados menores. (Ob 1)

Nada se sabe sobre a pessoa deste profeta do sétimo século AEC. — Veja OBADIAS, LIVRO DE.

9. Levita que voltou de Babilônia e morou em Jerusalém. (1Cr 9:2, 3, 14, 16) Ele é evidentemente chamado de Abda em Neemias 11:17. Possivelmente o mesmo que o N.º 13 abaixo.

10. Descendente pós-exílico de Davi. — 1Cr 3:5, 9, 10, 21.

11. Cabeça da casa paterna de Joabe que conduziu 218 machos dessa família de volta a Jerusalém com Esdras, em 468 AEC; filho de Jeiel. — Esd 8:1, 9.

12. Um dos sacerdotes (ou seu descendente) que concordaram com o pacto de fidelidade feito pelos exilados que retornaram, sob o governo de Neemias. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 5, 8.

13. Porteiro levita nos dias de Neemias e Esdras. (Ne 12:25, 26) Possivelmente o mesmo que o N.º 9 acima.

OBADIAS, LIVRO DE. O mais curto livro profético das Escrituras Hebraicas. Escrito por Obadias (a respeito de quem nada, exceto o nome, é conhecido), este livro contém uma proclamação do julgamento de Jeová contra Edom, apresenta a razão para tal julgamento e aponta para a restauração da "casa de Jacó". A extinção dos edomitas como povo e a restauração dos israelitas na sua terra confirmam o cumprimento exato da profecia de Obadias. — Ob 17, 18; veja EDOM, EDOMITAS.

O motivo da profecia foi o tratamento 'nada fraterno' que os edomitas dispensaram aos "filhos de Judá" quando estes sofreram derrota. Os edomitas, através de seu ancestral, Esaú, eram aparentados aos israelitas. Os edomitas regozijaram-se com a calamidade de Judá, participaram em tomar despojos dos judeus, impediram-nos de fugir da terra e até os entregaram ao inimigo. (Ob 12-14) Como fica evidente numa comparação da profecia de Obadias com as palavras de Jeremias (25:15-17, 21, 27-29; 49:7-22) e de Ezequiel (25:12-14; 35:1-15), isto deve ter acontecido por ocasião da destruição de Jerusalém pelos exércitos babilônios e, por conseguinte, situaria a composição do livro por volta do ano 607 AEC.

Visto que muitas das coisas preditas na profecia de Obadias também foram preditas no livro de Jeremias, isto tornava duplamente certo o cumprimento da palavra de Jeová a respeito de Edom. — Veja Gên 41:32.

OBAL. O 8.º dos 13 filhos alistados de Joctã, cada um dos quais deu origem a uma das 70 famílias pós-diluvianas; descendente de Sem. O lugar exato em que a tribo de Obal se estabeleceu é incerto, mas nomes similares aparecem no SO da Arábia iemenita. — Gên 10:21, 25-30; 1Cr 1:20, 22.

OBEDE [Servo; Servidor].

1. Descendente de Judá; pai de Jeú e filho de Eflal, da família de Jerameel. — 1Cr 2:3, 25, 37, 38.

2. Pai de Jessé, que foi pai do Rei Davi. Obede foi filho de Boaz com sua esposa Rute e antepassado de Jesus Cristo. — Ru 4:13-17, 21, 22; 1Cr 2:12; Mt 1:5; Lu 3:32.

3. Um dos poderosos das forças militares de Davi. — 1Cr 11:26, 47.

4. Levita da família de Corá; neto de Obede-Edom e filho de Semaías. Serviu como porteiro "na casa de Jeová". — 1Cr 26:1, 4, 7, 12.

DESTAQUES DE OBADIAS

Julgamento de Jeová contra Edom e a promessa de restauração para o povo de Jeová.

Escrito por volta de 607 AEC, ano em que os babilônios desolaram Jerusalém.

Participação de Edom na violência feita aos descendentes de Jacó.

- Quando Jerusalém foi conquistada e seu povo foi levado ao cativeiro, Edom ficou parado de lado. (vv 10, 11)
- Ele não devia ter-se alegrado maliciosamente com a calamidade de Judá, participando em saquear o povo de Deus e entregando os sobreviventes ao inimigo. (vv 12-14)

A calamidade sobrevirá a Edom.

- Jeová convoca as nações para se levantarem contra Edom em batalha. (v 1)
- Apesar de sua posição aparentemente segura, far-se-á que Edom desça. (vv 2-4)
- Ladrões ou ceifeiros levariam apenas o que desejassem e deixariam algo para trás; quando Edom cair, ele será completamente saqueado; será enganado por aqueles com quem entrou num pacto, e seus sábios e poderosos sofrerão destruição. (vv 5-9)
- A casa de Esaú receberá a mesma espécie de tratamento que dispensou a Judá; a casa de Esaú deixará de existir. (vv 15, 18)

A casa de Jacó será restaurada.

- Sião se tornará santa; a casa de Jacó será o fogo que consome a casa de Esaú, como restolho. (vv 17, 18)
- O povo restaurado de Jeová tomará posse "das coisas a serem possuídas por eles", incluindo a "região montanhosa de Esaú". (vv. 19, 20)
- O reinado se tornará de Jeová. (v 21)

5. Pai dum certo Azarias, um dos "chefes de cem" que ajudou o sumo sacerdote Jeoiada a depor a Rainha Atalia para que Jeoás pudesse ser empossado qual rei. — 2Cr 23:1, 12-15, 20; 24:1.

OBEDE-EDOM [que significa "Servo de Edom"].

1. Geteu em cuja casa a Arca do Pacto foi mantida por três meses, depois de sua quase derrubada e da morte acompanhante de Uzá. Durante o tempo em que ela esteve ali, Obede-Edom e sua casa foram abençoados por Jeová, e, quando Davi soube disto, ele considerou isso como indício de que Jeová era favorável a que se trouxesse a arca sagrada para Jerusalém. — 2Sa 6:10-12; 1Cr 13:13, 14; 15:25.

Obede-Edom era "geteu". Este termo normalmente designava filisteus de Gate, mas pode referir-se também a alguém de Gate-Rimom, cidade levita em Dã, designada aos coatitas. (Jos 21:20, 23, 24) Visto que se lhe havia confiado cuidar da Arca, ele tinha de ser levita, e, assim, deve ter sido um geteu de Gate-Rimom, em vez de um geteu filisteu, de Gate.

O nome Obede-Edom é encontrado várias vezes entre os músicos e os porteiros levitas do período davídico. Há, pelo menos, dois de tais indivíduos mencionados (1Cr 15:21, 24; 16:38), mas, além destes casos, é impossível determinar se os diversos outros textos referem-se a qualquer um destes, ou ainda a outros indivíduos contemporâneos. Assim, Obede-Edom, o geteu, possivelmente é o mesmo que o N.º 2 ou o N.º 3 abaixo.

2. Músico e porteiro que acompanhou a procissão que levou a Arca a Jerusalém. (1Cr 15:18, 21) Era provavelmente o músico que continuou a servir diante da tenda da Arca, em Jerusalém. (1Cr 16:4, 5, 37, 38a) Possivelmente o mesmo que o N.º 1 acima.

3. Porteiro na mesma procissão. (1Cr 15:24) Talvez também fosse o "filho de Jedutum". (1Cr 16:38b) Possivelmente o mesmo que o N.º 1 acima ou o N.º 4 abaixo.

4. Coraíta da divisão permanente de porteiros que, junto com 62 parentes, foi designado a guardar o lado S dos pátios do santuário em Jerusalém. — 1Cr 26:1, 4-8, 13, 15; veja o N.º 3 acima.

5. Guardião do ouro, da prata e de outros objetos na casa de Jeová durante o reinado do Rei Amazias. Quando Jeoás, de Israel, invadiu Jerusalém entre os anos 858 e 844 AEC, esses bens, e possivelmente o próprio Obede-Edom, foram levados para Samaria. — 2Cr 25:23, 24.

OBEDIÊNCIA. Submissão à autoridade, fazer o que é ordenado, cumprir o que se exige ou abster-se do que é proibido.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a ideia de obediência é expressa por sha·máʽ, que significa, basicamente, "ouvir" ou "escutar". Assim, sha·máʽ, às vezes, refere-se ao simples ouvir, a ficar cônscio de algo por meio da audição. (Gên 3:10; 21:26; 34:5) Mas, quando aquilo que é falado expressa vontade, desejo, instrução, ou ordem, então o sentido do termo hebraico é acatar ou obedecer àquele que fala. Adão 'escutou' a voz de sua esposa, isto é, acedeu ao desejo dela de que ele se juntasse a ela em comer o fruto proibido. (Gên 3:17; compare isso com 21:12.) José recusou-se a 'escutar' aos assédios da esposa de Potifar. (Gên 39:10) O Rei Saul temia o povo e, 'assim, obedeceu [escutou] à sua voz', pondo de lado a ordem de Deus ao assim agir. (1Sa 15:24) A promessa de Jeová a Abraão a respeito dum descendente foi-lhe concedida porque Abraão 'escutou', ou obedeceu, à voz de Jeová, guardando os Seus mandamentos. — Gên 22:18; 26:4, 5; compare isso com He 11:8; veja OUVIDO.

Usa-se o mesmo termo hebraico com referência a Deus 'ouvir' ou 'escutar' os homens. Nesse caso, o termo português "obediência" não é apropriado, visto que os humanos não podem dar ordens a Deus, mas podem apenas pedir-lhe ou suplicar-lhe algo. Assim, quando Deus disse a Abraão que, "quanto a Ismael, eu te ouvi", ele dizia a Abraão que tinha dado consideração ao pedido deste, que faria algo a respeito. (Gên 17:20) De modo similar, Deus 'ouviu' ou respondeu ao apelo de pessoas em tempos de dificuldades ou de aflição, respondendo a seus apelos quando ele achava apropriado mostrar misericórdia. — Gên 16:11; 29:33; 21:17; Êx 3:7-9; compare isso com De 1:45.

Similar a sha·máʽ, um verbo grego que expressa a ideia de obedecer (hy·pa·koú·o; forma substantiva: hy·pa·ko·é) significa literalmente "ouvir sob", isto é, ouvir de modo submisso ou atender (como em Atos 12:13). Outro termo que transmite a ideia de obediência é pei·tho, que significa 'persuadir'. (Mt 27:20) Na voz passiva e na média significa não só ser persuadido (Lu 16:31), confiar (Mt 27:43), crer (At 17:4), mas também atender (At 5:40), obedecer (At 5:36, 37). Deste termo provém a forma negativa a·pei·thé·o (que significa descrer [At 14:2; 19:9] ou desobedecer [Jo 3:36]), bem como outros termos aparentados.

Disto se pode depreender que a obediência, conforme expressa nas línguas originais das Escrituras, depende primeiro de se ouvir, isto é, de se receber informações ou conhecimento (veja Lu 12:47, 48; 1Ti 1:13), e, então, de a pessoa submeter-se à vontade ou ao desejo daquele que fala ou, de outra forma, expressa tal vontade ou desejo. A submissão, por sua vez, depende do reconhecimento da autoridade ou do direito que essa pessoa tem de pedir ou exigir a resposta indicada, como também do desejo ou da disposição do ouvinte de satisfazer a vontade dessa pessoa. Conforme indicado pelos termos gregos pei·tho e a·pei·thé·o, crença, confiança e crédito também estão envolvidos.

A Obediência a Deus É Essencial à Vida. Deus tem primazia na obediência de todas as suas criaturas. Elas, de direito, devem-lhe obediência implícita como seu Criador, a Fonte da qual a vida se deriva e de quem depende a vida. (Sal 95:6-8) Por ser o Deus Todo-sábio e Todo-Poderoso, o que Ele diz merece o máximo de respeito e atenção. O pai humano espera, corretamente, que suas palavras sejam cumpridas pelos filhos, e, se um filho é lento em acatá-las, o pai poderá dizer, de modo enfático: "Está ouvindo?" O Pai celestial, com muito maior direito, exige atenção e acolhida receptivas a suas expressões. — Veja De 21:18-21; Pr 4:1; Is 64:8; 1Pe 1:14.

Não existe substituto para a obediência nem é possível granjear o favor de Deus sem ela. Como Samuel disse ao Rei Saul: "Tem Jeová tanto agrado em ofertas queimadas e em sacrifícios como em que se obedeça [forma de sha·má'] à voz de Jeová? Eis que obedecer [literalmente: escutar] é melhor do que um sacrifício, prestar atenção é melhor do que a gordura de carneiros." (1Sa 15:22) Deixar de obedecer é rejeitar a palavra de Jeová, é demonstrar que a pessoa realmente não crê, não confia, nem tem fé nessa palavra e em sua Fonte. Assim, quem deixa de obedecer não difere de quem pratica a adivinhação ou utiliza ídolos. (1Sa 15:23; compare isso com Ro 6:16.) Expressões verbais de concordância nada significam se não são acompanhadas pela ação exigida; a falta de acatamento demonstra falta de crença ou de respeito pela fonte das instruções. (Mt 21:28-32) Os que se contentam apenas em ouvir e aceitar mentalmente a verdade de Deus, mas que não praticam o que ela exige, estão enganando a si mesmos com falsos raciocínios e não recebem bênção alguma. (Tg 1:22-25) O Filho de Deus deixou claro que mesmo os que fizessem coisas similares às ordenadas, mas, evidentemente, de modo errado ou com motivação errada, jamais teriam permissão de entrar no Reino, mas seriam completamente rejeitados. — Mt 7:15-23.

Neutralizar a desobediência devida ao pecado herdado. Já no princípio, Deus informou ao homem que a obediência era fundamental, um assunto de vida ou morte. (Gên 2:16, 17) A mesma regra aplica-se aos filhos espirituais de Deus. (1Pe 3:19, 20; Ju 6; Mt 25:41) A desobediência deliberada do homem perfeito Adão, qual cabeça responsável por Eva e progenitor ou fonte de vida da família humana, resultou no pecado e na morte para toda a sua descendência. (Ro 5:12, 19) Assim, os homens, por natureza, são "filhos da desobediência" e "filhos do furor", merecendo o desfavor de Deus por violarem os padrões justos dele. Deixar de resistir a essa inerente inclinação à desobediência é o proceder que conduz, por fim, à destruição. — Ef 2:2, 3; 5:6-11; compare isso com Gál 6:7-9.

Jeová Deus, misericordiosamente, tem fornecido os meios para se combater o pecado na carne e para se obter o perdão de transgressões que resultam da imperfeição e não da desobediência deliberada. Por meio do seu espírito santo, Deus supre a força para a justiça, que habilita homens imperfeitos a produzir bons frutos. (Gál 5:16-24; Tit 3:3-7) O perdão de pecados vem de se exercer fé no sacrifício resgatador de Cristo, e tal fé, em si, é um empecilho à transgressão e um estímulo à obediência. (1Pe 1:2) Assim, Paulo refere-se à "obediência [ouvir de modo submisso] pela fé". (Ro 16:26; 1:16; compare isso com At 6:7.) Em Romanos 10:16-21, ele mostra que o ouvir, conjugado à fé, produz obediência, e que a desobediência (descrença [de a·pei·thé·o]) dos israelitas foi devida à falta de fé. (Veja He 3:18, 19.) Visto que a genuína fé é "a expectativa certa de coisas esperadas" e "a demonstração evidente de realidades, embora não observadas", e visto que ela exige que se creia que Deus existe "e que se torna o recompensador dos que seriamente o buscam", aqueles que têm fé são induzidos a obedecer, tendo confiança e certeza no que diz respeito às bênçãos que resultam da obediência. — He 11:1, 6.

Em harmonia com isto, a comunicação de Deus com os homens não é simplesmente uma série de ordens abruptas, como as de um ditador insensível. Deus não quer a espécie de obediência que se consegue dum animal, com freio e bocado. (Veja Tg 3:3; Sal 32:8, 9.) O que se exige não é obediência mecânica ou de má vontade, como até os demônios mostraram a Cristo e a seus discípulos (Mr 1:27; Lu 10:17, 20), mas obediência motivada por um coração apreciativo. (Sal 112:1; 119:11, 112; Ro 6:17-19) Jeová, portanto, associa as expressões de sua vontade e propósito a informações úteis que apelam ao senso de justiça e retidão, ao amor e à bondade, à inteligência, à razão e à sabedoria da pessoa. (De 10:12, 13; Lu 1:17; Ro 12:1, 2) Quem tem a correta atitude de coração obedece por amor. (1Jo 5:2, 3; 2Jo 6) Além disso, a veracidade e a justeza da mensagem transmitida por meio dos servos de Deus persuadem os ouvintes a obedecer, de modo que o apóstolo Pedro fala da "obediência à verdade, tendo por resultado a afeição fraternal sem hipocrisia". — 1Pe 1:22; compare isso com Ro 2:8, 9; Gál 5:7, 8.

Jeová mostrou grande paciência com Israel, e fala de si mesmo como 'diariamente levantando-se cedo' e enviando seus profetas para exortá-los e admoestá-los, 'o dia inteiro estendendo suas mãos para um povo desobediente e contradizente', mas eles continuaram a endurecer seu coração como pedra de esmeril, obstinadamente recusando a disciplina. (Je 7:23-28; 11:7, 8; Za 7:12; Ro 10:21) Mesmo depois da vinda do Messias, eles procuraram estabelecer justiça ao seu próprio modo, por obras da Lei. Sua falta de fé e obediência às instruções de Deus por meio do Seu Filho custou para a maioria deles um lugar no governo do Reino, abrindo assim o caminho para muitos não judeus se tornarem parte da nação escolhida do Israel espiritual. — Ro 10:1-4; 11:13-23, 30-32.

O temor salutar de Deus também tem seu papel na obediência, porque a pessoa reconhece que Deus é todo-poderoso e que com ele não se brinca nem dele se mofa, pois Ele dá a cada um conforme suas obras. (Veja Fil 2:12, 13; Gál 6:7, 8; He 5:7.) A desobediência deliberada ou o desrespeito pela vontade revelada de Deus resulta em "certa expectativa terrível de julgamento". — He 10:26-31.

As Escrituras dão muitos exemplos encorajadores de obediência fiel em toda espécie de circunstância e situação e em todo tipo de oposição. Dentre esses, o exemplo supremo é o do próprio Filho de Deus, que "humilhou-se e tornou-se obediente até à morte, sim, morte numa estaca de tortura". (Fil 2:8; He 5:8) Por seu proceder obediente, ele foi justificado, provou-se justo por seu próprio mérito e, assim, pôde fornecer um sacrifício perfeito que redimiria a humanidade do pecado e da morte. — Ro 5:18-21.

Obediência a Outros Superiores. A posição do Filho como Rei designado por Deus exige que todos os outros o obedeçam. (Da 7:13, 14) Ele é "Siló", da tribo de Judá, aquele 'a quem pertence a obediência dos povos' (Gên 49:10), o profeta semelhante a Moisés, a quem toda alma tem de escutar ou então sofrer destruição (At 3:22, 23), o "líder e comandante para os grupos nacionais" (Is 55:3, 4), aquele que foi colocado "muito acima de todo governo, e autoridade, e poder, e senhorio" (Ef 1:20, 21), aquele diante de quem 'se deve dobrar todo joelho', em reconhecimento da autoridade que Deus lhe deu (Fil 2:9-11). Ele é o Sumo Sacerdote, cujas instruções resultam em cura e vida eterna para os que submissamente o ouvem. (He 5:9, 10; Jo 3:36) Visto que era o principal Porta-voz de Deus, Jesus podia de direito deixar claro que a obediência a suas palavras constituía o único alicerce sólido sobre o qual as pessoas podiam edificar suas esperanças para o futuro. (Mt 7:24-27) A obediência é prova do amor que seus seguidores têm por ele e provém desse amor. (Jo 14:23, 24; 15:10) Visto que Deus fez do seu Filho a figura central na realização de todos os Seus propósitos (Ro 16:25-27), a vida depende da obediência "às boas novas acerca de nosso Senhor Jesus", e esta obediência inclui fazer declaração pública de sua fé nele. — 2Te 1:8; Ro 10:8-10, 16; 1Pe 4:17.

Qual cabeça da congregação cristã, Cristo Jesus delega autoridade a outros, como fez aos apóstolos. (2Co 10:8) Tais pessoas transmitem as instruções do Cabeça da congregação, e, portanto, é correto e necessário que haja obediência da parte delas (2Co 10:2-6; Fil 2:12; 2Te 3:4, 9-15), pois tais pastores espirituais "vigiam sobre as vossas almas como quem há de prestar contas". (He 13:17; 1Pe 5:2-6; compare isso com 1Rs 3:9.) O pronto acatamento e a obediência, como demonstraram os cristãos romanos e filipenses e também Filêmon, a quem Paulo pôde dizer: "Escrevo-te . . . sabendo que farás ainda mais do que as coisas que digo", resultam em alegria para tais homens responsáveis. — Ro 16:19; Fil 2:12, 17; Flm 21.

Obediência aos pais e ao marido. Os pais gozam do direito natural concedido por Deus de terem a obediência dos filhos. (Pr 23:22) A obediência de Jacó a seus pais foi sem dúvida um dos motivos pelos quais Jeová 'amou a Jacó, mas odiou a Esaú'. (Mal 1:2, 3; Gên 28:7) Como criança, Jesus mostrou sujeição a seus pais terrestres. (Lu 2:51) O apóstolo Paulo admoesta os filhos a 'em tudo serem obedientes aos pais'. Deve-se lembrar que sua carta foi dirigida a cristãos, de forma que "tudo" não pode dar lugar à obediência a ordens que resultariam em desobediência à palavra do Pai celestial, Jeová Deus, pois isto não seria "bem agradável" ao Senhor. (Col 3:20; Ef 6:1) A desobediência aos pais não é encarada levianamente nas Escrituras, e, sob a Lei, o contínuo proceder de desobediência exigia que o filho fosse morto. — De 21:18-21; Pr 30:17; Ro 1:30, 32; 2Ti 3:2.

A chefia do homem também exige obediência da parte da esposa ao marido "em tudo", Sara sendo mencionada como exemplo a ser imitado. (Ef 5:21-33; 1Pe 3:1-6) Aqui também vale dizer que a chefia e autoridade do marido não é suprema, mas situa-se abaixo da de Deus e de Cristo. — 1Co 11:3.

A amos e a governos. Similarmente, os escravos foram exortados a prestar obediência a seus amos "em tudo", não apenas quando vigiados, mas como escravos de Cristo, com temor de Jeová. (Col 3:22-25; Ef 6:5-8) Os escravos que tinham de suportar sofrimento podiam tomar como exemplo a Cristo Jesus, assim como podiam também as esposas cristãs em circunstâncias similares. (1Pe 2:18-25; 3:1) A autoridade dos amos era relativa, não absoluta; assim, os escravos cristãos obedeciam em "tudo" que não conflitasse com a vontade e as ordens de Deus.

Por fim, deve-se obediência a governos, autoridades e governantes terrestres (Tit 3:1), visto que

Deus lhes permite atuar e até prestar determinados serviços ao Seu povo. Portanto, exige-se que os cristãos 'paguem a César as coisas de César'. (Mr 12:14-17) A razão compulsiva para a obediência cristã às leis de César e para o pagamento de impostos não é primariamente o temor apropriado da "espada" de punição de César, mas é a consciência cristã. (Ro 13:1-7) Visto que a consciência é o fator decisivo, a submissão cristã aos governos humanos limita-se, obviamente, às coisas que não estão em desarmonia com a lei de Deus. Por este motivo, aos governantes que lhes ordenaram parar de cumprir a comissão de pregar que Deus lhes dera, os apóstolos declararam firmemente: "Temos de obedecer a Deus como governante antes que aos homens." — At 5:27-29, 32; 4:18-20.

OBIL. Ismaelita que zelava dos camelos de Davi. — 1Cr 27:30.

OBOTE. Acampamento israelita entre Punom e Ijé-Abarim. Sua localização não é conhecida hoje. — Núm 21:10, 11; 33:43, 44.

OBSTINAÇÃO. O significado básico das várias palavras das línguas originais que transmitem a ideia de obstinação é dureza ou força, especialmente num sentido ruim. Não raro se acha envolvida uma recusa deliberada de sujeitar-se à vontade ou às ordens de Deus. (Sal 78:8; 81:12; Is 1:23; 65:2; Je 3:17; 5:23; 7:23-26; 11:8; 18:12; Os 4:16; At 7:51) As Escrituras repetidas vezes destacam que o desastre sobrevém àqueles que persistem num proceder obstinado. (De 29:19, 20; Ne 9:29, 30; Pr 28:14; Is 30:1; Je 6:28-30; 9:13-16; 13:10; 16:12, 13; Da 5:20; Os 9:15; Za 7:12; Ro 2:5) Por exemplo, a lei de Deus a Israel prescrevia que um filho obstinado e rebelde fosse apedrejado até a morte. — De 21:18, 20.

Em seus tratos com a humanidade, Jeová Deus tem permitido, pacientemente, que pessoas e nações, embora merecedoras da morte, continuem a existir. (Gên 15:16; 2Pe 3:9) Ao passo que alguns corresponderam a isto, habilitando-se para receber misericórdia (Jos 2:8-14; 6:22, 23; 9:3-15), outros se endureceram em medida ainda maior contra Jeová e contra Seu povo. (De 2:30-33; Jos 11:19, 20) Visto que Jeová não impede as pessoas de se tornarem obstinadas, Ele é mencionado como 'deixando que se tornem obstinadas' ou como 'endurecendo o coração delas'. Quando ele, por fim, realmente executa vingança contra os obstinados, isto resulta numa demonstração de seu grande poder e faz com que Seu nome seja declarado. — Veja Êx 4:21; Jo 12:40; Ro 9:14-18.

Um caso em pauta é o que Deus fez relacionado com o Faraó que se recusou a deixar os israelitas partirem do Egito. Jeová lançou dez pragas devastadoras sobre a terra do Egito. Cada vez que Faraó endurecia o coração, depois que certa praga terminava, Jeová utilizava esta oportunidade para demonstrar ainda mais o seu grande poder, mediante outros milagres. (Êx 7:3-5, 14–11:10) Assim, alguns dos egípcios chegaram a discernir que Jeová é um Deus que tem de ser obedecido. Por exemplo, quando se anunciou a sétima praga, até alguns dentre os servos de Faraó cuidaram de que os seus próprios servos e o seu gado fossem abrigados em segurança antes do início da destrutiva saraiva. (Êx 9:20, 21) Por fim, quando Faraó, depois de ter libertado os israelitas, de novo tornou obstinado o seu coração e juntou suas forças para se vingar deles (Êx 14:8, 9; 15:9), Jeová destruiu a ele e seu exército no Mar Vermelho. (Êx 14:27, 28; Sal 136:15) Durante anos depois disso, o nome de Deus foi declarado entre as nações, ao falarem sobre o que Jeová tinha feito aos egípcios, por causa da obstinação destes. — Êx 18:10, 11; Jos 2:10, 11; 9:9; 1Sa 6:6.

Visto que Jeová dá aviso antecipado do seu julgamento contra os obstinados, a execução desse julgamento não pode ser atribuída a outras causas ou a uma fonte diferente. Disse Jeová, por intermédio do profeta Isaías, aos israelitas obstinados: "Por eu saber que és duro e que a tua cerviz é um tendão de ferro e que a tua testa é cobre, também eu te informava desde aquele tempo. Antes que pudesse entrar, fiz que o ouvisses, para que não dissesses: 'Meu próprio ídolo as fez, e minha própria imagem esculpida e minha própria imagem fundida as ordenaram.'" — Is 48:4, 5; compare isso com Je 44:16-23.

O termo grego traduzido "obstinado" (Tit 1:7; 2Pe 2:10, Al, NM) significa literalmente "que agrada a si mesmo" e "denota alguém que, dominado pelo interesse próprio, e sem consideração para com outros, assevera de forma arrogante sua própria vontade". (Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words [Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine], 1981, Vol. 3, p. 342) Portanto, a obstinação é uma qualidade que não se harmoniza com o espírito do cristianismo. Em especial, não deve ser refletida pelos superintendentes cristãos. (Tit 1:5, 7) O apóstolo Pedro descreveu os indivíduos que se tinham apartado da conduta cristã correta como "atrevidos" e "obstinados". — 2Pe 2:10.

OCRÃ [duma raiz que significa "trazer banimento (perturbação)"]. Aserita cujo filho, Pagiel, foi designado maioral da tribo de Aser depois do Êxodo do Egito. — Núm 1:13, 16; 2:27; 7:72, 77; 10:26.

ODEDE [[Deus] Aliviou].

1. Pai do profeta Azarias. (2Cr 15:1) O Segundo das Crônicas 15:8 descreve o próprio Odede como profeta: "Assim que Asa ouviu estas palavras e a profecia de Odede, o profeta." Alguns eruditos rejeitam as palavras "de Odede, o profeta", como um erro de copista, mas isto não explica por que o escritor diz que Asa ouviu "estas palavras e a profecia". Outros fazem um acréscimo para que se leia: "Asa ouviu estas palavras e a profecia de Azarias, filho de Odede", para concordar com a Septuaginta grega (Códice Alexandrino), com a Pesito siríaca e com a Vulgata latina (recensão clementina), mas isto ainda deixa a já mencionada dificuldade sem explicação. A terceira solução é aceitar o texto massorético como reza, entendendo-se que o próprio Odede enunciou uma profecia que não foi preservada no registro. Asa acatou as palavras de Azarias (2Cr 15:2-7) e as do seu pai, Odede.

2. Profeta de Samaria no período em que coincidiram os reinados de Peca, de Israel, e de Acaz, de Judá (762-c. 759 AEC). Depois de Israel e Síria desferirem esmagadora derrota a Judá, 200.000 cativos do reino meridional foram levados para Samaria. Odede, contudo, interceptou o exército vitorioso e advertiu-os da ira de Deus, caso escravizassem seus irmãos. 'Afinal', explicou ele, 'foi somente por causa da iniquidade de Judá que Jeová vos permitiu derrotá-los. Agora, não façais deles servos de modo a trazer sobre vós mesmos a ira de Jeová; devolvei os cativos!' Quatro líderes efraimitas apoiaram Odede, e os cativos receberam cuidados e foram repatriados. — 2Cr 28:5-15.

ÓDIO. Nas Escrituras, a palavra "ódio" tem vários matizes de significado. Pode denotar intensa hostilidade, persistente má vontade, não raro acompanhada de rancor. Tal ódio pode tornar-se uma emoção consumidora, procurando causar danos ao seu objeto. "Ódio" pode também significar um forte desagrado, mas sem nenhuma intenção de causar danos ao alvo dele, procurando, em vez disso, evitá-lo, por causa dum sentimento de repulsa. A Bíblia também usa a palavra "ódio" no sentido de amar em grau menor. (Gên 29:31, 33; De 21:15, 16) Por exemplo, Jesus Cristo disse: "Quem se chegar a mim e não odiar seu pai, e mãe, e esposa, e filhos, e irmãos, e irmãs, sim, e até mesmo a sua própria alma, não pode ser meu discípulo." (Lu 14:26) É óbvio que Jesus não queria dizer que seus seguidores deviam sentir hostilidade ou repulsa a suas famílias, e a eles próprios, visto que isto não estaria de acordo com o restante das Escrituras. — Veja Mr 12:29-31; Ef 5:28, 29, 33.

A lei de Deus dada a Israel declarava: "Não deves odiar teu irmão no teu coração." (Le 19:17) Um dos requisitos para aquele que se apresentasse como homicida não intencional e procurasse obter segurança nas cidades de refúgio era que não tivesse nutrido ódio à pessoa morta. — De 19:4, 11-13.

Odiar os Inimigos? O conselho de Jesus de amar os inimigos está em plena harmonia com o espírito das Escrituras Hebraicas. (Mt 5:44) O fiel Jó reconheceu que seria errado nutrir qualquer sentimento de alegria maldosa pela calamidade sofrida por alguém que o odiasse intensamente. (Jó 31:29) A Lei mosaica impunha aos israelitas a responsabilidade de prestarem ajuda a outros israelitas a quem talvez considerassem inimigos. (Êx 23:4, 5) Em vez de se regozijarem com o desastre sofrido por um inimigo, os servos de Deus são assim instruídos: "Se aquele que te odeia tiver fome, dá-lhe pão para comer; e se ele tiver sede, dá-lhe água para beber." — Pr 24:17, 18; 25:21.

A ideia de que se devia odiar os inimigos foi uma das coisas acrescentadas à lei de Deus pelos instrutores judeus de tradições. Visto que a Lei ordenava que os israelitas amassem o próximo (Le 19:18), esses instrutores deduziram que isto implicava em odiar os inimigos. "Amigo" e "próximo" vieram a ser considerados como aplicando-se exclusivamente a judeus, ao passo que todos os demais eram encarados como inimigos naturais. À luz do seu entendimento tradicional sobre o "próximo", e em vista da tradição que fomentava o ódio pelos gentios, pode-se prontamente entender por que eles acrescentaram à declaração da lei de Deus as palavras não autorizadas "e odiar o teu inimigo". — Mt 5:43.

O cristão, em contraste, acha-se sob a obrigação de amar os seus inimigos, isto é, aqueles que se fazem inimigos pessoais dele. Tal amor (gr.: a·gá·pe) não é sentimentalismo, baseado em mero apego pessoal, como geralmente se pensa, mas é um amor moral ou social, baseado na aquiescência deliberada da vontade como questão de princípio, de dever ou de decoro, buscando-se sinceramente o bem da outra pessoa, segundo o que é correto. A·gá·pe (amor) transcende inimizades pessoais, jamais permitindo que estas levem a pessoa a abandonar princípios corretos e pagar na mesma moeda. Quanto àqueles que se opõem ao proceder cristão da pessoa e a perseguem, fazendo isto em ignorância, o servo de Deus até ora por tais indivíduos, para que os olhos deles sejam abertos a fim de enxergarem a verdade a respeito de Deus e Seus propósitos. — Mt 5:44.

O Ódio Correto. Todavia, em certas condições e em determinadas ocasiões, é correto odiar. "Há . . . tempo para amar e tempo para odiar." (Ec 3:1, 8) Sobre o próprio Jeová, diz-se que ele odiava Esaú. (Mal 1:2, 3) Mas não se pode atribuir isto a alguma arbitrariedade da parte de Deus. Esaú mostrou-se indigno do amor de Jeová por desprezar e vender seu direito de primogenitura, e, assim, também as promessas e as bênçãos divinas ligadas a tal direito. Ademais, ele tencionava matar seu irmão, Jacó. (Gên 25:32-34; 27:41-43; He 12:14-16) Deus também odeia olhos altaneiros, a língua falsa, mãos que derramam sangue inocente, o coração que projeta ardis prejudiciais, pés que se apressam a correr para a maldade, a testemunha falsa, todo aquele que cria contendas entre irmãos, de fato, todos e tudo que se erga em oposição total a Jeová e a Suas leis justas. — Pr 6:16-19; De 16:22; Is 61:8; Za 8:17; Mal 2:16.

Que espécie de ódio devem cultivar os servos de Jeová?

Em genuína lealdade a Jeová, seus servos odeiam aquilo e aqueles a quem Ele odeia. (2Cr 19:2) "Acaso não odeio os que te odeiam intensamente, ó Jeová, e não tenho aversão aos que se revoltam contra ti? Odeio-os com ódio consumado. Tornaram-se para mim verdadeiros inimigos." (Sal 139:21, 22) Mas este ódio não procura infligir dano a outros e não é sinônimo de despeito ou malícia. Antes, expressa-se na total repulsa ao que é iníquo, evitando o que é mau e os que odeiam intensamente a Jeová. (Ro 12:9, 17, 19) Os cristãos odeiam corretamente os que são inimigos declarados de Deus, tais como o Diabo e seus demônios, bem como os homens que deliberada e conscientemente tomam posição contra Jeová.

Embora não tenham amor pelos que transformam a benignidade imerecida de Deus em desculpa para conduta desenfreada, os cristãos não odeiam as pessoas que se envolvem em transgressões, mas que são dignas de misericórdia. Em vez de odiarem o transgressor arrependido, eles odeiam a ação iníqua, sim, "até mesmo a roupa interior que tiver sido manchada pela carne". — Ju 4, 23.

Evitar o Ódio Incorreto. Ao se tornarem cristãos, pessoas que anteriormente se odiavam não mais se odeiam. (Tit 3:3) Quem odeia seu irmão ainda anda na escuridão, e qualquer afirmação sua de que ama a Deus seria realmente mentira. Odiar o irmão equivale ao assassínio. — 1Jo 2:9, 11; 4:20; 3:15.

O sentimentalismo pode fazer com que o conceito da pessoa sobre o amor e o ódio sofra um desequilíbrio, como aconteceu, pelo visto, com Davi, com relação ao filho dele, Absalão. (2Sa 18:33; 19:1-6) Assim, também, "quem refreia a sua vara odeia seu filho, mas aquele que o ama está à procura dele com disciplina". — Pr 13:24.

Respeitando a privacidade dos outros e mostrando consideração amorosa por eles, a pessoa pode evitar tornar-se desnecessariamente objeto de ódio. Daí o conselho: "Faze raro o teu pé na casa do teu próximo, para que não se farte de ti e certamente te odeie." — Pr 25:17.

ODRES. A palavra grega a·skós designa uma bolsa ou recipiente feito da pele inteira de um animal. Jesus Cristo disse: "Tampouco se põe vinho novo em odres [bolsas de pele, Int] velhos; mas, caso o façam, então os odres rebentarão e o vinho se derramará, e os odres ficarão arruinados. Mas, põe-se vinho novo em odres novos, e ambas as coisas ficam preservadas." (Mt 9:17; Mr 2:22; Lu 5:37, 38) Ao passo que fermenta, o vinho novo gera dióxido de carbono, que exerce pressão nos recipientes de pele. Odres novos expandem-se; odres velhos, sem flexibilidade, rebentam sob a pressão.

Esta ilustração fazia parte da resposta de Jesus sobre as razões pelas quais seus discípulos não seguiam todos os antigos costumes e práticas dos fariseus. Jesus evidentemente deu a entender que a verdade do cristianismo era poderosa e energizante demais para ser retida pelo velho sistema do judaísmo, que carecia de vitalidade e elasticidade, e que estava passando rapidamente. (Mt 9:14-16) Para uma consideração geral dos recipientes de pele e suas utilizações, veja RECIPIENTE.

OEL [Tenda]. Filho do governador Zorobabel e descendente de Davi. — 1Cr 3:19, 20.

OESTE (OCIDENTE). Os hebreus indicavam as direções do ponto de vista duma pessoa voltada para o leste. Assim, o oeste estava às costas deles e talvez estivesse subentendido pela palavra hebraica 'a·hhóhr, que significa "atrás" ou "retaguarda". — Is 9:12.

Mui frequentemente, "oeste" ("para o oeste" ou "ocidental") é indicado pelo termo hebraico yam (que significa "mar", como em Jos 1:4), evidentemente porque o Mediterrâneo, ou Grande Mar, acha-se nessa direção, do ponto de vista da Terra da Promessa. (Gên 28:14; Êx 10:19; 38:12; Núm 34:6; Za 14:4) É preciso levar em conta o contexto para se determinar se yam significa "mar" ou se indica o oeste. — Jos 15:8-12; 2Cr 4:2-4, 15.

Outra palavra hebraica (ma·'aráv) é usada para referir-se quer ao poente (Is 43:5; 59:19) quer ao oeste. (1Cr 26:30; 2Cr 32:30) É usada para ajudar a transmitir a ideia de grande distância, na con-fortadora garantia da misericórdia de Jeová para com os humanos imperfeitos: “Tão longe como o nascente é do poente, tão longe pôs de nós as nossas transgressões.” — Sal 103:12.

Quando Jesus disse que muitos viriam “das regiões orientais e das regiões ocidentais” para se recostarem à mesa, no Reino, junto com Abraão, Isaque e Jacó, o texto grego em Mateus 8:11 diz literalmente “das nascentes e dos poentes”. Aqui, a palavra grega dy·smé relaciona-se com a direção do poente, isto é, com o oeste. (Int) Dy·smé é também usada em outras partes para referir-se ao oeste. — Mt 24:27; Lu 12:54; 13:29; Re 21:13.

OFEL [Outeiro [isto é, protuberância, inchação, saliência, elevação]]. O termo hebraico ‛Ó·fel é aplicado de duas maneiras. É aplicado, mais comumente, em sentido topográfico, a uma colina ou promontório proeminente. Uma forma desse termo é também aplicada à inchação ou protuberância de veias do corpo, conhecida como hemorroidas. — De 28:27; 1Sa 5:6, 9, 12; 6:4, 5.

Em Jerusalém, ou perto dali, havia determinada colina ou elevação que era chamada de ha·‛Ófel, ou Ofel. Os indícios bíblicos, considerados junto com os comentários de Josefo, situam Ofel no canto SE do Moriá. (2Cr 27:3; 33:14; Ne 3:26, 27; 11:21) No primeiro século EC, Josefo situou Ofel onde o muro oriental “se unia à colunata oriental do templo”. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], V, 145 [iv, 2]) Ofel era, evidentemente, a protuberância de terra que se estendia rumo ao leste, partindo do canto SE da colina do templo de Jerusalém.

O muro e a posição elevada de Ofel sobranceira ao vale do Cédron propiciavam-lhe uma fortificada posição defensiva. Não obstante, Isaías profetizou que “Ofel”, pelo visto o de Jerusalém, se tornaria um ‘campo baldio’. — Is 32:14; compare isso com a referência à torre e ao “outeiro” (‛Ó·fel) em Miq 4:8.

Os peritos acreditam que o termo ‛Ó·fel, em 2 Reis 5:24, refere-se a alguma colina proeminente ou a um lugar fortificado na vizinhança de Samaria, ao qual Geazi, o ajudante de Eliseu, levou as riquezas que obteve de Naamã. Isto indica que essa palavra era aplicada a outros outeiros além do que se situava em Jerusalém.

OFERTAS. Desde os tempos antigos o homem apresenta ofertas a Deus. No primeiro caso registrado, Caim, o filho mais velho de Adão, ofereceu alguns produtos do solo, e Abel, filho mais moço de Adão, os primogênitos de seu rebanho. Evidentemente as atitudes e motivações dos dois irmãos diferiam, pois Deus aprovou a oferenda de Abel, mas olhou com desfavor para a de Caim. (Mais tarde, o pacto da Lei fazia provisões para ofertas tanto de animais como de cereais.) Abel deve ter tido fé na promessa de libertação, da parte de Deus, por meio da Semente [Descendente] prometida, e, provavelmente, reconhecia que se teria de derramar sangue, alguém teria de ser ‘machucado no calcanhar’, para que a humanidade pudesse ser levada à perfeição que Adão e Eva haviam perdido. (Gên 3:15) Reconhecendo-se como pecador, ele foi induzido, pela fé, a apresentar uma oferta que exigia derramamento de sangue, desta forma prefigurando com exatidão o verdadeiro sacrifício pelos pecados: Jesus Cristo. — Gên 4:1-4; He 11:4.

Na Sociedade Patriarcal. O chefe de família Noé, ao sair da arca, ofereceu um sacrifício de agradecimento a Jeová que foi “repousante” (calmante, tranquilizante), após o qual Jeová firmou o pacto do “arco-íris” com Noé e sua descendência. (Gên 8:18-22; 9:8-16) Lemos mais adiante a respeito de os fiéis patriarcas apresentarem ofertas a Jeová. (Gên 31:54; 46:1) Jó, qual chefe de família, atuava como sacerdote em favor de sua família, sacrificando ofertas queimadas a Deus em benefício dela. (Jó 1:5) O mais notável e significativo dos sacrifícios antigos foi a tentativa de Abraão de oferecer Isaque, às ordens de Jeová. Depois de observar a fé e a obediência de Abraão, Jeová bondosamente providenciou um carneiro como substituto. Este ato de Abraão prefigurou a oferta, feita por Jeová, de seu próprio Filho unigênito, Jesus Cristo. — Gên 22:1-14; He 11:17-19.

Sob a Lei. Os sacrifícios ordenados sob o pacto da Lei apontavam todos para Jesus Cristo e seu sacrifício, ou para os benefícios que resultam desse sacrifício. (He 8:3-5; 9:9; 10:5-10) Assim como Jesus Cristo era um homem perfeito, todos os sacrifícios animais deviam também ser espécimes sadios, imaculados. (Le 1:3, 10; 3:1) Tanto os israelitas como os residentes forasteiros que adoravam a Jeová estavam incluídos na apresentação das várias ofertas. — Núm 15:26, 29.

Ofertas queimadas. As ofertas queimadas eram apresentadas em sua inteireza a Deus; o adorador não ficava com parte alguma do animal.

(Veja Jz 11:30, 31, 39, 40.) Constituíam um apelo a Jeová para que aceitasse, ou demonstrasse aceitar, a oferta pelo pecado que às vezes as acompanhavam. Jesus Cristo, como "oferta queimada", entregou-se por completo, inteiramente.

Ocasiões e características das ofertas queimadas:

(1) Ocasiões regulares em que eram oferecidas: toda manhã e toda noitinha (Êx 29:38-42; Le 6:8-13; Núm 28:3-8); todo sábado (Núm 28:9, 10); o primeiro dia do mês (Núm 10:10); a Páscoa e os sete dias da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados (Le 23:6-8; Núm 28:16-19, 24); o Dia da Expiação (Le 16:3, 5, 29, 30; Núm 29:7-11); Pentecostes (Le 23:16-18; Núm 28:26-31); cada dia da Festividade das Barracas. — Núm 29:12-39.

(2) Outras ocasiões: na consagração do sacerdócio (Le 8:18-21; veja INVESTIDURA); na posse dos levitas (Núm 8:6, 11, 12); ao se firmarem pactos (Êx 24:5; veja PACTO); com ofertas de participação em comum, bem como com certas ofertas pela culpa e pelo pecado (Le 5:6, 7, 10; 16:3, 5); no cumprimento de votos (Núm 15:3, 8); em relação com purificações (Le 12:6-8; 14:2, 30, 31; 15:13-15, 30).

(3) Animais oferecidos e o procedimento seguido: vitelo, carneiro, cabrito, rola ou pombo novo. (Le 1:3, 5, 10, 14) No caso de um animal, o ofertante punha a mão sobre a cabeça do animal (reconhecendo a oferta como sua própria oferta, e como para si, em seu favor). (Le 1:4) O animal era abatido; o sangue era aspergido ao redor sobre o altar da oferta queimada (Le 1:5, 11); o animal era esfolado e cortado em pedaços; seus intestinos (nenhum resíduo orgânico era queimado sobre o altar) e pernas eram lavados; a cabeça e outras partes do corpo eram colocadas sobre o altar (o sacerdote oficiante recebia a pele; Le 7:8). (Le 1:6-9, 12, 13) No caso de uma ave, o papo e as penas eram removidos, e a cabeça e o corpo eram queimados sobre o altar. (Le 1:14-17)

Ofertas de participação em comum (ou ofertas de paz). As ofertas de participação em comum aceitáveis a Jeová indicavam paz com ele. O adorador e sua família participavam delas (no pátio do tabernáculo; segundo a tradição, armavam-se barracas na área delimitada pela cortina que cercava o pátio; no templo havia refeitórios). O sacerdote oficiante recebia uma parte, e os sacerdotes a postos, uma outra parte. Jeová, com efeito, recebia a fumaça agradável da gordura que queimava. O sangue, que representa a vida, era dado a Deus, como pertencente a ele. Portanto, os sacerdotes, os adoradores e Jeová estavam como que juntos na refeição, o que expressava relacionamentos pacíficos. A pessoa que participasse dela enquanto estivesse numa condição impura (qualquer das impurezas mencionadas na Lei) ou que comesse a carne depois de ter sido guardada além do tempo prescrito (no clima quente ela começaria a putrefazer) devia ser decepada do Seu povo. Ela maculara ou profanara a refeição, quer por estar impura, quer por comer aquilo que era imundo aos olhos de Jeová Deus, mostrando desrespeito por coisas sagradas. — Le 7:16-21; 19:5-8.

A Refeição Noturna do Senhor (Comemoração ou Última Ceia) é uma refeição de participação em comum. (1Co 10:16) Os que estão no "novo pacto em virtude do . . . sangue [de Jesus]" partilham uns com os outros na fé, participando dos emblemas que representam o corpo e o sangue de Jesus. Partilham também com Jeová, como Criador desse arranjo. Eles procuram a aprovação de Jeová e estão em paz não apenas uns com os outros, mas também com Jeová por intermédio de Jesus Cristo. Em harmonia com o requisito de pureza para os participantes na refeição de participação em comum, Paulo adverte que o cristão deve examinar a si mesmo antes da refeição da Comemoração. Tratar a ocasião ou os emblemas de vinho e pão não fermentado levianamente ou com desprezo seria profanação de coisas sagradas, merecendo julgamento adverso. — 1Co 11:25, 27-29; veja REFEIÇÃO NOTURNA DO SENHOR.

Na oferta de agradecimento, que era uma oferta de participação em comum que louvava a Deus por suas provisões e benevolências, comia-se carne e pão, tanto fermentado, como não fermentado. O adorador, portanto, celebrava a ocasião usando o que poderia ser denominado de "alimento diário". (Contudo, em ocasião alguma se colocava pão fermentado sobre o altar, como oferta a Deus.) E, nesta expressão de agradecimento e de louvor a Deus, a carne tinha de ser saboreada naquele dia, não no dia seguinte. (Em outras ofertas de participação em comum, a carne podia ser comida no segundo dia.) (Le 7:11-15) Isto faz lembrar a oração que Jesus Cristo ensinou a seus seguidores: "Dá-nos hoje o nosso pão para este dia." — Mt 6:11.

Ocasiões e características das ofertas de participação em comum:

(1) Ocasiões: ao se firmarem pactos (Êx 24:5); na celebração de épocas festivas e do começo dos meses (Núm. 10:10; Êx 12:2-14; Le 23:15-19; Núm 29:39), e em outras ocasiões.

(2) Objetivos: obter a aprovação de Deus; apelar ou suplicar a Deus em épocas de infortúnio. (Le 19:5; Jz 20:26; 21:4; 1Sa 13:9; 2Sa 24:25)

(3) Animais usados, e o procedimento seguido: macho ou fêmea do gado bovino, ovino, caprino (nenhuma ave, visto que as aves não eram consideradas suficientes para constituir uma refeição sacrificial). (Le 3:1, 6, 12) O ofertante punha a mão sobre a cabeça do animal; o animal era abatido; o sacerdote aspergia o sangue deste ao redor sobre o altar da oferta queimada (Le 3:2, 8, 13); a gordura (incluindo a cauda gorda das ovelhas) era colocada sobre o altar da oferta queimada (Le 3:3-5, 9); o peito ia para os sacerdotes, a perna direita para o sacerdote oficiante (Êx 29:26, 28; Le 7:28-36).

(4) Tipos: agradecimento ou louvor; voto (veja Núm 6:13, 14, 17); voluntário.

Ofertas pelo pecado. Estas eram para pecados não intencionais, cometidos por causa das fraquezas da carne imperfeita, não "com mão erguida", isto é, não aberta, orgulhosa e propositalmente. (Núm 15:30, 31, n) Empregavam-se vários sacrifícios animais, do novilho ao pombo, conforme a posição e as circunstâncias daquele(s) cujo pecado estava sendo expiado. Deve-se notar que as pessoas envolvidas nos pecados tratados em Levítico, capítulo 4, eram pessoas que haviam feito "uma das coisas que Jeová manda que não se façam", e, assim, tornaram-se culpadas. (Le 4:2, 13, 22, 27) Quanto às ofertas pelo pecado no Dia da Expiação, veja EXPIAÇÃO, DIA DA.

Ocasiões que requeriam ofertas pelo pecado, e suas características:

(1) Pelo pecado do sumo sacerdote que lançasse culpa sobre o povo (Le 4:3): O sumo sacerdote trazia um novilho e colocava a mão sobre a cabeça do novilho; o novilho era abatido; seu sangue era levado para dentro do Lugar Santo e aspergido diante da cortina; parte do sangue era besuntado nos chifres do altar do incenso, o restante sendo derramado junto à base do altar da oferta queimada; a gordura (como nas ofertas de participação em comum) era queimada sobre o altar da oferta queimada (Le 4:4-10); e a carcaça (incluindo a pele) era queimada num local limpo, fora da cidade, onde se colocavam as cinzas do altar. (Le 4:11, 12)

(2) Pelo pecado da assembleia inteira (pecado cometido pela assembleia, do qual os líderes só ficassem cientes mais tarde) (Le 4:13): a congregação trazia um novilho; os anciãos colocavam as mãos sobre a cabeça do novilho; um deles o abatia; o resto do procedimento seguido era o mesmo que no caso de um pecado do sumo sacerdote. (Le 4:14-21)

Um pecado do sumo sacerdote, cometido em sua posição e cargo oficiais como representante de toda a nação perante Jeová, trazia culpa sobre a assembleia inteira. Podia ser um erro, tal como um engano no julgamento, na aplicação da Lei ou ao tratar duma questão de importância nacional. Por este pecado, e pelo pecado da assembleia inteira, exigia-se o mais valioso dos sacrifícios, a saber, o de um novilho. — Le 4:3, 13-15.

No caso das ofertas pelo pecado de indivíduos, o sangue não era levado para além do altar. Contudo, em casos de pecado do sumo sacerdote e da assembleia inteira, o sangue também era levado para dentro do Lugar Santo, o primeiro compartimento do santuário, e era aspergido diante da cortina, do outro lado da qual Jeová 'residia', conforme representado por uma luz miraculosa acima da Arca do Pacto no Santíssimo. (Apenas nas ofertas pelo pecado feitas regularmente no Dia da Expiação é que o sangue era levado para dentro do Santíssimo, o segundo compartimento; Le 16.) Nenhum sacerdote podia comer parte alguma das ofertas das quais o sangue era levado para dentro do Lugar Santo. — Le 6:30.

(3) Pecado dum chefe: o procedimento seguido era similar, exceto que se utilizava um cabritinho, e o sangue não era levado para dentro do Lugar Santo. O sangue era colocado sobre os chifres do altar da oferta queimada; o resto era derramado junto à sua base; a gordura era fumegada sobre o altar (Le 4:22-26); os sacerdotes evidentemente recebiam uma parte da carne, para comer, como se dava com outras ofertas pelo pecado (Le 6:24-26, 29); os vasos em que a carne era cozida tinham de ser esfregados (ou quebrados, se fossem de barro), para que nenhuma parte de "algo santíssimo" fosse profanada, o que aconteceria se alguma parte do sacrifício ficasse grudada no vaso e este fosse depois usado para fins comuns. (Le 6:27, 28)

(4) Pecado dum israelita individual: usava-se uma cabritinha ou cordeira; o procedimento seguido era o mesmo como no caso do pecado dum chefe. (Le 4:27-35)

No caso seguinte, os pecados diferem dos precedentes no sentido de que as pessoas envolvidas cometeram algum erro e 'não cumpriram todos os mandamentos de Deus', tratando-se, portanto, dum pecado de omissão. — Núm 15:22.

(5) Para a assembleia inteira, usava-se um cabritinho (Núm 15:22-26); para um indivíduo, uma cabra em seu primeiro ano de vida. (Núm 15:27-29)

Nos casos em que os sacerdotes deviam comer parte da oferta pelo pecado, parece que, ao participarem desta, eram considerados como 'respondendo pelo erro' cometido pelos que faziam a oferta pelo pecado, "a fim de fazer expiação por eles perante Jeová", em virtude de seu cargo sagrado. — Le 10:16-18; 9:3, 15.

Ofertas pela culpa. As ofertas pela culpa também eram ofertas por causa do pecado, pois a culpa de qualquer espécie envolve pecado. Eram para pecados especiais, através dos quais a pessoa se tornara culpada, e diferiam ligeiramente de outras ofertas pelo pecado, no sentido de que parece que eram oferecidas para satisfazer ou restaurar um direito. Um direito, quer de Jeová, quer de sua nação santa, tinha sido violado. A oferta pela culpa visava satisfazer a Jeová no que dizia respeito ao direito violado, ou restaurar ou recuperar certos direitos pactuados para o malfeitor arrependido, e obter o livramento da pena pelo pecado dele. — Veja Is 53:10.

Nos casos abrangidos em Levítico 5:1-6, 17-19, as pessoas haviam pecado despercebida, impensada ou descuidadamente, e, quando o assunto lhes foi trazido à atenção, desejaram corrigir as coisas. Por outro lado, os pecados tratados em Levítico 6:1-7 não foram cometidos despercebidamente ou por descuido, mas, mesmo assim, foram pecados devido a fraquezas e desejos carnais, não deliberados, arbitrários e intencionais, em rebelião contra Deus. A pessoa ficara com consciência afligida; portanto, arrependera-se voluntariamente, confessando seu pecado, e, depois de fazer uma restauração, procurara obter misericórdia e perdão. — Mt 5:23, 24.

Tais leis salientam que, ao passo que a Lei era rigorosa para o pecador deliberado e impenitente, dava margem a que se considerassem motivações, circunstâncias e atitudes, a fim de que se pudesse demonstrar misericórdia sob a Lei, assim como se dá na congregação cristã. (Veja Le 6:1-7; Êx 21:29-31; Núm 35:22-25; 2Co 2:5-11; 7:8-12; 1Ti 1:2-16.) Observe, porém, que nenhum destes erros podia ser cometido impunemente; devia-se dar uma compensação ao indivíduo prejudicado, além de se oferecer a Jeová uma oferta pela culpa. As ofertas pela culpa eram, com umas poucas variações, cuidadas do mesmo modo que as ofertas pelo pecado, os sacerdotes obtendo uma parte delas para comer. — Le 7:1, 5-7.

Ocasiões que requeriam ofertas pela culpa, e suas características:

(1) A testemunha dum assunto que deixasse de depor ou de relatar algo depois de ter ouvido uma imprecação pública; alguém que, sem querer, se tornara impuro por tocar num cadáver ou em uma pessoa impura; alguém que precipitada ou irrefletidamente jurasse fazer ou não fazer algo (Le 5:1-4): Tinha de confessar de que modo pecara. (Le 5:5) As ofertas pela culpa variavam conforme as circunstâncias financeiras. (Le 5:6-10) Se fosse uma oferta de cereal, não se incluía azeite nem olíbano, porque era uma oferta pelo pecado e era uma exigida oferta de cereal, não uma oferta voluntária; uma oferta voluntária de cereal era uma oferta alegre de alguém que estava em boa situação perante Deus. (Le 5:11-13)

(2) Alguém que pecara de modo não intencional contra as coisas sagradas de Jeová (por exemplo, alguém que, sem perceber, se apossasse de cereal reservado como dízimo para o santuário, e o usasse para si ou para sua casa [para uso comum, profanando a coisa sagrada]) (Le 5:15a; compare isso com Le 22:14-16): a compensação, e mais um quinto, devia ser feita ao santuário. (Le 5:16) Apresentava-se um carneiro como oferta pela culpa. (Le 5:15)

(3) Uma pessoa que, sem perceber, fizesse algo (provavelmente por negligência) que Jeová ordenara que não fosse feito: devia-se oferecer um carneiro "segundo o valor calculado". (Le 5:17-19)

(4) Uma pessoa que enganasse seu colega por apropriar-se de itens de valor confiados a seus cuidados, ou por roubo, fraude, ficar com algo achado e mentir a respeito (Le 6:2, 3; compare isso com Êx 22:7-13, e observe que isto não incluía testemunhar falsamente contra o próximo, como em De 5:20): primeiro, precisava fazer a confissão do erro. Daí, a pessoa tinha de dar plena compensação, e mais um quinto, à pessoa prejudicada. (Le 6:4, 5; Núm 5:6, 7) Caso a pessoa defraudada tivesse morrido, o parente mais próximo, do sexo masculino, receberia a compensação; se não houvesse nenhum parente próximo, o sacerdote a receberia. (Núm 5:8) Daí, ela devia oferecer um carneiro como sua oferta pela culpa.

Ofertas de cereais. As ofertas de cereais eram feitas junto com as ofertas de participação em comum, com as ofertas queimadas e com as ofertas pelo pecado, e também como primícias; em outras épocas eram feitas de forma independente. (Êx 29:40-42; Le 23:10-13, 15-18; Núm 15:8, 9, 22-24; 28:9, 10, 20, 26-28; cap. 29) Estas eram feitas em reconhecimento da generosidade de Deus em suprir bênçãos e prosperidade. Não raro eram acompanhadas de azeite e olíbano. As ofertas de cereais podiam ser feitas em forma de flor de farinha, de cereal tostado, ou de bolos de forma anular ou obreias que tivessem sido assados, cozidos numa chapa de assar ou numa frigideira funda. Parte da oferta de cereais era colocada sobre o altar da oferta queimada, parte era comida pelos sacerdotes, e, nas ofertas de participação em comum, o adorador também participava. (Le 6:14-23; 7:11-13; Núm 18:8-11) Nenhuma das ofertas de cereais apresentadas no altar podia conter fermento ou "mel" (pelo visto referindo-se ao xarope de figos ou ao suco de frutas) que poderia fermentar. — Le 2:1-16.

Ofertas de bebida. As ofertas de bebida eram apresentadas junto com a maioria das outras ofertas, especialmente depois de os israelitas se terem fixado na Terra da Promessa. (Núm 15:2, 5, 8-10) Estas consistiam em vinho ("bebida inebriante") e eram derramadas sobre o altar. (Núm 28:7, 14; compare isso com Êx 30:9; Núm 15:10.) O apóstolo Paulo escreveu aos cristãos em Filipos: "Mesmo que eu esteja sendo derramado como oferta de bebida sobre o sacrifício e serviço público a que vos conduziu a fé, regozijo-me." Aqui, ele usou a metáfora duma oferta de bebida, expressando sua disposição de gastar-se a favor dos concristãos. (Fil 2:17) Pouco antes de sua morte, ele escreveu a Timóteo: "Já estou sendo derramado como oferta de bebida, e o tempo devido para o meu livramento é iminente." — 2Ti 4:6.

Ofertas movidas. Nas ofertas movidas, o sacerdote evidentemente colocava suas mãos sob as mãos do adorador, que segurava o sacrifício a ser apresentado, e as movia para lá e para cá; ou a coisa oferecida era movida pelo próprio sacerdote. (Le 23:11a) Pelo visto Moisés, qual mediador do pacto da Lei, fez isso em favor de Arão e seus filhos ao consagrá-los para o sacerdócio. (Le 8:28, 29) Esta ação representava uma apresentação das coisas sacrificiais a Jeová. Certas ofertas movidas iam para os sacerdotes, como a porção deles. — Êx 29:27.

A apresentação dum molho (ou medida dum gômor) das primícias da colheita da cevada em 16 de nisã era uma oferta movida apresentada pelo sumo sacerdote. Foi nesta data do ano 33 EC que Jesus Cristo foi ressuscitado, "as primícias dos que adormeceram na morte". (1Co 15:20; Le 23:11b; Jo 20:1) No dia de Pentecostes, moviam-se dois pães fermentados das primícias do trigo. (Le 23:15-17) Este é o dia em que Jesus, como Sumo Sacerdote nos céus, pôde apresentar a Jeová os primeiros de seus irmãos espirituais da congregação cristã, tirados dentre a humanidade pecaminosa e ungidos pelo derramamento do espírito santo. — At 2:1-4, 32, 33; compare isso com Tg 1:18.

Quinhões sagrados (ofertas erguidas). A palavra hebraica teru·máh às vezes é traduzida "quinhão sagrado", quando se refere à parte do sacrifício que era levantada, ou erguida, do sacrifício como parte pertencente aos sacerdotes. (Êx 29:27, 28; Le 7:14, 32; 10:14, 15) A palavra também é frequentemente traduzida "contribuição", quando se refere às coisas dadas ao santuário, que, com exceção daquilo que era sacrificado sobre o altar, também ia para os sacerdotes, para o seu sustento. — Núm 18:8-13, 19, 24, 26-29; 31:29; De 12:6, 11.

OFICIAL. Veja AJUDANTE DE ORDENS.

OFICIAL DA CORTE. A palavra hebraica sa·rís, traduzida "oficial da corte" (1Rs 22:9), também pode ser traduzida "eunuco" (Est 2:3; Is 56:3) e 'oficial' (Gên 40:2, 7). Em Gênesis 37:36 (KJ) é traduzida "oficial", e uma nota marginal declara: "Todavia, a palavra não se refere apenas a eunucos, mas também a camaristas, cortesãos e oficiais." A palavra grega eu·noú·khos, vertida "eunuco", pode referir-se a um oficial da corte (At 8:27) ou a alguém privado da capacidade de procriar. — Mt 19:12.

Considera-se, em geral, que os oficiais da corte eram homens encarregados dos aposentos ou apartamentos particulares dum palácio ou duma mansão, assim como Blasto, camarista do Rei Herodes. (At 12:20) (Todavia, ali se usa a expressão grega e·pí tou koi·tó·nos, o "encarregado do quarto de dormir".) No entanto, os deveres dos oficiais da corte do rei variavam muito. Bigtã e Teres eram oficiais da corte medo-persa como servos de confiança, pelo visto tendo por dever guardar a porta do apartamento particular do Rei Assuero. (Est 2:21) Outros ministravam à pessoa do rei. (Est 1:10, 11) A Bíblia identifica alguns oficiais da corte como homens em postos militares. (2Rs 25:19) Um "principal oficial da corte", em Babilônia, teve a responsabilidade de designar um guardião para Daniel, Hananias, Misael e Azarias, depois da chegada deles a Babilônia, quando Nabucodonosor levou o Rei Joaquim e certos dos judeus a Babilônia, em 617 AEC. — Da 1:3, 7, 11.

Parece que nem todos os oficiais da corte eram eunucos em sentido literal, isto é, homens emasculados. Eunucos literais frequentemente eram encarregados dos aposentos das mulheres, ou do harém do rei. Mas os deveres de oficiais tais como o chefe dos copeiros (um cargo elevado) e o chefe dos padeiros não necessariamente exigiam a emasculação para tal cargo, embora possam ter sido eunucos que alcançaram essas posições. (Gên 40:2) Na corte de Faraó, Potifar, oficial da corte e chefe da guarda pessoal, era homem casado. (Gên 39:1) O "eunuco" etíope batizado por Filipe, o evangelizador, era homem de poder, encarregado de todo o tesouro da Rainha Candace. Ele era prosélito da religião judaica, adorador de Jeová, sob a Lei. Não podia ter sido um eunuco literal, porque nenhum homem castrado podia entrar na congregação de Israel, e ninguém que não fosse judeu ou prosélito foi batizado antes da conversão de Cornélio. (At 8:26-38; 10:24, 34, 35, 44-47; De 23:1) Davi convocou seus oficiais da corte (que logicamente não eram eunucos literais, em vista da atitude dos judeus e por causa da Lei), junto com príncipes e homens poderosos, para informá-los de que seu filho Salomão fora designado para construir o templo de Jeová. — 1Cr 28:1-6; veja COPEIRO; MORDOMO.

OFICIAL DO EXÉRCITO. É a tradução dos termos gregos he·ka·ton·tár·khes (ou: he·ka·tón·tar·khos) e ken·ty·rí·on, e designa o oficial encarregado de cem soldados, um centurião. A legião romana, não importava seu tamanho, era sempre dividida em 60 centúrias, cada uma sob o comando de um centurião. Se a legião ficasse reduzida a menos de 6.000 homens, ainda assim uma sexagésima parte, mesmo quando fosse inferior a 100, estava sob as ordens dum centurião. Estes oficiais do exército eram nomeados por tribunos e eram aprovados por autoridades governamentais superiores. O cargo de centurião era a maior posição que o soldado comum podia alcançar, embora houvesse oportunidades de certas promoções entre as fileiras dos próprios centuriões.

Os centuriões eram homens-chaves e cumpriam importantíssima função na legião. Embora se achassem sob a autoridade dos tribunos e fossem responsáveis de cumprir as ordens deles, o oficial do exército era o chefe real e imediato dos soldados. Ele dava treinamento militar aos soldados; trabalhava com eles; inspecionava suas armas, suprimentos e alimentos; regulava sua conduta. Era o disciplinador que supervisionava os açoites e a pena capital, aquele que autorizava que a tropa fosse punida. A prontidão e a eficiência do exército romano, na maior parte, dependiam mais dos centuriões do que de quaisquer outros; eles eram, falando-se em sentido geral, os homens mais experientes e valiosos do exército romano. — Veja EXÉRCITO.

Nas narrativas das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, os oficiais do exército aparecem em diversas ocasiões. O oficial do exército de Cafarnaum, que procurou o poder de cura de Jesus em favor de seu escravo, foi elogiado pelo Amo por sua fé exemplar. (Mt 8:5-13) A declaração dos judeus: "Ele . . . ama a nossa nação e ele mesmo construiu para nós a sinagoga"; a admissão do centurião de que "não sou apto para que entres debaixo do meu teto"; e o comentário de Jesus: "Nem mesmo em Israel tenho encontrado tamanha fé", indicam que este oficial do exército era gentio. Se fosse romano, isto seria ainda mais notável, pois os romanos não eram destacados por sua compaixão pelos escravos. — Lu 7:1-9.

Um oficial do exército comandava os quatro soldados que executaram Jesus. (Jo 19:23) Este centurião provavelmente estava presente quando se discutiu perante Pilatos a questão de Jesus ser ou não Filho de Deus. (Jo 19:7) Observando este julgamento e as outras circunstâncias envolvidas na execução de Jesus na estaca, bem como os miraculosos fenômenos que acompanharam sua morte, o "oficial do exército começou a glorificar a Deus", dizendo: "Realmente, este homem era justo", "certamente este era o Filho de Deus." (Lu 23:47; Mt 27:54) Sem dúvida, foi a ele que Pilatos perguntou se Jesus estava morto, antes de liberar o corpo para o sepultamento. — Mr 15:44, 45.

Cornélio, centurião do destacamento italiano, aquartelado em Cesareia, foi o primeiro gentio incircunciso a se tornar cristão. (At 10:1-48) O fato de ele ter sua própria casa e ajudantes de ordens indica que se permitia que os oficiais desta categoria morassem num local separado das tropas regulares. — Veja CORNÉLIO.

Oficiais do exército aquartelados na Torre de Antônia, junto com seus soldados e o comandante militar, desceram correndo até a adjacente área do templo e livraram Paulo duma turba, por volta de 56 EC. (At 21:32) Mais tarde, Paulo escapou de ser açoitado, às ordens do comandante militar, revelando a um oficial do exército presente que era cidadão romano. (At 22:25, 26) Ao saber duma trama contra sua vida, Paulo pediu que um oficial do exército conduzisse seu sobrinho até o comandante militar para lhe relatar isso. Por sua vez, ordenou-se a dois oficiais do exército que aprontassem uma força de 470 soldados, cavalarianos e lanceiros para garantir que Paulo fosse conduzido em segurança para fora de Jerusalém. — At 23:17, 23.

Júlio, oficial do exército do destacamento de Augusto (veja AUGUSTO, DESTACAMENTO DE), foi responsável pela viagem marítima de Paulo, de Cesareia a Roma. Ele tratou Paulo com bondade, embora, de início, desconsiderasse o conselho do apóstolo. Com o tempo, porém, este centurião aprendeu a respeitar o bom critério de Paulo e serviu de instrumento para salvar a vida do apóstolo. — At 27:1, 6, 11, 31, 43.

OFICIAL INTENDENTE. Veja INTENDENTE, OFICIAL.

OFIR.

1. Descendente de Sem por intermédio de Arpaxade, Selá, Éber e Joctã; o 11.º dos 13 filhos de Joctã. (Gên 10:22-29; 1Cr 1:17-23) Ofir nasceu provavelmente uns 200 anos antes de Abraão, que era descendente de Pelegue, seu tio paterno. (Gên 10:25; 11:18-26) Como no caso dos seus irmãos, parece que Ofir também encabeçava uma das tribos semitas incluídas entre os descendentes de Noé "segundo as suas famílias, segundo as suas línguas, nas suas terras, segundo as suas nações". (Gên 10:31, 32) Veja o N.º 2 para possíveis localizações da terra de Ofir, na qual esta tribo por fim se estabeleceu.

2. Lugar famoso como fonte de muito ouro da melhor qualidade. Assim, já no tempo de Jó (c. 1600 AEC), relacionavam-se o "minério precioso no pó" e o "ouro puro" com o "ouro de Ofir". (Jó 22:24; 28:15, 16) O Salmo 45:9 descreve a consorte régia adornada com o precioso ouro de Ofir, e, em Isaías 13:11, 12, na pronúncia contra Babilônia, emprega-se a relativa raridade do ouro de Ofir para simbolizar a escassez de tiranos em Babilônia, depois de sua queda.

Davi doou 3.000 talentos de ouro de Ofir para a construção do templo, ouro avaliado em US$ 1.156.050.000. (1Cr 29:1, 2, 4) Mais tarde, a frota comercial de Salomão, filho de Davi, trazia regularmente de Ofir 420 talentos de ouro. (1Rs 9:26-28) O relato paralelo em 2 Crônicas 8:18 reza 450 talentos. Alguns peritos sugerem que esta diferença surgiu quando letras do alfabeto serviam como algarismos — que um antigo copista poderia ter confundido a letra hebraica numeral nun (נ), que representava 50, com a letra kaf (כ), que equivalia a 20, ou vice-versa. Contudo, a evidência indica que todos os números nas Escrituras Hebraicas eram escritos por extenso, em vez de serem representados por letras. Uma explicação mais provável, portanto, é que ambos os dados estejam corretos, e que o total bruto trazido foi de 450 talentos, dos quais 420 constituíam lucro líquido.

Em 1946, como confirmação destes relatos bíblicos sobre as importações do ouro de Ofir, desenterrou-se um fragmento de cerâmica ao NE de Tel Aviv-Yafo. Nele havia uma inscrição que dizia: "Ouro de Ofir para bet horon, trinta siclos." — Journal of Near Eastern Studies (Revista de Estudos do Oriente Próximo), 1951, Vol. X, pp. 265, 266.

Além de ser uma fonte de enorme quantidade de ouro, a terra de Ofir também era uma fonte de madeira de "algum" e de pedras preciosas importadas por Salomão. (1Rs 10:11; 2Cr 9:10) Contudo, quando o Rei Jeosafá, cem anos depois, tentou fazer uma expedição a essa terra, isto acabou em desastre, seus "navios de Társis" sofreram naufrágio em Eziom-Géber, na cabeceira do golfo de ʽAqaba. — 1Rs 22:48; veja TÁRSIS N.º 4.

Localização. A localização precisa de Ofir não pode ser hoje determinada com certeza. Dentre as diversas sugestões neste sentido, três são especialmente favorecidas: a Índia, a Arábia e o NE da África — todos estando ao alcance duma frota que operasse a partir de Eziom-Géber, na cabeceira do braço oriental do Mar Vermelho. No que diz respeito à Índia, todas as mercadorias trazidas nos navios de Salomão e de Hirão estavam disponíveis ali. Josefo, Jerônimo e a Septuaginta também poderiam ser citados para confirmar que Ofir era a Índia. Por outro lado, aqueles que asseveram que Ofir ficava no NE da África, na vizinhança da Somália, na extremidade inferior do Mar Vermelho, salientam que esta teria sido uma fonte muito mais próxima de abastecimento para todos os itens importados do que a Índia.

Entretanto, o peso das opiniões parece apoiar a conclusão de que Ofir era uma região no SO da Arábia, na vizinhança do Iêmen. A evidência apresentada em favor deste conceito baseia-se na premissa de que os descendentes do filho de Joctã, Ofir, se fixaram na península da Arábia, junto com outras tribos-irmãs, como os descendentes de Sabá e Havilá. (Gên 10:28, 29) O relato da visita da rainha de Sabá (provavelmente da Arábia meridional) acha-se inserido entre duas referências ao comércio de Salomão com Ofir. — 1Rs 9:26–10:11.

OFNI. Cidade de Benjamim (Jos 18:21, 24), comumente relacionada com a Gophna mencionada por Josefo (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], III, 55 [iii, 5]) e considerada a moderna Jifna. Este lugar acha-se a cerca de 5 km ao NNO de Betel e, portanto, aparentemente ao N do território benjamita. (Jos 18:11-13) Para que a identificação esteja correta, deve-se presumir ou que Ofni era uma cidade de Benjamim encravada em Efraim ou que a fronteira benjamita se estendia ao norte, perto de Betel, para incluir esta sugerida localização de Ofni.

OFRA.

1. [Filhote [dos Veados]]. Descendente de Judá através de Meonotai. — 1Cr 4:1, 14. [2, 3: possivelmente: Lugar de Pó]

2. Cidade de Benjamim. (Jos 18:21, 23) Sua localização relativa pode ser inferida da narrativa sobre os embates de Israel com os filisteus durante o reinado de Saul. A partir de seu acampamento em Micmás, grupos de saqueadores filisteus faziam surtidas em três direções diferentes. Um grupo tomava a estrada para Ofra. Outro ia na direção oeste, na estrada de Bete-Horom, ao passo que ainda outro seguia para o leste, na "estrada que dá para o termo que olha para o vale de Zeboim". Visto que pelo menos parte do exército israelita acampava em Geba, ao S de Micmás, pelo visto, a companhia filisteia que tomava a estrada para Ofra se dirigia para o norte. Concordemente, isto colocaria Ofra ao N de Micmás. — 1Sa 13:16-18.

Os peritos frequentemente igualam Ofra à cidade chamada Efraim (2Sa 13:23; Jo 11:54) e Efraíne (2Cr 13:19), que se julga estar representada por et-Taiyiba (c. 6 km ao ENE de Betel).

3. Terra de Gideão e local onde o anjo de Jeová o comissionou a salvar Israel da palma da mão de Midiã. (Jz 6:11-32) Depois de sua vitória sobre as forças inimigas, Gideão fez um éfode dos despojos contribuídos e o exibiu em Ofra. Subsequentemente, este éfode tornou-se objeto de veneração idólatra. (Jz 8:24-27) Mais tarde, depois da morte e do sepultamento de Gideão em Ofra, seu ambicioso filho, Abimeleque, "matou seus irmãos, . . . setenta homens, sobre uma só pedra, mas sobrou Jotão, filho mais moço". (Jz 8:32; 9:5) Sem contar Abimeleque, Gideão tinha 70 filhos. (Jz 8:30, 31) Por conseguinte, visto que Jotão escapou da matança, Abimeleque, pelo que parece, matou apenas 69 filhos em Ofra. As palavras posteriores de Jotão a respeito do incidente simplesmente parecem indicar a intenção de Abimeleque de matar todos os 70 filhos. (Jz 9:18) No entanto, como certo comentário judaico apropriadamente observa: "Ainda é correto falar-se, em números redondos, de 'setenta' serem mortos." — Soncino Books of the Bible (Livros da Bíblia, de Soncino), obra editada por A. Cohen, Londres, 1950 (Josué e Juízes, p. 234).

Esta Ofra pelo visto ficava ao O do Jordão. Ela é, provisoriamente, identificada com el-ʽAffuleh (ʽAfula), a cerca de 45 km ao N de Siquém.

OGUE. O poderoso rei amorreu de Basã (1Rs 4:19), a quem os israelitas derrotaram antes de entrarem na Terra da Promessa. Ogue era um dos gigantescos refains. De fato, seu imenso esquife de ferro (talvez um sarcófago de basalto negro) media 4 por 1,80 m. (De 3:11 n) Ele e Síon governavam os amorreus ao L do Jordão. (De 3:13; 4:46, 47) O domínio de Ogue estendia-se desde o monte Hermom até o Jaboque, território ao L do Jordão que incluía 60 cidades fortificadas e numerosos povoados rurais. (De 3:3-5, 8-10; Jos 12:4, 5; compare isso com Núm 21:23, 24.) Suas duas cidades principais eram Edrei e Astarote. — De 1:4; Jos 13:12.

A derrota de Ogue às mãos de Israel ocorreu perto do fim da peregrinação de 40 anos de Israel, pouco antes de acamparem nas planícies de Moabe. Após derrotar Síon, Israel chocou-se com as forças de Ogue, em Edrei, e, numa sobrepujante vitória concedida por Deus, matou Ogue e todo o seu exército, e apoderou-se de suas cidades e aldeias. (Núm 21:33–22:1; De 3:1-13) O território de Ogue tornou-se parte da herança de Manassés. (Núm 32:33; De 3:13; Jos 13:29-31) A vitória deixou apavorados os habitantes de Canaã e foi um fator contribuinte para induzir Raabe e os gibeonitas a buscar a paz com Israel, de modo que eles não fossem também exterminados. (Jos 2:10, 11; 9:9, 10) A vitória foi um grande incentivo para Israel, e foi lembrada até mesmo muitos séculos depois. — De 31:4; Ne 9:22; Sal 135:10-12; 136:17-22.

OLEASTRO. Veja ÁRVORE OLEAGINOSA (OLEASTRO).

OLEIRO. Fabricante de panelas, pratos e outros vasos de barro. A palavra hebraica para oleiro (yoh·tsér) significa literalmente "formador" ou "aquele que forma (molda)" (Je 18:4 n), ao passo que o termo grego (ke·ra·meús) vem duma raiz que significa "misturar", talvez referindo-se à necessidade de misturar água com a terra, ou argila, a fim de prepará-la para uso. Desde tempos bem antigos, os oleiros moldam a argila em vasos e os cozem no forno, produzindo assim utensílios endurecidos que não amolecem quando molhados. O oleiro podia trabalhar sozinho, mas, às vezes, tinha ajudantes, frequentemente aprendizes. Entre os hebreus, em certa época parece ter existido um grupo de oleiros da corte. — 1Cr 4:21-23.

Um método típico de fabricar cerâmica começava com passos tais como lavar a argila e purificá-la de matérias estranhas, expondo-a ao tempo, e pisoteando a argila umedecida para torná-la pastosa e maleável. (Is 41:25) Em seguida, a argila era amassada à mão e então colocada na roda de oleiro.

A primitiva roda de oleiro era geralmente feita de pedra (embora, às vezes, de madeira), e era, basicamente, um disco achatado centralizado num eixo vertical, e que se fazia girar horizontalmente. Material pesado em sua borda dava estabilidade e impulso ao disco à medida que era girado à mão. A adição posterior de uma roda inferior maior e mais pesada (no mesmo eixo que a roda de cima e que também girava horizontalmente) habilitava o oleiro sentado a fazer girar as rodas com o pé.

Tendo "lançado" ou colocado a argila sem forma sobre a roda, o oleiro usava as mãos para modelar um vaso, à medida que a roda girava. (Je 18:3, 4) A seguir, o utensílio talvez fosse secado um pouco ao sol e novamente colocado na roda, onde o oleiro talvez usasse pedrinhas, conchas, ou um implemento para alisá-lo e poli-lo e para imprimir um desenho em sua superfície. Os métodos variavam, mas ele podia dar-lhe um padrão de corda, por exemplo, comprimindo uma corda retorcida contra o artigo ainda úmido. Não raro os vasos eram pintados de forma decorativa. Outros eram vitrificados (Pr 26:23) e depois cozidos no forno de cerâmica próximo. Ou, barro mole (argila de oleiro em estado semilíquido) talvez fosse aplicado para fins decorativos, após o que o artigo era de novo cozido no forno.

O oleiro fabricava artigos que variavam de grandes talhas (La 4:2) a lamparinas, fornos e brinquedos, tais como bonecas e estatuetas de animais. Tigelas, copos, botijas e outros vasos achavam-se entre seus produtos. (Le 15:12; 2Sa 17:28; Je 19:1; Lu 22:10) Também produzia panelas e caçarolas e algumas chapas de assar. Itens de barro eram, às vezes, carimbados, para mostrar onde eram fabricados. O oleiro frequentemente carimbava o cabo de panelas com sua própria "marca registrada".

Por vezes, o oleiro usava um molde aberto, no qual a argila era comprimida para que se lhe repassassem detalhes. Em épocas posteriores, não raro se fabricavam lamparinas desse modo, em duas peças que eram unidas quando a argila tivesse secado ao ponto de adquirir consistência coriácea. Ocasionalmente, moldavam-se coisas à mão, sem o uso da roda. Em geral, porém, o oleiro usava a roda.

Cacos de cerâmica não raro são encontrados em sítios arqueológicos, às vezes em grande quantidade. (Veja CACO.) Os tipos de cerâmica encontrados são considerados pelos arqueólogos como ajudas em identificar diferentes culturas, bem como em avaliar o período de ocupação, representado por diversos estratos em tais sítios. Eles também se têm empenhado em avaliar a densidade populacional de lugares específicos em tempos antigos à base da quantidade de tais fragmentos descobertos ali.

A autoridade do oleiro sobre a argila é usada de modo ilustrativo para mostrar a soberania de Jeová sobre indivíduos e nações. (Is 29:15, 16; 64:8) Para Deus, a casa de Israel era "como o barro na mão do oleiro", sendo Ele o Grande Oleiro. (Je 18:1-10) O homem não se acha em condições de contender com Deus, assim como não se poderia esperar que a argila desafiasse aquele que a moldava. (Is 45:9) Assim como um vaso de barro pode ser despedaçado, da mesma forma Jeová pode trazer a calamidade devastadora sobre um povo, em punição pelo erro deste. — Je 19:1-11.

No que diz respeito ao exercício da autoridade que Deus concede ao Rei messiânico contra as nações, foi predito: "Tu as quebrantarás com um cetro de ferro, espatifá-las-ás como se fossem um vaso de oleiro." — Sal 2:9; compare isso com Da 2:44; Re 2:26, 27; 12:5.

De uma única massa de argila, o oleiro podia fabricar um vaso para uso honroso e outro para uso desonroso, comum ou corriqueiro. De forma similar, Jeová tem autoridade para moldar as pessoas conforme lhe agrade, e tem tolerado os iníquos, "vasos do furor, feitos próprios para a destruição", mas isto tem resultado em benefício para os "vasos de misericórdia", pessoas que constituem o Israel espiritual. — Ro 9:14-26.

OLHO. O órgão da visão, uma "câmara" altamente eficaz, autoajustável, que transmite impulsos ao cérebro, onde o objeto focalizado na retina do olho é interpretado como visão. Tanto o hebraico 'á·yin como o grego o·fthal·mós são usados em sentido literal e figurado. O termo hebraico também é usado para referir-se a uma "fonte". (Gên 24:13; Êx 15:27) A posse de dois olhos, como se dá no corpo humano, fornece visão estereoscópica. A perda da visão é uma tremenda deficiência, porque a visão é, provavelmente, o canal mais importante de comunicação com a mente.

O olho é uma das partes mais bonitas do corpo. (Cân 1:15; 4:9; 7:4) Tão desfigurante e prejudicial era uma doença nos olhos que, sob o pacto da Lei, a pessoa não podia servir como sacerdote se fosse cega ou se tivesse um dos olhos doentes. (Le 21:18, 20) Em Israel, sob a Lei, o homem que golpeasse e arruinasse o olho de seu escravo tinha de libertar o escravo. (Êx 21:26) A fim de humilhar e quebrantar o poder dos inimigos, algumas nações antigas adotavam a prática cruel de cegar os homens de destaque dentre o inimigo capturado. — Jz 16:21; 1Sa 11:2; 2Rs 25:7.

A estrutura do olho revela um maravilhoso projeto da parte do seu Criador, e o processo pelo qual o cérebro interpreta o que é transmitido por meio do olho está longe de ser entendido pelos cientistas. Tudo isso salienta a inteligência do seu Projetista. O próprio Jeová Deus atesta que é o criador do olho, dizendo: "Não pode olhar Aquele que formou o olho?" — Sal 94:9; Pr 20:12.

Os Olhos de Jeová. Deus ajuda os humanos a entender e a ter apreço pelas coisas a respeito dele mesmo assemelhando-as a coisas que vemos e conhecemos bem. Assim, em sentido figurado, ele fala que seus "olhos" estão sobre Seu povo, o que evidentemente indica sua vigilância e seu cuidado amoroso para com eles. O apóstolo Pedro diz: "Os olhos de Jeová estão sobre os justos." (1Pe 3:12) Deus destaca este cuidado e a sensibilidade para com o bem-estar deles ao falar de Seus servos como "a menina" de seu olho, representando, metaforicamente, a preciosidade deles aos Seus olhos e sua prontidão em atuar em favor deles quando tocados pelo inimigo. — De 32:10; Sal 17:8.

Descrevendo a observação de Deus das ações de todos os homens, Jeremias escreveu que Seus "olhos estão abertos para com todos os caminhos dos filhos dos homens, a fim de dar a cada um segundo os seus caminhos". (Je 32:19) Sobre a onisciência de Jeová e Seu propósito de exercer a justiça para com todos, o apóstolo Paulo escreveu: "Não há criação que não esteja manifesta à sua vista, mas todas as coisas estão nuas e abertamente expostas aos olhos daquele com quem temos uma prestação de contas." (He 4:13; 2Cr 16:9; Sal 66:7; Pr 15:3) Sobre a qualidade perscrutadora do exame dos homens feito por Deus, o salmista diz: "Seus próprios olhos observam, seus próprios olhos radiantes examinam os filhos dos homens." — Sal 11:4.

A habilidade de Jeová de conhecer as características e tendências da pessoa ou sua composição genética, mesmo enquanto ela está sendo formada no ventre, como foi o caso de Jacó e Esaú (Gên 25:21-23; Ro 9:10-13), é indicada pelas palavras do salmista Davi: "Teus olhos viram até mesmo meu embrião, e todas as suas partes estavam assentadas por escrito no teu livro, referente aos dias em que foram formadas, e ainda não havia nem sequer uma entre elas." — Sal 139:15, 16.

Uso Ilustrativo. O olho humano é um importante canal de comunicação com a mente, influenciando fortemente as emoções e as ações. Satanás tentou Eva levando-a a desejar algo visto com os olhos. (Gên 3:6) Tentou induzir Jesus a procurar alcançar indevidamente coisas vistas com os olhos e assim pecar. (Lu 4:5-7) E o apóstolo João nos diz que "o desejo dos olhos" é uma das coisas que se originam deste mundo, que está passando. (1Jo 2:16, 17) Muitas emoções são igualmente expressas pelos olhos, e, assim, as Escrituras utilizam as expressões "olhos altaneiros [orgulhosos]" (Pr 6:17); "olhos lustrosos" (da mulher má, sedutora — Pr 6:25); "olhos cheios de adultério" (2Pe 2:14); o "olho não generoso" (Pr 23:6); o "olho invejoso" (Pr 28:22); o "olho iníquo" ('olho mau', Al); este último não se refere a alguma qualidade mágica do olho, mas a um olho com más intenções, o oposto dum olho que é "bondoso". — Mt 20:15; Pr 22:9.

Gestos por meio dos olhos são muito expressivos dos sentimentos duma pessoa. Podem mostrar piedade ou falta dela (De 19:13); podem 'piscar', ou 'pestanejar', em zombaria, ou ao maquinar algo insincero. (Sal 35:19; Pr 6:13; 16:30) Pode-se dizer que a pessoa que não deseja observar, ou que não quer realizar determinada ação em favor de outrem, fecha ou esconde os olhos. (Mt 13:15; Pr 28:27) Diz-se que o estúpido tem seus olhos "na extremidade da terra", perambulando cá e acolá sem nenhum objeto fixo, seus pensamentos estando em toda a parte, exceto onde deviam estar. (Pr 17:24) O aspecto dos olhos revela até mesmo a saúde e o vigor duma pessoa, ou sua condição de felicidade. (1Sa 14:27-29; De 34:7; Jó 17:7; Sal 6:7; 88:9) O Rei Jeosafá dirigiu-se da seguinte forma a Jeová: "Os nossos olhos se fixam em ti." — 2Cr 20:12.

Em certos contextos, os "olhos" referem-se ao juízo (Gên 19:14; Pr 12:15; Mt 21:42), à presença (Gên 23:11), ao conhecimento (Núm 15:24), à atenção (Gên 44:21; Lu 4:20) ou à solidariedade da pessoa (Pr 28:27). A palavra hebraica 'á·yin (olho) pode referir-se também à aparência de algo, como a "superfície visível" da terra (Êx 10:5 n), o "aspecto" do maná e do electro (Núm 11:7 n; Ez 1:4), a 'cintilação' do vinho (Pr 23:31), a "cintilação" do gelo (Ez 1:22), e a "aparência" do cobre (Da 10:6). — Veja Za 5:6 n.

Ver a Deus; a Jesus. As criaturas espirituais, os anjos, conseguem observar o esplendor de Jeová (Mt 18:10; Lu 1:19), experiência que nenhum olho humano poderia suportar, pois o próprio Jeová disse a Moisés: "Homem algum pode ver-me e continuar vivo." (Êx 33:20) João disse: "Nenhum homem jamais viu a Deus." (Jo 1:18) Portanto, quando Jesus disse a seu discípulo Filipe: "Quem me tem visto, tem visto também o Pai" (Jo 14:9), e quando o apóstolo João disse: "Quem faz o mal não tem visto a Deus" (3Jo 11), obviamente estavam falando sobre ver a Deus, não com os olhos físicos, mas com o que o apóstolo Paulo descreveu como 'os olhos do coração'. (Ef 1:18) Os que veem com os olhos do coração são os que realmente chegaram a conhecer a Deus, tendo apreço por Suas qualidades, e é por isso que João podia dizer: "Quem não amar, não chegou a conhecer a Deus, porque Deus é amor." — 1Jo 4:8.

Assim também, visto que Jesus disse que 'o mundo não mais o observaria' (Jo 14:19), a declaração em Revelação (Apocalipse) 1:7, "todo olho o verá [a Jesus Cristo]", deve referir-se, não ao olho literal, mas, em vez disso, ao efeito, sobre a mente de observadores humanos, das evidências que eles poderão ver com os olhos literais quando ele sair para destruir seus inimigos. A Bíblia indica claramente, contudo, que aqueles a quem Deus chama para a vida celestial junto com Cristo verão literalmente a Deus, o que exige que sejam ressuscitados com um corpo celestial, espiritual.

— 1Pe 1:4; 1Co 15:50-54; compare isso com 1Pe 3:18.

A Visão Espiritual. O olho espiritual, bem como o olho físico, é uma dádiva de Deus. (Pr 20:12) Ele promete curar tanto os olhos espirituais como os físicos e remover todas as causas de lágrimas. (Is 35:5; Re 21:4) Não se pode entender os propósitos de Deus sem a dádiva da visão espiritual. Por outro lado, Jeová oculta sua verdade dos olhos daqueles que são teimosos ou rebeldes, permitindo que "obscureçam-se-lhes os olhos". (Ro 11:8-10; Lu 19:42) "Eles têm olhos [literais], mas não podem ver [espiritualmente]." — Je 5:21; Is 59:10.

Jesus também salientou que a visão espiritual da pessoa deve ser mantida aguçada e em foco. Ele disse: "A lâmpada do corpo é o olho. Se, pois, o teu olho for singelo [sincero; unidirecional; em foco; generoso], todo o teu corpo será luminoso; mas, se o teu olho for iníquo, todo o teu corpo será escuro. Se, na realidade, a luz que está em ti é escuridão, quão grande é essa escuridão!" (Mt 6:22, 23, n) Jesus aconselha adicionalmente que a pessoa não deve atrever-se a oferecer-se a tirar um mero "argueiro" do olho do seu irmão para ajudá-lo a fazer julgamentos mais aceitáveis, quando sua própria habilidade de fazer um julgamento correto está prejudicada por uma "trave". — Mt 7:3-5.

O apóstolo João viu o trono de Deus e, junto com ele, quatro criaturas viventes cheias de olhos na frente e atrás. (Re 4:6, 8) Criaturas assim equipadas poderiam ficar continuamente em estado de alerta, capazes de ver todas as coisas. Ficariam plenamente cônscias do que estaria acontecendo aqui na terra e prestariam atenção a Deus em todas as coisas, bem como observariam todas as indicações do que Ele gostaria que fosse feito. (Veja Sal 123:2; também Ez 1:18; 10:12.) Jeová aconselha seus servos a não deixarem que Suas declarações 'se afastem dos seus olhos'. — Pr 4:20, 21; Lu 10:23; veja CEGUEIRA.

OLÍBANO. Produto de árvores e arbustos de incenso de certas espécies que pertencem ao gênero Boswellia, aparentados ao terebinto e também a árvores que produzem bálsamo e mirra. São nativos de regiões da África e da Ásia. O termo hebraico para olíbano (levoh·náh ou levo·náh) vem duma raiz que significa "ser branco" e, evidentemente, deriva de sua cor láctea. A palavra grega lí·ba·nos deriva da hebraica.

O Cântico de Salomão menciona o "morro do olíbano", pelo visto em sentido figurado, mas talvez indique que nos parques reais de Salomão se cultivavam árvores de incenso. (Cân 4:6, 12-16; Ec 2:5) O olíbano era um dos principais itens transportados pelas caravanas de comerciantes orientais que viajavam pelas rotas de especiarias que partiam do S da Arábia, subindo até Gaza, perto do Mediterrâneo, e indo até Damasco. As referências bíblicas indicavam que ele era introduzido por este caminho na Palestina, vindo de Sabá. — Is 60:6; Je 6:20.

O olíbano é obtido fazendo-se sucessivas incisões na casca ou descascando-se a árvore em intervalos, o que faz com que flua um sumo branco (que depois de várias incisões fica manchado de pontos amarelos ou vermelhos) e se transforme em lágrimas de c. 2,5 cm de comprimento. Quando recolhido, o olíbano consiste em uma goma-resina aromática formada de pequenos nacos, ou bagas, que têm sabor amargo e produzem um odor aromático quando queimados. — Cân 3:6.

Além das referências em O Cântico de Salomão, o olíbano é mencionado regularmente nas Escrituras Hebraicas com relação à adoração. (Veja 2Co 2:14-16.) Era um ingrediente do santo incenso usado no santuário (Êx 30:34-38) e era usado nas ofertas de cereais (Le 2:1, 2, 15, 16; 6:15; Je 17:26; 41:4, 5) e em cada fileira do pão da proposição do santuário (Le 24:7). Mas não deveria ser incluído nas ofertas pelo pecado (Le 5:11), nem na "oferta de cereais do ciúme". (Núm 5:15) Isto se dava, sem dúvida, porque estas últimas ofertas tinham que ver com o pecado, ou erro, e não eram oferecidas qual sacrifício de louvor ou de agradecimento a Jeová.

O olíbano é mencionado como estocado nos prédios do templo reconstruído, após a volta do exílio babilônico. (1Cr 9:29; Ne 13:5, 9) Os astrólogos orientais que visitaram o menino Jesus levaram consigo olíbano (Mt 2:11), e este é mencionado como um dos itens de intercâmbio comercial vendidos a Babilônia, a Grande, antes da destruição dela. (Re 18:8-13) O termo grego para o incensário celestial, em Revelação (Apocalipse) 8:3, 5, é li·ba·no·tós e deriva da palavra hebraica para "olíbano".

O profeta Isaías registra o desagrado e a desaprovação de Jeová por presentes e pelo uso de olíbano, quando oferecidos por aqueles que rejeitam sua Palavra. — Is 66:3.

OLIMPAS. Cristão residente em Roma a quem o apóstolo Paulo enviou cumprimentos. — Ro 16:15.

OLIVEIRA [hebr.: zá·yith; gr.: e·laí·a]. A oliveira era, inquestionavelmente, uma das plantas mais valiosas dos tempos bíblicos, igualando-se em importância à videira e à figueira. (Jz 9:8-13; 2Rs 5:26; Hab 3:17; Tg 3:12) Ela surge logo no início do relato da Bíblia; depois do Dilúvio foi uma folha de oliveira trazida pela pomba que indicou a Noé que as águas haviam baixado. — Gên 8:11.

A oliveira (Olea europaea) viceja nas encostas de montes da Galileia e de Samaria e nas regiões montanhosas centrais, bem como por toda a região do Mediterrâneo. (De 28:40; Jz 15:5) Viceja em solo rochoso e calcário, seco demais para muitas outras plantas, e pode suportar frequentes secas. No tempo do Êxodo do Egito, prometeu-se aos israelitas que a terra para a qual iriam era de "azeitonas e de mel", com "vinhedos e oliveiras que não [plantaram]". (De 6:11; 8:8; Jos 24:13) Visto que a oliveira é uma árvore de crescimento lento e pode levar dez ou mais anos para começar a produzir boas safras, o fato de essas árvores já estarem crescendo era uma decidida vantagem para os israelitas. A oliveira é excepcionalmente longeva, produzindo frutos por centenas de anos, e sugere-se que algumas oliveiras na Palestina têm mais de 1.000 anos.

As oliveiras apresentam uma revigorante vista em toda a Palestina, não raro crescendo em terraços rochosos das encostas ou acarpetando os vales. Esta árvore pode passar dos 6 m de altura. Seu tronco nodoso, com casca cinzenta, possui profusos ramos, que apresentam densa folhagem de folhas delgadas, verde-acinzentadas. Embora em geral muitos não a considerem como tal, a oliveira é uma sempre-verde. Em geral floresce por volta de maio e fica recoberta de milhares de flores amarelo-pálidas. A Bíblia menciona a facilidade com que tais flores são carregadas pelo vento. (Jó 15:33) Seus frutos, ou azeitonas, são verdes quando não estão maduros, mas, ao amadurecerem, vão do castanho-arroxeado ao negro. A colheita é feita no outono setentrional (outubro-novembro), e o método antigo de bater a árvore com varas ainda é frequentemente empregado. (De 24:20; Is 24:13) Nos tempos bíblicos, os respigadores colhiam os frutos remanescentes. (Is 17:6) Por natureza, a oliveira produz em ciclos alternados, isto é, uma boa safra é seguida por outra não tão boa no ano seguinte. O fruto fresco contém uma substância amarga, removida por se deixá-lo em salmoura, e então as azeitonas são comidas cruas ou em conserva. Seu principal valor, porém, está em seu óleo, que constitui (em peso) até 30 por cento ou mais do fruto fresco. Uma única árvore boa pode produzir de 38 a 57 L num ano. A madeira da oliveira é muito dura e precisa ser secada ao ar durante anos a fim de ser útil para trabalhos de marcenaria.

A oliveira não só vive séculos, mas, se cortada, produz até cinco novos rebentos de suas raízes para desenvolver novos troncos, e as árvores velhas comumente também se perpetuam desta forma. Novas árvores são frequentemente plantadas usando-se mudas cortadas duma árvore já crescida. Assim, a ilustração do salmista é muito apropriada ao assemelhar os filhos do homem abençoado a 'mudas de oliveiras ao redor da sua mesa'. — Sal 128:3.

Enxertos. As oliveiras bravas que cresciam nas encostas das colinas eram, não raro, submetidas a enxertos com pedaços cortados de árvores cultivadas e produtivas, a fim de produzirem bons frutos. Seria incomum, e até desnatural, enxertar uma espécie brava numa árvore cultivada. No entanto, era isso o que alguns lavradores faziam no primeiro século. Paulo fez referência a esse procedimento incomum na ilustração que fez em Romanos 11:17-24, na qual assemelhou os cristãos gentios, que se tornaram parte do 'descendente de

As oliveiras vicejam em solo rochoso, seco demais para muitas outras plantas.

Abraão', a ramos de uma oliveira brava enxertados numa árvore cultivada para substituir os ramos improdutivos que foram podados e que representavam os membros judeus naturais, rejeitados, que tinham sido removidos da simbólica árvore por falta de fé. (Gál 3:28, 29) Este ato, "contrário à natureza", realça a benignidade imerecida de Deus para com tais crentes gentios, destaca os benefícios que resultam para eles como ramos de uma "oliveira brava" em receberem a "untuosidade" das raízes da oliveira cultivada, e, assim, remove qualquer base para jactância da parte destes cristãos gentios. — Compare isso com Mt 3:10; Jo 15:1-10; veja ENXERTO.

Olivais e Prensas. Sempre que as condições permitiam, quase todas as aldeias na Palestina tinham um olival. Uma safra ruim, como quando o olival era atacado por seu principal inimigo, a lagarta, constituía um grave desastre para o povo. (Am 4:9) O Rei Davi possuía valiosos olivais na região da Sefelá. (1Cr 27:28) A cadeia de montanhas situada ao L de Jerusalém, distante cerca da "jornada de um sábado", era conhecida por suas oliveiras nos dias do Rei Davi e, no tempo de Zacarias, já era chamada de "o monte das oliveiras". (2Sa 15:30; Za 14:4; Lu 19:29; 22:39; At 1:12) O grande número de antigas prensas ou lagares de azeitonas, feitas de pedra, encontradas em toda a Palestina, atesta o extenso cultivo dessa árvore. Os "jardins" daquele tempo eram frequentemente da natureza dum pomar e não raro tinham uma prensa de azeitonas. Assim, o jardim chamado de Getsêmani, para o qual Jesus se retirou após a última ceia com seus discípulos, deriva seu nome dum termo aramaico, gath shema·néh, que significa "lagar de azeite". Às vezes, as azeitonas também eram pisadas. — Miq 6:15.

Emprego Figurado. A oliveira é mencionada em sentido figurado na Bíblia como símbolo de produtividade, beleza e dignidade. (Sal 52:8; Je 11:16; Os 14:6) Seus ramos achavam-se entre os usados na Festividade das Barracas. (Ne 8:15; Le 23:40) Em Zacarias 4:3, 11-14 e em Revelação (Apocalipse) 11:3, 4 empregam-se oliveiras quais símbolos dos ungidos e testemunhas de Deus.

OLIVEIRAS, MONTE DAS. Cadeia de morros arredondados de calcário, situada do lado leste de Jerusalém, à distância da "jornada de um sábado", e separada da cidade pelo vale do Cédron. (Ez 11:23; Za 14:4; At 1:12) Essa cadeia inclui três cumes principais. O monte Scopus, de maior altura e situado mais ao norte, eleva-se a cerca de 820 m e, assim, ultrapassa a elevação geral de Jerusalém. O chamado monte da Ofensa, ou monte da Ruína, é o mais sulino dos cumes e eleva-se a cerca de 740 m. O cume central, defronte do monte do Templo, tem por volta de 812 m no ponto mais elevado e é aquele geralmente mencionado na Bíblia como o monte das Oliveiras. Antigamente esta serra estava coberta de palmeiras, de murtas, de árvores oleaginosas, e, especialmente, de oliveiras. (Ne 8:15) Foi das oliveiras que esta serra obteve seu nome. Durante o sítio de Jerusalém pelos romanos em 70 EC, contudo, o monte das Oliveiras foi desnudado de suas árvores. — The Jewish War (A Guerra Judaica), V, 523 (xii, 4).

Notáveis eventos da história bíblica estão relacionados com o monte das Oliveiras. O Rei Davi, descalço e chorando, subiu o monte das Oliveiras ao fugir de seu filho rebelde, Absalão. (2Sa 15:14, 30, 32) O Rei Salomão construiu altos para a adoração idólatra ali "à direita [ao sul] do Monte da Ruína", mas o Rei Josias, mais tarde, os tornou inapropriados para a adoração. (1Rs 11:7; 2Rs 23:13 n) No primeiro século EC, Jesus Cristo frequentemente se reunia com seus discípulos no jardim de Getsêmani, situado no monte das Oliveiras, ou nas suas proximidades. (Mt 26:30, 36; Jo 18:1, 2) Quando estavam em Jerusalém, Jesus e seus discípulos costumavam passar a noite em Betânia, na encosta L do monte das Oliveiras, sem dúvida no lar de Marta, Maria e Lázaro. (Mt 21:17; Mr 11:11; Lu 21:37; Jo 11:1) Pelo que parece, de Betfagé, perto de Betânia, Jesus, montado num jumentinho, iniciou sua cavalgada triunfal pelo monte das Oliveiras até Jerusalém. (Mt 21:1, 2; Mr 11:1; Lu 19:29) E foi no monte das Oliveiras que ele explicou a seus discípulos qual seria o 'sinal de sua presença'. (Mt 24:3; Mr 13:3) Por fim, após sua ressurreição, Jesus ascendeu dali para os céus. — At 1:9-12.

OM. Nome duma pessoa e dum lugar.

1. [Poder Generativo; Energia Dinâmica]. Filho de Pelete, e um dos principais homens da tribo de Rubem. (Núm 16:1) Ele estava entre os que protestaram contra Moisés e Arão, mas seu nome não aparece entre os rebeldes nas últimas palavras que estes dirigiram a Moisés ou quando foram punidos por Jeová com destruição. (Núm 16:2, 3, 12-14, 23-35) Isto talvez se deva a que ele desempenhou um papel um tanto secundário na rebelião, ou pode até indicar que ele se retirou dela, depois da censura inicial de Moisés aos conspiradores.

2. Antiga e renomada cidade do Egito, situada a pouca distância ao NE do Cairo, na margem L do Nilo e perto do ponto em que as águas desse rio se dividem para começar a formação da região do Delta. Nos registros egípcios, o nome dessa cidade era escrito como Junu, ao passo que os registros assírio-babilônicos a mencionam como Ana ou Unu. Julga-se que o nome egípcio significa "Cidade da Coluna", referindo-se talvez aos obeliscos (colunas altas, que se vão afilando, encimadas por uma ponta em forma de pirâmide) pelos quais a cidade era famosa; ou esse nome pode relacionar-se à pedra sagrada (chamada de a benben) ligada à adoração de Rá (Re), o deus-sol. Os gregos chamavam a cidade de Heliópolis, que significa "Cidade do Sol", por ser o principal centro da adoração egípcia do sol.

Om surge pela primeira vez nos registros da Bíblia como a cidade do sacerdote Potífera, cuja filha, Asenate, foi dada como esposa a José. (Gên 41:45, 50) O próprio nome Potíf*era* inclui o nome de Rá, o deus-sol.

Com o passar do tempo, o sacerdócio de Om tornou-se muito opulento, rivalizando, neste respeito, com o sacerdócio de Mênfis e sendo ultrapassado apenas pelo sacerdócio de Tebas (a bíblica Nô-Amom). Relacionada com o seu templo ao sol, funcionava uma escola para treinamento de sacerdotes e para o ensino de medicina. Filósofos e peritos gregos eram atraídos para lá, a fim de aprender a teologia sacerdotal, e Om tornou-se célebre como centro do saber egípcio.

O profeta Jeremias foi inspirado a predizer que o Rei Nabucodonosor devastaria o Egito e 'destroçaria as colunas de Bete-Semes, que está na terra do Egito'. (Je 43:10-13) Bete-Semes corresponde de certo modo ao nome grego Heliópolis e significa "Casa do Sol". Assim, a referência feita aqui é, provavelmente, à cidade de Om, e "as colunas" que deviam ser despedaçadas podem muito bem referir-se aos muitos obeliscos ao redor do templo do sol.

A profecia de Ezequiel contém um aviso similar. (Ez 30:10, 17) Aqui, a pontuação vocálica hebraica do nome varia da de Gênesis, de modo que o nome é literalmente Áven (hebr.: 'á·wen). Alguns eruditos sugerem que isto foi feito como um jogo de palavras, visto que Áven significa "Prejuízo; Algo Prejudicial", e Om era um centro de idolatria.

Este também pode ser o caso em Isaías 19:18, em que o texto massorético refere-se a uma das "cinco cidades da terra do Egito, falando o idioma de Canaã e jurando a Jeová", como a "Cidade de Derrubamento [hebr.: 'Ir ha-Hé·res]". O Rolo do Mar Morto de Isaías apresenta 'Ir ha-Hhé·res, que significa "Cidade do Sol", apontando assim para Om (Heliópolis). Neste caso, também, talvez haja um jogo de palavras intencional, Hé·res (derrubamento) sendo substituído por Hhé·res (outra palavra hebraica para "sol", menos comum que shé·mesh), em vista da intenção de Jeová de destruir a idólatra cidade de Om. A paráfrase deste trecho do versículo, encontrada nos Targuns Aramaicos, reza: "(Cidade de) a Casa do Sol, que há de ser destruída."

Além da predita invasão destrutiva por Nabucodonosor, Om (Heliópolis) evidentemente sofreu outro golpe quando Cambises II conquistou o Egito (segundo Estrabão, geógrafo grego que viveu perto do começo da Era Comum). (Geography [Geografia], 17, I, 27) Na época de Estrabão, Heliópolis já tinha perdido sua posição de importância e estava parcialmente abandonada. Hoje, o povoado chamado Al-Matariya ocupa parte do local antigo, e tudo o que ainda resta ali do anterior esplendor é um único obelisco de granito vermelho que data do reinado de Sesóstris I. Outros obeliscos de Heliópolis são agora encontrados em Nova York, Londres e Roma.

OMAR [duma raiz que significa "dizer"]. Segundo filho alistado de Elifaz, primogênito de Esaú; um xeque de Edom. — Gên 36:10, 11, 15; 1Cr 1:36.

OMBRO. A parte do corpo do homem ou do animal que se projeta para os lados abaixo do pescoço; por extensão, na Bíblia, a parte arredondada ou inclinada duma colina; também, capacidade de levar fardos ou responsabilidades.

Antigamente, como hoje em dia, era costumeiro levar cargas nos ombros. (Gên 21:14; Êx 12:34) A Arca do Pacto devia ser transportada, não sobre uma carroça, mas nos ombros dos levitas. (1Cr 15:15; Jos 3:14, 15; 2Sa 6:3, 6-9, 13) Uma carga pesada sobre os ombros podia indicar opressão ou escravidão. (Sal 81:5, 6; Is 10:27; 14:25; Mt 23:4) Predisse-se que a tribo de Issacar 'encurvaria seu ombro para levar fardos'. (Gên 49:14, 15) Na história de Israel, esta tribo se mostrava disposta a assumir responsabilidades e realizar trabalho árduo. Ela forneceu muitos lutadores corajosos ao juiz Baraque e, mais tarde, forneceu o juiz Tola; além disso, no tempo de Davi, esta tribo supriu muitos homens sábios e valentes. — Jz 5:13, 15; 10:1, 2; 1Cr 7:1-5; 12:23, 32.

Dizia-se que a autoridade ou responsabilidade repousava sobre os ombros da pessoa. A profecia de Isaías predisse que o domínio principesco viria a estar sobre os ombros de Jesus Cristo. (Is 9:6) Isaías disse ao infiel Sebna que Eliaquim o substituiria como mordomo da casa do rei, colocando Deus "a chave da casa de Davi" sobre o ombro de Eliaquim. Visto que uma chave, em tais casos, representava responsabilidade e autoridade, esta profecia talvez se refira a Cristo receber a autoridade do Reino, conforme representada no pacto davídico. (Is 22:15, 20-22; Lu 1:31-33; compare isso também com Re 3:7.) É interessante observar também que o peitoral do julgamento ficava suspenso das ombreiras das vestes do sumo sacerdote, o que evidentemente representava certas autoridades que dependeriam ou repousariam nos ombros do grande Sumo Sacerdote, Jesus Cristo. — Êx 28:6, 7, 12, 22-28; veja SUMO SACERDOTE.

Depois de abençoar os filhos de José, Efraim e Manassés, disse Jacó a José: "Deveras te dou uma lombada [literalmente: ombro] de terra mais do que a teus irmãos", desta forma designando José como o possuidor dos direitos de primogênito. (Gên 48:22; compare isso com De 21:17; 1Cr 5:1, 2.) Moisés disse sobre Benjamim, quando abençoou os filhos de Israel: "O amado de Jeová resida em segurança junto dele, . . . e ele tem de residir entre os seus ombros." (De 33:12) Isto parece referir-se a que os reis da linhagem de Davi teriam sua sede governamental no território de Benjamim. A mesma palavra hebraica usada aqui para "ombro" é traduzida "flanco" ou "encosta", em Josué 15:8 (BV, NM, PIB), falando-se duma encosta da colina em que Jerusalém então se situava. — Veja outros exemplos em Êx 27:14, 15; Núm 34:11; Jos 15:10; 1Rs 6:8; Ez 25:9.

"Dar um ombro obstinado" representa resistência ao conselho e à lei de Deus (Ne 9:29; Za 7:11), ao passo que servir "ombro a ombro" indica unidade de ação. — Sof 3:9.

Dava-se ao sacerdote oficiante a espádua dum cordeiro do sacrifício do nazireu ao terminar o voto deste, sendo essa uma parte da porção do sacerdote. — Núm 6:19, 20; veja também De 18:3.

ÔMEGA. Veja ALFA E ÔMEGA.

ÔMER. Medida de secos que corresponde ao coro e equivale a dez batos ou a dez efas. (Ez 45:11, 14) Baseado no volume estimativo do bato, tem-se calculado o efa em 22 l. O ômer, portanto, seria igual a 220 l. (Os 3:2) No deserto, os cobiçosos israelitas juntaram codornizes miraculosamente providas em tão grande número que "quem recolhia menos ajuntou dez ômeres" (2.200 l). (Núm 11:32) As Escrituras também mencionam o ômer como medida para cevada, sementes e trigo. — Le 27:16; Is 5:10; Ez 45:13.

ONÃ [duma raiz que significa "poder generativo; energia dinâmica"]. Um dos filhos de Judá, o seu segundo com a cananeia, filha de Sua. (Gên 38:2-4; 1Cr 2:3) Depois de Er, que não tinha filhos e era o irmão mais velho de Onã, ter sido morto por Jeová por transgressão, Judá mandou que Onã realizasse o casamento de cunhado com Tamar, viúva de Er. Se tivessem um filho, este não seria o fundador da família de Onã, e a herança de primogênito lhe pertenceria como herdeiro de Er; ao passo que, não havendo herdeiro, Onã ficaria com a herança. Ao ter relações sexuais com Tamar, ele "desperdiçou o seu sêmen na terra", em vez de inseminá-la. Não se tratava dum ato de masturbação por parte de Onã, pois o relato diz que, "quando teve relações com a esposa de seu irmão", ele derramou seu sêmen. Pelo visto, era um caso de "coitus interruptus" (coito interrompido), em que Onã propositalmente impediu que a ejaculação ocorresse no canal genital de Tamar. Por causa desta desobediência a seu pai, de sua cobiça e do seu pecado contra o arranjo divino do casamento, e não pelo abuso de si, Onã, que também não tinha filhos, foi morto por Jeová. — Gên 38:6-10; 46:12; Núm 26:19.

ONÃO [duma raiz que significa "poder generativo; energia dinâmica"].

1. Último dos cinco filhos alistados do xeque horeu Sobal e neto do antepassado dos horeus, Seir. — Gên 36:20, 21, 23; 1Cr 1:40.

2. Filho de Jerameel e elo na genealogia jerameelita na tribo de Judá; o nome de sua mãe era Atara. — 1Cr 2:26, 28.

ONESÍFORO [Que Traz Proveito]. Cristão mencionado na segunda carta de Paulo a Timóteo. (2Ti 4:19) Em contraste com outros no distrito da Ásia que se afastaram de Paulo, Onesíforo continuou sendo apoiador leal dele, e, quando Paulo se achava em Roma, Onesíforo procurou-o diligentemente, apesar dos riscos que correu. Ele não ficou envergonhado das cadeias de Paulo, mas prestou um bom serviço ao apóstolo, como fizera em Éfeso. Paulo tinha grande apreço por esta lealdade, e orava para que Onesíforo e sua família obtivessem a misericórdia de Jeová. — 2Ti 1:15-18.

Ter Paulo enviado saudações à família de Onesíforo, em vez de ao próprio Onesíforo (2Ti 4:19), não indica, necessariamente, que ele não mais estivesse vivo, embora isso pudesse ser verdade. Talvez simplesmente estivesse longe da família naquela ocasião, ou, talvez, até mesmo estivesse incluído nas saudações gerais enviadas à sua família de crentes.

ONÉSIMO [Proveitoso]. Um escravo fugitivo a quem Paulo ajudou a tornar-se cristão. Onésimo tinha sido servo de Filêmon, cristão colossense, mas tinha fugido de Colossos para Roma. Talvez tenha até mesmo roubado de seu amo para fazer a viagem. (Col 4:9; Flm 18) É bem possível que tenha conhecido Paulo, ou pelo menos ouvido falar dele, através de Filêmon; pois, embora não se mencione especificamente nenhuma visita de Paulo a Colossos nas viagens missionárias, Paulo deveras viajou por aquela região geral e conhecia Filêmon. (At 18:22, 23; Flm 5, 19, 22) Seja como for, de algum modo não especificado, Onésimo tornou-se associado de Paulo em Roma e logo se tornou cristão. (Flm 10) Em grande contraste com sua anterior inutilidade a Filêmon como escravo, ele tornou-se então utilíssimo a Paulo como ministro, um "fiel e amado irmão", a quem Paulo chama de "as minhas próprias ternas afeições". — Col 4:9; Flm 11, 12.

Todavia, Onésimo ainda era um escravo fugitivo, e a estrutura social daqueles dias obrigava Paulo a mandá-lo retornar a seu amo, embora com relutância, em vista de quão bom companheiro Onésimo se tornara. O apóstolo, contudo, não tinha meios de obrigar Onésimo a retornar, de modo que isso dependia e resultaria da própria disposição de Onésimo de retornar. Ao enviar Onésimo, Paulo providenciou que Tíquico o acompanhasse e que os dois levassem uma carta e um relatório a Colossos. (Col 4:7-9) Além disso, Paulo entregou a Onésimo a sua carta a Filêmon, embora o tempo de prisão de Paulo já fosse suficientemente longo para lhe dar esperanças de ser solto e visitar Filêmon pessoalmente. (Flm 22) Esta última carta poderia ser chamada de carta de reapresentação e de recomendação de Onésimo, na qual Paulo assegurava Filêmon do bom desempenho de Onésimo no ministério cristão e de sua nova personalidade, e na qual suplicava que o reencontro fosse mais o de dois cristãos do que o de um escravo e seu amo. Paulo solicitava que qualquer dívida pendente de Onésimo para com Filêmon fosse debitada na sua própria conta. (Flm 12-22) Incidentalmente, na carta aos colossenses que Onésimo e Tíquico portavam, Paulo tratava de princípios cristãos que governam o relacionamento entre escravos e amos. — Col 3:22–4:1.

ÔNICA. Veja ONICHA.

ONICHA. Ingrediente do incenso destinado exclusivamente para uso no santuário. (Êx 30:34-37) Alguns creem que a onicha talvez se derivasse das valvas que se fecham, de certos moluscos. No entanto, visto que este ingrediente era usado para um propósito sagrado, outros consideram que se tratava dum produto vegetal, em vez de algo obtido dum animal impuro.

ÔNIX. Gema semipreciosa, uma variedade dura de ágata; o termo também se aplica a uma forma estratificada de calcedônia. O ônix tem camadas brancas alternadas com negras, castanhas, vermelhas, cinzentas ou verdes. A cor pálida produzida por se tornarem visíveis as camadas vermelhas através das translúcidas camadas brancas desta pedra evidentemente fazia os gregos lembrarem-se da unha, que é ó·nyx em grego. Desde o passado remoto, o ônix tem sido muito apreciado para adornos, anéis e contas. As camadas de cores variadas tornavam-no especialmente popular para camafeus.

A "terra de Havilá" era uma fonte destacada de ônix nos primitivos tempos bíblicos. (Gên 2:11, 12) As pedras de ônix se achavam entre os objetos de valor contribuídos para a fabricação das coisas relacionadas com o tabernáculo de Israel. (Êx 25:1-3, 7) Os "nomes dos filhos de Israel . . . pela ordem dos seus nascimentos" foram gravados em duas pedras de ônix (seis nomes em cada pedra), colocadas sobre as ombreiras do éfode do sumo sacerdote "como pedras memoriais para os filhos de Israel". Outra pedra de ônix foi gravada com o nome de uma das 12 tribos de Israel, e foi colocada no centro da quarta fileira de pedras no "peitoral do julgamento" do sumo sacerdote. — Êx 28:9-12, 15-21; 35:5, 9, 27; 39:6-14.

Mais tarde, Davi preparou pessoalmente muitas coisas valiosas, inclusive pedras de ônix, para a construção do prospectivo templo em Jerusalém. (1Cr 29:2) O ônix também se achava entre as pedras preciosas que serviam como "cobertura" figurada do "rei de Tiro" na endecha registrada por Ezequiel. (Ez 28:12, 13) Jó, reconhecendo o valor da sabedoria, declarou que a pessoa não poderia comprar a sabedoria inestimável e piedosa com "a rara pedra de ônix" e outras coisas preciosas. — Jó 28:12, 16.

ONO. Cidade evidentemente construída pelo benjamita Semede, 'filho' de Elpaal. (1Cr 8:1, 12) Após o exílio babilônico, Ono foi reocupada por benjamitas. (Esd 2:1, 33; Ne 7:6, 37; 11:31, 35) Kafr ʽAna (Ono), a cerca de 11 km a ESE de Jope, é identificada com a localização antiga. Esta localização fica a apenas poucos quilômetros das sugeridas localizações das antigas Lode e Hadide. O "vale plano de Ono" (Ne 6:2) possivelmente denota o extenso vale em que se situa Kafr ʽAna. Este "vale plano" também tem sido relacionado com "o vale dos artífices [geh ha·hhara·shím]". (Ne 11:35) Mas alguns peritos acham que o hebraico geh ha·hhara·shím se refira a outra localidade e o transliteram como nome próprio, "Ge-Harasim". — JP; compare isso com 1Cr 4:14.

ONRI.

1. O quinto alistado entre os nove filhos ou descendentes de Bequer, um dos filhos de Benjamim. — 1Cr 7:6, 8.

2. Príncipe da tribo de Issacar durante o reinado de Davi; filho de Micael. — 1Cr 27:18, 22.

3. O sexto rei do reino setentrional, de dez tribos, de Israel. Nada consta sobre os ancestrais de Onri, nem mesmo o nome de seu pai ou de sua tribo. Onri fundou a terceira dinastia de Israel (precedida pelas de Jeroboão e de Baasa), seu filho Acabe e seus netos, Acazias e Jeorão, sucederam-no, os quatro juntos totalizando uns 46 anos (c. 951-905 AEC) no trono. Atalia, neta de Onri, governou seis anos sobre o trono de Judá. (2Rs 8:26; 11:1-3; 2Cr 22:2) Jeú, que exterminara a casa de Acabe e estabelecera a dinastia seguinte de Israel, é chamado de "filho [isto é, sucessor] de Onri" no Obelisco Negro de Salmaneser III. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 281) De fato, os assírios continuaram a chamar Israel de "a terra de Onri" e os reis de Israel de "a casa de Onri" por muito tempo depois de os descendentes dele terem deixado de governar — um tributo ao poder dele.

Onri chegou ao trono, não por sucessão, mas pela espada. Ele tinha sido chefe do exército de Israel sob o Rei Elá (e, talvez, sob o seu predecessor, Baasa) quando Zinri, chefe da metade dos carros, derrubou Elá, assumiu o reinado e exterminou a casa e os amigos de Baasa. Assim que isto foi comunicado ao exército israelita, naquela ocasião acampado contra os filisteus em Gibetom, "todo o Israel" — evidentemente os cabeças tribais "no acampamento" — fez de Onri o seu rei. Retiraram-se imediatamente de Gibetom e tomaram de assalto a Tirza, capital de Zinri. Vendo perdida a sua causa, Zinri incendiou a casa do rei com ele mesmo dentro dela, pondo assim um fim trágico ao seu governo de sete dias. — 1Rs 16:8-20.

Mas, surgiu um novo rival de Onri — Tibni, filho de Ginate. O povo permaneceu dividido por uns quatro anos, tempo durante o qual presumivelmente grassou a guerra civil até que os apoiadores de Onri derrotaram os de Tibni, garantindo para Onri o governo indisputado. Zinri falecera no 27.º ano do Rei Asa, de Judá (c. 951 AEC). (1Rs 16:15-18) Por fim, no 31.º ano de Asa (c. 947 AEC), Tibni morreu de um modo não declarado, deixando para Onri cerca de oito anos de governo exclusivo. — 1Rs 16:21-23, 29; veja CRONOLOGIA.

Atribui-se "potência" ao Rei Onri. (1Rs 16:27) Segundo as linhas 4 a 8 da Pedra Moabita, Onri impôs sujeição a Moabe, domínio este a que Acabe deu prosseguimento. (2Rs 3:4) Em meados de seu reinado, Onri mudou sabiamente sua capital de Tirza, que com tanta facilidade capturara. Comprou o monte que pertencia a Semer, bem apropriado para ser fortificado, e construiu ali uma nova cidade, Samaria, capaz de suportar longos sítios. (1Rs 16:23, 24) As inscrições em cuneiforme também o chamam de fundador dela, e foi também o local de seu sepultamento. (1Rs 16:28) Durante o seu reinado, Onri sofreu vários reveses, tais como o de ter de entregar algumas cidades ao rei da Síria (1Rs 20:34) e de ser obrigado a pagar tributo à Assíria, sendo ele o primeiro rei israelita a fazer isso.

No campo religioso, Onri deu continuidade à tendência decadente do reino setentrional; prosseguiu com a idolatria de Jeroboão; de fato, ele "fazia o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová e veio a fazer pior do que todos os que o precederam". (1Rs 16:25, 26) Uns 200 anos depois, por meio de Miqueias, Jeová condenou Israel por seguir "os estatutos de Onri". — Miq 6:16.

4. Homem de Judá, cujos descendentes viveram em Jerusalém após o exílio babilônico. — 1Cr 9:3, 4.

OOLÁ [Tenda Dela (Sua Tenda) [de Adoração]]. Ezequiel, capítulo 23, retrata Samaria (representativa do reino de Israel, de dez tribos) como a prostituta Oolá, a irmã mais velha de Oolibá, que representava Jerusalém (o reino de Judá). Ter o reino de dez tribos estabelecido seus próprios centros de adoração talvez seja o que se alude pelo nome Oolá, "Tenda Dela (Sua Tenda) [de Adoração]". A sua prostituição espiritual começou no Egito e continuou na Terra Prometida. Em épocas posteriores, envolvia o cortejar o favor dos assírios e o empenhar-se em práticas idólatras degradantes, incluindo o sacrifício de crianças. Por sua infidelidade a ele, Jeová entregou Oolá (o reino setentrional) nas mãos dos assírios, os amantes dela.

OOLIABE [Tenda do Pai; possivelmente: O Pai É Minha Tenda [isto é, proteção]]. Principal ajudante de Bezalel na construção do tabernáculo; da tribo de Dã, filho de Aisamaque. Ooliabe era "artífice e bordador, e tecelão em linha azul e em lã tingida de roxo, e em fibras carmíneas, e em linho fino". — Êx 31:6; 35:34; 36:1, 2; 38:23.

OOLIBÁ [Minha Tenda [de Adoração] Está Nela]. Em Ezequiel, capítulo 23, a infidelidade de Jerusalém a Jeová é representada sob a alegoria da prostituta Oolibá. O significado do nome Oolibá parece ser uma alusão a que a tenda ou santuário de Jeová se encontrava em seu território. (Compare isso com OOLÁ.) Contudo, em vez de ter apreço por isso e levar a peito a punição que, devido à sua infidelidade, sobreveio à irmã dela, Oolá (Samaria), Oolibá não só prosseguiu com seus antecedentes de infidelidade, iniciada no Egito, mas portou-se ainda pior do que sua irmã. Ela praticou idolatria em ampla escala e ficou politicamente envolvida com os assírios e os babilônios. Por conseguinte, foi predito que seus anteriores amantes, os babilônios, viriam contra ela e a tornariam um "objeto de tremor".

OOLIBAMA [Tenda do Alto].

1. Esposa cananeia de Esaú. Ela deu-lhe três filhos homens, Jeús, Jalão e Corá, que se tornaram xeques de Edom. Oolibama era uma das filhas de Aná e neta de Zibeão, o heveu. — Gên 36:2, 5-8, 14, 18, 25; veja ANÁ.

2. Nome de um xeque edomita; alguns peritos preferem aplicar estes nomes alistados a lugares, crendo que deviam rezar: "O xeque de Oolibama", e assim por diante. — Gên 36:40, 41; 1Cr 1:51, 52.

ORAÇÃO. O dirigir-se, em forma adorativa, ao verdadeiro Deus ou a deuses falsos. Simplesmente falar com Deus não é, necessariamente, uma oração, como se pode ver do julgamento proferido no Éden e no caso de Caim. (Gên 3:8-13; 4:9-14) A oração envolve devoção, confiança, respeito e um senso de dependência para com aquele a quem a oração é dirigida. As diversas palavras hebraicas e gregas relacionadas com a oração transmitem ideias tais como pedir, solicitar, peticionar, rogar, suplicar, pleitear, implorar o favor, buscar, indagar de, bem como louvar, agradecer e bendizer.

Petições e súplicas, naturalmente, podem ser feitas a homens, e as palavras das línguas originais são às vezes empregadas nesse sentido (Gên 44:18; 50:17; At 25:11); mas "oração", usado em sentido religioso, não se aplica a tais casos. Alguém poderia "suplicar" ou "implorar" a outrem que fizesse algo, mas, ao assim fazer, não consideraria tal pessoa como seu Deus. Não faria, por exemplo, uma petição silenciosa a tal pessoa, nem faria isso quando ela não estivesse visivelmente presente, como se faz na oração a Deus.

O "Ouvinte de Oração". O inteiro registro bíblico atesta que Jeová é Aquele a quem se deve dirigir a oração (Sal 5:1, 2; Mt 6:9), que ele é o "Ouvinte de oração" (Sal 65:2; 66:19), e que tem poder de agir a favor dos peticionários. (Mr 11:24; Ef 3:20) Orar a deuses falsos e às suas imagens-ídolos é exposto como estupidez, pois os ídolos não têm a capacidade de ouvir nem de agir, e os deuses que eles representam são indignos de comparação com o Deus verdadeiro. (Jz 10:11-16; Sal 115:4, 6; Is 45:20; 46:1, 2, 6, 7) A disputa a respeito de divindade entre Baal e Jeová, realizada no monte Carmelo, demonstrou quão tolo é orar a deidades falsas. — 1Rs 18:21-39; compare isso com Jz 6:28-32.

Embora alguns afirmem que se possa dirigir corretamente uma oração a outros, tais como ao Filho de Deus, a evidência aponta enfaticamente o contrário. Na verdade, existem raros casos em que se dirigiram palavras a Jesus Cristo no céu. Estêvão, quando prestes a morrer, apelou para Jesus, dizendo: "Senhor Jesus, recebe meu espírito." (At 7:59) No entanto, o contexto revela que havia uma circunstância que dava base para essa expressão excepcional. Estêvão, naquele exato momento, teve uma visão de "Jesus em pé à direita de Deus", e, evidentemente, reagindo como se estivesse na presença pessoal de Jesus, sentiu-se livre para dirigir tal apelo àquele a quem ele reconhecia como cabeça da congregação cristã. (At 7:55, 56; Col 1:18) Similarmente, o apóstolo João, na conclusão de Revelação (Apocalipse), diz: "Amém! Vem, Senhor Jesus." (Re 22:20) Mas, de novo, o contexto mostra que, numa visão (Re 1:10; 4:1, 2), João ouvira Jesus falar de sua vinda futura e, assim, João externou, com a expressão acima, seu desejo de que tal vinda ocorresse. (Re 22:16, 20) Em ambos os casos, o de Estêvão e o de João, a situação pouco difere da palestra que João teve com uma pessoa celestial naquela visão de Revelação. (Re 7:13, 14; compare isso com At 22:6-22.) Não há nada que indique que os discípulos cristãos em outras circunstâncias assim se expressassem com o ressuscitado Jesus após a ascensão dele ao céu. De modo que o apóstolo Paulo escreve: "Em tudo, por oração e súplica, junto com agradecimento, fazei conhecer as vossas petições a Deus." — Fil 4:6.

O artigo APROXIMAÇÃO A DEUS considera a posição de Cristo Jesus como o único por meio de quem a oração deve ser dirigida. Por meio do sangue de Jesus, oferecido a Deus em sacrifício, "temos denodo para com o caminho de entrada no lugar santo", isto é, denodo para nos aproximar da presença de Deus em oração, aproximando-nos "com corações sinceros na plena certeza da fé". (He 10:19-22) Jesus Cristo é, pois, o único e exclusivo "caminho" de reconciliação com Deus e de aproximação a Ele em oração. — Jo 14:6; 15:16; 16:23, 24; 1Co 1:2; Ef 2:18; veja JESUS CRISTO (Seu Lugar Vital no Propósito de Deus).

Aqueles a Quem Deus Ouve. Pessoas "de toda carne" podem dirigir-se ao "Ouvinte de oração", Jeová Deus. (Sal 65:2; At 15:17) Mesmo durante o período em que Israel era "propriedade particular" de Deus, Seu povo pactuado, os estrangeiros podiam aproximar-se de Jeová em oração por reconhecerem a Israel como o instrumento designado de Deus, e o templo de Jerusalém como Seu local escolhido para sacrifícios. (De 9:29; 2Cr 6:32, 33; compare isso com Is 19:22.) Mais tarde, pela morte de Cristo, foi removida para sempre a distinção entre judeu e gentio. (Ef 2:11-16) Na casa do italiano Cornélio, Pedro reconheceu que "Deus não é parcial, mas, em cada nação, o homem que o teme e que faz a justiça lhe é aceitável". (At 10:34, 35) O fator determinante, portanto, é o coração da pessoa, e o que este induz a pessoa a fazer. (Sal 119:145; La 3:41) Os que guardam os mandamentos de Deus e que praticam "as coisas que são agradáveis aos seus olhos" são assegurados de que os "ouvidos" de Deus estão abertos para eles. — 1Jo 3:22; Sal 10:17; Pr 15:8; 1Pe 3:12.

Inversamente, os que desconsideram a Palavra e a lei de Deus, derramando sangue e praticando outras iniquidades, não são ouvidos favoravelmente por Deus; suas orações lhe são "detestáveis". (Pr 15:29; 28:9; Is 1:15; Miq 3:4) A própria oração de tais pode 'tornar-se um pecado'. (Sal 109:3-7) O Rei Saul, por seu presunçoso e rebelde proceder, perdeu o favor de Deus e, "embora Saul indagasse de Jeová, Jeová nunca lhe respondia, nem por sonhos, nem por Urim, nem pelos profetas". (1Sa 28:6) Jesus disse que as pessoas hipócritas que procuravam chamar a atenção para sua piedade ao orar já tinham recebido "plenamente a sua recompensa" — dos homens, mas não de Deus. (Mt 6:5) Os fariseus de aparência piedosa faziam longas orações, jactavam-se de sua moral superior, contudo, foram condenados por Deus por seu proceder hipócrita. (Mr 12:40; Lu 18:10-14) Embora se aproximassem dele com a boca, seu coração estava longe de Deus e de sua Palavra da verdade. — Mt 15:3-9; compare isso com Is 58:1-9.

A pessoa tem de ter fé em Deus e em que Ele é o "recompensador dos que seriamente o buscam" (He 11:6), aproximando-se dele na "plena certeza da fé". (He 10:22, 38, 39) O reconhecimento da condição pecaminosa da própria pessoa é essencial, e, quando graves pecados tiverem sido cometidos, a pessoa tem de 'abrandar a face de Jeová' (1Sa 13:12; Da 9:13) por primeiramente abrandar o seu próprio coração em sincero arrependimento, humildade e contrição. (2Cr 34:26-28; Sal 51:16, 17; 119:58) Daí, Deus pode deixar-se suplicar pela pessoa, concedendo-lhe o perdão e pode ouvi-la favoravelmente (2Rs 13:4; 2Cr 7:13, 14; 33:10-13; Tg 4:8-10); a pessoa não mais achará que Deus, 'com uma massa de nuvem, impediu a aproximação a ele, para que não passasse nenhuma oração'. (La 3:40-44) Embora a pessoa talvez não deixe inteiramente de ser ouvida por Deus, suas orações podem ser "impedidas", caso deixe de seguir o conselho de Deus. (1Pe 3:7) Os que buscam o perdão têm de ser perdoadores. — Mt 6:14, 15; Mr 11:25; Lu 11:4.

Sobre que assuntos é apropriado orar?

Basicamente, as orações envolvem confissão (2Cr 30:22), petições ou solicitações (He 5:7), expressões de louvor e de agradecimento (Sal 34:1; 92:1) e votos (1Sa 1:11; Ec 5:2-6). A oração fornecida por Jesus a seus discípulos era, evidentemente, um modelo, ou padrão básico, porque orações posteriores, do próprio Jesus, bem como de seus discípulos, não aderiram rigidamente às palavras específicas da oração-modelo de Jesus. (Mt 6:9-13) Em suas palavras iniciais, esta oração se concentra na questão de maior importância, a santificação do nome de Jeová, que começou a ser profanado na rebelião no Éden, bem como na realização da vontade divina através do Reino prometido, governo este que é encabeçado pela profetizada Semente, o Messias. (Gên 3:15; veja JEOVÁ [Soberania Será Defendida e Nome Será Santificado].) Tal oração exige que aquele que ora esteja definitivamente do lado de Deus nessa questão envolvendo a soberania de Jeová.

A parábola de Jesus em Lucas 19:11-27 mostra o que significa a 'vinda do Reino' — sua vinda para executar o julgamento, para destruir todos os opositores, e para trazer alívio e recompensa aos que depositam esperança nele. (Veja Re 16:14-16; 19:11-21.) Assim sendo, a expressão seguinte: "Realize-se a tua vontade, como no céu, assim também na terra" refere-se, primariamente, não a ser feita a vontade de Deus pelos humanos, mas antes, à própria ação de Deus no cumprimento de Sua vontade para com a Terra e seus habitantes, manifestando seu poder, a fim de realizar seu propósito declarado. A pessoa que ora, naturalmente, também exprime desse modo a sua própria preferência por tal vontade, e sua submissão a ela. (Mt 6:10; compare isso com Mt 26:39.) Pedir o pão de cada dia, o perdão, a proteção contra a tentação e a libertação do iníquo, tudo isso se relaciona com o desejo do peticionário de continuar a viver no favor de Deus. Ele expressa tal desejo a favor de todos os de fé idêntica, não apenas para si. — Veja Col 4:12.

Estes assuntos nesta oração-modelo são de importância fundamental para todos os homens de fé e expressam necessidades que são comuns a todos. O relato bíblico mostra que, por outro lado, há muitos outros assuntos que talvez afetem as pessoas, em maior ou menor grau, ou que resultam de determinadas circunstâncias ou ocasiões, e que também são assuntos apropriados para oração. Embora não mencionados especificamente na oração-modelo de Jesus, eles, não obstante, relacionam-se com assuntos ali apresentados. As orações pessoais, então, podem abranger virtualmente todas as facetas da vida. — Jo 16:23, 24; Fil 4:6; 1Pe 5:7.

Assim, todos buscam corretamente maior conhecimento, entendimento e sabedoria (Sal 119: 33, 34; Tg 1:5); todavia, alguns talvez necessitem desses de modos especiais. Talvez peçam a Deus orientação em assuntos de decisões judicativas, como fez Moisés (Êx 18:19, 26; veja também Núm 9:6-9; 27:1-11; De 17:8-13), ou na designação de pessoas para responsabilidades especiais entre o povo de Deus. (Núm 27:15-18; Lu 6:12, 13; At 1:24, 25; 6:5, 6) Talvez busquem forças e sabedoria para cumprir certas designações ou para enfrentar determinadas provas ou perigos. (Gên 32:9-12; Lu 3:21; Mt 26:36-44) Seus motivos para bendizer a Deus e agradecer a ele podem variar, conforme suas próprias experiências pessoais. — 1Co 7:7; 12:6, 7; 1Te 5:18.

Em 1 Timóteo 2:1, 2, o apóstolo fala de orações feitas "com respeito a toda sorte de homens, com respeito a reis e a todos os em altos postos". Na última noite que passou com seus discípulos, Jesus, em oração, disse que ele não fazia solicitação a respeito do mundo, mas a respeito daqueles a quem Deus lhe dera, e que estes não eram do mundo, mas eram odiados pelo mundo. (Jo 17:9, 14) Por conseguinte, parece que as orações cristãs a respeito das autoridades do mundo não deixam de ter seus limites. As palavras adicionais do apóstolo indicam que tais orações são, em última análise, a favor do povo de Deus, "a fim de que [nós] continuemos a levar uma vida calma e sossegada, com plena devoção piedosa e seriedade". (1Ti 2:2) Exemplos anteriores ilustram isto: Neemias orou para que Deus 'tivesse misericórdia dele' diante do Rei Artaxerxes (Ne 1:11; compare isso com Gên 43:14), e Jeová instruiu os israelitas a 'buscarem a paz da cidade [Babilônia]' em que seriam exilados, orando a favor dela, uma vez que "na sua paz se mostrará haver paz para vós mesmos". (Je 29:7) Similarmente, os cristãos oraram a respeito das ameaças dos governantes em seus dias (At 4:23-30) e, sem dúvida, as orações deles a favor do encarcerado Pedro também envolviam as autoridades que tinham poder para libertá-lo. (At 12:5) Em harmonia com o conselho de Cristo, eles oravam a favor dos que os perseguiam. — Mt 5:44; compare isso com At 26:28, 29; Ro 10:1-3.

Expressar agradecimentos a Deus por suas provisões, tais como o alimento, é uma prática que vem desde os tempos antigos. (De 8:10-18; note também Mt 14:19; At 27:35; 1Co 10:30, 31.) Contudo, deve-se mostrar apreço pela bondade de Deus em "tudo", e não apenas pelas bênçãos materiais. — 1Te 5:17, 18; Ef 5:19, 20.

Em última análise, é o conhecimento da vontade de Deus que governa o conteúdo das orações da pessoa, pois o suplicante precisa conscientizar-se de que, se sua solicitação há de ser concedida, ela precisa agradar a Deus. Sabendo que os iníquos e os que desconsideram a Palavra de Deus não obtêm Seu favor, o suplicante, obviamente, não pode solicitar aquilo que se choca com a justiça e com a vontade revelada de Deus, incluindo os ensinos do Filho de Deus e de seus discípulos inspirados. (Jo 15:7, 16) Assim, as declarações sobre pedir "qualquer coisa" (Jo 16:23) não devem ser tiradas de seu contexto. "Qualquer coisa", naturalmente, não inclui aquilo que a pessoa sabe, ou tem motivos para crer, que não agrada a Deus. João diz: "Esta é a confiança que temos nele, que, não importa o que peçamos segundo a sua vontade, ele nos ouve."

(1Jo 5:14; compare isso com Tg 4:15.) Jesus disse a seus discípulos: "Se dois de vós, na terra, concordarem em qualquer coisa de importância que solicitarem, ela se realizará para eles devido ao meu Pai no céu." (Mt 18:19) Ao passo que as coisas materiais, tais como o alimento, são assuntos apropriados para oração, os desejos e as ambições materialistas não são, como textos tais como Mateus 6:19-34 e 1 João 2:15-17 indicam. Tampouco pode a pessoa orar corretamente em favor daqueles a quem Deus condena. — Je 7:16; 11:14.

Romanos 8:26, 27 mostra que o cristão, sob certas circunstâncias, não saberá exatamente a favor do que orar; mas seus "gemidos" não pronunciados são, mesmo assim, entendidos por Deus. O apóstolo mostra que isto se dá por meio do espírito, ou força ativa, de Deus. Convém lembrar-nos de que foi por meio de Seu espírito que Deus inspirou as Escrituras. (2Ti 3:16, 17; 2Pe 1:21) Estas incluíram eventos e circunstâncias parecidas com as que sobreviriam a seus servos em épocas posteriores e mostravam o modo pelo qual Deus guiaria seus servos e lhes daria a ajuda de que precisavam. (Ro 15:4; 1Pe 1:6-12) Talvez seja só depois de a ajuda necessária ter sido recebida que o cristão venha a dar-se conta de que aquilo pelo que poderia ter orado (mas que não sabia como) já estava expresso na Palavra de Deus, inspirada pelo espírito. — Compare isso com 1Co 2:9, 10.

A Resposta às Orações. Embora Deus no passado mantivesse certo grau de comunicação bilateral com certas pessoas, isto não era comum, ficando na maior parte restrito a representantes especiais, como Abraão e Moisés. (Gên 15:1-5; Êx 3:11-15; compare isso com Êx 20:19.) Mesmo nestes casos, com exceção de quando falou a seu Filho, ou a respeito dele, as palavras de Deus foram evidentemente transmitidas por meio de anjos. (Veja Êx 3:2, 4; Gál 3:19.) Eram também incomuns as mensagens transmitidas pessoalmente por anjos materializados, conforme prova o efeito perturbador que geralmente causavam sobre aqueles que as recebiam. (Jz 6:22; Lu 1:11, 12, 26-30) Portanto, na maioria dos casos, a resposta às orações se dava mediante profetas, ou por ser a solicitação concedida ou rejeitada. As respostas de Jeová às orações não raro produziam um efeito claramente reconhecível, como ao libertar Seus servos dos inimigos deles (2Cr 20:1-12, 21-24), ou ao lhes prover suas necessidades materiais em épocas de extrema escassez. (Êx 15:22-25) Mas, indubitavelmente, a resposta mais frequente não era tão facilmente discernida, uma vez que se relacionava com o dar vigor moral e esclarecimento à pessoa, habilitando-a a manter um proceder justo e a executar tarefas designadas por Deus. (2Ti 4:17) Especialmente para o cristão, a resposta às orações envolvia assuntos mormente espirituais, não tão espetaculares como alguns dos poderosos atos de Deus nos tempos antigos, mas igualmente vitais. — Mt 9:36-38; Col 1:9; He 13:18; Tg 5:13.

A oração aceitável tem de ser dirigida à pessoa certa, Jeová Deus; sobre assuntos corretos, que se harmonizem com os propósitos declarados de Deus; do modo correto, através do meio designado de Deus, Cristo Jesus; e com motivação correta e coração puro. (Veja Tg 4:3-6.) Além de tudo isso, há necessidade de persistência. Jesus disse que se deve 'persistir em pedir, em buscar, e em bater', sem desistir. (Lu 11:5-10; 18:1-7) Ele levantou a questão quanto a se, na sua futura 'vinda', encontraria na Terra fé no poder da oração. (Lu 18:8) A aparente delonga da parte de Deus em responder a algumas orações não se deve a alguma incapacidade, nem à falta de disposição dele, como as Escrituras tornam claro. (Mt 7:9-11; Tg 1:5, 17) Em alguns casos, a resposta precisa aguardar o desenrolar do 'cronograma' de Deus. (Lu 18:7; 1Pe 5:6; 2Pe 3:9; Re 6:9-11) Primariamente, contudo, é evidente que Deus permite que seus suplicantes demonstrem o grau de sua preocupação, a intensidade de seu desejo, a genuinidade de sua motivação. (Sal 55:17; 88:1, 13; Ro 1:9-11) Às vezes precisam ser como Jacó, que lutou prolongadamente para obter uma bênção. — Gên 32:24-26.

Similarmente, ao passo que não se pode pressionar Jeová Deus a agir à base do número de suplicantes, ele certamente observa a dimensão da preocupação existente entre seus servos como um todo, agindo quando eles demonstram coletivamente profunda preocupação e interesse unido. (Veja Êx 2:23-25.) Quando existe apatia, ou certa medida disso, Deus talvez se restrinja de agir. Na reconstrução do templo de Jerusalém, um projeto que por um bom tempo não foi bem apoiado (Esd 4:4-7, 23, 24; Ag 1:2-12), houve interrupções e delongas, ao passo que mais tarde, quando Neemias reconstruiu as muralhas da cidade, com oração e bom apoio, a obra foi completada em apenas 52 dias. (Ne 2:17-20; 4:4-23; 6:15) Paulo, escrevendo à congregação coríntia, fala de Deus o ter libertado do perigo de morte, e declara: "Vós também podeis ajudar pelas vossas súplicas por nós, a fim de que se deem agradecimentos, por muitos, em nosso favor, por aquilo que nos é dado bondosamente devido aos muitos rostos em oração." (2Co 1:8-11; compare isso com Fil 1:12-20.) O poder da oração de intercessão é sistematicamente frisado, quer tal oração seja feita por uma pessoa, quer coletivamente. Foi com respeito a 'orarem uns pelos outros' que Tiago disse: "A súplica do justo, quando em operação, tem muita força." — Tg 5:14-20; compare isso com Gên 20:7, 17; 2Te 3:1, 2; He 13:18, 19.

Também se destaca a 'intercessão' contínua a Jeová, o Governante Soberano, em favor de certa causa em particular. O suplicante apresenta razões pelas quais crê que o pedido seja correto, evidência de ter motivação correta e altruísta e arrazoamento para mostrar que há outros fatores que prevalecem sobre seus próprios interesses ou considerações. Estes podem ser que a honra do próprio nome de Deus ou o bem de Seu povo estejam em jogo, ou talvez incluam o efeito que a ação de Deus ou a sua recusa de agir possam ter sobre outros. Podem-se fazer apelos à justiça de Deus, à sua benevolência, a ser Ele um deus de misericórdia. (Veja Gên 18:22-33; 19:18-20; Êx 32:11-14; 2Rs 20:1-5; Esd 8:21-23.) Cristo Jesus também 'intercede' em favor de seus seguidores fiéis. — Ro 8:33, 34.

O inteiro livro de Salmos consiste em orações e cânticos de louvor a Deus, sendo que seu conteúdo mostra como devem ser as orações. Entre as muitas orações notáveis figuram as de Jacó (Gên 32:9-12), Moisés (De 9:25-29), Jó (Jó 1:21), Ana (1Sa 2:1-10), Davi (2Sa 7:18-29; 1Cr 29:10-19), Salomão (1Rs 3:6-9; 8:22-61), Asa (2Cr 14:11), Jeosafá (2Cr 20:5-12), Elias (1Rs 18:36, 37), Jonas (Jon 2:1-9), Ezequias (2Rs 19:15-19), Jeremias (Je 20:7-12; o livro de Lamentações), Daniel (Da 9:3-21), Esdras (Esd 9:6-15), Neemias (Ne 1:4-11), certos levitas (Ne 9:5-38), Habacuque (Hab 3:1-19), Jesus (Jo 17:1-26; Mr 14:36), e os discípulos de Jesus (At 4:24-30). — Veja ATITUDES, POSTURAS E GESTOS; INCENSO (Significado).

ORGULHO. Excessivo amor-próprio; sentimento desarrazoado de superioridade quanto a talento, beleza, riqueza, categoria e assim por diante, da pessoa; procedimento ou tratamento desdenhoso; insolência ou arrogância de comportamento; porte altivo. O orgulho, mais raramente, pode ter também a boa conotação dum senso de deleite ou de satisfação resultante de alguma ação ou posse. Alguns sinônimos de orgulho são egotismo, arrogância, altivez.

O verbo hebraico ga·'áh significa literalmente "ficar alto; tornar-se elevado" e é a raiz de numerosas palavras hebraicas que transmitem a ideia de orgulho. Estas formas aparentadas são traduzidas por "altivez", "exaltação de si", e, tanto no bom como no mau sentido, por "alteza" e "superioridade". — Jó 8:11; Ez 47:5; Is 9:9; Pr 8:13; Sal 68:34; Am 8:7.

A palavra grega kau·khá·o·mai, que significa "jactar-se, vangloriar-se, exultar", também é usada tanto no bom como no mau sentido, sendo isto determinado pelo contexto. — 1Co 1:29; Ro 2:17; 5:2.

O Orgulho É Enganoso e Destrutivo. O orgulhoso talvez não reconheça que é orgulhoso, e talvez atribua suas ações a outras causas, a fim de evitar ter de encarar seu orgulho. Toda pessoa deve examinar cabalmente a si mesma e as suas motivações, para ver se tem essa característica ruim. O apóstolo Paulo mostra a necessidade da motivação correta, e o conhecimento que a pessoa deve ter de si mesma neste respeito, ao dizer: "Se eu der todos os meus bens para alimentar os outros, e se eu entregar o meu corpo, para jactar-me [kau·khé·so·mai], mas não tiver amor, de nada me aproveita." — 1Co 13:3.

Portanto, o orgulho deve ser desarraigado da personalidade da pessoa, para seu próprio bem. E, mais importante ainda, isso tem de ser feito, se a pessoa espera agradar a Deus. Deve-se até mesmo odiar o orgulho, pois a Palavra de Deus diz: "O temor de Jeová significa odiar o mal. A exaltação de si próprio e o orgulho, bem como o caminho mau e a boca perversa eu tenho odiado." — Pr 8:13.

Quem não se livrar de seu orgulho sofrerá. "O orgulho vem antes da derrocada e o espírito soberbo antes do tropeço." (Pr 16:18), e "a casa dos que se enaltecem, Jeová a derrubará". (Pr 15:25) Há numerosos exemplos de derrocada que pessoas, dinastias e nações orgulhosas sofreram. — Le 26:18, 19; 2Cr 26:16; Is 13:19; Je 13:9; Ez 30:6, 18; 32:12; Da 5:22, 23, 30.

O orgulho é enganoso. Aconselha o apóstolo Paulo: "Se alguém acha que ele é alguma coisa, quando não é nada, está enganando a sua própria mente." (Gál 6:3) O orgulhoso parece estar seguindo o proceder mais proveitoso ou lucrativo para ele, mas não leva a Deus em conta. (Veja Je 49:16; Re 3:17.) A Bíblia diz: "Melhor é ser humilde em espírito com os mansos, do que repartir despojo com os que se enaltecem." — Pr 16:19.

Jactância. O verbo grego kau·khá·o·mai (jactar-se), é muitas vezes usado no sentido de orgulho egoísta. A Bíblia mostra que homem algum tem qualquer base para jactar-se de si mesmo ou de suas realizações. Na congregação cristã de Corinto, alguns estavam enfunados de orgulho de si mesmos ou de outros homens, causando divisões na congregação. Pensavam de modo carnal, voltando-se para os homens, em vez de para Cristo. (1Co 1:10-13; 3:3, 4) Tais homens não visavam o bem-estar espiritual da congregação, mas queriam jactar-se de aparências, não desejando realmente ajudar concristãos a desenvolverem um bom coração perante Deus. (2Co 5:12) Por conseguinte, o apóstolo Paulo repreendeu severamente a congregação, mostrando que não havia lugar para eles se jactarem de alguém, a não ser de Jeová Deus e do que Ele fizera por eles. (1Co 1:28, 29; 4:6, 7) A regra era: "Quem se jactar, jacte-se em Jeová." — 1Co 1:31; 2Co 10:17.

Tiago, meio-irmão de Jesus, foi até mais além em condenar os que se jactavam sobre certos projetos mundanos que tencionavam executar, dizendo-lhes: "[Vós] vos orgulhais de vossas fanfarrices pretensiosas. Todo esse orgulho é iníquo." — Tg 4:13-16; veja também Pr 27:1.

Uma Conotação Boa. A palavra hebraica ga·'áh, a palavra grega kau·khá·o·mai e suas formas aparentadas são também usadas em sentido favorável com respeito ao orgulho ou deleite oriundo duma ação ou duma posse. O salmista referiu-se a Israel como "o orgulho de Jacó, a quem [Jeová] amou". (Sal 47:4) Isaías, numa profecia de restauração, disse que os frutos da terra seriam "algo de que se orgulhar". (Is 4:2) O apóstolo disse à congregação tessalônica que, em resultado de sua fé, de seu amor e de sua perseverança, 'orgulhava-se deles entre as congregações de Deus'. (2Te 1:3, 4) Os cristãos orgulham-se de ter a Jeová como seu Deus, de terem chegado a conhecê-lo e de que ele os reconheceu. Seguem o princípio: "Quem se jacta, jacte-se da seguinte coisa: de ter perspicácia e de ter conhecimento de mim, que eu sou Jeová, Aquele que usa de benevolência, de juízo e de justiça na terra." — Je 9:24; compare isso com Lu 10:20.

ORIENTAIS. Os habitantes das terras consideradas pelos escritores hebreus como "Oriente". Essa região achava-se além da fronteira de Israel, não só para o leste, mas também bem ao nordeste e ao sudeste, até a Arábia. (Gên 25:6; Je 49:28) Assim, quando Jacó foi para a casa de Labão, em Harã, ele foi "para a terra dos orientais", ao NE de Canaã. — Gên 29:1.

Jó é chamado de "o maior de todos os orientais [literalmente: filhos do Oriente]". (Jó 1:3 n) As forças que oprimiam Israel, antes de Gideão surgir e as vencer, eram compostas de amalequitas e midianitas, além de "orientais", sobre os quais não há outra identificação. (Jz 6:3, 33; 7:12; 8:10) Os orientais, famosos por sua sabedoria, foram, contudo, ultrapassados nisso por Salomão. (1Rs 4:30) Os chamados sábios, ou magos, que visitaram o menino Jesus eram "astrólogos das regiões orientais". — Mt 2:1, 2, 11.

ORPA. Esposa moabita de Quiliom e, como Rute, nora de Noemi. (Compare Ru 1:3-5 com 4:10.) Depois de os maridos das três terem falecido, as viúvas sem filhos, Noemi, Orpa e Rute, iniciaram a viagem de Moabe a Belém. Em certo ponto, Noemi instou com suas duas noras a que voltassem à casa de suas mães e se casassem em Moabe, mas ambas persistiam em responder a Noemi: "Não, mas voltaremos contigo ao teu povo." Orpa tinha tratado bondosamente sua sogra, por quem ela evidentemente sentia grande afeição. (Ru 1:8-10) Seu desejo de continuar junto de Noemi talvez tenha sido, em parte, resultante de ter apreciado o convívio entre membros duma família israelita. Mas Noemi acentuou então a forte probabilidade de que, se estas duas viúvas moabitas continuassem em sua companhia, poderia significar para elas uma vida de viuvez em Judá, uma vez que Noemi tinha pouca esperança de casar-se de novo de modo a ter filhos, e, mesmo que isto acontecesse, estava certa de que Orpa e Rute não desejariam esperar até que tais filhos crescessem e pudessem realizar o casamento levirato com estas viúvas moabitas. A afeição e o apreço de Orpa não chegavam ao ponto de ela prosseguir viagem, em face de tal possível futuro, e, depois de muito choro, despediu-se de Noemi e de Rute, e voltou "ao seu povo e aos seus deuses". — Ru 1:3-15.

ORVALHO. Gotículas de água produzidas pela condensação da umidade do ar, do vapor de água que ascende do solo e de umidade que exsuda das plantas. A palavra hebraica para "orvalho", tal, significa também "chuvisco". (Pr 3:20) O orvalho se torna geada branco-prateada quando a temperatura das camadas inferiores de ar cai a 0°C. Jeová é responsável pelas gotas de orvalho, e diz-se que espalha a geada "como cinzas". — Sal 147:16; Jó 38:28.

Forma-se o orvalho quando o ar noturno carregado de vapor de água se esfria, depositando o vapor, condensado em forma líquida, sobre objetos mais frios. Também se desenvolve quando o quente vapor de água que sobe do solo entra em contato com o ar mais frio. A Bíblia explica que, cedo na história da terra, antes que chovesse sobre ela, "uma neblina [vapor] subia da terra e regava toda a superfície do solo". (Gên 2:6 e n) O orvalho é também produzido quando a umidade da vegetação se evapora no ar. A planta continua a sorver água que foi absorvida por suas raízes até se obter o equilíbrio entre a temperatura na ponta das folhas e a das raízes da planta. Muitas vezes, à noite, pode-se ouvir o gotejar dessa grande quantidade de orvalho assim produzida por algumas árvores. A maior parte do orvalho matutino parece provir dessa fonte. Disse Jó: "Minha raiz está aberta para as águas, e o próprio orvalho pernoitará sobre o meu ramo." — Jó 29:19.

Em Israel, normalmente há pouca chuva, quando há, de meados de abril a meados de outubro. No entanto, o orvalho se forma e rega a vegetação durante esses meses. Diz The Geography of the Bible (A Geografia da Bíblia), de D. Baly, (1974, p. 45): "O valor do orvalho era muito apreciado pelos israelitas, . . . pois faz encorpar as uvas durante a seca do verão". Isaías fala do "orvalho no calor da vindima". (Is 18:4, 5) Depois disso vinham as chuvas 'outonais' ou 'temporãs'. (Jl 2:23; Tg 5:7) Os orvalhos noturnos em certas regiões são tão densos que é dessa forma que as árvores e outras plantas obtêm umidade mais do que suficiente para compensar a perda causada pela evaporação diurna. Assim, os orvalhos noturnos bem que podem ser responsáveis por safras abundantes em regiões em que de outra forma haveria seca e fome.

A importância do orvalho aumenta com a descoberta de que as plantas ressequidas pelo calor se recuperavam mais depressa com a condensação noturna de umidade nas suas folhas do que quando se regava o solo. Elas absorviam tanta umidade que, no dia seguinte, funcionavam normalmente sem que se regasse o solo. A quantidade de água absorvida do orvalho e posteriormente excretada através das raízes para o solo, para estocagem, às vezes igualava-se ao peso da própria planta.

Durante a jornada de 40 anos de Israel no ermo, o maná, como provisão de Deus, caía regularmente junto com o orvalho, permanecendo no solo até depois da evaporação do orvalho. (Êx 16:13-18; Núm 11:9) Por meio de dois sinais que envolviam o orvalho, Gideão obteve prova de apoio divino antes de combater os midianitas. Primeiro, ele manteve um velo de lã exposto numa eira durante uma noite, sendo que veio a haver orvalho apenas no velo ao passo que o solo estava seco. No segundo teste, reverteram-se as coisas. Não é revelado se isso foi na estação sem chuvas, quando podia-se esperar que houvesse orvalho. — Jz 6:36–7:1.

Uso Figurado. Na Bíblia, o orvalho é associado com bênçãos, fertilidade e abundância. (Gên 27:28; De 33:13, 28; Za 8:12) O retorno a Jeová resultaria em bênção, como disse Deus: "Tornar-me-ei para Israel como orvalho." (Os 14:1, 5) Por meio de Miqueias, Deus predisse que "os remanescentes de Jacó" 'tornar-se-iam no meio de muitos povos como orvalho da parte de Jeová, como chuvas copiosas sobre a vegetação', predizendo que o restante do Jacó (Israel) espiritual seria uma bênção de Deus para o povo. — Miq 5:7.

Inversamente, a falta ou a retenção de orvalho é associada com uma condição de desfavor. (Gên 27:39; Ag 1:10) Quando Deus reteve o orvalho e a chuva da terra de Israel nos dias do Rei Acabe e de Elias, o resultado foi a fome. — 1Rs 17:1; Lu 4:25.

As nuvens da madrugada e o orvalho em Israel desapareciam rapidamente sob o calor do sol. O pouco de benevolência que houvesse em Efraim (Israel) e em Judá havia similarmente desaparecido. (Os 6:4) E, devido à transgressão, os habitantes de Efraim (Israel) seriam levados ao exílio, tornando-se "como o orvalho que logo desaparece". — Os 13:1-3, 16.

As gotas de orvalho são silenciosas e numerosas. Talvez para denotar dissimulação ou uma multidão tão numerosa como gotas de orvalho, Husai disse a Absalão: "Nós mesmos estaremos sobre [Davi] assim como o orvalho cai sobre o solo." (2Sa 17:12) O Rei de Jeová 'tem a companhia de homens jovens assim como gotas de orvalho', talvez no sentido de numerosidade. — Sal 110:3.

O orvalho é também suave e refrescante. É aplicado apropriadamente ao cântico profético de despedida de Moisés. (De 32:2) A boa vontade dum rei é comparada ao efeito revigorante do orvalho sobre a vegetação. (Pr 19:12) A amorosa unidade prevalecente entre o povo de Deus é revigorante "como o orvalho do Hermom, que desce sobre as montanhas de Sião". As elevações do monte Hermom, cobertas de florestas e perpetuamente nevadas, faziam ascender vapores noturnos que podiam ser transportados, pelas frias correntes de ar que desciam sobre o Hermom procedentes do N, a distâncias tão grandes que se podiam condensar sobre as montanhas de Sião, a muitos quilômetros ao S. — Sal 133:1-3; FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 332.

Deuses das Nações

A LEI que Jeová deu a Israel proibia a fabricação de imagens para adoração. O verdadeiro Deus é um Espírito, e a fabricação de alguma imagem para representá-lo é flagrantemente imprópria. Em contraste, desenterraram-se muitas imagens dos deuses de outras nações antigas. Estes não eram nada mais do que "produto das mãos dum homem, madeira e pedra". (De 4:28) Eram "deuses que nada valem", conforme diz a Bíblia, não tendo nem olhos para ver, nem ouvidos para ouvir aqueles que os adoravam. (1Cr 16:26; Sal 115:4-8) Hoje, eles são meras relíquias em museus. Não obstante, revelam muito sobre as raízes de crenças religiosas hoje muito difundidas.

As tríades religiosas tiveram início na Babilônia. Esta tabuinha de pedra retrata um santuário do deus-sol babilônico Xamaxe (ou Samas), junto com símbolos de uma de tais tríades: a lua (para o deus Sin), o sol (para Xamaxe) e uma estrela (para Istar).

Assur, principal deus dos assírios, é retratado neste antigo selo com três cabeças (acima das asas).

Os egípcios adoravam tríades tais como estas. No alto: Hórus, Osíris e Ísis. À direita: Ísis, Hórus, Néftis.

Bem similar à "Nossa Senhora" com o menino, da cristandade, venerava-se a imagem de mãe e filho (Ísis e o menino Hórus) do Egito.

Muito antes do cristianismo, a cruz ansada, a cruz egípcia, era considerada como sagrada.

As dez pragas sobrevindas ao Egito expuseram a impotência dos seus deuses-ídolos. A primeira praga — transformando o Nilo em sangue — desacreditou Hápi (em cima, à esquerda, deus do Nilo). A deusa Heqt, para quem a rã era sagrada (ao alto, no centro), não pôde ajudar os egípcios quando a segunda praga cobriu aquela terra de rãs. A morte dos primogênitos, na décima praga, mostrou ser a mais devastadora de todas, visto que o filho de Faraó era considerado como filho de Amom-Rá, representado por um carneiro (acima, à direita).

A serpente tinha destaque na adoração. A arte egípcia (na extrema esquerda) apresenta duas serpentes cruzadas seguradas pelo deus mostrado à esquerda, uma serpente grande que domina o quadro, e uma deusa com cabeça de serpente, mais para a direita. A estátua grega de Asclépio (à esquerda) também apresenta a serpente. É interessante notar que a Bíblia mostra que Satanás usou uma serpente como seu porta-voz. (Gên 3:1-15; Re 12:9)

A HISTÓRIA de Tiro fornece um exemplo nítido do cumprimento de profecias bíblicas. Primeiro caiu a cidade continental; depois foi destruída a cidade-ilha. Ambos os eventos foram preditos.

Nos dias de Davi e de Salomão, existiam relações amistosas entre Israel e Tiro. (1Cr 14:1; 1Rs 9:10, 11) Mas os tírios eram adoradores de Melcart e de Astarte. Tiro dedicava-se ao comércio. Ao passo que prosperava, tornava-se orgulhosa. Tornou-se desafiante para com Jeová, e os profetas de Jeová predisseram calamidade para Tiro.

Nabucodonosor II sitiou a cidade. Dum ponto de vista militar, depois de muitos anos, deveria ter parecido fútil continuar. Mas ele perseverou até que Tiro caiu ao fim de 13 anos, cumprindo assim a profecia bíblica que o indicara como conquistador da cidade. — Ez 26:7-12.

Mais tarde, Zacarias predisse novamente a ruína de Tiro, mas esta vez se tratava da cidade-ilha. Para chegar a ela, Alexandre Magno juntou os escombros da cidade continental para fazer um aterro até ela; construiu enormes torres de sítio. Embora Tiro tivesse construído suas muralhas com 46 m de altura, a profecia foi cumprida. — Za 9:3, 4; Ez 26:4, 12.

O Império Romano

ROMA foi descrita na profecia bíblica como animal "atemorizante e terrível, e extraordinariamente forte", com dentes de ferro. (Da 7:7) Foi a este império que Jeová permitiu arruinar Jerusalém em 70 EC.

Roma tolerava quase toda espécie de práticas religiosas, enquanto aqueles que as adotavam também participassem na adoração do imperador. Esta adoração do imperador era encarada como fator importante para a unificação do império. Portanto, quem se negasse a participar nela era considerado inimigo do estado. Os cristãos não participavam em tal adoração. Assim, embora os cristãos fossem cidadãos honestos, muitas vezes se tornavam alvos de ferrenha perseguição. Entre aqueles que instigavam tal perseguição estavam os imperadores Nero, Domiciano, Marco Aurélio e Diocleciano. Pôncio Pilatos, governador romano da Judeia, ao ser pressionado pelos líderes religiosos dos judeus, até mesmo ordenou a execução de Jesus Cristo, como ato de conveniência política.

CIDADES PRINCIPAIS

Roma: Capital ocidental do império; depois de 395 EC, o império foi dividido, havendo imperadores tanto em Roma como em Constantinopla; o Império do Oriente durou quase mil anos mais do que o Império do Ocidente.

Constantinopla: Constantino transferiu a capital do império de Roma para Bizâncio, dando-lhe um nome em sua própria honra.

César Augusto. Jesus nasceu durante o seu governo.

Tibério César, conforme retratado numa moeda. A execução de Jesus ocorreu durante o reinado de Tibério.

Cláudio César, que baniu os judeus de Roma.

Nero César, perante o qual o apóstolo Paulo foi julgado.

Vespasiano. Durante seu governo foram destruídos Jerusalém e seu templo.

Tito, filho de Vespasiano, conforme aparece numa moeda romana. Nove anos depois de destruir Jerusalém, ele se tornou imperador.

Domiciano. A perseguição oficial dos cristãos atingiu seu auge durante o governo dele, evidentemente resultando no exílio do apóstolo João.

O Início da Vida Humana de Jesus

O REGISTRO bíblico a respeito do início da vida de Jesus é breve, mas específico. Não é uma história fantasiosa, mas fato histórico. Envolve lugares que podem ser visitados mesmo hoje — Belém, o Egito, Nazaré e Jerusalém. As datas e as explicações dos eventos na Bíblia envolvem pessoas proeminentes, tais como o César Augusto, o Governador Quirino, o Rei Herodes, o Grande, e Arquelau — todos conhecidos através da história secular.

Aos 12 anos, Jesus estava no templo em Jerusalém, sentado no meio dos instrutores, escutando-os e fazendo-lhes perguntas.

Jesus, como jovem em Nazaré, trabalhava na carpintaria sob a supervisão de seu pai adotivo.

O Ministério Terrestre de Jesus

O MINISTÉRIO de Jesus Cristo tem influenciado profundamente a vida de pessoas em todas as partes do mundo. Jesus não se deixou desviar do seu objetivo. Conforme ele disse: "Tenho de declarar as boas novas do reino de Deus . . . porque fui enviado para isso." — Lu 4:43.

Conforme mostram os mapas acompanhantes, ele abrangeu um grande território — na maior parte a pé. Em conexão com as festividades judaicas, durante o seu ministério ele fez viagens regulares a Jerusalém. As viagens especificamente mencionadas nos Evangelhos são mostradas nos nossos mapas. Partindo de Jerusalém, passou a cobrir o território judeu. Mas passou a maior parte do seu tempo na Galileia, dando um testemunho intensivo em toda a província. Seu ministério levou-o também a pessoas nas regiões de Tiro e de Sídon, através de Decápolis e para a Pereia. Ele deu cabalmente testemunho da verdade, deixando um bom exemplo para os seus seguidores. — Jo 18:37; At 1:8; Mt 28:19, 20.

A Jerusalém do Primeiro Século

A JERUSALÉM que existe hoje mudou muito desde aquela do primeiro século. Não obstante, à base de pesquisas arqueológicas foi possível reconstituir experimentalmente algumas das partes principais da cidade. Isto pode ajudar os estudantes a visualizar os eventos que ocorreram ali em conexão com o ministério de Jesus e o dos seus apóstolos.

Nas épocas festivas, quando Jesus estava em Jerusalém, ele ensinava na área do templo, onde havia muita gente. (Jo 7:14, 28; 18:20) Após a sua morte e ressurreição, seus discípulos 'encheram Jerusalém com o seu ensino'. (At 5:28) De Jerusalém, o testemunho deles espalhou-se por fim "até à parte mais distante da terra". — At 1:8.

A atividade de Jesus e dos seus discípulos confrontava as pessoas da nação com uma questão importante: Aceitariam aquele a quem Jeová enviara como Messias? Reconheceriam que necessitavam do Reino de Deus? Embora alguns depositassem fé em Jesus, a maioria era indiferente. As ações sem fé daquela nação culminaram com Jesus ser pregado numa estaca, o que ocorreu com apoio popular em Jerusalém. Em resultado disso, em 70 EC sobreveio à cidade a destruição, conforme Jesus predissera. — Lu 19:41-44.

OSAÍAS [Salvo por Jah; Jah Salvou].

1. Pai de Jezanias ou Azarias, contemporâneo do profeta Jeremias. (Je 42:1, 2; 43:2) Na Septuaginta grega consta o nome Azarias em vez de Jezanias, em Jeremias 42:1.

2. Aparentemente, um príncipe de Judá que participou no cortejo organizado por Neemias na inauguração da muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 12:31, 32.

OSEIAS [form abreviada de Osaías, no hebraico].

1. Um dos 12 enviados por Moisés para espiar a Terra da Promessa em 1512 AEC; filho de Num, da tribo de Efraim. Moisés, contudo, preferiu chamá-lo de Jeosué, que significa "Jeová É Salvação". (Núm 13:8, 16) Em grego, a Septuaginta apresenta a forma I·e·soús (Jesus). Como sucessor de Moisés, era geralmente chamado pela forma hebraica abreviada, "Josué". — Jos 1:1.

2. Príncipe tribal de Efraim durante o reinado de Davi; filho de Azazias. — 1Cr 27:20, 22.

3. Profeta e escritor hebreu do livro bíblico de Oseias; identificado apenas como filho de Beeri. Oseias serviu como profeta de Jeová durante os reinados dos reis Uzias, Jotão, Acaz e Ezequias, de Judá, e de Jeroboão II (filho de Joás), de Israel, em fins do nono século e bem avançado no oitavo século AEC. (Os 1:1) Os profetas do mesmo período geral incluíam Amós, Isaías e Miqueias. — Am 1:1; Is 1:1; Miq 1.1.

Oseias pode ser identificado como profeta (e, provavelmente, como súdito) do reino setentrional de Israel, de dez tribos. Esse reino era o principal objeto das declarações contidas no livro de Oseias. Enquanto que Judá foi citado por nome apenas 15 vezes, e sua capital, Jerusalém, nem sequer uma vez, o livro contém 44 referências a Israel, 37 a Efraim (a tribo dominante de Israel), e 6 a Samaria, a capital do reino setentrional. A maioria dos outros locais mencionados no livro eram parte do reino setentrional ou então se achavam dentro de suas fronteiras. — Os 1:4, 5; 5:1, 8; 6:8, 9; 10:5, 8, 15; 12:11; 14:6, 7.

Não obstante, parece que Oseias atribuía importância primária aos reis de Judá, mencionando todos os quatro que reinaram ali durante seu ministério, ao passo que só alistou aquele que governava em Israel quando ele, Oseias, iniciou seu trabalho. (Os 1:1) Mas, em vez de isso indicar que o profeta veio de Judá ou que ali nasceu, este fator pode indicar que Oseias, assim como outros profetas de Deus, só considerava como governantes legítimos sobre o povo de Deus os reis de Judá, da família de Davi, encarando o reino setentrional de Israel como completa apostasia religiosa e civil com relação a Jeová. Naturalmente, esta listagem dos governantes de ambos os reinos facilita datar com mais precisão as atividades proféticas de Oseias.

4. Último rei do reino setentrional de Israel, findo em 740 AEC; filho de Elá. Fez o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová, mas não com a mesma intensidade que seus antecessores. (2Rs 17:1, 2) Oseias não dispunha de uma reivindicação hereditária ao trono, nem recebeu unção especial de Deus para ser rei. Em vez disso, foi por conspirar contra o Rei Peca e assassiná-lo que o usurpador Oseias obteve o trono. Segundo dos Reis 15:30 diz que Oseias matou Peca e "começou a reinar em seu lugar no vigésimo ano de Jotão". Visto que se credita ao Rei Jotão, de Judá, apenas 16 anos de reinado (2Rs 15:32, 33; 2Cr 27:1, 8), isto talvez se refira ao 20.º ano a contar do início do reinado de Jotão, que seria realmente o quarto ano do reinado de Acaz, sucessor de Jotão. — Veja JOTÃO N.º 3.

Contudo, parece que Oseias só foi reconhecido plenamente como rei de Israel algum tempo depois. Segundo Reis 17:1 diz que, no 12.º ano de Acaz, Oseias "tornou-se rei sobre Israel em Samaria, por nove anos". Assim, pode ser que, neste ponto, Oseias conseguiu obter o pleno controle, governando de Samaria. É possível que o apoio assírio nessa oportunidade o tenha ajudado, pois nos registros do rei assírio, Tiglate-Pileser III, consta a afirmação de que ele colocou Oseias no trono. — Veja a tabela "Datas de Destaque Durante o Período dos Reis de Judá e de Israel" no artigo CRONOLOGIA.

Salmaneser V, sucessor de Tiglate-Pileser III, obrigou Oseias a pagar-lhe tributo, mas não demorou muito até que Oseias enviasse mensageiros a Sô, rei do Egito, apelando por ajuda, e, depois disso, reteve dos assírios o tributo. Ao saber dessa conspiração secreta, Salmaneser V pôs Oseias na casa de detenção e cercou Samaria. Em 740 AEC, depois de um cerco de três anos, a cidade caiu, seus habitantes foram levados ao exílio e o reino separatista de dez tribos de Israel chegou ao fim. — 2Rs 17:3-6.

5. Um dos cabeças do povo, cujo descendente, se não ele mesmo, concordou com uma proposta levítica para o arranjo fidedigno nos dias de Neemias. — Ne 9:5, 38; 10:1, 14, 23.

OSEIAS, LIVRO DE. Livro das Escrituras Hebraicas, escrito por "Oseias, filho de Beeri". (Os 1:1) Nele, a vida doméstica do escritor é comparada à relação de Deus com Israel. (Caps. 1-3) O livro mostra que Jeová não aceita a mera cerimônia religiosa formal. (6:6) Põe em relevo também a misericórdia e a benevolência de Deus. — 2:19; 11:1-4; 14:4.

Época e Local da Escrita. Oseias começou a servir como profeta numa época em que o Rei Uzias, de Judá (829-778 AEC), e o Rei Jeroboão II, de Israel (c. 844-804 AEC), eram contemporâneos; portanto, não depois de 804 AEC, o aparente fim do reinado de Jeroboão. (Os 1:1) O ministério profético de Oseias estendeu-se até o reinado do Rei Ezequias, de Judá, que começou a reinar por volta de 745 AEC. Assim, estendeu-se por pelo menos 59 anos, ainda que, sem dúvida, abrangesse algum tempo dos reinados de Jeroboão II e de Ezequias, sendo assim um pouco mais longo. Embora Oseias registrasse uma profecia a respeito da destruição de Samaria (Os 13:16), ele não relatou seu cumprimento, o que provavelmente teria feito, caso a escrita do livro se tivesse estendido a 740 AEC, data da queda de Samaria. Por conseguinte, o livro de Oseias foi evidentemente escrito no distrito de Samaria e concluído algum tempo entre 745 e 740 AEC.

Cenário. O livro de Oseias diz respeito primariamente ao reino setentrional de Israel, de dez tribos (também chamado de Efraim, segundo o nome de sua tribo dominante, nomes estes que são usados de forma intercambiável no livro). Quando Oseias começou a profetizar, durante o reinado do Rei Jeroboão, Israel gozava de prosperidade material. Mas o povo rejeitara o conhecimento sobre Deus. (Os 4:6) Suas práticas iníquas incluíam derramamento de sangue, roubo, fornicação, adultério e a veneração de Baal e dos ídolos-bezerros. (2:8, 13; 4:2, 13, 14; 10:5) Depois da morte do Rei Jeroboão a prosperidade cessou, e passaram a prevalecer condições assustadoras, marcadas por inquietação e assassinatos políticos. (2Rs 14:29–15:30) O fiel Oseias também profetizou em meio a tais circunstâncias. Por fim, em 740 AEC, Samaria caiu diante dos assírios, trazendo o fim ao reino de dez tribos. — 2Rs 17:6.

A Esposa de Oseias e os Filhos. Às ordens de Jeová, Oseias tomou para si "uma esposa de fornicação e filhos de fornicação". (Os 1:2) Isto não significa que o profeta se tenha casado com uma prostituta ou com uma mulher imoral que já tivesse filhos ilegítimos. Antes, indica que tal mulher se tornaria adúltera e que teria tais filhos depois de casar-se com o profeta. Oseias casou-se com Gômer, que "lhe deu à luz um filho", Jezreel. (1:3, 4) Mais tarde Gômer deu à luz uma filha, Lo-Ruama, e, depois, um filho, chamado Lo-Ami, sendo ambos evidentemente frutos de seu adultério, visto que não se faz nenhuma referência pessoal ao profeta com relação aos nascimentos deles. (1:6, 8, 9) Lo-Ruama significa "[Com Ela] Não se Teve Misericórdia", e o significado de Lo-Ami é "Não Meu Povo", tais nomes indicando a desaprovação de Jeová para com o volúvel Israel. Por outro lado, o nome do primogênito, "Jezreel", que

DESTAQUES DE OSEIAS

Profecias dirigidas primariamente a Israel (o reino setentrional, também chamado de Efraim) e que salientam a extraordinária misericórdia de Jeová.

Escrito por Oseias depois de 745 AEC, pouco antes de Israel ser levado ao exílio pela Assíria.

Os tratos de Jeová com Israel são ilustrados pela vida doméstica de Oseias. (1:1–3:5)

Ordena-se a Oseias que se case com uma mulher que mais tarde mostra ser adúltera, o que ilustra a infidelidade de Israel para com Jeová.

Com sua esposa Gômer, Oseias tem um filho chamado Jezreel. Os dois próximos filhos de Gômer, Lo-Ruama (que significa "[Com Ela] Não se Teve Misericórdia"), e Lo-Ami (que significa "Não Meu Povo"), são evidentemente frutos de seu adultério; os significados dos nomes referem-se a Jeová retirar a misericórdia para com Israel e rejeitar seu povo infiel.

Tendo sofrido o julgamento divino por deslealmente ter-se voltado para a adoração de Baal, Israel será restaurado e de novo usufruirá bênçãos, cumprindo o significado do nome Jezreel (isto é, "Deus Semeará").

Ordena-se a Oseias que tome de volta sua esposa adúltera; ele assim o faz, mas restringe as atividades dela, proibindo a fornicação — indicativo da situação de Israel até a época de retornar a Jeová.

Julgamentos proféticos contra Israel (e Judá) por infidelidade para com Jeová. (4:1–13:16)

Por envolver-se em fraude, assassinato, roubo, adultério, idolatria e prostituição espiritual, o povo mostra que não conhece a Deus; assim, enfrentam uma prestação de contas.

A idolatria de Israel, sua corrupção moral, sua tola busca de alianças políticas com potências antagônicas, (Egito e Assíria), em vez de confiar em Jeová para ter segurança, levará à devastação do país e os sobreviventes serem levados à Assíria.

Apelo para retornar a Jeová. (14:1-9)

Insta-se com o povo a pedir o perdão de Jeová, a oferecer os novilhos de seus lábios, e a não mais buscar proteção em alianças militares e cavalos de guerra.

O retorno deles a Jeová resultará em cura, em ele os amar liberalmente e numa condição próspera sob a Sua bênção.

significa “Deus Semeará”, é aplicado de modo favorável ao povo, numa profecia de restauração. — 2:21-23.

Após o nascimento desses filhos, Gômer, aparentemente, abandonou Oseias em troca de seus amantes, mas não se diz que o profeta se divorciou dela. Evidentemente, mais tarde ela foi abandonada pelos amantes e caiu na pobreza e na escravidão, pois Oseias 3:1-3 parece indicar que o profeta comprou-a como se fosse escrava e acolheu-a de volta como esposa. Seu relacionamento com Gômer comparava-se ao de Jeová com Israel, dispondo-se Deus a acolher de volta seu povo errante, depois que este se arrependeu de seu adultério espiritual. — Os 2:16, 19, 20; 3:1-5.

Alguns peritos bíblicos acham que o casamento de Oseias é visionário, um transe, ou um sonho, que nunca se realizou. Contudo, o profeta não disse nem indicou que se tratava de uma visão, ou de um sonho. Outros acham que o casamento é uma alegoria ou parábola. Mas Oseias não usou terminologia simbólica ou figurada ao considerá-lo. Encarar isso como relato do casamento factual de Oseias com Gômer e da volta literal de Gômer ao profeta, dá força e significado à aplicação histórica e factual desses assuntos a Israel. Não distorce o claro relato bíblico, e harmoniza-se com o fato de Jeová ter escolhido Israel, com o subsequente adultério espiritual da nação, e seu retorno a Deus, quando o povo se arrependeu.

Estilo. O estilo de escrita de Oseias é conciso, até mesmo abrupto, às vezes. Há rápidas mudanças de pensamento. O livro contém expressões de grande sentimento e vigor, em forma de censura, avisos e exortações, bem como ternos apelos ao arrependimento. E contém excelentes figuras de linguagem. — Os 4:16; 5:13, 14; 6:3, 4; 7:4-8, 11, 12; 8:7; 9:10; 10:1, 7, 11-13; 11:3, 4; 13:3, 7, 8, 15; 14:5-7.

Canonicidade. O livro de Oseias é o primeiro na ordem dos chamados profetas menores nas Bíblias comuns em português, bem como nos antigos textos hebraicos e da Septuaginta. Jerônimo especificou que uma das divisões dos livros sagrados dos judeus era O Livro dos Doze Profetas, que por certo incluía o livro de Oseias para completar 12. Melito, do segundo século EC, deixou um catálogo incluindo esses livros, como também o fizeram Orígenes e outros.

Harmonia com Outros Livros da Bíblia. Este livro se harmoniza com os pensamentos expressos em outras partes da Bíblia. (Por exemplo, compare Os 6:1 com De 32:39; Os 13:6 com De 8:11-14; 32:15, 18.) O livro de Oseias fala de ocorrências registradas em outras partes das Escrituras, tais como incidentes envolvendo Jacó (Os 12:2-4, 12; Gên 25:26; 32:24-29; 29:18-28; 31:38-41), o Êxodo de Israel do Egito (Os 2:15; 11:1; 12:13), a infidelidade de Israel com relação a Baal de Peor (Os 9:10; Núm 25) e ter a nação pedido um rei humano (Os 13:10, 11; 1Sa 8:4, 5, 19-22).

Uso nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Jesus Cristo citou duas vezes Oseias 6:6, usando as palavras: “Misericórdia quero, e não sacrifício.” (Mt 9:13; 12:7) Ele se referiu a Oseias 10:8 ao proferir o julgamento contra Jerusalém (Lu 23:30), e esta declaração foi usada em Revelação (Apocalipse) 6:16. Tanto Paulo como Pedro usaram Oseias 1:10 e 2:23. (Ro 9:25, 26; 1Pe 2:10) Paulo citou Oseias 13:14 (LXX) ao considerar a ressurreição, perguntando: “Morte, onde está a tua vitória? Morte, onde está o teu aguilhão?” — 1Co 15:55; compare também Os 14:2 com He 13:15.

Profecias Cumpridas. As palavras proféticas de Oseias 13:16 a respeito da queda de Samaria se cumpriram. A profecia de Oseias também mostrava que Israel seria abandonado por seus amantes entre as nações. (Os 8:7-10) Deveras, não foram de nenhuma ajuda quando Samaria foi destruída e os habitantes de Israel se tornaram cativos dos assírios, em 740 AEC. — 2Rs 17:3-6.

A profecia de Oseias predisse que Deus enviaria um fogo para dentro das cidades de Judá. (Os 8:14) No 14.º ano do reinado do Rei Ezequias, o rei assírio Senaqueribe “subiu . . . contra todas as cidades fortificadas de Judá e passou a tomá-las”. (2Rs 18:13) No entanto, Oseias também profetizou que Jeová salvaria Judá. (Os 1:7) Isto ocorreu quando Deus frustrou o planejado ataque de Senaqueribe contra Jerusalém, e o anjo de Jeová destruiu 185.000 homens do exército assírio numa só noite. (2Rs 19:34, 35) Mas um “fogo” muito mais desastroso sobreveio quando Jerusalém e as cidades de Judá foram destruídas pelo Rei Nabucodonosor, de Babilônia, em 607 AEC. — 2Cr 36:19; Je 34:6, 7.

Todavia, em harmonia com as profecias inspiradas de restauração, encontradas no livro de Oseias, um restante do povo de Judá e de Israel foi ajuntado e emergiu da terra do exílio, Babilônia, em 537 AEC. (Os 1:10, 11; 2:14-23; 3:5; 11:8-11; 13:14; 14:1-8; Esd 3:1-3) Paulo usou Oseias 1:10 e 2:23 para frisar a benignidade imerecida de Deus expressa para com os “vasos de misericórdia”, e Pedro também usou esses textos. Tais aplicações apostólicas mostram que as profecias também dizem respeito ao misericordioso ajuntamento de um restante espiritual, realizado por Deus. — Ro 9:22-26; 1Pe 2:10.

No livro de Oseias há também profecias messiânicas. Mateus aplicou as palavras de Oseias 11:1

("do Egito chamei o meu filho") ao menino Jesus, que foi levado ao Egito, porém, mais tarde, reconduzido a Israel. — Mt 2:14, 15.

OSSOS. Os ossos, compostos de tecidos vivos, formam a forte armação dos corpos dos vertebrados. Com estrutura por demais complexa para ser inteiramente entendida pelos cientistas, o homem é 'tecido' com um esqueleto de mais de 200 ossos e respectivos tendões conectivos. (Jó 10:11; Ec 11:5) Quilo por quilo, o osso é mais forte do que o aço, e sua construção é comparável à do concreto armado. De fato, ao descrever o "beemote", Jeová diz: "Seus ossos são tubos de cobre; seus ossos fortes são como barras de ferro forjado." (Jó 40:15, 18) Essa descrição se ajusta bem ao hipopótamo, sendo que os ossos de suas pernas curtas e vigorosas, e quadris reforçados, sustentam seu imponente peso de 2.300 a 3.600 kg.

A palavra hebraica comum para "osso" é 'é·tsem (Gên 2:23); um sinônimo é gé·rem. (Pr 25:15) O·sté·on é o termo grego. — Jo 19:36.

Eva, a primeira mulher, foi formada duma costela retirada de Adão. Isto foi apropriado, em vista de que os ossos são a base do corpo, são inteiramente feitos de células vivas, e são formadores de glóbulos sanguíneos. Adão podia verdadeiramente dizer sobre Eva: "Esta, por fim, é osso dos meus ossos e carne da minha carne." Ela era a parenta mais próxima possível de Adão. (Gên 2:22, 23) Idêntica expressão é empregada várias vezes nas Escrituras para indicar parentesco bem próximo. — Gên 29:14; Jz 9:2; 2Sa 5:1; 19:12; 1Cr 11:1.

Comprovações Que Fortalecem a Fé. José sabia que se passaria bastante tempo antes de Deus conduzir Israel para fora do Egito e estabelecê-lo em Canaã. Com fé, como testemunho para Israel, ele ordenou que seus ossos fossem levados junto quando Israel partisse. (Gên 50:25; He 11:22) Israel manteve isto em mente e Moisés cumpriu tal injunção quando conduziu Israel para fora do Egito. (Êx 13:19) Os ossos de José foram por fim enterrados em Siquém, no terreno que Jacó comprara. — Jos 24:32.

Um milagre realizado (postumamente) com relação a Eliseu foi o retorno imediato à vida dum homem cujo cadáver fora lançado na sepultura de Eliseu, e que tocou nos ossos dele. Isto provava que era o poder de Deus, e não o de Eliseu, que realizara os milagres efetuados por Eliseu, e era uma forte comprovação ou selo de Deus quanto à genuinidade de seu fiel profeta. — 2Rs 13:20, 21.

Depois de sua ressurreição, Jesus apareceu a alguns de seus discípulos, que julgavam estar vendo um espírito. Para assegurar-lhes de quem ele era, Jesus disse: "Apalpai-me e vede, porque um espírito não tem carne e ossos assim como observais que eu tenho." (Lu 24:39) Não ter Jesus dito que ele era de carne e sangue tem levado alguns a dizer que ele tinha um corpo "espiritualizado" de carne e ossos, sem sangue. Não há base para tal argumento, pois os discípulos podiam ver que Jesus tinha ossos e carne, mas nenhum sangue escorria de seu corpo para que ele trouxesse isto à atenção deles. Assim, Jesus forneceu evidência, pela boca de 11 apóstolos e de outros que estavam reunidos com eles naquela ocasião, de que ele realmente fora ressuscitado para a vida e que os discípulos não sofriam nenhuma alucinação ao declararem a ressurreição dele.

Impureza. Sob a Lei dada mediante Moisés, a pessoa ficava religiosamente impura por sete dias caso tocasse num cadáver, no osso dum homem ou numa sepultura. (Núm 19:16) O Rei Josias combateu a adoração falsa enchendo de ossos humanos os lugares onde antes ficavam os postes sagrados da adoração pagã e queimando sobre os altares os ossos de sepulturas, tornando os altares aviltados e impróprios para uso. — 2Rs 23:14, 16, 19; 2Cr 34:5.

Uso Figurado. A Bíblia em suas referências aos ossos destaca quão literalmente vitais eles são para a saúde física da pessoa e figurativamente para a saúde espiritual. Os ossos formam a estrutura interior que dá sustentação ao corpo, e, como tal, são usados metaforicamente na Bíblia para representar o ser, especialmente conforme afetado por sentimentos e emoções profundos. Assim, diz-se que os ossos duma pessoa temerosa estão 'cheios de pavor'. (Jó 4:14) Os ossos podem tremer por causa de extremo desalento ou ficar "candentes por causa da sequidão" em virtude de doenças. (Je 23:9; Jó 30:30) O temor de Jeová é 'refrigério para os ossos'. (Pr 3:8) Diz-se que uma boa notícia "engorda os ossos", ou os enche de tutano, ou seja, revigora o corpo inteiro. (Pr 15:30) "Declarações afáveis são . . . uma cura para os ossos." (Pr 16:24) Por outro lado, sentimentos negativos podem ter um efeito prejudicial sobre o organismo da pessoa. "O espírito abatido resseca os ossos." (Pr 17:22) Diz-se que a esposa que age vergonhosamente é para seu marido "como podridão nos seus ossos". (Pr 12:4) Abrigar ciúme também pode ser física e espiritualmente destrutivo para a pessoa, de modo que "o ciúme é podridão para os ossos". — Pr 14:30.

Por causa da forte estrutura dos ossos, Provérbios 25:15 diz sobre o poder da paciência e das palavras bondosas em vencer a oposição rija e firme:

"Pela paciência se induz ao comandante, e a própria língua suave pode quebrar um osso."

Uso Profético. Na instituição da Páscoa, Jeová ordenou que o cordeiro (ou cabrito) fosse assado por inteiro e "não lhe deves quebrar nenhum osso". (Êx 12:46) Isto se cumpriu em Jesus Cristo, "o Cordeiro de Deus", que é o antitípico sacrifício pascoal. (Jo 1:29; 1Co 5:7) Jesus morreu na estaca de tortura. Os soldados vieram quebrar os ossos das pernas daqueles que haviam sido pregados na estaca naquele dia, como era costumeiro, a fim de apressar a morte deles. Eles quebraram as pernas dos dois malfeitores. No entanto, verificaram que Jesus já estava morto, de modo que não lhe quebraram as pernas, mas um dos soldados perfurou-lhe o lado com uma lança. — Jo 19:31-36; Sal 34:20.

Jeová deu a Ezequiel, em Babilônia, uma visão em que assemelhou Israel a ossos secos espalhados num vale. Na visão, à medida que Ezequiel profetizava aos ossos, estes miraculosamente se juntaram e surgiu carne sobre eles. Daí profetizou ao vento, e este trouxe fôlego aos seus corpos, de modo que se ergueram como um grande exército. Jeová explicou que a visão se aplicava a Israel, que, tragado no exílio babilônico, era como pessoas cuja esperança se havia desvanecido. (Ez 37:1-11) Similarmente, Jeremias assemelhou o rei da Assíria, que levou o reino de dez tribos para o exílio, e Nabucodonosor, rei de Babilônia, que levou Judá, a leões que devoraram o povo de Deus e roeram-lhe os ossos. (Je 50:17) Deus permitira isto por causa da apostasia de Israel. Mas Jeová iria lembrar-se deles e pôr neles o Seu espírito, o que os reavivaria e revitalizaria, e também os traria de volta para se fixarem na Terra Prometida. — Ez 37:12-14.

Depois de Jeová destruir Gogue e sua massa de gente, que subirão para atacar o povo de Jeová, haverá uma atividade contínua de "sete meses" para marcar os locais onde se encontram os ossos da multidão de Gogue e enterrá-los, para limpar a superfície da terra de toda a imundície e contaminação. — Ez 39:14-16.

Com referência à medula óssea (tutano), Jeová descreve simbolicamente as ricas bênçãos que trará a seu povo quando eliminar a morte, dizendo que fará para eles um banquete de "pratos bem azeitados, cheios de tutano". — Is 25:6; veja também TUTANO (MEDULA).

ÓSTRACO. Veja CACO.

OTNI [forma abreviada de Otniel]. Filho de Semaías e neto do coraíta Obede-Edom, designado como porteiro levita junto ao santuário. Otni e seus irmãos eram "governantes da casa de seu pai, . . . homens poderosos, capazes". — 1Cr 26:1, 4, 6-8, 15.

OTNIEL. Primeiro juiz nominalmente citado de Israel, depois de Josué. Otniel era "filho de Quenaz, irmão mais moço de Calebe". (Jz 1:13; 3:9; Jos 15:17) Ao passo que esta estrutura gramatical dá margem a que tanto Otniel como Quenaz sejam o irmão mais novo de Calebe, para harmonizar com outros textos Otniel tem de ser considerado sobrinho de Calebe, filho do irmão de Calebe, Quenaz. Assim, certas traduções rezam: "Otniel, filho de Quenaz, o irmão de Calebe, mais novo do que ele." (ALA; BV) Também, Calebe era "filho de Jefuné", portanto, não era filho de Quenaz, como Otniel. — Núm 32:12; 1Cr 4:15.

O casamento de Otniel com Acsa, filha de Calebe, foi resultado de sua vitória sobre a fortaleza cananeia de Debir. Calebe, pai de Acsa, prometera dá-la em casamento a quem conquistasse a cidade. (Jos 15:16-19; Jz 1:11-15) Otniel teve um filho chamado Hatate e estabeleceu uma família permanente na tribo de Judá. Anos depois foi escolhido um descendente dentre essa família para encabeçar um grupo de serviço de 24.000 homens, durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 4:13; 27:1, 15.

A primeira opressão de reis estrangeiros contra Israel, por causa da desobediência, durou oito anos. Quando "começaram a clamar a Jeová por socorro", Ele suscitou Otniel para libertá-los. Com o espírito de Jeová sobre ele, Otniel derrotou Cusã-Risataim, "o rei da Síria", assumiu a supervisão geral e fazia decisões judiciais entre seus irmãos. — Jz 3:8-11.

OURO. O primeiro e mais frequentemente mencionado metal na Bíblia. (Gên 2:11) Desde o início tem sido um metal nobre, altamente estimado por causa de seu peso, raridade, brilho que não perde o lustre, tremeluzente beleza, ductibilidade e maleabilidade. Vários termos hebraicos referem-se a ouro; entre estes, za·háv (Êx 25:11), hha·rúts (Za 9:3), ké·them (Sal 45:9), paz ("ouro refinado"; Sal 19:10), seghóhr ("ouro puro"; Jó 28:15), e 'oh·fir ("ouro de Ofir"; Jó 22:24). Os termos gregos khry·sós e khry·sí·on, das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, são usados com referência a moedas, ornamentos e o metal em geral; são também usados em sentido metafórico. — Mt 10:9; 1Pe 3:3; Mt 2:11; 1Co 3:12.

A raridade do ouro lhe conferiu um valor monetário que o tornou útil como meio comercial de troca e como medida de riqueza e de preeminência. (Gên 13:2; 1Cr 21:25; Est 8:15) As moedas de ouro são, contudo, um invento posterior. A cor e o brilho do ouro, e sua resistência à oxidação ou deslustre, tornam-no especialmente valioso para joias e ornamentos de todos os tipos. — Gên 24:22; 41:42; Jz 8:24-26; Sal 45:9, 13.

Quando encontrado em sua pureza nativa, em depósitos de cascalho e leitos de rio, o ouro pode ser facilmente separado e recuperado, devido a seu grande peso. O livro de Jó menciona operações de mineração e de refino. — Jó 28:1, 2, 6.

Usado no Tabernáculo e no Templo. A maleabilidade do ouro permite que seja moldado por batimento em incontáveis formatos. Na construção do tabernáculo, o ouro foi transformado em placas para revestimento e em folhas finas cortadas em fios que foram entremeados em certas roupas do sumo sacerdote. (Êx 25:31; 30:1-3; 37:1, 2; 39:2, 3) Foi similarmente empregado no templo construído por Salomão. (1Rs 6:21-35; 10:18; 2Cr 3:5-9) Ligas de ouro com outros metais para aumentar a sua dureza ampliam a sua utilidade. Este processo era também empregado no antigo Israel. — 1Rs 10:16; veja ELECTRO.

Usara-se grande quantidade de ouro no tabernáculo, sendo que o valor atual desse ouro é estimado em cerca de US$ 11.269.000. (Êx 25:10-40; 38:24) No entanto, em comparação com a quantidade de ouro utilizada, o tabernáculo do ermo era apenas uma miniatura do glorioso templo de Salomão. Davi reservara nada menos que 100.000 talentos de ouro para esse templo, avaliado hoje em mais de US$ 38.535.000.000. (1Cr 22:14) Os candelabros e os utensílios do templo — garfos, tigelas, bilhas, bacias, taças, etc. — foram feitos de ouro e de prata; alguns utensílios eram de cobre; os querubins do Santíssimo, o altar do incenso e até mesmo todo o interior da casa eram revestidos de ouro. — 1Rs 6:20-22; 7:48-50; 1Cr 28:14-18; 2Cr 3:1-13.

Os Rendimentos de Salomão. Enormes quantidades de ouro afluíram aos cofres de Salomão: do rei de Tiro (120 talentos), da rainha de Sabá (120 talentos), de tributos e taxas anuais, e por meio de sua própria frota mercante. Diz o relato: "O peso do ouro que chegou a Salomão num só ano ascendeu a seiscentos e sessenta e seis talentos de ouro [c. US$ 256.643.000]." Isto além das receitas provenientes de mercadores, governadores, e outros. — 1Rs 9:14, 27, 28; 10:10, 14, 15.

Ofir era um dos lugares de onde Salomão obtinha ouro excelente. Descobriu-se um fragmento de cerâmica, alegadamente do oitavo século AEC, que contém a seguinte inscrição: "Ouro de Ofir para bet horon, trinta siclos." — 1Rs 9:28; 10:11; Jó 28:16; veja OFIR.

O Destino Dado ao Ouro das Cidades Capturadas. Deus ordenara a Israel que as imagens esculpidas dos deuses-ídolos das nações fossem queimadas: "Não deves desejar a prata e o ouro sobre elas, nem tampouco tomá-lo para ti, para que não sejas enlaçado por ele; pois é algo detestável para Jeová, teu Deus. E não deves introduzir algo detestável na tua casa e realmente tornar-te algo devotado à destruição, igual a ele. Deves ter completa repugnância dele e absolutamente detestá-lo, porque é algo devotado à destruição." (De 7:25, 26) Por conseguinte, os ídolos e seus acessórios eram queimados e o ouro e a prata neles às vezes eram reduzidos a pó. — Êx 32:20; 2Rs 23:4.

Outros objetos de ouro e de prata nas cidades capturadas podiam ser levados, depois de serem passados pelo fogo para serem purificados. (Núm 31:22, 23) Jericó era uma exceção a isto, pois era as primícias da conquista de Canaã. Seu ouro e sua prata (exceto o dos ídolos) tinham de ser entregues aos sacerdotes, sendo destinados à utilização no santuário. — Jos 6:17-19, 24.

Sabedoria e Fé São Melhores do Que Ouro. Embora o ouro tenha grande valor, não pode, assim como outras riquezas materiais, dar vida a seus possuidores. (Sal 49:6-8; Mt 16:26), e não há quantidade de ouro que possa comprar a verdadeira sabedoria que provém de Jeová. (Jó 28:12, 15-17, 28) As suas leis, os seus mandamentos e a sua disciplina são muito mais desejáveis do que muito ouro refinado. (Sal 19:7-10; 119:72, 127; Pr 8:10) O ouro é impotente para livrar no dia da ira de Jeová. — Sof 1:18.

Os homens de sociedades materialistas ridicularizam a fé em Deus e chamam-na de nada prática. Não obstante, o apóstolo Pedro aponta para a inigualável durabilidade e o valor permanente da fé. Diz que a qualidade provada da fé duma pessoa tem valor muito maior do que o ouro, que pode suportar o fogo, mas pode desgastar-se e ser destruído por outros meios. Os cristãos têm de suportar várias provações que, às vezes, são duras, mas isto serve para fazer realçar a qualidade de sua fé. (1Pe 1:6, 7) A verdadeira fé pode suportar quaisquer testes.

Uso Simbólico. Jó falou do ouro como símbolo do materialismo, uma das coisas que ele sabia que tinha de evitar para agradar a Jeová. (Jó 31:24, 25) Por outro lado, a beleza, a preciosidade e a pureza do ouro excelente o tornam símbolo apropriado para se descrever a cidade santa, a Nova Jerusalém, e sua rua larga. — Re 21:18, 21.

A imagem do sonho de Nabucodonosor tinha cabeça de ouro, sendo o restante da imagem constituída de materiais menos preciosos. Daniel interpretou que as partes da imagem representam as potências mundiais, a cabeça de ouro sendo Nabucodonosor, isto é, a dinastia imperial de reis babilônicos encabeçada por Nabucodonosor. (Da 2:31-33, 37-40) Babilônia é simbolizada similarmente como "um copo de ouro na mão de Jeová", útil para Ele como executor de Seus julgamentos sobre as nações. — Je 51:7.

No tabernáculo construído por Moisés, foi usado ouro nos compartimentos fechados — o Santo, onde os sacerdotes entravam e cumpriam seus deveres, e o Santíssimo, onde apenas o sumo sacerdote entrava. Visto que o Santíssimo, com a sua Arca do Pacto, de ouro, representava o céu, a morada de Deus, e visto que os sacerdotes, mas não os israelitas comuns, podiam entrar no Santo, essas coisas logicamente representavam coisas que têm a ver com os céus de Deus e com seu "sacerdócio real", isto é, os que recebem a chamada celestial, e sua atividade e deveres para com Deus. (1Pe 2:9; He 9:1-5, 9, 11, 12, 23-25; 3:1) Este sacerdócio é, pois, simbolicamente distinto do povo na terra a quem esse sacerdócio ministra.

Ao incentivar o jovem a servir a seu Criador enquanto ainda tem força e vigor, o sábio escritor de Eclesiastes diz que isto deve ser feito antes que "se esmague a tigela de ouro". Aparentemente ele se refere ao crânio, em forma de tigela, que contém o cérebro, cujo esmagamento privaria da vida o seu possuidor. — Ec 12:6, 7.

OUTEIRO. Veja OFEL.

OUVIDO. O órgão da audição, desenhado e criado por Jeová Deus. (Sal 94:9; Pr 20:12) O ouvido consiste em três partes: o ouvido externo, o ouvido médio e o ouvido interno. O ouvido médio é uma pequena câmara que começa com o tímpano e leva a um emaranhado de canais que constituem o ouvido interno. Além de sua função em relação com a audição, o ouvido interno tem também órgãos que têm que ver com o equilíbrio e o movimento. A posse de dois ouvidos é de grande ajuda para se localizar a fonte e a direção dos sons.

O ouvido humano detecta os sons numa faixa de frequência de cerca de 20 a 20.000 ciclos por segundo. Os ouvidos de muitos animais são sensíveis a tons de frequência maior, inaudíveis para o ouvido humano. A gama de energia sonora perceptível ao ouvido humano é notável. O som mais alto que o ouvido pode tolerar, sem perigo, é dois trilhões de vezes mais potente do que o som menos perceptível. O ouvido humano tem a máxima sensitividade que é prático ter, pois, se os ouvidos fossem mais aguçados, captariam os incessantes movimentos moleculares das próprias partículas de ar.

Visto que o Criador do ouvido pode ouvir, a Bíblia fala a respeito dele como tendo, simbolicamente, ouvidos. (Núm 11:18; Sal 116:1, 2) Por meio deste simbolismo, Jeová representa a si mesmo como tendo ouvidos abertos às orações, às petições e aos clamores do justo. (Sal 10:17; 18:6; 34:15; 130:2; Is 59:1; 1Pe 3:12) Ao passo que Ele ouve os murmúrios dos queixosos e a linguagem iníqua de seus inimigos (Núm 11:1; 2Rs 19:28), ele se recusa a ouvir seus angustiantes pedidos de socorro quando lhes sobrevém a execução do julgamento. (Ez 8:18) Embora as imagens-ídolos talvez tenham ouvidos esculpidos ou entalhados nelas, elas, naturalmente, não podem ouvir e são impotentes para receber ou responder às orações de seus adoradores. — Sal 115:6.

Uso Figurado. Na Bíblia, a palavra "ouvido" é usada mui vigorosamente, em sentido figurado, para representar o completo processo da audição. O termo é empregado com respeito à faculdade de ouvir e, daí, pesar a veracidade e o valor do que é dito. (Jó 12:11; 34:3) A maneira em que a expressão "dá ouvidos" ou 'inclina o ouvido' é usada indica que significa prestar atenção, visando agir de acordo com o que é ouvido. (Sal 78:1; 86:6; Is 51:4) 'Abrir-se-lhe o ouvido' significa que a pessoa obtém entendimento ou esclarecimento sobre um assunto. (Is 50:5) A expressão 'destapar o ouvido' pode ter-se originado do fato de que, nas terras orientais, a pessoa removeria parcialmente a cobertura para a cabeça de modo a ouvir mais claramente. Esta expressão, bem como a frase 'revelar ao ouvido', refere-se a se dar informações em particular, ou à revelação dum segredo ou de algo que previamente não era conhecido. — 1Sa 9:15; 20:2, 12, 13; 2Sa 7:27.

Um 'ouvido desperto' é aquele que fica atento. (Is 50:4) Tal ouvido talvez pertença à pessoa que anteriormente se situava entre os "surdos [espiritualmente], embora tenham ouvidos [literais]". (Is 43:8) A Bíblia descreve o justo como ouvindo a Deus, mas tapando seu ouvido para a iniquidade. (Is 33:15) Similarmente, a palavra grega para 'escutar' pode ter o sentido de 'prestar atenção a, entender, e agir concordemente', como quando Jesus Cristo disse: "Minhas ovelhas escutam a minha voz", e, "de modo algum seguirão a um estranho, mas fugirão dele, porque não conhecem a voz de estranhos". — Jo 10:27, 5.

Por outro lado, os ouvidos dos rebeldes são chamados de 'endurecidos' (ALA), ou "insensíveis". (Is 6:10; At 28:27) Tais iníquos são assemelhados à naja, que tapa seus ouvidos, recusando-se a escutar a voz do encantador. — Sal 58:4.

Jeová, por meio de seus servos, referiu-se aos israelitas obstinados e desobedientes como tendo 'ouvidos incircuncisos'. (Je 6:10; At 7:51) É como se estivessem tapados com algo que impede a audição. São ouvidos que não foram abertos por Jeová, que dá ouvidos de entendimento e de obediência aos que o buscam, mas permite que a audição espiritual dos desobedientes fique obtusa. (De 29:4; Ro 11:8) O apóstolo Paulo predisse um tempo em que alguns que se diriam cristãos apostatariam da fé verdadeira, não desejando ouvir a verdade da Palavra de Deus, mas preferindo sentir "cócegas" nos ouvidos por meio de coisas que lhes agradassem, e, assim, dariam ouvidos a instrutores falsos. (2Ti 4:3, 4; 1Ti 4:1) Também, os ouvidos podem 'tinir' ouvindo notícias surpreendentes, especialmente notícias sobre calamidades. — 1Sa 3:11; 2Rs 21:12; Je 19:3.

Quando Saulo de Tarso foi cegado por uma luz sobrenatural, será que os homens que o acompanhavam ouviram a voz que ele ouviu?

Um exemplo em que o ouvir literal de um som e o ouvir com entendimento se contrastam, encontra-se no relato da conversão de Saulo de Tarso e na própria narrativa que mais tarde ele fez a respeito. (At 9:3-8; 22:6-11) O relato em Atos 9:7 diz que os homens que acompanhavam Saulo 'ouviram a voz' (ALA), ou "o som duma voz". (NM) Todavia, conforme registrado em Atos 22:9, Paulo (Saulo) diz que os homens que o acompanhavam não ouviram a voz. Quando se entende corretamente o que se diz nos dois versículos, não há contradição. A palavra grega para "voz" (fo·né) em Atos 9:7 é o caso genitivo (fo·nés) que tem, neste versículo, o sentido de apenas ouvir o que soa como uma voz — ouvir o som, mas não entender o significado. Em Atos 22:9 fo·né está no acusativo (fo·nén): os homens "não ouviram a voz" — eles ouviram o som de uma voz mas não distinguiram as palavras, o significado; eles não entenderam o que Jesus disse a Saulo, como Saulo entendeu. (At 9:4) Saber desse uso que a Bíblia faz da ideia de 'ouvir' em ambos os sentidos ajuda a esclarecer o que poderia parecer discrepância.

Na investidura do sacerdócio em Israel, ordenou-se a Moisés que tomasse parte do sangue do carneiro da investidura e a colocasse no lóbulo da orelha direita de Arão e de cada um dos filhos dele, bem como na mão direita e no pé direito, indicando que aquilo que ouvissem, o trabalho que fizessem e a forma como andassem deviam sofrer uma influência direta do que estava ocorrendo ali. (Le 8:22-24) Similarmente, no caso do leproso purificado, a Lei dizia que o sacerdote devia colocar parte do sangue do carneiro oferecido como oferta pela culpa, bem como parte do azeite oferecido, sobre o lóbulo da orelha direita do leproso. (Le 14:14, 17, 25, 28) Um arranjo de natureza comparável se encontra na provisão feita para o homem que desejasse continuar em escravidão a seu amo por tempo indefinido. Em tal caso, o escravo devia ser levado à ombreira da porta, e seu amo lhe furaria a orelha com uma sovela. Este sinal destacado, sendo feito no órgão da audição, representava evidentemente o desejo de tal escravo de prosseguir demonstrando obediente atenção ao seu amo. — Êx 21:5, 6.

A respeito da grande necessidade de o homem ouvir a Deus, no sentido de prestar estrita atenção e obediência às Suas palavras, como manda a Bíblia, em vez de ver a Deus, como alguns exigem, R. C. Dentan observa: "Na Bíblia, a palavra-chave para a reação do homem para com Deus é 'ouvir' em vez de 'ver' . . . Para as religiões de mistério a mais alta experiência religiosa era 'ver' o deus; mas para a Bíblia, onde a atitude religiosa básica é obediência à palavra divina, a ênfase é em 'ouvir' a Sua voz. O mais importante preceito da religião de Israel começa caracteristicamente: 'Ouve, ó Israel.' 'Quem é de Deus' não é o místico que teve uma visão, mas sim quem 'ouve as palavras de Deus' (João 8:47)." — The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete), editado por G. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 2, p. 1; veja SURDEZ.

OVELHA. Um dos principais animais da vida pastoril. (Gên 24:35; 26:14) As ovelhas são ruminantes. Assim como se dá atualmente, a variedade predominante na antiga Palestina pode ter sido a ovelha de cauda grossa, que se distingue por sua destacada cauda gorda, que geralmente pesa cerca de 5 kg, ou mais. (Veja Êx 29:22; Le 3:9.) Em geral, as ovelhas eram brancas (Cân 6:6), embora houvesse também ovelhas marrom-escuras ou malhadas. (Gên 30:32) Numa sociedade pastoril, homens de grande riqueza, como Jó, possuíam milhares de ovelhas. (Jó 1:3, 16; 42:12) Os israelitas provavelmente mantinham alguns cordeiros como animais de estimação. — 2Sa 12:3; Je 11:19.

Sem pastor, as ovelhas domésticas ficam indefesas e temerosas. Perdem-se e espalham-se, e ficam totalmente à mercê de seus inimigos. (Núm 27:16, 17; Je 23:4; Ez 34:5, 6, 8; Miq 5:8) As ovelhas se deixam conduzir e seguem fielmente seu pastor. Podem aprender a reconhecer a voz dele e a atender apenas a ele. (Jo 10:2-5) Ilustrando isso, há um trecho de Researches in Greece and the Levant (Pesquisas na Grécia e no Levante), de J. Hartley (Londres, 1831, pp. 321, 322):

"Uma vez que se dirigiu minha atenção na noite passada para as palavras [em] João x. 3 . . . perguntei ao meu auxiliar se era comum na Grécia dar nome às ovelhas. Ele me disse que sim, e que as ovelhas obedecem o pastor quando este as chama pelo nome. Esta manhã tive a oportunidade de verificar se isso era verdade. Passando por um rebanho de ovelhas, fiz ao pastor a mesma pergunta que fizera ao meu auxiliar, e ele me deu a mesma resposta. Pedi-lhe então que chamasse uma de suas ovelhas. Ele fez isso, e ela no mesmo instante deixou o pasto e suas companheiras e correu até a mão do pastor, dando sinais de prazer, e com uma pronta obediência que eu jamais vira antes em qualquer outro animal. Dá-se o mesmo com as ovelhas neste país, não seguem a um estranho, antes fogem dele . . . O pastor me disse que muitas de suas ovelhas ainda eram ariscas; ainda não haviam aprendido o seu nome; mas que, por meio de ensino, todas elas aprenderiam." — Veja PASTOR.

As áreas antigamente propícias para a criação de ovelhas incluíam o Negebe (1Sa 15:7, 9), Harã (Gên 29:2-4), a terra de Midiã (Êx 2:16), a região montanhosa de Judá, onde se localizava a cidade de Carmelo (1Sa 25:2), a terra de Uz (Jó 1:1, 3), de Basã e Gileade (De 32:14; Miq 7:14).

As ovelhas eram fonte de numerosos produtos para os hebreus e outros povos. Dos chifres do carneiro, fabricavam-se receptáculos e buzinas. (Jos 6:4-6, 8, 13; 1Sa 16:1) Peles de ovelha às vezes serviam de vestimenta (He 11:37), e peles de carneiro tingidas de vermelho foram usadas na construção do tabernáculo. (Êx 26:14) A lã das ovelhas fornecia a fibra para o que provavelmente era o tecido mais comum para roupas. (Jó 31:20; Pr 27:26) As ovelhas eram um importante item do intercâmbio comercial (Ez 27:21), e eram até mesmo usadas no pagamento de tributo. (2Rs 3:4; 2Cr 17:11) Tanto o leite como a carne de ovelha eram itens de alimentação. (De 14:4; 32:14; 2Sa 17:29; Is 7:21, 22) A carne de carneiro e de cordeiro era saboreada regularmente por reis, governadores e outros. — 1Sa 8:17; 1Rs 4:22, 23; Ne 5:18; Am 6:4.

A carne era cozida ou assada. Para a Páscoa, assava-se por inteiro um cordeiro ou um cabrito de um ano, tendo-lhe sido removida a pele e limpos os órgãos internos. (Êx 12:5, 9) Quando uma ovelha era cozida, tirava-se primeiro a pele do animal e, daí, era dividido em pedaços. Às vezes partiam-se os ossos para liberar o tutano. Tanto a carne como os ossos eram cozidos numa panela grande. (Ez 24:3-6, 10; Miq 3:1-3) Uma vez cozida a carne, ela era removida da panela, e o caldo era servido em separado. (Veja Jz 6:19.) Servir carne de cordeiro a um visitante era um gesto de hospitalidade. — 2Sa 12:4.

A época da tosquia de ovelhas era aguardada ansiosamente, pois assemelhava-se a uma colheita. O acontecimento era acompanhado de banquetes e regozijo. — 1Sa 25:2, 11, 36; 2Sa 13:23, 24, 28.

A Lei mosaica proibia comer gordura de ovelha (Le 7:23-25), bem como abater uma ovelha e seu filhote no mesmo dia. (Le 22:28) Incluía também provisões para cuidar de assuntos relacionados com ovelhas desgarradas, e a perda, mutilação ou roubo de ovelhas. (Êx 22:1, 4, 9-13; De 22:1, 2) A obediência de Israel às leis de Deus determinava se seus rebanhos e manadas seriam abençoados ou amaldiçoados. — De 7:12, 13; 28:2, 4, 15, 18, 31, 51.

Desde os primeiros tempos ofereciam-se ovelhas em sacrifício. (Gên 4:2, 4; 22:7, 8, 13; Jó 42:8) Sob a Lei, todos os primogênitos dos cordeiros deviam ser sacrificados, mas não antes de atingirem pelo menos oito dias de vida. Para redimir um primogênito dos jumentos, devia ser oferecida uma ovelha. (Êx 34:19, 20; Le 22:27) Apresentavam-se carneiros como ofertas pela culpa (Le 5:15, 16, 18; 6:6), ofertas queimadas (Le 9:3; 16:3; 23:12) e sacrifícios de participação em comum (Le 9:4); e um carneiro serviu como oferta pela investidura do sacerdócio arônico. (Êx 29:22; Le 8:22-28) Diariamente, dois carneiros de um ano constituíam a oferta queimada contínua. (Êx 29:38-42) No início dos meses e em relação com as festividades anuais, além da oferta queimada contínua, sacrificavam-se carneiros e cordeiros. (Núm 28:11, 17-19, 26, 27; 29:1-38) O carneiro era uma modalidade tão destacada nas ofertas feitas por Israel que o profeta Samuel usou "a gordura de carneiros" como paralelo de "sacrifício". (1Sa 15:22) No entanto, às vezes podiam-se apresentar cordeiras como sacrifícios de participação em comum (Le 3:6), ofertas pelo pecado (Le 4:32; Núm 6:14) e ofertas pela culpa (Le 5:6).

Uso Profético e Figurado. Nas Escrituras, "ovelhas" não raro referem-se ao povo indefeso, inocente, e, às vezes, maltratado, de Jeová. (2Sa 24:17; Sal 44:11, 22; 95:7; 119:176; Mt 10:6, 16; Jo 21:16, 17; Ro 8:36) Sob pastores e líderes infiéis, os israelitas, quais ovelhas de Deus, sofreram grandemente. Por meio de seu profeta Ezequiel, Jeová apresenta um mui patético quadro de negligência: "Não apascentais o próprio rebanho. Não fortalecestes as adoentadas, e não curastes a doentia, e não pensastes a quebrada, e não trouxestes de volta a dispersada, e não procurastes a perdida, porém, mantiveste-as em sujeição com severidade, sim, com tirania. E aos poucos foram espalhadas por não haver pastor, de modo que se tornaram alimento de toda fera do campo." (Ez 34:3-5) Em contraste, as ovelhas de Jesus, tanto o "pequeno rebanho" como as "outras ovelhas" que seguem a sua direção, são bem cuidadas. (Lu 12:32; Jo 10:4, 14, 16; Re 7:16, 17) Jesus comparou os que fazem o bem para com o mínimo de seus irmãos a ovelhas, ao passo que os que se recusam a fazer isso ele assemelhou a cabritos. — Mt 25:31-45.

"Carneiros" às vezes representam pessoas, especialmente líderes opressivos duma nação que estejam destinados à destruição. (Je 51:40; Ez 39:18) Em Ezequiel 34:17-22, os carneiros, os cabritos e as ovelhas gordas representam os líderes infiéis de Israel, que se apropriavam do que havia de melhor e, daí, conspurcavam o que restava para as ovelhas magras e doentes, isto é, o povo oprimido, explorado e empurrado de um lado para o outro.

Jesus Cristo foi profeticamente mencionado como ovelha levada ao abate, e como ovelha que permanece muda diante de seus tosquiadores. (Is 53:7; At 8:32, 35; compare isso com 1Pe 2:23.) Por causa do papel sacrificial de Jesus, João, o Batizador, identificou-o como o "Cordeiro de Deus, que tira o pecado do mundo", e, no livro de Revelação (Apocalipse), o Filho de Deus é repetidas vezes chamado de "o Cordeiro". — Jo 1:29; Re 5:6; 6:16; 7:14, 17; 14:1; 17:14; 19:7.

A Potência Mundial Medo-Persa foi representada sob a figura dum carneiro com dois chifres de altura desigual. O chifre maior evidentemente representava a ascendência dos reis persas. (Da 8:3-7, 20) Em Revelação 13:11, mostra-se a fera que procedeu da terra tendo dois chifres como um cordeiro, o que sugeriria aparente inofensibilidade. Similarmente, Jesus falou dos falsos profetas como lobos em pele de ovelha, portanto perigosos, embora aparentando ser inofensivos. — Mt 7:15.

É aparentemente ao tremor do monte Sinai, quando Jeová deu a Lei a Israel (Êx 19:18), que se referem as palavras figurativas 'montes saltitaram como carneiros'. — Sal 114:4-6; compare isso com Sal 29:5, 6; 68:8.

Ovelha Selvática. A palavra hebraica te'óh tem sido diversificadamente traduzida por "antílope" (Al, ALA, CBC), "boi silvestre" (Tr), "búfalo" (So) e "gazela" (Ro). No entanto, o Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros (Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento), de Koehler e Baumgartner (Leiden, 1958, p. 1016), dá "ovelha selvática" como possível tradução, e é assim traduzida em Deuteronômio 14:5 e em Isaías 51:20.

As ovelhas selváticas se distinguem das ovelhas domésticas pela sua pelagem externa, que é de pelame grosso, em vez de lã. A variedade de ovelha selvática que se acha agora geograficamente mais próxima da Palestina é a ovelha selvática armênia (Ovis gmelini), encontrada nas cordilheiras da Ásia Menor e na parte oriental do Irã. O carneiro desta variedade mede menos de 90 cm de altura na espádua.

OVELHAS, APRISCO DAS. Cercado ao qual as ovelhas eram geralmente trazidas para passar a noite, a fim de protegê-las de ladrões e de animais predadores. Embora também se usassem cavernas e outros abrigos naturais, os apriscos de ovelhas não raro eram redis permanentes, com muros de pedra (Núm 32:16; 1Sa 24:3; Sof 2:6) e uma entrada. (Jo 10:1) Como nos tempos mais recentes, os ramos de plantas espinhosas talvez cobrissem os muros de pedra. Talvez houvesse também construções baixas e achatadas, no lado protegido do cercado, onde as ovelhas eram abrigadas das intempéries. Ao passo que os rebanhos de diversos pastores talvez fossem abrigados no mesmo aprisco, não havia perigo de confusão. As ovelhas só atendiam a voz de seu respectivo pastor. Um porteiro guardava a entrada do aprisco, e o abria para os pastores de manhã. — Jo 10:2-4.

OVELHAS, PORTA DAS. Veja PORTA, PORTÃO.

OZEM.

1. Quarto dos filhos alistados de Jerameel, da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:25.

2. Sexto filho de Jessé mencionado por nome, e um dos irmãos mais velhos de Davi; tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:13, 15.

OZNI [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Azanias]. Filho de Gade e fundador da família tribal dos oznitas, computados no segundo recenseamento de Israel no ermo. (Núm 26:15, 16) Ozni é chamado de Esbom na primeira lista dos filhos de Gade, alguns dos nomes destes sendo escritos de maneira um pouco diferente em Números. — Gên 46:16.

OZNITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Ozni]. Família da tribo de Gade, fundada por Ozni. — Núm 26:15, 16.

PÁ. Implemento de escavação, de cabo comprido. Pás de cobre eram utilizadas no tabernáculo para a remoção das cinzas do altar das ofertas queimadas. (Êx 27:1-3; 38:3; Núm 4:14) Serviam para o mesmo objetivo as pás de cobre que Hirão, o artesão hebreu-fenício, fez para serem usadas no templo construído por Salomão. (1Rs 7:13, 14, 40, 45) Estas se achavam entre os utensílios do templo que os babilônios levaram em 607 AEC. — 2Rs 25:8, 14; Je 52:18.

Usavam-se pás, talvez de madeira, para joeirar cereal. (Is 30:24) A ampla pá de joeirar era utilizada na eira para pegar o cereal trilhado e lançá-lo ao ar contra o vento, que levava embora o refugo, tal como a palha, e permitia que o cereal caísse de novo na eira. João, o Batizador, descreveu profeticamente o Messias como tendo na mão uma figurativa pá de joeirar, com a qual separaria o "trigo" da "palha" simbólicos. — Mt 3:1, 12; veja JOEIRAR.

PAARAI [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "escancarar"]. Arbita e um dos poderosos das forças militares de Davi. (2Sa 23:8, 35) Talvez seja o Naarai mencionado em 1 Crônicas 11:37, no que parece ser uma lista paralela.

PAATE-MOABE [Governador de Moabe]. Fundador duma família em Israel. Se ele era um oficial em Moabe, como seu nome talvez indique, isto se deu provavelmente na época em que Moabe estava sob o domínio de Judá. Contudo, ainda não se tem certeza se ele ocupava tal posição, visto que nada se diz sobre ele em base pessoal no registro das Escrituras.

Os descendentes de Paate-Moabe mencionados em Esdras e em Neemias são do período pós-exílico. Alguns deles compunham a segunda mais numerosa família que retornou com Zorobabel em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:1, 2, 6; Ne 7:11) Na época em que Esdras retornou em 468 AEC, acompanhado de mais descendentes de Paate-Moabe, alguns do primeiro grupo (ou seus descendentes) haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas acataram a admoestação de Esdras de despedi-las. (Esd 8:1, 4; 10:30, 44) Outro componente dessa família, Hassube, ajudou Neemias a consertar o muro de Jerusalém, e um descendente ou representante deles também atestou com selo o acordo de fidelidade que foi firmado pouco depois. — Ne 3:11; 9:38; 10:1, 14.

PACIÊNCIA. Veja LONGANIMIDADE.

PACTO. Acordo entre duas ou mais pessoas para fazerem ou se refrearem de fazer alguma coisa; convênio; contrato. A palavra hebraica beríth, cuja etimologia é incerta, aparece mais de 280 vezes nas Escrituras Hebraicas; mais de 80 dessas ocorrências estão nos cinco livros de Moisés. Que seu significado básico é "pacto", comparável à nossa moderna palavra "contrato", vê-se de tabuinhas cuneiformes encontradas em 1927 em Qatna, antiga cidade não israelita ao SE de Hamate. "O conteúdo das duas tabuinhas [dentre as 15 encontradas] é simples. A tabuinha A contém uma lista de nomes . . . A tabuinha B é uma lista de provisões . . . Assim, a lista A é um convênio no qual os homens em questão . . . concordam em entrar no serviço de alguém ou a cumprir determinadas obrigações. A lista B, escrita pelo mesmo escriba, ilustra então a natureza do convênio; os homens deviam receber provisões especificadas como paga por seus préstimos. . . . o conceito israelita de b^erit, 'pacto', era o tema central na teologia javista. Temos aqui a primeira ocorrência não bíblica, publicada, dessa palavra nos tempos antigos — não mais tarde do que o primeiro terço do século quatorze EC." — Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research (Boletim das Escolas Americanas de Pesquisas Orientais), fevereiro de 1951, p. 22.

Em algumas traduções das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a palavra di·a·thé·ke é traduzida de modo variado como "pacto", "legado", "testamento" (testamentum, Vg). Contudo, a Cyclopædia de M'Clintock e Strong (1891) diz, sob "Pacto": "Parece, contudo, não haver necessidade alguma da introdução duma nova palavra [além de "pacto"] que transmita uma nova ideia. Visto que a Sept[uaginta] verte coerentemente [berîth] (que nunca significa legado ou testamento, mas sempre pacto ou acordo) por [di·a·thé·ke] em todo o A.T., pode-se naturalmente entender que, ao adotarem tal palavra, os escritores do N.T. pretendem transmitir a mesma ideia aos seus leitores, cuja maioria está familiarizada com o A.T. grego. . . . Ademais, na maioria dos casos, a mesma coisa que tem sido chamada de 'pacto' (b^erîth) no A.T. é mencionada no N.T. (e.g. 2Cor. iii, 14; Heb. vii, ix; Rev. xi, 19); ao passo que, no mesmo contexto, a mesma palavra e coisa em grego são, no inglês, [na KJ] às vezes representadas por 'pacto', e, às vezes, por 'testamento' (Heb. vii, 22; viii, 8-13; ix, 15)." — Veja também o apêndice da NM, pp. 1524, 1525.

Repetidas vezes no livro de Hebreus (He 7:22; 8:6, 8, 9, 10; 9:4, 15, 16, 17, 20), o escritor usa a palavra di·a·thé·ke com inegável referência a pacto no antigo sentido hebraico, chegando até a citar Jeremias 31:31-34 e a referir-se à "arca do pacto". Ao traduzir esses versículos de Jeremias, a Septuaginta grega usa di·a·thé·ke para a antiga berîth hebraica, significando "pacto". Além disso, Hebreus 9:20 cita Êxodo 24:6-8, onde se fala, inequivocamente, de um pacto.

Aplicação da Palavra. Os pactos sempre envolviam duas ou mais partes. Podiam ser unilaterais (nos quais só uma das partes era responsável pela execução dos termos) ou bilaterais (nos quais ambas as partes tinham termos a executar). Além dos pactos em que Deus é uma das partes, a Bíblia registra pactos feitos entre indivíduos, e entre tribos, nações ou grupos de pessoas. Violar um pacto era um grave pecado. — Ez 17:11-20; Ro 1:31, 32.

O termo "pacto" é aplicado a uma ordenança segura, tal como a relativa ao pão da proposição (Le 24:8), ou à criação de Deus, governada por Suas leis, como a sucessão imutável do dia e da noite (Je 33:20); é também empregado de modo figurado, como na expressão "pacto com a Morte". (Is 28:18) Jeová também fala sobre um pacto relacionado com os animais selváticos. (Os 2:18) O acordo matrimonial é chamado de pacto. (Mal 2:14) A expressão "donos (amos) de um pacto" tem o sentido de "confederados", como em Gênesis 14:13.

Efetivamente, qualquer promessa feita por Jeová é um pacto; com certeza será levada a cabo; pode-se contar confiantemente com o seu cumprimento. (He 6:18) Um pacto vigora enquanto seus termos operarem e a obrigação de cumpri-lo recair sobre uma ou ambas as partes. Os resultados ou as bênçãos advindas do pacto podem continuar, até mesmo para sempre.

Métodos de Ratificar um Pacto. Deus frequentemente era invocado como testemunha. (Gên 31:50; 1Sa 20:8; Ez 17:13, 19) Fazia-se um juramento. (Gên 31:53; 2Rs 11:4; Sal 110:4; He 7:21) Os homens, às vezes, providenciavam um sinal ou uma testemunha, tal como um presente (Gên 21:30), uma coluna ou um montão de pedras (Gên 31:44-54), ou davam nome a um lugar (Gên 21:31). Jeová usou um arco-íris em certo caso. (Gên 9:12-16) Um método usado era abater e dividir ao meio animais, fazendo os pactuantes passar entre as metades; deste costume procede a expressão idiomática hebraica 'cortar um pacto'. (Gên 15:9-11, 17, 18 n; Je 34:18 n, 19) Às vezes, a formação de alianças era acompanhada de festas. (Gên 26:28, 30) Uma refeição de participação em comum talvez fosse saboreada, como se fez em relação ao pacto da Lei. (Ob 7; Êx 24:5, 11) O pactuante superior talvez presenteasse a outra parte com algum artigo de sua vestimenta ou de suas armas. (1Sa 18:3, 4) Algumas nações pagãs seguiam o costume de beber o sangue um do outro ou sangue misturado com vinho (em violação da proibição de Deus dada a todas as pessoas, em Gênesis 9:4, e a Israel sob a Lei), e os pactuantes proferiam as mais fortes maldições sobre a parte que mais tarde viesse a violar o pacto.

A Bíblia usa a expressão "pacto de sal" para indicar a permanência e imutabilidade dum pacto. (Núm 18:19; 2Cr 13:5; Le 2:13) Entre os povos antigos, comerem sal juntos era um sinal de amizade e indicava duradoura fidelidade e lealdade; comer sal junto com os sacrifícios de participação em comum simbolizava lealdade perpétua.

Instrumentos de Escrita. Os Dez Mandamentos foram escritos em pedra pelo "dedo de Deus" (Êx 31:18; 32:16); Jeremias escreveu uma escritura, apôs um selo e tomou testemunhas (Je 32:9-15); descobriram-se tabuinhas de argila de povos antigos estabelecendo os termos de contra-tos. Elas com frequência eram seladas dentro de invólucros de argila.

A Promessa Edênica. Jeová Deus, em Gênesis 3:15, declarou seu propósito de modo profético no jardim do Éden, na presença de Adão, de Eva e da "serpente".

Quanto à identidade dos envolvidos nesta promessa e profecia: A visão dada ao apóstolo João, em Revelação (Apocalipse) 12:9, informa-nos que a "serpente" é Satanás, o Diabo. A evidência indica que o "descendente [lit.: semente]" da "mulher", há muito aguardado pelos homens justos, identifica-se com o "descendente [semente]" de Abraão, Jesus Cristo. (Gál 3:16; Mt 1:1) A 'semente' seria ferida pela serpente no calcanhar. Jesus Cristo foi morto, ferimento este que não se mostrou permanente, contudo, pois Deus ressuscitou Jesus. Mas a 'semente', por sua vez, ferirá a cabeça da serpente, derrotando-a de forma permanente.

Quem é a "mulher" envolvida no pacto? Certamente não é Eva, que se tornou inimiga de Deus. Para derrotar, 'reduzir a nada', a criatura espiritual, Satanás, o Diabo, a 'semente' teria de ser, não humano, mas espiritual. (He 2:14) Jesus, ao nascer, era um Filho humano de Deus, mas, por ocasião do batismo de Jesus, Deus o reconheceu como Seu Filho, enviando sobre ele espírito santo. Jesus tornou-se então o Filho de Deus, gerado pelo espírito. (Mt 3:13-17; Jo 3:3-5) Mais tarde, ao ser ressuscitado, ele foi "vivificado no espírito". (1Pe 3:18) Então, quem era a "mãe", não do bebê humano Jesus, mas do Filho de Deus, gerado pelo espírito? O apóstolo Paulo diz que Abraão, Sara, Isaque, Agar e Ismael encenaram um drama simbólico, no qual Isaque representou aqueles que têm a esperança celestial, incluindo o próprio Paulo. Daí, Paulo diz que a "mãe" destes é "a Jerusalém de cima". Jesus Cristo chama a estes de "irmãos", indicando que têm a mesma mãe. (He 2:11) Isto fornece a base para identificar a "mulher" de Gênesis 3:15 com "a Jerusalém de cima". — Gál 4:21-29.

Os termos da promessa envolvem um lapso de tempo durante o qual a "serpente" produziria uma 'semente' e se desenvolveria inimizade entre as duas 'sementes'. Já se passaram cerca de 6.000 anos desde que tal promessa foi declarada. Pouco antes do Reinado Milenar de Cristo, a "serpente" será lançada no abismo de inatividade e, depois do fim dos mil anos, será aniquilada para sempre. — Re 20:1-3, 7-10; Ro 16:20.

O Pacto com Noé. Jeová Deus fez um pacto com Noé, que representava sua família, com respeito ao propósito de Jeová de preservar a vida humana e animal embora destruísse o mundo iníquo daqueles dias. (Gên 6:17-21; 2Pe 3:6) Noé começara a ter filhos depois de atingir os 500 anos. (Gên 5:32) Quando Deus revelou este propósito a Noé, seus filhos já eram adultos e estavam casados. Noé, de sua parte, devia construir a arca e abrigar nela sua esposa, seus filhos e suas noras, bem como animais e alimentos; Jeová preservaria alguma carne na terra, tanto do homem como dos animais. Ter Noé obedientemente cumprido os termos do pacto resultou em Jeová preservar a vida humana e animal. O pacto foi inteiramente cumprido em 2369 AEC, depois do Dilúvio, quando os homens e os animais de novo tinham condições de viver sobre o solo e reproduzir suas respectivas espécies. — Gên 8:15-17.

O Pacto do Arco-Íris. O pacto do arco-íris foi feito entre Jeová Deus e toda a carne (humana e animal), conforme representada por Noé e sua família, em 2369 AEC, nas montanhas de Ararate. Jeová declarou que jamais destruiria de novo toda a carne por meio dum dilúvio. O arco-íris foi então fornecido como sinal do pacto, que perdurará enquanto a humanidade viver sobre a terra, isto é, para sempre. — Gên 9:8-17; Sal 37:29.

O Pacto com Abraão. Pelo visto, o pacto com Abraão entrou em vigor quando Abrão (Abraão) atravessou o Eufrates rumo a Canaã. O pacto da Lei foi feito 430 anos depois. (Gál 3:17) Jeová falara com Abraão quando ele morava na Mesopotâmia, em Ur dos Caldeus, dizendo-lhe que viajasse para a terra que Deus lhe mostraria. (At 7:2, 3; Gên 11:31; 12:1-3) Êxodo 12:40, 41 (LXX) diz-nos que, no fim de 430 anos de morada no Egito e na terra de Canaã, "neste mesmo dia", saiu Israel, que estivera em escravidão no Egito. O dia em que foram libertados do Egito foi 14 de nisã de 1513 AEC, a data da Páscoa. (Êx 12:2, 6, 7) Isto pareceria indicar que Abraão atravessou o rio Eufrates a caminho de Canaã em 14 de nisã de 1943 AEC, e, evidentemente, foi então que o pacto abraâmico passou a vigorar. Deus apareceu novamente a Abraão, depois de este ter viajado em Canaã e chegado a Siquém, e ampliou sua promessa, dizendo: "Vou dar esta terra à tua descendência", desta forma indicando que este pacto estava relacionado com a promessa feita no Éden, e revelando que a 'semente' seguiria um curso humano, isto é, viria através duma linhagem humana. (Gên 12:4-7) Outras ampliações foram mais tarde expressas por Jeová, conforme registradas em Gênesis 13:14-17; 15:18; 17:2-8, 19; 22:15-18.

As promessas do pacto foram transmitidas à posteridade de Abraão mediante Isaque (Gên 26:2-4) e Jacó. (Gên 28:13-15; 35:11, 12) O apóstolo Paulo diz que Cristo (como o primário) e os em união com Cristo são a verdadeira 'semente'. — Gál 3:16, 28, 29.

Deus revelou o objetivo e as realizações do pacto abraâmico, dizendo que por meio de Abraão viria a semente da promessa; esta semente tomaria posse do portão dos seus inimigos; a semente de Abraão por meio de Isaque seria numerosa, inumerável para o homem naquele tempo; o nome de Abraão se tornaria grande; a semente possuiria a Terra da Promessa; todas as famílias da terra abençoariam a si mesmas por meio da semente. (Veja os textos acima, de Gênesis.) Houve um cumprimento literal destas coisas, que eram típicas do cumprimento maior por meio de Cristo. Paulo fornece informações adicionais sobre a natureza simbólica e profética dos termos deste pacto ao dizer que Abraão, Sara, Isaque, Agar e Ismael encenaram um drama simbólico. — Gál 4:21-31.

O pacto abraâmico é um "pacto por tempo indefinido". Seus termos exigem que vigore até que se tenha consumado a destruição de todos os inimigos de Deus e a bênção das famílias da terra. — Gên 17:7; 1Co 15:23-26.

Ao considerar os pactos abraâmico e da Lei, Paulo declarou o princípio de que "não há mediador onde apenas uma pessoa está envolvida" e então acrescentou que "Deus é apenas um". (Gál 3:20; veja MEDIADOR.) Jeová fez o pacto com Abraão unilateralmente. Tratava-se, na verdade, duma promessa, e Jeová não estabeleceu condições que Abraão tivesse de satisfazer a fim de que a promessa fosse cumprida. (Gál 3:18) Assim, não se usou nenhum mediador. Por outro lado, o pacto da Lei era bilateral. Foi feito entre Jeová e a nação de Israel, tendo a Moisés como mediador. Os israelitas concordaram com os termos do pacto, fazendo uma promessa sagrada de obedecer à Lei. (Êx 24:3-8) Este pacto posterior não invalidou o pacto abraâmico. — Gál 3:17, 19.

O Pacto da Circuncisão. O pacto da circuncisão foi feito em 1919 AEC, quando Abraão tinha 99 anos. Jeová fez esse pacto com Abraão e seus descendentes naturais; todos os varões da casa, incluindo os escravos, deviam ser circuncidados; quem quer que se recusasse a isto devia ser decepado do seu povo. (Gên 17:9-14) Mais tarde, Deus declarou que o residente forasteiro que desejasse comer a Páscoa (alguém que desejasse tornar-se adorador de Jeová, junto com Israel) teria de circuncidar os varões de sua casa. (Êx 12:48, 49) A circuncisão servia como selo da justiça que Abraão tinha pela fé, enquanto se achava no estado incircunciso, e era um sinal físico da relação pactuada dos descendentes de Abraão, mediante Jacó, com Jeová. (Ro 4:11, 12) Deus reconheceu a circuncisão até o fim do pacto da Lei, em 33 EC. (Ro 2:25-28; 1Co 7:19; At 15) Embora a circuncisão física fosse feita sob a Lei, Jeová repetidas vezes mostrou que estava mais preocupado com o seu significado simbólico, aconselhando Israel a 'circuncidar o prepúcio de seus corações'. — De 10:16; Le 26:41; Je 9:26; At 7:51.

O Pacto da Lei. O pacto da lei entre Jeová e a nação do Israel natural foi feito no terceiro mês depois de este partir do Egito, em 1513 AEC. (Êx 19:1) Tratava-se dum pacto nacional. O israelita natural já se achava, por nascimento, no pacto da Lei e, assim, gozava desta relação especial com Jeová. A Lei existia em forma de código, estava disposta de maneira ordeira, e seus estatutos achavam-se agrupados. A Lei, transmitida por meio de anjos, pela mão de um mediador, Moisés, entrou em vigor com o sacrifício de animais (no lugar de Moisés, o mediador, ou "pactuante") no monte Sinai. (Gál 3:19; He 2:2; 9:16-20) Naquela oportunidade, Moisés aspergiu sobre o altar a metade do sangue dos animais sacrificados, daí, leu o livro do pacto para o povo, que concordou em ser obediente. Depois disso, ele aspergiu o sangue sobre o livro e sobre o povo. (Êx 24:3-8) Sob a Lei, estabeleceu-se um sacerdócio na casa de Arão, da família de Coate, da tribo de Levi. (Núm 3:1-3, 10) O sumo sacerdócio era transmitido por herança de Arão a seus filhos, Eleazar em sucessão a Arão, Fineias em sucessão a Eleazar, e assim por diante. — Núm 20:25-28; Jos 24:33; Jz 20:27, 28.

Os termos do pacto da Lei eram que, se os israelitas guardassem o pacto, seriam um povo para o nome de Jeová, um reino de sacerdotes e uma nação santa, com Sua bênção (Êx 19:5, 6; De 28:1-14); caso violassem o pacto, seriam amaldiçoados. (De 28:15-68) Seus objetivos eram: tornar manifestas as transgressões (Gál 3:19); conduzir os judeus a Cristo (Gál 3:24); servir como sombra das boas coisas vindouras (He 10:1; Col 2:17); proteger os judeus da religião falsa, pagã, e preservar a adoração verdadeira de Jeová; proteger a linhagem da semente prometida. Adicionado ao pacto feito com Abraão (Gál 3:17-19), organizava a nação-descendente natural de Abraão por meio de Isaque e Jacó.

O pacto da Lei estendia benefícios a outros que não eram do Israel natural, pois eles podiam tornar-se prosélitos, ser circuncidados, e podiam obter muitos dos benefícios da Lei. — Êx 12:48, 49.

Como se tornou "obsoleto" o pacto da Lei?

Entretanto, o pacto da Lei tornou-se, em certo sentido, "obsoleto" quando Deus anunciou, mediante o profeta Jeremias, que haveria um novo pacto. (Je 31:31-34; He 8:13) Em 33 EC, o pacto da

Lei foi cancelado à base da morte de Cristo na estaca de tortura (Col 2:14), sendo substituído pelo novo pacto. — He 7:12; 9:15; At 2:1-4.

O Pacto com a Tribo de Levi. Jeová fez um pacto com a tribo de Levi, para que a tribo inteira fosse reservada a fim de constituir a organização de serviço do tabernáculo, incluindo o sacerdócio. Isto se deu no ermo de Sinai, em 1512 AEC. (Êx 40:2, 12-16; Mal 2:4) Arão e seus filhos, da família de Coate, deviam ser sacerdotes, as demais famílias de Levi cuidando dos outros deveres, tais como montar o tabernáculo, transportá-lo e outras coisas. (Núm 3:6-13; cap. 4) Mais tarde, eles serviram de modo similar no templo. (1Cr 23) As cerimônias de investidura do sacerdócio foram realizadas de 1-7 de nisã de 1512 AEC, e eles começaram a servir em 8 de nisã. (Le caps. 8, 9) Os levitas não tinham herança na terra, mas recebiam dízimos das outras tribos, e tinham cidades nas quais morar encravadas em território de outras tribos. (Núm 18:23, 24; Jos 21:41) Por causa do zelo de Fineias pela devoção exclusiva a Jeová, Deus fez com ele um pacto de paz, um pacto para o sacerdócio por tempo indefinido para ele e sua descendência. (Núm 25:10-13) O pacto com Levi continuou em vigor até o fim do pacto da Lei. — He 7:12.

O Pacto com Israel em Moabe. Pouco antes de Israel entrar na Terra da Promessa, em 1473 AEC, Jeová fez um pacto com o Israel natural em Moabe. (De 29:1; 1:3) Grande parte da Lei foi ali repetida e explicada por Moisés. A finalidade desse pacto era incentivar a fidelidade a Jeová, bem como fazer ajustes e delinear certas leis necessárias para os israelitas, ao passarem de uma vida de peregrinação para uma vida estabelecida na terra. (De 5:1, 2, 32, 33; 6:1; compare Le 17:3-5 com De 12:15, 21.) Este pacto findou com a abolição do pacto da Lei, pois era parte integrante da Lei.

O Pacto com o Rei Davi. O pacto com Davi foi feito em algum tempo durante o reinado de Davi em Jerusalém (1070-1038 AEC), as partes sendo Jeová e Davi, como representante de sua família. (2Sa 7:11-16) Os termos deste pacto eram os de que um filho da linhagem de Davi possuiria o trono para sempre e que este filho edificaria uma casa para o nome de Jeová. O propósito de Deus, neste pacto, era fornecer uma dinastia régia aos judeus; dar a Jesus, como o herdeiro de Davi, o direito legal ao trono de Davi, o "trono de Jeová" (1Cr 29:23; Lu 1:32); e fornecer a identificação de Jesus como o Messias. (Ez 21:25-27; Mt 1:6-16; Lu 3:23-31) Este pacto não incluía um sacerdócio; o sacerdócio levítico servia junto com os reis da linhagem de Davi; o sacerdócio e a realeza eram estritamente separados, sob a Lei. Visto que Jeová reconhece esta realeza e opera mediante ela para sempre, o pacto tem duração eterna. — Is 9:7; 2Pe 1:11.

O Pacto para Ser Sacerdote à Maneira de Melquisedeque. Este pacto acha-se expresso no Salmo 110:4, e o escritor do livro bíblico de Hebreus o aplica a Cristo, em Hebreus 7:1-3, 15-17. É um pacto feito por Jeová apenas com Jesus Cristo. Pelo visto, Jesus referiu-se a ele ao fazer o pacto para um reino com seus seguidores. (Lu 22:29) Pelo juramento de Jeová, Jesus Cristo, o Filho celestial de Deus, seria sacerdote à maneira de Melquisedeque. Melquisedeque foi rei e sacerdote de Deus na terra. Jesus Cristo teria os cargos tanto de Rei como de Sumo Sacerdote, não na terra, mas no céu. Ele foi investido de forma permanente nesses cargos depois de sua ascensão ao céu. (He 6:20; 7:26, 28; 8:1) O pacto dura para sempre, visto que Jesus atuará, sob a direção de Jeová, como Rei e Sumo Sacerdote para sempre. — He 7:3.

O Novo Pacto. Jeová predisse o novo pacto, mediante o profeta Jeremias, no sétimo século AEC, declarando que não seria como o pacto da Lei, que Israel violara. (Je 31:31-34) Na noite antes de sua morte, em 14 de nisã de 33 EC, quando estabeleceu a celebração da Refeição Noturna do Senhor, Jesus Cristo anunciou o novo pacto, a ser validado por seu sacrifício. (Lu 22:20) No 50.º dia a contar de sua ressurreição, e 10 dias depois de ter ascendido para seu Pai, ele derramou o espírito santo, que recebera de Jeová, sobre os seus discípulos reunidos num quarto de andar superior em Jerusalém. — At 2:1-4, 17, 33; 2Co 3:6, 8, 9; He 2:3, 4.

As partes do novo pacto são Jeová, de um lado, e o "Israel de Deus", os gerados pelo espírito em união com Cristo, que constituem sua congregação ou corpo, do outro lado. (He 8:10; 12:22-24; Gál 6:15, 16; 3:26-28; Ro 2:28, 29) O novo pacto entra em operação com o sangue derramado (o sacrifício da vida humana) de Jesus Cristo, cujo valor foi apresentado a Jeová depois da ascensão de Jesus para o céu. (Mt 26:28) Quando a pessoa é escolhida por Deus para a chamada celestial (He 3:1), Deus introduz tal pessoa em Seu pacto baseado no sacrifício de Cristo. (Sal 50:5; He 9:14, 15, 26) Jesus Cristo é o Mediador do novo pacto (He 8:6; 9:15) e o Descendente primário de Abraão. (Gál 3:16) Por ser o mediador do novo pacto, Jesus ajuda os que se acham nesse pacto a tornar-se parte da verdadeira semente de Abraão (He 2:16; Gál 3:29), por meio do perdão dos pecados deles.

Jeová os declara justos. — Ro 5:1, 2; 8:33; He 10:16, 17.

Estes irmãos de Cristo, gerados pelo espírito e ungidos, tornam-se subsacerdotes do Sumo Sacerdote, um "sacerdócio real". (1Pe 2:9; Re 5:9, 10; 20:6) Eles realizam uma obra sacerdotal, um "serviço público" (Fil 2:17), e são chamados de "ministros dum novo pacto". (2Co 3:6) Estes chamados têm de seguir de perto, fielmente, os passos de Cristo, até entregarem sua vida na morte; Jeová fará deles então um reino de sacerdotes, tornando-os partícipes da natureza divina, e os recompensará com imortalidade e incorrupção, como coherdeiros de Cristo nos céus. (1Pe 2:21; Ro 6:3, 4; 1Co 15:53; 1Pe 1:4; 2Pe 1:4) O objetivo desse pacto é tirar um povo para o nome de Jeová, como parte da 'semente' de Abraão. (At 15:14) Eles se tornam a "noiva" de Cristo e são o grupo de pessoas a quem Cristo introduz num pacto para o Reino, a fim de governarem com Ele. (Jo 3:29; 2Co 11:2; Re 21:9; Lu 22:29; Re 1:4-6; 5:9, 10; 20:6) O objetivo do novo pacto exige que continue em operação até que todos os do "Israel de Deus" sejam ressuscitados para a imortalidade nos céus. Quando isso acontecer, os benefícios desse pacto serão eternos. Por isso, ele pode ser chamado de "pacto eterno". — He 13:20.

O Pacto de Jesus com os Seus Seguidores. Na noite de 14 de nisã de 33 EC, depois de celebrar a Refeição Noturna do Senhor, Jesus fez este pacto com seus apóstolos fiéis. Aos 11 apóstolos fiéis, ele prometeu que se sentariam em tronos. (Lu 22:28-30; compare isso com 2Ti 2:12.) Mais tarde, mostrou que esta promessa se estendia a todos os 'vencedores' gerados pelo espírito. (Re 3:21; veja também Re 1:4-6; 5:9, 10; 20:6.) No dia de Pentecostes, ele inaugurou este pacto com eles ungindo com espírito santo os discípulos que estavam no quarto de andar superior, em Jerusalém. (At 2:1-4, 33) Aqueles que permanecessem com ele em provações, tendo uma morte semelhante à dele (Fil 3:10; Col 1:24), reinariam com ele, compartilhando do seu governo do Reino. Tal pacto continua vigorando para sempre entre Jesus Cristo e estes reis associados. — Re 22:5.

Vários Outros Pactos. (a) Josué e os maiorais de Israel com os habitantes da cidade de Gibeão, para permitir que estes continuassem vivos. Embora fossem cananeus amaldiçoados, a quem os israelitas deviam destruir, mesmo assim um pacto era considerado tão obrigatório que se permitiu que os gibeonitas continuassem vivos, mas a maldição foi executada por se fazer deles apanhadores de lenha e puxadores de água para a assembleia de Israel. (Jos 9:15, 16, 23-27) (b) Josué, com Israel, para servirem a Jeová. (Jos 24:25, 26) (c) Os anciãos de Gileade com Jefté, em Mispá, para torná-lo o cabeça dos habitantes de Gileade, caso Jeová lhe concedesse vitória sobre os amonitas. (Jz 11:8-11) (d) Entre Jonatã e Davi. (1Sa 18:3; 23:18) (e) Jeoiada, o sacerdote, com os chefes da escolta cariana e dos batedores. (2Rs 11:4; 2Cr 23:1-3) (f) Israel com Jeová, para mandar embora as esposas estrangeiras. (Esd 10:3) (g) De Jeová para dar seu servo como um pacto do (para o) povo. (Is 42:6; 49:8) (h) Davi com todos os anciãos de Israel, em Hébron. (1Cr 11:3) (i) Um pacto do povo, durante o reinado de Asa, para buscarem a Jeová de todo o coração e alma. (2Cr 15:12) (j) Josias com Jeová, para guardar os mandamentos de Jeová, segundo a Lei. (2Cr 34:31) (k) Os "fanfarrões" que governavam Jerusalém pensavam erroneamente que estavam seguros num "pacto com a Morte". — Is 28:14, 15, 18.

PADÃ [possivelmente: Planície (Baixada)]. Forma abreviada de "Padã-Arã" (Gên 35:9; 48:7); pelo visto, o mesmo que "o campo da Síria [Arã]". (Gên 28:6, 7; Os 12:12) Padã era uma região ao redor da cidade de Harã, no norte da Mesopotâmia. (Gên 28:7, 10; 29:4) Embora alguns considerem Padã e Arã-Naaraim como idênticas, parece mais provável que Padã era parte de Arã-Naaraim. (Gên 24:10 n; 25:20 n) Pode-se concluir isto do fato de que Arã-Naaraim incluía território montanhoso, algo que não podia dar-se com Padã, se o significado de seu nome é corretamente entendido como "planície", "baixada". — Núm 23:7 n; De 23:4 n.

O patriarca Abraão residiu temporariamente em Harã, que se situava em Padã. (Gên 12:4; 28:7, 10) Mais tarde, seu filho Isaque e, depois, seu neto Jacó tomaram esposas de entre a descendência dos parentes dele ali. (Gên 22:20-23; 25:20; 28:6) O próprio Jacó passou 20 anos em Padã a serviço de seu sogro, Labão. (Gên 31:17, 18, 36, 41) Enquanto ali, ele tornou-se pai de Diná e de 11 filhos varões. (Gên 29:20–30:24) Seu 12.º filho, Benjamim, nasceu em Canaã. — Gên 35:16-18, 22-26; 46:15; 48:7.

PADOM [duma raiz que significa "redimir"]. Cabeça paterna duma família de netineus. "Os filhos de Padom" retornaram com Zorobabel do exílio babilônico. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 44; Ne 7:46, 47.

PÃES DA APRESENTAÇÃO. Veja PÃES DA PROPOSIÇÃO.

PÃES DA PROPOSIÇÃO. Doze pães redondos que eram colocados sobre uma mesa existente no compartimento Santo do tabernáculo ou do templo e que eram substituídos por outros, frescos, todo sábado. (Êx 35:13; 39:36; 1Rs 7:48; 2Cr 13:11; Ne 10:32, 33) A designação literal hebraica para o pão da proposição é "pão da face". A palavra para "face" às vezes indica "presença" (2Rs 13:23), e, assim, os pães da proposição ficavam em frente à face de Jeová, como uma oferta diante dele constantemente. (Êx 25:30, n) O pão da proposição também é mencionado como "pão de pilha" (2Cr 2:4), "pães da apresentação" (Mr 2:26) e, simplesmente, os "pães" (He 9:2).

Os coatitas eram responsáveis de assar os pães da proposição "de sábado em sábado", bem como de transportá-los quando o tabernáculo mudava. (Núm 4:7; 1Cr 9:32) Cada um dos 12 pães de forma anular era feito de dois gômores (0,2 dum efa; igual a 4,4 l) de flor de farinha, e segundo Josefo não se usava fermento. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], III, 142 [vi, 6]) No sábado, os pães velhos eram removidos da mesa dos pães da proposição no lado N do Santo (Êx 26:35) e substituídos por 12 novos. Os pães eram dispostos em duas pilhas que consistiam de seis pães ou camadas cada uma. Colocava-se olíbano puro em cada pilha. Segundo a tradição judaica, o olíbano era colocado em vasos de ouro e não diretamente sobre os pães. Quando os pães da proposição eram removidos, no sábado, diz-se que o olíbano era queimado sobre o altar. — Le 24:5-8.

Os pães velhos eram algo santíssimo, tendo ficado no Santo, perante Jeová, por uma semana, e deviam ser comidos pelos sacerdotes arônicos num lugar santo, evidentemente em alguma parte do recinto do santuário. (Le 24:9) Só há um caso registrado na história bíblica a respeito do uso dos pães velhos por pessoas não arônicas. Quando Davi fugia de Saul, ele solicitou de Aimeleque, o sumo sacerdote, pão para si e seus homens. Visto que Aimeleque não possuía nenhum "pão comum", ele deu a Davi pães da proposição que haviam sido substituídos. O sumo sacerdote, porém, crendo que Davi estava numa missão para o rei, fez isto só depois de lhe ser assegurado que Davi e seus homens estavam cerimonialmente puros. (1Sa 21:1-6) Jesus Cristo referiu-se a este incidente quando os fariseus objetaram a que seus discípulos arrancassem espigas de cereal no sábado. — Mt 12:3-7; Lu 6:1-4.

PAFOS. Cidade situada na costa O da ilha de Chipre. Ali, depois de passar pela ilha trabalhando com Barnabé e João Marcos, Paulo encontrou o feiticeiro Barjesus (Elimas), que se opôs à pregação deles a Sérgio Paulo, o procônsul. Por causa disto, Barjesus foi temporariamente cegado por Paulo, de forma miraculosa. Ao testemunhar este ato, Sérgio Paulo se converteu ao cristianismo. — At 13:6-13.

Duas cidades cipriotas receberam o nome de Pafos: "Pafos Antigo" e "Pafos Novo". Pafos Novo, a cidade mencionada no relato de Atos, era a capital da província senatorial de Chipre quando Paulo visitou esta ilha, em sua primeira viagem missionária. Acredita-se que esta cidade esteja representada nas ruínas do antigo porto marítimo de Pafos, a cerca de 15 km ao NO da "Antiga Pafos" (Kouklia). O ancoradouro natural ali, que servia de base naval nos tempos gregos e romanos, foi sem dúvida o ponto a partir do qual Paulo e seus companheiros navegaram na direção NNO rumo a Perge, na Ásia Menor. Ainda existem quebra-mares do antigo ancoradouro de Pafos, bem como ruínas de vários prédios públicos e particulares e de um muro da cidade.

Barnabé e Marcos sem dúvida visitaram novamente o local por volta de 49 EC. — At 15:36-39.

PAGA. Veja SALÁRIO, REMUNERAÇÃO.

PAGIEL [Encontro com Deus]. Maioral da tribo de Aser no ermo; filho de Ocrã. (Núm 1:13, 16) Ajudou Moisés a fazer o primeiro censo de Israel, apresentou sua oferta na inauguração do altar do tabernáculo e assumiu o comando militar de sua tribo. — Núm 1:4, 5, 13, 17-19; 2:27, 28; 7:11, 72-77; 10:26.

PAI. A palavra hebraica 'av, traduzida "pai", é um vocábulo onomatopeico (imitativo), derivado dos sons iniciais e mais simples balbuciados pelos lábios dos bebês. Tanto o hebraico 'av como o grego pa·tér são usados em vários sentidos: como gerador, ou progenitor, de um indivíduo (Pr 23:22; Za 13:3; Lu 1:67), como o cabeça duma casa ou família ancestral (Gên 24:40; Êx 6:14), um ancestral (Gên 28:13; Jo 8:53), o fundador duma nação (Mt 3:9), o fundador duma classe ou duma profissão (Gên 4:20, 21), um protetor (Jó 29:16; Sal 68:5), a fonte de alguma coisa (Jó 38:28), e como um termo de respeito (2Rs 5:13; At 7:2).

Jeová Deus, como Criador, é chamado de Pai. (Is 64:8; compare isso com At 17:28, 29.) Ele é também o Pai dos cristãos gerados pelo espírito, o termo aramaico 'Ab·bá' sendo usado como expressão de respeito e de íntima relação filial. (Ro 8:15; veja ABA.) Todos os que expressam fé, com esperança de vida eterna, podem dirigir-se a Deus como Pai. (Mt 6:9) Jesus Cristo, o Messias, por ser o Agente Principal da vida, da parte de Deus, foi profeticamente chamado de Pai Eterno. (Is 9:6) Além disso, qualquer pessoa que tenha imitadores e seguidores, ou aqueles que demonstrem suas qualidades, é considerada como um pai para eles. (Mt 5:44, 45; Ro 4:11, 12) Neste sentido, o Diabo é mencionado como pai. — Jo 8:44; compare isso com Gên 3:15.

Aplicar o termo "pai" a homens, como título formalístico ou religioso, foi proibido por Jesus. (Mt 23:9) Por ter levado as boas novas a certos cristãos e os ter nutrido em sentido espiritual, Paulo era como um pai para eles, mas em nenhum texto o termo "pai" é aplicado a ele como título religioso. (1Co 4:14, 15) Paulo assemelhou-se tanto a um pai como a uma mãe em seu relacionamento com os cristãos tessalonicenses. (1Te 2:7, 11) Embora em Lucas 16:24, 30 se faça referência ao "pai Abraão", isto se dá basicamente no sentido da linhagem carnal.

Autoridade e Responsabilidades do Pai. Conforme descrito na Bíblia, o pai era o cabeça da casa, sendo o guardião, o protetor, aquele que tomava as decisões finais, e o juiz do grupo familiar. (1Co 11:3; Gên 31:32) Entre os patriarcas e em Israel, antes da escolha do sacerdócio levítico, o pai assumia a liderança em representar a família na adoração, qual sacerdote. (Gên 12:8; Jó 1:5; Êx 19:22) O pai tinha autoridade sobre sua casa até a morte. Caso um filho se casasse e constituísse uma família independente, ele então se tornava o cabeça desta, embora ainda se mostrasse o devido respeito pelo pai. Quando uma filha se casava, ela ficava sob a chefia do marido. (Núm 30:3-8) Nos tempos bíblicos, o pai geralmente fazia os arranjos para o casamento dos filhos. Se ele viesse a ficar em terríveis apertos financeiros, podia vender sua filha como escrava, com certas restrições para a proteção dela. — Êx 21:7.

Preocupação Paternal Pelos Membros da Família. Como representante de Deus, o pai é responsável de cuidar que os princípios de Deus sejam ensinados a sua família. (Gên 18:19; Ef 6:4; De 6:6, 7) Seus deveres de ensinar e de disciplinar também incluem instruções e ordens pessoais, que a mãe ajuda a cumprir. (Pr 1:8; 6:20) O pai temente a Deus tem grande amor pelos filhos e os exorta e consola com grande ternura. (1Te 2:11; Os 11:3) Para que os filhos andem no caminho certo, ele os disciplina, corrige e repreende. (He 12:9; Pr 3:12) Deriva prazer de seus filhos, e sente especial regozijo quando eles demonstram sabedoria. (Pr 10:1) Por outro lado, fica profundamente pesaroso e envergonhado quando os filhos adotam um proceder de estupidez. (Pr 17:21, 25) Ele deve ser compassivo e misericordioso. (Mal 3:17; Sal 103:13) Deve mostrar consideração pelas necessidades e pedidos deles. (Mt 7:9-11) As muitas descrições do amor e do cuidado de Deus por seu povo fornecem um padrão para os pais humanos.

Uso Genealógico do Nome do Pai. A linhagem de um homem era costumeiramente traçada através do pai, não da mãe. Assim, embora pareça haver razões sólidas para se crer que Lucas apresenta a genealogia de Jesus através de sua mãe (uma exceção à regra geral), Lucas não a alista. Pelo visto, ele alista o marido dela, José, como filho de Eli, evidentemente o pai de Maria. Isto não era de modo algum impróprio, visto que José era genro de Eli. — Veja GENEALOGIA DE JESUS CRISTO.

Na ausência de nomes de família (sobrenomes), o homem era habitualmente distinguido por ser mencionado como filho de "Fulano". Por exemplo, Isaque foi chamado de "filho de Abraão". (Gên 25:19) Muitos nomes hebraicos incluíam o vocábulo hebraico ben ou o aramaico bar, "filho", seguido do nome do pai como sobrenome, tal como "Ben-Hur" (1Rs 4:8, BMD; "o filho de Hur", NM) e "Simão Barjonas", ou "Simão, filho de Jonas". — Mt 16:17, Al, NM.

PAINÇO [hebr.: dó·hhan]. Segundo geralmente se entende, a palavra hebraica dó·hhan refere-se ao painço comum, ou milho miúdo (Panicum miliaceum), se não incluir também outras gramíneas aparentadas ou similares, tais como o sorgo. O painço comum se distingue por suas folhas amplas e por suas aristadas e ramosas panículas, ou cachos de sementes. As hastes dessa planta são comumente utilizadas como forragem para o gado, e suas minúsculas sementes, das quais há muitas em cada panícula, ainda são usadas no Oriente Médio para a fabricação de pão, geralmente junto com outros cereais. (Ez 4:9) Em Isaías 28:25, o termo hebraico soh·ráh talvez também se refira ao painço.

PALÁCIO. A residência real dum soberano; às vezes, a morada espaçosa e majestosa dum príncipe ou dum homem poderoso e rico. (Da 4:4; Lu 11:21; veja GOVERNADOR, PALÁCIO DO.) Uma palavra hebraica para palácio, heh·khál, era muitas vezes aplicada ao templo como morada do Soberano Senhor Jeová. (1Sa 1:9; 1Rs 6:3; Esd 5:14; Da 5:3) Os palácios antigos eram, com frequência, fortalezas semelhantes a castelos com muros ameados e portões maciços. (Ne 1:1; Est 1:2) Os costumeiramente espaçosos pátios e luxuosos jardins particulares davam esplendor e beleza régios aos terrenos palacianos. — Est 1:5.

A Bíblia menciona os palácios da Assíria (Na 1:1; 2:6), de Babilônia (2Rs 20:18; 2Cr 36:7; Is 39:7; Da 1:4; 5:5), e da Pérsia (Esd 4:14; Est 7:7, 8). Os de Babilônia são descritos como "palácios de deleite". (Is 13:22) Um dos palácios mais grandiosos do mundo antigo foi construído por Salomão, conforme indicado pela impressão que causou na rainha de Sabá. — 1Rs 10:4, 5.

O palácio de Salomão, erguido no monte Moriá, ao sul do templo, era apenas uma das várias estruturas governamentais existentes nessa área, as quais, ao todo, levaram uns 13 anos para serem construídas. Incluída neste complexo régio de prédios achava-se a Casa da Floresta do Líbano, o Pórtico das Colunas e o Pórtico do Trono. Havia também uma casa especial para a filha de Faraó, uma das muitas esposas de Salomão, além do palácio do rei. — 1Rs 7:1-8.

A descrição que temos do palácio de Salomão é muito sucinta, em comparação com os pormenores do templo palacial. Mas o tamanho das pedras de alicerce indica que o palácio deve ter sido uma estrutura impressionante. O comprimento dessas pedras era de oito côvados (3,60 m) e de dez côvados (4,50 m), e sua largura e sua espessura devem ter sido proporcionais ao seu comprimento, pesando muitas toneladas. As paredes consistiam em custosas pedras, cuidadosamente lavradas segundo especificações precisas, tanto nas superfícies internas como nas externas. — 1Rs 7:9-11; compare isso com Sal 144:12.

O salmista, no Salmo 45, talvez tivesse presente os adornos e a mobília do palácio de Salomão quando fez referência ao "grandioso palácio de marfim". O apóstolo Paulo aplica as palavras deste salmo a Jesus Cristo, o Rei celestial. — Sal 45:8, 15; compare Sal 45:6, 7 com He 1:8, 9; Lu 4:18, 21.

PALÁCIO DO GOVERNADOR. Veja GOVERNADOR, PALÁCIO DO.

PALAL [forma abreviada de Pelalias, que significa "Jah Arbitra"]. Reparador dum setor do muro de Jerusalém, nos dias de Neemias; filho de Uzai. — Ne 3:25.

PALATO. Veja BOCA.

PALAVRA, A. Nas Escrituras, o termo "palavra" mui frequentemente traduz as palavras hebraica e grega, da·vár e ló·gos. Tais palavras, na maioria dos casos, referem-se a um pensamento, declaração ou expressão completos, em vez de simplesmente a um termo ou unidade de linguagem. (Em grego, uma 'única palavra' é expressa por rhé·ma [Mt 27:14], embora ela possa significar, também, uma declaração ou assunto falado.) Qualquer mensagem da parte do Criador, tal como a proferida por um profeta, é "a palavra de Deus". Em alguns lugares, Ló·gos (que significa "Palavra") é um título dado a Jesus Cristo.

A Palavra de Deus. "A palavra de Jeová" é uma expressão que, com ligeiras variações, ocorre centenas de vezes nas Escrituras. Pela "palavra de Jeová", os céus foram criados. Deus proferiu a palavra e isso foi realizado. "Deus passou a dizer: 'Venha a haver luz.' Então veio a haver luz." (Sal 33:6; Gên 1:3) Não se deve entender disso que o próprio Jeová não trabalhe. (Jo 5:17) Mas ele deveras possui miríades de anjos que acatam sua palavra e cumprem sua vontade. — Sal 103:20.

A criação, animada e inanimada, está sujeita à palavra de Deus e pode ser usada por ele para realizar seus propósitos. (Sal 103:20; 148:8) Sua palavra é fidedigna; o que Deus promete, ele também se lembra de cumprir. (De 9:5; Sal 105:42-45) Como ele próprio disse, sua palavra "durará por tempo indefinido"; jamais voltará sem realizar seu propósito. — Is 40:8; 55:10, 11; 1Pe 1:25.

Jeová é um Deus comunicativo, no sentido de que revela a suas criaturas, numa variedade de maneiras, qual é Sua vontade e propósitos. As palavras de Deus foram proferidas, sem dúvida por meio dum anjo, a homens tais como Adão, Noé e Abraão. (Gên 3:9-19; 6:13; 12:1) Às vezes Deus usava homens santos, como Moisés e Arão, para tornar conhecidos os Seus propósitos. (Êx 5:1) "Cada palavra" que Moisés ordenou a Israel era, efetivamente, a palavra de Deus para eles. (De 12:32) Deus também falou pela boca de profetas tais como Eliseu e Jeremias e de profetisas tais como Débora. — 2Rs 7:1; Je 2:1, 2; Jz 4:4-7.

Muitos dos mandamentos divinos foram assentados por escrito do tempo de Moisés em diante. O Decálogo, comumente chamado de Dez Mandamentos, e conhecido nas Escrituras Hebraicas como "as Dez Palavras", foi transmitido primeiro de forma oral e, mais tarde, foi 'escrito pelo dedo de Deus' em tábuas de pedra. (Êx 31:18; 34:28; De 4:13) Esses mandamentos foram chamados de "Palavras", em Deuteronômio 5:22. — Veja DEZ PALAVRAS.

Josué, sob inspiração divina, escreveu adicionais "palavras no livro da lei de Deus", e isto se deu com outros fiéis escritores da Bíblia. (Jos 24:26; Je 36:32) Com o tempo, todos esses escritos foram reunidos e passaram a formar as chamadas Escrituras Sagradas ou Bíblia Sagrada. "Toda a Escritura . . . inspirada por Deus" incluiria, atualmente, todos os livros canônicos da Bíblia. (2Ti 3:16; 2Pe 1:20, 21) Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, a palavra inspirada de Deus é com frequência mencionada simplesmente como "a palavra". — Tg 1:22; 1Pe 2:2.

Há muitos sinônimos para a palavra de Deus. Por exemplo, no Salmo 119, onde referências à(s) "palavra(s)" de Jeová ocorrem mais de 20 vezes, acham-se sinônimos em paralelismos poéticos — termos tais como lei, advertências, ordens, regulamentos, mandamentos, decisões judiciais, estatutos e declarações de Jeová. Isto mostra também que o termo "palavra" significa uma ideia ou mensagem completa.

A palavra de Deus é também descrita de várias outras maneiras que lhe dão amplitude e significado. Ela é "a 'palavra' [ou "declaração" (rhé·ma)] da fé" (Ro 10:8, Int), "a palavra [ou mensagem (forma de ló·gos)] da justiça" (He 5:13) e a "palavra da reconciliação" (2Co 5:19). A palavra ou mensagem de Deus é como "semente", que, se plantada em solo bom, produz muitos frutos (Lu 8:11-15); diz-se também que Suas declarações 'correm com velocidade'. — Sal 147:15.

Pregadores e Instrutores da Palavra. O maior expoente e apoiador da inspirada palavra da verdade de Jeová foi o Senhor Jesus Cristo. Ele assombrou as pessoas com seus métodos de ensino (Mt 7:28, 29; Jo 7:46), todavia, não assumiu nenhum crédito para si, dizendo: "A palavra que estais ouvindo não é minha, mas pertence ao Pai que me enviou." (Jo 14:24; 17:14; Lu 5:1) Os fiéis discípulos de Cristo foram aqueles que permaneceram em sua palavra, e isto, por sua vez, os libertou da ignorância, da superstição e do temor, bem como da escravidão ao pecado e à morte. (Jo 8:31, 32) Muitas vezes foi necessário que Jesus discordasse dos fariseus, cujas tradições e ensinos tornavam vã a "palavra [ou declaração] de Deus". — Mt 15:6; Mr 7:13.

A questão não é apenas ouvir a palavra de Deus ser pregada. Em vez disso, é também essencial agir de acordo com essa mensagem e mostrar obediência a ela. (Lu 8:21; 11:28; Tg 1:22, 23) Depois de serem bem treinados para o ministério, os apóstolos e os discípulos, por sua vez, obedeceram à palavra e empreenderam, eles próprios, a pregação e o ensino. (At 4:31; 8:4, 14; 13:7, 44; 15:36; 18:11; 19:10) Em resultado disso, "a palavra de Deus crescia e o número dos discípulos multiplicava-se". — At 6:7; 11:1; 12:24; 13:5, 49; 19:20.

Os apóstolos e seus associados não eram vendedores ambulantes das Escrituras, como os falsos pastores. O que pregavam era a franca e inadulterada mensagem de Deus. (2Co 2:17; 4:2) O apóstolo Paulo disse a Timóteo: "Faze o máximo para te apresentar a Deus aprovado, obreiro que não tem nada de que se envergonhar, manejando corretamente a palavra da verdade." Ademais, ordenou-se a Timóteo: "Prega a palavra, ocupa-te nisso urgentemente, em época favorável, em época dificultosa." (2Ti 2:15; 4:2) Paulo também aconselhou as esposas cristãs a zelar da conduta, "para que não se [falasse] da palavra de Deus de modo ultrajante". — Tit 2:5.

Desde quando o Diabo contradisse o que Deus dissera no jardim do Éden, tem havido muitos oponentes satânicos à palavra de Deus. Muitos que defenderam a palavra de Deus perderam a vida por isso, como testificam tanto a profecia bíblica como a história. (Re 6:9) É também um fato comprovado pela história que a perseguição tem fracassado em impedir a proclamação da palavra de Deus. — Fil 1:12-14, 18; 2Ti 2:9.

O Poder da Palavra e do Espírito de Deus. A palavra de Deus exerce tremendo poder sobre os que a ouvem. Ela significa vida. Deus demonstrou a Israel, no ermo, que "o homem não vive somente de pão, mas que o homem vive de toda expressão da boca de Jeová". (De 8:3; Mt 4:4) Ela é a "palavra da vida". (Fil 2:16) Jesus falou as palavras de Deus, e disse: "As declarações [rhé·ma·ta] que eu vos tenho feito são espírito e são vida." — Jo 6:63.

O apóstolo Paulo escreveu: "A palavra [ou mensagem (ló·gos)] de Deus é viva e exerce poder, e é mais afiada do que qualquer espada de dois gumes, e penetra até a divisão da alma e do espírito, e das juntas e da sua medula, e é capaz de discernir os pensamentos e as intenções do coração." (He 4:12) Ela atinge o coração e revela se a pessoa realmente vive de acordo com princípios corretos. — 1Co 14:23-25.

A palavra de Deus é a verdade e pode santificar a pessoa para ser usada por Deus. (Jo 17:17) Pode tornar a pessoa sábia e feliz; pode realizar qualquer que seja a obra que Deus tenha em reserva para tal palavra. (Sal 19:7-9; Is 55:10, 11) Pode equipar a pessoa completamente para toda boa obra e habilitá-la a vencer o iníquo. — 2Ti 3:16, 17; compare isso com 1Jo 2:14.

Sobre a pregação de Jesus se diz: "Deus o ungiu com espírito santo e poder, e ele percorria o país, fazendo o bem e sarando a todos os oprimidos pelo Diabo; porque Deus estava com ele." (At 10:38) O apóstolo Paulo realizou conversões, até mesmo de pagãos, 'não em palavras persuasivas de sabedoria [de homens], mas numa demonstração de espírito e de poder'. (1Co 2:4) As palavras que ele proferiu pelo espírito santo de Deus, baseadas nas Escrituras, a Palavra de Deus, operaram de forma poderosa para efetuar as conversões. Ele disse à congregação em Tessalônica: "As boas novas que pregamos não se apresentaram entre vós apenas em palavra, mas também com poder e com espírito santo, e com forte certeza." — 1Te 1:5.

João, o Batizador, veio "com o espírito e o poder de Elias". Ele tinha o "espírito" de Elias, sua energia e força. O espírito de Jeová também dirigiu João, de modo que este falava as palavras de Deus, palavras que exerciam forte poder; ele conseguiu com muito êxito "retornar os corações dos pais aos filhos e os desobedientes à sabedoria prática dos justos, a fim de aprontar para Jeová um povo preparado". — Lu 1:17.

Portanto, a mensagem das boas novas da Palavra de Deus, a Bíblia, não deve ser subestimada. Tais palavras são mais poderosas do que quaisquer palavras que os homens possam idear ou falar. Os antigos bereanos foram elogiados por 'examinarem cuidadosamente as Escrituras' para ver se o que o apóstolo ensinava era correto. (At 17:11) Os ministros de Deus, que falam a poderosa Palavra de Deus, são energizados e apoiados por "poder de espírito santo". — Ro 15:13, 19.

"A Palavra" Como Título. Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, "a Palavra" (gr.: ho Ló·gos) também aparece como título. (Jo 1:1, 14; Re 19:13) O apóstolo João identificou aquele a quem pertence tal título, a saber, Jesus, sendo este chamado assim, não só durante seu ministério na Terra como homem perfeito, mas também durante sua existência espiritual, pré-humana, bem como após ter sido exaltado no céu.

"A Palavra era um Deus." A respeito da existência pré-humana do Filho, João diz: "No princípio era a Palavra, e a Palavra estava com o Deus, e a Palavra era um deus." (Jo 1:1, NM) A versão Almeida, da Bíblia, e o Novo Testamento, de Huberto Rohden, rezam: "No princípio era o Verbo, e o Verbo estava com Deus, e o Verbo era Deus." Isto faria parecer que a Palavra (ou Verbo) era idêntica ao Deus Todo-Poderoso, ao passo que a versão anterior, na Tradução do Novo Mundo, indica que a Palavra não é o Deus, o Deus Todo-Poderoso, mas que é um "poderoso", um deus. (Até mesmo os juízes do antigo Israel, que exerciam grande poder na nação, eram chamados de "deuses". [Sal 82:6; Jo 10:34, 35]) Na verdade, no texto grego, o artigo definido, ho, "o", aparece antes do primeiro "Deus", mas não existe nenhum artigo antes do segundo.

Outras traduções ajudam-nos a chegar ao conceito correto. A leitura interlinear, palavra por palavra, da tradução em grego na Emphatic Diaglott reza: "No princípio era a Palavra, e a Palavra estava com o Deus, e um deus era a Palavra." O texto acompanhante da Diaglott usa letra inicial maiúscula e versaletes (maiúsculas menores) para o Deus, e letra inicial maiúscula e demais letras minúsculas para a segunda ocorrência de "deus" na sentença: "No Princípio era o LOGOS, e o LOGOS estava com DEUS, e o LOGOS era Deus."

Estas maneiras de traduzir apoiam o fato de que Jesus, sendo o Filho de Deus e aquele que foi usado por Deus na criação de todas as outras coisas (Col 1:15-20), é deveras um "deus", um poderoso, e tem a qualidade de poder, mas não é o Deus Todo-Poderoso. Outras traduções refletem este conceito. The New English Bible (A Nova Bíblia Inglesa) diz: "E o que Deus era, a Palavra era." O vocábulo grego traduzido "Palavra" é Ló·gos; e, assim, a tradução de Moffatt reza: "O Logos era divino." A versão American Translation (Tradução Americana) reza: "A Palavra era divina." Eis outras versões, feitas por tradutores alemães. Böhmer: "Ela estava vinculada de perto com Deus, sim, ela mesma era de natureza divina." Stage: "A própria Palavra era de natureza divina." Menge: "E Deus (= de natureza divina) era a Palavra." E Thimme: "E Deus de certa sorte era a Palavra." Todas estas traduções sublinham a qualidade da Palavra, não a sua identidade com o Pai, o Deus Todo-Poderoso. Sendo o Filho de Jeová Deus, ele teria a qualidade divina, pois divino quer dizer "semelhante a deus". — Col 2:9; compare isso com 2Pe 1:4, onde se promete a "natureza divina" aos co-herdeiros de Cristo.

The Four Gospels—A New Translation (Os Quatro Evangelhos — Uma Nova Tradução), do professor Charles Cutler Torrey (2.ª ed., 1947), diz: "No princípio era a Palavra, e a Palavra estava com Deus, e a Palavra era deus. Quando ele estava no princípio com Deus, todas as coisas foram criadas por meio dele; sem ele não veio a existir nenhuma coisa criada." (Jo 1:1-3) Observe que aquilo que se diz que a Palavra é, a saber, "deus", é grafado com inicial minúscula.

Esta Palavra, ou Ló·gos, foi a única criação direta de Deus, o Filho unigênito de Deus, e, evidentemente, o íntimo associado de Deus a quem Deus falava ao dizer: "Façamos o homem à nossa imagem, segundo a nossa semelhança." (Gên 1:26) Assim, João continuou, dizendo: "Este estava no princípio com o Deus. Todas as coisas vieram à existência por intermédio dele, e à parte dele nem mesmo uma só coisa veio à existência." — Jo 1:2, 3.

Outros textos mostram claramente que a Palavra foi o agente de Deus, através do qual todas as outras coisas vieram à existência. Há "um só Deus, o Pai, de quem procedem todas as coisas, . . . e há um só Senhor, Jesus Cristo, por intermédio de quem são todas as coisas". (1Co 8:6) A Palavra, o Filho de Deus, foi "o princípio da criação de Deus", descrito também como "o primogênito de toda a criação; porque mediante ele foram criadas todas as outras coisas nos céus e na terra". — Re 3:14; Col 1:15, 16.

Ministério terrestre e glorificação celestial. No devido tempo, ocorreu uma mudança. João explica: "De modo que a Palavra se tornou carne e residiu entre nós [na pessoa do Senhor Jesus Cristo], e observamos a sua glória, uma glória tal como a de um filho unigênito dum pai." (Jo 1:14) Tornando-se carne, a Palavra tornou-se visível, audível e palpável a testemunhas oculares na Terra. Desta forma, os homens de carne podiam ter contato e associação diretos com "a palavra da vida", que, diz João, "era desde o princípio, o que temos ouvido, o que temos visto com os nossos olhos, o que temos observado atentamente e as nossas mãos têm apalpado". — 1Jo 1:1-3.

O glorificado Senhor Jesus Cristo continua a levar o título "a Palavra", conforme observado em Revelação (Apocalipse) 19:11-16. Ali, numa visão do céu, João diz que viu um cavalo branco cujo cavaleiro se chamava "Fiel e Verdadeiro"; "A Palavra de Deus"; e "sobre sua roupa exterior, sim, sobre a sua coxa, ele tem um nome escrito: Rei dos reis e Senhor dos senhores".

Por que o Filho de Deus é chamado de "a Palavra". Títulos não raro descrevem a função exercida ou o dever realizado por seus portadores. Assim acontecia com o título Kal-Hatzé, que significa "a voz ou a palavra do rei" e que era dado a um oficial abissínio. Com base em suas viagens de 1768 a 1773, James Bruce descreve os deveres do Kal-Hatzé como segue: Ele ficava em pé junto a uma janela coberta por uma cortina, através da qual, sem ser visto do lado de fora, o rei falava a este oficial. Ele então transmitia a mensagem às pessoas ou à parte interessada. Assim, o Kal-Hatzé atuava como a palavra ou voz do rei abissínio. — Travels to Discover the Source of the Nile (Viagens Para Descobrir a Fonte do Nilo), Londres, 1790, Vol. III, p. 265; Vol. IV, p. 76.

Lembre-se também de que Deus fez de Arão a palavra ou "boca" de Moisés, dizendo: "Ele tem de falar por ti ao povo; e tem de dar-se que ele te servirá de boca e tu lhe servirás de Deus." — Êx 4:16.

De modo similar, o Filho primogênito de Deus sem dúvida atuava como a Boca, ou Porta-voz, de seu Pai, o grande Rei da Eternidade. Ele era a Palavra de comunicação de Deus para transmitir informações e instruções aos outros filhos espirituais e humanos do Criador. É razoável pensar que, antes da vinda de Jesus à Terra, em muitas das ocasiões em que Deus se comunicou com humanos, Ele usou a Palavra como seu porta-voz angélico. (Gên 16:7-11; 22:11; 31:11; Êx 3:2-5; Jz 2:1-4; 6:11, 12; 13:3) Visto que o anjo que guiava os israelitas pelo ermo tinha o 'nome de Jeová dentro dele', ele talvez fosse o Filho de Deus, a Palavra. — Êx 23:20-23; veja JESUS CRISTO (Existência Pré-Humana).

Mostrando que continuava a servir como o Porta-voz, ou Palavra, do Pai durante seu ministério terrestre, Jesus disse a seus ouvintes: "Não falei de meu próprio impulso, mas o próprio Pai que me enviou tem-me dado um mandamento quanto a que dizer e que falar. . . . Portanto, as coisas que eu falo, assim como o Pai mas disse, assim as falo." — Jo 12:49, 50; 14:10; 7:16, 17.

PALESTINA. Região situada na extremidade oriental do Mediterrâneo, outrora ocupada pela antiga nação de Israel. Seu nome deriva-se do latim Palaestina e do grego Pa·lai·stí·ne. Esta última palavra, por sua vez, deriva-se do hebraico Pelé·sheth. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, Pelé·sheth (traduzida "Filístia") só ocorre com referência ao limitado território costeiro ocupado pelos filisteus. (Êx 15:14; Sal 60:8; 83:7; 87:4; 108:9; Is 14:29, 31; Jl 3:4) Heródoto, porém, no 5.º século AEC, e, mais tarde, outros escritores seculares (Filo, Ovídio, Plínio, Josefo, Jerônimo) usaram os termos grego e latino para designar todo o território anteriormente conhecido como a "terra de Canaã" ou a "terra de Israel". (Núm 34:2; 1Sa 13:19) Por Jeová ter prometido essa terra a Abraão e seus descendentes (Gên 15:18; De 9:27, 28), ela era também chamada apropriadamente de Terra Prometida ou Terra da Promessa. (He 11:9) Desde a Idade Média, ela não raro tem sido chamada de Terra Santa.

Em certo sentido, a Palestina é o elo de ligação entre os continentes da Europa, da Ásia e da África. Isto a situava no centro de um círculo em torno do qual ficavam as antigas potências mundiais: Egito, Assíria, Babilônia, Pérsia, Grécia e Roma. (Ez 5:5) Cercada por grandes desertos ao L e ao S, e pelo Grande Mar, ou Mediterrâneo, ao O, a Palestina servia como ponte terrestre entre os rios Nilo e Eufrates, ponte esta pela qual passavam as caravanas das rotas do comércio mundial. Situada no que se tem chamado de Crescente Fértil, a própria Palestina era de extraordinário interesse, sendo um lugar deleitoso, dotado de seus próprios recursos naturais e de características especiais.

O termo "Palestina", conforme usado atualmente, refere-se a uma região indefinida. Não implica fronteiras precisas. Ao S, poder-se-ia traçar uma linha imaginária da extremidade sul do Mar Morto até o canto SE do Mediterrâneo, e, ao N, outra linha, das encostas sulinas do monte Hermom até um ponto próximo da cidade de Tiro. Esta área, de N a S, “desde Dã até Berseba” (1Sa 3:20; 2Sa 3:10), tinha cerca de 240 km de extensão. Do mar Mediterrâneo, situado ao O, a Palestina se estendia até o deserto da Arábia, ao L. Ao todo, a área totalizava aproximadamente 25.500 km², sendo menor que a Bélgica, mas um pouco maior que o estado de Sergipe, no Brasil.

Aspectos Geográficos. (MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 333) Para se ter uma visão abrangente da geografia da Palestina, seu território pode ser convenientemente dividido em quatro regiões um tanto paralelas, de N a S.

Primeiro, havia uma faixa de planície fértil ao longo da costa, costa que, na maior parte, tinha pouquíssimo a oferecer em termos de baías naturais. O promontório da imponente cordilheira do monte Carmelo, que quase se precipitava mar adentro, dividia esta planície costeira em duas partes. A parte norte era conhecida como a planície de Aser ou Fenícia. A parte sul ladeava dunas de areia aninhadas junto ao mar e consistia na planície de Sarom e na planície da Filístia, esta última alargando-se ao S.

A segunda região geográfica, perto das planícies marítimas, abrigava as principais cadeias de montanhas, que iam para o N e para o S como a espinha dorsal do país. Ao N havia as montanhas de Naftali, também chamadas de montes da Galileia. Eram uma extensão das cordilheiras do Líbano, famosas por suas florestas de cedros e pelo proeminente monte Hermom, que se elevava a 2.814 m. As montanhas setentrionais da Palestina variavam em altitude, indo de 1.208 m, em Har Meron, na Galileia Superior, a 562 m, no monte Tabor, que se tornou famoso nos dias de Baraque. (Jz 4:12) Abaixo do monte Tabor havia uma planície central comparativamente ampla que cortava transversalmente o país de O para L, separando as montanhas setentrionais das situadas ao S. Este vale, onde se travaram muitas batalhas decisivas, consistia em duas partes, a oriental “baixada de Jezreel” e a parte ocidental, o “vale plano de Megido”. — Jos 17:16; 2Cr 35:22.

Ao O e ao N do vale de Megido, que era drenado pelo rio Quisom, ficava a cordilheira do Carmelo, que ia na direção sudeste, desde a costa, e se juntava aos montes de Efraim, ou Samaria, onde se encontravam os históricos picos de Gerizim e de Ebal, este último tendo mais de 900 m de altitude. (De 11:29) Continuando para o S, esta cordilheira era conhecida como a “região montanhosa de Judá”, pois, embora as elevações variassem de 600 a mais de 1.000 m, a área consistia em grande parte em platôs, colinas arredondadas e encostas suaves. (2Cr 27:4; Lu 1:39) Era nesta região que se situavam cidades tais como Jerusalém, Belém e Hébron.

Gradualmente, os montes de Judá, ao S, fundiam-se com o Negebe, nome que se pensa provir duma raiz que significa “ser ressequido”, uma região que se estendia até o vale da torrente do Egito e constituía a parte sul da Palestina. Na borda norte do Negebe havia a cidade de Berseba, parecida a um oásis; na extremidade sul, Cades-Barneia. — Gên 12:9; 20:1; 22:19.

Aproximando-se dos montes de Judá pelo O, chega-se à região colinosa conhecida como Sefelá, com seus diversos vales pequenos no sentido O-L que vão das planícies costeiras aos altiplanos. (Jos 9:1) Na maior parte, tais colinas eram apropriadas para a pastagem de rebanhos e de manadas, as fontes dos vales suprindo-lhes a água necessária.

O terceiro aspecto da geografia da Palestina era o grande Vale de Abatimento Tectônico, às vezes chamado de Arabá (De 11:30), que divide o país longitudinalmente de alto a baixo. Esta fenda profunda começava na Síria, ao N, e se estendia na direção sul por todo o caminho até o golfo de ʽAqaba, no Mar Vermelho. O que tornava ainda mais espetacular esta depressão central da terra eram as cadeias de montanhas e penhascos paralelos que a ladeavam.

Ao se seguir de N a S esta depressão de terra semelhante a uma trincheira, desce-se rapidamente dos contrafortes do monte Hermom à bacia Hulé, onde as cabeceiras do Jordão certa vez formavam um pequeno lago. Dali, o Jordão, em cerca de 16 km, rapidamente cai mais de 270 m até o mar da Galileia, que fica a aproximadamente 210 m abaixo do nível do mar. Da Galileia ao Mar Morto, este grande abatimento tectônico da crosta terrestre é o vale do Jordão propriamente dito, e pelos árabes ele é chamado de Ghor, que significa "depressão". Trata-se duma "garganta" que chega a atingir 19 km de largura em certos lugares. O Jordão propriamente dito fica a cerca de 45 m abaixo do piso deste vale, e, à medida que lentamente serpenteia até o Mar Morto, ele continua a cair cerca de outros 180 m. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 334) Isto situa a superfície do Mar Morto a aproximadamente 400 m abaixo do nível do Mediterrâneo — o ponto mais baixo da superfície da terra.

A extensão do Vale de Abatimento Tectônico ao sul do Mar Morto por outros 160 km até o golfo de ʽAqaba era mais comumente conhecida como o Arabá propriamente dito. (De 2:8) A meio caminho, ele atingia seu ponto máximo, cerca de 200 m acima do nível do mar.

A quarta região geográfica da Palestina consistia em colinas e planaltos ao L do grande abatimento tectônico jordaniano. (De 2:36, 37; 3:8-10) Ao N, esta terra arável estendia-se ao L do mar da Galileia por talvez 100 km, enquanto que, ao S, sua largura era de apenas cerca de 40 km antes de se tornar um ermo, estepes áridas que, por fim, se perdiam no deserto da Arábia. A parte mais larga e setentrional desta ondulante região oriental, acima de Ramote-Gileade, era chamada de terra de Basã, com altitude média de cerca de 600 m; ao S de Basã, a região de Gileade, semelhante a uma cúpula, atingia a elevação de mais de 1.000 m. Ao S, Gileade se limitava com o chapadão situado ao N do vale da torrente do Árnon, em cuja área ficava localizado o monte Nebo, com mais de 800 m de altura. Esse território, que em certa época era possessão dos amonitas, fazia, por sua vez, fronteira ao S do vale da torrente do Árnon com a terra de Moabe. — Jos 13:24, 25; Jz 11:12-28.

Nomes Geográficos. Os antigos nomes hebraicos de muitas cidades, montes e vales foram perdidos, em parte devido à ocupação da Palestina pelos árabes, durante grande parte do tempo desde 638 EC. Mas, visto que o árabe é a língua viva mais aparentada ao hebraico, é possível, em alguns casos, identificar com considerável exatidão certos antigos lugares e sítios de eventos principais.

Alguns termos geográficos árabes e hebraicos comuns, que são de ajuda a relacionar locais com sítios bíblicos, são fornecidos na tabela que acompanha este artigo.

Condições Climáticas. O clima da Palestina é tão diversificado quanto sua topografia. Em questão de uns 160 km, do Mar Morto ao monte Hermom, os extremos contrastantes de altitude produzem condições climáticas equivalentes às que em outras partes se estendem por milhares de quilômetros de latitude entre os Trópicos e o Ártico. O monte Hermom apresenta-se geralmente recoberto de neve grande parte do ano, ao passo que, ao longo do Mar Morto, o termômetro às vezes registra 50°C. Brisas do mar, procedentes do Mediterrâneo, moderam a temperatura ao longo da cordilheira central. Em resultado disso, raramente a temperatura eleva-se para mais de 32°C em Jerusalém, e raramente cai abaixo de 0°C. A temperatura média em janeiro fica em torno de 10°C. Não é comum nevar nessa região do país. — Veja 2Sa 23:20.

A precipitação pluvial neste país de contrastes também varia grandemente. Ao longo da costa, a precipitação anual é de cerca de 380 mm, mas, nas maiores altitudes do monte Carmelo, na cordilheira central e nos altiplanos ao L do Jordão, o índice pluviométrico é mais que o dobro. Por outro lado, condições desérticas prevalecem no Negebe, no vale do Jordão inferior e na região do Mar Morto, com um índice pluviométrico anual de 50 a 100 mm. A maior parte da chuva cai nos meses de inverno, de dezembro, janeiro e fevereiro; apenas 6 ou 7 por cento nos meses de verão, de junho a outubro. A leve chuva "temporã", ou outonal, em outubro e novembro, permite a aragem do solo (endurecido pelo calor do verão), em preparação para a semeadura dos cereais de inverno. A chuva "serôdia", ou primaveril, chega em março e abril. — De 11:14; Jl 2:23; Za 10:1; Tg 5:7.

Uma das grandes vantagens da Palestina é a abundância de orvalho, especialmente nos meses de estio, no verão, pois, sem o denso orvalho, muitos dos vinhedos e pastagens sofreriam grandemente. (Ag 1:10; Za 8:12) As brisas carregadas de umidade, que sopram do Mediterrâneo e as que vêm do monte Hermom, são responsáveis por grande parte do orvalho na Palestina. (Sal 133:3) Em certas áreas, o orvalho noturno é tão copioso que a vegetação consegue recuperar suficiente umidade para compensar as perdas sofridas durante o calor do dia. (Veja Jó 29:19.) De especial importância é o orvalho no Negebe e nos altiplanos de Gileade, onde a precipitação pluvial é mínima. — Veja ORVALHO.

Plantas e Animais. A tremenda variedade de árvores, arbustos e plantas encontrados nessa pequena região da terra tem sido fonte de admiração entre os botânicos, um dos quais estima que cerca de 2.600 variedades de plantas cresçam ali. A diversidade de altitude, de clima e de solo contribui para essa variedade na flora, algumas plantas estando em seu ambiente natural no frio alpino, outras no deserto tórrido, e ainda outras na planície aluvial ou no platô rochoso, cada qual florescendo e produzindo sementes na devida época. A distâncias comparativamente pequenas umas das outras encontram-se palmeiras de clima quente e carvalhos e pinheiros de clima frio; salgueiros ao longo de cursos de água e tamargueiras no ermo. Essa terra também é famosa por seus vinhedos, olivais e figueirais cultivados, bem como campos de trigo, cevada e painço. Outras culturas incluem ervilha, feijão, lentilha, beringela, cebola e pepino, bem como algodão e linho. Os que visitam essa terra hoje em dia não raro ficam desapontados, a menos que seja primavera, época em que o campo está no viço, com seu espetáculo de flores. Na maior parte do ano, as encostas rochosas são áridas e desoladas. Outrora, contudo, determinadas partes do país eram mais densamente arborizadas do que atualmente, viçosas como o "jardim de Jeová", um verdadeiro jardim botânico "que mana[va] leite e mel", agradável e convidativo. — Gên 13:10; Êx 3:8; Núm 13:23, 24; De 8:7-9.

No passado, mais do que hoje, animais, aves e peixes eram abundantes na Palestina, que se assemelhava a um parque. O leão, o urso, o touro selvagem e o hipopótamo já não existem ali, mas entre os exemplares do reino animal que ainda podem ser encontrados acham-se o lobo, o javali, o gato selvagem, o chacal, a lebre e a raposa. Animais domesticados são comuns — a ovelha, a cabra, a vaca, o cavalo, o burro e o camelo. Estima-se que em Israel atualmente haja cerca de 85 diferentes espécies de mamíferos, 350 espécies de aves e 75 espécies de répteis.

Recursos Obtidos do Solo. Além de se mostrar uma terra bem regada, capaz de produzir uma abundância de alimentos, as montanhas da Palestina continham úteis minérios de ferro e de cobre. (De 8:9) O ouro, a prata, o estanho e o chumbo tinham de ser importados, mas havia grandes depósitos de sal, e, no vale do Jordão, havia depósitos de argila para as indústrias de tijolo, de cerâmica e de fundição. (1Rs 7:46) Excelentes pedras calcárias para construção eram extraídas de pedreiras, e havia afloramentos de basalto negro, apreciado por sua dureza e fino grão.

PALHA. Hastes secas de cereais tais como trigo e cevada; na Bíblia, trata-se em especial dos fragmentos que restam após terminada a debulha. Antigamente, a palha, pura ou misturada com outro alimento, era usada como forragem para animais domésticos. (Gên 24:25, 32; Jz 19:19; 1Rs 4:28; Is 11:7; 65:25) Utilizava-se palha também na fabricação de tijolos. (Êx 5:7-18; veja TIJOLO.) Aparece em contextos ilustrativos com referência à destruição dos iníquos (Jó 21:18) e à subjugação e humilhação de Moabe. (Is 25:10-12) O poderoso leviatã é retratado como considerando o ferro apenas como palha. — Jó 41:1, 27.

PALMEIRA [hebr.: ta·már, tó·mer (Jz 4:5); gr.: foí·nix]. A tamareira (Phoenix dactylifera), embora seja uma palmeira encontrada agora apenas em certas regiões, era outrora abundante na Palestina e, pelo visto, tão característica daquela região como era e ainda é do vale do Nilo, no Egito. Depois da segunda destruição de Jerusalém, o imperador romano Vespasiano mandou cunhar numerosas moedas em que havia a figura de uma mulher em pranto sentada debaixo duma palmeira, com a inscrição "Judaea Capta". — FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 751.

As palmeiras estão associadas a oásis e constituem uma vista agradável para viajantes do deserto, como eram as 70 palmeiras que cresciam ao lado das 12 fontes de água de Elim, a segunda parada dos israelitas em marcha, depois de atravessarem o Mar Vermelho. — Êx 15:27; Núm 33:9.

Nos tempos bíblicos, palmeiras floresciam na costa do mar da Galileia (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], III, 516, 517 [x, 8]), bem como ao longo das regiões inferiores do quente vale do Jordão, e eram especialmente abundantes ao redor de En-Gedi (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], IX, 7 [i, 2]) e de Jericó, chamada de "a cidade das palmeiras". (De 34:3; Jz 1:16; 3:13; 2Cr 28:15) Também cresciam nos planaltos, como é o caso da "palmeira de Débora", na região montanhosa de Efraim. (Jz 4:5) Que elas cresciam na região de Jerusalém é evidente do uso de suas folhas na Festividade das Barracas (Le 23:40; Ne 8:15), bem como por ocasião da entrada de Jesus nessa cidade. (Jo 12:12, 13) Tamar, uma das cidades de Salomão, foi assim chamada devido à palmeira. (1Rs 9:17, 18) A região de Tiro e de Sídon também recebeu, mais tarde, o nome de Fenícia (provavelmente de uma raiz que significa "palmeira"), do grego foí·nix (At 11:19; 15:3), assim como, possivelmente, a cidade de Fênix, na ilha de Creta. — At 27:12.

A alta e majestosa palmeira, de tronco reto e uniforme que se ergue a até 30 m e é coroado por uma plumagem de longas folhas penadas, apresenta graciosa silhueta de beleza ímpar. As jovens deviam orgulhar-se de receber o nome Tamar, como se deu com a nora de Judá (Gên 38:6), com a irmã de Absalão (2Sa 13:1) e também com sua filha, descrita como "mulher de aparência muitíssimo bela". (2Sa 14:27) A estatura da jovem sulamita foi assemelhada à de uma palmeira, e os seios dela, a cachos de tâmaras. (Cân 7:7, 8) A disposição espiral de suas fibras lenhosas também a torna uma árvore de flexibilidade e força incomuns.

A palmeira chega à plena produção depois de 10 a 15 anos e continua a dar fruto por quase cem anos, após o que gradualmente declina e morre perto do fim de dois séculos. A safra anual de tâmaras é de imensos cachos pendentes e é usualmente colhida por volta de agosto-setembro. Os árabes dizem que a palmeira tem tantos usos quantos são os dias do ano. Além dos muitos usos para seus frutos, as folhas são usadas para cobrir telhados e laterais de casas, bem como para fazer cercas, esteiras, cestas e até utensílios de uso doméstico. Suas fibras são usadas para fazer cordas e cordames. As sementes, ou amêndoas, das tâmaras são moídas e dadas como alimento aos camelos. Cera, açúcar, óleo, tanino e resina são extraídos da palmeira, e uma bebida forte chamada araca é destilada da seiva.

Figuras esculpidas da palmeira, com seu formato ereto, beleza e produtividade, constituíam decoração apropriada para as paredes internas e para as portas do templo de Salomão (1Rs 6:29, 32, 35; 2Cr 3:5), bem como para as laterais dos carrocins usados no serviço do templo. (1Rs 7:36, 37) Ezequiel viu palmeiras adornando as pilastras laterais dos portões do templo visionário e também as paredes internas e as portas do templo. (Ez 40:16-37; 41:15-26) Sendo ereta e elevada, bem como frutífera, a palmeira era também um símbolo apropriado do "justo", 'plantado nos pátios de Jeová'. — Sal 92:12, 13.

O uso de folhas de palmeira pela multidão de pessoas que saudou Jesus como "o rei de Israel" (Jo 12:12, 13) servia, evidentemente, para simbolizar o louvor, bem como a submissão delas, à posição régia de Jesus. A "grande multidão" de Revelação (Apocalipse) 7:9, 10 é, semelhantemente, representada com folhas de palmeira nas mãos, atribuindo a salvação a Deus e ao Cordeiro.

PALMO. Medida linear que corresponde, aproximadamente, à distância entre a extremidade do polegar e a do dedo mínimo quando se abre por completo a mão. (Êx 28:16; 39:9; 1Sa 17:4; Ez 43:13) Dois palmos equivalem a um côvado; e três larguras da mão, a um palmo. Há evidência de que o côvado comumente usado pelos israelitas tinha 44,5 cm de comprimento. (Veja CÔVADO.) Concordemente, o palmo teria 22,2 cm de comprimento.

Ao ressaltar a grandeza de Jeová, o profeta Isaías perguntou: "Quem mediu . . . as proporções dos próprios céus com o mero palmo?" — Is 40:12.

PALTI [forma abreviada de Paltiel].

1. Chefe benjamita selecionado como um dos 12 espias para espionar a terra de Canaã em 1512 AEC. Era filho de Rafu. — Núm 13:2, 3, 9, 27-33.

2. Veja PALTIEL N.º 2.

PALTIEL [Deus É Aquele Que Me Põe a Salvo].

1. Representante de Issacar na época em que as tribos repartiram a Terra da Promessa em porções hereditárias; filho de Azã. — Núm 34:17, 18, 26.

2. Filho de Laís, de Galim. Saul, após banir Davi, tomou sua filha Mical, esposa de Davi, e deu-a em casamento a Palti (Paltiel). (1Sa 25:44) Depois de tornar-se rei, Davi exigiu de Abner e Is-Bosete que Mical lhe fosse devolvida. Isto angustiou grandemente a Paltiel, que a seguiu, chorando, até que Abner mandou-o voltar para casa. — 2Sa 3:13-16.

PALTITA [De (Pertencente a) Bete-Pelete; ou, Da (Pertencente à) Casa de Pelete]. Termo usado com referência a Helez, um dos homens poderosos de Davi e que geralmente se refere, segundo se acredita, a um nativo de Bete-Pelete. (2Sa 23:8, 26) Nas listas correspondentes em 1 Crônicas 11:27; 27:10, Helez é chamado de "o pelonita". — Veja PELONITA.

PALU [forma abreviada de Pelaías, que significa "Jah Agiu Maravilhosamente"]. Segundo filho mencionado de Rubem, primogênito de Jacó. (Gên 46:9; 1Cr 5:3) Palu fundou a família dos paluítas na tribo de Rubem. (Êx 6:14; Núm 26:5) É possivelmente o filho de Rubem chamado de Pelete em Números 16:1.

PALUÍTAS [De (Pertencente a) Palu]. Família rubenita descendente de Palu. — Núm 26:5.

PANDEIRO. Instrumento de percussão usado desde os tempos patriarcais. A palavra hebraica tof também tem sido traduzida como "tamboril", "tamborim" e "tambor". (Gên 31:27, Al, CBC, PIB) Todas essas traduções descrevem, essencialmente, o mesmo instrumento: pequeno tambor de mão, feito de pele animal ou de pergaminho, esticado em um ou em ambos os lados de uma armação de madeira ou de metal, tendo provavelmente uns 25 cm de diâmetro. Em vista de seu uso festivo, pode ser que alguns modelos tivessem soalhas, talvez guizos, presos nas laterais, e é possível que fossem tocados como um pandeiro moderno. Outros tipos provavelmente tinham mais o aspecto e o uso dum tantã, sendo percutidos com as duas mãos.

Embora não seja mencionado em relação à adoração no templo, o pandeiro era usado tanto por homens como por mulheres para louvar a Jeová e em outras ocasiões alegres, tais como festas e casamentos. (1Sa 10:5; 2Sa 6:5; Sal 150:4; Is 5:12) As mulheres, em especial, acompanhavam-se de pandeiros no canto e na dança. (Êx 15:20; Jz 11:34; 1Sa 18:6) Associa-se o pandeiro também à prospectiva alegria de Israel, quando chegasse a época da sua restauração. — Je 31:4.

PANELA. Veja COZINHAR, UTENSÍLIOS DE COZINHA.

PANFÍLIA. Pequena província romana situada na costa S da Ásia Menor, visitada por Paulo em sua primeira viagem missionária. Embora o tamanho dessa província possa ter variado no decorrer dos anos, considera-se comumente que a Panfília tenha sido uma faixa ao longo da costa, de cerca de 120 km de comprimento e até 50 km de largura. Limitava com a província da Lícia, ao O, com a província romana da Galácia, ao N, e com o Reino de Antíoco, ao L. Na costa, o clima da Panfília era quente e tropical, ao passo que ia ficando mais moderado à medida que a pessoa passava à altitude maior dos montes Tauro.

Julga-se que seus habitantes eram uma mistura duma tribo nativa com os gregos, alguns chegando mesmo a sugerir que Panfília signifique "de tribos ou raças misturadas". (Greek-English Lexicon [Léxico Grego-Inglês] de Liddell e Scott, revisado por H. Hones, Oxford, 1968, p. 1295) Evidentemente, havia judeus ou prosélitos naquela região, pois em Pentecostes de 33 EC pessoas da Panfília se achavam em Jerusalém e ficaram surpresas de ouvir os discípulos falarem em seu "próprio idioma". — At 2:6, 10.

Diversas cidades principais ficavam na costa ou perto dali, tais como as cidades portuárias de Atália, Perge, às margens do rio Cestro (Aksu), e Side, onde piratas da costa vendiam seus despojos e onde existia um mercado de escravos. De Pafos, em Chipre, Paulo, Barnabé e João Marcos navegaram na direção NO cruzando o mar "e chegaram a Perge, na Panfília". Não se sabe com certeza se eles desembarcaram em Atália e viajaram por terra os poucos quilômetros até Perge ou se navegaram direto para Perge; relata-se que, em tempos antigos, o Cestro era navegável pelo menos até Perge. Nesse ponto, João Marcos separou-se dos outros e retornou a Jerusalém, mas Paulo e Barnabé foram para o N através das montanhas até Antioquia, na Pisídia (na província da Galácia). (At 13:13, 14; 15:38; 27:5) Essa rota era notória por causa dos bandidos que havia ali. (Veja 2Co 11:26.) Na viagem de retorno, os dois cristãos viajaram através da Panfília a Perge e pregaram ali. A seguir foram para o porto de Atália e navegaram dali até Antioquia, na Síria. — At 14:24-26.

A Panfília, ao longo dos anos, foi dominada por Lídia, Pérsia, Macedônia e Roma. Sob os romanos, ela esteve, em diversas ocasiões, unida como província à Cilícia (ao L), daí à Galácia e, por fim, à Lícia. — At 13:13; 16:6; 27:5.

PANO. Tecido feito por tecelagem. Embora pouco se saiba sobre os processos de fiação e tecelagem usados pelos israelitas, é evidente que eles estavam bem familiarizados com esses ofícios. No Egito, arqueólogos descobriram pinturas em paredes com ilustrações de mulheres tecendo e fiando, mostrando o tipo de tear que era usado. Um modelo egípcio de tecelagem com tear horizontal foi encontrado perto de Girga, no Alto Egito. — Veja TECELAGEM.

A veste comprida de fino linho branco usada pelo sumo sacerdote arônico devia ser tecida em padrão enxadrezado, evidência de que os israelitas estavam bem familiarizados com esta arte, sendo capazes de fabricar tecidos com padrões. — Êx 28:39.

Na construção do tabernáculo, Bezalel e Ooliabe eram peritos cuja habilidade foi aumentada e aguçada pelo espírito santo de Deus, de modo que conseguiram fazer o trabalho exigido exatamente segundo o padrão fornecido por Jeová. (Êx 35:30-35) Havia também mulheres com excelente habilidade neste campo, fazendo fios de linho e de lã. (Êx 35:25, 26) Ao fabricarem o tecido para o éfode de Arão, o sumo sacerdote, os artesãos ‘bateram lâminas de ouro em folhas finas e recortaram fios para os entremear entre a linha azul, e a lã tingida de roxo, e as fibras carmíneas, e o linho fino, como trabalho de bordador’. — Êx 39:2, 3.

As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs mencionam tecidos de pelo de camelo e de seda. (Mt 3:4; Re 18:12) Não se sabe se os hebreus usavam algodão. Menciona-se em Ester 1:6 que se usava algodão no palácio persa de Susã. O algodão era conhecido na Índia, provavelmente pelo menos já desde 800 AEC, e o historiador Plínio diz que era usado no Egito. Hoje em dia ele é cultivado em Israel. No entanto, certos tecidos não nativos de Israel os hebreus podiam obter de comerciantes viajantes, tanto do Oriente como do Ocidente, que passassem por Israel.

O linho era tecido da planta que leva o mesmo nome, que tem fibras muito mais longas do que o algodão e é mais fácil de fiar, mas é mais difícil de tingir. O linho era um item muito apreciado no guarda-roupa de reis e de altos funcionários. José estava vestido de “roupas de linho fino” quando foi empossado como governante no Egito. (Gên 41:42) Também, Mordecai saiu de diante do rei da Pérsia em vestimenta real de pano azul e de linho. (Est 8:15) As mulheres apreciavam roupas feitas de linho. — Pr 31:22.

Outros materiais usados para vestimentas eram peles, couro e pelos. As tendas eram feitas de pele ou de pelos de cabra. (Êx 26:7, 14) Foram encontradas amostras de feltro de lã. Em 1 Samuel 19:13, menciona-se uma rede de pelos de cabra.

Cores. Os povos das terras bíblicas eram capazes de fabricar tecidos numa variedade de cores. Ao descrever as cortinas para o tabernáculo e as roupas relacionadas com o santuário, a Bíblia menciona o azul, o carmim e o roxo. (Êx 26:1; 28:31, 33) Podia-se produzir ampla variedade de matizes e cores usando-se essas três cores de corante em tecidos de cores e matizes originalmente diferentes. José ganhou de Jacó, seu pai, uma túnica listrada. (Gên 37:3, 32) Tamar, filha de Davi, usava uma comprida veste listrada, “pois era desta maneira que as filhas do rei, as virgens, costumavam vestir-se com túnicas sem mangas”. (2Sa 13:18) Podiam-se produzir padrões variegados usando-se na urdidura cores diferentes das usadas na trama. — Veja CORANTES, TINGIR.

O Tabernáculo. Na construção do tabernáculo, dez “panos de tenda” (hebr.: yeri·‘óth) de linho fino retorcido e de lã, bordados com querubins, constituíam a primeira cobertura das armações de painel, de modo que os sacerdotes que serviam dentro do tabernáculo podiam ver os querubins por entre as partes dessas armações de painel. (Êx 26:1, 2) A segunda cobertura era de pano de pelos de cabra. (Êx 26:7, 8) Servia de excelente proteção para o linho bordado. As cortinas ou reposteiros que ficavam na entrada dos compartimentos Santo e Santíssimo também eram de linho e lã, o reposteiro do Santíssimo sendo bordado com querubins. (Êx 26:31-37) Os panos de tenda, de linho, tinham 4 côvados (1,8 m) de largura e 28 côvados (12,5 m) de comprimento. Os lados N e S do pátio tinham 100 côvados (44,5 m). — Êx 27:9-11.

Usavam-se panos de linha azul, de fibras carmíneas e de lã tingida de roxo para cobrir a Arca do Pacto, a mesa dos pães da proposição, o candelabro, o altar de incenso, o altar da oferta queimada e os outros utensílios do ministério quando o tabernáculo era transportado de um lugar para outro. (A[s] cor[es] para cada item era[m] especificada[s].) — Núm 4:4-14.

Outros Usos. Faixas de pano eram usadas como cueiros para recém-nascidos. (Lu 2:7) Os judeus também tinham o costume de preparar corpos para sepultamento, envolvendo-os com faixas de linho puro junto com aromas (não um processo de embalsamamento como os egípcios pratica-vam). (Jo 19:40; Mt 27:59) Depois da ressurreição de Jesus, João e Pedro encontraram no túmulo as faixas e, enrolado separadamente, o pano que havia coberto Jesus. (Jo 20:5-7) Lázaro, ao ser ressuscitado, saiu do túmulo com o semblante ainda enrolado no pano que lhe fora colocado na cabeça por ocasião do sepultamento — pelo visto um longo pedaço de linho. — Jo 11:44.

Às vezes se guardava dinheiro embrulhado num pano. Foi assim que o escravo iníquo mencionado numa das ilustrações de Jesus guardou sua mina em vez de aplicá-la. (Lu 19:20) Não raro se carregava dinheiro nas volumosas dobras do peito da roupa, provavelmente embrulhado em tais panos.

A lei de Deus ao povo de Israel ordenava: "Não deves usar mescla de lã e de linho." (De 22:11; veja também Le 19:19.) Sobre isto, a Encyclopaedia Judaica ([Enciclopédia Judaica], Jerusalém, 1973, Vol. 14, col. 1213) comentou: "As vestes dos sacerdotes estavam notavelmente isentas da proibição da [sha·ʽat·néz] [veste de dois tipos de fios, NM]. Êxodo 28:6, 8, 15 e 39:29 prescrevem que várias peças fossem feitas de linho e lã tingida mesclados. . . . Isto sugere que a proibição geral baseava-se no caráter restritivo de tal mistura, que dizia respeito exclusivamente ao domínio do que é sagrado."

Uso Figurado. Por causa da limpeza e da pureza do linho branco, ele é usado nas Escrituras para representar a justiça. As roupas que tinham contato direto com o corpo do sumo sacerdote, a saber, os calções, a veste comprida e o turbante, bem como os calções, as vestes compridas e as coberturas para a cabeça, dos subsacerdotes, eram feitos de fino linho branco. (Êx 28:39-42; compare isso com Jó 29:14.) A noiva do Cordeiro está vestida de linho fino, resplandecente e puro, pois "o linho fino representa os atos justos dos santos". (Re 19:8) Os exércitos que seguem a Jesus Cristo no céu são representados como estando vestidos de linho fino, branco e puro. (Re 19:14) Babilônia, a Grande, que se tem enriquecido com o tráfico de mercadorias, incluindo linho fino, também se tem revestido da aparência de justiça, estando "trajada de linho fino", enquanto, ao mesmo tempo, desempenha as atividades duma prostituta. — Re 18:3, 12, 16; veja ALGODÃO; VESTIMENTA.

PÃO. Alimento assado, às vezes fermentado, que tem como ingrediente básico farinha de trigo ou de milho. A palavra hebraica lé·hhem e a grega ár·tos são traduzidas "pão". (1Sa 10:4; Mt 14:17) Os pães não raro eram redondos. (Jz 7:13; 1Sa 10:3; Je 37:21) De fato, a palavra hebraica kik·kár (pão redondo) literalmente significa "algo redondo". (1Sa 2:36) Naturalmente, os pães eram feitos também em outros formatos. Um papiro egípcio menciona mais de 30 formatos de pão. O pão era o alimento básico dos judeus e de outros povos da antiguidade, a arte da panificação sendo de conhecimento geral entre os israelitas, os egípcios, os gregos, os romanos e outros. Mesmo nos tempos modernos, em algumas partes do Oriente Médio, o pão é de importância capital, e outros tipos de alimentos são de importância secundária. Às vezes, a Bíblia parece usar o termo "pão" para referir-se a alimento em geral, como em Gênesis 3:19, e na oração-modelo, que inclui o pedido: "Dá-nos hoje o nosso pão para este dia." — Mt 6:11; compare isso com Ec 10:19 n.

Antigas amostras de terras bíblicas incluem bolos ou pães redondos, ovais, triangulares e cuneiformes, relativamente finos, e pães grossos e compridos. (Veja BOLO.) Contudo, parece que os pães grossos, como os do mundo ocidental, não eram comuns no antigo Oriente Médio. Ainda hoje, o pão oriental é assado fino, geralmente tendo 1 a 2,5 cm de espessura e cerca de 18 cm de diâmetro.

Ao fabricarem pão, os hebreus, em geral, usavam farinha de trigo ou de cevada. (2Rs 4:42; Jo 6:9; compare Êx 34:22 com Le 23:17.) O trigo era mais caro, de modo que as pessoas não raro tinham de contentar-se com pão de cevada. Faz-se referência ao pão de cevada em Juízes 7:13, 2 Reis 4:42 e João 6:9, 13. Algumas farinhas eram um tanto granulosas, sendo preparadas mediante o uso do gral e do pilão. No entanto, usava-se também "flor de farinha". (Gên 18:6; Le 2:1; 1Rs 4:22) O maná que Jeová Deus forneceu aos israelitas durante sua jornada no ermo era moído em moinhos manuais ou pilado num gral. — Núm 11:8.

Costumava-se moer o cereal e assar pão fresco diariamente, e, não raro, o pão não continha fermento (hebr.: mats·tsáh). A farinha era simplesmente misturada com água, e não se adicionava fermento antes de se trabalhar a massa. Para a fabricação do pão fermentado, o método usual era tomar um pouco da massa, reservada dum anterior cozimento, e empregá-la como agente fermentativo, desmanchando-a na água, antes de acrescentar a farinha. Tal mistura era amassada e se deixava descansar até levedar. — Gál 5:9; veja BOLO; FERMENTO.

Certas ofertas feitas a Jeová pelos israelitas consistiam de coisas assadas. (Le 2:4-13) Não se permitia usar fermento em ofertas feitas por fogo a Jeová, embora determinadas ofertas não fossem queimadas no altar e pudessem conter fermento. (Le 7:13; 23:17) Não era permitido usar pão fermentado na Páscoa e na Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados associada com ela. — Êx 12:8, 15, 18; veja PÃES DA PROPOSIÇÃO.

A importância do pão na dieta diária nos tempos bíblicos é indicada em repetidas referências a ele nas Escrituras. Por exemplo, Melquisedeque "trouxe para fora pão e vinho" antes de abençoar a Abraão. (Gên 14:18) Ao mandar Agar e Ismael embora, Abraão "tomou pão e um odre de água, e deu-o a Agar". (Gên 21:14) Quando estava preso, Jeremias recebia uma ração diária de "um pão redondo". (Je 37:21) Em duas ocasiões, Jesus Cristo milagrosamente multiplicou pães para alimentar grandes multidões. (Mt 14:14-21; 15:32-37) Jesus ensinou seus seguidores a orar pedindo "pão para o dia, segundo as exigências do dia". (Lu 11:3) E o salmista apropriadamente identificou a Jeová Deus como aquele que dá "pão que revigora o próprio coração do homem mortal". — Sal 104:15.

Uso Figurado. O termo "pão", conforme usado na Bíblia, tem diversas aplicações figuradas. Por exemplo, Josué e Calebe disseram aos israelitas reunidos que os habitantes de Canaã "são para nós pão", pelo visto significando que eles podiam ser facilmente conquistados e que essa experiência sustentaria e fortaleceria Israel. (Núm 14:9) Grande pesar, que pode estar associado com o desfavor divino, parece refletir-se no Salmo 80:5, onde se diz de Jeová, o Pastor de Israel: "Tu os fizeste comer o pão de lágrimas." Fala-se também de Jeová que daria a seu povo "pão em forma de aflição e água em forma de opressão", evidentemente referindo-se a condições que o povo enfrentaria quando estivesse sitiado e que lhe seriam tão comuns como pão e água. — Is 30:20.

Ao falar sobre aqueles que são tão iníquos que "não dormem a menos que façam alguma maldade", o livro de Provérbios diz: "Alimentaram-se do pão da iniquidade." (Pr 4:14-17) Sim, eles parecem sustentar-se de ações iníquas. Sobre alguém que talvez obtenha as provisões materiais para a vida por meio de engano ou fraude, Provérbios 20:17 diz: "O pão ganho mediante falsidade é agradável ao homem, mas depois a sua boca se encherá de cascalho." Mas, sobre a boa e laboriosa esposa, diz-se: "Não come o pão da preguiça." — Pr 31:27.

A Bíblia também usa "pão" figuradamente em sentido favorável. Isaías 55:2 mostra que as provisões espirituais de Jeová são muito mais importantes do que as coisas materiais, dizendo: "Por que continuais a pagar dinheiro por aquilo que não é pão e por que é a vossa labuta por aquilo que não resulta em saciedade? Escutai-me atentamente e comei o que é bom, e deleite-se a vossa alma com a própria gordura."

Ao instituir a nova refeição que celebraria sua morte (em 14 de nisã de 33 EC), "Jesus tomou um pão, e, depois de proferir uma bênção, partiu-o, e, dando-o aos discípulos, disse: 'Tomai, comei. Isto significa meu corpo.'" (Mt 26:26) O pão significava o próprio corpo carnal de Jesus "que há de ser dado em vosso benefício". — Lu 22:19; 1Co 11:23, 24.

Visto que eram relativamente finos e, se não fermentados, quebradiços, os pães eram partidos, em vez de cortados. Portanto, em si, não há nada de especial em Jesus 'partir' o pão usado ao instituir a Refeição Noturna do Senhor (Mt 26:26), sendo esta a maneira costumeira de partilhar o pão. — Mt 14:19; 15:36; Mr 6:41; 8:6; Lu 9:16; At 2:42, 46, Int.

Cerca de um ano antes, Jesus Cristo contrastara "o pão que desce do céu" com o maná consumido pelos israelitas no ermo e declarara explicitamente: "Eu sou o pão da vida." Ele mostrou que era "o pão vivo que desceu do céu", acrescentando: "Se alguém comer deste pão, viverá para sempre; e, de fato, o pão que eu hei de dar é a minha carne a favor da vida do mundo." (Jo 6:48-51) Este 'comer' teria de ser feito em sentido figurado, por se exercer fé no valor do sacrifício humano perfeito de Jesus. (Jo 6:40) Jesus apresentou o mérito do seu sacrifício resgatador a seu Pai, Jeová Deus, quando ascendeu ao céu. Por meio deste mérito, Cristo pode dar vida a todos os obedientes da humanidade. Conforme predito sob inspiração divina, Jesus nasceu em Belém, que significa "Casa de Pão" (Miq 5:2; Lu 2:11), e por intermédio de Jesus Cristo provê-se o "pão" que dá vida a toda a humanidade crente. — Jo 6:31-35.

PAPEL. Nos tempos bíblicos, fino material de escrita transformado em folhas a partir de tiras obtidas do papiro. — Veja PAPIRO.

Dá-se aos egípcios o crédito de serem os primeiros fabricantes de papel de papiro para fins de escrita, usando o papiro que na época crescia ao longo das margens do rio Nilo. Alguns arqueólogos remontam tal produção de papel ao tempo de Abraão.

Os primitivos cristãos usavam o papel de papiro para cartas, rolos e códices. Ele teve também uma parte importante na produção de manuscritos bíblicos, até que foi substituído pelo velino (pele de animal de granulação fina) no quarto século EC. Em 2 João 12, o apóstolo escreveu que preferia transmitir sua mensagem "face a face" em vez de com "papel e tinta". Aqui, a palavra "papel" traduz a palavra grega khár·tes, que se diz significar uma folha de papel feito de papiro.

PAPIRO [hebr.: gó·me']. Grande planta aquática pertencente à família do caniço. Possui uma haste, ou caule, afilada, triangular, que cresce em águas rasas atingindo uma altura de 2 a 6 m, e termina num tufo, ou pluma, de delgadas panículas semelhantes a cabeleiras. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 544) O papiro era usado na fabricação de vários itens, incluindo material de escrita.

O papiro (Cyperus papyrus) viceja em águas rasas e estagnadas, ou pântanos, e ao longo das margens de rios de curso lento, tais como o baixo Nilo, onde outrora vegetava em abundância, mas agora se acha quase extinto. Bildade indagou de Jó: "Acaso o papiro cresce alto sem brejo?" — Jó 8:11; Is 35:7.

As hastes da planta são flutuantes, e, para impedir a morte do bebezinho Moisés, sua mãe o colocou numa "arca de papiro", revestida de betume e piche e a deixou ao sabor da corrente do rio Nilo. (Êx 2:3) Do papiro também se fabricavam barcos grandes, para viagens de longa distância. (Is 18:2) Estes talvez fossem feitos de feixes de hastes de papiro amarradas. Tinham extremidades estreitas, mas as vigas eram suficientemente largas para aguentar o peso dos que viajassem em pé. Em 1970, Thor Heyerdahl e um grupo de associados cruzaram milhares de quilômetros do Atlântico numa embarcação assim.

Uso Como Material de Escrita. Quando os egípcios preparavam o papiro para servir de material de escrita, seguiam um processo um tanto simples. Ao colherem as hastes, preferiam a parte medulosa grossa que crescia sob a superfície da água, porque fornecia matéria-prima mais larga e mais branca. A casca exterior era tirada, e o cerne meduloso restante era cortado em tamanhos convenientes de 40 a 45 cm. Em seguida, a medula celular era cortada em tiras largas, mas muito finas. As tiras eram então colocadas verticalmente sobre uma superfície lisa, permitindo-se que se sobrepusessem ligeiramente umas às outras. Outra camada de tiras de papiro era colocada horizontalmente sobre as tiras verticais. Usavam-se pequenos malhos para bater as camadas até que ficassem bem coladas, formando uma folha compacta. Então, depois de secadas ao sol, as folhas eram aparadas no tamanho desejado. Por fim, eram alisadas e polidas com pedra-pomes, conchas ou marfim. Este processo produzia um material de escrita razoavelmente durável, flexível e quase branco, que ficava disponível em muitos tamanhos e graus de qualidade. Geralmente se escolhia para a escrita o lado que tinha as tiras horizontais, embora, às vezes, se usasse o reverso para se concluir a escrita. As juntas das tiras serviam para guiar a mão do escritor à medida que escrevia com uma pena de junco e com um líquido de escrita feito de goma, fuligem e água.

Essas folhas de papiro podiam receber cola nas bordas e ser juntadas para formar um rolo, que normalmente tinha cerca de 20 folhas. Ou podiam ser dobradas de modo a formar o códice, que se assemelhava a um livro, que se tornou popular entre os primitivos cristãos. O rolo mediano tinha uns 4 a 6 m de comprimento, embora ainda exista um que tem 40,5 m de comprimento. A palavra grega bí·blos aplicava-se originalmente à medula mole do papiro, mas foi mais tarde usada com referência a livros. (Mt 1:1; Mr 12:26) O diminutivo bi·blí·on tem a forma plural bi·blí·a, que significa literalmente "livrinhos", e desta se deriva a palavra "Bíblia". (2Ti 4:13, Int) Depois de se tornar um importante centro da indústria de papiro, uma cidade fenícia passou a ser chamada Biblos.

Rolos de papiro foram amplamente usados até o início do segundo século EC, quando passaram a ser substituídos pelo códice em papiro. Mais tarde, no quarto século, a popularidade do papiro diminuiu, e ele foi trocado em larga escala por um material de escrita mais durável chamado velino.

O papiro apresentava uma grande desvantagem como material de escrita no sentido de não ser muito durável. Deteriorava-se em ambiente úmido e, quando guardado em condições áridas, tornava-se muito quebradiço. Até o século 18 EC, presumia-se que todos os antigos manuscritos em papiro haviam sido destruídos pelo tempo. Contudo, em fins do século 19, diversos papiros bíblicos valiosos foram encontrados. As descobertas ocorreram principalmente no Egito e na região ao redor do Mar Morto, locais que propiciam o clima seco ideal, tão necessário para a preservação dos papiros. Alguns dos papiros bíblicos encontrados nesses locais remontam ao segundo ou ao primeiro século AEC.

Muitas dessas descobertas de manuscritos em papiro são designadas pelo termo "papiro" ou "papiros", tais como o Papiro Nash, do primeiro ou do segundo século AEC, o Papiro Rylands iii. 458 (segundo século AEC), e o Papiro Chester Beatty N.º 1 (do terceiro século EC).

PARÁ. Cidade de Benjamim. (Jos 18:21, 23) Pará é usualmente identificada com Khirbet el-Farah (Horvat ʽEn Para), cerca de 9 km ao NE de Jerusalém. Uma fonte próxima chamada ʽAin Farah (ʽEn Perat) fornece água à Cidade Velha de Jerusalém.

PARÃ. A maior parte da vasta região do ermo em que a nação de Israel vagueou por cerca de 38 anos antes de entrar na Terra da Promessa. (Núm 10:11, 12; De 2:14) Não tendo fronteiras fixas, Parã ocupava a parte central e nordestina da península do Sinai. Ao L, ficava a parte do vale de Abatimento Tectônico conhecido como o Arabá e também o golfo de ʽAqaba; ao S, o ermo de Sinai; a SO, o ermo de Sim; e, ao NO e ao N, os ermos de Etão e de Sur. Em direção ao Mar Morto, ao NE, Parã se fundia com o ermo de Zim, e talvez o incluísse, e pode ser que chegasse a Berseba, perto das montanhas de Judá. — 1Sa 25:1, 2.

Na maior parte, Parã era uma acidentada região montanhosa de pedra calcária, parecida a chapadões em certos lugares, a seção central tendo entre 600 e 750 m de altitude. (De 33:2; compare isso com Hab 3:3.) Achava-se também incluída como parte do "grande e atemorizante ermo" mencionado em Deuteronômio 1:1, 19; 8:15. Exceto durante as breves estações chuvosas, a superfície de cascalho desta região agreste fica destituída de vegetação verde; as nascentes de água são poucas. Estes fatores salientam quão inteiramente a nação de Israel, que talvez totalizasse 3.000.000 de pessoas, dependia de Jeová para ter sua provisão miraculosa de alimento e água durante todos aqueles muitos anos em que vagueou pelo ermo. — Êx 16:1, 4, 12-15, 35; De 2:7; 8:15, 16.

Pelo visto, a primeira referência a este ermo de Parã ocorreu nos dias de Ló, quando Quedorlaomer e seus aliados derrotaram diversas cidades nas vizinhanças do Mar Morto e de Edom, até El-Parã, ao S. (Gên 14:4-6) Mais tarde, depois de Ismael ser despedido por seu pai, Abraão, ele se fixou no ermo de Parã e ocupou-se principalmente com a caça. — Gên 21:20, 21.

Entretanto, as principais referências a Parã relacionam-se com as perambulações dos israelitas. Depois de partir do monte Sinai, Israel acampou em Taberá e em Quibrote-Ataavá, daí, em Hazerote, na extremidade sul de Parã, antes de dirigir-se para o N, para Cades-Barneia. (Núm 10:12, 33; 11:3, 34, 35; 12:16) Não muito depois de entrar em Parã, os 12 espias foram enviados para fazer o reconhecimento de Canaã. (Núm 13:3, 26) O relatório ruim feito pela maioria, ao retornarem, resultou em Jeová decretar que a nação prolongasse sua permanência no ermo até que todos os registrados que murmuraram contra Deus tivessem morrido. (Núm 13:31-33; 14:20-34) Durante aqueles 40 anos, a maioria dos acampamentos de Israel, desde o Egito até a Terra da Promessa, achavam-se decididamente em Parã. — Núm 33:1-49.

Segundo a Septuaginta grega, Davi foi ao ermo de Maom após a morte e o sepultamento de Samuel. Contudo, o texto massorético, a Pesito siríaca e a Vulgata latina dizem que ele foi ao ermo de Parã. (1Sa 25:1) Quando Davi se tornou rei e travou guerra contra Edom, o jovem príncipe edomita Hadade, junto com alguns dos servos do seu pai, fugiu para o Egito. No caminho, à medida que passavam por aquela região, juntaram-se a eles certos homens de Parã. — 1Rs 11:15-18.

PARAÍSO. Lindo parque ou jardim semelhante a um parque. A palavra grega pa·rá·dei·sos ocorre três vezes nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. (Lu 23:43; 2Co 12:4; Re 2:7) Escritores gregos desde o tempo de Xenofonte (c. 431-352 AEC) usavam essa palavra, e Pollux a descreveu como sendo de origem persa (pairidaeza). (Cyropaedia, I, iii, 14; Anabasis, I, ii, 7; Onomasticon [Onomástico], IX, 13) Alguns lexicógrafos derivam a palavra hebraica par·dés (que significa, basicamente, um parque) da mesma fonte. Mas, visto que Salomão (do século 11 AEC) usou par·dés em seus escritos, embora os escritos persas existentes só remontem a cerca do sexto século AEC, tal derivação do termo hebraico é apenas conjectural. (Ec 2:5; Cân 4:13) O outro uso de par·dés acha-se em Neemias 2:8, onde se faz referência a um parque florestal régio, pertencente ao rei persa Artaxerxes Longímano, no quinto século AEC. — Veja PARQUE.

Os três termos (hebraico: par·dés; persa: pairidaeza e grego: pa·rá·dei·sos), contudo, transmitem a ideia básica de um lindo parque ou jardim semelhante a um parque. O primeiro de tais parques foi o feito pelo Criador do homem, Jeová Deus, no Éden. (Gên 2:8, 9, 15) É chamado de gan, ou "jardim", em hebraico, mas era obviamente semelhante a um parque no tamanho e na natureza. A Septuaginta grega apropriadamente usa o termo pa·rá·dei·sos com referência a esse jardim. (Veja ÉDEN N.º 1; JARDIM [Jardim do Éden].) Devido ao pecado, Adão perdeu o direito de viver nesse paraíso e a oportunidade de ganhar o direito de vida eterna, direito esse representado pelo fruto duma árvore divinamente indicada no centro do jardim. O jardim do Éden talvez estivesse cercado de alguma forma, visto que foi necessário colocar guardas angélicos apenas no lado oriental a fim de impedir a entrada de humanos. — Gên 3:22-24.

O que é o Paraíso que Jesus prometeu ao malfeitor que morreu ao seu lado?

O relato de Lucas mostra que um malfeitor, que estava sendo executado ao lado de Jesus Cristo, falou em defesa de Jesus e pediu que Jesus se lembrasse dele quando 'entrasse em seu reino'. A resposta de Jesus foi: "Deveras, eu te digo hoje: Estarás comigo no Paraíso." (Lu 23:39-43) A pontuação usada na tradução destas palavras depende, naturalmente, do entendimento que o tradutor tem do sentido das palavras de Jesus, visto que no texto original grego não se usou nenhuma pontuação. A pontuação no estilo moderno só se tornou comum por volta do nono século EC. Embora muitas traduções ponham uma vírgula (ou dois pontos) antes da palavra "hoje", e desta forma deem a impressão de que o malfeitor entrou no Paraíso naquele mesmo dia, não existe nada no restante das Escrituras que apoie isto. O próprio Jesus ficou morto e no túmulo até o terceiro dia e foi então ressuscitado como as "primícias" da ressurreição. (At 10:40; 1Co 15:20; Col 1:18) Ele ascendeu ao céu 40 dias depois. — Jo 20:17; At 1:1-3, 9.

A evidência, portanto, é de que o uso da palavra "hoje", por Jesus, não foi para indicar quando o malfeitor estaria no Paraíso, mas, em vez disso, para chamar a atenção para o momento em que essa promessa estava sendo feita e no qual o malfeitor mostrara certa medida de fé em Jesus. Tratava-se do dia em que Jesus fora rejeitado e condenado pelos mais categorizados líderes religiosos do seu próprio povo e, depois disso, sentenciado à morte pela autoridade romana. Ele se tornara objeto de zombaria e ridicularização. Portanto, o malfeitor ao seu lado mostrara uma notável qualidade e elogiável atitude de coração em não concordar com a maioria, mas, em vez disso, em falar em defesa de Jesus e expressar sua crença na vindoura realeza dele. Reconhecendo que a ênfase é corretamente colocada no momento em que a promessa estava sendo feita, em vez de na época de seu cumprimento, outras traduções, tais como as de Rotherham e de Lamsa, em inglês, as de Reinhardt e de W. Michaelis, em alemão, a Tradução Ecumênica da Bíblia, em português, bem como a siríaco curetoniano do quinto século EC, verteram esse texto de modo similar à Tradução do Novo Mundo, aqui citada.

Quanto à identificação do Paraíso a respeito do qual Jesus falou, é claro que não é um sinônimo do Reino celestial de Cristo. Anteriormente, naquele dia, apresentara-se a entrada no Reino celestial como perspectiva para os fiéis discípulos de Jesus, mas à base de terem 'permanecido com ele em suas provações', algo que o malfeitor jamais fizera, sendo que sua morte na estaca ao lado de Jesus ocorrera puramente por causa de suas próprias ações criminosas. (Lu 22:28-30; 23:40, 41) O malfeitor obviamente não havia 'nascido de novo', da água e do espírito, o que Jesus mostrou ser um pré-requisito para a entrada no Reino dos céus. (Jo 3:3-6) Nem era o malfeitor um dos 'vencedores' que o glorificado Cristo Jesus disse que estariam com ele em seu trono celestial e que teriam parte na "primeira ressurreição". — Re 3:11, 12, 21; 12:10, 11; 14:1-4; 20:4-6.

Algumas obras de referência apresentam o conceito de que Jesus se referia a uma localização paradísica no Hades ou Seol, supostamente um compartimento ou divisão ali para os aprovados por Deus. Afirma-se que os rabinos judeus daquela época ensinavam a existência de tal paraíso para aqueles que tinham morrido e estavam aguardando a ressurreição. A respeito dos ensinos dos rabinos, o Dictionary of the Bible (Dicionário da Bíblia), de Hastings, declara: "A teologia rabínica, como nos foi transmitida, apresenta uma extraordinária miscelânea de ideias sobre essas questões, e no caso de muitas delas é difícil determinar as datas a que devem ser designadas. . . . Tomando a literatura exatamente como é, pode parecer que o Paraíso era considerado, por alguns, como sobre a própria terra, por outros, como fazendo parte do Seol, por ainda outros, como nem sobre a terra nem sob a terra, mas no céu . . . Mas há certa dúvida no que diz respeito, pelo menos, a parte disto. Estes vários conceitos são realmente encontrados no judaísmo posterior. Eles aparecem mais precisamente e em mais pormenores no judaísmo cabalístico medieval . . . Mas é incerto até que ponto estas coisas podem remontar. A mais antiga teologia judaica pelo menos . . . parece dar pouco ou nenhum lugar à ideia dum Paraíso intermediário. Ela fala de um Gehinnom para os iníquos, e de um Gan Eden, ou jardim do Éden, para os justos. É questionável se ela vai além desses conceitos e assegura um Paraíso no Seol." — 1905, Vol. III, pp. 669, 670.

Mesmo que eles realmente ensinassem isto, seria muitíssimo desarrazoado crer que Jesus propagaria um conceito assim, em vista da sua condenação das tradições religiosas não bíblicas dos líderes religiosos judaicos. (Mt 15:3-9) É provável que o paraíso realmente conhecido pelo malfeitor judeu com quem Jesus falou fosse o Paraíso terrestre descrito no primeiro livro das Escrituras Hebraicas, o Paraíso do Éden. Sendo assim, seria razoável que a promessa de Jesus apontasse para um restabelecimento de tais condições paradísicas na terra. Portanto, sua promessa ao transgressor daria assegurada esperança duma ressurreição de tal pessoa injusta para ter a oportunidade de viver nesse Paraíso restaurado. — Veja At 24:15; Re 20:12, 13; 21:1-5; Mt 6:10.

Um Paraíso Espiritual. Em muitos dos livros proféticos da Bíblia encontram-se promessas divinas no tocante ao retorno de Israel das terras do seu exílio para sua desolada terra natal. Deus faria com que aquela terra abandonada fosse lavrada e semeada, a fim de produzir ricamente e estar cheia de pessoas e de animais; as cidades seriam reconstruídas e habitadas, e as pessoas diriam: "Aquela terra lá, que fora desolada, tem-se tornado como o jardim do Éden." (Ez 36:6-11, 29, 30, 33-35; compare isso com Is 51:3; Je 31:10-12; Ez 34:25-27.) No entanto, estas profecias também mostram que as condições paradísicas tinham que ver com as próprias pessoas, que, por fidelidade a Deus, podiam então 'brotar' e florescer como "árvores de justiça", desfrutando maravilhosa prosperidade espiritual como um "jardim bem regado", cumuladas de abundantes bênçãos de Deus por terem o Seu favor. (Is 58:11; 61:3, 11; Je 31:12; 32:41; compare isso com Sal 1:3; 72:3, 6-8, 16; 85:10-13; Is 44:3, 4.) O povo de Israel tinha sido o "vinhedo" de Deus, sua plantação, mas sua maldade e sua apostasia da adoração verdadeira causaram um figurativo 'ressecamento' do seu campo espiritual, mesmo antes de ocorrer a desolação literal de sua terra. — Veja Êx 15:17; Is 5:1-8; Je 2:21.

É evidente, porém, que as profecias sobre o restabelecimento, registradas pelos profetas hebreus, incluem elementos que também terão cumprimento material no Paraíso terrestre restabelecido. Há aspectos em Isaías 35:1-7, por exemplo, tais como a cura dos cegos e dos coxos, que não tiveram cumprimento literal após o retorno dos israelitas da antiga Babilônia, nem se cumprem deste modo no paraíso espiritual cristão. Seria incoerente da parte de Deus inspirar profecias tais como as de Isaías 11:6-9, Ezequiel 34:25 e Oseias 2:18, com a intenção de que seu significado fosse apenas figurado ou espiritual, sem um cumprimento literal dessas coisas nas experiências físicas dos servos de Deus. O paraíso que Paulo citou em 2 Coríntios 12:4 também poderia se referir ao paraíso futuro, tanto físico como espiritual, mencionado naquelas profecias das Escrituras Hebraicas. Também é possível que seja a visão do "paraíso de Deus", a condição abençoada no céu. — Re 2:7.

Comer no "Paraíso de Deus". Revelação (Apocalipse) 2:7 menciona uma "árvore da vida" no "paraíso de Deus" e que comer dela seria privilégio daquele 'que vencesse'. Visto que outras promessas feitas nesta parte de Revelação a tais vencedores relacionam-se claramente com ganharem uma herança celestial (Re 2:26-28; 3:12, 21), parece evidente que o "paraíso de Deus", neste caso, é celestial. A palavra "árvore" aqui traduz o termo grego xý·lon, que literalmente significa "madeiro" ou "madeiramento", e no plural poderia se referir a um pomar. No Paraíso terrestre do Éden, comer da árvore da vida teria significado, para o homem, viver para sempre. (Gên 3:22-24) Até mesmo os frutos das outras árvores do jardim teriam servido para sustentar a vida do homem, enquanto ele continuasse obediente. Assim, comer da "árvore [ou árvores] da vida" no "paraíso de Deus" relaciona-se evidentemente com a provisão divina de vida ininterrupta concedida aos vencedores cristãos, e outros textos mostram que eles recebem o prêmio da imortalidade e incorruptibilidade junto com o seu Cabeça e Senhor celestial, Cristo Jesus. — 1Co 15:50-54; 1Pe 1:3, 4.

PARALISIA. Diminuição ou perda total da capacidade muscular ou das sensações em uma ou mais partes do corpo. Às vezes chamada de paresia, resulta de danos ou distúrbios do sistema nervoso ou de atrofia muscular, desta forma, quer impedindo a transmissão dos impulsos nervosos, quer tornando os músculos incapazes de reagir a eles. A paralisia tem muitos nomes e formas, alguns dos tipos podendo ser fatais. Entre as causas acham-se doenças (como no caso da paralisia diftérica), lesões cerebrais, danos na medula espinhal, ou pressão resultante dum tumor.

Entre os que foram milagrosamente curados por Jesus Cristo achavam-se paralíticos. (Mt 4:24) Um homem paralítico foi levado a Jesus, que curou o sofredor, depois de perdoar-lhe os pecados. Daí, atendendo à ordem de Cristo, o ex-paralítico pegou sua maca e foi para casa. (Mt 9:2-8; Mr 2:3-12; Lu 5:18-26) Em outra ocasião, o servo dum oficial do exército ficou de cama com paralisia e estava prestes a morrer, mas Jesus o curou à distância. (Mt 8:5-13; Lu 7:1-10) Este escravo estava "terrivelmente atormentado", ou terrivelmente aflito (Mt 8:6), o que pode indicar, mas não necessariamente indica, que ele sofria fortes dores. A paralisia pode ser dolorosa, embora em geral não seja. Em casos de paralisia agitante (doença de Parkinson, ou parkinsonismo) ocorrem dores semelhantes às de cãibras na espinha e nas extremidades, e a dor é agonizante na paraplegia dolorosa, uma forma de paralisia ligada a certos casos de câncer da medula espinhal. As pessoas afligidas de paralisia são chamadas de "paralíticos".

O evangelista Filipe pregou e realizou sinais na cidade de Samaria, curando muitos paralíticos. (At 8:5-8) Em Lida, Pedro disse ao paralítico Eneias, "que já por oito anos jazia na sua maca": "Eneias, Jesus Cristo te sara. Levanta-te e arruma a tua cama." Nisto, "ele se levantou imediatamente". — At 9:32-35.

PARDAL [gr.: strou·thí·on]. A palavra grega strou·thí·on é uma forma diminutiva que significa qualquer ave pequena, mas que era aplicada especialmente a pardais. Uma variedade do pardal comum (Passer domesticus biblicus) é abundante em Israel. Os pardais, pequenas aves pardas e cinzentas, são barulhentos e gregários, gostam de gorjear e chilrear, de voar do seu poleiro, em telhados de casas, em árvores ou em arbustos, até o chão, e dali voltar de novo. Sua alimentação consiste principalmente em sementes, insetos e vermes. O pardal-espanhol (Passer hispaniolensis) também é comum, especialmente nas regiões setentrionais e centrais de Israel.

As únicas referências diretas a pardais, na Bíblia, encontram-se numa declaração que Jesus fez em sua terceira viagem pela Galileia e que, pelo visto, repetiu cerca de um ano depois em seu posterior ministério na Judeia. Salientando que "se vendem dois pardais por uma moeda de pequeno valor [literalmente: um assário, que vale menos de cinco centavos de dólar]", ou "por duas moedas de pequeno valor", caso fossem comprados em lotes de cinco, Jesus declarou que, embora essas pequenas aves fossem consideradas de valor tão ínfimo, 'nem mesmo uma delas cairá ao chão sem o conhecimento de vosso Pai', 'nem mesmo uma delas está esquecida diante de Deus'. Daí, incentivou seus discípulos a não terem medo, assegurando-lhes: "Vós valeis mais do que muitos pardais." — Mt 10:29-31; Lu 12:6, 7.

Antigamente, bem como ainda hoje, vendiam-se pardais nos mercados do Oriente Médio. Como item alimentício, eram depenados e enfiados em espetos de madeira, sendo assados (como churrasquinho no espeto). Uma inscrição antiga da lei tarifária do imperador Diocleciano (301 EC) mostra que, dentre todas as aves vendidas como alimento, os pardais eram as mais baratas. — Light From the Ancient East (Luz do Antigo Oriente), de A. Deissmann, 1965, pp. 273, 274.

Embora o pardal apareça nas Escrituras Hebraicas, na versão Almeida (Sal 84:3; 102:7) e em outras traduções, o termo hebraico assim traduzido (tsip·póhr) evidentemente é um termo genérico que se refere a pequenas aves em geral e não uma identificação específica do pardal.

PARENTE. Veja PARENTESCO, PARENTE.

PARENTESCO, PARENTE. Alguém aparentado, quer por ancestrais em comum, quer por casamento. Há diversas palavras nas línguas originais da Bíblia que têm os seguintes significados e usos.

Go·'él (do hebr. ga·'ál, que significa "resgatar" ou "comprar de volta") refere-se ao parente mais próximo do sexo masculino com o direito de ser resgatador ou vingador do sangue. Assassinos deliberados deviam ser mortos pelo "vingador do sangue". (Núm 35:16-19) O parentesco de Boaz com Noemi e Rute era o de "resgatador". (Ru 2:20; 3:9, 12, 13; 4:1, 3, 6, 8, 14) O próprio Jeová, o Grande Pai ou Dador da Vida, é tanto Vingador como Resgatador de seus servos. — Sal 78:35; Is 41:14; 43:14; 44:6, 24; 48:17; 54:5; 63:16; Je 50:34.

She'ér (hebr., que significa "organismo") refere-se a um parente carnal ou consanguíneo. As leis de Deus proibiam ter relações sexuais com uma "parenta consanguínea" chegada, tal como a tia. (Le 18:6-13; 20:19) Se um israelita ficasse endividado para com um forasteiro, então um irmão, um tio, um primo, ou qualquer outro "parente consanguíneo", podia resgatá-lo. (Le 25:47-49) Ou se a pessoa morresse sem ter filhos, filhas, irmãos, ou tios, então o "parente consanguíneo" mais chegado receberia a herança. — Núm 27:10, 11.

Qa·róhv (hebr., que significa "próximo") inclui, não só uma pessoa intimamente aparentada, mas também um conhecido íntimo. Se um irmão ficasse tão pobre que tivesse de vender seus bens, então alguém "intimamente aparentado" tinha de comprá-los de volta. (Le 25:25) Jó lamentou que seus "conhecidos íntimos" o haviam abandonado, e Davi lastimou que seus "conhecidos íntimos" também se mantinham à parte. — Jó 19:14; Sal 38:11.

Termos aparentados com ya·dhá' (hebr., que significa "conhecer", "estar familiarizado") poderiam referir-se a um parente ou simplesmente a um conhecido. Noemi tinha "um parente de seu esposo", chamado Boaz. Jeú executou todos os da casa de Acabe, incluindo seus "conhecidos". — Ru 2:1; 2Rs 10:11.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, syg·ge·nés refere-se a um parente consanguíneo, mas nunca é usado ao se falar da relação entre pais e filhos. Seguindo esta regra, note que Jesus disse a seus seguidores: "Sereis entregues até mesmo por pais, e irmãos, e parentes [syg·ge·nón], e amigos." (Lu 21:16) Certa vez, quando Jesus tinha 12 anos, seus pais deram pela falta dele e foram procurá-lo entre "os parentes". (Lu 2:44) Ao oferecer uma festa, aconselhou Jesus, não convide seus "parentes", que podem retribuir-lhe, mas, em vez disso, os pobres. (Lu 14:12-14) Quando Pedro levou as boas novas de salvação a Cornélio, seus "parentes" também estavam presentes. (At 10:24) Paulo, em sua carta aos romanos, referiu-se aos israelitas coletivamente, bem como a diversas pessoas, como seus "parentes". — Ro 9:3; 16:7, 11, 21.

PARMASTA [do persa, possivelmente significando "O Primeiríssimo"]. Um dos dez filhos de Hamã. — Est 9:9.

PÁRMENAS. Um dos sete recomendados aos apóstolos e designados por eles para assegurar uma distribuição diária justa de provisões na congregação de Jerusalém depois de Pentecostes de 33 EC. — At 6:1-6.

PARNAQUE. Zebulonita cujo filho, Elizafã, foi o representante da tribo ao se repartir a Terra da Promessa. — Núm 34:17, 18, 25.

PARÓS [Pulga]. Fundador de uma família em Israel. Havia 2.172 dos seus descendentes que retornaram a Jerusalém com Zorobabel em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:1-3; Ne 7:8) Na época em que Esdras chegou, em 468 AEC, com 150 "filhos de Parós" liderados por Zacarias, alguns da família deles, que já estavam em Jerusalém, haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, as quais despediram mais tarde. (Esd 8:1, 3; 10:25, 44) Pedaías, um dos da família, fez reparos numa parte do muro de Jerusalém. (Ne 3:25) O cabeça da família de Parós atestou o pacto posterior, concordando em guardar a Lei de Jeová. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14.

PARQUE. A palavra par·dés ocorre apenas três vezes nas Escrituras Hebraicas, e há quem considere que se derive da palavra persa pairidaeza. (Contudo, veja PARAÍSO.) Segundo a Cyclopœdia (Ciclopédia) de M'Clintock e Strong (1894, Vol. VII, p. 652), Xenofonte usava o termo grego com o significado de "um extenso terreno, cercado por forte cerca ou muro, com abundância de árvores, arbustos, plantas ornamentais e hortaliças, e no qual animais escolhidos eram mantidos em vários graus de restrição ou de liberdade, segundo sua ferocidade ou pacificidade". A forma grega da palavra (pa·rá·dei·sos) foi usada pelos tradutores da Septuaginta em todas as referências ao jardim do Éden.

Entre suas grandes obras, Salomão construiu "jardins e parques ["pomares", CBC, PIB; hebr.: far·de·sím]", nos quais plantou árvores frutíferas de todos os tipos. (Ec 2:5) Ele usa o mesmo termo em seu "cântico superlativo", quando o namorado pastor descreve a pele da donzela sulamita como um "paraíso de romãs, com as frutas mais seletas". (Cân 1:1; 4:12, 13) Nos tempos pós-exílicos, Neemias 2:7, 8 mostra que o rei persa colocou Asafe como o "guarda do parque que pertence ao rei" e que se teve de fazer um pedido para se conseguir permissão de cortar árvores deste parque para a obra de reconstrução feita em Jerusalém. — Veja FLORESTA; JARDIM.

PARSANDATA [do persa, possivelmente significando "O Investigador"]. Um dos dez filhos de Hamã. — Est 9:7.

PARSIM. Uma das palavras misteriosamente escritas na parede do palácio de Belsazar, e lidas e interpretadas por Daniel. (Da 5:25) É o plural de "Peres", que significa "meio siclo", uma divisão do siclo. Ao fazer a interpretação, Daniel não usou o plural "Parsim", mas o singular (Peres). (Da 5:28) Talvez fosse porque somente Belsazar estivesse presente para ouvir o profeta explicar a mensagem profética, embora ela se aplicasse a ambos os governantes do Império Babilônio, Belsazar e Nabonido. — Veja PERES, I, N.º 2.

PARTEIRA. O termo hebraico para "parteira" é o particípio feminino do verbo ya·ládh (parir; dar à luz), e, assim, refere-se literalmente à mulher que ajuda a parir ou a dar à luz filhos. (Veja NASCIMENTO.) A parteira auxilia a mãe durante os trabalhos de parto e, uma vez nascida a criança, corta o cordão umbilical e banha o bebê. Nos tempos antigos, ela também o esfregava com sal e o enfaixava com tiras de pano. — Ez 16:4.

Amigas íntimas ou parentas, e mulheres mais idosas da comunidade, às vezes serviam nessa qualidade, mas, devido a serem necessários conhecimentos especiais, perícia e experiência, especialmente quando o parto era difícil, poucas seguiam a profissão de parteira. No caso do nascimento de Benjamim, cujo 'parto foi difícil' para Raquel, a parteira pôde garantir-lhe que ela teria o filho, embora a própria Raquel viesse a morrer. (Gên 35:16-19) Durante o parto complicado dos gêmeos de Tamar — Peres e Zerá — a parteira estava atenta para identificar aquele que ela achava seria o primogênito. Ela rapidamente atou um pedaço de escarlate à mão estendida de Zerá. No entanto, este recolheu a mão e seu irmão saiu primeiro, causando à mãe uma ruptura do períneo. — Gên 38:27-30.

Durante a escravização dos israelitas no Egito, as parteiras ficaram numa situação muito crítica e perigosa. Faraó convocou duas delas, Sifrá e Puá, e ordenou-lhes que matassem todo bebezinho hebreu do sexo masculino logo ao nascer. É provável que essas duas mulheres servissem como dirigentes de sua classe profissional e fossem responsáveis por transmitir as ordens do rei às suas companheiras. Contudo, "as parteiras temiam o verdadeiro Deus e não fizeram como o rei do Egito lhes falara, mas preservavam vivos os meninos". Por causa disso, Faraó as chamou para prestar contas e perguntou: "Por que é que fizestes esta coisa?" Fingindo que este assunto lhes escapava ao controle, disseram que as mulheres hebreias estavam "cheias de vida" e davam à luz 'antes que a parteira pudesse chegar a elas'. (Êx 1:15-19) Por terem as parteiras temido a Jeová e se recusado a praticar o infanticídio, ele as abençoou e as recompensou com seus próprios filhos. — Êx 1:20, 21.

PARTO. Veja NASCIMENTO.

PARTOS [De (Pertencentes a) Pártia]. Judeus e prosélitos da Pártia são os primeiros alistados entre os visitantes presentes à Festividade de Pentecostes, de 33 EC, em Jerusalém. O espírito santo de Deus, derramado sobre o grupo de cerca de 120 discípulos cristãos, habilitou-os a proclamar as boas novas na língua ou no dialeto desses partos, alguns dos quais sem dúvida as aceitaram, tornaram-se cristãos e provavelmente disseminaram a mensagem entre seu próprio povo, ao retornarem à Pártia. (At 1:15; 2:1, 4-12, 37-47) Os judeus naturais da Pártia faziam parte da Diáspora; os "prosélitos" (At 2:10) eram não judeus que se haviam convertido ao judaísmo.

O Império da Pártia originou-se ao SE do mar Cáspio, mas, com o tempo, veio a estender-se do Eufrates até a Índia. Os partos estiveram sujeitos aos persas desde o tempo do Rei Ciro. Mais tarde, ficando sob o domínio grego, rebelaram-se contra os sucessores de Alexandre Magno e conseguiram manter sua independência durante vários séculos, mesmo contra Roma. Dominaram a Judeia por diversos anos antes de perdê-la para os romanos. Os partos ainda eram uma nação independente no primeiro século, e, embora praticassem a predominante religião persa, tolerava-se a religião dos judeus e de outros.

PARUA. Pai do Jeosafá que servia como preposto de alimento para Salomão no território de Issacar. — 1Rs 4:7, 17.

PASAQUE. Chefe de família na tribo de Aser; filho de Jaflete. — 1Cr 7:30, 33, 40.

PÁSCOA. A Páscoa (hebr.: pé·sahh; gr.: pá·skha) foi instituída na noite que precedeu o Êxodo do Egito. A primeira Páscoa foi celebrada por volta da época da lua cheia, no dia 14 do mês de abibe (mais tarde chamado nisã) do ano 1513 AEC. Dali em diante, deveria ser celebrada anualmente. (Êx 12:17-20, 24-27) Abibe (nisã) cai nos meses de março-abril do calendário gregoriano. A Páscoa era seguida de sete dias da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, de 15 a 21 de nisã. A Páscoa comemora a libertação dos israelitas do Egito e serem os seus primogênitos 'passados por alto' quando Jeová destruiu os primogênitos do Egito. Quanto à época do ano, caía no início da colheita da cevada. — Êx 12:14, 24-47; Le 23:10.

A Páscoa era uma celebração comemorativa; portanto, a ordem bíblica era: "E terá de acontecer que, quando os vossos filhos vos disserem: 'Que significa para vós este serviço?', então tereis de dizer: 'É o sacrifício da páscoa a Jeová, que passou por alto as casas dos filhos de Israel no Egito quando feriu os egípcios, mas livrou as nossas casas.'" — Êx 12:26, 27.

Visto que para os judeus o dia começava após o pôr do sol e terminava no pôr do sol do dia seguinte, o dia 14 de nisã começaria após o poente. A Páscoa seria comemorada na noite após a conclusão do dia 13 de nisã. Visto que a Bíblia declara definitivamente que Cristo é o sacrifício da Páscoa (1Co 5:7) e que ele celebrou a refeição pascoal na noite antes de ser morto, a data de sua morte deve ser 14 de nisã, não 15 de nisã, a fim de cumprir com exatidão o fator tempo retratado no tipo, ou sombra, fornecido na Lei. — He 10:1.

As Leis Que Regiam Sua Observância. Cada família devia escolher um cordeiro ou um cabrito sadio, de um ano. Ele era levado para dentro de casa no dia 10 do mês de abibe e mantido ali até o dia 14, e então era abatido e seu sangue era esparrinhado com um ramo de hissopo nas ombreiras e nas vergas das portas da casa em que o comeriam (não na soleira da porta, onde o sangue seria pisado).

O cordeiro (ou cabrito) era abatido, esfolado, suas partes internas eram limpas e recolocadas no lugar, e ele então era assado inteiro, bem passado, sem que se lhe quebrasse nenhum osso. (2Cr 35:11; Núm 9:12) Se a família fosse pequena demais para consumir o animal inteiro, então devia ser partilhado com uma família vizinha e comido naquela mesma noite. Quaisquer sobras deviam ser queimadas antes do amanhecer. (Êx 12:10; 34:25) Era comido com pães não fermentados, "o pão de tribulação", e com ervas amargas, pois a vida deles fora amarga na escravidão. — Êx 1:14; 12:1-11, 29, 34; De 16:3.

O que significa a expressão "entre as duas noitinhas"?

Os israelitas contavam o dia de pôr do sol a pôr do sol. Assim, o dia da Páscoa começava no pôr do sol do dia 13 de abibe (nisã). O animal devia ser abatido "entre as duas noitinhas". (Êx 12:6) Há diferenças de opinião quanto à hora exata a que se refere esta expressão. Segundo alguns peritos, bem como os judeus caraítas e os samaritanos, trata-se do período entre o pôr do sol e a escuridão da noite. Por outro lado, os fariseus e os rabinistas consideravam que a primeira noitinha ocorria quando o sol começava a descer e que a segunda noitinha era o verdadeiro pôr do sol. Devido a este último conceito, os rabinos afirmam que o cordeiro era abatido no fim do dia 14, não no começo, e, portanto, que a refeição pascoal era realmente tomada no dia 15 de nisã.

Sobre este ponto, os professores Keil e Delitzsch dizem: "Desde data bem remota prevalecem diferentes opiniões entre os judeus quanto à hora exata tencionada. Aben Ezra concorda com os caraítas e com os samaritanos em considerar a primeira noitinha como a hora em que o sol mergulha abaixo do horizonte, e a segunda, como a hora de escuridão total; neste caso, 'entre as duas noitinhas' seria das 18 às 19:20 horas. . . . Segundo a ideia rabínica, a hora em que o sol começa a descer, a saber, das 15 às 17 horas, era a primeira noitinha, e o pôr do sol era a segunda; de modo que 'entre as duas noitinhas' era das 15 às 18 horas. Expositores modernos decidiram mui apropriadamente a favor do conceito expendido por Aben Ezra e do costume adotado pelos caraítas e pelos samaritanos." — Commentary on the Old Testament (Comentário sobre o Velho Testamento), 1973, Vol. I, O Segundo Livro de Moisés, p. 12; veja DIA.

À base do precedente, e especialmente em vista de textos tais como Êxodo 12:17, 18, Levítico 23:5-7 e Deuteronômio 16:6, 7, o peso da evidência tende para a aplicação da expressão "entre as duas noitinhas" ao período entre o pôr do sol e a escuridão. Isto significaria que a refeição pascoal era comida bem depois do pôr do sol, em 14 de nisã, pois era preciso considerável tempo para abater, esfolar e assar cabalmente o animal. Deuteronômio 16:6 ordena: "Deves sacrificar a páscoa, à noitinha, assim que se pôr o sol." Jesus e seus apóstolos celebraram a refeição pascoal "depois de anoitecer". (Mr 14:17; Mt 26:20) Judas saiu imediatamente depois da celebração da Páscoa, "e era noite". (Jo 13:30) Quando Jesus comemorou a Páscoa com os 12 apóstolos deve ter havido longas conversas; daí, também, algum tempo seria usado por Jesus para lavar os pés dos apóstolos. (Jo 13:2-5) Assim, a instituição da Refeição Noturna do Senhor certamente ocorreu bem tarde da noite. — Veja REFEIÇÃO NOTURNA DO SENHOR.

Na Páscoa realizada no Egito, o cabeça da família foi responsável por abater o cordeiro (ou cabrito) em cada casa, e todos deviam permanecer dentro de casa para evitar ser mortos pelo anjo. Os participantes comeram em pé, com os lombos cingidos, com o cajado na mão, com as sandálias nos pés, para que estivessem prontos para uma longa jornada em terreno acidentado (embora não raro trabalhassem descalços no dia a dia). À meia-noite, todos os primogênitos dos egípcios foram mortos, mas o anjo passou por alto as casas em que o sangue havia sido espargido. (Êx 12:11, 23) Toda família egípcia em que havia um varão primogênito foi atingida, desde a casa do próprio Faraó até o primogênito dos prisioneiros. Não morreram os que eram cabeça de casa, embora estes talvez fossem primogênitos, mas todo primogênito varão que se achava debaixo dum cabeça, bem como o primogênito macho dos animais. — Êx 12:29, 30; veja PRIMOGÊNITO, PRIMEIRO NASCIDO.

As Dez Pragas lançadas sobre o Egito mostraram ser um julgamento contra os deuses do Egito, especialmente a décima: a morte dos primogênitos. (Êx 12:12) O carneiro era sagrado para o deus Rá, de modo que esparrinhar o sangue do cordeiro pascoal nos marcos das portas seria blasfêmia aos olhos dos egípcios. Além disso, o touro era sagrado, e a destruição dos primogênitos dos touros seria um golpe no deus Osíris. O próprio Faraó era venerado como filho de Rá. Assim, a morte do primogênito do próprio Faraó mostraria a impotência tanto de Rá como de Faraó.

No Deserto e na Terra da Promessa. Só se menciona uma celebração da Páscoa no ermo. (Núm 9:1-14) A guarda da Páscoa durante a jornada no ermo provavelmente foi limitada, por duas razões: (1) As instruções originais de Jeová eram que ela tinha de ser observada quando chegassem à Terra da Promessa. (Êx 12:25; 13:5) (2) Os nascidos no ermo não haviam sido circuncidados (Jos 5:5), ao passo que todos os participantes varões da Páscoa tinham de ser circuncidados. — Êx 12:45-49.

O Registro das Páscoas Celebradas. As Escrituras Hebraicas fornecem relatos diretos da Páscoa (1) no Egito (Êx 12); (2) no ermo junto ao Sinai, em 14 de nisã de 1512 AEC (Núm 9); (3) quando chegaram à Terra da Promessa, em Gilgal, e depois da circuncisão dos varões, em 1473 AEC (Jos 5); (4) na ocasião em que Ezequias restaurou a adoração verdadeira (2Cr 30); (5) a Páscoa de Josias (2Cr 35); e (6) a celebração feita por Israel depois do retorno do exílio babilônico (Esd 6). (Além disso, faz-se menção das Páscoas realizadas nos dias de Samuel e nos dias dos reis, em 2Cr 35:18.) Depois que os israelitas se estabeleceram na terra, a festividade da Páscoa era celebrada "no lugar que Jeová, teu Deus, escolher para ali fazer residir seu nome", em vez de em cada casa ou nas várias cidades. Com o tempo, o local escolhido veio a ser Jerusalém. — De 16:1-8.

Acréscimos. Depois de Israel se ter fixado na Terra da Promessa, certas mudanças foram feitas e vários acréscimos vieram a existir na celebração da Páscoa. Eles deixaram de participar da festa em pé, ou equipados para uma jornada, pois já estavam na terra que Deus lhes dera. Os celebrantes do primeiro século comiam-na costumeiramente recostados sobre o seu lado esquerdo, com a cabeça apoiada na mão esquerda. Isto explica como um dos discípulos de Jesus podia estar 'recostado na frente do seio de Jesus'. (Jo 13:23) Na Páscoa realizada no Egito não se usou vinho, nem havia ordem alguma da parte de Jeová para que fosse usado na festividade. Tal costume foi introduzido mais tarde. Jesus não condenou o uso do vinho na refeição, mas bebeu vinho com os apóstolos e, depois, ofereceu-lhes um copo para que bebessem, ao instituir a Refeição Noturna do Senhor, a Comemoração de sua morte. — Lu 22:15-18, 20.

De acordo com fontes judaicas tradicionais, usava-se vinho tinto e passavam-se quatro copos, embora o serviço não se restringisse a quatro copos. Os Salmos 113 a 118 eram entoados durante a refeição, concluindo com o Salmo 118. É provável que tenha sido um destes salmos que Jesus e os apóstolos cantaram ao concluírem a Refeição Noturna do Senhor. — Mt 26:30.

Costumes da Época da Páscoa. Faziam-se grandes preparativos em Jerusalém na época da festividade, visto que celebrar a Páscoa era um requisito da Lei para todo varão israelita e para todo varão dentre os residentes forasteiros circuncisos. (Núm 9:9-14) Isto significava que muitas pessoas viajavam para a cidade com muitos dias de antecedência. Chegavam antes da Páscoa, a fim de se purificarem cerimonialmente. (Jo 11:55) Diz-se que com cerca de um mês de antecedência se enviavam homens para preparar as pontes e colocar as estradas em boas condições para a conveniência dos peregrinos. Visto que o contato com um cadáver tornava impura a pessoa, tomavam-se precauções especiais para proteger o viajante. Por ser costumeiro enterrar pessoas em campos abertos caso morressem ali, os sepulcros eram tornados claramente distinguíveis por serem caiados um mês antes. (The Templo [O Templo], de A. Edersheim, 1874, pp. 184, 185) Isto permite entender as palavras de Jesus aos escribas e fariseus, de que eles se assemelhavam a "sepulcros caiados". — Mt 23:27.

Para os que vinham a Jerusalém a fim de celebrar a Páscoa, ofereciam-se acomodações nas casas. Num lar oriental, podia-se dormir em todos os cômodos, e várias pessoas podiam ser alojadas em um só aposento. O teto plano da casa também podia ser usado. Adicionava-se a isto o fato de que muitos dos celebrantes obtinham alojamentos fora dos muros da cidade, especialmente em Betfagé e Betânia, dois povoados nas encostas do monte das Oliveiras. — Mr 11:1; 14:3.

Questões Quanto à Sequência dos Eventos. Foi a questão do aviltamento que deu lugar às palavras: "Eles mesmos não entraram no palácio do governador, para que não se aviltassem, mas pudessem comer a páscoa." (Jo 18:28) Os judeus consideravam aviltante entrar na casa de um gentio. (At 10:28) Esta declaração, porém, foi feita "de manhã cedo", portanto, depois de a refeição pascoal ter sido comida. Deve-se notar que, naquela época, o período inteiro, incluindo o dia da Páscoa e a Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados que se seguia, era às vezes chamado de "Páscoa". À luz deste fato, Alfred Edersheim dá a seguinte explicação: Na Páscoa se fazia uma oferta pela paz, voluntária, e no dia seguinte, 15 de nisã, o primeiro dia da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, fazia-se outra, obrigatória. Esta segunda oferta é que os judeus tinham receio de não poder comer, caso se tornassem aviltados na sala de julgamentos de Pilatos. — The Temple, 1874, pp. 186, 187.

O "primeiro dia dos Pães não Fermentados". Surge também uma questão relacionada com a declaração em Mateus 26:17: "No primeiro dia dos Pães não Fermentados, os discípulos vieram a Jesus, dizendo: 'Onde queres que preparemos para comeres a páscoa?' "

A expressão "primeiro dia" aqui poderia ser traduzida "dia anterior". A respeito do uso da palavra grega aqui traduzida "primeiro", a nota de rodapé de Mateus 26:17, na Tradução do Novo Mundo, diz: "Ou: 'No dia antes dos.' Esta tradução da palavra gr. [pró·tos], seguida pelo caso genitivo da palavra seguinte, concorda com o sentido e a tradução duma construção similar em Jo 1:15, 30, a saber: 'existiu antes [pró·tos] de mim'." Segundo o Greek-English Lexicon (Léxico Grego-Inglês), de Liddell e Scott, "[pró·tos] é às v. [às vezes] usado onde esperaríamos [pró·te·ros (que significa 'antes, anteriormente')]". (Revisado por H. Jones, Oxford, 1968, p. 1535) Naquela época, o dia da Páscoa viera a ser considerado, em geral, como o primeiro dia da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados. Assim, pois, o grego original, harmonizado com o costume judaico, permite que a pergunta tenha sido feita a Jesus no dia anterior à Páscoa.

"Preparação." Em João 19:14, o apóstolo João, descrevendo a parte final do julgamento de Jesus perante Pilatos, diz: "Ora, era a preparação da páscoa; era cerca da sexta hora [do período diurno, entre 11 e 12 horas]." Naturalmente isto ocorreu depois da hora da refeição pascoal, que havia sido comida na noite anterior. Encontram-se expressões similares nos versículos 31 e 42. Aqui o vocábulo grego pa·ra·skeu·é é traduzido "preparação". Esta palavra parece assinalar, não o dia que antecedia 14 de nisã, mas o dia que precedia o sábado semanal, que, neste caso, era um "grande" sábado, a saber, não só um sábado em virtude de ser 15 de nisã, o primeiro dia da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados em si, mas também um sábado semanal. Isto é compreensível, visto que, conforme já dito, o termo "Páscoa" às vezes era usado para referir-se à inteira festividade. — Jo 19:31; veja PREPARAÇÃO.

Significado Profético. O apóstolo Paulo, ao instar os cristãos a levar uma vida limpa, atribui significado pictórico à Páscoa. Diz ele: "Pois, deveras, Cristo, a nossa páscoa, já tem sido sacrificado." (1Co 5:7) Ele aqui assemelha Cristo Jesus ao cordeiro pascoal. João, o Batizador, apontou para Jesus, dizendo: "Eis o Cordeiro de Deus, que tira o pecado do mundo!" (Jo 1:29) É possível que João tivesse presente o cordeiro pascoal, ou talvez estivesse pensando no cordeiro que Abraão ofereceu em lugar de seu próprio filho, Isaque, ou no cordeiro que era oferecido cada manhã e cada noitinha sobre o altar de Deus, em Jerusalém. — Gên 22:13; Êx 29:38-42.

Certas particularidades da celebração da Páscoa cumpriram-se em Jesus. Um cumprimento está relacionado com o fato de que o sangue sobre as casas no Egito livrou os primogênitos israelitas da destruição às mãos do anjo destruidor. Paulo fala dos cristãos ungidos como a congregação dos primogênitos (He 12:23), e de Cristo como o seu libertador, mediante o seu sangue. (1Te 1:10; Ef 1:7) Nenhum osso do cordeiro pascoal devia ser quebrado. Havia sido profetizado que nenhum dos ossos de Jesus seria quebrado, e isto se cumpriu por ocasião de sua morte. (Sal 34:20; Jo 19:36) Assim, a Páscoa observada pelos judeus durante séculos era uma daquelas coisas em que a Lei provia uma sombra das coisas vindouras e apontava para Jesus Cristo, "o Cordeiro de Deus". — He 10:1; Jo 1:29.

PAS-DAMIM. Evidentemente outro nome para Efes-Damim, um lugar situado entre Socó e Azeca. — 1Sa 17:1; 1Cr 11:13.

PASEIA [Aleijado].

1. Descendente de Judá na linhagem de "Quelube, irmão de Suá". — 1Cr 4:1, 11, 12.

2. Antepassado duma família de netineus, alguns dos quais retornaram do exílio babilônico com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 49; Ne 7:51.

3. Pai do Joiada que ajudou a fazer reparos no Portão da Cidade Antiga, no muro de Jerusalém (455 AEC). — Ne 3:6.

PASSARINHEIRO. Pessoa que se empenha em capturar aves. (Pr 6:5; Sal 124:7) Entre os hebreus, parece que isto era feito primariamente por meio de armadilhas, laços ou redes, embora seja bem possível que outros meios fossem usados, tais como o arco e a flecha, e a funda.

Depois do Dilúvio, as aves, desde que apropriadamente sangradas, foram postas à disposição do homem como alimento. (Gên 9:2-4) Embora a Lei mosaica tenha mais tarde proscrito comer certas espécies, grande variedade de aves era considerada "limpa" para consumo. (De 14:11-20) O sangue das aves caçadas devia ser 'derramado e coberto com pó'. (Le 17:13, 14) Além de servirem como alimento (Ne 5:18; 1Rs 4:22, 23), algumas das aves apanhadas, especialmente pombos novos e rolas, podiam ser usadas em sacrifícios (Le 1:14), e passarinheiros provavelmente forneciam algumas das pombas vendidas no templo em Jerusalém na época em que Jesus estava na Terra. (Jo 2:14, 16) Certas aves de bela plumagem ou de canto atraente eram provavelmente vendidas como animais de estimação. — Veja Jó 41:5; 1Rs 10:22.

Armadilhas e Laços. Dos termos hebraicos usados para designar armadilhas e laços, considera-se que dois (moh·qésh e pahh) relacionam-se primariamente com os que eram usados pelos passarinheiros. Tem-se sugerido que moh·qésh ("laço"; Am 3:5) denota um laço que era operado pelo passarinheiro (ou um grupo deles), ao passo que pahh (Jó 22:10; Sal 91:3) descreve uma armadilha que disparava automaticamente quando o pássaro nela entrava. O pássaro era atraído para dentro da armadilha por meio duma isca ou dum engodo. (Pr 7:23) A palavra hebraica para "passarinheiro" (ya·qúsh ou ya·qóhsh) vem da raiz verbal ya·qósh, que significa "armar um laço". — Je 50:24.

O passarinheiro dos tempos antigos tinha de estudar os vários hábitos e peculiaridades de cada espécie de ave e utilizar métodos astutos de ocultação e de camuflagem ao colocar armadilhas. (Veja Jó 18:10; Sal 64:5, 6; 140:5.) Por terem os olhos situados nas partes laterais, a maioria das aves tem um campo de visão mais amplo do que os humanos. Além disso, certas aves podem divisar objetos a distâncias que exigiriam do homem o uso de binóculos. Tal visão, conjugada com a cautela natural das aves, salienta a veracidade do provérbio: "É debalde que se estende a rede diante dos olhos de algo que tem asas." — Pr 1:17.

O homem, incapaz de prever o futuro e limitado em sua habilidade de lidar com calamidades, é comparado a "pássaros que estão sendo apanhados numa armadilha [hebr.: bap·páhh], . . . enlaçados num tempo calamitoso, quando cai sobre eles repentinamente". (Ec 9:12) Os justos confrontam-se com laços sutis, armadilhas ocultas, engodos atraentes, e iscas, que são colocados em suas veredas para atraí-los ao domínio dos iníquos, que procuram levá-los à ruína moral e espiritual. (Sal 119:110; 142:3; Os 9:8) Falsas profetisas são condenadas por 'caçarem almas como se fossem coisas voadoras'. (Ez 13:17-23) Contudo, visto que Jeová mostra estar com os seus servos fiéis, a "alma [deles] é como o pássaro que escapou da armadilha dos enlaçadores. A armadilha está destroçada e nós mesmos escapamos". (Sal 124:1, 7, 8) O salmista orou: "Guarda-me das garras da armadilha [fahh] que me armaram e dos laços [u·mo·qeshóhth, feminino plural de moh·qésh] daqueles que praticam o que é prejudicial. Os iníquos cairão juntos nas suas próprias redes, enquanto eu, da minha parte, passarei." — Sal 141:9, 10.

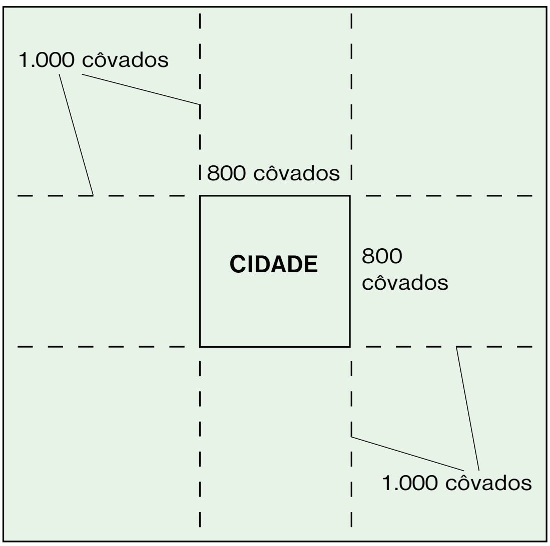
PASTAGENS. Veja PASTIOS.

PASTIOS. Terras agrícolas, especialmente as usadas para animais de pasto, em torno de cada uma das 48 cidades dos levitas, espalhadas em Israel. Estas terras jamais deviam ser vendidas, embora as casas nas cidades pudessem ser vendidas e ficassem sob os regulamentos do jubileu. — Núm 35:2-5; Le 25:32-34; Jos 21:41, 42.

A área dos pastios devia estender-se "desde o muro da cidade para fora por mil côvados [445 m], em todo o redor". Mas o versículo seguinte acrescenta: "E tendes de medir fora da cidade, do lado do leste, dois mil côvados", e assim por diante nas quatro direções. (Núm 35:4, 5) Têm-se oferecido inúmeras sugestões para harmonizar os dois dados. Alguns salientam que a Septuaginta grega reza "dois mil" no primeiro caso, em vez de "mil".



2.800 côvados − 800 côvados [tamanho da cidade]
= 2.000 côvados

Contudo, o texto hebraico, bem como a Vulgata latina e a Pesito siríaca, rezam "mil". Comentaristas judeus apresentam a possibilidade de que os primeiros mil côvados (Núm 35:4) fossem abertos e usados para olivais e estrebarias, ao passo que a segunda medida (Núm 35:5) destinava-se a pastios propriamente ditos, bem como a campos e vinhedos, totalizando 3.000 côvados em cada lado.

Contudo, visto que isto deduz do texto o que não se acha expresso, outra explicação parece mais provável. Assim, alguns comentaristas creem que as medidas significam que a área destinada a pastagens era determinada por se medirem 1.000 côvados a partir de cada um dos quatro lados da cidade: leste, oeste, norte e sul. Quanto aos 2.000 côvados de cada lado, eles creem que a expressão "fora da cidade" significa que estes 2.000 côvados não eram medidos a partir dos muros da cidade, mas que eram as medidas de cada um dos quatro lados da área de pastagens, conforme medida ao longo do seu perímetro. Se assim for, isto significaria que o espaço ocupado pela "cidade no meio" não estava incluído na contagem dos 2.000 côvados. Conforme mostra o diagrama, isto permitiria harmonizar os dois enfoques das medidas.

Na visão do templo, que Ezequiel teve, o santuário devia ter 50 côvados "como pastio em cada lado". (Ez 45:2) A cidade "O Próprio Jeová Está Ali" que o profeta observou em visão tinha pastios de 250 côvados em cada lado. (Ez 48:16, 17, 35) Pastios foram mencionados em 1 Crônicas 5:16 com relação a "Sarom", que alguns creem ter sido uma região ou cidade ao L do Jordão. A palavra hebraica traduzida "pastios" nos exemplos acima também aparece em Ezequiel 27:28, onde é usada com relação a Tiro, a cidade situada na costa e numa ilha. Neste caso, a palavra tem sido traduzida "praias" (BJ, BMD), "várzeas do litoral" (BV), "campina" (NM) e "arrabaldes" (Al), o que faz assim com que a profecia talvez indique que os que estavam ao longo da costa próxima a Tiro lamentariam a derrubada dela.

Os rebanhos ocupavam um importante lugar na vida de muitos israelitas, o que tornava necessário pastagens para ovelhas e cabritos. (2Sa 7:8; 1Cr 4:39-41) A falta de pastagens para as manadas trazia dificuldades (Gên 47:3, 4); ao passo que fartas pastagens contribuíam para um período de abundância e de paz. (Is 30:23; Sal 65:12, 13; 23:2) Por extensão, pastagens abandonadas indicariam completa desolação (Is 27:10), mas a restauração à paz e ao favor seria sugerida por serem as pastagens utilizadas de novo. (Is 65:10; Je 23:3; 33:12; 50:19; Miq 2:12) Assim como as ovelhas eram conduzidas pelo pastor amoroso a pastos em que ficavam seguras e tinham abundância, da mesma forma o povo de Deus é guiado e cuidado por Jeová. — Sal 79:13; 95:7; 100:3; Ez 34:31.

PASTOR. Pessoa que cuida, alimenta e guarda ovelhas ou rebanhos mistos de ovelhas e cabritos. (Gên 30:35, 36; Mt 25:32; veja OVELHA.) A atividade pastoril remonta a Abel, filho de Adão. (Gên 4:2) Embora encarados de forma honrosa em outras partes, no Egito agrícola os pastores eram vistos com desdém. — Gên 46:34.

Com frequência, o dono, seus filhos (tanto homens como mulheres), ou outro parente, cuidavam do rebanho. (Gên 29:9; 30:31; 1Sa 16:11) Entre os abastados, como no caso de Nabal, servos trabalhavam como pastores, e talvez houvesse um pastor-mor ou principal sobre os demais. (1Sa 21:7; 25:7, 14-17) Quando o dono do rebanho ou membros de sua família pastoreavam os animais, o rebanho geralmente passava bem. Mas um trabalhador contratado nem sempre tinha o mesmo interesse pessoal pelo rebanho, o qual, por conseguinte, às vezes sofria. — Jo 10:12, 13.

O equipamento do pastor podia incluir uma tenda (Is 38:12), uma veste com que pudesse envolver-se (Je 43:12), uma vara e uma funda para defender-se, uma sacola para guardar alimentos (1Sa 17:40; Sal 23:4) e um longo cajado ou bastão curvo usado para guiar o rebanho (Le 27:32; Miq 7:14).

Os pastores nômades, como Abraão, moravam em tendas e se mudavam de um lugar para outro a fim de encontrar pastagens para seus rebanhos. (Gên 13:2, 3, 18) No entanto, às vezes o dono dos animais permanecia em certo local, seu lar ou um acampamento base, enquanto seus servos ou membros de sua família acompanhavam o rebanho. — Gên 37:12-17; 1Sa 25:2, 3, 7, 15, 16.

Conhecem as ovelhas realmente a voz do seu pastor?

Os rebanhos de diversos pastores às vezes eram abrigados no mesmo redil, para passar a noite, havendo um porteiro para zelar por eles. Quando os pastores chegavam de manhã, eles chamavam seu rebanho, e as ovelhas atendiam ao chamado do seu respectivo pastor, e apenas o dele. Andando na frente do rebanho, o pastor o conduzia para o pasto. (Jo 10:1-5) À base de observações pessoais feitas na Síria e na Palestina, no século 19, W. M. Thomson escreveu: "[As ovelhas] são tão mansas e tão treinadas que seguem seu guardião com a máxima docilidade. Ele as conduz do aprisco, ou de suas casas nos povoados, para onde quer que lhe apraza. Visto haver muitos rebanhos num local como esse, cada um toma uma trilha diferente; e é obrigação dele achar pastagens para elas. É necessário, portanto, que elas sejam ensinadas a segui-lo e a não se desviarem para os campos de cereais, desprovidos de cerca, que se acham tão tentadoramente em ambos os lados. Qualquer ovelha que assim se desvie certamente se meterá em dificuldades. O pastor solta um grito penetrante, de vez em quando, para lembrar-lhes de sua presença. Elas conhecem a voz dele e continuam a segui-lo; mas, se um estranho as chama, elas param subitamente, erguem a cabeça, alarmadas, e, se isto se repete, viram-se e fogem, porque não conhecem a voz de um estranho. Não se trata dum costume fantasioso duma parábola; é a pura verdade. Já fiz esta experiência repetidas vezes. O pastor vai à frente, não apenas para indicar o caminho, mas para certificar-se de que seja transitável e seguro." — The Land and the Book (A Terra e o Livro), revisado por J. Grande, 1910, p. 179.

Similarmente, J. L. Porter, em The Giant Cities of Bashan and Syria's Holy Places (As Gigantescas Cidades de Basã e os Lugares Santos da Síria), comenta: "Os pastores conduziram seus rebanhos para fora da cidade através dos portões. Eles estavam bem à vista, e nós os observamos e ouvimos com muito interesse. Havia milhares de ovelhas e de cabritos, agrupados em bandos compactos e confusos. Os pastores ficaram juntos até que todos saíssem. Daí, separaram-se, cada pastor tomando um caminho diferente e dando, à medida que avançava, um grito estridente, peculiar. As ovelhas os ouviam. A princípio, os bandos vacilaram e se movimentaram, como se tivessem sido abalados por uma convulsão interna; então, começaram a formar-se pontas nas direções tomadas pelos pastores; estas se tornaram cada vez mais longas até que os bandos confusos se transformaram em correntes longas e vivas, fluindo atrás dos seus líderes." — 1868, p. 45.

À noite, o pastor levava os animais de volta ao aprisco, onde se colocava à porta e contava as ovelhas, à medida que passavam por baixo do seu cajado ou de suas mãos. — Le 27:32; Je 33:13; veja OVELHAS, APRISCO DAS.

Uma Vida Rigorosa. A vida do pastor não era fácil. Ele ficava exposto tanto ao calor quanto ao frio, bem como a noites insones. (Gên 31:40; Lu 2:8) Correndo perigo pessoal, ele protegia o rebanho de predadores, tais como leões, lobos e ursos, bem como de ladrões. (Gên 31:39; 1Sa 17:34-36; Is 31:4; Am 3:12; Jo 10:10-12) O pastor tinha de impedir que o rebanho se espalhasse (1Rs 22:17), procurar as ovelhas perdidas (Lu 15:4), carregar ao colo cordeiros fracos ou cansados (Is 40:11) e cuidar dos animais doentes e feridos — enfaixando os membros fraturados e friccionando os ferimentos com azeite. (Sal 23:5; Ez 34:3, 4; Za 11:16) Tinha de exercer cuidado ao pastorear ovelhas que amamentavam. (Gên 33:13) Diariamente, em geral por volta do meio-dia, o pastor dava de beber ao rebanho. (Gên 29:3, 7, 8) Caso se desse água de poço aos animais, era necessário encher de água as calhas no solo ou os bebedouros. (Êx 2:16-19; compare isso com Gên 24:20.) Nos poços, às vezes havia incidentes desagradáveis com outros pastores. — Gên 26:20, 21.

O pastor tinha direito a um quinhão dos produtos do rebanho (1Co 9:7), e seu salário não raro era pago em animais (Gên 30:28, 31-33; 31:41), embora às vezes também em dinheiro. (Za 11:7, 12) Ele talvez tivesse de compensar perdas (Gên 31:39), mas sob o pacto da Lei não se exigia nenhuma compensação por um animal dilacerado por uma fera. — Êx 22:13.

O que foi dito sobre o pastor pode, em geral, ser aplicado ao criador de gado. No entanto, a atividade do criador de gado não se restringia a cuidar de ovelhas e de cabritos. Havia também pastores de gado bovino, de jumentos, de camelos e de suínos. — Gên 12:16; 13:7, 8; Mt 8:32, 33.

Figurado e Ilustrativo. Jeová é um Pastor que cuida amorosamente de suas ovelhas, isto é, seu povo. (Sal 23:1-6; 80:1; Je 31:10; Ez 34:11-16; 1Pe 2:25) Jesus Cristo, seu Filho, é o "grande pastor" (He 13:20) e o "pastor principal", sob cuja direção os superintendentes nas congregações cristãs pastoreiam o rebanho de Deus de modo voluntário, altruísta e anelante. (1Pe 5:2-4) Jesus referiu-se a si mesmo como o "pastor excelente", alguém que realmente sente compaixão pelas "ovelhas" e que demonstrou isto entregando sua alma em favor delas. (Jo 10:11; veja Mt 9:36.) Mas, conforme predito, o golpe desferido no "pastor excelente" fez com que o rebanho se espalhasse. — Za 13:7; Mt 26:31.

Na Bíblia, o termo "pastores" às vezes denota os governantes e os líderes dos israelitas, tanto os fiéis como os infiéis. (Is 63:11; Je 23:1-4; 50:6; Ez 34:2-10; compare isso com Núm 27:16-18; Sal 78:70-72.) Similarmente, o termo "pastores" aplica-se a líderes de outras nações. (Je 25:34-36; 49:19; Na 3:18; compare isso com Is 44:28.) Em Jeremias 6:3, "os pastores" parecem representar os comandantes de exércitos invasores. A presença de pastores, junto com seus rebanhos, consta de um quadro de restauração (Je 33:12), ao passo que se predisse que a desolação de Babilônia seria tão completa que 'nem sequer um pastor deixaria seu rebanho deitar-se ali'. — Is 13:20.

Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 12:5, 'pastorear' as nações com uma vara de ferro significa a destruição delas. — Veja Sal 2:9.

PASUR.

1. Pai do Gedalias que era um dos príncipes de Judá responsáveis por mandar lançar Jeremias numa cisterna. — Je 38:1, 4, 6.

2. Príncipe que fazia parte da delegação enviada pelo Rei Zedequias para indagar de Jeremias a respeito do futuro de Jerusalém. (Je 21:1, 2) Pasur também pediu ao rei que Jeremias fosse morto. (Je 38:1, 4, 6) Nestes dois trechos, Pasur é chamado de "filho de Malquijá". A família de sacerdotes que voltou do exílio babilônio tem um elo similar em sua genealogia: "Pasur, filho de Malquijá." (1Cr 9:12; Ne 11:12) Se o príncipe Pasur era realmente sacerdote, ele talvez tenha sido aquele de quem os "filhos de Pasur" (N.º 4) derivaram seu nome.

3. Sacerdote, "filho [ou descendente] de Imer, . . . o comissário que liderava na casa de Jeová". Pasur, objetando às profecias de Jeremias, golpeou-o e colocou-o no tronco, libertando-o no dia seguinte. Em resultado disso, Jeová, mediante Jeremias, predisse o exílio e a morte em Babilônia para Pasur e, em conformidade com isso, mudou o nome dele de Pasur para "Horror ao redor" (hebr.: Ma·ghóhr mis·sa·vív) (Je 20:1-6), expressão que ocorre várias vezes no livro de Jeremias. — Je 6:25; 20:3, 10; 46:5; 49:29.

4. "Os filhos de Pasur" eram uma casa paterna de sacerdotes, dos quais 1.247 retornaram do exílio com o sacerdote Jesua, em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:1, 2, 36, 38; Ne 7:41) Seis destes se casaram com mulheres estrangeiras, mas as despediram depois da chegada de Esdras em 468 AEC. — Esd 10:22, 44; veja N.º 2.

5. Sacerdote ou antepassado de um sacerdote que, no tempo do governador Neemias, apoiou o pacto de não tomar esposas estrangeiras. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 3, 8.

PÁTARA. Porto marítimo da Lícia, onde o apóstolo Paulo e seus associados, provavelmente em 56 EC, transferiram-se para um barco com destino a Fenícia. (At 21:1, 2) Pátara é atualmente identificada com ruínas antigas no povoado de Gelemish, na montanhosa costa SO da Ásia Menor, e situa-se a cerca de 10 km ao L do estuário do rio Xanto (Koca). Servia como porto de escala para navios procedentes da Itália, do Egito, da Síria e de outros lugares, e era o principal porto que servia às cidades ao longo do vale do rio Xanto.

PATMOS. Ilha em que o apóstolo João ficou exilado, "por ter falado a respeito de Deus e ter dado testemunho de Jesus". (Re 1:9) Enquanto esteve ali, recebeu a Revelação (Apocalipse). De acordo com a tradição antiga, João, tendo sido sentenciado por Domiciano a morar na ilha de Patmos, foi libertado depois da morte daquele governante (96 EC). — The Ante-Nicene Fathers (Os Pais Antenicenos), Vol. VIII, p. 562, "Atos do Santo Apóstolo e Evangelista João, o Teólogo".

Situada no mar da Icária (parte do Egeu), cerca de 55 km ao O da Ásia Menor, Patmos ficava a cerca de 60 km ao OSO de Mileto e menos de 240 km das sete congregações às quais se dirigem especificamente os capítulos 2 e 3 de Revelação. Esta pequena ilha vulcânica possui perfil litorâneo muito irregular e é bastante árida e rochosa. Mas, atualmente, cultivam-se ali trigo, azeitona e uva. Pelo visto devido ao seu isolamento, Patmos, junto com outras ilhas do Egeu, servia de ilha penal.

PÁTROBAS. Cristão da congregação em Roma a quem Paulo cumprimenta em sua carta. — Ro 16:14.

PATROS. Patros é regularmente associado com o Egito (hebr.: Mits·rá·yim). (Ez 30:13, 14) A maioria dos peritos relaciona o nome Patros com uma expressão egípcia que significa "Terra do Sul" e que evidentemente se referia ao Alto Egito. O Alto Egito em geral se refere à região do vale do Nilo que vai de um ponto um tanto ao S de Mênfis até (rumo sul) Siene (a moderna Assuã), na primeira catarata do Nilo. O texto em Isaías 11:11, que prediz o retorno dos israelitas exilados do 'Egito (Mizraim), Patros e Cus', parece corroborar a localização de Patros em alguma parte do Alto Egito, com Cus (Etiópia) ladeando-o ao S. Certa inscrição assíria do Rei Esar-Hadom fornece um alinhamento similar, referindo-se ao "Egito (Musur), Paturisi e Núbia [Kusu, ou Cus]". — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 290.

Ezequiel 29:14 chama Patros de "terra da . . . origem [dos egípcios]". O conceito tradicional egípcio, conforme narrado por Heródoto (II, 4, 15, 99), aparentemente corrobora isto, ao tornar o Alto Egito, e especialmente a região de Tebas, a sede do primeiro reino egípcio, sob um rei a quem Heródoto chama de Menes, nome não encontrado em registros egípcios. Diodoro Sículo (primeiro século AEC) registra um conceito similar. (Diodorus of Sicily [Diodoro da Sicília], I, 45, 1) A tradição egípcia apresentada por estes historiadores gregos pode ser tênue eco da verdadeira história apresentada na Bíblia a respeito de Mizraim (cujo nome veio a representar o Egito) e seus descendentes, incluindo Patrusim. — Gên 10:13, 14.

Após a desolação de Judá, por Nabucodonosor, um restante dos judeus fugiu para o Egito. Entre os lugares alistados em que eles moraram acham-se Migdol, Tafnes, Nofe (cidades do Baixo Egito) e a "terra de Patros". (Je 44:1) Ali eles se empenharam em adoração idólatra, o que resultou em Jeová os censurar e no aviso de uma vindoura conquista do Egito por Nabucodonosor. (Je 44:15, 26-30) Evidências em papiros do quinto século AEC mostram uma colônia judaica localizada bem no extremo S do antigo Egito, em Elefantina, junto a Siene.

PATRUSIM [De (Pertencente a) Patros]. O quinto alistado na descendência de Mizraim, filho de Cã. (Gên 10:6, 13, 14; 1Cr 1:11, 12) Pelo visto, este nome é a forma plural de Patros. (Ez 29:14) Isto indicaria que a tribo de Patrusim estabeleceu-se ou tornou-se predominante no Alto Egito.

PAU. Lugar em Edom, onde evidentemente ficava a residência de certo rei Hadar (Hadade). (Gên 36:31, 39; 1Cr 1:43, 50) A localização de Pau é agora desconhecida.

PAULO, I [Pequeno]. Israelita da tribo de Benjamim e apóstolo de Jesus Cristo. (Ef 1:1; Fil 3:5) Embora talvez tivesse tanto o nome hebraico, Saulo, como o romano, Paulo, desde a infância (At 9:17; 2Pe 3:15), é possível que este apóstolo tenha escolhido ser conhecido por seu nome romano em vista de sua comissão de declarar as boas novas aos não judeus. — At 9:15; Gál 2:7, 8.

Paulo nasceu em Tarso, destacada cidade da Cilícia. (At 21:39; 22:3) Seus pais eram hebreus e evidentemente aderiam ao ramo farisaico do judaísmo. (At 23:6; Fil 3:5) Era cidadão romano de nascimento (At 22:28), seu pai talvez tendo sido agraciado com tal cidadania devido a serviços prestados. É provável que Paulo tenha aprendido do pai a profissão de fabricante de tendas. (At 18:3) Em Jerusalém, porém, ele foi instruído pelo erudito fariseu Gamaliel, o que sugere que Paulo pertencia a uma família de destaque. (At 22:3; 5:34) Quanto a línguas, Paulo era versado pelo menos em grego e em hebraico. (At 21:37-40) Na época em que viajou como missionário, Paulo não era casado. (1Co 7:8) Durante este período geral, se não já antes disso, ele tinha uma irmã e um sobrinho que moravam em Jerusalém. — At 23:16-22.

Foi privilégio do apóstolo Paulo escrever mais livros, ou cartas, das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs do que qualquer outro. Ele recebeu visões sobrenaturais (2Co 12:1-5) e, por meio do espírito santo, conseguia falar numerosas línguas estrangeiras. — 1Co 14:18.

Perseguição, Conversão e Ministério Inicial. O registro bíblico apresenta Saulo, ou Paulo, como o "jovem" aos pés de quem as testemunhas falsas que apedrejaram o discípulo de Cristo, Estêvão, lançaram as suas próprias roupas exteriores. (At 6:13; 7:58) Paulo aprovou o assassínio de Estêvão e, devido a um zelo mal orientado pela tradição, iniciou uma campanha de violenta perseguição contra os seguidores de Cristo. Quando estes estavam prestes a ser executados, ele votava contra eles. Na ocasião em que eram julgados nas sinagogas, ele procurava obrigá-los a retratar-se. Ele estendeu sua perseguição a outras cidades, além de Jerusalém, e até conseguiu autorizações por escrito do sumo sacerdote, para procurar discípulos de Cristo até bem ao N, em Damasco, na Síria, e para amarrá-los e trazê-los a Jerusalém, provavelmente para serem julgados pelo Sinédrio. — At 8:1, 3; 9:1, 2; 26:10, 11; Gál 1:13, 14.

Quando Paulo se aproximava de Damasco, Cristo Jesus se revelou a ele numa luz brilhante e o comissionou para ser servidor e testemunha das coisas que já tinha visto e ainda veria. Embora os que estavam com Paulo também tenham caído ao chão devido a esta manifestação e ouvido o som de alguém falando, apenas Paulo entendeu as palavras e foi cegado, precisando ser conduzido pela mão até Damasco. (At 9:3-8; 22:6-11; 26:12-18) Por três dias, ele nem comeu nem bebeu. Daí, enquanto orava na casa de certo Judas, em Damasco, Paulo, em visão, observou a Ananias, discípulo de Cristo, entrar e restaurar-lhe a vista. Quando a visão se tornou realidade, Paulo foi batizado, recebeu espírito santo, alimentou-se e recuperou as forças. — At 9:9-19.

O registro em Atos 9:20-25 diz que Paulo passou algum tempo com os discípulos em Damasco e que "imediatamente" começou a pregar nas sinagogas ali. Descreve sua atividade de pregação até a ocasião em que se viu obrigado a deixar Damasco, devido a um complô armado contra sua vida. Por outro lado, a carta de Paulo aos gálatas fala que, depois de sua conversão, ele foi à Arábia e daí retornou a Damasco. (Gál 1:15-17) Não é possível atribuir à viagem para a Arábia um lugar definido na ordem desses eventos.

Paulo talvez tenha ido à Arábia logo após sua conversão a fim de meditar na vontade de Deus para ele. Em tal caso, o emprego, por Lucas, da palavra "imediatamente" significaria que Paulo iniciou sua pregação imediatamente depois de voltar a Damasco e passar a associar-se com os discípulos ali. No entanto, em Gálatas 1:17, Paulo evidentemente frisa o fato de que não subiu de imediato a Jerusalém; que a Arábia foi o único lugar além de Damasco em que esteve durante esse período inicial. Portanto, a viagem à Arábia não precisa ter necessariamente ocorrido logo depois de sua conversão. Pode ser que Paulo tenha primeiro passado alguns dias em Damasco e logo em seguida renunciado publicamente a seu proceder anterior de oposição, expressando, nas sinagogas, a sua fé em Cristo. Depois disso, é possível que tenha feito a viagem à Arábia (cujo propósito real não é revelado) e que, ao voltar, tenha continuado sua pregação em Damasco, tornando-se mais ardoroso nisso, a ponto de seus oponentes procurarem matá-lo. Os dois relatos são complementares, em vez de contraditórios, e a única questão é concernente à ordem precisa dos eventos, que simplesmente não é fornecida.

Chegando a Jerusalém (talvez em 36 EC; os três anos mencionados em Gálatas 1:18 significando possivelmente partes de três anos), Paulo verificou que os irmãos ali não criam que ele fosse discípulo. No entanto, "Barnabé veio . . . em seu auxílio e o conduziu aos apóstolos", evidentemente Pedro e "Tiago, irmão do Senhor". (Tiago, embora não fosse um dos 12, podia ser chamado apóstolo por ser apóstolo da congregação de Jerusalém.) Paulo permaneceu com Cefas (Pedro) por 15 dias. Enquanto em Jerusalém, Paulo falou denodadamente no nome de Jesus. Quando os irmãos ficaram sabendo que, por causa disto, os judeus de língua grega procuravam matar Paulo, eles "trouxeram-no para baixo a Cesareia e o enviaram a Tarso". — At 9:26-30; Gál 1:18-21.

Parece que Paulo (por volta de 41 EC) teve o privilégio de ter uma visão sobrenatural tão real que ficou sem saber se seu arrebatamento até o "terceiro céu" se dera no corpo ou fora do corpo. O "terceiro céu" parece se referir a uma forma de governo bem superior: o Reino governado pelo Messias, Jesus Cristo. — 2Co 12:1-4.

Mais tarde, Barnabé levou Saulo de Tarso a Antioquia, para ajudar na obra realizada ali entre as pessoas de língua grega. Por volta de 46 EC, depois de um ano de labuta em Antioquia, Paulo e Barnabé foram enviados pela congregação a Jerusalém com uma subministração de socorros para os irmãos ali. (At 11:22-30) Acompanhados de João Marcos, retornaram a Antioquia. (At 12:25) Depois disso, o espírito santo orientou que Paulo e Barnabé fossem colocados à parte para uma obra especial. — At 13:1, 2.

Primeira Viagem Missionária. (MAPA, Vol. 2, p. 747) Seguindo a orientação do espírito, Paulo iniciou sua primeira viagem missionária (c. 47-48 EC) em companhia de Barnabé e de João Marcos como assistente. Embarcando em Selêucia, o porto marítimo de Antioquia, eles viajaram para Chipre. Nas sinagogas de Salamina, na costa L de Chipre, começaram a "publicar a palavra de Deus". Cruzando a ilha, chegaram a Pafos, na costa O. Ali, o feiticeiro Elimas tentou opor-se ao testemunho que estava sendo dado ao procônsul Sérgio Paulo. Paulo fez então com que Elimas fosse ferido de cegueira temporária. Assombrado com o que tinha acontecido, Sérgio Paulo tornou-se crente. — At 13:4-12.

De Pafos, Paulo e seus associados velejaram para a Ásia Menor. Ao chegarem a Perge, na província romana da Panfília, João Marcos os deixou e retornou a Jerusalém. Mas Paulo e Barnabé se dirigiram para o norte, para Antioquia, na Pisídia. Embora encontrassem grande interesse ali, foram por fim expulsos da cidade, às instâncias dos judeus. (At 13:13-50) Sem se deixarem abalar, viajaram para o sudeste, até Icônio, onde os judeus também incitaram as multidões contra eles. Ao ficarem sabendo de uma tentativa de apedrejá-los, Paulo e Barnabé fugiram para Listra, na região da Licaônia. Depois de Paulo ter curado um coxo de nascença, o povo de Listra pensou que Paulo e Barnabé fossem deuses encarnados. Mas, depois disso, judeus de Icônio e de Antioquia, na Pisídia, fizeram as multidões se voltarem contra Paulo, de modo que o apedrejaram e arrastaram seu corpo para fora da cidade, julgando-o morto. Contudo, quando se viu cercado por concristãos, Paulo se levantou e entrou em Listra. No dia seguinte, ele e Barnabé partiram para Derbe. Depois de fazerem inúmeros discípulos ali, retornaram a Listra, Icônio e Antioquia (na Pisídia), fortalecendo e encorajando os irmãos e designando anciãos para servirem nas congregações estabelecidas nesses lugares. Mais tarde, pregaram em Perge e então velejaram do porto marítimo de Atália para a Antioquia, na Síria. — At 13:51–14:28.

A Questão da Circuncisão. Certos homens da Judeia chegaram a Antioquia (por volta de 49 EC) dizendo que os não judeus tinham de ser circuncidados, em obediência à Lei mosaica, a fim de ganharem a salvação. Paulo e Barnabé questionaram isto. Todavia, embora fosse apóstolo, Paulo não presumiu decidir o assunto segundo a sua própria autoridade. Antes, acompanhado por Barnabé, Tito e outros, ele foi a Jerusalém para apresentar o assunto aos apóstolos e aos anciãos da congregação ali. A decisão tomada então foi de que não se exigia a circuncisão dos crentes gentios, mas que eles deviam manter-se livres da idolatria, de comer e beber sangue e da imoralidade sexual. Além de fornecerem uma carta que delineava esta decisão, os irmãos da congregação de Jerusalém enviaram Judas e Silas como seus representantes, para esclarecer o assunto em Antioquia. Além disso, numa consideração entre Pedro (Cefas), João e o discípulo Tiago, concordou-se que Paulo e Barnabé continuassem a pregação aos gentios incircuncisos. — At 15:1-29; Gál 2:1-10.

Algum tempo depois disto, Pedro foi em pessoa a Antioquia, na Síria, e associou-se com os cristãos gentios. Mas, quando chegaram certos judeus de Jerusalém, ele afastou-se dos não judeus, evidentemente cedendo ao temor de homens, deste modo agindo de forma contrária à orientação do espírito, de que as diferenças carnais não contam para Deus. Até Barnabé foi desencaminhado. Notando isto, Paulo corajosamente censurou a Pedro em público, visto que a conduta de Pedro era prejudicial ao progresso do cristianismo. — Gál 2:11-14.

Segunda Viagem Missionária. (MAPA, Vol. 2, p. 747) Mais tarde, Paulo e Barnabé cogitaram visitar os irmãos nas cidades em que haviam pregado na primeira viagem missionária. Uma disputa sobre se deviam ou não levar João Marcos, em vista de este os ter abandonado na primeira vez, resultou na separação de Paulo e Barnabé. Paulo, portanto, escolheu Silas (Silvano) e atravessou a Síria e foi à Ásia Menor (c. 49-52 EC). Evidentemente em Listra, Paulo providenciou que o jovem Timóteo o acompanhasse, e também o circuncidou. (At 15:36–16:3) Embora a circuncisão não fosse uma exigência cristã, se Timóteo, que era meio-judeu, tivesse permanecido incircunciso, isto sem dúvida teria gerado preconceito entre os judeus contra a pregação de Paulo. Portanto, ao remover este possível obstáculo, Paulo agia em harmonia com o que mais tarde escreveu aos coríntios: "Para os judeus, tornei-me como judeu." — 1Co 9:20.

Certa noite, em Trôade, no mar Egeu, Paulo teve uma visão dum macedônio, que lhe suplicava: "Passa à Macedônia e ajuda-nos." Concluindo ser esta a vontade de Deus, Paulo e seus companheiros missionários, acompanhados por Lucas, o médico, velejaram para a Macedônia, na Europa. Em Filipos, a principal cidade macedônia, Lídia e sua família se tornaram crentes. Por ter feito com que uma jovem perdesse seus poderes de predição, expulsando dela um demônio, Paulo foi preso, junto com Silas. Mas um terremoto os libertou, e o carcereiro e sua família se tornaram cristãos. Devido à insistência de Paulo, à base de sua cidadania romana, os magistrados civis foram pessoalmente soltar da prisão o apóstolo e Silas. Depois de encorajarem os irmãos, Paulo e seus companheiros viajaram por Anfípolis e Apolônia até Tessalônica. Formou-se ali uma congregação de crentes. Contudo, judeus ciumentos instigaram um motim contra Paulo. Por este motivo, os irmãos enviaram a ele e Silas para Bereia. Ali, também, muitos se tornaram crentes, mas dificuldades provocadas pelos judeus de Tessalônica forçaram Paulo a partir. — At 16:8–17:14.

Os irmãos levaram o apóstolo a Atenas. A pregação dele na praça do mercado resultou em ele ser conduzido ao Areópago. Sua defesa motivou Dionísio, um dos juízes do tribunal que funcionava ali, bem como outros, a abraçar o cristianismo. (At 17:15-34) Em seguida, Paulo foi a Corinto, onde se hospedou na casa de um casal de judeus, Áquila e Priscila, e trabalhou com eles parte do tempo como fabricante de tendas. Pelo visto, foi de Corinto que Paulo escreveu suas duas cartas aos tessalonicenses. Depois de ensinar em Corinto por um ano e meio e estabelecer uma congregação, ele foi acusado pelos judeus perante Gálio. Mas Gálio negou-se a ouvir o caso. (At 18:1-17) Mais tarde, Paulo foi de navio para Cesareia, parando primeiro em Éfeso e pregando ali. De Cesareia, o apóstolo “subiu e cumprimentou a congregação”, sem dúvida referindo-se à congregação em Jerusalém, e então foi a Antioquia, na Síria. (At 18:18-22) É possível que anteriormente ele tenha escrito, de Corinto, sua carta aos gálatas, ou talvez então de Antioquia, na Síria.

Terceira Viagem Missionária. (MAPA, Vol. 2, p. 747) Em sua terceira viagem missionária (c. 52-56 EC), Paulo revisitou Éfeso e trabalhou ali por uns três anos. De Éfeso, escreveu sua primeira carta aos coríntios e, pelo que parece, enviou Tito para ajudar os cristãos ali. Depois de um motim contra ele, instigado pelo prateiro Demétrio, Paulo partiu de Éfeso e dirigiu-se para a Macedônia. Recebendo notícias de Corinto, por meio de Tito, Paulo, na Macedônia, compôs sua segunda carta aos coríntios. Antes de partir da Europa com uma contribuição dos irmãos da Macedônia e da Acaia para os cristãos necessitados em Jerusalém, e mui provavelmente quando estava em Corinto, Paulo escreveu sua carta aos romanos. — At 19:1–20:4; Ro 15:25, 26; 2Co 2:12, 13; 7:5-7.

A caminho de Jerusalém, Paulo discursou em Trôade e ressuscitou Êutico, que morrera acidentalmente. Parou também em Mileto, onde se reuniu com os superintendentes da congregação de Éfeso, recapitulou o seu próprio ministério no distrito da Ásia e incentivou-os a imitar seu exemplo. — At 20:6-38.

Prisão. À medida que Paulo prosseguia viagem, profetas cristãos ao longo do caminho prediziam que laços o aguardavam em Jerusalém. (At 21:4-14; compare isso com 20:22, 23.) Estas profecias se cumpriram. Enquanto Paulo estava no templo para purificar-se cerimonialmente, judeus da Ásia incitaram a violência de turbas contra ele, mas soldados romanos resgataram o apóstolo. (At 21:26-33) Ao subir as escadas que davam no quartel, Paulo obteve permissão de falar aos judeus. Assim que mencionou sua comissão de pregar aos gentios, a violência irrompeu novamente. (At 21:34–22:22) No quartel, Paulo foi estirado para ser açoitado, no esforço de se averiguar a natureza de sua culpa. O apóstolo impediu isto trazendo à atenção sua cidadania romana. No dia seguinte, o caso de Paulo foi apresentado ao Sinédrio. Pelo visto percebendo que não teria uma audiência justa, Paulo esforçou-se para criar divisão entre os fariseus e os saduceus, fazendo da ressurreição uma questão em seu caso. Visto que cria na ressurreição e era “filho de fariseus”, Paulo identificou-se como fariseu e, assim, teve êxito em pôr os saduceus, que não criam na ressurreição, contra os fariseus, e vice-versa. — At 22:23–23:10.

Um complô contra o prisioneiro Paulo tornou necessário transferi-lo de Jerusalém para Cesareia. Alguns dias depois, o sumo sacerdote Ananias, alguns dos anciãos dos judeus e o orador Tértulo foram a Cesareia para apresentar seu caso contra Paulo perante o governador Félix, acusando Paulo de provocar sedição e de tentar profanar o templo. O apóstolo mostrou que não havia evidência para sustentar as acusações que lhe eram dirigidas. Félix, porém, esperando um suborno, manteve Paulo sob custódia por dois anos. Quando Félix foi substituído por Festo, os judeus voltaram a acusar Paulo. O caso foi ouvido novamente em Cesareia, e Paulo apelou para César, a fim de impedir que o julgamento fosse transferido para Jerusalém. Mais tarde, depois de expor seu caso perante o Rei Herodes Agripa II, Paulo, bem como alguns outros detentos, foram enviados a Roma, por volta de 58 EC. — At 23:12–27:1.

Primeira e Segunda Detenções em Roma. A caminho, Paulo e os que estavam com ele sofreram naufrágio na ilha de Malta. Depois de passarem ali o inverno, chegaram por fim a Roma. (MAPA, Vol. 2, p. 750) Permitiu-se que Paulo ficasse em sua própria casa alugada, embora sob guarda. Pouco depois de sua chegada, Paulo realizou uma reunião com os principais homens dentre os judeus. Mas apenas alguns creram. O apóstolo continuou a pregar a todos os que vinham visitá-lo, por dois anos, de cerca de 59 a 61 EC. (At 27:2–28:31) Durante esse tempo, ele também escreveu suas cartas aos efésios (4:1; 6:20), aos filipenses (1:7, 12-14), aos colossenses (4:18), a Filêmon (v 9) e evidentemente também aos hebreus. (ILUSTRAÇÃO, Vol. 2, p. 750) Parece que o César Nero declarou Paulo inocente e o libertou. Evidentemente Paulo reiniciou sua atividade missionária, com Timóteo e Tito. Depois de deixar Timóteo em Éfeso e Tito em Creta, Paulo, provavelmente da Macedônia, escreveu-lhes cartas relativas aos seus deveres. (1Ti 1:3; Tit 1:5) Não se sabe se o apóstolo estendeu suas atividades à Espanha antes de sua detenção final em Roma. (Ro 15:24) Durante esta detenção (c. 65 EC), Paulo escreveu sua segunda carta a Timóteo, na qual dava a entender que sua morte era iminente. (2Ti 4:6-8) É provável que Paulo tenha sofrido martírio às mãos de Nero pouco depois disso.

Exemplo Digno de Ser Imitado. Em vista de sua fidelidade em copiar o exemplo de Cristo, o apóstolo Paulo podia dizer: "Tornai-vos meus imitadores." (1Co 4:16; 11:1; Fil 3:17) Paulo se mostrava alerta em seguir a orientação do espírito de Deus. (At 13:2-5; 16:9, 10) Não era vendedor ambulante da Palavra de Deus, mas falava com sinceridade. (2Co 2:17) Embora instruído, Paulo não tentava impressionar os outros com sua linguagem (1Co 2:1-5), nem procurava agradar a homens. (Gál 1:10) Não insistia em fazer aquilo que tinha direito, mas adaptava-se às pessoas a quem pregava, tendo cuidado de não fazer outros tropeçar. — 1Co 9:19-26; 2Co 6:3.

No decorrer de seu ministério, Paulo se esforçava zelosamente, viajando milhares de quilômetros por mar e por terra, estabelecendo muitas congregações na Europa e na Ásia Menor. Assim, não precisava de cartas de recomendação, escritas a tinta, mas podia apontar para cartas vivas, pessoas que se haviam tornado crentes mediante seus esforços. (2Co 3:1-3) Todavia, humildemente reconhecia que era um escravo (Fil 1:1), tendo por obrigação declarar as boas novas. (1Co 9:16) Não atribuía nenhum crédito a si mesmo, mas dava toda a honra a Deus, como Aquele que é responsável pelo crescimento (1Co 3:5-9) e Aquele que o havia adequadamente habilitado para o ministério. (2Co 3:5, 6) O apóstolo prezava altamente seu ministério, glorificando-o e reconhecendo que possuí-lo era uma expressão da misericórdia de Deus e de seu Filho. (Ro 11:13; 2Co 4:1; 1Ti 1:12, 13) A Timóteo, ele escreveu: "A razão pela qual me foi concedida misericórdia era que, por meio de mim, como o principal caso, Cristo Jesus demonstrasse toda a sua longanimidade, como amostra dos que irão depositar a sua fé nele para a vida eterna." — 1Ti 1:16.

Por ter sido perseguidor dos cristãos, Paulo não se considerava digno de ser chamado de apóstolo e reconhecia que somente o era pela benignidade imerecida de Deus. Desejoso que tal benignidade imerecida não lhe tivesse sido estendida em vão, Paulo trabalhava mais do que os outros apóstolos. Todavia, compreendia que apenas pela benignidade imerecida de Deus conseguia realizar seu ministério. (1Co 15:9, 10) "Para todas as coisas", disse Paulo, "tenho força em virtude daquele que me confere poder". (Fil 4:13) Suportava muitas coisas, mas não se queixava. Ao comparar suas experiências com as de outros, escreveu (c. 55 EC): "Em labores mais abundantemente, em prisões mais abundantemente, em golpes até o excesso, muitas vezes perto da morte. Dos judeus recebi cinco vezes quarenta golpes menos um, três vezes fui espancado com varas, uma vez fui apedrejado, três vezes sofri naufrágio, uma noite e um dia passei no profundo; em jornadas muitas vezes, em perigos de rios, em perigos de salteadores de estradas, em perigos da minha própria raça, em perigos das nações, em perigos na cidade, em perigos no ermo, em perigos no mar, em perigos entre falsos irmãos, em labor e labuta, muitas vezes em noites sem dormir, em fome e sede, muitas vezes em abstinência de comida, em frio e nudez. Além destas coisas de espécie externa, há o que de dia a dia me assedia, a ansiedade por todas as congregações." (2Co 11:23-28; 6:4-10; 7:5) Além de tudo isto e mais em anos subsequentes, Paulo tinha de contender com "um espinho na carne" (2Co 12:7), possivelmente uma afecção dos olhos ou de outra espécie. — Veja At 23:1-5; Gál 4:15; 6:11.

Sendo imperfeito, Paulo sofria contínuo conflito entre a mente e a carne pecaminosa. (Ro 7:21-24) Mas não desistia. Ele disse: "Surro o meu corpo e o conduzo como escravo, para que, depois de ter pregado a outros, eu mesmo não venha a ser de algum modo reprovado." (1Co 9:27) Paulo sempre mantinha diante de si o glorioso prêmio da vida imortal nos céus. Encarava todo o sofrimento como nada em comparação com a glória que havia de ser recebida como recompensa pela fidelidade. (Ro 8:18; Fil 3:6-14) Portanto, evidentemente não muito antes de sua morte, Paulo pôde escrever: "Tenho travado a luta excelente, tenho corrido até o fim da carreira, tenho observado a fé. Doravante me está reservada a coroa da justiça." — 2Ti 4:7, 8.

Como apóstolo inspirado, Paulo dispunha da autoridade para comandar e dar ordens, e fazia isso (1Co 14:37; 16:1; Col 4:10; 1Te 4:2, 11; compare isso com 1Ti 4:11), mas preferia apelar para os irmãos à base do amor, suplicando-lhes pelas "compaixões de Deus" e pela "brandura e benignidade do Cristo". (Ro 12:1; 2Co 6:11-13; 8:8; 10:1; Flm

8, 9) Era meigo e expressava terna afeição por eles, exortando-os e consolando-os como um pai. (1Te 2:7, 8, 11, 12) Embora tivesse direito de receber apoio material dos irmãos, preferia trabalhar com suas próprias mãos a fim de não ser um fardo dispendioso. (At 20:33-35; 1Co 9:18; 1Te 2:6, 9) Em resultado disso, existia forte vínculo de afeição fraterna entre Paulo e aqueles a quem ministrava. Os superintendentes da congregação de Éfeso ficaram muitíssimo condoídos e chegaram a chorar ao saberem que talvez não mais o vissem. (At 20:37, 38) Paulo se preocupava muito com o bem-estar espiritual dos concristãos e queria fazer o que pudesse para ajudá-los a tornar segura sua chamada celestial. (Ro 1:11; 15:15, 16; Col 2:1, 2) Lembrava-se constantemente deles em suas orações (Ro 1:8, 9; 2Co 13:7; Ef 3:14-19; Fil 1:3-5, 9-11; Col 1:3, 9-12; 1Te 1:2, 3; 2Te 1:3) e pedia que eles também orassem por ele. (Ro 15:30-32; 2Co 1:11) Derivava encorajamento da fé dos concristãos. (Ro 1:12) Por outro lado, Paulo era firme a favor do que é justo, não hesitando em corrigir nem mesmo a outro apóstolo quando necessário, para a promoção das boas novas. — 1Co 5:1-13; Gál 2:11-14.

Era Paulo um dos 12 apóstolos?

Embora tivesse forte convicção e provas de seu próprio apostolado, Paulo jamais se incluiu entre "os doze". Antes de Pentecostes, a assembleia cristã procurara, em resultado da exortação bíblica de Pedro, um substituto para o infiel Judas Iscariotes. Dois discípulos foram escolhidos como candidatos, talvez pelo voto dos membros varões da assembleia (tendo Pedro falado aos "homens, irmãos"; At 1:16). Daí, oraram a Jeová Deus (compare At 1:24 com 1Sa 16:7; At 15:7, 8) para que Ele indicasse qual dos dois escolhera para substituir o apóstolo infiel. Depois da oração, lançaram sortes e "a sorte caiu em Matias". — At 1:15-26; compare isso com Pr 16:33.

Não existe nenhum motivo para se duvidar de que Matias foi o escolhido por Deus. Na verdade, uma vez convertido, Paulo se destacou bastante, e suas labutas ultrapassaram as de todos os demais apóstolos. (1Co 15:9, 10) Todavia, nada há que indique que Paulo fosse pessoalmente predestinado a um apostolado de modo que Deus, com efeito, se refreasse de atender a oração da assembleia cristã, deixasse aberta a vaga de Judas até a conversão de Paulo e, assim, tornasse a designação de Matias apenas uma ação arbitrária da assembleia cristã. Ao contrário, há evidência sólida de que Matias foi uma substituição divinamente efetuada.

Em Pentecostes, o derramamento do espírito santo deu aos apóstolos poderes ímpares; são os únicos de quem se fala que podiam pôr as mãos sobre recém-batizados e conferir-lhes miraculosos dons do espírito. (Veja APÓSTOLO [Poderes miraculosos].) Se Matias na verdade não fosse o escolhido de Deus, sua incapacidade de fazer isto teria sido evidente a todos. O registro mostra que não foi este o caso. Lucas, o escritor de Atos, foi companheiro de viagem e associado de Paulo em certas missões, e o livro de Atos, portanto, sem dúvida reflete e coincide com o próprio conceito de Paulo sobre os assuntos. Este livro indica que "os doze" designaram os sete homens que deviam cuidar da questão da distribuição de alimentos. Isto ocorreu depois de Pentecostes de 33 EC, mas antes da conversão de Paulo. Assim, Matias é aqui reconhecido como um dos "doze", e ele participou com os demais apóstolos em pôr as mãos sobre os sete designados. — At 6:1-6.

O nome de quem aparece, então, entre os que estão sobre as "doze pedras de alicerce" da Nova Jerusalém, da visão de João — o de Matias ou o de Paulo? (Re 21:2, 14) Uma linha de raciocínio pareceria indicar que o mais provável é o de Paulo. Ele contribuiu muito para a congregação cristã por meio do seu ministério e especialmente por escrever grande parte das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs (14 cartas sendo atribuídas a ele). Neste respeito, Paulo 'ofuscou' Matias, sobre quem não se faz mais nenhuma menção direta depois de Atos, capítulo 1.

Mas uma consideração ponderada deixa evidente que Paulo também 'ofuscou' muitos dos 12 apóstolos originais, alguns dos quais raramente são mencionados fora das listas apostólicas. Na época da conversão de Paulo, a congregação cristã, isto é, o Israel espiritual, já havia sido estabelecida, ou fundada, e crescia já por talvez um ano ou até mais. Além disso, a primeira carta canônica de Paulo evidentemente só foi escrita por volta de 50 EC (veja TESSALONICENSES, CARTAS AOS) ou até 17 anos depois da fundação da nova nação do Israel espiritual, em Pentecostes de 33 EC. Assim, estes fatos, além da evidência já apresentada neste artigo, esclarecem o assunto. Parece razoável, portanto, que a escolha original de Deus, a saber, Matias, como aquele que havia de substituir Judas entre "os doze apóstolos do Cordeiro", tenha permanecido firme e inalterada pelo posterior apostolado de Paulo.

Qual era, então, o propósito do apostolado de Paulo? O próprio Jesus disse que visava um propósito específico — não em substituição a Judas — mas que Paulo servisse como 'apóstolo [enviado] para as nações' (At 9:4-6, 15), e Paulo reconhecia que este era o propósito de seu apostolado. (Gál 1:15, 16; 2:7, 8; Ro 1:5; 1Ti 2:7) Sendo assim, seu apostolado não era necessário para servir de alicerce quando o Israel espiritual foi estabelecido em Pentecostes de 33 EC.

PAULO, II [do lat., significando "Pequeno"]. Procônsul de Chipre quando Paulo esteve ali na sua primeira viagem missionária, por volta de 47 EC. Lucas está certo em chamá-lo de procônsul, visto que a administração de Chipre, na época, estava sujeita ao Senado romano, em vez de ao imperador. (At 13:7, 12) Anteriormente, Chipre fora província imperial, mas, em 22 AEC, foi colocado por Augusto sob o controle do Senado. — Veja PROCÔNSUL.

Em Soli, na costa N da ilha de Chipre, foi encontrada uma inscrição que inclui as palavras "no proconsulado de Paulo". O nome Lúcio Sérgio Paulo foi encontrado no mundo romano como o de um curador do Tibre, sob Cláudio César. Todavia, não há nenhuma certeza da identificação dessas pessoas com o Sérgio Paulo mencionado na Bíblia. — The Annual of the British School at Athens (O Anuário da Escola Britânica em Atenas), Londres, 1947, pp. 201-206.

Sérgio Paulo morava em Pafos, na costa ocidental da ilha. Era "homem inteligente" que, buscando sinceramente ouvir a palavra de Deus, mandou chamar Barnabé e Paulo. Enquanto estes falavam com o homem, Elimas (Barjesus), feiticeiro judeu, "começou a opor-se a eles, buscando desviar da fé o procônsul". Mas Paulo, cheio de espírito santo, disse a este feiticeiro, que se opunha às boas novas, que ele ficaria temporariamente cego. E ficou mesmo. Observando esta poderosa obra do espírito de Deus, o procônsul tornou-se crente, "pois ficou assombrado com o ensino de Jeová". — At 13:6-12.

PAVÃO [hebr.: tuk·ki·yím (plural)]. Macho de cores brilhantes, da família dos fasianídeos. É uma ave grande desta família, do tamanho aproximado dum peru. O pavão (Pavo muticus e Pavo cristatus) é especialmente notável pela sua magnífica cauda de iridescentes penas verdes e douradas, com grandes ocelos azuis. A cauda pode ser aberta à vontade para formar um impressionante anteparo ou leque semicircular, que chega a tocar no chão, em ambos os lados. O pavão agita a cauda aberta em leque, produzindo um farfalho e fazendo as penas tremeluzir com seus matizes iridescentes. O pescoço e o peito também são de um lindo colorido azul-esverdeado metálico. Por causa da sua majestosa beleza, esta ave tem sido muito apreciada, desde tempos antigos.

No tempo do Rei Salomão, sua frota de navios de Társis fazia viagens trienais, trazendo cargas de "ouro e prata, marfim, e macacos e pavões". (1Rs 10:22) Embora alguns navios de Salomão fizessem viagens a Ofir (evidentemente na região do Mar Vermelho; 1Rs 9:26-28), 2 Crônicas 9:21 menciona navios que "iam a Társis" (provavelmente na Espanha) relacionados com o transporte dos produtos acima mencionados, inclusive pavões. Portanto, não há certeza de que lugar ou região se importavam os pavões. Acha-se que estas belas aves sejam nativas do SE da Ásia, e são abundantes na Índia e em Sri Lanka. Alguns creem que o nome hebraico (tuk·ki·yím) seja aparentado com o nome do pavão no antigo tâmil, tokei. A frota de Salomão pode ter obtido os pavões quando os navios passavam pela sua rota usual e paravam em algum centro comercial que tinha contato com a Índia. Interessante, também, é a declaração em The Animal Kingdom (O Reino Animal), de Frederick Drimmer: "Durante séculos, os cientistas supunham que não existissem pavões na África — seus habitats conhecidos eram as Índias Orientais e o sudeste da Ásia. A crença dos naturalistas foi abalada em 1936, quando o pavão-do-congo [Afropavo congensis] foi descoberto no Congo Belga." — 1954, Vol. II, p. 988.

Alguns preferem relacionar a palavra hebraica tuk·ki·yím com o ky egípcio, uma espécie de macaco.

PAVIMENTO DE PEDRA. Lugar calçado em Jerusalém, em que o governador romano Pôncio Pilatos se assentou na cadeira de juiz quando Jesus Cristo foi levado perante ele para julgamento. (Jo 19:13) O lugar chamava-se em hebraico "Gabbatha", palavra de derivação incerta e que possivelmente significa "morro", "altura" ou "espaço aberto". Seu nome grego, Li·thó·stro·ton (Pavimento de Pedra), talvez indique um pavimento marchetado, de mosaico ornamental.

"O Pavimento de Pedra" onde Jesus compareceu perante Pilatos estava de algum modo ligado com o "palácio do governador". (Jo 19:1-13) Talvez fosse uma área aberta diante do palácio de Herodes, o Grande; alguns peritos preferem a identificação com um lugar perto da Torre de Antônia ou com um pátio central nela, ao NO da área do templo. Mas o lugar exato do Pavimento de Pedra continua desconhecido. — Veja ANTÔNIA, TORRE DE; GOVERNADOR, PALÁCIO DO.

PAVOR. Esta é a tradução usual do substantivo hebraico pá·hhadh (sendo o verbo pa·hhádh), que tem o sentido básico de algo que faz tremer. (Veja Miq 7:17.) Uma forma da palavra quts tem sido traduzida por 'sentir um pavor mórbido' (Êx 1:12; Núm 22:3; Is 7:16), e este termo muitas vezes transmite a ideia de "abominação". (Veja ABOMINÁVEL, COISA.) A expressão "pavor durante as noites" refere-se ao que talvez cause pavor, ou intenso medo, durante a noite, tal como um assalto de surpresa por ladrões ou um ataque por um grande animal de rapina. — Cân 3:8.

Jacó referiu-se ao Todo-Poderoso como "o Pavor de Isaque", aquele que Isaque encarava com espanto reverente, temendo desagradá-Lo. Que Jacó compartilhava este conceito com o seu pai Isaque é demonstrado pelo seu juramento feito "pelo Pavor de seu pai Isaque". — Gên 31:42, 53.

Ter pavor sadio de Jeová, refletido no desejo de evitar aquilo que Ele desaprova, é vital quando se quer continuar como Seu servo. Este pavor tornou possível que Jó fosse inculpe e reto. (Jó 1:1; 23:15; 31:23) E habilitou o salmista a perseverar num proceder que tinha o favor divino apesar de perseguido por príncipes. (Sal 119:120, 161) Jeosafá exortou os juízes designados a terem tal pavor correto, para serem imparciais ao fazer decisões justas. — 2Cr 19:5-7.

Jeová é o Protetor e Sustentador do seu povo. De modo que não há nenhum motivo para alguém ter pavor de homens, mostrando intenso medo do que estes possam fazer e assim ceder às demandas impróprias deles. (Sal 27:1; 78:53; 91:2-5; Is 12:2) Mas isto não significa que os servos de Deus nunca sofram no atual sistema de coisas. Ocasionalmente, encontram-se numa situação lastimável e desfavorável. Não se dando conta de que estes ainda gozam do cuidado de Jeová, pessoas sem fé talvez os abandonem apavoradas, não querendo compartilhar sua aparentemente desesperada sorte. (Sal 31:11) Mas Jeová não os abandona. — Sal 27:10; 94:14.

É por não terem pavor de Deus que os iníquos continuam nos seus caminhos maus. (Sal 36:1-4) Mas não escaparão de sentir o pavor que resulta da calamidade que lhes sobrevirá por não fazerem caso da sabedoria piedosa. — Pr 1:26, 27.

Quando Jeová retirou sua proteção dos israelitas infiéis, estes sentiam pavor dia e noite, incertos acerca da própria vida. Não havia maneira de escapar do desastre. (De 28:66, 67; Is 24:17-20; 33:14; Je 30:5; La 3:47) Esta espécie de pavor não é sentida por aqueles que agem em harmonia com a sabedoria piedosa, os que sempre têm espanto reverente para com o Criador. — Pr 1:33; 3:24, 25; 28:14.

Manifestações do inigualável poder, do apoio e do favor de Jeová podem fazer os observadores sentir pavor. (2Cr 17:10; Sal 53:5; 105:38; Is 19:16, 17; Je 33:9) Por exemplo, os israelitas, com ajuda divina, obtiveram vitórias notáveis e realmente atemorizantes sobre os seus inimigos (De 11:25; 1Cr 14:17; 2Cr 14:12-14; 20:29), e no tempo de Mordecai e de Ester, a inesperada reviravolta da situação em favor dos judeus causou pavor aos seus inimigos. (Est 8:17; 9:2, 3) Também a evidência de divinamente inspirada coragem e força pode provocar um pavor sadio e uma reação obediente. Assim, quando o Rei Saul com vigor apelou para que os israelitas participassem na defesa de Jabes-Gileade, eles ficaram cheios do "pavor de Jeová" e corresponderam "como um só homem". — 1Sa 11:7.

Visto que Jeová predissera a queda de Babilônia às mãos de Ciro, os israelitas não tinham motivos para sentir pavor deste evento que abalaria o mundo. Para eles, tinha de ser a libertação do pavor da ira dos babilônios. Os fabricantes de ídolos, porém, forçosamente sentiriam pavor, visto que todas as deidades fabricadas por mãos humanas mostrariam não servir de ajuda para salvar Babilônia. — Is 44:8-11, 24-28; 51:12, 13.

PAZ. Sha·lóhm, a palavra hebraica traduzida "paz", refere-se à condição livre de guerra ou de perturbação (Jz 4:17; 1Sa 7:14; 1Rs 4:24; 2Cr 15:5; Jó 21:9; Ec 3:8); pode transmitir a ideia de saúde, de segurança, de condições boas (Gên 37:14 n), de bem-estar (Gên 41:16), de amizade (Sal 41:9) e de inteireza ou totalidade (Je 13:19). A palavra grega para paz (ei·ré·ne) tem a mesma conotação ampla da palavra hebraica sha·lóhm e pode expressar as ideias de bem-estar, salvação e concórdia, além de ausência de conflito. Ela ocorre na exclamação de despedida "vai em paz", que de certo modo corresponde à expressão 'que te vá bem'. — Mr 5:34; Lu 7:50; 8:48; Tg 2:16; compare isso com 1Sa 1:17; 20:42; 25:35; 29:7; 2Sa 15:9; 2Rs 5:19.

Visto que o termo "paz" nem sempre é o equivalente exato das palavras nas línguas originais, é preciso considerar o contexto para se determinar qual é o seu significado. Por exemplo, ser 'mandado embora em paz' podia significar ser despedido amigavelmente, sem se temer a interferência de quem concedeu a permissão para partir. (Gên 26:29; 44:17; Êx 4:18) "Retornar em paz", como que duma batalha, significava voltar ileso ou vitorioso. (Gên 28:21; Jos 10:21; Jz 8:9; 11:31; 2Cr 18:26, 27; 19:1) 'Indagar sobre a paz' da pessoa significava perguntar como ela estava passando. (Gên 29:6 ; e43:27) 'Buscar a paz' de alguém denotava empenhar-se pelo bem-estar dele. (De 23:6) Morrer alguém em paz podia significar ter ele uma morte tranquila depois de ter usufruído uma vida plena ou de ter alcançado uma almejada esperança. (Veja Gên 15:15; Lu 2:29; 1Rs 2:6.) A profecia a respeito de Josias ‘ser recolhido a seu próprio cemitério em paz’ indicava que ele morreria antes de sobrevir a Jerusalém a calamidade predita. (2Rs 22:20; 2Cr 34:28; compare isso com 2Rs 20:19.) Em Isaías 57:1, 2, apresenta-se o justo como entrando na paz ao morrer, escapando assim da calamidade.

Obter Paz. Jeová é o Deus de paz (1Co 14:33; 2Co 13:11; 1Te 5:23; He 13:20) e a Fonte da paz (Núm 6:26; 1Cr 22:9; Sal 4:8; 29:11; 147:14; Is 45:7; Ro 15:33; 16:20), sendo ela um fruto do Seu espírito. (Gál 5:22) Por este motivo, a verdadeira paz só pode ser obtida por aqueles que estão em paz com Deus. Transgressões sérias causam o estremecimento das relações entre a pessoa e Deus, e fazem com que a pessoa fique perturbada. Disse o salmista: “Não há paz nos meus ossos por causa do meu pecado.” (Sal 38:3) Os que desejam procurar a paz e empenhar-se por ela, portanto, precisam ‘desviar-se do que é mau e fazer o que é bom’. (Sal 34:14) Sem justiça não pode haver paz. (Sal 72:3; 85:10; Is 32:17) É por isso que os iníquos não conseguem ter paz. (Is 48:22; 57:21; compare isso com Is 59:2-8.) Por outro lado, a paz é algo possuído pelos que são plenamente devotados a Jeová, que amam a Sua lei (Sal 119:165) e que acatam Seus mandamentos. — Is 48:18.

Quando Cristo Jesus esteve na Terra, nem os judeus naturais, nem os não judeus estavam em paz com Jeová Deus. Tendo transgredido a lei de Deus, os judeus ficaram sob a maldição da Lei. (Gál 3:12, 13) Quanto aos não judeus, que não estavam no pacto de Deus, eles ‘não tinham esperança e estavam sem Deus no mundo’. (Ef 2:12) No entanto, por meio de Cristo Jesus, ambos os povos receberam a oportunidade de entrarem numa relação pacífica com Deus. Apontando para isso, o anúncio angélico feito aos pastores, por ocasião do nascimento de Jesus, dizia: “Na terra paz entre homens de boa vontade.” — Lu 2:14.

A mensagem pacífica proclamada por Jesus e seus seguidores agradava aos ‘amigos da paz’, isto é, aos desejosos de serem reconciliados com Deus. (Mt 10:13; Lu 10:5, 6; At 10:36) Ao mesmo tempo, esta mensagem provocava divisões em famílias, visto que alguns a aceitavam, ao passo que outros a rejeitavam. (Mt 10:34; Lu 12:51) A maioria dos judeus rejeitou a mensagem e assim deixou de discernir as “coisas que têm que ver com a paz”, que evidentemente incluem o arrependimento e a aceitação de Jesus como o Messias. (Veja Lu 1:79; 3:3-6; Jo 1:29-34.) A falha deles resultou na destruição de Jerusalém pelos exércitos romanos, em 70 EC. — Lu 19:42-44.

Todavia, até mesmo aqueles judeus que aceitaram “as boas novas da paz” eram pecadores e precisavam ter suas transgressões expiadas para usufruir a paz com Jeová Deus. A morte de Jesus, qual sacrifício de resgate, satisfez esta necessidade. Conforme se predissera: “O castigo intencionado para a nossa paz estava sobre ele, e por causa das suas feridas tem havido cura para nós.” (Is 53:5) A morte sacrificial de Jesus na estaca de tortura também forneceu a base para o cancelamento da Lei mosaica, que separava os judeus dos não judeus. Por conseguinte, ao se tornarem cristãos, ambos os povos podiam estar em paz com Deus e um com o outro. O apóstolo Paulo escreveu: “[Jesus] é a nossa paz, aquele que das duas partes fez uma só e que destruiu o muro no meio, que os separava. Por meio de sua carne, ele aboliu a inimizade, a Lei de mandamentos, consistindo em decretos, para que dos dois povos, em união consigo mesmo, criasse um novo homem e fizesse paz; e para que reconciliasse plenamente ambos os povos com Deus, em um só corpo, por intermédio da estaca de tortura, porque ele matara a inimizade por meio de si mesmo. E ele veio e declarou as boas novas da paz a vós, os que estáveis longe, e paz aos que estavam perto, porque, por intermédio dele, nós, ambos os povos, temos a aproximação ao Pai, por um só espírito.” — Ef 2:14-18; compare isso com Ro 2:10, 11; Col 1:20-23.

“A paz de Deus”, isto é, a calma e a tranquilidade resultantes da preciosa relação do cristão com Jeová Deus, guarda o coração e as faculdades mentais dele para que não fique ansioso quanto às suas necessidades. Ele tem a garantia de que Jeová Deus provê as coisas para Seus servos e que responde às orações deles. Isto lhe tranquiliza o coração e a mente. (Fil 4:6, 7) Similarmente, a paz que Jesus Cristo deu a seus discípulos, baseada na fé que eles tinham nele como Filho de Deus, servia para acalmar-lhes o coração e a mente. Embora Jesus lhes dissesse que viria o tempo em que ele não mais estaria com eles em pessoa, não tinham motivos de ficar preocupados, nem de ficar com medo. Ele não os estava deixando sem ajuda, mas prometeu enviar-lhes o espírito santo. — Jo 14:26, 27; 16:33; compare isso com Col 3:15.

A paz que os cristãos usufruíam não era algo a ser considerado pressuposto. Eles tinham de ser “pacíficos”, isto é, tinham de ser pacificadores, fazendo empenho extra para estabelecer e manter a paz. (1Te 5:13) A fim de preservar a paz entre si, tinham de exercer cuidado para não fazer concrentes tropeçar. (Ro 14:13-23) Jesus declarou no Sermão do Monte: “Felizes os pacíficos [literalmente: pacificadores], porque serão chamados ‘filhos de Deus’.” (Mt 5:9, n; veja Tg 3:18.) Os cristãos fo-ram aconselhados a empenhar-se pela paz e a fazer o máximo para ser achados em paz com Deus. (2Ti 2:22; He 12:14; 1Pe 3:11; 2Pe 3:14) Por conseguinte, tinham de combater os desejos da carne, uma vez que estes os colocariam em inimizade com Deus. (Ro 8:6-8) O fato de que é necessário permanecer numa relação pacífica com Deus para se ter a aprovação Dele dá muito peso à expressão muitas vezes repetida numa forma de oração: 'Que tenhais paz.' — Ro 1:7; 1Co 1:3; 2Co 1:2; Gál 1:3; 6:16; Ef 1:2; 6:23; Fil 1:2.

Os cristãos também desejavam que outros usufruíssem a paz. Por conseguinte, 'tendo os pés calçados do equipamento das boas novas de paz', eles travavam a sua guerra espiritual. (Ef 6:15) Até mesmo dentro da congregação travavam uma guerra para derrubar raciocínios que não se harmonizavam com o conhecimento de Deus, para que tais raciocínios não prejudicassem sua relação com Deus. (2Co 10:4, 5) Todavia, não se tratava duma luta ou briga verbal, nem mesmo ao corrigir aqueles que se haviam desviado da verdade. Quanto a tratar de casos daqueles que se haviam afastado do rumo correto, o apóstolo Paulo aconselhou Timóteo: "O escravo do Senhor não precisa lutar, porém, precisa ser meigo para com todos, qualificado para ensinar, restringindo-se sob o mal, instruindo com brandura os que não estiverem favoravelmente dispostos, visto que talvez Deus lhes dê arrependimento conduzindo a um conhecimento exato da verdade e eles voltem ao seu próprio juízo, saindo do laço do Diabo, visto que foram apanhados vivos por ele para a vontade deste." — 2Ti 2:24-26.

Governo Pacífico. O Filho de Deus, como aquele que teria 'o domínio principesco sobre seu ombro', é chamado de "Príncipe da Paz". (Is 9:6, 7) Por conseguinte, é digno de nota que Cristo Jesus, enquanto estava na Terra, mostrou que seus servos não se deviam armar para a guerra literal, ao dizer a Pedro: "Devolve a espada ao seu lugar, pois todos os que tomarem a espada perecerão pela espada." (Mt 26:52) Falando-se em sentido figurado, aqueles que se tornaram cristãos 'forjaram das suas espadas relhas de arado, e das suas lanças, podadeiras'. Não aprenderam mais a guerra. (Is 2:4) Isto, e as atividades de Deus no passado, especialmente em relação com Israel durante o reinado de Salomão, indicam a paz que predominará durante o governo de Jesus como Rei. A respeito do reinado de Salomão, a Bíblia relata: "A própria paz veio a ser sua em cada região dele, em toda a volta. E Judá e Israel continuaram a morar em segurança, cada um debaixo da sua própria videira e debaixo da sua própria figueira, desde Dã até Berseba, todos os dias de Salomão." (1Rs 4:24, 25; 1Cr 22:9) Como se evidencia em outros textos (veja Sal 72:7, 8; Miq 4:4; Za 9:9, 10; Mt 21:4, 5), isto servia de modelo do que ocorreria sob o governo de Cristo Jesus, o Maior do que Salomão, cujo nome deriva duma raiz que significa "paz". — Mt 12:42.

Paz Entre o Homem e os Animais. Jeová Deus prometeu aos israelitas, se obedientes: "Vou colocar a paz no país, e deveras vos deitareis sem que alguém vos faça tremer; e vou fazer cessar no país a fera nociva." (Le 26:6) Isto significava que os animais selvagens ficariam dentro dos limites de seu próprio habitat, e não causariam dano aos israelitas e aos animais domésticos deles. Por outro lado, se os israelitas se mostrassem desobedientes, Jeová permitiria que sua terra fosse invadida e devastada por exércitos estrangeiros. Uma vez que isto resultaria na redução da população, os animais selvagens se multiplicariam, penetrando em áreas anteriormente habitadas, e causariam danos aos sobreviventes e aos animais domésticos deles. — Veja Êx 23:29; Le 26:22; 2Rs 17:5, 6, 24-26.

A paz prometida aos israelitas em relação com os animais selvagens diferia da usufruída pelo primeiro homem e pela primeira mulher no jardim do Éden, pois Adão e Eva gozavam do pleno domínio sobre a criação animal. (Gên 1:28) Em contraste, nas profecias, um domínio similar é somente atribuído a Cristo Jesus. (Sal 8:4-8; He 2:5-9) Por conseguinte, é sob o governo de Jesus Cristo, o 'renovo do toco de Jessé', ou o 'servo de Deus, Davi', que a paz prevalecerá de novo entre os homens e os animais. (Is 11:1, 6-9; 65:25; Ez 34:23-25) Estes textos citados por último fornecem uma aplicação figurada, pois é óbvio que a paz ali descrita entre animais, tais como o lobo e o cordeiro, não teve cumprimento literal no antigo Israel. Predisse-se assim que pessoas de disposição prejudicial, animalesca, abandonariam seus modos malévolos e viveriam em paz com seus semelhantes mais dóceis. No entanto, o emprego profético dos animais para representar, em sentido figurado, as condições pacíficas que predominariam entre o povo de Deus, dá a entender que também haverá paz entre os animais literais sob o governo de Cristo Jesus, assim como evidentemente existia no Éden.

PÉ. O termo hebraico ré·ghel e o grego pous referem-se basicamente à parte inferior da perna, a parte do corpo em que a pessoa ou o animal se apoia. Ambos os termos são usados de forma literal e figurada.

Nos tempos antigos, como em muitas partes da terra hoje em dia, os pés eram o principal meio de transporte. Alguns do povo comum andavam descalços, mas em geral se usavam sandálias, que consistiam em pouco mais do que numa sola de couro. (Veja SANDÁLIA.) Ao se entrar numa casa, removiam-se as sandálias. Um sinal essencial, virtualmente obrigatório, de hospitalidade era lavar os pés do hóspede; este serviço era realizado, quer pelo dono da casa, quer por um servo, ou, pelo menos, fornecia-se água para esse fim. — Gên 18:4; 24:32; 1Sa 25:41; Lu 7:37, 38, 44.

Visto que se tiravam as sandálias quando em solo sagrado, os sacerdotes, sem dúvida, quando cumpriam deveres no tabernáculo ou no templo, serviam descalços. (Êx 3:5; Jos 5:15) As instruções para a confecção das vestimentas dos sacerdotes não incluíam sandálias. — Êx cap. 28; veja ATITUDES, POSTURAS E GESTOS.

Cristo Lava os Pés dos Discípulos. Jesus Cristo deu a seus discípulos uma lição de humildade e de serviço prestado uns aos outros quando ele, seu Mestre, lhes lavou os pés. (Jo 13:5-14; compare isso com 1Ti 5:9, 10.) Nesta ocasião, Jesus disse: "Quem se banhou, não precisa lavar senão os seus pés, mas está inteiramente limpo", sem dúvida, referindo-se a que, ainda que alguém se tivesse banhado, seus pés ficariam empoeirados mesmo numa curta caminhada e precisariam ser frequentemente lavados. Nos dias do ministério terrestre de Jesus, não se exigia que os sacerdotes e os levitas de guarda no templo, depois de se imergirem na água bem cedo de manhã, se banhassem de novo naquele dia, exceto lavarem as mãos e os pés. (Veja também Êx 30:19-21.) Por dizer: "Vós estais limpos, mas não todos [referindo-se a Judas]", Jesus evidentemente atribuiu às suas ações, nesta oportunidade, um significado espiritual, adicional. (Jo 13:10, 11) Em Efésios 5:25, 26, mostra-se Jesus como purificando a congregação cristã com o "banho de água por meio da palavra" da verdade. É lógico que os fiéis seguidores de Jesus deviam igualmente demonstrar interesse humilde, não só pelas necessidades materiais de seus irmãos, mas ainda mais pelas suas necessidades espirituais. Assim se ajudariam mutuamente a se manter livres das tentações e dos envolvimentos diários que poderiam contaminar o cristão ao andar neste mundo. — He 10:22; Gál 6:1; He 12:13; veja LAVAGEM DOS PÉS.

"Andar." As palavras "pé" e "pés" são frequentemente usadas para denotar a inclinação que a pessoa tem, ou o proceder que adota, quer para o bem, quer para o mal. (Sal 119:59, 101; Pr 1:16; 4:26; 5:5; 19:2; Ro 3:15) A palavra "andar" é usada com significado similar, como na declaração: "Noé andou com o verdadeiro Deus", significando que ele adotou um proceder em harmonia com a vontade e os mandamentos de Deus. (Gên 6:9; compare isso com Ef 2:1, 2.) Deus, em sentido figurado, dirige os pés dos seus servos fiéis no caminho certo, mostrando-lhes o caminho em que devem andar para não tropeçar e sofrer uma queda espiritual ou ser enlaçados pelo mal, e, às vezes, até mesmo os protege contra a captura por parte dum inimigo. (1Sa 2:9; Sal 25:15; 119:105; 121:3; Lu 1:78, 79) Por outro lado, fará com que os iníquos escorreguem e caiam em derrota. (De 32:35; Sal 9:15) Jeová adverte contra a associação com pessoas más no proceder delas, ou contra andar no caminho mau. (Pr 1:10, 15; 4:27) Adverte a pessoa para que guarde seus pés ao ir à casa de Deus. A pessoa deve chegar-se com um coração sincero, para ouvir e aprender. — Ec 5:1.

Outros Usos Figurados. Outras expressões figuradas são 'pouso para a planta do pé', isto é, um lugar de morada ou de posse (Gên 8:9; De 28:65); a "largura de um pé", para indicar o menor quinhão de terra que se poderia possuir (At 7:5; De 2:5; compare isso com Jos 1:3); 'erguer o pé', assumir ou iniciar um proceder (Gên 41:44); 'fazer raro o pé na casa de seu próximo', não tirar proveito indevido da sua hospitalidade (Pr 25:17); 'andar descalço', em humilhação ou pesar (os cativos sendo muitas vezes conduzidos descalços) (Is 20:2); 'depositar algo aos pés de' uma pessoa, como uma dádiva ou oferta (At 5:1, 2); 'lançar-se aos pés de alguém', em homenagem (Mr 5:22); 'pôr sob os pés', em sujeição (1Co 15:27; He 2:8); 'pisotear ou esmagar sob os pés', em vitória (Mal 4:3; Ro 16:20); 'pôr os pés na nuca dum inimigo', qual símbolo de subjugá-lo ou conquistá-lo (Jos 10:24); 'lavar os pés em sangue', em execução dos inimigos (Sal 68:22, 23); 'cobrir os pés', satisfazer as necessidades físicas (literalmente: 'ocultar os pés'; Jz 3:24; 1Sa 24:3). A frase 'mergulhar seu pé em azeite' foi usada profeticamente para predizer o quinhão gordo, ou abundante, que a tribo de Aser teria no meio das outras tribos de Israel. (De 33:24) Rute descobriu os pés de Boaz e deitou-se aos pés dele como aviso para ele de que tomasse medidas legais na questão do casamento de cunhado. — Ru 3:4, 7, 8.

Pés "lindos". Jeová mostra consideração especial para com os pés daqueles que proclamam as boas novas do Reino, chamando-os de "lindos". (Is 52:7; Ro 10:15) O cristão precisa ter seus pés calçados do "equipamento das boas novas de paz", para que possa transmitir apropriadamente as boas novas. (Ef 6:15) Jesus instruiu seus discípulos no sentido de que, quando os moradores duma casa ou duma cidade se recusassem a recebê-los ou a escutar as suas palavras, eles deveriam sacudir o pó dos pés, indicando assim que deixavam a casa ou cidade não receptivas entregues às conse-quências que lhes adviriam de uma fonte mais elevada, do céu. — Mt 10:14.

'Cortar o pé.' Jesus falou sobre 'cortar o pé', não em sentido literal, mas sim figurado, ao dizer: "Se, pois, a tua mão ou o teu pé te faz tropeçar, corta-o e lança-o para longe de ti." Ele queria dizer que, em vez de permitir que um membro do corpo, tal como a mão ou o pé, fizesse seu dono cometer um pecado imperdoável, ele deveria amortecer tal membro do corpo tão completamente como se tivesse sido cortado do corpo. — Mt 18:8; Mr 9:45; compare isso com Col 3:5.

No "corpo" cristão. O apóstolo Paulo, comparando a congregação cristã a um corpo humano, salienta a interdependência dos membros deste, ao dizer: "Se o pé dissesse: 'Visto que não sou mão, não sou parte do corpo', não é por esta razão que deixaria de ser parte do corpo." — 1Co 12:15.

Escabelo de Deus. Jeová retrata a si mesmo na sua posição soberana como sentado num trono celestial, tendo a terra como escabelo dos seus pés. (Is 66:1) Ele diz a Sião que embelezará o lugar do seu santuário, e acrescenta: "Eu glorificarei o próprio lugar dos meus pés." — Is 60:13, 14; veja CALCANHAR; DEDO DO PÉ.

PÊ [פ; final, ף]. A 17.ª letra do alfabeto hebraico. É uma das cinco letras hebraicas que tem uma forma diferente quando usada como última letra duma palavra. O nome atribuído a esta letra significa "boca".

O som hebraico corresponde ao "p" em português quando tem o ponto (daghesh lene) no meio; mas, sem este ponto, é pronunciado como "f", como em "filosofia". Esta letra inicia cada um dos oito versículos do texto hebraico do Salmo 119:129-136. — Veja HEBRAICO.

PECA [duma raiz que significa "abrir"]. Rei de Israel por um período de 20 anos, começando por volta de 778 AEC; contemporâneo dos reis Azarias (Uzias), Jotão e Acaz, de Judá. Anteriormente, Peca servira como ajudante de ordens do rei israelita Pecaías. Mas, no 52.º ano do reinado de Uzias, Peca, filho de Remalias, com a cooperação de 50 homens de Gileade, assassinou Pecaías e apossou-se do reinado sobre Israel em Samaria. (2Rs 15:25, 27) Durante o reinado de Peca, a adoração idólatra do bezerro continuou. (2Rs 15:28) Este governante também formou uma aliança com Rezim, rei da Síria. Perto do fim do reinado do Rei Jotão, de Judá (que começou no segundo ano de Peca), tanto Peca como Rezim causaram problemas a Judá. — 2Rs 15:32, 37, 38.

Depois que Acaz, filho de Jotão, começou a reinar no 17.º ano de Peca, Rezim e Peca invadiram Judá, tencionando destronar este monarca e empossar como rei certo filho de Tabeel. Não conseguiram tomar Jerusalém (2Rs 16:1, 5; Is 7:1-7), mas Judá sofreu pesadas perdas. Num só dia, Peca matou 120.000 homens valentes de Judá. O exército israelita fez também 200.000 cativos dentre os de Judá. No entanto, aceitando o conselho do profeta Odede, apoiado por muitos homens de destaque de Efraim, esses cativos foram devolvidos a Judá. — 2Cr 28:6, 8-15.

Embora, por meio do profeta Isaías, se garantisse a Acaz que a aliança sírio-israelita falharia em destroná-lo como rei (Is 7:6, 7), ele, sem fé, subornou o rei assírio, Tiglate-Pileser III, a vir socorrê-lo. Em resposta, o monarca assírio capturou Damasco e matou Rezim. (2Rs 16:7-9) Pelo visto, foi também nesta época que Tiglate-Pileser capturou as regiões de Gileade, da Galileia e de Naftali, e muitas cidades do Israel setentrional. (2Rs 15:29) Depois disso Oseias, filho de Elá, matou Peca e tornou-se o próximo rei de Israel. — 2Rs 15:30.

Um texto histórico fragmentário de Tiglate-Pileser III diz a respeito da sua campanha contra Israel: "Todos os seus habitantes (e) os seus bens, eu levei para a Assíria. Eles destronaram o rei deles, Peca (Pa-qa-ha), e eu coloquei Oseias (A-ú-si-') como rei sobre eles." — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. B. Pritchard, 1974, p. 284.

PECADO. Tudo o que não está em harmonia com a personalidade, as normas, os modos de agir e a vontade de Deus, e, portanto, é contrário a eles; tudo o que macula a relação da pessoa com Deus. Podem ser palavras (Jó 2:10; Sal 39:1), ações (praticar atos errados [Le 20:20; 2Co 12:21] ou deixar de fazer o que devia ser feito [Núm 9:13; Tg 4:17]), ou a atitude mental ou do coração (Pr 21:4; compare isso também com Ro 3:9-18; 2Pe 2:12-15). A falta de fé em Deus é um dos principais pecados, uma vez que revela desconfiança nele ou falta de confiança em sua capacidade de realização. (He 3:12, 13, 18, 19) Uma consideração do uso dos termos das línguas originais e dos exemplos ligados a eles ilustra isso.

O termo hebraico comum traduzido "pecado" é hhat·tá'th; em grego, a palavra usual é ha·mar·tí·a. Em ambas as línguas, as formas verbais (hebr.: hha·tá'; gr.: ha·mar·tá·no) significam "errar", no sentido de errar ou não atingir um alvo, caminho, marco ou ponto certo. Em Juízes 20:16, hha·tá' é usado, junto com um negativo, para descrever os benjamitas que podiam 'atirar com a funda pedras num fio de cabelo, e não errar'. Escritores gregos frequentemente usavam ha·mar·tá·no referente a um lanceiro errar o alvo. Ambas estas palavras eram usadas para significar errar ou deixar de atingir não apenas objetos ou alvos literais (Jó 5:24), mas também alvos ou marcos morais ou intelectuais. Provérbios 8:35, 36, diz que aquele que acha sabedoria piedosa acha a vida, mas que 'aquele que não acerta [do hebr.: hha·tá'] a sabedoria faz violência à sua alma', o que resulta na morte. Nas Escrituras, tanto o termo hebraico como o grego se referem principalmente a criaturas inteligentes de Deus pecarem, a errarem o alvo com respeito ao seu Criador.

O Lugar do Homem no Propósito de Deus. O homem foi criado "à imagem de Deus". (Gên 1:26, 27) Igual a todas as outras coisas criadas, ele passou a existir e foi criado pela vontade de Deus. (Re 4:11) Designar-lhe Deus trabalho mostrava que o homem devia servir o propósito de Deus na Terra. (Gên 1:28; 2:8, 15) Segundo o apóstolo inspirado, o homem foi criado para ser "imagem e glória de Deus" (1Co 11:7), portanto, para que refletisse as qualidades do seu Criador, comportando-se de modo a refletir a glória de Deus. O homem, como filho terrestre de Deus, devia parecer-se, ou ser semelhante, ao seu Pai celestial. O contrário refutaria e vituperaria a paternidade divina de Deus. — Veja Mal 1:6.

Jesus mostrou isso quando incentivou seus discípulos a manifestarem bondade e amor dum modo superior ao demonstrado por "pecadores", aqueles de quem se sabia que praticavam atos pecaminosos. Ele declarou que somente por seguirem o exemplo de misericórdia e amor de Deus podiam seus discípulos 'mostrar ser filhos de seu Pai que está nos céus'. (Mt 5:43-48; Lu 6:32-36) Paulo relaciona a glória de Deus com o assunto do pecado humano ao dizer que "todos pecaram e não atingem a glória de Deus". (Ro 3:23; compare isso com Ro 1:21-23; Os 4:7.) Em 2 Coríntios 3:16-18; 4:1-6, o apóstolo mostra que aqueles que se desviam do pecado e se voltam para Jeová 'com rostos desvelados refletem como espelhos a glória de Jeová, sendo transformados na mesma imagem, de glória em glória', porque as gloriosas boas novas a respeito do Cristo, que é a imagem de Deus, brilham sobre eles. (Veja também 1Co 10:31.) O apóstolo Pedro cita as Escrituras Hebraicas ao declarar a vontade expressa de Deus referente aos seus servos terrestres, dizendo: "De acordo com o Santo que vos chamou, vós, também, tornai-vos santos em toda a vossa conduta, porque está escrito: 'Tendes de ser santos, porque eu sou santo.'" — 1Pe 1:15, 16; Le 19:2; De 18:13.

De modo que o pecado macula o reflexo da semelhança e glória de Deus por parte do homem; torna o homem ímpio, isto é, sujo, impuro, maculado em sentido espiritual e moral. — Compare isso com Is 6:5-7; Sal 51:1, 2; Ez 37:23; veja SANTIDADE.

Portanto, todos estes textos enfatizam o propósito original de Deus, de que o homem estivesse em harmonia com a personalidade de Deus, que fosse semelhante ao seu Criador, similar à maneira de um pai humano, que ama seu filho, desejar que o filho seja como ele no conceito sobre a vida, nas normas de conduta e nas qualidades do coração. (Veja Pr 3:11, 12; 23:15, 16, 26; Ef 5:1; He 12:4-6, 9-11.) Forçosamente, isto exige obediência e submissão do homem à vontade divina, quer esta seja transmitida na forma de um mandamento expresso, quer não. Assim, o pecado envolve uma falta moral, errar o alvo, em todos estes sentidos.

A Introdução do Pecado. O pecado ocorreu inicialmente no domínio espiritual antes de ser introduzido na Terra. Por eras desconhecidas, prevalecia total harmonia com Deus no Universo. A ruptura foi causada por uma criatura espiritual, mencionada simplesmente como Opositor, Adversário (hebr.: Sa·tán; gr.: Sa·ta·nás; Jó 1:6; Ro 16:20), o principal Acusador falso ou Caluniador (gr.: Di·á·bo·los) de Deus. (He 2:14; Re 12:9) Por isso, o apóstolo João diz: "Quem estiver praticando o pecado origina-se do Diabo, porque o Diabo tem estado pecando desde o princípio." — 1Jo 3:8.

Pelo termo "princípio", João evidentemente quer dizer o princípio da carreira de oposição de Satanás, assim como "princípio" é usado em 1 João 2:7; 3:11, para referir-se ao início do discipulado dos cristãos. As palavras de João mostram que, uma vez tendo introduzido o pecado, Satanás prosseguiu em seu proceder pecaminoso. Assim, qualquer pessoa que "faz do pecado o seu empenho ou prática" revela ser 'filho' do Adversário, prole espiritual que reflete as qualidades de seu "pai". — The Expositor's Greek Testament (O Testamento Grego do Expositor); editado por W. R. Nicoll, 1967, Vol. V, p. 185; Jo 8:44; 1Jo 3:10-12.

Visto que o cultivo do desejo errado a ponto de se tornar fértil precede a se 'dar à luz o pecado' (Tg 1:14, 15), a criatura espiritual que se tornou opositor já tinha começado a desviar-se da justiça, já nutria desafeto para com Deus, antes da real manifestação do pecado.

A revolta no Éden. A vontade de Deus expressa a Adão e sua esposa era primariamente positiva, delineando as coisas que eles deveriam fazer. (Gên 1:26-29; 2:15) Deu-se a Adão uma só ordem proibitiva, que lhe proibia comer da árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau (ou mesmo tocar nela). (Gên 2:16, 17; 3:2, 3) A prova de obediência e devoção, a que o homem foi submetido por Deus, notabiliza-se pelo respeito demonstrado pela dignidade do homem. Mediante ela, Deus não atribuía nada de mau a Adão; não usou como prova, por exemplo, a proibição de bestialidade, de assassínio, ou um similar ato vil ou degradado, o que daria a entender que Deus achava que Adão talvez nutrisse algumas inclinações desprezíveis. Comer era algo normal e apropriado, e se dissera a Adão que 'comesse à vontade' daquilo que Deus lhes dera. (Gên 2:16) Deus, porém, testava agora Adão por proibir-lhe comer do fruto desta única árvore, fazendo assim que o comer dela simbolizasse que o comedor viria a obter um conhecimento que o habilitaria a decidir por si mesmo o que é "bom" ou o que é "mau" para o homem. Assim, Deus não impôs nenhuma dificuldade ao homem, nem atribuiu a Adão algo que estava aquém da dignidade deste como filho humano de Deus.

A mulher foi o primeiro humano que pecou. A tentação dela, por parte do adversário de Deus, que usou uma serpente como meio de comunicação (veja PERFEIÇÃO [O primeiro pecador e o rei de Tiro]), não se deu através duma incitação direta à imoralidade de natureza sensual. Antes, apresentou-se como apelo ao desejo de suposta elevação intelectual e de liberdade. Depois de fazer com que Eva primeiramente repetisse a lei de Deus, de que ela evidentemente soubera por meio do marido, o Tentador atacou então a veracidade e a bondade de Deus. Asseverou que comer o fruto da árvore prescrita não resultaria em morte, mas sim em esclarecimento e na habilidade de a pessoa, na semelhança de Deus, determinar por si mesma o que era bom ou mau. Esta declaração revela que o Tentador já então se achava, no coração, totalmente alienado do seu Criador, constituindo as palavras dele uma flagrante refutação, além de uma velada calúnia contra Deus. Ele não acusou Deus de um erro desintencional, mas sim de deliberada falsificação da questão, dizendo: "Porque Deus sabe . . . " A gravidade do pecado, a natureza detestável desta deslealdade, é vista nos meios a que este filho espiritual se rebaixou para atingir seus fins, tornando-se mentiroso falaz e assassino ambicioso, uma vez que obviamente sabia das consequências fatais daquilo que ele então sugeria à sua ouvinte humana. — Gên 3:1-5; Jo 8:44.

Segundo o relato revela, o desejo impróprio começou a operar na mulher. Em vez de reagir com completa repugnância e justa indignação quando ouviu a justiça da lei de Deus ser assim questionada, ela passou então a encarar aquela árvore como desejável. Cobiçou o que de direito pertencia a Jeová Deus, seu Soberano — a capacidade e a prerrogativa Dele de determinar o que é bom ou mau para Suas criaturas. Portanto, ela começava então a ajustar-se aos modos de agir, às normas e à vontade do Opositor, que contradisse o Criador dela, bem como seu marido, seu cabeça designado por Deus. (1Co 11:3) Confiando nas palavras do Tentador, ela se deixou seduzir, comeu o fruto, e assim revelou o pecado que já tinha sido dado à luz no seu coração e na sua mente. — Gên 3:6; 2Co 11:3; compare isso com Tg 1:14, 15; Mt 5:27, 28.

Adão mais tarde comeu do fruto quando sua esposa o ofereceu a ele. O apóstolo mostra que o pecado do homem diferia do da esposa deste, no sentido de que Adão não foi enganado pela propaganda do Tentador, e, assim, não confiou na afirmação deste, de que comer da árvore era algo que podia ser feito impunemente. (1Ti 2:14) Ter Adão comido, portanto, deve ter sido resultado do desejo de ficar com sua esposa, e ele 'escutou a voz dela', em vez de a do seu Deus. (Gên 3:6, 17) Assim, ele se ajustou ao modo de agir e à vontade dela, e, por meio dela, aos do Adversário de Deus. Por conseguinte, 'errou o alvo', deixou de agir à imagem e à semelhança de Deus, não refletiu a glória de Deus, e, na realidade, insultou o seu Pai celestial.

Efeitos do Pecado. O pecado colocou o homem em desarmonia com seu Criador. Prejudicou assim não só sua relação com Deus, mas também sua relação com o restante da criação de Deus, inclusive os danos causados a si próprio, à sua mente, ao seu coração e ao seu corpo. Trouxe em consequência enormes males para a raça humana.

A conduta do casal humano revelou, de imediato, esta desarmonia. Cobrirem eles parte de seus corpos criados por Deus, e, depois disso, tentarem esconder-se Dele, constituíam claras evidências da alienação ocorrida na mente e no coração deles. (Gên 3:7, 8) O pecado assim dava-lhes sentimentos de culpa, de ansiedade, de insegurança, de vergonha. Isto ilustra o ponto frisado pelo apóstolo em Romanos 2:15, de que a lei de Deus fora 'escrita no coração do homem'; assim, uma violação desta lei produziu então um transtorno no íntimo do homem, a sua consciência acusando-o de transgressão. Realmente, o homem possuía um detector inato de mentiras que tornava impossível que ele ocultasse seu estado pecaminoso de seu Criador; e Deus, respondendo à desculpa do homem por sua atitude mudada para com seu Pai celestial, prontamente indagou: "Comeste da árvore de que te mandei que não comesses?" — Gên 3:9-11.

Jeová Deus, para ser fiel a si mesmo, assim como para o bem do restante da sua família universal, não podia tolerar tal proceder pecaminoso, quer por parte de suas criaturas humanas, quer por parte do filho espiritual que se tornou rebelde. Conservando sua santidade, Ele impôs de modo justo a sentença de morte a todos eles. O casal humano foi então expulso do jardim do Éden, de Deus, sendo assim impedido de ter acesso àquela outra árvore, denominada por Deus como a "árvore da vida". — Gên 3:14-24.

Resultados para a humanidade como um todo. Romanos 5:12 declara que "por intermédio de um só homem entrou o pecado no mundo, e a morte por intermédio do pecado, e assim a morte se espalhou a todos os homens, porque todos tinham pecado". (Veja 1Jo 1:8-10.) Alguns têm explicado que isto significa que toda a futura descendência de Adão compartilhou no ato inicial de pecado porque ele, como chefe de família, os representou e com isso, realmente, os tornou coparticipantes no seu pecado. No entanto, o apóstolo diz que a morte "se espalhou" a todos os homens, o que dá a entender um efeito progressivo, em vez de simultâneo, nos descendentes de Adão.

Além disso, o apóstolo passa a falar da morte como reinando "desde Adão até Moisés, mesmo sobre os que não tinham pecado na semelhança da transgressão de Adão". (Ro 5:14) O pecado de Adão é corretamente chamado de "transgressão" visto que violou uma lei declarada, uma ordem expressa de Deus dada a ele. Também, quando Adão pecou, fez isso de sua própria livre vontade, como humano perfeito, sem deficiências. É evidente que seus descendentes nunca usufruíram tal estado de perfeição. De modo que estes fatores parecem estar em desacordo com o conceito de que, 'quando Adão pecou, todos os seus descendentes ainda por nascer pecaram junto com ele'. Responsabilizar todos os descendentes de Adão como participantes no pecado pessoal de Adão exigiria alguma expressão de vontade da parte deles quanto a teremno como seu chefe de família. Todavia, nenhum deles na realidade expressou a vontade de nascer dele, sendo que seu nascimento na linhagem adâmica resultou da vontade carnal dos seus pais. — Jo 1:13.

Portanto, a evidência indica que o pecado de Adão foi repassado para as sucessivas gerações em resultado da reconhecida lei da hereditariedade. Isto é evidentemente a que o salmista se refere ao dizer: "Em erro fui dado à luz com dores de parto, e em pecado me concebeu minha mãe." (Sal 51:5) O pecado, junto com todas as suas consequências, teve início e se espalhou a toda a raça humana não apenas por Adão ter sido o chefe familiar da raça, mas porque ele, não Eva, foi o seu genitor, ou fonte da vida humana. Dele, bem como de Eva, seus descendentes inescapavelmente herdariam não apenas características físicas, mas também traços de personalidade, inclusive a inclinação para o pecado. — Veja 1Co 15:22, 48, 49.

As palavras de Paulo também indicam esta conclusão ao dizer ele que, "assim como pela desobediência de um só homem [Adão] muitos foram constituídos pecadores, do mesmo modo também pela obediência de um só [Cristo Jesus] muitos serão constituídos justos". (Ro 5:19) Os "constituídos justos" pela obediência de Cristo não foram todos imediatamente constituídos assim no momento em que ele apresentou a Deus seu sacrifício de resgate, mas passam a receber progressivamente os benefícios deste sacrifício à medida que exercem fé nesta provisão e ficam reconciliados com Deus. (Jo 3:36; At 3:19) Do mesmo modo, também as progressivas gerações dos descendentes de Adão foram constituídos pecadores ao serem concebidos por seus pais inerentemente pecadores da linhagem de Adão.

O poder e o salário do pecado. "O salário pago pelo pecado é a morte" (Ro 6:23), e, por nascerem na linhagem de Adão, todos os homens ficaram sujeitos à "lei do pecado e da morte". (Ro 8:2; 1Co 15:21, 22) O pecado, junto com a morte, "reinou" sobre a humanidade, escravizando-a, tendo ela sido vendida por Adão a esta escravidão. (Ro 5:17, 21; 6:6, 17; 7:14; Jo 8:34) Essas declarações mostram que o pecado é encarado, não só como a própria ação ou omissão na execução de certos atos, mas também como uma lei, ou um princípio ou força governante, que opera neles, a saber, a inclinação inata para a transgressão, que herdaram de Adão. Sua herança adâmica, por conseguinte, produziu 'fraqueza da carne', imperfeição. (Ro 6:19) A "lei" do pecado opera continuamente em seus membros carnais, realmente tentando controlar seu proceder, para torná-los seus súditos, em desarmonia com Deus. — Ro 7:15, 17, 18, 20-23; Ef 2:1-3.

O 'rei' pecado pode dar suas 'ordens' de maneira diferente a pessoas diferentes e em ocasiões diferentes. Assim, quando Deus notou a ira que o primeiro filho de Adão, Caim, tinha contra seu irmão Abel, Ele advertiu Caim para que se voltasse para fazer o bem, pois, Ele disse: "Há o pecado agachado à entrada e tem desejo ardente de ti; e conseguirás tu dominá-lo?" No entanto, Caim deixou-se dominar pelo pecado da inveja e do ódio, o que o levou a cometer assassinato. — Gên 4:3-8; compare isso com 1Sa 15:23.

Doença, dor e envelhecimento. Visto que a morte dos humanos geralmente resulta de doenças ou do processo de envelhecimento, segue-se que estes são concomitantes com o pecado. Sob o pacto da Lei mosaica feito com Israel, as leis que governavam os sacrifícios pelo pecado incluíam a expiação para aqueles que tinham sofrido a praga da lepra. (Le 14:2, 19) Os que tocassem num cadáver humano ou mesmo só entrassem numa tenda em que uma pessoa havia morrido se tornavam impuros, e precisavam duma purificação cerimonial. (Núm 19:11-19; compare isso com Núm 31:19, 20.) Jesus, também, associava a doença com o pecado (Mt 9:2-7; Jo 5:5-15), embora mostrasse que padecimentos específicos não eram necessariamente resultantes de atos pecaminosos específicos. (Jo 9:2, 3) Outros textos mostram os efeitos benéficos da justiça (um proceder oposto ao pecado) sobre a saúde da pessoa. (Pr 3:7, 8; 4:20-22; 14:30) Durante o reinado de Cristo, a eliminação da morte, que domina junto com o pecado (Ro 5:21), virá acompanhada pelo fim da dor. — 1Co 15:25, 26; Re 21:4.

Pecado e Lei. O apóstolo João escreve que "todo aquele que pratica o pecado está também praticando o que é contra a lei, e assim o pecado é aquilo que é contra a lei" (1Jo 3:4); também que "toda a injustiça é pecado". (1Jo 5:17) O apóstolo Paulo, por outro lado, fala sobre "os que sem lei pecaram". Declara ainda mais que "até à Lei [dada mediante Moisés] havia pecado no mundo, mas o pecado não é imputado a ninguém quando não há lei. Não obstante, a morte reinou desde Adão até Moisés, mesmo sobre os que não tinham pecado na semelhança da transgressão de Adão". (Ro 2:12; 5:13, 14) As palavras de Paulo devem ser entendidas no contexto; as declarações anteriores dele, nesta carta aos romanos, mostram que ele comparava os que estavam sob o pacto da Lei com os não abrangidos por este pacto, portanto, os que não estavam sob seu código de leis, ao passo que demonstrava que ambas as classes eram pecaminosas. — Ro 3:9.

Durante os aproximadamente 2.500 anos decorridos entre o desvio de Adão e a concessão do pacto da Lei, em 1513 AEC, Deus não fornecera à humanidade nenhum código abrangente, nem qualquer lei sistematicamente organizada, que especificasse o pecado em todas as suas ramificações e formas. Na verdade, Ele havia fornecido certos decretos, como os que foram dados a Noé depois do Dilúvio global (Gên 9:1-7), e o pacto da circuncisão, dado a Abraão e sua casa, incluindo seus escravos estrangeiros. (Gên 17:9-14) Mas, a respeito de Israel, o salmista podia dizer que Deus "conta a sua palavra a Jacó, seus regulamentos e suas decisões judiciais a Israel. Ele não fez assim com nenhuma outra nação; e quanto às suas decisões judiciais, não as conheceram". (Sal 147:19, 20; compare isso com Êx 19:5, 6; De 4:8; 7:6, 11.) A respeito do pacto da Lei dado a Israel poder-se-ia dizer: "O homem que tem feito a justiça da Lei viverá por ela", pois a perfeita aderência a esta Lei e o cumprimento dela só podiam ser realizados por um homem sem pecado, como se deu com Cristo Jesus. (Ro 10:5; Mt 5:17; Jo 8:46; He 4:15; 7:26; 1Pe 2:22) Isto não ocorrera com nenhuma outra lei fornecida desde o tempo de Adão até o pacto da Lei.

'Fazer por natureza as coisas da lei.' Isto não significava que os homens, durante aquele período entre Adão e Moisés, estivessem isentos de pecado, por não haver nenhum código abrangente de leis, pelo qual a conduta deles pudesse ser julgada. Em Romanos 2:14, 15, Paulo declara: "Pois, sempre que pessoas das nações, que não têm lei, fazem por natureza as coisas da lei, tais pessoas, embora não tenham lei, são uma lei para si mesmas. Elas é que são quem demonstra que a matéria da lei está escrita nos seus corações, ao passo que a sua consciência lhes dá testemunho e nos seus próprios pensamentos são acusadas ou até mesmo desculpadas." Tendo sido feito originalmente à imagem e à semelhança de Deus, o homem possui uma natureza moral que produz a faculdade da consciência. Mesmo homens imperfeitos, pecaminosos, retêm certa medida dela, conforme indicam as palavras de Paulo. (Veja CONSCIÊNCIA.) Visto que lei é, basicamente, uma 'regra de conduta', esta natureza moral opera em seu coração como uma lei. Todavia, contrapondo-se a esta lei da natureza moral deles, existe outra lei herdada, a 'lei do pecado', que guerreia contra as tendências justas, escravizando aqueles que não resistem ao seu domínio. — Ro 6:12; 7:22, 23.

Esta natureza moral e a consciência associada podem ser notadas mesmo no caso de Caim. Embora Deus não tivesse dado nenhuma lei a respeito do homicídio, Caim mostrou pela forma evasiva em que respondeu à indagação de Deus que sua consciência o condenava depois de ter assassinado Abel. (Gên 4:8, 9) José, o hebreu, mostrou ter 'a lei de Deus no coração' quando respondeu à sedutora proposta da esposa de Potifar, dizendo: "Como poderia eu cometer esta grande maldade e realmente pecar contra Deus?" Embora Deus não tivesse condenado especificamente o adultério, José, mesmo assim, reconheceu-o como errado, como violando a vontade de Deus para os humanos, conforme expressa no Éden. — Gên 39:7-9; compare isso com Gên 2:24.

Assim, durante o período patriarcal, desde Abraão até inclusive os 12 filhos de Jacó, as Escrituras mostram que homens de muitas raças e nações falavam do "pecado" (hhat·tá'th), tais como os pecados contra um empregador (Gên 31:36), contra o governante ao qual se está sujeito (Gên 40:1; 41:9), contra um parente (Gên 42:22; 43:9; 50:17), ou simplesmente contra o semelhante (Gên 20:9). De qualquer forma, quem usava este termo reconhecia assim que havia certa relação com a pessoa contra a qual o pecado fora ou poderia ser cometido, e uma concomitante responsabilidade de se respeitar os interesses dela, ou sua vontade e autoridade, como no caso dum governante, não os contrariando. Davam assim evidência duma natureza moral. Com o passar do tempo, porém, aumentou o domínio do pecado sobre os que não serviam a Deus, de modo que Paulo podia falar das pessoas das nações como andando 'mentalmente em escuridão e apartadas da vida que pertence a Deus, tendo ficado além de todo o senso moral'. — Ef 4:17-19.

Como a Lei fazia que o pecado "abundasse". Ao passo que a medida de consciência possuída pelo homem lhe dava um senso natural do certo e do errado, Deus, por fazer o pacto da Lei com Israel, identificou então o pecado de forma específica, em seus múltiplos aspectos. A boca de qualquer descendente dos amigos de Deus, Abraão, Isaque e Jacó, que afirmasse estar isento de pecado, foi assim 'tapada e todo o mundo ficou sujeito a Deus para punição'. Isto se dava porque a carne imperfeita que herdaram de Adão tornava impossível serem eles declarados justos perante Deus por meio de obras da lei, "pois pela lei vem o conhecimento exato do pecado". (Ro 3:19, 20; Gál 2:16) A Lei explicava claramente qual era o alcance e escopo do pecado, de modo que, na realidade, fazia com que "abundasse" a transgressão e o pecado no sentido de que muitos atos, e até mesmo atitudes, passaram então a ser identificados como pecaminosos. (Ro 5:20; 7:7, 8; Gál 3:19; compare isso com Sal 40:12.) Seus sacrifícios serviam continuamente para lembrar àqueles que estavam sob a Lei o seu estado pecaminoso. (He 10:1-4, 11) A Lei, por tais meios, atuava como tutor para conduzi-los a Cristo, para que 'fossem declarados justos devido à fé'. — Gál 3:22-25.

Como podia o pecado 'receber induzimento' por intermédio do mandamento de Deus a Israel?

Salientando que a Lei mosaica não é o meio pelo qual os humanos podem alcançar uma condição justa perante Jeová Deus, o apóstolo Paulo escreveu: "Quando estávamos de acordo com a carne, as paixões pecaminosas, incitadas pela Lei, trabalhavam em nossos membros para que produzíssemos fruto para a morte. . . . O que diremos, então? É a Lei pecado? Que nunca se torne tal! Realmente, eu não teria chegado a conhecer o pecado, se não fosse a Lei; e, por exemplo, eu não teria conhecido a cobiça, se a Lei não dissesse: 'Não deves cobiçar.' Mas o pecado, recebendo induzimento por intermédio do mandamento, produziu em mim cobiça de toda sorte, pois, à parte da lei, o pecado estava morto." — Ro 7:5-8.

Sem a Lei, o apóstolo Paulo não teria sabido ou discernido o pleno alcance ou escopo do pecado, tal como a pecaminosidade da cobiça. Conforme o apóstolo observa, a Lei 'incitava' a paixão pecaminosa, e o mandamento contra a cobiça fornecia um "induzimento" ao pecado. Isto deve ser entendido à luz da declaração de Paulo, de que "à parte da lei, o pecado estava morto". Enquanto não se definira especificamente o que era pecado, não se podia ser acusado de cometer pecados que não eram legalmente identificados como tais. Antes do advento da Lei, Paulo e outros da sua nação viviam sem serem condenados por pecados não especificados. Com a introdução da Lei, porém, Paulo e seus patrícios foram classificados como pecadores que estavam sob a condenação à morte. A Lei os tornava mais cônscios de serem pecadores. Isto não significa que a Lei mosaica os induzia ao pecado, mas que os expunha como pecadores. Assim, o pecado recebeu induzimento por meio da Lei e produziu o pecado em Paulo e no seu povo. A Lei fornecia a base para condenar mais pessoas como pecadores, e por muito mais motivos legais.

A resposta à pergunta: "É a Lei pecado?" portanto, definitivamente é: 'Não!' (Ro 7:7) A Lei não 'errava o alvo' por não cumprir o propósito pelo qual Deus a deu, mas, antes, atingia o alvo 'em cheio', não só por ser boa e benéfica como guia protetor, mas também por definir legalmente que todos, sem excluir os israelitas, são pecadores que precisam da redenção provida por Deus. Indicava também aos israelitas o Cristo como Redentor necessário.

Erros, Transgressões, Falhas. As Escrituras frequentemente vinculam "erro" (hebr.: 'a·wón), "transgressão" (hebr.: pé·sha'; gr.: pa·rá·ba·sis), "falha" (gr.: pa·rá·pto·ma), e outros termos assim, com "pecado" (hebr.: hhat·tá'th; gr.: ha·mar·ti·a). Todos esses termos relacionados apresentam aspectos específicos do pecado, as formas que ele assume.

Erros, enganos e tolices. Assim, 'a·wón se relaciona basicamente ao erro, a agir de modo fraudulento ou errado. O termo hebraico se refere a um erro ou uma falha moral, uma distorção do que é correto. (Jó 10:6, 14, 15) Aqueles que não se submetem à vontade de Deus obviamente não são guiados pela perfeita sabedoria e justiça dele, e, assim, fatalmente erram. (Veja Is 59:1-3; Je 14:10; Fil 2:15.) Sem dúvida, visto que o pecado desequilibra o homem, distorcendo o que é reto (Jó 33:27; Hab 1:4), 'a·wón é o termo hebraico mais frequentemente vinculado com hhat·tá'th, (pecado, errar o alvo) ou usado em paralelo com este termo. (Êx 34:9; De 19:15; Ne 4:5; Sal 32:5; 85:2; Is 27:9) Este desequilíbrio produz confusão e desarmonia no íntimo do homem, e dificuldades em seus modos de lidar com Deus e com o restante da criação de Deus.

O "erro" ('a·wón) pode ser intencional ou desintencional, quer um desvio consciente do que é correto, quer um ato desapercebido, um "engano" (shegha·gháh), o qual, não obstante, move a pessoa a errar e a ter culpa perante Deus. (Le 4:13-35; 5:1-6, 14-19; Núm 15:22-29; Sal 19:12, 13) Naturalmente, caso seja intencional, então o erro é de consequências muito mais graves do que se cometido por engano. (Núm 15:30, 31; compare isso com La 4:6, 13, 22.) O erro é contrário à verdade, e aqueles que pecam deliberadamente pervertem a verdade, proceder que só pode resultar em pecado ainda mais crasso. (Veja Is 5:18-23.) O apóstolo Paulo fala do "poder enganoso do pecado", que possui um efeito endurecedor sobre o coração humano. (He 3:13-15; compare isso com Êx 9:27, 34, 35.) O mesmo escritor, ao citar Jeremias 31:34, onde o original hebraico fala do "erro" e do "pecado" de Israel, escreveu ha·mar·tí·a (pecado) e a·di·kí·a (injustiça) em Hebreus 8:12, e ha·mar·tí·a e a·no·mí·a (o que é contra a lei), em Hebreus 10:17.

Provérbios 24:9 declara que "a conduta desenfreada da tolice é pecado", e os termos hebraicos que transmitem a ideia de tolice frequentemente são empregados em relação com o pecar, reconhecendo o pecador, às vezes, de forma penitente: "Agi nesciamente." (1Sa 26:21; 2Sa 24:10, 17) Quando não é disciplinado por Deus, o pecador fica enredado em seus erros e tolamente se perde. — Pr 5:22, 23; compare isso com 19:3.

A transgressão é 'infração'. O pecado pode assumir a forma duma "transgressão". A palavra grega pa·rá·ba·sis (transgressão) refere-se basicamente a uma "infração", isto é, a ir além de certos limites ou fronteiras, especialmente na violação duma lei. Mateus emprega a forma verbal (pa·ra·baí·no) ao narrar a pergunta dos fariseus e dos escribas sobre por que os discípulos de Jesus 'infringiam a tradição dos homens dos tempos anteriores', e a pergunta de Jesus, em resposta, de por que esses opositores 'infringiam o mandamento de Deus por causa de sua tradição', invalidando assim a palavra de Deus. (Mt 15:1-6) Pode também significar um 'desvio', como no caso de Judas 'desviar-se' de seu ministério e apostolado. (At 1:25) Em alguns textos gregos emprega-se este mesmo verbo ao se referir àquele que "vai além, e não se atém à doutrina do Ungido". — 2Jo 9, ED.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas há referências similares ao pecado de pessoas que 'infringiram', 'transgrediram' ou 'deixaram de lado' (hebr.: 'a·vár) o pacto de Deus ou Suas ordens específicas. — Núm 14:41; De 17:2, 3; Jos 7:11, 15; 1Sa 15:24; Is 24:5; Je 34:18.

O apóstolo Paulo mostra a relação especial de pa·rá·ba·sis com a violação de uma lei estabelecida, ao dizer que, "onde não há lei, tampouco há transgressão". (Ro 4:15) Portanto, na ausência de lei, o pecador não poderia ser chamado de "transgressor". De modo coerente, Paulo e os demais escritores cristãos empregam pa·rá·ba·sis (e pa·ra·bá·tes, "transgressor") no contexto da lei. (Veja Ro 2:23-27; Gál 2:16, 18; 3:19; Tg 2:9, 11.) Adão, tendo recebido ordem direta de Deus, era portanto culpado de "transgressão" de uma lei declarada. A esposa dele, embora enganada, também era culpada de ter transgredido aquela lei. (1Ti 2:14) O pacto da Lei, transmitido a Moisés por anjos, foi acrescentado ao pacto abraâmico "para tornar manifestas as transgressões", a fim de que 'todas as coisas fossem entregues juntas à detenção pelo pecado', declarando legalmente culpados de pecado todos os descendentes de Adão, inclusive Israel, e demonstrando que todos evidentemente precisavam de perdão e de salvação por meio da fé em Cristo Jesus. (Gál 3:19-22) Assim, se Paulo se tivesse submetido de novo à Lei mosaica, teria feito outra vez de si mesmo um "transgressor" daquela Lei, sujeito à condenação dela, e assim teria repelido a benignidade imerecida de Deus que fornecia o livramento daquela condenação. — Gál 2:18-21; compare isso com 3:1-4, 10.

O hebraico pé·sha' transmite a ideia de transgressão (Sal 51:3; Is 43:25-27; Je 33:8), bem como a de "revolta", que é um desvio ou uma rejeição da lei ou da autoridade de outrem. (1Sa 24:11; Jó 13:23, 24; 34:37; Is 59:12, 13) A transgressão deliberada, então, equivale à rebelião contra o governo e a autoridade paternais de Deus. Opõe a vontade da criatura à do Criador, e, assim, ela se empenha em revolta contra a soberania de Deus, Seu governo supremo

Falha. A palavra grega pa·rá·pto·ma significa literalmente "queda para o lado", portanto, um passo em falso (Ro 11:11, 12), ou erro crasso, uma 'falha'. (Ef 1:7; Col 2:13) O pecado de Adão, ao comer do fruto proibido, foi uma "transgressão" no sentido de que infringiu a lei de Deus; foi uma "falha" no sentido de que ele caiu, ou deu um passo em falso, em vez de manter-se de pé ou de andar em retidão, em harmonia com os requisitos justos de Deus, e em apoio da autoridade dele. Os muitos estatutos e requisitos do pacto da Lei realmente abriam o caminho para muitas de tais falhas devido à imperfeição dos sujeitos a ele (Ro 5:20); a nação de Israel, como um todo, errou crassamente com respeito a guardar aquele pacto. (Ro 11:11, 12) Visto que todos os diversos estatutos daquela Lei eram parte de um só pacto, quem dava um "passo em falso" em um ponto tornava-se com isso violador e "transgressor" do pacto inteiro, e, assim, de todos os seus estatutos. — Tg 2:10, 11.

"Pecadores." Visto que "não há homem que não peque" (2Cr 6:36), todos os descendentes de Adão podem ser chamados corretamente de "pecadores" por natureza. Mas, nas Escrituras, o termo "pecadores" usualmente é aplicado duma forma mais específica, designando aqueles que praticam o pecado ou que têm a reputação de pecar. Seus pecados se tornaram de conhecimento público. (Lu 7:37-39) Os amalequitas, os quais Jeová mandou que Saul destruísse, são chamados de "pecadores" (1Sa 15:18); o salmista orou a Deus para que não lhe tirasse a alma "junto com os pecadores", suas palavras seguintes identificando tais como "homens culpados de sangue, em cujas mãos há conduta desenfreada e cuja direita está cheia de suborno". (Sal 26:9, 10; compare isso com Pr 1:10-19.) Jesus foi condenado pelos líderes religiosos por associar-se com os "cobradores de impostos e pecadores", e os cobradores de impostos eram considerados pelos judeus como uma classe geralmente desconceituada. (Mt 9:10, 11) Jesus se referiu a esses cobradores de impostos, junto com as meretrizes, como precedendo os líderes religiosos judeus na entrada no Reino. (Mt 21:31, 32) Zaqueu, cobrador de impostos e "pecador" aos olhos de muitos, reconheceu que tinha extorquido ilegalmente dinheiro de outros. — Lu 19:7, 8.

Por isso, quando Jesus disse que "haverá mais alegria no céu por causa de um pecador que se arrepende, do que por causa de noventa e nove justos que não precisam de arrependimento", ele evidentemente usou esses termos em sentido relativo (veja JUSTIÇA [Bondade e Justiça]), porque todos os homens, por natureza, são pecadores e nenhum é justo em sentido absoluto. — Lu 15:7, 10; compare isso com Lu 5:32; 13:2; veja DECLARAR JUSTO.

Gravidade Comparativa duma Transgressão. Embora pecado seja pecado, e, em qualquer caso, pode fazer com justiça que o culpado seja digno de receber o "salário" do pecado, a morte, as Escrituras mostram que Deus considera as transgressões da humanidade como de vários graus de gravidade. Assim, os homens de Sodoma eram "grandes pecadores contra Jeová", e seu pecado era "muito grave". (Gên 13:13; 18:20; compare isso com 2Ti 3:6, 7.) Fazerem os israelitas um bezerro de ouro foi também chamado de "grande pecado" (Êx 32:30, 31), e a adoração do bezerro, por parte de Jeroboão, induziu similarmente os do reino setentrional a "pecar com um grande pecado". (2Rs 17:16, 21) O pecado de Judá tornou-se "semelhante ao de Sodoma", tornando o reino de Judá detestável aos olhos de Deus. (Is 1:4, 10; 3:9; La 1:8; 4:6) Tal desconsideração à vontade de Deus pode até mesmo transformar em pecado a própria oração da pessoa. (Sal 109:7, 8, 14) Visto que o pecado é uma afronta à própria pessoa de Deus, ele não é indiferente ao pecado; e, à medida que a gravidade deste aumenta, a indignação e a ira dele compreensivelmente também aumentam. (Ro 1:18; De 29:22-28; Jó 42:7: Sal 21:8, 9) Sua ira, porém, não se deve unicamente ao envolvimento da sua própria pessoa, mas é igualmente incitada pelo dano e pela injustiça causados a humanos, e, especialmente, a seus servos fiéis. — Is 10:1-4; Mal 2:13-16; 2Te 1:6-10.

Fraqueza e ignorância humanas. Jeová leva em conta a fraqueza dos homens imperfeitos que descendem de Adão, de modo que aqueles que sinceramente o buscam podem dizer-lhe: "Ele nem mesmo fez a nós segundo os nossos pecados; nem trouxe sobre nós o que merecemos segundo os nossos erros." As Escrituras mostram a maravilhosa misericórdia e benevolência que Deus tem demonstrado ao lidar pacientemente com homens de carne. (Sal 103:2, 3, 10-18) Ele também leva em conta a ignorância como fator contribuinte para os pecados (1Ti 1:13; compare isso com Lu 12:47, 48), desde que essa ignorância não seja deliberada. Aqueles que rejeitam deliberadamente o conhecimento e a sabedoria que Deus lhes oferece, 'tendo prazer na injustiça', não são escusados. (2Te 2:9-12; Pr 1:22-33; Os 4:6-8) Alguns são temporariamente desencaminhados da verdade, mas, com ajuda, retornam (Tg 5:19, 20), enquanto que outros 'fecham os olhos à luz e se esquecem da purificação anterior de seus pecados'. — 2Pe 1:9.

O que constitui pecado imperdoável?

O conhecimento traz maior responsabilidade. O pecado de Pilatos não foi tão grande como o dos líderes religiosos judeus que entregaram Jesus ao governador, nem como o de Judas, que traiu seu Senhor. (Jo 19:11; 17:12) Jesus disse aos fariseus dos seus dias que, se fossem cegos, não teriam pecado, evidentemente querendo dizer que os pecados deles poderiam ser perdoados por Deus à base da ignorância deles; todavia, porque negavam ser ignorantes, 'seu pecado permanecia'. (Jo 9:39-41) Jesus disse que eles 'não tinham desculpa para o seu pecado', porque eram testemunhas das poderosas palavras e obras dele em resultado do espírito de Deus sobre ele. (Jo 15:22-24; Lu 4:18) Aqueles que, ou em palavras ou em ações, blasfemavam deliberada e intencionalmente contra o espírito de Deus assim manifesto eram 'culpados de pecado eterno', não sendo possível nenhum perdão. (Mt 12:31, 32; Mr 3:28-30; compare isso com Jo 15:26; 16:7, 8.) Isto se poderia dar com alguns que se tornaram cristãos e que depois deliberadamente se desviaram da adoração pura de Deus. Hebreus 10:26, 27 declara que "se praticarmos o pecado deliberadamente, depois de termos recebido o conhecimento exato da verdade, não há mais nenhum sacrifício pelos pecados, mas há uma certa expectativa terrível de julgamento e há um ciúme ardente que vai consumir os que estão em oposição".

Em 1 João 5:16, 17, João evidentemente se refere ao pecado voluntário, deliberado, ao falar dum "pecado que incorre em morte", em contraste com aquele que não incorre nela. (Veja Núm 15:30.) Quando a evidência indica tal pecado voluntário, deliberado, o cristão não oraria a favor de um violador assim. Deus, naturalmente, é o Juiz final quanto à atitude de coração do pecador. — Veja Je 7:16; Mt 5:44; At 7:60.

Um único pecado em contraste com a prática do pecado. João também faz uma distinção entre um único pecado e a prática do pecado, segundo indicado por uma comparação de 1 João 2:1 com 3:4-8, conforme vertidos pela Tradução do Novo Mundo. Quanto a ser correta a tradução "todo aquele que pratica o pecado [poi·ón ten ha·mar·tí·an]" (1Jo 3:4), a obra Word Pictures in the New Testament (Quadros Verbais no Novo Testamento), de Robertson (1933, Vol. VI, p. 221), diz: "O particípio presente ativo (poion) significa o hábito de praticar o pecado." Quanto a 1 João 3:6, onde no texto grego se usa a frase oukh ha·mar·tá·nei, o mesmo perito comenta (p. 222): "O presente linear . . . indicativo ativo de hamartano, 'não persiste em pecar'." Assim, o cristão fiel pode, numa ocasião, deslizar ou cair no pecado, devido à fraqueza ou a ser desencaminhado, mas ele 'não pratica pecado' por continuar a andar nele. — 1Jo 3:9, 10; compare isso com 1Co 15:33, 34; 1Ti 5:20.

Ser partícipe dos pecados dos outros. A pessoa pode tornar-se culpada de pecar perante Deus por meio de sua associação voluntária com transgressores, por aprovar o erro deles ou por encobrir a conduta deles, para que os anciãos não fiquem sabendo dela e não tomem a devida ação. (Veja Sal 50:18, 21; 1Ti 5:22.) Os que permanecem na simbólica cidade "Babilônia, a Grande", portanto, também 'recebem parte das pragas dela'. (Re 18:2, 4-8) O cristão que se associa com alguém que abandona o ensino de Cristo, ou até mesmo 'o cumprimenta', torna-se "partícipe das suas obras iníquas". — 2Jo 9-11; compare isso com Tit 3:10, 11.

Paulo advertiu Timóteo que não fosse "partícipe dos pecados de outros". (1Ti 5:22) As palavras precedentes de Paulo, quanto a 'nunca pôr as mãos apressadamente sobre nenhum homem', devem referir-se à autoridade que fora concedida a Timóteo, de designar superintendentes nas congregações. Ele não devia designar um homem recém-convertido, pois este poderia ficar enfunado de orgulho; se Timóteo deixasse de acatar este conselho, ele razoavelmente, assumiria uma parcela da responsabilidade por quaisquer erros que tal pessoa cometesse. — 1Ti 3:6.

Toda uma nação podia tornar-se culpada de pecado perante Deus à base dos princípios acima. — Pr 14:34.

Pecados Contra Homens, Deus e Cristo. Conforme já se mostrou, as Escrituras Hebraicas registram referências ao pecado de homens de diferentes nações durante o período patriarcal. Estes eram principalmente pecados contra outros humanos.

Visto que somente Deus é o padrão de justiça e de bondade, os pecados cometidos contra os humanos não são falhas em ajustar-se à 'imagem e à semelhança' de tais pessoas, mas são uma falha de respeitar ou de cuidar dos seus legítimos e corretos interesses, assim cometendo-se uma ofensa contra elas, causando-lhes danos injustos. (Jz 11:12, 13, 27; 1Sa 19:4, 5; 20:1; 26:21; Je 37:18; 2Co 11:7) Jesus delineou os princípios orientadores que a pessoa devia seguir quando se cometessem sérios pecados contra ela. (Mt 18:15-17) Mesmo que seu irmão pecasse contra ela 77 vezes, ou 7 vezes num único dia, a pessoa devia perdoar a tal ofensor se ele, ao ser censurado, mostrasse arrependimento. (Mt 18:21, 22; Lu 17:3, 4; compare isso com 1Pe 4:8.) Pedro fala de servos domésticos serem esbofeteados por pecados cometidos contra seus amos. (1Pe 2:18-20) Uma pessoa talvez peque contra a autoridade constituída por deixar de lhe mostrar o devido respeito. Paulo se declarou inocente de qualquer pecado "contra a Lei dos judeus, [ou] contra o templo, [ou] contra César". — At 25:8.

Os pecados contra os humanos, todavia, são também pecados contra o Criador, ao qual os homens terão de prestar contas. (Ro 14:10, 12; Ef 6:5-9; He 13:17) Deus, que impediu que

Abimeleque tivesse relações sexuais com Sara, disse àquele rei filisteu: "Também te refreei de pecar contra mim." (Gên 20:1-7) José reconheceu, similarmente, que o adultério era um pecado contra o Criador do homem e da mulher, o Formador da união matrimonial (Gên 39:7-9), assim como também o fez o Rei Davi. (2Sa 12:13; Sal 51:4) Pecados tais como o roubo, a fraude ou a apropriação indébita dos bens de outrem, são classificados na Lei como 'comportamento infiel para com Jeová'. (Le 6:2-4; Núm 5:6-8) Os que endureciam o coração e eram sovinas para com seus irmãos pobres, e os que retinham o salário dos trabalhadores, ficavam sujeitos à reprovação divina. (De 15:7-10; 24:14, 15; compare isso com Pr 14:31; Am 5:12.) Samuel declarou ser 'inconcebível, da sua parte, pecar contra Jeová por deixar de orar' a favor de seus coisraelitas, e segundo o pedido deles. — 1Sa 12:19-23.

De modo similar, Tiago 2:1-9 condena como pecados o favoritismo ou a distinção de classes entre os cristãos. Paulo diz que os que não tomam em conta a consciência fraca dos seus irmãos e assim fazem com que estes tropecem, estão "pecando contra Cristo", o Filho de Deus, que deu o seu próprio sangue vital a favor dos seus seguidores. — 1Co 8:10-13.

Assim, ao passo que todos os pecados, na realidade, são pecados contra Deus, Jeová considera alguns pecados como mais diretamente contra a Sua própria pessoa, pecados tais como a idolatria (Êx 20:2-5; 2Rs 22:17), a falta de fé (Ro 14:22, 23; He 10:37, 38; 12:1), o desrespeito pelas coisas sagradas (Núm 18:22, 23), e todas as formas de adoração falsa (Os 8:11-14). É sem dúvida por causa disso que o sumo sacerdote Eli disse a seus filhos, que desrespeitavam o tabernáculo e o serviço de Deus: "Se um homem pecar contra um homem, Deus arbitrará por ele [compare isso com 1Rs 8:31, 32]; mas se o homem pecar contra Jeová, quem é que vai orar por ele?" — 1Sa 2:22-25; compare isso com vv. 12-17.

Pecar contra o próprio corpo. Ao avisar sobre a fornicação (as relações sexuais fora do casamento biblicamente aprovado), Paulo declara que "todo outro pecado que o homem possa cometer é fora de seu corpo, mas quem pratica a fornicação está pecando contra o seu próprio corpo". (1Co 6:18; veja FORNICAÇÃO.) O contexto mostra que Paulo estava ressaltando que os cristãos deviam unir-se a seu Senhor e Cabeça, Cristo Jesus. (1Co 6:13-15) O fornicador, de forma errada e pecaminosa, torna-se uma só carne com outra pessoa, frequentemente uma meretriz. (1Co 6:16-18) Visto que nenhum outro pecado pode assim separar o corpo do cristão da união com Cristo e fazer com que se torne "um só" com outrem, é evidentemente por isso que todos os demais pecados são considerados como sendo 'fora do corpo'. A fornicação também pode resultar em danos irreparáveis para o corpo do próprio fornicador.

Pecados Cometidos por Anjos. Visto que os filhos espirituais de Deus devem também refletir a glória de Deus e trazer-lhe louvor, cumprindo a Sua vontade (Sal 148:1, 2; 103:20, 21), eles podem pecar no mesmo sentido básico que os humanos. A Segunda de Pedro 2:4 mostra que alguns filhos espirituais de Deus deveras pecaram, sendo 'entregues a covas de profunda escuridão, a fim de serem reservados para o julgamento'. Evidentemente, 1 Pedro 3:19, 20, se refere à mesma situação, ao falar dos "espíritos em prisão, os quais outrora tinham sido desobedientes, quando a paciência de Deus esperava nos dias de Noé". E Judas 6 indica que 'errar o alvo', ou pecar, por parte de tais criaturas espirituais, deu-se porque "não conservaram a sua posição original, mas abandonaram a sua própria moradia correta", tal moradia correta logicamente se referindo aos céus da presença de Deus.

Uma vez que o sacrifício de Jesus Cristo não abrange nenhuma provisão para cobrir os pecados das criaturas espirituais, não existe nenhuma razão para se crer que os pecados de tais anjos desobedientes fossem perdoáveis. (He 2:14-17) Semelhante a Adão, eram criaturas perfeitas, não tendo nenhuma fraqueza inata que pudesse ser considerada como fator atenuante em se julgar o erro delas.

Remissão de Pecados. Conforme mostrado no artigo DECLARAR JUSTO (Como 'contados' justos), Jeová Deus, a bem dizer, 'credita' a justiça na conta dos que vivem segundo a fé. Ao fazer isso, Deus correspondentemente 'cobre', 'oblitera' ou 'apaga' os pecados que de outro modo seriam debitados a tais fiéis. (Veja Sal 32:1, 2; Is 44:22; At 3:19.) De modo que Jesus equiparou "falhas" e "pecados" a 'dívidas'. (Veja Mt 6:14; 18:21-35; Lu 11:4.) Mesmo que os pecados deles sejam como escarlate, Jeová "lava" a mancha que os torna profanos. (Is 1:18; At 22:16) Os meios pelos quais Deus pode expressar sua terna misericórdia e benevolência, ao passo que mantém a sua perfeita justiça e juízo, são considerados sob ARREPENDIMENTO; RECONCILIAÇÃO; RESGATE; e artigos relacionados.

Evitar o Pecado. O amor a Deus e ao próximo é o principal meio de se evitar o pecado, que é agir contra a lei, pois o amor é uma qualidade notável de Deus; ele fez do amor o alicerce de sua Lei para Israel. (Mt 22:37-40; Ro 13:8-11) Desta forma, os cristãos podem, não alienar-se de Deus, mas fi-car em jubilosa união com Ele e com seu Filho. (1Jo 1:3; 3:1-11, 24; 4:16) Tais pessoas se submetem à orientação do espírito santo de Deus e podem 'viver quanto ao espírito, do ponto de vista de Deus', desistindo dos pecados (1Pe 4:1-6) e produzindo os frutos justos do espírito de Deus, em lugar dos frutos iníquos da carne pecaminosa. (Gál 5:16-26) Podem, assim, obter sua libertação do domínio do pecado. — Ro 6:12-22.

Tendo fé na segura recompensa de Deus pela justiça (He 11:1, 6), a pessoa pode resistir ao convite do pecado para compartilhar do seu usufruto temporário. (He 11:24-26) Sabendo ser impossível fugir da regra de que "o que o homem semear, isso também ceifará", uma vez que "de Deus não se mofa", a pessoa se vê protegida dos enganos do pecado. (Gál 6:7, 8) Ela compreende que não é possível ocultar para sempre os pecados (1Ti 5:24) e que, "embora o pecador faça o mal cem vezes e continue por longo tempo conforme quiser", todavia, "resultará em bem para os que temem o verdadeiro Deus", mas que isto não sucederá com o iníquo que não teme a Deus. (Ec 8:11-13; compare isso com Núm 32:23; Pr 23:17, 18.) Quaisquer riquezas materiais que os iníquos possam ter obtido não lhes comprará a proteção de Deus (Sof 1:17, 18), e, deveras, com o tempo, as riquezas do pecador resultarão ser "algo entesourado para o justo". (Pr 13:21, 22; Ec 2:26) Os que, pela fé, se empenham pela justiça, podem evitar levar a "carga pesada", a perda da paz mental e de coração, a fraqueza da doença espiritual, que o pecado acarreta. — Sal 38:3-6, 18; 41:4.

O conhecimento da palavra de Deus constitui a base de tal fé, e o meio de fortalecê-la. (Sal 119:11; compare isso com Sal 106:7.) A pessoa que age precipitadamente sem primeiro procurar conhecer o caminho a seguir, 'errará o alvo', pecando. (Pr 19:2, n) Discernir que "um único pecador pode destruir a muito bem" faz com que a pessoa justa procure agir com genuína sabedoria. (Veja Ec 9:18; 10:1-4.) É um proceder sábio evitar associar-se com os que praticam a adoração falsa, com os que têm inclinações imorais, pois enredam outros no pecado e corrompem hábitos úteis. — Êx 23:33; Ne 13:25, 26; Sal 26:9-11; Pr 1:10-19; Ec 7:26; 1Co 15:33, 34.

Há, certamente, muitas coisas que podem ser feitas, ou não, ou que podem ser feitas de um modo ou de outro, sem qualquer condenação de pecado. (Compare isso com 1Co 7:27, 28.) Deus não restringiu o homem com infindáveis instruções que governassem cada mínimo pormenor de como as coisas deviam ser feitas. Evidentemente, o homem deve usar a sua inteligência, e também se lhe deu uma ampla liberdade para demonstrar sua personalidade e suas preferências individuais. O pacto da Lei continha muitos regulamentos; todavia, nem mesmo isto privou os homens de sua liberdade de expressão pessoal. O cristianismo, com sua forte ênfase ao amor a Deus e ao próximo como regra orientadora, permite similarmente aos homens a mais ampla liberdade que a pessoa de coração justo poderia desejar. — Compare isso com Mt 22:37-40; Ro 8:21; veja JEOVÁ (Deus de normas de moral); LIBERDADE.

PECAÍAS [Jah Abriu]. Rei de Israel em Samaria, filho e sucessor de Menaém. Seu curto reinado de dois anos (c. 780-779 AEC) foi marcado pela adoração idólatra do bezerro, similar à introduzida por Jeroboão e permitida por Menaém. Peca, ajudante de ordens de Pecaías, conspirou contra ele, matou-o e começou a reinar em seu lugar. — 2Rs 15:22-26.

PECODE. Pelo visto, este era o nome duma área na vizinhança de Babilônia. Homens de Pecode achavam-se entre os que deviam ser incluídos nas forças militares destinadas a executar o julgamento de Jeová contra a infiel Jerusalém. (Ez 23:4, 22-26) Mais tarde, a própria Pecode devia ser devotada à destruição. — Je 50:21.

Pecode, em geral, é identificada com a Puqudu das inscrições assírias. A Inscrição de Nimrud, de Tiglate-Pileser III, indica que Pecode foi incorporada ao Império Assírio e ficava nas proximidades do Elão. (Records of the Past: Ancient Monuments of Egypt and Western Asia [Registros do Passado: Monumentos Antigos do Egito e da Ásia Ocidental], editado por A. Sayce, Londres, 1891, Vol. V, pp. 120, 121) Portanto, caso seja corretamente identificada com Puqudu, parece que Pecode ficava ao L do Tigre e ao N da confluência deste rio com o Carque.

Tem-se sugerido que, em Jeremias 50:21, o nome "Pecode" (assim como Merataim) possivelmente seja um termo poético para Babilônia. É digno de nota que uma inscrição da época de Nabucodonosor mostra que Puqudu estava sob o controle de Babilônia. Portanto, quando Babilônia caiu diante dos medos e dos persas, isto também deve ter afetado Pecode.

PEÇONHA. Líquido venenoso segregado por certas cobras e algumas outras criaturas. (Núm 21:4-9; De 8:15; At 28:3-6) Uma palavra hebraica para o veneno dos répteis é hhe·máh (De 32:24), também empregada para indicar "furor", e coisas semelhantes. (De 29:28; Ez 19:12) Provém duma raiz que significa "arder" (De 19:6) e pode ser uma alusão à inflamação ou ao ardor causados pela picada duma cobra venenosa. Outra palavra hebraica (ro'sh ou rohsh) é aplicada ao "veneno" ou à "peçonha" das cobras, à água "envenenada", e a uma "planta venenosa". — De 32:32, 33; Jó 20:16; Je 8:14; 9:15; 23:15; La 3:19; veja NAJA (COBRA-CAPELO); PLANTA VENENOSA; VÍBORA-CORNUDA.

Embora alguns venenos segregados por animais talvez pareçam servir apenas para proteção ou para infligir a morte, é interessante a seguinte declaração de H. Munro Fox: "Em alguns casos, sabemos que os venenos desempenham certo papel no funcionamento do corpo do animal que os fabrica. Em muitos casos, esta pode ser a verdadeira raison d'être [razão de ser] dos venenos, independentemente de qualquer valor protetor. A saliva venenosa das cobras, por exemplo, tem um papel a desempenhar na digestão do alimento da cobra." — Marvels & Mysteries of Our Animal World (Maravilhas & Mistérios de Nosso Mundo Animal), da The Reader's Digest Association, 1964, p. 259.

Uso Figurado. As declarações mentirosas e caluniosas dos iníquos, tão prejudiciais à reputação da vítima, são assemelhadas à mortífera peçonha da serpente. (Sal 58:3, 4) Diz-se dos caluniadores: "A peçonha de víbora-cornuda está sob os seus lábios" (ou, "atrás dos seus lábios"), assim como a glândula produtora de veneno da víbora está situada atrás do lábio e das presas da sua mandíbula superior. (Sal 140:3; Ro 3:13) A língua humana, quando mal usada em linguagem caluniosa, maledicência, ensino falso ou linguagem prejudicial similar, está "cheia de veneno mortífero". — Tg 3:8.

PEDAEL [Deus Redimiu]. Maioral de Naftali, designado por Jeová para ajudar a repartir a Terra da Promessa entre as tribos; filho de Amiúde. — Núm 34:16, 17, 28.

PEDAÍAS [que significa "Jeová Redimiu"].

1. Pai de Joel, que durante o reinado de Davi era príncipe da meia tribo de Manassés que morava ao O do Jordão. — 1Cr 27:20, 22.

2. Pai de Zebida, mãe de Jeoiaquim; Pedaías morava em Ruma. — 2Rs 23:36.

3. Terceiro filho mencionado do Rei Joaquim (Jeconias), nascido durante o exílio babilônico. Pedaías tornou-se pai do pós-exílico governador Zorobabel, e, portanto, foi elo vital na linhagem que levou a Jesus. (1Cr 3:17-19) Por causa de alguma situação não registrada, Zorobabel é também chamado de filho de Sealtiel, irmão de Pedaías. Sealtiel talvez tenha adotado Zorobabel, se Pedaías morreu quando o menino era pequeno; ou, se Sealtiel morreu antes de gerar um filho varão, Pedaías talvez tenha realizado o casamento de cunhado, gerando Zorobabel em nome do seu irmão Sealtiel. — Esd 5:2; Mt 1:12.

4. Benjamita cujo descendente morava em Jerusalém depois do exílio babilônico. — Ne 11:4, 7.

5. Descendente de Parós, que ajudou Neemias a reparar a muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:25.

6. Israelita pós-exílico, provavelmente sacerdote, que ficou em pé à esquerda de Esdras durante a leitura da Lei de Jeová para o povo reunido. — Ne 8:1, 4.

7. Levita fiel que, junto com Selemias, o sacerdote, e Zadoque, o copista, foi incumbido por Neemias dos dízimos contribuídos, na segunda visita deste a Jerusalém. — Ne 13:6, 7, 12, 13.

PEDAZUR [A Rocha Redimiu]. Homem da tribo de Manassés, cujo filho Gamaliel foi designado maioral da sua tribo após o Êxodo. — Núm 1:10, 16; 2:20; 7:54, 59; 10:23.

PEDERNEIRA. Pedra extremamente dura, mais do que o aço, tão dura que, quando se batem dois pedaços dela um contra o outro, pode-se acender fogo com as faíscas. A Bíblia faz referência à pederneira em figuras de linguagem, quando enfatiza qualidades tais como dureza, durabilidade e resistência à oposição. — Is 5:28; 50:7; Ez 3:9.

A pederneira é encontrada em depósitos de calcário e de greda, em Israel e na parte N da península do Sinai. Ela é bastante quebradiça e na fratura apresenta uma superfície lustrosa. Suas lascas têm beiradas bem afiadas, uma característica que o homem prontamente reconheceu e pôs em uso. Desde tempos bem primitivos, fabricaram-se com esta pedra facas, cabeças de machado, talhadeiras, pontas de lança, e outros instrumentos e armas. Foi com uma pederneira que a esposa de Moisés circuncidou seu filho; quando a nação de Israel chegou a Gilgal, realizou-se ali com bom êxito uma cirurgia similar com o uso de facas de pederneira. (Êx 4:25; Jos 4:19; 5:2, 3, 8, 9) Jeová fez sair água duma rocha de pederneira para seu povo no ermo. — De 8:15; Sal 114:8.

PEDRA. Material amplamente usado em construção. Sua durabilidade tem sido de muita ajuda para os arqueólogos na obtenção de conhecimento sobre o passado. Os egípcios, os assírios e outras nações erigiram templos, palácios, monumentos e outras estruturas de pedra. Em muitas destas estruturas há representações pictóricas e inscrições que contam eventos, descrevem vitórias e retratam costumes, lançando luz sobre a história destes povos e sobre a sua vida cotidiana. Os hebreus usavam amplamente pedras em construções (Le 14:40, 41), muros e muralhas (Ne 4:3; Pr 24:31), altares (Êx 20:25), mós (Jz 9:53), talhas para água (Jo 2:6), pesos (Pr 16:11), para cobrir poços, cavernas e túmulos (Gên 29:8; Jos 10:18; Jo 11:38), bem como para muitos outros fins. Todavia, os hebreus não erigiam monumentos com relevos pictóricos, como faziam as nações pagãs; por isso, pouco se sabe sobre seu aspecto, o estilo preciso da sua vestimenta, e assim por diante. Mas a Bíblia fornece uma história mais plena de Israel, seu modo de vida e suas personalidades, do que os restos de pedra de qualquer outra nação.

Talhar pedras era uma arte muito desenvolvida. (2Sa 5:11; 1Rs 5:18) As pedras para o templo de Salomão, em Jerusalém, foram talhadas na pedreira, para se ajustarem bem no local do templo sem talhação adicional. — 1Rs 6:7.

Uso Figurado. Os cristãos ungidos, na terra, são comparados a um templo, do qual Jesus Cristo é "a pedra angular de alicerce". (Veja PEDRA ANGULAR.) Sobre esta "pedra angular de alicerce", os seguidores de Cristo, gerados pelo espírito, "como pedras viventes, [são] edificados como casa espiritual". Os líderes religiosos judeus, como "construtores" nacionais, rejeitaram Jesus qual "principal pedra angular", tropeçando sobre esta pedra por serem desobedientes à Palavra de Deus. — Ef 2:19-22; 1Pe 2:4-8; Mt 21:42; Mr 12:10; Lu 20:17; Ro 9:32, 33.

O Reino de Deus é assemelhado a uma pedra 'cortada, sem mãos', que esmiuçará e porá fim aos reinos representados pelas várias partes da estátua. Esse Reino durará "por tempos indefinidos". — Da 2:34, 44, 45.

Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 2:17, o glorificado Cristo Jesus promete a respeito do vencedor cristão: "Eu lhe darei um seixo ["uma pedra", Al] branco, e no seixo escrito um novo nome, que ninguém conhece, exceto aquele que o recebe." A palavra "seixo", aqui, traduz o termo grego psé·fon. O apóstolo Paulo usa esta palavra ao narrar a anterior perseguição que movia aos cristãos, dizendo: "Eu lançava o meu voto [psé·fon; literalmente: seixo (de votação)] contra eles." (At 26:10) Nos tribunais de justiça usavam-se seixos para fazer o julgamento ou para expressar uma opinião de inocência ou de culpa. Empregavam-se seixos brancos para declarar a inocência, a absolvição; pedras negras, para declarar a culpa, a condenação. O seixo branco dado ao vencedor, portanto, parece significar o julgamento que Jesus Cristo faz dele como inocente, puro, limpo, recebendo a Sua aprovação como discípulo.

PEDRA, PAVIMENTO DE. Veja PAVIMENTO DE PEDRA.

PEDRA, TALHADOR DE. Cortador de pedra; alguém que corta, lavra ou prepara pedras para fins de construção. (2Rs 12:11, 12; 2Cr 24:12) O Rei Davi fez dos residentes forasteiros em Israel talhadores de pedra "para lavrar pedras quadradas" (cortando-as no tamanho apropriado) para o prospectivo templo de Jeová. — 1Cr 22:2, 15; compare isso com 1Rs 6:7; veja PEDREIRA.

PEDRA ANGULAR. Pedra colocada no ângulo ou canto dum prédio na junção de duas paredes, sendo ela de grande importância para juntá-las e ancorá-las. As pedras angulares, usualmente cortadas em forma retangular, costumam ser colocadas alternadamente de ponta e de lado, desde o alicerce até o alto ou o teto da construção. Assim, num ângulo ou canto, o lado de uma pedra aparece acima ou abaixo da ponta da próxima pedra.

A principal pedra angular era a pedra angular de alicerce, uma pedra especialmente sólida, em geral escolhida para prédios públicos e para muros de cidade. A pedra angular de alicerce era empregada como guia à medida que outras pedras eram colocadas no seu devido lugar, empregando-se um prumo para alinhá-las. Toda outra pedra tinha de alinhar-se à pedra angular de alicerce, para que o prédio ficasse corretamente construído. Às vezes, as pedras angulares de alicerce eram bem maciças. A pedra angular de alicerce também servia para manter unidas as partes da estrutura.

Outra importante pedra angular era a "principal do ângulo" (Sal 118:22), sendo esta expressão aparentemente uma alusão à pedra culminante, e, portanto, à que estava no alto da estrutura. Por meio dela, duas paredes que se unem no canto são seguradas no alto, para não se separarem e a estrutura desabar.

Alegria e louvores a Jeová assinalaram o lançamento do alicerce do templo nos dias de Zorobabel. (Esd 3:10, 11) Predisse-se também que, quando Zorobabel 'produzisse a pedra de remate', esta seria aclamada: "Quão encantadora! Quão encantadora!" (Za 4:6, 7) No entanto, a Babilônia aguardavam tristeza e devastação, predizendo Jeová: "As pessoas não tomarão de ti nenhuma pedra para servir de ângulo ou pedra para alicerces, porque te tornarás em baldios desolados por tempo indefinido." — Je 51:26.

Uso Figurado e Simbólico. Deus perguntou a Jó a respeito da fundação da terra: "Quem lançou a sua pedra angular?" A terra, em que o homem mora e em que erigiu muitos prédios, foi assim comparada a um gigantesco edifício, uma construção com pedra angular. O lançamento dela, que não podia ser atribuído ao homem, porque a humanidade ainda não havia sido criada, fez com que os celestiais "filhos de Deus" bradassem em aplauso. — Jó 38:4-7.

Algumas traduções usam "pedra angular" ou "pedra de esquina" para traduzir a palavra hebraica (pin·náh), que tem o sentido básico de "esquina", mas é também usada em sentido metafórico para um chefe como 'esquina' de defesa ou apoio, portanto, para um homem-chave. Assim, em Isaías 19:13, certas traduções usam "pedra angular [ou: "de esquina"]" (VB; Al; ALA; IBB), ao passo que outras usam "chefes" (BMD; CBC; LEB; MC) e "esteios" (BV), concordando basicamente com a Tradução do Novo Mundo, que usa "homens-chave". (Veja também Jz 20:2; 1Sa 14:38; Za 10:4, onde o hebraico literalmente é "torre(s) de ângulo", representativas de homens importantes ou vitais, ou chefes.) Tal aplicação de 'ângulo' ou 'esquina' a um homem-chave parece significativa em vista do uso simbólico de "pedra angular" nas profecias messiânicas.

As Escrituras mencionam Jesus Cristo como a "pedra angular de alicerce" da congregação cristã, a qual é assemelhada a uma casa espiritual. Por meio de Isaías, Jeová predisse que Ele lançaria em Sião, como alicerce, "uma pedra, uma pedra provada, ângulo precioso de um alicerce seguro". (Is 28:16) Pedro citou e aplicou a Jesus Cristo esta profecia a respeito da "pedra angular de alicerce", sobre a qual cada cristão ungido é edificado como uma das "pedras viventes", para juntos se tornarem casa ou templo espiritual para Jeová. (1Pe 2:4-6) Similarmente, Paulo mostrou que os membros da congregação cristã tinham sido edificados "sobre o alicerce dos apóstolos e profetas, ao passo que o próprio Cristo Jesus é a pedra angular de alicerce", em união com quem o edifício inteiro, harmoniosamente conjuntado, "desenvolve-se num templo santo para Jeová", como lugar para Ele habitar por espírito. — Ef 2:19-22.

O Salmo 118:22 revela que a pedra rejeitada pelos construtores se tornaria "a principal do ângulo" (hebr.: ro'sh pin·náh). Jesus citou e aplicou esta profecia a si mesmo como "a principal pedra angular" (gr.: ke·fa·lé go·ní·as, cabeça da esquina). (Mt 21:42; Mr 12:10, 11; Lu 20:17) Assim como a pedra mais elevada dum prédio é conspícua, também Jesus Cristo é a pedra culminante da congregação cristã dos ungidos, a qual é comparada a um templo espiritual. Pedro também aplicou o Salmo 118:22 a Cristo, mostrando que este era a "pedra" rejeitada pelos homens, mas escolhida por Deus para se tornar "a principal do ângulo". — At 4:8-12; veja também 1Pe 2:4-7.

PEDRAS, ATIRAR. Veja FUNDIBULÁRIO.

PEDREIRA. Escavação a céu aberto, da qual se extraem vários tipos de pedra. A pedra calcária e o mármore, que ficam perto da superfície, são extraídos assim. Crê-se que uma grande área próxima do atual Portão de Damasco, em Jerusalém, seja uma antiga pedreira. A primeira referência a uma pedreira se acha em Josué 7:4, 5, onde se relata que cerca de 3.000 israelitas fugiram de Ai para Sebarim, que significa "Pedreiras". Quando Salomão se preparou para construir o templo, ele ordenou que as grandes pedras de alicerce fossem extraídas dos montes do Líbano, e dezenas de milhares de homens foram recrutados para esta tarefa. (1Rs 5:13-18; 6:7) Quando foi necessário fazer reparos no templo, nos dias de Jeoás, contrataram-se talhadores de pedra para este serviço. (2Rs 12:11, 12) O túmulo em que Jesus foi sepultado tinha sido escavado na rocha. — Mt 27:59, 60; Mr 15:46.

Empregando uma eloquente metáfora, Jeová, pela boca de Isaías, traz à mente a pedreira e suas operações. (Is 51:1) Conforme indicado no versículo subsequente, a "rocha" evidentemente era Abraão, como a fonte humana daquela nação, e a "cavidade do poço" era Sara, cuja madre, assemelhada a um poço, deu à luz Isaque, ancestral de Israel. (Is 51:2) No entanto, visto que o nascimento de Isaque se deu por poder divino e por um ato miraculoso, a metafórica extração de pedra pode também ter uma aplicação espiritual mais elevada. Assim, Deuteronômio 32:18 menciona Jeová como a 'Rocha que gerou' Israel, "Aquele que te produziu [o mesmo verbo usado referente a Sara em Is 51:2] com dores de parto".

O produto da pedreira às vezes levava o mesmo nome. Por isso, a palavra hebraica pesi·lím, traduzida "pedreiras" em Juízes 3:19, 26, é em outros lugares traduzida "imagens entalhadas". (De 7:5; Sal 78:58; Is 10:10) Por isso, alguns sugeriram que talvez fosse dum bosquete de tais deuses pagãos, produtos da pedreira, que Eúde voltou para fazer uma visita pessoal a Eglom. No entanto, a maioria dos tradutores prefere "pedreiras".

Pedreiras antigas, em que trabalhos parcialmente terminados foram abandonados, lançaram um pouco de luz sobre os métodos antigos de extração de pedras. Cortavam-se fendas estreitas bem fundo na rocha. Nestas inseria-se à força madeira seca, que depois se fazia inchar com água, até a rocha rachar ao longo da linha de clivagem. Nos tempos romanos, extraíam-se pedras que pesavam até cinco ou dez toneladas, a certa distância do local da construção. Elas eram então empurradas sobre rolos ou levadas em trenós, usando-se a força de grande número de escravos.

PEDREIRO. Artífice que constrói com tijolo ou pedra. (2Rs 12:12; 22:6) O pedreiro dos tempos antigos lavrava e serrava as pedras, e então as usava para construir paredes e muros, e vários tipos de prédios. (2Sa 5:11; 1Rs 7:9-12; 1Cr 22:2; 2Cr 24:12) Outras construções incluíam sepulturas (Is 22:16) e condutos de água. — 2Rs 20:20.

Entre as ferramentas dos pedreiros achavam-se o martelo, o machado, a serra de pedra, o nível, o cordel de medir e o prumo. (1Rs 6:7; 7:9; Is 28:17; Za 4:10) Conforme mostrado em monumentos, as ferramentas usadas pelos pedreiros egípcios incluíam o malho e a talhadeira, sem dúvida também usados pelos pedreiros israelitas. Nas construções do Egito, mediam-se as pedras, marcando-as com linhas escuras, que serviam como guias para os talhadores de pedra, e a posição de cada pedra no prédio era indicada por uma marca ou um número colocado nela.

Os antigos pedreiros eram capazes de lavrar tão bem as pedras, que se tornava desnecessário o emprego de argamassa. Até o dia de hoje, é impossível enfiar a lâmina duma faca entre as pedras maciças de certos escombros de estruturas da Palestina, que datam do período herodiano. — Veja ARQUITETURA.

PEDRO [Uma Pedra; Um Pedaço de Rocha]. Este apóstolo de Jesus Cristo é chamado de cinco maneiras diferentes nas Escrituras: pelo nome hebraico "Simeão", pelos nomes gregos "Simão" (duma raiz hebr. que significa "ouvir; escutar") e "Pedro" (nome gr. que só ele tem nas Escrituras), pelo seu equivalente semítico "Cefas" (talvez aparentado com o hebr. ke·fím [penhas], usado em Jó 30:6; Je 4:29), e pela combinação de "Simão Pedro". — At 15:14; Mt 10:2; 16:16; Jo 1:42.

Pedro era filho de João, ou Jonas. (Mt 16:17; Jo 1:42) Primeiramente, ele é apresentado como morando em Betsaida (Jo 1:44), mas, depois, em Cafarnaum (Lu 4:31, 38), ambas no litoral norte do mar da Galileia. Pedro e seu irmão André estavam empenhados no negócio da pesca, evidentemente associados com Tiago e João, filhos de Zebedeu, "que eram parceiros de Simão". (Lu 5:7, 10; Mt 4:18-22; Mr 1:16-21) De modo que Pedro não era pescador isolado, mas era parte duma empresa de certo tamanho. Embora os líderes religiosos judeus encarassem Pedro e João como "homens indoutos e comuns", isto não significa que eram iletrados ou sem instrução. O Dictionary of the Bible (Dicionário da Bíblia; 1905, Vol. III, p. 757), de Hastings, diz que, para o judeu, a palavra a·grámma·tos aplicada a tais "refere-se a alguém que não recebera instrução no estudo rabínico da Escritura". — Veja Jo 7:14, 15; At 4:13.

Pedro é apresentado como homem casado, e, pelo menos nos anos posteriores, parece que sua esposa o acompanhava nas suas missões (ou em algumas delas), assim como faziam as esposas de outros dos apóstolos. (1Co 9:5) Sua sogra morava na casa dele, compartilhada com seu irmão André. — Mr 1:29-31.

Ministério com Jesus. Pedro foi um dos primeiros discípulos de Jesus, sendo levado a Jesus por André, discípulo de João, o Batizador. (Jo 1:35-42) Naquela ocasião, Jesus deu-lhe o nome de Cefas (Pedro) (Jo 1:42; Mr 3:16), e este nome provavelmente era profético. Jesus, que podia discernir que Natanael era homem "em quem não há fraude", também podia discernir a constituição íntima de Pedro. Deveras, Pedro demonstrava qualidades firmes como rocha, especialmente depois da morte e da ressurreição de Jesus, tornando-se uma influência fortalecedora para os seus concristãos. — Jo 1:47, 48; 2:25; Lu 22:32.

Foi algum tempo mais tarde, lá na Galileia, que Pedro, seu irmão André, e seus sócios Tiago e João, receberam a convocação de Jesus para virem e serem "pescadores de homens". (Jo 1:35-42; Mt 4:18-22; Mr 1:16-18) Jesus escolhera o barco de Pedro para dali falar à multidão na margem. Depois, Jesus causou uma pesca milagrosa, a qual induziu Pedro, que primeiro tivera uma atitude de dúvida, a prostrar-se diante de Jesus em temor. Ele e seus três parceiros, sem hesitação, abandonaram seu negócio para seguir Jesus. (Lu 5:1-11) Depois de cerca de um ano de discipulado, Pedro foi incluído nos 12 escolhidos para serem "apóstolos", ou 'enviados'. — Mr 3:13-19.

Dentre os apóstolos, Pedro, Tiago e João foram diversas vezes escolhidos por Jesus para acompanhá-lo em ocasiões especiais, como nos casos da cena de transfiguração (Mt 17:1, 2; Mr 9:2; Lu 9:28, 29), da ressuscitação da filha de Jairo (Mr 5:22-24, 35-42) e da provação pessoal de Jesus no jardim de Getsêmani (Mt 26:36-46; Mr 14:32-42). Estes três, mais André, foram os que interrogaram Jesus, em especial, sobre a destruição de Jerusalém, a futura presença de Jesus e a terminação do sistema de coisas. (Mr 13:1-3; Mt 24:3) Embora Pedro seja associado com seu irmão André nas listas apostólicas, o registro dos acontecimentos o associa com mais frequência com João, tanto antes como depois da morte e ressurreição de Jesus. (Lu 22:8; Jo 13:24; 20:2; 21:7; At 3:1; 8:14; compare isso com At 1:13; Gál 2:9.) Não se informa se isso se dava por motivo de amizade e afinidade naturais, ou porque foram designados por Jesus para trabalharem juntos (veja Mr 6:7).

Os relatos evangélicos registram mais declarações de Pedro do que de qualquer um dos outros 11. Ele tinha claramente uma natureza dinâmica, não sendo acanhado ou hesitante. Sem dúvida, por isso falava primeiro ou se expressava, ao passo que os outros permaneciam calados. Fazia perguntas que resultavam em Jesus esclarecer e amplificar ilustrações. (Mt 15:15; 18:21; 19:27-29; Lu 12:41; Jo 13:36-38; compare isso com Mr 11:21-25.) Ocasionalmente, falava de modo impulsivo, até mesmo impetuoso. Foi ele quem achou que devia dizer algo ao observar a visão da transfiguração. (Mr 9:1-6; Lu 9:33) Com a sua declaração um tanto aturdida sobre quão excelente era estarem ali e a sua oferta de construir três tendas, ele evidentemente sugeriu que a visão (na qual Moisés e Elias se separavam então de Jesus) não devia terminar, mas continuar. Na noite da última Páscoa, Pedro primeiro objetou fortemente a que Jesus lhe lavasse os pés, mas então, ao ser repreendido, queria que ele lhe lavasse também a cabeça e as mãos. (Jo 13:5-10) No entanto, pode-se ver que as expressões de Pedro basicamente se originavam de vivo interesse e reflexão, conjugados com um forte sentimento. Estarem incluídas no registro bíblico é evidência de seu valor, embora às vezes revelem certas fraquezas humanas da sua parte.

Assim, quando muitos dos discípulos tropeçaram em vista do ensino de Jesus e o abandonaram, Pedro falou em nome de todos os apóstolos ao afirmar a determinação deles de continuar com o seu Senhor, Aquele que tinha "declarações de vida eterna . . . o Santo de Deus". (Jo 6:66-69) Depois de os apóstolos, de modo geral, terem respondido à pergunta de Jesus sobre o que as pessoas diziam a respeito da identidade dele, foi novamente Pedro quem expressou a sólida convicção: "Tu és o Cristo, o Filho do Deus vivente", em vista do que Jesus declarou Pedro bendito, ou "feliz". — Mt 16:13-17.

Tomar Pedro a dianteira em falar corresponde a ele ser o mais frequentemente corrigido, repreendido ou censurado. Embora fosse motivado pela compaixão, cometeu o erro de atrever-se a levar Jesus à parte e realmente censurá-lo por predizer os futuros sofrimentos e morte dele como o Messias. Jesus voltou as costas para Pedro, chamando-o de opositor, ou Satanás, que opunha raciocínios humanos contra os pensamentos de Deus encontrados nas profecias. (Mt 16:21-23) Pode-se notar, porém, que Jesus 'olhava para os outros discípulos' ao fazer isso, provavelmente indicando que sabia que Pedro expressava sentimentos compartilhados pelos outros. (Mr 8:32, 33) Quando Pedro presumiu de falar por Jesus sobre o pagamento de certo imposto, Jesus ajudou-o gentilmente a dar-se conta da necessidade de pensar com mais cuidado antes de falar. (Mt 17:24-27) Pedro revelou um excesso de confiança e certo sentimento de superioridade sobre os outros 11 ao declarar que, embora estes pudessem tropeçar com relação a Jesus, ele nunca o faria, estando disposto a ir para a prisão ou mesmo a morrer com Jesus. É verdade que todos os outros fizeram a mesma afirmação, mas Pedro a fez primeiro e "profusamente". Jesus predisse então que Pedro negaria três vezes seu Senhor. — Mt 26:31-35; Mr 14:30, 31; Lu 22:33, 34.

Pedro não era apenas homem de palavras, mas também de ação, demonstrando tanto iniciativa como coragem, bem como um forte apego ao seu Senhor. Quando Jesus procurou um lugar solitário para orar, antes do alvorecer, Simão logo liderou um grupo "à sua procura". (Mr 1:35-37) Novamente, foi Pedro quem pediu que Jesus lhe ordenasse andar ao seu encontro sobre as águas agitadas pelo temporal, andando ele até mesmo certa distância antes de ficar com dúvidas e começar a afundar. — Mt 14:25-32.

No jardim de Getsêmani, na última noite da vida terrestre de Jesus, Pedro, junto com Tiago e João, teve o privilégio de acompanhar Jesus ao lugar onde este se entregou a uma fervorosa oração. Pedro, assim como os outros apóstolos, passou a dormir, por cansaço e pesar. Foi sem dúvida porque Pedro expressara tão profusamente sua determinação de apegar-se a Jesus que foi a ele que Jesus se dirigiu especificamente ao dizer: "Não pudestes vigiar comigo nem mesmo por uma hora?" (Mt 26:36-45; Lu 22:39-46) Pedro deixara de 'fazer orações' e sofreu as consequências.

Quando os discípulos viram a turba prestes a se apoderar de Jesus, perguntaram se deviam lutar; mas Pedro agiu sem aguardar a resposta, decepando a orelha de um homem com um golpe de espada (embora esse pescador provavelmente intencionasse infligir maior dano) e foi então repreendido por Jesus. (Mt 26:51, 52; Lu 22:49-51; Jo 18:10, 11) Embora Pedro abandonasse Jesus, assim como fizeram os outros discípulos, ele depois seguiu "duma boa distância" a turba que prendera Jesus, aparentemente dividido entre o temor pela sua própria vida e a profunda preocupação com o que iria acontecer com Jesus. — Mt 26:57, 58.

Ajudado por outro discípulo, que evidentemente o seguiu ou acompanhou até a residência do sumo sacerdote, Pedro entrou diretamente no pátio. (Jo 18:15, 16) Não ficou discretamente quieto num canto escuro, mas foi aquecer-se junto ao fogo. A luz do fogo possibilitou que outros o reconhecessem como um companheiro de Jesus, e seu sotaque galileu aumentou as suspeitas deles. Quando foi acusado, Pedro negou três vezes que sequer conhecesse Jesus, passando finalmente a praguejar na veemência da sua negação. Em alguma parte da cidade, um galo cantou pela segunda vez, e Jesus "voltou-se e olhou para Pedro". Pedro saiu então, quebrantado, e chorou amargamente. (Mt 26:69-75; Mr 14:66-72; Lu 22:54-62; Jo 18:17, 18; veja GALO, CANTO DO; JURAMENTO.) No entanto, atendeu-se a súplica anterior de Jesus a favor de Pedro, e a fé de Pedro não fraquejou completamente. — Lu 22:31, 32.

Após a morte e a ressurreição de Jesus, as mulheres que foram ao túmulo foram mandadas por um anjo levar uma mensagem "aos discípulos dele e a Pedro". (Mr 16:1-7; Mt 28:1-10) Maria Madalena levou a mensagem a Pedro e João, e estes começaram a correr até o túmulo, sendo Pedro ultrapassado por João. Ao passo que João parou diante do túmulo e só olhou para dentro, Pedro logo entrou, seguido depois por João. (Jo 20:1-8) Algum tempo antes de Jesus aparecer aos discípulos em grupo, ele apareceu a Pedro. Isto, além de Pedro ter sido especificamente mencionado pelo anjo, deve ter assegurado ao arrependido Pedro que sua tripla negação não o cortara para sempre da associação com o Senhor. — Lu 24:34; 1Co 15:5.

Antes de Jesus manifestar-se aos discípulos junto ao mar da Galileia (Tiberíades), o dinâmico Pedro anunciara que ia pescar, e os outros se juntaram a ele. Mais tarde, quando João reconheceu Jesus na praia, Pedro impulsivamente nadou até lá, deixando para os outros trazer o barco, e quando Jesus depois pediu peixe, Pedro o atendeu puxando a rede para a praia. (Jo 21:1-13) Foi nessa ocasião que Jesus perguntou três vezes a Pedro (que negara três vezes seu Senhor) se o amava, dando a Pedro a comissão de 'pastorear as suas ovelhas'. Jesus predisse também a maneira da morte de Pedro, o que induziu Pedro a perguntar, quando viu o apóstolo João: "Senhor, este homem fará o quê?" Mais uma vez Jesus corrigiu o conceito de Pedro, enfatizando a necessidade de 'ser seu seguidor' sem se preocupar com o que outros pudessem fazer. — Jo 21:15-22.

Ministério Posterior. Depois de ter "voltado" da sua queda no laço do medo, causada na maior parte pelo excesso de confiança (veja Pr 29:25), Pedro devia 'fortalecer os seus irmãos', em cumprimento da exortação de Cristo (Lu 22:32), e fazer pastoreio entre as ovelhas Dele. (Jo 21:15-17) Em acordo com isso, encontramos Pedro tendo uma parte destacada na atividade dos discípulos depois da ascensão de Jesus ao céu. Antes de Pentecostes de 33 EC, Pedro levantou a questão da substituição do infiel Judas, apresentando evidência bíblica a favor de tal ação. A assembleia agiu segundo a sua recomendação. (At 1:15-26) Novamente, em Pentecostes, sob a orientação do espírito santo, Pedro agiu como porta-voz dos apóstolos e fez uso da primeira das "chaves" que recebeu de Jesus, abrindo assim o caminho para judeus se tornarem membros do Reino. — At 2:1-41; veja CHAVE.

Seu destaque na primitiva congregação cristã não terminou em Pentecostes. No livro de Atos, ele e João são os únicos apóstolos originais mencionados depois disso, exceto pela breve menção da execução de "Tiago, irmão de João", o outro do grupo dos três apóstolos que haviam usufruído uma associação mais íntima com Jesus. (At 12:2) Pedro parece ter sido especialmente notável pela realização de milagres. (At 3:1-26; 5:12-16; compare isso com Gál 2:8.) Com a ajuda do espírito santo, ele dirigiu-se destemidamente aos governantes judeus que mandaram prender a ele e a João (At 4:1-21), e numa segunda ocasião agiu como porta-voz de todos os apóstolos perante o Sinédrio, declarando firmemente a determinação deles de "obedecer a Deus como governante" antes que aos homens que se opunham à vontade de Deus. (At 5:17-31) Pedro deve ter tido satisfação especialmente grande de poder mostrar como mudou de atitude desde aquela noite em que negou Jesus, também de poder suportar as chibatadas ordenadas pelos governantes. (At 5:40-42) Antes de ser preso pela segunda vez, Pedro fora inspirado a expor a hipocrisia de Ananias e Safira, e de proferir o julgamento de Deus contra eles. — At 5:1-11.

Pouco depois do martírio de Estêvão, após Filipe (o evangelizador) ter ajudado e batizado diversos crentes em Samaria, Pedro e João foram para lá a fim de habilitar esses crentes a receber o espírito santo. Pedro usou ali a segunda 'chave do reino'. Daí, no caminho de retorno a Jerusalém, os dois apóstolos 'declararam as boas novas' a muitas aldeias dos samaritanos. (At 8:5-25) Evidentemente, Pedro saiu numa nova missão, durante a qual, em Lida, curou Eneias, que estivera oito anos paralítico, e ressuscitou a mulher Dorcas, de Jope. (At 9:32-43) Em Jope, Pedro foi orientado para usar a terceira 'chave do reino', viajando para Cesareia a fim de pregar a Cornélio, e a seus parentes e amigos, o que resultou em eles se tornarem os primeiros crentes gentios, incircuncisos, a receber o espírito santo como herdeiros do Reino. Ao retornar a Jerusalém, Pedro teve de enfrentar os que se opunham a esta ação, mas estes assentiram, depois de ele apresentar a evidência de que agira sob a direção do céu. — At 10:1–11:18; compare isso com Mt 16:19.

Talvez tenha sido por volta do mesmo ano (36 EC) que Paulo fez a sua primeira visita a Jerusalém como converso cristão e apóstolo. Ele foi "visitar a Cefas [Pedro]" e passou 15 dias com ele, vendo também Tiago (meio-irmão de Jesus), mas nenhum dos outros apóstolos originais. — Gál 1:18, 19; veja APÓSTOLO (Apostolados Congregacionais).

Segundo a evidência disponível, foi em 44 EC que Herodes Agripa I executou o apóstolo Tiago, e, ao ver que isso agradava aos líderes judeus, prendeu Pedro a seguir. (At 12:1-4) A congregação fez 'orações intensas' a favor de Pedro, e o anjo de Jeová libertou-o da prisão (e provavelmente da morte). Depois de relatar sua soltura milagrosa aos que estavam na casa de João Marcos, Pedro pediu que se relatasse isso "a Tiago e aos irmãos", e então Pedro "viajou para outro lugar". — At 12:5-17; compare isso com Jo 7:1; 11:53, 54.

A próxima vez que ele consta no relato de Atos é na assembleia de "apóstolos e anciãos" realizada em Jerusalém para considerar a questão da circuncisão dos gentios convertidos, provavelmente no ano 49 EC. Depois de considerável disputa, Pedro levantou-se e deu testemunho a respeito dos tratos de Deus com crentes gentios. Que "a multidão inteira ficou calada" atesta o vigor do argumento, e, provavelmente, também o respeito que tinham por ele. Pedro, igual a Paulo e Barnabé, cujo testemunho se seguiu, a bem dizer estava no banco das testemunhas perante a assembleia. (At 15:1-29) É evidentemente com referência a esta ocasião que Paulo fala de Pedro, junto com Tiago e João, como "homens de destaque", "que pareciam ser colunas" na congregação. — Gál 2:1, 2, 6-9.

À base do registro como um todo, é evidente que Pedro, embora certamente tivesse algum destaque e fosse respeitado, não tinha primazia sobre os apóstolos no sentido, ou à base, de gozar duma posição ou cargo designado. Assim, quando a obra de Filipe em Samaria mostrou ser frutífera, o relato diz que os apóstolos, evidentemente atuando como corpo, 'mandaram Pedro e João' em missão para Samaria. (At 8:14) Pedro não continuou permanentemente em Jerusalém, como se sua presença fosse essencial para o devido governo da congregação cristã. (At 8:25; 9:32; 12:17; veja também ANCIÃO; SUPERINTENDENTE.) Ele atuou em Antioquia, na Síria, na mesma época em que Paulo estava ali, e Paulo achou certa vez necessário repreender Pedro (Cefas) "face a face . . . na frente de todos", porque Pedro se envergonhara de comer e de similarmente se associar com cristãos gentios, por causa da presença de certos cristãos judeus que vieram da parte de Tiago, de Jerusalém. — Gál 2:11-14.

Informações adicionais sobre a questão da posição de Pedro na congregação cristã são fornecidas sob ROCHA, ROCHEDO. O conceito de que Pedro estava em Roma e encabeçava a congregação ali tem em apoio apenas uma tradição duvidosa e não se harmoniza bem com as indicações bíblicas. Sobre este ponto, e sobre Pedro morar em Babilônia e esta ser o lugar de onde escreveu suas duas cartas, veja PEDRO, CARTAS DE.

PEDRO, CARTAS DE. Duas cartas inspiradas das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, escritas pelo apóstolo Pedro, que se identifica como o escritor nas palavras iniciais de cada carta. (1Pe 1:1; 2Pe 1:1; compare isso com 2Pe 3:1.) Evidência interna, adicional, indica inconfundivelmente Pedro como o escritor delas. Ele chama a si mesmo de testemunha ocular da transfiguração de Jesus Cristo, privilégio compartilhado apenas por Pedro, Tiago e João. (2Pe 1:16-18; Mt 17:1-9) E, conforme evidencia João 21:18, 19, somente Pedro poderia ter dito: "Em breve se há de eliminar a minha habitação, assim como também o nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo me indicou." (2Pe 1:14) A diferença de estilo entre as duas cartas pode ser atribuída a que Pedro usou Silvano (Silas) para escrever a primeira carta, mas, pelo visto, não fez isso ao escrever a sua segunda carta. (1Pe 5:12) Ambas eram cartas gerais, evidentemente dirigidas a cristãos judeus e não judeus. A primeira carta é dirigida especificamente aos em Ponto, Galácia, Capadócia, Ásia e Bitínia — regiões da Ásia Menor. — 1Pe 1:1; 2:10; 2Pe 1:1; 3:1; compare isso com At 2:5, 9, 10.

As cartas de Pedro concordam plenamente com outros livros bíblicos em dar destaque à conduta correta e sua recompensa, e também em citá-los como Palavra de autoridade de Deus. Fazem-se citações de Gênesis (18:12; 1Pe 3:6), Êxodo (19:5, 6; 1Pe 2:9), Levítico (11:44; 1Pe 1:16), Salmos (34:12-16; 118:22; 1Pe 3:10-12; 2:7), Provérbios (11:31 [LXX]; 26:11; 1Pe 4:18; 2Pe 2:22) e Isaías (8:14; 28:16; 40:6-8; 53:5; 1Pe 2:8; 2:6; 1:24, 25; 2:24). Mostra-se que as profecias bíblicas são produto do espírito de Deus. (2Pe 1:20, 21; compare isso com 2Ti 3:16.) Repete-se a promessa de Deus, de novos céus e uma nova terra. (2Pe 3:13; Is 65:17; 66:22; Re 21:1) Os paralelos entre 2 Pedro (2:4-18; 3:3) e Judas (5-13, 17, 18) evidentemente indicam que o discípulo Judas aceitou a segunda carta de Pedro como inspirada. Digno de nota é também que as cartas do apóstolo Paulo são classificadas por Pedro em conjunto com "o resto das Escrituras". — 2Pe 3:15, 16.

DESTAQUES DE PRIMEIRA PEDRO

Carta que incentiva os cristãos a serem vigilantes e a perseverarem fielmente apesar de provações.

Escrita em Babilônia, pelo apóstolo Pedro, que usou Silvano como secretário, por volta de 62-64 EC.

Os cristãos devem agir de maneira digna da sua maravilhosa esperança.

"Aos escolhidos" deu-se uma esperança viva, uma herança incorruptível no céu. (1:1-5)

Eles têm fé em Jesus Cristo para a salvação da alma — algo em que os profetas da antiguidade e até mesmo os anjos estavam vivamente interessados. (1:8-12)

Por isso, deviam avigorar a mente para atividade; deviam evitar anteriores desejos, deviam ser santos e comportar-se com temor piedoso e amor fraternal. (1:13-25)

Têm de desenvolver um anseio pelo 'leite da palavra', a fim de crescer para a salvação. (2:1-3)

São uma casa espiritual, um sacerdócio santo, edificado sobre o alicerce de Cristo, por isso, têm de oferecer sacrifícios espirituais aceitáveis a Deus. (2:4-8)

Como povo para propriedade especial, divulgam as excelências de seu Deus e se comportam dum modo que o honra. (2:9-12)

O relacionamento com o semelhante deve basear-se em princípios piedosos.

Devem sujeitar-se a governantes humanos; amar os irmãos; temer a Deus. (2:13-17)

Servos domésticos devem estar em sujeição aos seus amos, mesmo quando estes são desarrazoados; Jesus deu um bom exemplo de suportar pacientemente o mal. (2:18-25)

A esposa deve estar sujeita ao marido; se o marido for incrédulo, a boa conduta da esposa talvez o convença. (3:1-6)

O marido deve atribuir honra à esposa "como a um vaso mais fraco". (3:7)

Todos os cristãos devem compartilhar os sentimentos, não retribuindo dano com dano, mas devem buscar a paz. (3:8-12)

Tem-se aproximado o fim de todas as coisas, de modo que os cristãos devem ser ajuizados e vigilantes, visando as orações, devem ter intenso amor uns pelos outros e usar seus dons para honrar a Deus. (4:7-11)

Os anciãos devem estar ansiosos de pastorear o rebanho de Deus; os jovens têm de continuar em sujeição aos homens mais idosos; todos devem mostrar humildade mental. (5:1-5)

Perseverar fielmente em sofrimentos resulta em bênçãos.

Os cristãos podem alegrar-se mesmo em provações penosas, visto que a qualidade da sua fé se tornará manifesta. (1:6, 7)

Não devem sofrer por motivo de transgressão; se sofrerem pela causa da justiça, devem glorificar a Deus e não se envergonhar; é tempo de julgamento. (3:13-17; 4:15-19)

Cristo sofreu e morreu na carne para nos conduzir a Deus; portanto, não vivemos mais segundo desejos carnais — mesmo que pessoas carnais nos ultrajem por sermos diferentes. (3:18–4:6)

Se o cristão perseverar fielmente em provações, ele compartilhará a grande alegria na revelação de Jesus, bem como terá certeza de ter desde já o espírito de Deus. (4:12-14)

Que cada um se humilhe sob a mão poderosa de Deus e lance sua ansiedade sobre Ele; que tome posição contra Satanás, confiante em que o próprio Deus tornará fortes os Seus servos. (5:6-10)

Tempo da Escrita. À base do teor das cartas, parece que foram escritas antes do irrompimento da perseguição movida por Nero em 64 EC. Estar Marcos com Pedro parece situar o tempo da escrita da primeira carta entre 62 e 64 EC. (1Pe 5:13) Anteriormente, durante o primeiro encarceramento de Paulo em Roma (c. 59-61 EC), Marcos estava lá, e quando Paulo foi encarcerado pela segunda vez em Roma (c. 65 EC), este pediu que Timóteo e Marcos viessem a ele. (Col 4:10; 2Ti 4:11) É provável que Pedro escreveu sua segunda carta não muito depois da sua primeira, ou por volta de 64 EC.

Escrita em Babilônia. Segundo o testemunho do próprio Pedro, ele escreveu a sua primeira carta enquanto estava em Babilônia. (1Pe 5:13) É possível que também fosse dali que escreveu a segunda carta. A evidência disponível indica claramente que "Babilônia" se refere à cidade nas margens do Eufrates, não a Roma, conforme alguns têm afirmado. Tendo Pedro sido incumbido de levar 'as boas novas aos circuncisos', era de esperar que servisse num centro de judaísmo, tal como Babilônia. (Gál 2:7-9) Havia uma grande população judaica na antiga cidade de Babilônia e seus arredores. A Encyclopaedia Judaica (Enciclopédia Judaica; Jerusalém, 1971, Vol. 15, col. 755), ao tratar da produção do Talmude Babilônico, menciona as "grandes academias de Babilônia", do judaísmo, durante a Era Comum. Visto que Pedro escreveu "aos residentes temporários espalhados por Ponto, Galácia, Capadócia, Ásia e Bitínia [literais]" (1Pe 1:1), segue-se logicamente que o lugar de origem da carta, "Babilônia", era o lugar literal mencionado por este nome. A Bíblia nunca indica que Babilônia se refira especificamente a Roma, nem declara ela que Pedro alguma vez estivesse em Roma.

O primeiro que afirmou que Pedro foi martirizado em Roma foi Dionísio, bispo de Corinto, na última metade do segundo século. Anteriormente, Clemente de Roma, embora mencionasse Paulo e Pedro juntos, fez da pregação de Paulo tanto no L como no O uma particularidade distintiva deste apóstolo, dando a entender que Pedro nunca esteve no O. Visto que a feroz perseguição de cristãos pelo governo de Roma (sob Nero) aparentemente ainda não havia começado, não teria havido nenhum motivo para Pedro ocultar a identidade de Roma com o uso de outro nome. Quando Paulo escreveu aos romanos, enviando saudações, por nome, a muitos ali em Roma, ele não mencionou Pedro. Se Pedro fosse ali um superintendente de destaque, esta omissão seria improvável. Também, o nome de Pedro não está incluído entre os que enviaram saudações nas cartas de Paulo escritas em Roma — Efésios, Filipenses, Colossenses, 2 Timóteo, Filêmon e Hebreus.

Primeira Pedro. Os cristãos aos quais o apóstolo Pedro dirigiu a sua primeira carta sofriam severas provações. (1Pe 1:6) Além disso, "o fim de todas as coisas" se tinha aproximado — evidentemente o fim do sistema de coisas judaico, predito por Jesus. (Veja Mr 13:1-4; 1Te 2:14-16; He 9:26.) Por isso, era tempo de eles serem "vigilantes, visando as orações". (1Pe 4:7; compare isso com Mt 26:40-45.) Também precisavam de encorajamento para perseverarem fiéis, exatamente o encorajamento provido pelo apóstolo.

Pedro lembrou repetidas vezes aos concristãos as bênçãos que usufruíam. Por causa da misericórdia de Deus, eles haviam recebido um novo nascimento para uma esperança viva, o que lhes dava motivo para se alegrar. (1Pe 1:3-9) Haviam sido comprados com o precioso sangue de Cristo. (1Pe 1:18, 19) Através do arranjo do batismo, haviam recebido uma boa consciência e continuariam a usufruí-la por viver em harmonia com o que seu batismo em água simbolizava. (1Pe 3:21–4:6) Quais pedras viventes, estavam sendo edificados sobre Cristo Jesus para se tornarem casa ou templo espiritual. Eram "raça escolhida, sacerdócio real, nação santa, povo para propriedade especial". — 1Pe 2:4-10.

Em vista do que Deus e seu Filho fizeram por eles, os cristãos, conforme Pedro mostrou, tinham motivos para suportar sofrimentos e para manter uma conduta excelente. Podiam esperar sofrimentos, pois "até mesmo Cristo morreu uma vez para sempre quanto aos pecados, um justo pelos injustos". (1Pe 3:17, 18) Participar nos sofrimentos de Cristo já em si mesmo era motivo de alegria, visto que resultaria em estarem cheios de alegria na revelação da glória de Cristo. Ser alguém vituperado pelo nome de Cristo constituía evidência de ele ter o espírito de Deus. (1Pe 4:12-14) As próprias provações resultavam numa fé de qualidade provada, necessária para a salvação. (1Pe 1:6-9) Além disso, pela fiel perseverança, continuariam a receber

DESTAQUES DE SEGUNDA PEDRO

Carta que incentiva os cristãos a se esforçarem e a se apegarem à palavra profética; ela contém fortes avisos contra a apostasia.

Foi escrita talvez de Babilônia por volta de 64 EC.

Os cristãos devem esforçar-se e devem confiar na palavra profética.

Deus deu liberalmente todas as coisas referentes à vida e à devoção piedosa; em troca, os cristãos têm de se esforçar a desenvolver fé, virtude, conhecimento, autodomínio, perseverança, devoção piedosa, afeição fraternal e amor — qualidades que os tornarão ativos e frutíferos. (1:1-15)

Os cristãos têm de prestar atenção à palavra profética, divinamente inspirada; quando Pedro viu Jesus transfigurado e ouviu Deus falar no monte, a palavra profética ficou mais assegurada. (1:16-21)

Devem prevenir-se contra falsos instrutores e outros corruptos; o dia de Jeová está chegando.

Falsos instrutores se infiltrarão na congregação, introduzindo seitas destrutivas. (2:1-3)

Jeová certamente julgará esses apóstatas, assim como julgou os anjos desobedientes, o mundo ímpio nos dias de Noé, e as cidades de Sodoma e Gomorra. (2:4-10)

Esses falsos instrutores menosprezam autoridade, maculam o bom nome de cristãos por excessos e imoralidade, engodam os fracos e prometem liberdade quando eles mesmos são escravos da corrupção. (2:10-19)

São piores agora do que quando não sabiam nada de Jesus Cristo. (2:20-22)

Devem acautelar-se nos últimos dias contra os ridicularizadores, que escarnecem da mensagem sobre a prometida presença de Jesus; esses se esquecem de que Deus, que se propôs destruir este sistema de coisas, já destruiu o mundo antediluviano. (3:1-7)

Não se deve confundir a paciência de Deus com vagarosidade — ele é paciente porque deseja que os homens se arrependam; todavia, este sistema de coisas será destruído no dia de Jeová, e será substituído por justos novos céus e nova terra. (3:8-13)

Os cristãos têm de fazer o máximo para ficar "sem mancha nem mácula, e em paz"; assim não serão desencaminhados por falsos instrutores, mas crescerão em benignidade imerecida e em conhecimento de Cristo. (3:14-18) os cuidados de Deus. Ele os faria firmes e fortes. — 1Pe 5:6-10.

No entanto, conforme Pedro salientou, os cristãos nunca deveriam sofrer por serem violadores da lei. (1Pe 4:15-19) Sua conduta deveria ser exemplar, o que contribuiria para açaimar a conversa ignorante contra eles. (1Pe 2:12, 15, 16) Isto envolvia todos os aspectos da vida do cristão — seu relacionamento com autoridades governamentais, com patrões, com membros da família e com irmãos cristãos. (1Pe 2:13–3:19) Isso exigia o uso correto dos órgãos da fala, manter uma boa consciência (1Pe 3:10-22) e permanecer livre das práticas aviltantes das nações. (1Pe 4:1-3) Dentro da congregação, os anciãos que serviam quais pastores não deviam dominar sobre as ovelhas, mas deviam trabalhar espontaneamente e com anelo. Os homens mais jovens deviam estar em sujeição aos homens mais idosos. (1Pe 5:1-5) Todos os cristãos deviam ser hospitaleiros, procurar edificar-se mutuamente, ter intenso amor uns pelos outros, e cingir-se de humildade mental. — 1Pe 4:7-11; 5:5.

Segunda Pedro. O propósito da segunda carta de Pedro era ajudar os cristãos a se assegurarem da sua chamada e escolha, e para evitarem ser desviados por instrutores falsos e homens ímpios dentro da própria congregação. (2Pe 1:10, 11; 3:14-18) Os cristãos são exortados a ter fé, virtude, conhecimento, autodomínio, perseverança, devoção piedosa, afeição fraternal e amor (2Pe 1:5-11), e são admoestados a prestar atenção à "palavra profética". (2Pe 1:16-21) Citam-se exemplos de execuções passadas dos julgamentos de Jeová contra pessoas ímpias para mostrar que os que abandonam a vereda da justiça não escaparão da ira de Deus. (2Pe 2:1-22) Apesar do que os ridicularizadores possam dizer nos "últimos dias", a vinda do dia de Jeová, dia de execução dos homens ímpios, é tão certo como o que sobreveio ao mundo dos dias de Noé. Também, a promessa de Deus, de novos céus e uma nova terra, é assegurada e deve inspirar esforços diligentes para se ser achado imaculado do ponto de vista de Deus. — 2Pe 3:1-18.

PEITO, SEIO. Os peitos ou seios abrigam as glândulas mamárias; no entanto, frequentemente, o termo peito é usado simplesmente com referência à parte anterior do corpo humano (masculino ou feminino) entre o pescoço e o abdome. Duas palavras hebraicas que denotam o peito humano são shadh e shodh. (Cân 8:1; Jó 24:9) Palavras gregas para peito são ma·stós (Lu 11:27) e sté·thos. (Re 15:6) O peito, ou seio, humano é usado nas Escrituras para indicar achego, intimidade e favor (Cân 1:13; Jo 13:25; 21:20); madureza (Cân 8:8, 10; Ez 16:7); beleza (Cân 4:5; 7:3, 7, 8); relações sexuais ("entre os seus seios" [Os 2:2]; 'apertaram peitos', 'premeram seios' [Ez 23:3, 21]); fecundidade (Gên 49:25; Os 9:14); exultação e prosperidade (Is 60:16; 66:11). 'Bater no peito' ou 'arrancar os peitos' indicava extrema humilhação, aflição e pesar. — Is 32:12; Ez 23:34; Lu 18:13; 23:48.

Uma mulher que ouviu Jesus falar exclamou: "Feliz é a madre que te carregou e os peitos em que mamaste!" Visto que o desejo de toda mulher era ter um filho digno, e as mulheres judias desejavam ter o privilégio de ser a mãe dum profeta e especialmente do Messias, é compreensível que esta mulher judia fizesse tal observação. Mas a resposta de Jesus: "Não, antes: Felizes são os que ouvem a palavra de Deus e a guardam!" mostrou que o que valia não era estar achegado a Jesus em sentido carnal; o importante era ter espiritualidade. Este princípio descarta qualquer veneração de Maria como mãe de nosso Senhor. — Lu 11:27, 28.

Em vista da iminência da destruição de Jerusalém, que havia de ser acompanhada pela apavorante matança de seus habitantes, Jesus disse: "Eis que virão dias em que as pessoas dirão: 'Felizes as mulheres estéreis e as madres que não deram à luz, e os peitos que não amamentaram!' " — Lu 23:29; compare isso com Je 16:1-4.

As Escrituras Hebraicas, com o uso de um termo diferente, fazem uma distinção entre o peito humano e o peito animal, que é anatomicamente diferente. Nos sacrifícios de participação em comum feitos pelos israelitas, o peito (hebr.: hha·zéh) do animal sacrificial era a parte que cabia ao sacerdote como alimento. — Le 7:29-35; 10:14, 15.

Seio. Esta palavra é usada de modo bem similar ao uso da palavra peito, embora muitas vezes tenha referência à dobra da parte superior da veste, em vez de ao próprio peito. As palavras para seio, em hebraico, eram hhehq (1Rs 1:2; também "colo"), hhó·tsen (Ne 5:13), e a forma dual de dadh (Ez 23:3); em grego, kól·pos. (Jo 13:23) Alguém bem querido ou prezado era segurado junto ao seio, ou no regaço (hebr.: hhehq), assim como Noemi segurou Obede, o bebê de Rute, reconhecendo-o como herdeiro legal de Elimeleque, falecido marido de Noemi. (Ru 4:16) No costume de recostar-se à mesa nas refeições, aquele que se encontrava na frente do seio de outro estava numa posição de intimidade com ele, geralmente uma posição favorecida. (Jo 13:23) Jesus aproveitou este bem conhecido costume para ilustrar que Lázaro estava na "posição junto ao seio de Abraão", indicando que estava no favor de Deus. (Lu 16:22, 23) O apóstolo João descreveu Jesus como estando "na posição junto ao seio do Pai", como pessoa íntima de Jeová, aquela que podia explicar Deus de modo mais pleno e mais cabal do que qualquer outro. — Jo 1:18; veja SEIO, POSIÇÃO JUNTO AO.

A veste usada pelos israelitas, nos tempos bíblicos, era bastante ampla no peito, de modo que a pessoa podia pôr nas dobras dela as mãos, dinheiro ou outros objetos, e até carregar um bebê ou um cordeirinho. (Êx 4:6, 7; Núm 11:12; 2Sa 12:3) Jeová diz que ele carregará ao colo seus cordeiros, uma ilustração do terno amor e cuidado para com eles. (Is 40:11) A expressão "mulher do [teu, seu] seio", conforme aparece em algumas traduções (Al; IBB; KJ; RS), tem um sentido mais claro quando vertida "mulher do teu coração [da tua afeição]" (BMD), "tua querida esposa". (NM) (De 13:6 [7]; 28:54) Às vezes refere-se a relações sexuais. — Gên 16:5; 2Sa 12:8.

"Pôr mesmo uma recompensa no seu próprio seio" ou 'medir-lhes seu salário no seu próprio seio' são expressões compreensíveis quando se toma em conta que os bolsos das vestes não ficavam na parte inferior delas, assim como hoje. (Is 65:6, 7; Sal 79:12; Je 32:18) De modo similar, as expressões "carregar no seio o vitupério", "juntar fogo no seu seio", 'tomar do peito um suborno' e "o suborno no peito" referem-se ao uso das dobras superiores da vestimenta. — Sal 89:50; Pr 6:27; 17:23; 21:14.

PEITORAL. Bolsa sagrada, bordada, usada pelo sumo sacerdote de Israel sobre o coração sempre que entrava no Santo. O peitoral (hebr.: hhó·shen) devia servir de "recordação" e evidentemente era chamado de "peitoral do julgamento" por conter o Urim e o Tumim, por meio dos quais se revelavam os julgamentos de Jeová. — Êx 28:15, 29, 30.

Igual ao éfode, o peitoral era feito dos materiais mais excelentes: ouro, linha azul, lã tingida de roxo, fibras carmíneas e linho fino retorcido. (Êx 28:15) Os mesmos tecidos foram usados na fabricação dos panos de tenda bordados com querubins, a cortina que separava o Santo do Santíssimo, e o reposteiro para a entrada da tenda, tendo sido os materiais de que se necessitava voluntariamente contribuídos pelos israelitas e elaborados na forma final quer diretamente por Bezalel e Ooliabe, quer sob a direção deles. — Êx 26:1, 31, 36; 31:2-6; 35:21-29.

O tecido do peitoral evidentemente tinha um côvado de comprimento e um palmo de largura, de modo que fosse um quadrado ao ser dobrado, formando assim uma bolsa, na qual talvez se colocasse o Urim e o Tumim. A frente do peitoral era adornada com 12 pedras preciosas em engastes de ouro e dispostas em quatro fileiras de três pedras cada uma. Cada pedra tinha gravado nela o nome de uma das tribos de Israel. (Êx 28:15-21, 28; 39:8-14; Le 8:8) As joias em cada fileira talvez fossem dispostas conforme alistadas da direita para a esquerda (como na leitura hebraica). Não se pode declarar com certeza que pedra preciosa correspondia a que tribo. — Veja as pedras preciosas sob os respectivos verbetes.

O peitoral ficava bem preso ao éfode da seguinte maneira: Duas correntinhas trançadas, de ouro puro, ficavam presas a duas argolas de ouro em cada uma das extremidades na parte superior do peitoral. A outra ponta dessas correntinhas era presa a dois engastes de ouro no alto das ombreiras do éfode. Mais duas argolas de ouro eram afixadas em cada extremidade da beirada inferior do peitoral, no lado de dentro, em contato com o éfode. Estas argolas eram presas por meio dum cordel azul às duas argolas de ouro na base das ombreiras do éfode, logo acima do cinto. — Êx 28:22-28; 39:15-21.

PEIXES. Foi no quinto dia criativo que Deus trouxe à existência estes e outros animais aquáticos. (Gên 1:20-23) Embora o homem só fosse autorizado a usar peixes como alimento após o Dilúvio, desde o começo ele devia ter essas criaturas em sujeição. (Gên 1:28; 9:2, 3) Mas, em vez de exercer o devido domínio sobre os animais, alguns homens se tornaram "inanes" no seu raciocínio e passaram a venerar a criação. (Ro 1:20-23) Por exemplo, o Ea babilônico, deus das águas, era representado como homem cujo corpo era metade peixe; a Atárgatis síria era deusa-peixe; e no Egito, certas espécies de peixes eram encaradas como sagradas e eram até mumificadas. Tal adoração de peixes, naturalmente, era proibida na lei de Deus para Israel. — De 4:15-18.

Era bem apropriado que Jesus Cristo, "o Filho do homem" (Mt 17:22), que havia de ter até mesmo os peixes em sujeição, demonstrasse em duas ocasiões seu poder por encher as redes dos seus apóstolos com uma pesca milagrosa. (Sal 8:4-8; He 2:5-9; Lu 5:4-7; Jo 21:6) Confrontado com o pagamento do imposto para o templo, Jesus também exerceu este seu domínio ao dizer a Pedro: "Vai ao mar, lança o anzol e toma o primeiro peixe apanhado, e, quando lhe abrires a boca, acharás uma moeda de estáter. Leva-a e dá-lha por mim e por ti." — Mt 17:24-27.

Peixes Como Alimento. O peixe, um alimento altamente nutritivo e de fácil digestão, evidentemente era um item importante na alimentação dos egípcios, bem como os hebreus escravizados, porque no ermo, a mistura de gente e os filhos de Israel tinham saudades dos peixes que costumavam comer no Egito. (Núm 11:5) A economia egípcia, portanto, sofreu grandemente quando os peixes do Nilo morreram em resultado de Jeová transformar as águas do Egito em sangue. — Êx 7:20, 21.

Os peixes continuaram a ser um alimento importante depois que os israelitas se estabeleceram na Terra da Promessa. Um dos portões de Jerusalém chamava-se "Portão do Peixe", o que sugere que havia ali, ou por perto, um mercado de peixes. (2Cr 33:14) Num período posterior, conforme mencionado por Neemias, os tírios vendiam peixes em Jerusalém mesmo no sábado. — Ne 13:16.
